

THE CONTEXT OF SCRIPTURE

VOLUME ONE

GENERAL EDITOR
WILLIAM W. HALLO
ASSOCIATE EDITOR
K. LAWSON YOUNGER, JR.

Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World

BRILL

VISIT...

LANZAROTE
Caliente.COM

How to go to your page

This eBook contains three volumes. Each volume has its own page numbering scheme, consisting of a volume number and a page number, separated by a colon.

For example, to go to page 5 of Volume I, type I:5 in the "page #" box at the top of the screen and click "Go." To go to page 5 of Volume II, type II:5... and so forth.

THE CONTEXT OF SCRIPTURE

VOLUME 1

Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World

THE CONTEXT OF SCRIPTURE

Canonical Compositions, Monumental Inscriptions, and Archival Documents from the Biblical World

General Editor	William W. Hallo
Associate Editor	K. Lawson Younger, Jr.
Project Editor	David E. Orton

The Context of Scripture

VOLUME I

Canonical Compositions from the Biblical World

Editor

WILLIAM W. HALLO

Associate Editor

K. LAWSON YOUNGER, JR.

Consultants

HARRY A. HOFFNER, JR.

ROBERT K. RITNER

BRILL
LEIDEN · BOSTON
2003

This book is printed on acid-free paper.

Cover: "Man and his God" (Text 1.179) lines 97-112, on a tablet from the collections of the University Museum, University of Pennsylvania (CBS 15205), published by Samuel Noah Kramer in M. Noth & D. Winton Thomas (eds.), Wisdom in Israel and in the Ancient Near East (FS H.H. Rowley; VTS 3; Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1960), Pl. iv (opp. p. 175).

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

The context of Scripture / editor, William W. Hallo ; associate editor, K. Lawson Younger.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

Contents: v. 1. Canonical compositions from the biblical world.

ISBN 9004135677 (pbk.: v. 1)

1. Bible. O.T.—Extra-canonical parallels. 2. Middle Eastern literature—Relation to the Old Testament. 3. Bible. O.T.—History of contemporary events—Sources. 4. Middle Eastern literature —Translations into English. I. Hallo, William W. II. Younger, K. Lawson.

BSu80.C+ 2003

2003052060

ISBN 90 04 135677 (Vol. I)

ISBN 90 04 131051 (Set)

© Copyright 2003 by Koninklijke Brill NV, Leiden, The Netherlands

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, translated, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without prior written permission from the publisher.

*Authorization to photocopy items for internal or personal use is granted by Brill provided that the appropriate fees are paid directly to The Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Suite 910 Danvers MA 01923, USA.
Fees are subject to change.*

PRINTED IN THE NETHERLANDS

CONTENTS

Preface	xi
Acknowledgements	xii
Abbreviations and Symbols	xiii
List of Contributors	xxi
Introduction: Ancient Near Eastern Texts and their Relevance for Biblical Exegesis	xxiii

EGYPTIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

DIVINE FOCUS	3
1. COSMOLOGIES	5
From the "Book of Nut" (1.1)	5
From Coffin Texts Spell 714 (1.2)	6
From Pyramid Texts Spell 527 (1.3)	7
From Pyramid Texts Spell 600 (1.4)	7
From Coffin Texts Spell 75 (1.5)	8
From Coffin Texts Spell 76 (1.6)	10
From Coffin Texts Spell 78 (1.7)	11
From Coffin Texts Spell 80 (1.8)	11
From Papyrus Bremner-Rhind (1.9)	14
From Coffin Texts Spell 335 = Book of the Dead Spell 17 (1.10)	15
Coffin Texts Spell 261 (1.11)	17
From Coffin Texts Spell 647 (1.12)	18
From a Ramesside Stela (1.13)	20
From the Berlin "Hymn to Ptah" (1.14)	20
From the "Memphite Theology" (1.15)	21
From Papyrus Leiden I 350 (1.16)	23
From Coffin Texts Spell 1130 (1.17)	26
Book of the Dead 175 (1.18)	27
Coffin Text 157 (1.19)	30
Book of the Dead 112 (1.20)	31
2. OTHER MYTHS	32
The Repulsing of the Dragon (1.21)	32
The Legend of Isis and the Name of Re (1.22)	33
The Legend of Astarte and the Tribute of the Sea (1.23)	35
The Destruction of Mankind (1.24)	36
3. HYMNS	37
The Great Cairo Hymn of Praise to Amun-Re (1.25)	37
The Great Hymn to Osiris (1.26)	41
Two Hymns to the Sun-god (1.27)	43
The Great Hymn to the Aten (1.28)	44
4. PRAYERS	47
Prayer to Re-Harakhti (1.29)	47
5. HARPERS' SONGS	48
The Song from the Tomb of King Intef (1.30)	48
The Song from the Tomb of Neferhotep (1.31)	49
6. DIVINATION, INCANTATION, RITUAL	50
Execration Texts (1.32)	50
Dream Oracles (1.33)	52
Daily Ritual of the Temple of Amun-Re at Karnak (1.34)	55
ROYAL FOCUS	59
1. INSTRUCTIONS	61
Merikare (1.35)	61
Amenemhet (1.36)	66

2. HISTORIOGRAPHY	68
King Lists (1.37)	68
1. Karnak List (1.37A)	69
2. Abydos List (1.37B)	69
3. Sakkarā King List (SL) (1.37C)	70
4. Turin Canon (1.37D)	71
INDIVIDUAL FOCUS	75
1. NARRATIVES	77
Sinuhe (1.38)	77
The Shipwrecked Sailor (1.39)	83
The Two Brothers (1.40)	85
The Report of Wenamun (1.41)	89
2. "PROPHECY"	93
The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage: the Admonitions of Ipuwer (1.42)	93
The Eloquent Peasant (1.43)	98
The Complaints of Khakheperre-Sonb (1.44)	104
The Prophecies of Neferti (1.45)	106
3. INSTRUCTIONS	110
Instruction of Any (1.46)	110
Instruction of Amenemope (1.47)	115
Dua-khety or the Satire on the Trades (1.48)	122
4. LOVE POEMS	125
Papyrus Harris 500 (1.49)	126
Cairo Love Songs (1.50)	127
Papyrus Chester Beatty I (1.51)	128
Ostrakon Gardiner 304 (1.52)	130
5. PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA	130
The Famine Stela (1.53)	130
The Legend of the Possessed Princess ("Bentresh Stela") (1.54)	134
EGYPTIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	137
HITTITE CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS
DIVINE FOCUS	147
1. MYTHS	149
Elkunirša and Ašertu (1.55)	149
The Storm-god and the Serpent (Illuyanka) (1.56)	150
The Wrath of Telipinu (1.57)	151
Appu and his Two Sons (1.58)	153
The Sun God and the Cow (1.59)	155
2. PRAYERS	156
Plague Prayers of Muṣṣili II (1.60)	156
3. RITUALS	160
The "Ritual Between the Pieces" (1.61)	160
Puliša's Ritual Against Plague (1.62)	161
Uḫamuwa's Ritual Against Plague (1.63)	162
Zarpiya's Ritual (1.64)	162
Ritual and Prayer to Ishtar of Nineveh (1.65)	164
The First Soldiers' Oath (1.66)	165
The Second Soldiers' Oath (1.67)	167
4. INCANTATIONS	168
Purifying a House: a Ritual for the Infernal Deities (1.68)	168
The Storm God at Liḫzina (1.69)	172
Establishing a New Temple for the Goddess of the Night (1.70)	173

ROYAL FOCUS	179
1. EPIC	181
The Queen of Kanesh and the Tale of Zalpa (1.71)	181
2. HISTORIOGRAPHY	182
Proclamation of Anitta of Kuššar (1.72)	182
Crossing of the Taurus (1.73)	184
Deeds of Šuppiluliuma (1.74)	185
The Hittite Conquest of Cyprus: Two Inscriptions of Suppiluliuma II (1.75)	192
3. BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY	194
The Proclamation of Telipinu (1.76)	194
Apology of Hattušili III (1.77)	199
4. ORACLES	204
Excerpt from an Oracle Report (1.78)	204
Assuring the Safety of the King during the Winter (1.79)	207
INDIVIDUAL FOCUS	213
1. PROVERBS	215
Hittite Proverbs (1.80)	215
2. OTHER WISDOM LITERATURE	215
Fragment of a Wisdom Text(?) (1.81)	215
Excerpt from the Hurro-Hittite Bilingual Wisdom Text (1.82)	216
3. INSTRUCTIONS	217
Instructions to Priests and Temple Officials (1.83)	217
Instructions to Commanders of Border Garrisons (1.84)	221
Instructions to the Royal Guard (1.85)	225
HITTITE BIBLIOGRAPHY	231
WEST SEMITIC CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS
DIVINE FOCUS	239
1. UGARITIC MYTHS	241
The Ba ^c lu Myth (1.86)	241
Dawn and Dusk (1.87)	274
2. PRAYERS	283
Ugaritic Prayer for a City Under Siege (1.88)	283
The Prayer of Nabonidus (4QPrNab) (1.89)	285
3. DIVINATION	287
Ugaritic Birth Omens (1.90)	287
Ugaritic Lunar Omens (1.91)	290
Ugaritic Extispicy (1.92)	291
Ugaritic Dream Omens (1.93)	293
4. INCANTATIONS AND RITUALS	295
Ugaritic Liturgy Against Venomous Reptiles (1.94)	295
Ugaritic Rites for the Vintage (KTU 1.41//1.87) (1.95)	299
Ugaritic Incantation Against Sorcery (1.96)	301
² Ilu on a Toot (1.97)	302
A Punic Sacrificial Tariff (1.98)	305
The Aramaic Text in Demotic Script (1.99)	309
A Ugaritic Incantation Against Serpents and Sorcerers (1.100)	327
The London Medical Papyrus (1.101)	328
ROYAL FOCUS	331
1. EPIC	333
The Kirta Epic (1.102)	333
The ² Aqhatu Legend (1.103)	343
2. HISTORIOGRAPHY	356
Ugaritic King List (1.104)	356

3. REPHA'IM TEXTS	357
The Patrons of the Ugaritic Dynasty (KTU 1.161) (1.105)	357
INDIVIDUAL FOCUS	359
1. INSTRUCTIONS	361
Hippiatric Texts (1.106)	361
2. SCHOOL TEXTS	362
Abecedaries (1.107)	362
WEST SEMITIC BIBLIOGRAPHY	367
AKKADIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS
DIVINE FOCUS	379
1. MYTHS	381
The Descent of Ishtar to the Underworld (1.108)	381
Nergal and Ereshkigal (1.109)	384
Nergal and Ereshkigal (Amarna Version) (1.110)	389
Epic of Creation (1.111)	390
The Theogony of Dunnu (1.112)	402
Erra and Ishum (1.113)	404
2. HYMNS AND PRAYERS	416
Prayer to Marduk (1.114)	416
Prayer to Gods of the Night (1.115)	417
Diurnal Prayers of Diviners (1.116)	417
The Shamash Hymn (1.117)	418
3. LAMENTATIONS AND ELEGIES	419
A Neo-Babylonian Lament for Tammuz (1.118)	419
An Assyrian Elegy (1.119)	420
4. DIVINATION	421
Mesopotamian Omens (1.120)	423
5. INCANTATIONS	426
Old Babylonian Incantation Against Cattle Disease (1.121)	426
6. RITUALS	427
Rituals from Emar	427
The Installation of the Storm God's High Priestess (1.122)	427
The Zukru Festival (1.123)	431
Six Months of Ritual Supervision by the Diviner (1.124)	436
Two Months Joined by the Underworld, with Barring and Opening of Doors (1.125)	439
Two Kissu Festivals (1.126)	442
A Psephomancy Ritual from Assur (1.127)	444
6. LOVE POEMS	445
Love Lyrics of Nabu and Tashmetu (1.128)	445
ROYAL FOCUS	447
1. EPIC	449
The Adapa Story (1.129)	449
Atra-Hasis (1.130)	450
Etana (1.131)	453
Gilgamesh (1.132)	458
The Birth Legend of Sargon of Akkad (1.133)	461
2. HISTORIOGRAPHY	461
Babylonian King Lists (1.134)	461
Assyrian King Lists (1.135)	463
Assyrian Eponym Canon (1.136)	465
Babylonian Chronicle (1.137)	467
The Weidner Chronicle (1.138)	468

3. ROYAL HYMNS	470
A Hymn Celebrating Assurnasirpal II's Campaigns to the West (1.139)	470
A Prayer from a Coronation Ritual of the Time of Tukulti-Ninurta I (1.140)	472
A Hymn to Nanaya with a Blessing for Sargon II (1.141)	472
Assurbanipal's Coronation Hymn (1.142)	473
An Assurbanipal Hymn for Shamash (1.143)	474
An Assurbanipal Prayer for Mullissu (1.144)	475
Dialogue between Assurbanipal and Nabu (1.145)	475
A Late Piece of Constructed Mythology Relevant to the Neo-Assyrian and Middle Assyrian Coronation Hymn and Prayer (1.146)	476
4. FICTIONAL ROYAL AUTOBIOGRAPHY	477
The Adad-guppi Autobiography (1.147)	477
The Autobiography of Idrimi (1.148)	479
The Marduk Prophecy (1.149)	480
The Dynastic Prophecy (1.150)	481
INDIVIDUAL FOCUS	483
1. JUST SUFFERER COMPOSITIONS	485
Dialogue between a Man and his God (1.151)	485
A Sufferer's Salvation (1.152)	486
The Poem of the Righteous Sufferer (1.153)	486
The Babylonian Theodicy (1.154)	492
2. DIALOGUE	495
Dialogue of Pessimism or the Obliging Slave (1.155)	495
3. HUMOROUS TEXTS	497
"At the Cleaners" (1.156)	497
AKKADIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	499
SUMERIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS
DIVINE FOCUS	509
1. MYTHS	511
The Song of the Hoe (1.157)	511
The Eridu Genesis (1.158)	513
Enki and Ninmah (1.159)	516
The Exaltation of Inanna (1.160)	518
Inanna and Enki (1.161)	522
2. HYMNS	526
To Nanshe (1.162)	526
The Blessing of Nisaba by Enki (1.163)	531
3. PRAYERS AND LETTER-PRAYERS	532
Letter-Prayer of King Sin-Iddinam to Nin-Isina (1.164)	532
Letter-Prayer of King Sin-Iddinam to Utu (1.165)	534
4. LAMENTATIONS	535
Lamentation over the Destruction of Sumer and Ur (1.166)	535
5. INCANTATIONS	539
A "Non-Canonical" Incantation (1.167)	539
From "Evil Spirits" (1.168)	539
6. LOVE POEMS	540
Dumuzi-Inanna Songs (1.169)	540
The Women's Oath (1.169A)	540
Bridegroom, Spend the Night in our House Till Dawn (1.169B)	541
Love by the Light of the Moon (1.169C)	542
ROYAL FOCUS	545
1. EPIC	547
Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta (1.170)	547
Gilgamesh and Akka (1.171)	550

2. ROYAL HYMNS	552
The Birth of Shulgi in the Temple of Nippur (1.172)	552
The Sacred Marriage of Iddin-Dagan and Inanna (1.173)	554
INDIVIDUAL FOCUS	561
1. PROVERBS	563
Sumerian Proverb Collection 3 (1.174)	563
Proverbs Quoted in Other Genres (1.175)	568
2. INSTRUCTIONS	569
Shuruppak (1.176)	569
Ur-Ninurta (1.177)	570
3. FABLES	571
The Heron and the Turtle (1.178)	571
4. PIOUS SUFFERER COMPOSITIONS	573
"Man and his God" (1.179)	573
5. DISPUTATIONS	575
The Disputation Between Ewe and Wheat (1.180)	575
The Disputation Between the Hoe and the Plow (1.181)	578
The Disputation Between Bird and Fish (1.182)	581
The Disputation Between Summer and Winter (1.183)	584
6. SCHOOL DIALOGUES	588
The Dialogue Between Two Scribes (1.184)	589
The Dialogue Between a Supervisor and a Scribe (1.185)	590
The Dialogue Between an Examiner and a Student (1.186)	592
SUMERIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY	595

PREFACE

The genesis of this project may be said to lie in the four Summer Seminars for College Teachers which the undersigned conducted under the auspices of the National Endowment for the Humanities at Yale in 1978, 1980, 1987 and 1990. In these, I sought to salvage what was worthwhile of the older comparative approach to biblical history and literature by replacing it with the more nuanced "contextual approach." Nearly fifty papers by the participating scholars resulted from these seminars, and most of them were published, together with my introductory essays, in the four volumes that go under the general title of Scripture in Context.¹ The fourth of these volumes was edited by K. Lawson Younger, Jr., who had written and published his doctoral dissertation at Sheffield.² He was in contact with David Orton at the very time that Dr. Orton was moving from Sheffield to Leiden to take up the post of Senior Editor (Religion) for E. J. Brill. At the same time (Spring 1991), I was spending a sabbatical in Leiden, so Orton sought me out at Younger's suggestion to assess my interest in a major new project to bring ancient Near Eastern texts to bear on the study of biblical literature and history. I was interested in what promised to serve as a test of some of my long-held and long-taught methodologies: not only the contextual approach, but also my taxonomy of ancient documentation, and my theories of translation. I submitted a detailed proposal in which my conception of such a project was outlined. This became the basis of further discussions with Dr. Orton in Leiden, at the International Conference of the Society of Biblical Literature in Rome (1991), and the World Congress of Jewish Studies in Jerusalem (1993). At the last venue, in particular, I had the opportunity to test some of the proposals on a well informed and critical audience by presenting portions of what is now the introduction to the present volume.³ Trenchant advice was offered, i.a., by the late Jonas C. Greenfield.

After lengthy negotiations, a contract was signed and I then proceeded to secure the collaboration of Prof. Younger as Associate Editor. He has been a tower of strength to the project, lending his expertise in all matters relating to West Semitic and often enough to the other four sections as well. In addition, he prepared camera-ready copy of all the contributions. In matters Egyptian, I consulted my then Yale colleague Robert Ritner (now of the University of Chicago), and in matters Hittite, I benefitted from the wise counsel of Harry A. Hoffner, Jr. (University of Chicago).

My own task consisted in the first place of preparing the initial outline of texts to be translated. In their selection I was guided by a number of principles. Other things being equal (though they rarely are), preference was given to newly recovered or newly (re-)edited texts, though place was also made for some of the well-known older stand-bys; to texts able to be presented in their entirety; to well-preserved rather than fragmentary texts; and to texts whose relevance for biblical studies, by way either of comparison or of contrast, had been demonstrated or argued in the secondary literature. All four of these criteria were rarely met by any one text, and when they were, it was not always possible to find a translator for them.

On the whole, however, we consider ourselves fortunate in attracting so many of the leading talents in the field for this ambitious enterprise. All of them deserve unstinted thanks, with special credit to those recruited late in the day who thus had to meet tight deadlines (see the List of Contributors to Volume 1, below).

The aim was to provide the best and latest possible translations in every case. In a few instances this combination could be achieved only by reprinting previously published versions, and making special arrangements to this end. A list of the publishers who graciously cooperated in this regard follows this Preface.

To deal with so many contributors and publishers required the capable help of an administrative assistant furnished by the publisher in the person, initially, of Anne Folkertsma and, subsequently, of Mattie Kuiper. Thanks to the marvels of modern communication, it was possible to maintain almost instantaneous three-way contact among them and the three editors. But even the best mechanical devices are only as proficient as those who handle them, and Mesdames Folkertsma and Kuiper both performed to perfection. Without their steady ministrations, the project could not have reached its present milestone. A special tribute is due to David Orton, who not only conceived the project, but who lent it his unflagging support and provided experienced counsel at editorial meetings in Leiden (1992-96), and at SBL meetings in Chicago (1994) and Philadelphia (1995).

¹ See below, Abbreviations and Symbols, s.v. SIC 1-4.

² K. Lawson Younger, Jr., Ancient Conquest Accounts: A Study in Ancient Near Eastern and Biblical History Writing (JSOTSup 98; Sheffield, JSOT Press, 1990).

³ See below, Introduction with n. 1.

Some of the aids to the reader, notably the index, glossary, and gazetteer, are of necessity postponed to the third and concluding volume in the series. But it is hoped that even without them, the present initial volume will take its place as a vade mecum in the libraries of all those interested in the ancient Near East, its ongoing rediscovery, and its bearing on "The Context of Scripture."

William W. Hallo
October 3, 1996

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The following publishers permitted the reprinting of portions of books:

Texts 1.24; 1.26; 1.27; 1.28; 1.30; 1.31; 1.35; 1.36; 1.38; 1.39; 1.40; 1.41; 1.46; 1.47; 1.48; 1.53; 1.54 (pp. 36-37, 41-46, 48-50, 61-68, 77-93, 110-125, 130-136): Miriam Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature. 3 Volumes. The University of California Press, © 1973-1980. Regents of The University of California.

Text 1.56 (pp. 150-151): Reprinted by permission of the editors of the Journal of Ancient Near Eastern Society 14 (1982).

Text 1.80 (p. 215) : Reprinted from Journal of Near Eastern Studies. The University of Chicago Press. © 1986 by the University of Chicago. All rights reserved.

Text 1.99; 1.100 (pp. 309-327, 327-328): Reprinted from Journal of Near Eastern Studies 43 (1984) and 51 (1992) by permission of The University of Chicago Press. © 1984 and 1992 by The University of Chicago. All rights reserved.

Texts 1.108; 1.109; 1.110; 1.113; 1.131 (pp. 381-391, 404-416, 453-457): © Stephanie Dalley 1989. Reprinted from Myths from Mesopotamia translated by Stephanie Dalley (1989) by permission of Oxford University Press.

Texts 1.111; 1.114; 1.115; 1.116; 1.117; 1.129; 1.130; 1.132; 1.133; 1.151; 1.152; 1.153; 1.154 (pp. 390-402, 416-419, 449-453, 461, 485-495): Translation is reprinted, with permission, from Before the Muses: An Anthology of Akkadian Literature by Benjamin R. Foster (CDL Press, 1993).

N.B. the explanatory material (introductions, biblical analogies and notes) is the work of the editors.

Texts 1.158; 1.170; 1.173 (pp. 511-513, 545-548, 552-557): Reprinted from Thorkild Jacobsen, The Harps that once ... Sumerian Poetry in Translation (1987) by permission of Yale University Press.

Text 1.171 (pp. 548-550) : Reprinted from D. Katz, Gilgamesh and Agga, Library of Oriental Texts 1 (1993) by permission of Styx Publications.

ABBREVIATIONS AND SYMBOLS

AA	Archäologischer Anzeiger.	Arch.	Babylonia. 2 Vols. Chicago, 1926-27.
ÄA	Ägyptologische Abhandlungen.	Archaeologia.
AAA	Annals of Archaeology and Anthropology (University of Liverpool).	ARI	A. K. Grayson, Assyrian Royal Inscriptions. 2 Vols. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1972-76.
AAT	Ägypten und Altes Testament.	ARM(T)	Archives royales de Mari (texts in transliteration and translation).
AB	Anchor Bible.	ArOr	Archiv Oriental.
ABC	A. K. Grayson. Assyrian and Babylonian Chronicles. Locust Valley, NY: J. J. Augustin, 1975.	AS	Assyriological Studies.
ABD	D. N. Freedman, Editor. The Anchor Bible Dictionary. 5 Vols. New York: Doubleday, 1992.	ASAE	Annales du Service des Antiquités de l'Égypte.
ABL	R. F. Harper. Assyrian and Babylonian Letters. London/Chicago, 1892-1914.	Asarh.	R. Borger. Die Inschriften Asarhaddons Königs von Assyrien. AfO Beiheft 9. Graz: Ernst Weidner, 1956.
ACF	Annuaire du Collège de France.	ASOR	American Schools of Oriental Research.
ACH	C. Virolleaud. Astrologie Chaldéenne.	ASORDS	American Schools of Oriental Research Dissertation Series.
ActOr	Acta Orientalia.	ASSF	Acta Societatis Scientiarum Fennicae.
ActSum	Acta Sumerologica.	Assur	Assur. Monographic Journals of the Near East. Malibu: Undena, California.
ADAIK	Abhandlungen des Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts Kairo.	Aspects	A. Spalinger. Aspects of the Military Documents of the Ancient Egyptians. YNER 9. New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1983.
AEL	M. Lichtheim. Ancient Egyptian Literature: A Book of Readings. 3 vols. Berkeley, Los Angeles, and London: University of California, 1973-1980.	ASTI	Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute.
AEO	Ancient Egyptian Onomastica. Text. 2 vols. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1947.	ATANT	Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments.
AfO	Archiv für Orientforschung.	BA	Biblical Archaeologist.
AGI	Archivio Glottologico Italiano.	BAH	Bibliothèque archéologique et historique.
AHAW	Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften.	BAE ²	R. Borger. Babylonische-assyrische Lesestücke. 2nd ed. AnOr 54. Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1979.
AHw	W. von Soden. Akkadisches Handwörterbuch. Wiesbaden, 1959-1975.	BAM	F. Köcher. Die babylonisch-assyrische Medizin in Texten und Untersuchungen. Berlin, 1963.
AION	Annali dell' Istituto Universitario Orientale di Napoli	BaM	Baghdader Mitteilungen.
AIONSup	Annali dell' Istituto Universitario Orientale di Napoli, Supplemento	BAR	Biblical Archaeology Review.
AJA	American Journal of Archaeology	BASOR	Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research.
AJBI	Annual of the Japanese Biblical Institute	BASORSup	Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research Supplementary Studies.
AJSL	American Journal of Semitic Languages	BBVO	Berliner Beiträge zum Vorderen Orient. Berlin.
ALASP	Abhandlungen zur Literatur Alt-Syrien-Palästinas. Münster: Ugarit-Verlag.	BdÉ	Bibliothèque d'étude.
ALASP 1	M. Dietrich and O. Loretz. Die Keilalphabet. Die Phönizisch-kanaanäischen und altarabischen Alphabete in Ugarit. 1988.	BE	Babylonian Expedition of the University of Pennsylvania, Series A: Cuneiform Texts.
ALASP 2	J. Tropper. Der ugaritische Kausativstamm und die Kausativbildungen des semitischen. Eine morphologisch-semantische Untersuchung zum Š-Stamm und zu den umstrittenen nichtsibilantischen Kausativstämmen des Ugaritischen. 1990.	BeO	Bibbia e oriente.
ALASP 3	M. Dietrich and O. Loretz. Mantik in Ugarit Keilalphabetische Texte der Opferschau — Omensammlungen — Nekromantie. Mit Beiträgen von H. W. Duerbeck, J.-W. Meyer, and W. C. Seitter. 1990.	BES	Brown Egyptological Studies.
ALASP 7	M. Dietrich and O. Loretz, Editors. Ugarit — ein ostmediterranes Kulturzentrum im Alten Orient. 1994.	BDB	F. Brown, S. R. Driver and C. A. Briggs. A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament with an Appendix containing the Biblical Aramaic. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1907.
AnBib	Analecta Biblica.	BFOP	Babylonian Fund Occasional Publications.
ANET	J. B. Pritchard, Editor. Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament. 3d ed. with supplement. Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1969.	BHLT	A. K. Grayson. Babylonian Historical-Literary Texts. Toronto and Buffalo, 1975.
AnOr	Analecta Orientalia.	BHS	K. Elliger, W. Rudolph, et al., Editors. Biblica hebraica stuttgartensia. Stuttgart, 1977.
AnSt	Anatolian Studies.	BIFAO	Bulletin de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale.
AO	Aula Orientalis. Revista de estudios del próximo oriente antiguo.	BiMes	Bibliotheca Mesopotamica.
AOAT(S)	Alter Orient und Altes Testament (Sonderreihe).	BiOr	Bibliotheca Orientalis.
AoF	Altorientalische Forschungen.	BJRL	Bulletin of the John Rylands Library.
AOS	American Oriental Series.	BJS	Brown Judaic Studies.
AOSup	Aula Orientalis Supplementa.	BKAT	Biblischer Kommentar: Altes Testament.
APAW	Abhandlungen der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.	BM	British Museum.
ARAB	D. D. Luckenbill. Ancient Records of Assyria and	BM	B. R. Foster. Before the Muses. 2nd edition. 2 vols. Bethesda, MD: CDL Press, 1996.
		BMOP	British Museum Occasional Paper. London: British Museum.
		Bo	Inventory numbers of Boghazköy tablets excavated 1906-12.
		BP	William W. Hallo. The Book of the People. BJS 225. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1991.
		BR	Biblical Research. Chicago.

- BSOAS Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies.
- BSag Bulletin of Sumerian Agriculture.
- BTAVO Beihefte zum Tübinger Atlas des Vorderen Orients. Wiesbaden.
- BTB Biblical Theology Bulletin.
- BWANT Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament.
- BWL W. G. Lambert. Babylonian Wisdom Literature. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1960.
- BZ Biblische Zeitschrift.
- BZAW Beihefte zur Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft.
- CAD A. L. Oppenheim, et al., Editors. The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1956-.
- CAH³ The Cambridge Ancient History. 3d ed. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1973-75.
- CANE J. M. Sasson, Editor. Civilizations of the Ancient Near East. 4 Vols. New York: Scribner, 1995.
- CBC Cambridge Bible Commentary.
- CBQ Catholic Biblical Quarterly.
- CBQMS Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series.
- CCT Cuneiform Texts from Cappadocian Tablets.
- CdE Chronique d'Égypte.
- CH R. F. Harper. The Code of Hammurabi.
- CHD H. G. Güterbock and H. A. Hoffner, Jr., Editors. The Hittite Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1989.
- CIS Corpus Inscriptionum Semiticarum. Paris, 1881.
- COS W. W. Hallo, Editor. The Context of Scripture. 3 Volumes. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1997-.
- CRAIBL Comptes rendus de l'Académie des inscriptions et belles lettres.
- CT Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets in the British Museum.
- CTA A. Herdner. Corpus des tablettes en cunéiformes alphabétiques découvertes à Ras Shamra-Ugarit de 1929 à 1939. Mission de Ras Shamra 10. BAH 79. Paris: Imprimerie Nationale; Geuthner, 1963.
- CTH Laroche, E. Catalogue des textes hittites. Paris: Klincksieck, 1971.
- DCPP E. Lipiński, et al., Editors. Dictionnaire de la Civilisation Phénicienne et Punique. Paris: Brepols.
- DDD The Dictionary of Deities and Demons. Leiden: Brill.
- DM Deir el-Medineh (Ostraca).
- DNWSI J. Hoftijzer and K. Jongeling. Dictionary of the North-West Semitic Inscriptions. Handbuch der Orientalistik 1/21. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1995.
- DOTT D. Winton Thomas, Editor. Documents from Old Testament Times. London, 1958.
- Dreams A. L. Oppenheim. The Interpretation of Dreams in the Ancient Near East, With a Translation of an Assyrian Dream-Book. Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, n.s. 46/3. Philadelphia: The American Philosophical Society, 1956.
- EA J. A. Knudtzon, et al., Editors. Die El-Amarna-Tafeln. Vorderasiatische Bibliothek 2. Leipzig, 1915.
- EAK Einleitung in die assyrischen Königsinschriften. R. Borger, Vol. 1. W. Schramm, Vol. 2.
- EI Eretz-Israel.
- ELS P. Attinger. Elements de linguistique sumerienne. OBO, Sonderband. 1993.
- Emar D. Arnaud. Recherches au pays d'Aštata, Emar VI.e: textes sumériens et accadiens, texte. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1986.
- EPRO Études préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l'empire Romain. Leiden.
- Erl. K. Sethe. Erläuterung zu den ägyptischen Lese-stücken. Leipzig, 1929.
- Erra L. Cagni. L'Epopée de Erra. Studi semitici 34. Rome, 1969. Idem. The Poem of Erra. SANE 1/3. Malibu, 1977.
- ERTR Egyptian Religious Texts and Representations.
- EVO Egitto e Vicino Oriente.
- FAOS Freiburger Altorientalische Studien.
- FAT Forschungen zum Alten Testament.
- FDD B. R. Foster. From Distant Days: Myths, Tales, and Poetry of Ancient Mesopotamia. Bethesda, MD: CDL Press, 1995.
- FIFAO Fouilles de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale.
- FOTL R. Knierim and G. M. Tucker, Editors. The Forms of Old Testament Literature. Grand Rapids: Eerdmans.
- FRLANT Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testament.
- FTH A. R. Millard, et al., Editors. Faith, Tradition and History. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1994.
- GAG W. von Soden. Grundriss der Akkadischen Grammatik. AnOr 33. Rome, 1952.
- GM Göttinger Miscellen.
- HAK H. Hunger. Babylonische und assyrische Kolophone. AOAT 2. Keukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1968.
- HAE J. Renz and W. Röllig. Handbuch der Althebräischen Epigraphik. 3 Volumes. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1995.
- HED J. Puhvel. Hittite Etymological Dictionary. 2 Vols. in 1. Berlin, 1984.
- HHI H. Tadmor and M. Weinfeld. History, Historiography and Interpretation. Studies in Biblical and Cuneiform Literatures. Edited by H. Tadmor and M. Weinfeld. Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1983.
- Hiero. Texts British Museum. Hieroglyphic Texts from Egyptian Stelae, etc. 2nd ed. London, 1961-.
- HKL R. Borger. Handbuch der Keilschriftliteratur. 3 Vols. Berlin, 1967-1973.
- HO J. Černý and A. H. Gardiner. Hieratic Ostraca I. Oxford: Griffith Institute, 1957.
- HPBM 2 E. A. W. Budge, Editor. Hieratic Papyri in the British Museum. 2nd series. London: British Museum, 1923.
- HPBM 3 A. H. Gardiner. Hieratic Papyri in the British Museum. 3rd series. 2 Vols. London: British Museum, 1935.
- HPKMB Hieratische Papyrus aus dem königlichen Museen zu Berlin.
- HS Hebrew Studies.
- HSM Harvard Semitic Monographs.
- HSS Harvard Semitic Studies.
- HT Hittite Texts in the Cuneiform Character in the British Museum. London, 1920.
- HTR Harvard Theological Review.
- HSOA D. O. Edzard, Editor. Heidelberger Studien zum alten Orient. Wiesbaden, 1967.
- HUCA Hebrew Union College Annual.
- HUCASup Hebrew Union College Annual, Supplements.
- HW 1., 2., 3., Erg. J. Friedrich. Hethitisches Wörterbuch. Heidelberg, 1952(-54).
- HW² J. Friedrich and A. Kammenhuber. Hethitisches Wörterbuch. 2nd ed. Heidelberg, 1975-.
- IBoT Istanbul Arkeoloji Müzelerinde Bulunan Boğazköy Tabletleri(nden Seçme Metinler). Istanbul, 1944, 1947, 1954; Ankara, 1988.
- IBS Innsbrucker Beiträge zur Kulturwissenschaft (Sonderheft). Innsbruck.
- ICC International Critical Commentary.
- IDB G. A. Buttrick, Editor. The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible. 4 Vols. New York and Nashville: Abingdon, 1962.
- IEJ Israel Exploration Journal.
- IF Indogermanische Forschungen.

- IM Istanbuler Mitteilungen.
IntB G. A. Buttrick, Editor. The Interpreter's Bible. 12 Vols. New York and Nashville: Abingdon, 1951-57.
IRSA E. Sollberger and J.-R. Kupper. Inscriptions royales sumériennes et akkadiennes. Paris: Cerf, 1971.
JANES Journal of the Ancient Near Eastern Society.
JAOS Journal of the American Oriental Society.
JARCE Journal of the American Research Center in Egypt.
JBL Journal of Biblical Literature.
JCS Journal of Cuneiform Studies.
JEA Journal of Egyptian Archaeology.
JEOL Jaarbericht van het Vooraziatisch-Egyptisch Genootschap: Ex Oriente Lux.
JESHO Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient.
JETS Journal of the Evangelical Theological Society.
JIES Journal of Indo-European Studies.
JJS Journal of Jewish Studies.
JNES Journal of Near Eastern Studies.
JNSL Journal of Northwest Semitic Languages.
JPOS Journal of the Palestine Oriental Society.
JQR Jewish Quarterly Review.
JRAS Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.
JSOR Journal of the Society of Oriental Research.
JSOT Journal for the Study of the Old Testament.
JSOTSup Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series.
JSS Journal of Semitic Studies.
JSSEA Journal of the Society for the Study of Egyptian Antiquity.
JSSSup Journal of Semitic Studies, Supplement Series.
KAI H. Donner and W. Röllig. Kanaanäische und aramäische Inschriften. 3 Vols. Wiesbaden, 1962-64.
KAR E. Ebeling. Keilschrifttexte aus Assur religiösen Inhalts.
KAT Kommentar zum Alten Testament.
KB¹ L. Koehler and W. Baumgartner. Lexicon in Veteris Testamenti Libros. Leiden: Brill, 1958.
KB² L. Koehler, W. Baumgartner, and J. Stamm, et al., Editors. Hebräisches und aramäisches Lexikon zum Alten Testament. Leiden: Brill, 1967.
KBo Keilschrifttexte aus Boghazköi. (vols. 1-22 are a subseries of WVD OG). Leipzig & Berlin.
KIF Kleinasiatische Forschungen.
KKU W. Sallaberger, Der Kultische Kalender der Ur III Zeit. Untersuchungen zur Assyriologie und Vorderasiatischen Archäologie 7/1. Berlin & New York: de Gruyter, 1993.
KRI K. A. Kitchen. Ramesside Inscriptions, Historical and Biographical. Oxford, 1969-.
KTU M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, and J. Sanmartín. Keilalphabetische Texte aus Ugarit einschliesslich der keilalphabetischen Texte ausserhalb Ugarits. Teil 1 Transkription. AOAT 24/1. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1976.
KTU² M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, and J. Sanmartín. The Cuneiform Alphabetic Texts from Ugarit, Ras Ibn Hani, and Other Places (KTU: Second, enlarged edition). Münster: Ugarit-Verlag, 1995.
KUB Keilschrifturkunden aus Boghazköi. Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Vorderasiatische Abteilung. Berlin: Akademie Verlag, 1921-.
KZ Historische Sprachforschung = Zeitschrift für Vergleichende Sprachforschung ("Kuhns Zeitschrift")
LAPO Littératures anciennes du Proche-Orient.
LAS S. Parpola. Letters from Assyrian Scholars to the Kings Esarhaddon and Assurbanipal. 2 Vols. AOAT 5. Neukirchen-Vluyn, 1970, 1983.
LCL Loeb Classical Library.
LaA Lexikon der Ägyptologie.
- LIH L. W. King. The Letters and Inscriptions of Hammurabi.
LMAOS Liverpool Monographs in Archaeology and Oriental Studies.
LKA E. Ebeling. Literarische Keilschrifttexte aus Assur.
LSS Leipziger semitistische Studien.
LV Late Version.
MAOG Mitteilungen der altorientalischen Gesellschaft.
MARI Mari. Annales de recherches interdisciplinaires.
MAS Münchner ägyptologische Studien.
MAV Middle Assyrian Version.
MDAIK Mitteilungen des deutschen archäologischen Instituts, Abteilung Kairo.
MDOG Mitteilungen der deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft.
MIO Mitteilungen des Instituts für Orientforschung.
MLE Materiali lessicali ed epigrafici.
MMEW A. Livingstone. Mystical and Mythological Explanatory Works of Assyrian and Babylonian Scholars. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1986 (reprint 1987).
MRS Mission de Ras Shamra. Paris.
MSL Materialien zum sumerischen Lexikon; Materials for the Sumerian Lexicon.
MVAG Mitteilungen der vorderasiatisch-ägyptischen Gesellschaft.
NABU Nouvelles assyriologiques brèves et utiles.
NAWG Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen.
Nbn. J. N. Strassmaier. Inschriften von Nabonidus.
OA Oriens Antiquus. Rivista del Centro per le Antichità e la Storia dell'Arte del Vicino Oriente.
OBO Orbis Biblicus et Orientalis.
OBV Old Babylonian Version.
OCPR E. Matsushima, Editor. Official Cult and Popular Religion in the Ancient Near East: Papers of the First Colloquium on the Ancient Near East - The City and Its Life, held at the Middle Eastern Culture Center in Japan (Mitaka, Tokyo), March 20-22, 1992. Heidelberg: Winter, 1993.
OECT Oxford Editions of Cuneiform Texts.
OIP The University of Chicago, Oriental Institute Publications.
OLA Orientalia Iovaniensia analecta.
OLP Orientalia Iovaniensia periodica.
OLZ Orientalistische Literaturzeitung.
Or Orientalia. n.s.
OrSuec Orientalia Suecana.
OTL The Old Testament Library, Westminster Press.
OTS Oldtestamentische Studien.
PAAJR Proceedings of the American Academy of Jewish Research.
PAPS Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society.
PBS Publications of the Babylonian Section, University Museum, University of Pennsylvania.
PEQ Palestine Exploration Quarterly.
PIBA Proceedings of the Irish Biblical Association.
PIHANS Publications de l'Institut historique et archéologique néerlandais de Stamboul.
PJ Palästina-Jahrbuch.
PKB J. A. Brinkman. A Political History of Post-Kassite Babylonia 1158-722 B.C. Rome, 1968.
POTT D. J. Wiseman, Editor. Peoples of Old Testament Times. Oxford: Clarendon.
PRU J. Nougayrol/Ch. Virolleaud. Le Palais royal d'Ugarit. II-VI. MRS. Paris: Imprimerie Nationale, 1955-1970.
PSBA Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology.
PSD Å. Sjöberg, Editor. The Sumerian Dictionary of the University Museum of the University of Pennsylvania. Philadelphia, 1948-.
PPYEE Publications of the Pennsylvania-Yale Expedition to Egypt.

R	H. C. Rawlinson, The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Western Asia .	SAA	State Archives of Assyria.
RA	Revue d'assyriologie et d'archéologie orientale .	SAAB	State Archives of Assyria Bulletin .
RAI	Recontre Assyriologique Internationale .	SAAS	State Archives of Assyria Studies.
RAI 26	B. Alster, Editor. Death in Mesopotamia . Mesopotamia 8. Copenhagen: Akademisk Forlag.	SAHG	A. Falkenstein and W. von Soden. Sumerische und akkadische Hymnen und Gebete . Zürich and Stuttgart, 1953.
RAI 38	La circulation des biens, des personnes et des idées dans le Proche-Orient ancien: Actes de la XXXVIII^e R.A.I. Paris: Editions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1992.	SÄK	Studien zur altägyptischen Kultur .
RAKM	H. D. Galter, Editor. Die Rolle der Astronomie in den Kulturen Mesopotamiens . Beiträge zum 3. Gräzer Morgenländischen Symposium (23.-27. September 1991). Graz: GrazKult.	SANE	Sources from the Ancient Near East.
RARG	H. Bonnet. Reallexikon der ägyptischen Religionsgeschichte . Berlin, 1952.	SAOC	Studies in Ancient Oriental Civilizations. Chicago: The Oriental Institute.
ResQ	Restoration Quarterly .	SARI	Jerrold S. Cooper. Sumerian and Akkadian Royal Inscriptions . Vol. 1: The Pre-Sargonic Texts . The AOS Translation Series 1. New Haven, CN: AOS, 1986.
RB	Revue biblique .	SBAW	Sitzungsberichte der bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.
RdÉ	Revue d'Égyptologie .	SBH	G. A. Reisner. Sumerisch-babylonische Hymnen nach Thontafeln griechischer Zeit .
RES	Répertoire d'épigraphie sémitique .	SBL	Society of Biblical Literature.
RGBK	B. Janowski, et al., Editors. Religionsgeschichtliche Beziehungen zwischen Kleinasien, Nordsyrien und dem Alten Testament . Internationales Symposium Hamburg 17.-21. März 1990. OBO 129. Freiburg/Schweiz: Universitätsverlag.	SBLDS	Society of Biblical Literature Dissertation Series.
RGTC	Répertoire géographique des textes cunéiformes, B TAVO, Reihe B 7, 1ff. Wiesbaden, 1974-.	SBLRBS	SBL Resources for Biblical Study.
RHA	Revue hittite et asiatique .	SBLWAW	SBL Writings of the Ancient World.
RHR	Revue de l'histoire des religions .	SBT	Studies in Biblical Theology.
RIDA	Revue internationale des droits de l'antiquité . 3rd series. Brussels.	SBV	Standard Babylonian Version.
RIH	Field numbers of tablets excavated at Ras Ibn-Hani.	SCO	Studi Classici e Orientali .
RIMA 1	The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia. Assyrian Periods . Volume 1. A. K. Grayson. Assyrian Rulers of the Third and Second Millennia BC (To 1115 BC) . Toronto: University of Toronto, 1987.	ScrHier	Scripta Hierosolymitana.
RIMA 2	The Royal Inscriptions of Mesopotamia. Assyrian Periods . Volume 2. A. K. Grayson. Assyrian Rulers of the Early First Millennium BC (1114-859 BC) . Toronto: University of Toronto, 1991.	SDB	Supplément au Dictionnaire de la Bible . Paris.
RISA	G. A. Barton. The Royal Inscriptions of Sumer and Akkad . Library of Ancient Semitic Inscriptions 1; New Haven: Yale, 1929.	SEL	Studi Epigrafici e Linguistici sul Vicino Oriente antico .
RIA	E. Ebeling and B. Meissner, et al., Editors. Reallexikon der Assyriologie .	SGL	A. Falkenstein and J. van Dijk. Sumerische Götterlieder . Heidelberg, 1959.
RS	Field numbers of tablets excavated at Ras Shamra.	Shnaton	Shnaton. An Annual for Biblical and Ancient Near Eastern Studies . (Hebrew).
RSF	Rivista di Studi Fenici .	SJOT	Scandinavian Journal of the Old Testament .
RSO	Rivista degli Studi Orientali .	SIC 1	C. D. Evans, W. W. Hallo, and J. B. White, Editors. Scripture in Context: Essays on the Comparative Method . Pittsburgh, 1980.
RSOu	Ras Shamra - Ougarit. Publications de la Mission Française Archéologique de Ras Shamra - Ougarit. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1983-.	SIC 2	W. W. Hallo, J. C. Moyer, and L. G. Perdue, Editors. Scripture in Context II: More Essays on the Comparative Method . Winona Lake, Indiana, 1983.
RSOu 3	M. Yon, Editor. Le centre de la ville. 38^e-44^e campagnes (1978-1984) . RSOu 3. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1987.	SIC 3	W. W. Hallo, B. W. Jones, and G. L. Mattingly, Editors. The Bible in the Light of Cuneiform Literature. Scripture in Context III . Ancient Near Eastern Texts and Studies 8. Lewiston: Mellen, 1990.
RSOu 4	D. Pardec. Les textes para-mythologiques de la 24^e campagne (1961) . RSOu 4. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1988.	SIC 4	K. L. Younger, Jr., W. W. Hallo, and B. F. Batto, Editors. The Canon in Comparative Perspective. Scripture in Context IV . Ancient Near Eastern Texts and Studies, 11. Lewiston, NY: The Edwin Mellen Press, 1991.
RSOu 6	M. Yon, et al., Editors. Arts et industries de la pierre . RSOu 6. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1991.	SMEA	Studi micenei ed egeo-anatolici .
RSOu 7	P. Bordreuil, Editor. Une bibliothèque au sud de la ville . RSOu 7. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1991.	SO	Sources orientales .
RSOu 11	M. Yon, M. Szymer, P. Bordreuil, Editors. Le Pays d'Ougarit autour de 1200 av. J.C. Histoire et archéologie . Actes du Colloque International, Paris, 28 juin - 1 ^{er} juillet 1993. RSOu 11. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations, 1995.	SÖAW	Sitzungsberichte der österreichischen Akademie der Wissenschaft, Phil.-hist. Kl., Vienna.
RT	Recueil de travaux relatifs à la philologie et à l'archéologie égyptiennes et assyriennes .	SPAW	Sitzungsberichte der Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaft, Phil.-hist. Kl., Berlin.
		SPHC	Select Papyri in the Hieratic Character from the Collections of the British Museum . Part 2. London, 1860.
		SRT	E. Chiera. Sumerian Religious Texts . Upland, PA, 1924.
		SSEAJ	Society for the Study of Egyptian Antiquities Journal .
		SSI	J. C. L. Gibson. Textbook of Syrian Semitic Inscriptions . 3 Vols. Oxford, 1973-79.
		SSU	Studia Semitica Upsaliensia .
		StBoT	Studien zu den Boğazköy Texten .
		STT	O. R. Gurney, J. J. Finkelstein and P. Hulin. The Sultantepe Tablets .
		Studia Aramacia	M. J. Geller, J. C. Greenfield, and M. P. Weitzman, Editors. Studia Aramica: New Sources and New Approaches . JSS Supplement 4. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1995.
		Studies Alp	H. Otten, H. Ertem, E. Akurgal and A. Stiel, Editors. Hittite and Other Anatolian and Near Eastern Studies .

- in Honour of Sedat Alp. Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu Basımevi, 1992.
- Studies*
Ahlström W. B. Barrack and J. R. Spencer, Editors. In the Shelter of Elyon: Essays on Ancient Palestinian Life in Honor of G. W. Ahlström. JSOTSup 31. Sheffield: JSOT, 1984.
- Studies*
Bounni P. Matthiae, et al., Editors. Resurrecting the Past. A Joint Tribute to Adnan Bounni. Uitgaven van het Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Instituut te Istanbul 67. Istanbul: Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Instituut te Istanbul, 1990.
- Studies*
Brunner M. Görg, Editor. Fontes aequae Pontes. Eine Festgabe für Hellmut Brunner. AAT 5. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1983.
- Studies*
Brunner-Traut I. Gramer-Wallert and W. Helck, Editors. Festschrift für Emma Brunner-Traut. Tübingen: Attempto Verlag, 1992.
- Studies*
Cazelles A. Caquot and M. Delcor, Editors. Mélanges bibliques et orientaux en l'honneur de M. Henri Cazelles. AOAT 212. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1981.
- Studies*
Dussaud Mélanges syriens offerts à Monsieur René Dussaud: secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des inscriptions et belles-lettres. 2 Vols. BAH 30. Paris: Geuthner, 1939.
- Studies*
Ehrman Y. L. Arbetman, Editor. Fucus. A Semitic/Afrasian Gathering in Remembrance of Albert Ehrman. Current Issues in Linguistic Theory 58. Philadelphia: Benjamins, 1988.
- Studies*
Fecht J. Osing and G. Dreyer, Editors. Form and Mass, Festschrift für G. Fecht. AAT 12. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1987.
- Studies*
Fensham W. T. Claassen, Editor. Text and Context. Old Testament and Semitic Studies for F. C. Fensham. JSOTSup 48. Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1988.
- Studies*
Finkelstein M. deJong Ellis, Editor. Essays on the Ancient Near East in Memory of Jacob Joel Finkelstein. Memoirs of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, December, 19. Hamden, CT: Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, Transactions, 1977.
- Studies*
Fitzmyer M. P. Horgan and P. J. Kobelski, Editors. To Touch the Text. Biblical and Related Studies in Honor of Joseph A. Fitzmyer, S.J. New York: Crossroad, 1989.
- Studies*
Freedman C. Meyers and M. O'Connor. Essays in Honor of David Noel Freedman in Celebration of his Sixtieth Birthday. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1983.
- Studies*
Galling A. Kuschke and E. Kutsch, Editors. Archäologie und Altes Testament. Festschrift für Kurt Galling zum 8. Jan. 1970. Tübingen: Mohr (Siebeck), 1970.
- Studies*
Gibson N. Wyatt, W. G. E. Watson and J. B. Lloyd, Editors. Ugarit, Religion and Culture. Proceedings of the International Colloquium on Ugarit, Religion and Culture Edinburgh, July 1994. Essays Presented in Honour of Professor John C. L. Gibson. UBL 12. Münster: Ugarit-Verlag, 1996.
- Studies*
Glueck James A. Sanders, Editor. Near Eastern Archaeology in the Twentieth Century. Essays in Honor of Nelson Glueck. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1970.
- Studies*
Gordon H. A. Hoffner, Jr., Editor. Orient and Occident. Essays Presented to Cyrus H. Gordon on the Occasion of his Sixty-fifth Birthday. AOAT 22. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1973.
- Studies*
Gordon² G. Rendsburg, et al., Editors. The Bible World. Essays in Honor of Cyrus H. Gordon. New York: KTAV/ New York University, 1980.
- Studies*
Griffith S. R. K. Glanville, Editor. Studies Presented to F. Ll. Griffith. London: Oxford University Press, 1932.
- Studies*
Güterbock K. Bittel, et al., Editors. Anatolian Studies Presented to Hans Gustav Güterbock on the Occasion of his 65th Birthday. PHANS33. Istanbul: Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Instituut in het Nabije Oosten, 1974.
- Studies*
Güterbock² H. A. Hoffner, Jr., and G. Beckman, Editors. Kaniš-šuwat. A Tribute to Hans G. Güterbock on his Seventy-Fifth Birthday. AS 23. Chicago: The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.
- Studies*
Hallo M. E. Cohen, D. C. Snell and D. B. Weisberg, Editors. The Tablet and the Scroll: Near Eastern Studies in Honor of William W. Hallo. Bethesda, MD: CDL, 1993.
- Studies*
Hospers H. L. J. Vanstiphout, et al., Editors. Scripta Signa Vocis: Studies about Scripts, Scriptures, Scribes, and Languages in the Near East, Presented to J. H. Hospers by his Pupils, Colleagues, and Friends. Groningen: Egbert Forsten, 1986.
- Studies*
Hughes Studies in Honor of George R. Hughes. SAOC 39. Chicago: Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.
- Studies*
Jacobsen S. J. Lieberman, Editor. Sumerological Studies in Honor of Thorkild Jacobsen. AS 20. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1976.
- Studies*
Kramer B. L. Eichler, et al., Editors. Kramer Anniversary Volume. AOAT 25. Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- Studies*
Kramer² Jack M. Sasson, Editor. Studies in Literature from the Ancient Near East ... Dedicated to Samuel Noah Kramer. AOS 65. New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1984.
- Studies*
Kraus G. van Driel, et al., Editors. Zikir Šumim. Assyriological Studies Presented to F. R. Kraus on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday. Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten Studia Francisci Scholten Memoriae Dicata 5. Leiden: Brill, 1982.
- Studies*
Kutscher A. F. Rainey, Editor. kinattūtu ša dārāti: Raphael Kutscher Memorial Volume. Tel Aviv Occasional Publications 1. Tel Aviv: Institute of Archaeology of Tel Aviv University, 1993.
- Studies*
Laroche E. Masson, Editor. Florilegium Anatolicum. Mélanges offerts à Emmanuel Laroche. Paris: Éditions E. de Boccard, 1979.
- Studies*
Leslau A. S. Kaye, Editor. Semitic Studies in Honor of Wolf Leslau on the Occasion of his Eighty-fifth Birthday November 14th, 1991. 2 Volumes. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1991.
- Studies*
Loewenstamm Y. Avishur and J. Blau, Editors. Studies in Bible and the Ancient Near East Presented to Samuel E. Loewenstamm on His Seventieth Birthday. Jerusalem: Rubenstein, 1978.
- Studies*
Meek W. W. McCullough, Editor. The Seed of Wisdom: Essays in Honour of T. J. Meek. Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1964.
- Studies*
Moran T. Abusch, J. Huehnergard and P. Steinkeller, Editors. Lingering Over Words: Studies in Ancient Near Eastern Literature in Honor of William L. Moran. HSS 37. Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1990.
- Studies*
Naster R. Doncel and R. Lebrun, Editors. Archéologie et religions de l'Anatolie ancienne: mélanges en l'honneur du professeur Paul Naster. Homo Religiosus 10. 2 Volumes. Louvain-la-Neuve: Centre d'histoire des religions, 1983.
- Studies*
Oppenheim R. D. Biggs and J. A. Brinkman, Editors. From the Workshop of the Assyrian Dictionary. Studies Presented to A. Leo Oppenheim. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1964.
- Studies*
Otto J. Assmann, E. Feucht and R. Grieshammer, Editors. Fragen an die Altägyptischen Literatur. Studien zum Gedenken an E. Otto. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1977.
- Studies*
Pope J. H. Marks and R. M. Good, Editors. Love and Death in the Ancient Near East: Essays in Honor of Marvin H. Pope. Guilford: Four Quarters Publishing Company, 1987.

- Studies Reiner* F. Rochberg-Halton, Editor. Language, Literature, and History: Philological and Historical Studies presented to Erica Reiner. AOS 67. New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1987.
- Studies Rowley* M. Noth, Editor. Wisdom in Israel and in the Ancient Near East Presented to Professor Harold Henry Rowley. VTSup 3. Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1955.
- Studies Sachs* E. Leichty, et al., Editors. A Scientific Humanist: Studies in Memory of Abraham Sachs. Occasional Publications of the Samuel Noah Kramer Fund 9. Philadelphia: University Museum, 1988.
- Studies Schott* W. Helck, Editor. Festschrift für Siegfried Schott zu seinem 70. Geburtstag am 20. August 1967. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz, 1968.
- Studies Seeligmann* Y. Zakovits and A. Rofé, Editors. Sepher Yisḥaq Arieḥ Seeligmann. Jerusalem: Rubenstein, 1983.
- Studies Segert* E. M. Cook, Editor. Sopher Mahir: Northwest Semitic Studies Presented to Stanislav Segert. Santa Monica, 1990 = Maarav 5-6.
- Studies Sjöberg* H. Behrens, et al., Editors. Dumu-e, dub-ba-a. Studies in Honor of Åke W. Sjöberg. Occasional Publications of the Samuel Noah Kramer Fund 11. Philadelphia: University Museum, 1989.
- Studies Speiser* William W. Hallo, Editor. Essays in Memory of E. A. Speiser. AOS 53. New Haven: American Oriental Society, 1968.
- Studies Stinespring* J. M. Efrid, Editor. The Use of the Old Testament in the New and Other Essays. Studies in Honor of William Franklin Stinespring. Durham: Duke University Press, 1972.
- Studies Tadmor* M. Cogan and I. Eph'al, Editors. Ah, Assyria, ... Studies in Assyrian History and Ancient Near Eastern Historiography Presented to Hayim Tadmor. ScrHier 33. Jerusalem: The Magnes Press, 1991.
- Studies Talmon* M. Fishbane and E. Tov, Editors. 'Sha'arei Talmon': Studies Presented to Shemaryahu Talmon. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns, 1992.
- Studies Wilson* G. Kadish, Editor. Studies in Honor of John A. Wilson. SAOC 35. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1969.
- Studies Wright* F. M. Cross, W. E. Lemke, and P. D. Miller, Editors. Magnalia Dei, The Mighty Acts of God: Essays on the Bible and Archaeology in Memory of G. Ernest Wright. Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1976.
- SWBAS The Social World of Biblical Antiquity Series.
- TB Tyndale Bulletin.
- TCL Musée du Louvre, Département des Antiquités orientales, Textes cunéiformes.
- TCS Texts from Cuneiform Sources.
- TDOT G. Johannes Botterweck and H. Ringgren, Editors. Theological Dictionary of the Old Testament. Rev. ed. Trans. by J. T. Willis. Grand Rapids: 1974.
- Theth Texte der Hethiter. Heidelberg: Carl Winter Verlag.
- ThS Theologische Studien.
- TLB Tabulae cuneiformes a F. M. Th. de Liagre Böhl collectae.
- TLZ Theologische Literaturzeitung.
- TMH Texte und Materialien der Frau Professor Hilprecht Collection of Babylonian Antiquities im Eigentum der Universität Jena. Leipzig, 1932-37.
- TUAT O. Kaiser, Editor. Texte aus der Umwelt des Alten Testaments. Gütersloh, 1984.
- TZ Theologische Zeitschrift.
- UBL Ugaritisch-Biblische Literatur.
- UET Ur Excavations, Texts.
- UF Ugarit-Forschungen.
- Ugaritica 5 C. F. A. Schaeffer, Editor. Ugaritica 5. MRS 16; BAH 80. Paris: Imprimerie Nationale; Geuthner.
- Ugaritica 6 J.-C. Courtois, Editor. Ugaritica 6. MRS 17; BAH 81. Paris: Mission Archéologique de Ras Shamra; Geuthner.
- Ugaritica 7 C. F. A. Schaeffer, Editor. Ugaritica 7. MRS 18; BAH 99. Paris: Mission Archéologique de Ras Shamra; Geuthner.
- UMBS University of Pennsylvania. The University Museum, Publications of the Babylonian Section.
- Unity and Diversity H. Goedicke and J. J. M. Roberts, Editors. Unity and Diversity: Essays in the History, Literature, and Religion of the Ancient Near East. Baltimore and London: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1975.
- Urk. IV K. Sethe and W. Helck, Editors. Urkunden des ägyptischen Altertums, Abteilung IV: Urkunden der 18. Dynastie. Fascicles 1-22. Leipzig and Berlin, 1906-1958.
- UT C. H. Gordon. Ugaritic Textbook. AnOr 38. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1965.
- VAB Vorderasiatische Bibliothek.
- VAT Tablets in the collections of the Staatliche Museen, Berlin.
- VO Vicino Oriente.
- VT Vetus Testamentum.
- VTSup Supplements to Vetus Testamentum.
- Wb A. Erman and H. Grapow, Editors. Wörterbuch der ägyptischen Sprache. 7 Vols. Leipzig, 1926-1963.
- WBC Word Biblical Commentary.
- WCJS World Congress of Jewish Studies.
- WHJP World History of the Jewish People.
- WMANT Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament.
- WO Die Welt des Orients.
- WVDOG Wissenschaftliche Veröffentlichungen der Deutschen Orient-Gesellschaft.
- YBC Yale Babylonian Collection.
- YES Yale Egyptological Studies.
- YNES Yale Near Eastern Researches.
- YOS Yale Oriental Series. Babylonian Texts.
- YOR Yale Oriental Series. Researches.
- ZA Zeitschrift für Assyriologie und vorderasiatische Archäologie.
- ZÄS Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache und Altertumskunde.
- ZAW Zeitschrift für die alttestamentliche Wissenschaft.
- ZDMG Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländischen Gesellschaft.
- ZDPV Zeitschrift des deutschen Palästina-Vereins.
- ZThK Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche.

GENERAL ABBREVIATIONS

Abbr.	abbreviation	n(n).	note(s)
Akk.	Akkadian	NJPS	New Jewish Publication Society translation
ANE	ancient Near East	NRSV	New Revised Standard Version
Aram.	Aramaic	NS	New Hittite Script
BH	Biblical Hebrew	n.s.	New Series
ca.	circa	OB	Old Babylonian
col(s).	column(s)	obv.	obverse
ED	Early Dynastic Period	OH	Old Hittite
ed.	edition	P.	Papyrus
Eg.	Egyptian	perf.	perfect
esp.	especially	Phil.-hist. Kl.	Philosophisch-historische Klasse
GN	geographical name	Phoen.	Phoenician
Heb.	Hebrew	pl.	plural
imperf.	imperfect	pl(s).	plate(s)
JPS	Jewish Publication Society	prep.	preposition
K	Kuyunjik Collection, British Museum	r.	reverse
KJV	King James Version	rev.	revised
LH	Late Hebrew	SBV	Standard Babylonian Version
LXX	Septuagint	Sel.	Selection
MH	Middle Hittite	Sum.	Sumerian
MS	Middle Hittite Script	WS	West Semitic
ms(s)	manuscript(s)	Sam.	Samaritan Pentateuch
MT	Masoretic Text	Ug.	Ugaritic

ABBREVIATIONS OF BIBLICAL BOOKS (INCLUDING THE APOCRYPHA)

Gen	Genesis	Ps (pl.: Pss)	Psalms(s)
Exod	Exodus	Job	Job
Lev	Leviticus	Prov	Proverbs
Num	Numbers	Ruth	Ruth
Deut	Deuteronomy	Cant	Canticles (= Song of Songs)
Josh	Joshua	EccI (= Qoh)	Ecclesiastes (= Qoheleth)
Judg	Judges	Lam	Lamentations
1-2 Sam	1-2 Samuel	Esth	Esther
1-2 Kgs	1-2 Kings	Dan	Daniel
Isa	Isaiah	Ezra	Ezra
Jer	Jeremiah	Neh	Nehemiah
Ezek	Ezekiel	1-2 Chr	1-2 Chronicles
Hos	Hosea	Add Esth	Additions to Esther
Joel	Joel	Bar	Baruch
Obad	Obadiah	Bel	Bel and the Dragon
Amos	Amos	1-2 Esdr	1-2 Esdras
Jonah	Jonah	4 Ezra	4 Ezra
Mic	Micah	Jdt	Judith
Nah	Nahum	Ep Jer	Epistle of Jeremiah
Hab	Habakkuk	1-2-3-4 Macc	1-2-3-4 Maccabees
Zeph	Zephaniah	Sir	Sirach (Ecclesiasticus)
Hag	Haggai	Sus	Susanna
Zech	Zechariah	Tob	Tobit
Mal	Malachi	Wis	Wisdom

TALMUDIC SOURCES

b. Šabb.	Babylonian Talmud, Šabbat
b. 'Abod. Zar.	Babylonian Talmud, 'Aboda Zara
y. Sanh. 18a	Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin

This page intentionally left blank

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

- | | |
|--|---|
| JAMES P. ALLEN
Metropolitan Museum of Art BENDT ALSTER
University of Copenhagen RICHARD H. BEAL
University of Chicago GARY BECKMAN
University of Michigan CHAIM COHEN
Ben Gurion University of the Negev BILLIE JEAN COLLINS
Emory University STEPHANIE DALLEY
Oxford University AARON DEMSKY
Bar-Ilan University D. O. EDZARD
University of Munich GERTRUD FARBER
University of Chicago DANIEL FLEMING
New York University BENJAMIN R. FOSTER
Yale University MICHAEL V. FOX
University of Wisconsin, Madison GENE B. GRAGG
University of Chicago ANN K. GUINAN
University of Pennsylvania WILLIAM W. HALLO
Yale University WOLFGANG HEIMPEL
University of California, Berkeley JAMES K. HOFFMEIER
Wheaton College HARRY A. HOFFNER, JR.
University of Chicago | TH. P. J. VAN DEN HOUT
University of Amsterdam VICTOR HUROWITZ
Ben Gurion University of the Negev THORKILD JACOBSEN ‡
Harvard University DINA KATZ
Leiden JACOB KLEIN
Bar-Ilan University BARUCH A. LEVINE
New York University MIRIAM LICHTHEIM
University of California, retired ALASDAIR LIVINGSTONE University of Birmingham TREMPER LONGMAN III
Westminster Theological Seminary GREGORY MCMAHON University of New Hampshire ALAN MILLARD
University of Liverpool DENNIS PARDEE
University of Chicago ROBERT K. RITNER
University of Chicago YITSCHAK SEFATI
Bar-Ilan University NILI SHUPAK
University of Haifa RICHARD C. STEINER
Yeshiva University H. L. J. VANSTIPHOUT
University of Groningen K. LAWSON YOUNGER, JR.
LeTourneau University |
|--|---|

‡ Deceased

This page intentionally left blank

INTRODUCTION

ANCIENT NEAR EASTERN TEXTS AND THEIR RELEVANCE FOR BIBLICAL EXEGESIS¹

William W. Hallo

Classical and Near Eastern parallels have been used to illuminate the biblical text for as long as there have been biblical studies. Already according to Philo Judaeus, writing in Greek and living in the shadow of the great Greek library of Alexandria² in the first half century of the Common Era,³ Abraham "becomes a speculative philosopher,"⁴ a role-model for the sect of Jewish ascetics that he described as Therapeutae.⁵ Nine centuries later, Saadia Gaon,⁶ likewise born in Egypt⁷ but living in the equally stimulating atmosphere of Abbasid Baghdad,⁸ freely employed his knowledge of Arabic to solve cruxes of Biblical Hebrew.⁹ But it again took almost another millennium before biblical names, words, and themes, were to be juxtaposed, not just to those of the contemporary world, but to those long lost to sight and mind in the buried cities of the past.

The nineteenth century of our era opened Egypt and the Asiatic Near East to large-scale excavations, and witnessed the decipherments of the hieroglyphic and cuneiform scripts. The results revolutionized what can best be described as "the first half of history" — that 2500-year stretch between the invention of these earliest forms of writing and their replacement by the simpler "alphabetic" scripts of the Hebrew and Greek traditions, and their derivations.¹⁰ The period 3000-500 BCE (more or less), ostensibly the context of the biblical record, was thrown into wholly new relief. The inevitable transformation of biblical studies was not long in ensuing.

It is sufficient to recall in this connection those great syntheses that characterized German biblical scholarship of the comparative variety¹¹ beginning in 1872 with Eberhard Schrader and his The Cuneiform Inscriptions and the Old Testament.¹² A second, revised edition appeared as early as 1883, and twenty years later, in 1903, the compendium, by now classic, was completely revised and updated by two leading Assyriologists of the time, Heinrich Zimmern and Hugo Winckler.¹³ Winckler had himself entered the lists with a compendium of his own by now in its second edition.¹⁴

The following year, 1904, the scope of coverage was extended to the hieroglyphic sources from Egypt in The Old Testament in the Light of the Ancient East, by Alfred Jeremias.¹⁵ The popularity of this work can be judged by the fact that it went through three further editions, each one thoroughly revised.¹⁶

Meantime Hugo Gressmann widened the scope of such works still further by introducing the pictorial element in "Ancient Near Eastern Texts and Pictures to the Old Testament," in two volumes and as many editions.¹⁷

¹ In their original form, these remarks were presented to the Eleventh World Congress of Jewish Studies, Jerusalem, June 25, 1993. Their concluding portion appeared in Proceedings of the Eleventh World Congress of Jewish Studies. Division A: The Bible and Its World (Jerusalem: World Union of Jewish Studies, 1994) 9-15.

² Edward A. Parsons, The Alexandrian Library (Amsterdam: Elsevier, 1952).

³ Ca. 20 BCE - 50 CE.

⁴ Samuel Sandmel, "Philo's place in Judaism: a Study of Conceptions of Abraham in Jewish Literature," HUCA 25 (1954) 209-238; 26 (1955) 151-332, esp. p. 288. Reprinted as Philo's Place in Judaism (Cincinnati: Hebrew Union College Press, 1956).

⁵ In his De Vita Contemplativa; see Sandmel, ibid., 315-317.

⁶ 882-942 CE.

⁷ Specifically in Pithom, in the Fayyum District, some 150 miles south of Alexandria.

⁸ Jacob Lassner, The Topography of Baghdad in the Early Middle Ages: Texts and Studies (Detroit: Wayne State University, 1970); Guy LeStrange, Baghdad During the 'Abbasid Caliphate (London: Oxford University Press, 1900).

⁹ Solomon L. Skoss, Saadia Gaon, the Earliest Hebrew Grammarian (Philadelphia: Dropsie College Press, 1955).

¹⁰ W. W. Hallo, "The first half of history," Yale Alumni Magazine 37/8 (May, 1974) 13-17.

¹¹ Cf. the brief survey by W. W. Hallo, "German and Jewish Culture: Land of Two Rivers?" Shofar 7/4 (Summer 1989) 1-10.

¹² Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament (Giessen, 1872; 2nd ed., 1883).

¹³ Die Keilinschriften und das Alte Testament (Berlin: Reuther & Richard, 1903).

¹⁴ Keilinschriftliches Textbuch zum Alten Testament (Leipzig, 1892, 1903). A third ed. appeared in 1909.

¹⁵ Das Alte Testament im Lichte des Alten Orients (Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1904).

¹⁶ 1906, 1916, 1930.

¹⁷ Altorientalische Texte und Bilder zum Alten Testament (Tübingen: J. B. Mohr, 1909; 2nd ed., Berlin/Leipzig: W. de Gruyter, 1926-27).

But even where (positive) comparison is asserted, it is useful to raise questions of category and genre so that, as nearly as possible, like is compared with like. In the present project, the broader literary context, or category, will actually serve as the basic unit of organization. That is, recognizing that the relevant corpus has outgrown the bounds of a single volume, even a folio-sized volume, its three volumes are devoted respectively, to "canonical," "monumental" and "archival" texts from the ancient Near East. Since the biblical text (in its "canonical" form) is entirely canonical in the sense in which I choose to employ that term,³⁸ the reader will be immediately alerted to the categorical contrasts involved even when a comparison is suggested.

On a lower level of literary context, due attention is paid to genre (Gattung) and to the associated concept of life setting ("Sitz im Leben"). Thus, for example, within the volume devoted to "canonical" texts, the basic division is by "focus": divine, royal, or individual, with the divine focus embracing such genres as myths, hymns, prayers, divination, incantations and rituals. Finally, the questions of where, when and in what direction an alleged borrowing may have occurred is occasionally raised in the commentary, even if the question frequently cannot be answered.

But a text is not only the product of its contemporary context, its horizontal locus, as it were, in time and space. It also has its place on a vertical axis between the earlier texts that helped inspire it and the later texts that reacted to it. We can describe this feature of its interconnectedness as its vertical or, in line with current usage, its intertextual dimension. The field of biblical studies has been rather slow to employ the term itself and the field of ancient Near Eastern studies even slower.³⁹ But of course the concept as such has long been part of the stock-in-trade of both fields. Thus it is wholly appropriate to call attention to perceived instances of intertextuality both within each linguistic tradition and among separate traditions — and to do so, not in more or less random footnotes or enigmatic indices, but overtly and systematically in the margins of the translations.

The translations themselves, however, need to meet new standards if they are to serve as springboards for the recognition and designation of contextual and intertextual comparisons and contrasts. There is no need, it is true, to translate every significant text de novo, to reinvent the wheel, so to speak. But one can aspire to match the native terms and idioms with their English counterparts in such a way as to approach the ideal of a 1:1 relation in which each word (and only that word) is rendered by a given English equivalent, each derivative of that word with a derivative of that equivalent. This ideal cannot, of course, be carried out perfectly in practice, not even when the target language is German, though it was attempted with great determination by Martin Buber and Franz Rosenzweig in their translation of the Bible,⁴⁰ nor in French, where the same principle was applied by Andre Chouraqui, and certainly not in English, where a similar effort by Everett Fox has now given us a valuable new translation of the Pentateuch.⁴¹ Nor has the method ever been applied to ancient Near Eastern texts apart from the Bible. But with the help of a data base, it should theoretically be possible — though difficult in practice — to make the attempt, and to see how many improvements emerge in the understanding, both of the text itself and of its relation to other texts.

To illustrate all the theoretical principles outlined above would take at least a half dozen examples, preferably chosen from a wide variety of ancient literary corpora. But the salient points can be illustrated adequately by one example that, for all its brevity, has a fairly wide set of evidentiary implications. The "Sumerian Sargon Legend" has been known in part since 1916 from an Uruk tablet subsequently acquired by the Louvre Museum,⁴² and was duly noted in studies of Mesopotamian historiography, notably by H. G. Güterbock in 1934.⁴³ But a larger and nearly complete tablet belonging to the composition was excavated at Nippur in the season of 1951-52, assigned to the Baghdad Museum, and finally published by Jerrold Cooper and Wolfgang Heimpel in 1983. Thus nearly seventy years elapsed before the full import of the text emerged.⁴⁴

Apart from sharing a common protagonist, the text as reconstituted has little or nothing to do with the better known Akkadian Sargon Legend, sometimes cited as a possible source of the Moses birth legend, though with little justifica-

³⁸ W. W. Hallo, "The Concept of Canonicity in Cuneiform and Biblical Literature: a Comparative Appraisal," in SIC 4, 1-19.

³⁹ Hallo, "Proverbs Quoted in Epic," in Studies Moran, 203-217, esp. 203-205. It should be noted that Moran himself used the term "intertextuality" already in Studies Reiner, 253 (end).

⁴⁰ Hallo, "Notes on Translation," EF 16 (H. M. Orlinsky Volume, 1982) 99*-102*; idem, "Franz Rosenzweig übersetzt," in Wolfdieter Schmied-Kowarzik, ed., Der Philosoph Franz Rosenzweig (1886-1929) (Freiburg/München: Karl Alber, 1988) 1:287-300.

⁴¹ The Five Books of Moses ... a New Translation with Introduction, Commentary and Notes by Everett Fox (Schocken Bible 1) (New York: Schocken, 1995).

⁴² Vincent Scheil, "Nouveaux renseignements sur Šarrukin d'après un texte sumérien," RA 13 (1916) 175-179; republished by Henri de Genouillac, Textes religieux sumériens du Louvre 2 (TCL 16. Paris: Geuthner, 1930) No. 73.

⁴³ H. G. Güterbock, "Die historische Tradition und ihre literarische Gestaltung bei Babyloniern und Hethitern," ZA 42 (1934) 1-91, 44 (1938) 45-149, esp. 42:37f.

⁴⁴ J. S. Cooper and Wolfgang Heimpel, "The Sumerian Sargon Legend," JAOS 103 (1983) 67-82; republ. in J. M. Sasson, ed., Studies ... dedicated to Samuel Noah Kramer (AOS 65; 1984) 67-82.

The appeal of these works of synthesis was by no means limited to a German-speaking readership. On the contrary, many of them appeared in English translations and have been cited by their English titles here. Thus Schrader appeared in translation as early as 1885-8,¹⁸ and Jeremias in 1911.¹⁹ At the same time, German scholarship, both biblical and ancient Near Eastern, was having a profound impact in the English-speaking world through more personal, direct means: British and particularly American students coming to Germany for graduate and post-graduate study on the one hand, and on the other, German scholars coming to American universities to teach. Among many other examples of the former category, we may cite Julian Morgenstern, who received a doctorate in Assyriology from Heidelberg in 1904 with a dissertation on "The Doctrine of Sin in the Babylonian Religion."²⁰ A good example of the latter category would be Paul Haupt (1858-1926), brought from Göttingen in 1885 to head the new Oriental Seminary at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Haupt's most famous student, and the leading figure in the comparative approach to biblical studies in America through most of the twentieth century, was unquestionably William F. Albright (1891-1971).²¹ Last of the polymaths who were equally at home in cuneiform, hieroglyphics, and Northwest Semitics, he had to forego a career in Assyriology or Egyptology on account of defective eyesight, but continued to integrate every new archaeological and epigraphic discovery into his ever expanding panorama of the total experience of biblical Israel. Beginning with a dissertation on "The Assyrian Deluge Epic" written under Haupt in 1916 but never published, he spent the years between the two world wars in publishing an unending stream of articles; then, beginning in 1940, he devoted himself to longer monographic works, elegant and wide-ranging syntheses of his views on biblical history, archaeology, literature, religion and theology. The volumes entitled From the Stone Age to Christianity: Monotheism and the Historical Process (1940), The Archaeology of Palestine (1949), The Biblical Period from Abraham to Ezra: an Historical Survey (1963), History, Archaeology and Christian Humanism (1964), and Yahweh and the Gods of Canaan (1968) attest to his scope.

Although the German model of compendia of comparative texts was thus avoided by Albright, it was followed by other American scholars, notably R. W. Rogers²² and G. A. Barton,²³ whose Archaeology and the Bible appeared in its seventh and last edition in 1937. But with the approach of the Second World War and the shift of Ancient Near Eastern scholars and scholarship to America, the creation of a new compendium on an American model became a top priority. In James B. Pritchard an editor was found who was able to carry the task forward. He recruited Albright and a dozen other leading (North) American specialists,²⁴ among them four outstanding emigre scholars.²⁵ He used Gressmann as his proximate and most recent model, both in the initial selection of texts²⁶ and in the creation of a companion volume of pictures²⁷ which was his own work based on his archaeological training and interests.

Pritchard's volume, or ANET as it is frequently called, quickly established itself as the pre-eminent compendium of its kind in the post-war period. Comparable efforts by British, French and even German teams made no attempt to replace it, but rather to offer complementary works answering to different requirements. Thus for example the British "Society for Old Testament Study" published Documents from Old Testament Times (1958) on the occasion of its fortieth anniversary. But D. Winton Thomas, its editor, had no intention of matching or even approaching the scope of ANET (which was freely cited in the volume). The French series Littératures anciennes du Proche-Orient, published under the patronage of École Biblique et Archéologique Française of Jerusalem, covers much of the same ground as ANET and does so, if anything, more extensively. But its separate volumes are appearing at lengthy intervals as each is completed by the relevant contributor(s); hence the series cannot replace ANET as a handy reference work covering all or at least most of the "ancient Near Eastern texts relating to the Old Testament." Even the Germans have re-entered the lists with Texte aus der Umwelt des Alten Testaments, edited by Otto Kaiser. In three volumes, it is an ambitious attempt to revive the older tradition of German compendia and to combine that with some of the best features of the newer ones — including the depth of the French series and the breadth of ANET. But in spite of its title, it makes little or no reference to biblical parallels or contrasts.

¹⁸ Translated by O. C. Whitehouse from the 2nd German edition (London and Edinburgh: Williams and Norgate, 2 vols. = Theological Translation Fund Library, 33, 38).

¹⁹ Translated from the 2nd German ed. 2 vols. (London: Williams and Norgate = Theological Translation Library 28-29). The American edition (New York: Putnam's) was edited by the Assyriologist C. H. W. Johns.

²⁰ Morris Lieberman, "Julian Morgenstern - Scholar, Teacher, Leader," HUCA 32 (1961) 1-9.

²¹ See most recently BA 56/1 (March, 1993) for articles by J. M. Sasson, N. A. Silberman, W. W. Hallo, W. G. Dever and B. O. Long "celebrating and examining W. F. Albright."

²² Cuneiform Parallels to the Old Testament (New York: Eaton & Mains, 1912; 2nd ed. 1926).

²³ Archaeology and the Bible (Philadelphia: American Sunday-School Union, 1916; 7th ed., 1937).

²⁴ T. J. Meek (Toronto) was a Canadian.

²⁵ A. Goetze and A. L. Oppenheim for the 1st ed. (1950); A. Jamme and F. Rosenthal were added in the 2nd ed. (1955).

²⁶ See his preface to Ancient Near Eastern Texts Relating to the Old Testament (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1950) xv.

²⁷ J. B. Pritchard, The Ancient Near East in Pictures Relating to the Old Testament (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1954).

As for ANET itself, it has spawned a veritable cottage-industry of by-products. Mention has already been made of the companion volume of The Ancient Near East in Pictures (1954) familiarly known as ANEP. There have also been two combined abridgements of ANET and ANEP, published respectively in 1958²⁸ and 1975,²⁹ both widely used as textbooks. There is a 1969 volume combining the new material of the third edition of ANET with a second edition of ANEP.³⁰ Finally there is the third edition of ANET itself, which appeared at the same time. But unlike the previous two editions, the new edition did not so much break new ground as give wider circulation to new translations of Ancient Near Eastern texts that had appeared elsewhere in the interim. To quote my own review at the time,

The great appeal of (ANET) rested on sound foundations: for the first time it assembled some of the most significant Ancient Near Eastern texts in authoritative, generously annotated English translations based on the accumulated insight of several generations of scholarship scattered, till then, in a bewildering variety of publications not readily accessible to the average biblical scholar. The new edition (1969) fulfills some of the same desiderata But by its very nature it is essentially different from the original edition, for in great measure it concentrates on texts newly discovered or recovered, and by and large available in current publications, for the most part in English, which are complete with readable translations and scholarly apparatus.³¹

The trend noted in my review was not about to stop. On the contrary, the trickle observed there has meantime become a mighty stream. As ever more new texts are made available, the relationship between biblical and ancient Near Eastern studies has assumed an ever growing importance if only as measured by the sheer output of books and articles inspired by their comparison. Moshe Yitzhaki of Bar-Ilan University has even devised a whole new "bibliometric approach" to provide such a yardstick.³² Defining "citation analysis" as "the analysis of the reference in scholarly publications of a certain subject field in order to describe patterns of citation,"³³ he applies this new technique to the fields of biblical and ancient Near Eastern studies and concludes that, at least in the small and somewhat random sample tested, "the figures indicate a relatively low use of the research literature of one field by the other."³⁴

If his sample is representative, we face an anomalous situation: an ever increasing stream of ancient Near Eastern texts — recovered, reconstructed, edited and translated — which is relevant for biblical studies, but a statistical reluctance to employ them. Under the circumstances, a new compendium is called for all the more urgently. We do not, it is true, need a new ANET to provide us with a first authoritative English rendering of the texts, and as far as I know none is contemplated. But we do need a new compendium to assemble the existing renderings, update them where necessary, and indicate their relevance for biblical scholarship. That is what The Context of Scripture proposes to do. The project was conceived by David E. Orton, Senior Editor of E. J. Brill Publishers, and developed along lines set forth in a detailed proposal submitted to him by the undersigned in 1991. The collaboration of K. Lawson Younger, Jr. of LeTourneau University (Longview, Texas) as Associate Editor was secured shortly thereafter.

How does the new compendium differ from its predecessors? This question will here be considered from two perspectives — what may be called the horizontal and the vertical dimensions respectively — and the resulting theoretical formulations will then be illustrated with a concrete example or two.

The "context" of a given text may be regarded as its horizontal dimension — the geographical, historical, religious, political and literary setting in which it was created and disseminated. The contextual approach tries to reconstruct and evaluate this setting, whether for a biblical text or one from the rest of the ancient Near East.³⁵ Given the frequently very different settings of biblical and ancient Near Eastern texts, however, it is useful to recognize such contrasts as well as comparisons or, if one prefers, to operate with negative as well as positive comparison.³⁶ According to Pritchard, already Gressmann had maintained that "translations should serve ... not only for comparison and illustration, but for contrast."³⁷

²⁸ J. B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East: An Anthology of Texts and Pictures (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1958).

²⁹ J. B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East, Vol. II: A New Anthology of Texts and Pictures (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1975).

³⁰ J. B. Pritchard, ed., The Ancient Near East: Supplementary Texts and Pictures Relating to the Old Testament (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969).

³¹ W. W. Hallo, "Review of ANET (3rd ed.)," JAOS 90 (1970) 525.

³² Moshe Yitzhaki, "The Relationship Between Biblical Studies and Ancient Near East Studies: a Bibliometric Approach," ZAW 99 (1987) 232-248.

³³ Ibid., 235.

³⁴ Ibid., 248.

³⁵ W. W. Hallo, "Compare and Contrast: the Contextual Approach to Biblical Literature," in SIC 3 1-30; idem, The Book of the People (Brown Judaic Studies 225; Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1991) chapter 2: "The Contextual Approach."

³⁶ Hallo, "New Moons and Sabbaths: a Case Study in the Contrastive Approach," HUCA 48 (1977) 1-18.

³⁷ ANET (1st ed., 1950) p. xiv.

tion.⁴⁵ It is in Sumerian, a product most likely of the neo-Sumerian period (ca. 2100-1800 BCE in linguistic terms), while the later text is in Akkadian, quite possibly commissioned by Sargon II of Assyria (722-705 BCE) or at least intended to celebrate his earlier namesake. The Sumerian text is, of course, not included in ANET, but as now known it includes at least one passage that bears comparison with a biblical pericope.

Lines 53-56 as translated by Cooper read:

In those days, writing on tablets certainly existed,
but enveloping tablets did not exist;
King Urzababa, for Sargon, creature of the gods, Wrote a tablet, which would cause his own death, and
He dispatched it to Lugalzagesi in Uruk.

As both editors noted, "Line 53 parodies the famous passage in Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta 503ff."⁴⁶ — a passage, it may be added, not without its own echoes in the biography of Moses.⁴⁷ What was quickly pointed out by others, however, was that the motif of a king dispatching a potential rival to a third party carrying instructions to that party to put the rival to death so that the messenger becomes the means to his own demise, corresponds to a familiar folklore motif,⁴⁸ with echoes not only in the Bible but also in classical literature and even in Hamlet.

In the Iliad, Bellerophon was sent to the king of Lycia with a similarly deadly message. In 2 Samuel 11, King David rid himself of Uriah with a message that Uriah carried to David's general Joab. These parallels have been recognized in varying degrees by Herman Vanstiphout,⁴⁹ Veronika Afanas'eva,⁵⁰ and especially Bendt Alster.⁵¹ They show that the Uriah pericope is made up, at least in part, of traditional literary topoi or folkloristic motifs, and justify the inclusion of the newly recovered Sumerian legend in the discussion of the biblical treatment of the theme.

The most recent treatment of the Uriah pericope well illustrates the use and usefulness of ancient Near Eastern parallels for the understanding of biblical texts — if only by showing the danger of ignoring them. In "Nations and nationalism: adultery in the House of David," Regina M. Schwartz uses the pericope to condemn not only David, his people, and all his progeny, but those who have repossessed the City of David and the land of Israel in his name to this day.⁵² The study fails, not because of its political overtones, but because it presumes the historical validity of the episode, utterly ignoring its literary character. Where but in the Bible could one find national literature preserving the materials for so scathing a self-examination? And within the Bible, where more so than in the "court history of David" in 2 Samuel? And what if the author has not written history, but woven a traditional story of the "deadly letter" into an imaginative recasting of the succession narrative? Familiarity with the motif and its antiquity would at least suggest this alternative possibility.

The Sumerian Sargon Legend well illustrates the vertical component we have spoken of, depending as it does quite clearly on the earlier Sumerian Epic of Enmerkar and the Lord of Aratta, and echoed as we have seen by the later stories of Uriah in 2 Samuel and Bellerophon in the Iliad. But it also illuminates the "horizontal" context of any given text. Its focus on royalty in general, and on the spectacular rise to power of Sargon of Akkad in particular, is of a piece with the literary and ideological interests of the Ur III and Isin I dynasties of the neo-Sumerian cultural era (ca. 2100-1800 BCE).

It allows us to raise the same question as one which has repeatedly been raised with regard to comparable biblical material, namely: can we, in fact should we, separate literary and ideological considerations in assessing ancient sources? Can we and should we divide our sources strictly into literary and historical ones?

I have long pleaded for using literary and historical sources to illuminate each other — treating literary sources as precious aids in reconstructing history, and reconstructing history as the essential context for literature.⁵³ Recently,

⁴⁵ Brian Lewis, The Sargon Legend: a Study of the Akkadian Text and the Tale of the Hero Who Was Exposed at Birth (ASORDS 4; 1980); cf. ANET 119; Hallo, The Book of the People, 47f., 130f.

⁴⁶ JAOS 103 (AOS 65) 82. For this passage see below, p. 546 and G. Komoróczy, "Zur Ätiologie der Schriffterfindung im Enmerkar-Epos," AoF 3 (1975) 19-24; but more recently H. L. J. Vanstiphout, "Enmerkar's Invention of Writing Revisited," in Studies Sjöberg, 515-524.

⁴⁷ Hallo, BP, 48f., 183f., with earlier literature.

⁴⁸ K 789 in Stith Thomson's Index.

⁴⁹ H. L. J. Vanstiphout, "Some Remarks on Cuneiform cuneatures," in Studies Hospers, 217-234, esp. pp. 224, 233, n. 65.

⁵⁰ V. K. Afanas'eva, "Das sumerische Sargon-Epos. Versuch einer Interpretation," AoF 14 (1987) 237-246. According to Alster ZA 77:171, Afanas'eva already made her views known at the RAI in Leningrad in 1984.

⁵¹ B. Alster, "A Note on the Uriah letter in the Sumerian Sargon Legend," ZA 77 (1987) 169-173; idem, "Lugalbanda and the Early Epic Tradition in Mesopotamia," in Studies Moran, 59-72, esp. pp. 70f.

⁵² Critical Inquiry 19 (1992) 131-150. My thanks to Jacob Lassner for calling the article to my attention.

⁵³ Cf. most recently Hallo, "The Limits of Skepticism," JAOS 110 (1990) 187-199, esp. pp. 189f. with nn. 20-41.

Marc Brettler has come to a similar conclusion from other premises. Using the story of Ehud as his point of departure, he faults both those who, like Robert Alter, see it as "only" literature, and those who, like Baruch Halpern, see it as genuine history.

The tale of Ehud has, in fact, more in common with the Uriah pericope than at first meets the eye — including the echo of a traditional motif first associated with the great kings of the Sargonic dynasty in Mesopotamia. I refer to the assassination of a ruling monarch by an ostensibly unarmed courtier. In the Mesopotamian historiographic tradition as enshrined in its most characteristic form, the omen literature, the dastardly deed was committed by resort to the cylinder seal, or more particularly (in my opinion) to the wooden pin on which it was mounted and by which it was attached to a necklace worn by its owner; if sharpened to a point, this pin could serve as a deadly weapon when whipped off the neck and plunged into the body of the unsuspecting victim, as was apparently the fate of no less than three of the Sargonic kings: Rimush, probably his (twin?) brother Man-ishtushu, and Shar-kali-sharri. The case of Ehud, who rid Israel of its Moabite oppressor with a well-timed thrust from the dagger concealed on his right side under his cloak, is not so very different, considering the relatively greater rarity of cylinder-seals in Israel.⁵⁴

Thus I do not necessarily agree with Brettler in regarding the chief historical value of the Ehud story as lying in the attitude toward Moab on the part of Israel in the time of the author of the pericope (whenever that was!) that it reveals, but I agree with him in seeing the value of a concept of "literature as politics."⁵⁵ Such a concept had previously been recognized in Assyrian literature by Peter Machinist,⁵⁶ as Brettler later acknowledged,⁵⁷ and before that in Hittite literature by Harry Hoffner,⁵⁸ and in Egyptian literature by R. J. Williams.⁵⁹ What it implies is the rejection of any hard-and-fast dichotomy between "history" and "literature" in favor of a recognition that, often enough, history is literature, and vice versa. The old conceit held that biblical literature can be validated as history only when reflected in extra-biblical historical sources such as the Stele of Merneptah or the Mesha Stele, but is falsified as history and reduced to "mere literature" when anticipated or echoed in extra-biblical literary sources such as the Akkadian Sargon Legend or now the Sumerian Sargon Legend. This alone would justify a separation of the comparative material into historical monuments, canonical compositions, and archival documents. But the new attitude goes further. It recognizes that the assessment of a biblical text, so far from ending with the identification of an extra-biblical parallel, begins there.

In conclusion, the combination of an intertextual and a contextual approach to biblical literature holds out the promise that this millennial corpus will continue to yield new meanings on all levels: the meaning that it holds for ourselves in our own contemporary context, the meanings it has held for readers, worshippers, artists and others in the two millennia and more since the close of the canon; the meaning that it held for its own authors and the audiences of their times; and finally the meanings that it held when it was part of an earlier literary corpus. It is to the clarification of that oldest level of meaning that The Context of Scripture is dedicated.⁶⁰ It may also serve as a memorial to Pritchard, whose death occurred on January 1, 1997, as this volume was going to press.

⁵⁴ Hallo, "'As the Seal upon Thine Arm': Glyptic Metaphors in the Biblical World," in Leonard Gorelick and Elizabeth Williams Forte, eds., Ancient Seals and the Bible (Occasional Papers on the Near East 2/1; 1983) 7-17 and pl. xii, esp. pp. 13f.; idem, "'As the Seal upon Thy Heart': Glyptic Roles in the Biblical World," Bible Review 1/1 (February 1985) 20-27, esp. p. 26.

⁵⁵ Marc Brettler, "The Book of Judges: Literature as Politics," JBL 108 (1989) 395-418.

⁵⁶ P. Machinist, "Literature as Politics: the Tukulti-Ninurta Epic and the Bible," CBQ 38 (1976) 455-482.

⁵⁷ HUCA 62:285, n. 1.

⁵⁸ H. A. Hoffner, Jr., "Propaganda and Political Justification in Hittite Historiography," in Unity and Diversity, 49-62.

⁵⁹ R. J. Williams, "Literature as a Medium of Political Propaganda in Ancient Egypt," in Studies Meek, 14-30.

⁶⁰ Scripture is here cited from and defined as the Hebrew (and Aramaic) Bible. This is not to deny the relevance of ancient Near Eastern parallels for New Testament studies, but that is a subject for another book and another editor.

EGYPTIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. DIVINE FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. COSMOLOGIES

FROM THE "BOOK OF NUT" (1.1)

James P. Allen

This text consists of a series of captions accompanying the image of the goddess Nut stretched out as a representation of the sky, held off the earth by the atmosphere (Shu). Originally perhaps of Middle Kingdom composition, it appears on ceilings of the cenotaph of Seti I (Dynasty 19, ca. 1291-1279 BCE) at Abydos and the tomb of Ramesses IV (Dynasty 20, ca. 1163-1156 BCE) at Thebes; the texts were also copied, with exegesis, in two Demotic papyri of the second century CE. Together, the representation and its texts describe the ancient Egyptian concept of the universe.

Outside the Cosmos (Texts Dd-Ee, on Nut's right)

The uniform darkness,¹ ocean² of the gods, the place from which birds come: this is from her northwestern side up to her northeastern side, open to the Duat that is on her northern side,³ with her rear in the east and her head in the west. These birds exist with their faces as people and their nature as birds, one of them speaking to the other with the speech of crying.³ After they come to eat plants and to get nourished in the Black Land, alighting under the brightness of the sky, then they change into their nature of birds.

(Text L, above Nut) The upper side of this sky exists in uniform darkness,⁴ the southern, northern, western and eastern limits of which are unknown,⁵ these having been fixed in the Waters,⁶ in inertness.⁴ There is no light of the Ram there:⁵ he does not appear there — (a place) whose south, north, west and east land is unknown⁶ by the gods or akh's,⁶ there being no brightness there. And as for every place void of sky and void of land,⁷ that is the entire Duat.

a Job 26:7

b Job 18:18

c Job 38:19

d Gen 1:7

Description of Nut (Texts Ll, Gg, Q, and P)

Her right arm is on the northwestern side, [the left] on the [north]eastern side. Her head is the western Akhet, her mouth is the west.⁸ (The goddess's mouth is labeled) Western Akhet, (her crotch) Eastern Akhet.

Cycle of the Sun (Texts Aa-Bb, to the winged sun-disk at Nut's mouth)

The Incarnation⁹ of this god enters at her first hour of evening,¹⁰ becoming effective again in the embrace¹¹ of his father Osiris, and becoming purified therein. The Incarnation of this god rests from life in the Duat at her second hour of pregnancy.¹² Then the Incarnation of this god is governing the westerners, and giving directions in the Duat. Then the Incarnation of this god comes forth on earth again, having come into the world, young, his physical strength growing great again, like the first occasion of his original state. Then he is evolved into the great god, the winged disk. When this god sails to the limits of the basin of the sky, she causes him to enter again into night,

¹ Lit., "joined darkness" (kkw zm'w). See Parker 1960:52. In the Book of Gates this term refers to hours 2-11 of night — i.e., those whose darkness is unbroken by light.

² Lit., "cool waters" (qbbw), a term for the sky, specifically as a medium for travelling by boat (e.g., Pyr. 374c, 465a, 873c-d, 917a-b, 1049a, 1990b).

³ Possibly for mdw rml "human speech," though the determinatives indicate otherwise. Cf. Hornung 1963-1967:1 138, 3-4: "There is heard the sound of something in this cavern like the sound of men wailing."

⁴ Verbal noun of njnj "be slack, inert" (Wb 2:203, 7; 275, 2-16). In creation accounts the term usually connotes the potentiality for movement and life.

⁵ The Demotic text (pCarlsberg I 2, 27) glosses this line "There is no rising of the Sun there." The ram is a frequent image of the sun: Hornung 1973:85-87, pl. 5.

⁶ That is, by the forces and elements of nature ("gods") and the deceased human beings who have made a successful transition to life after death with the gods ("akh's"): Allen 1988b:45.

⁷ Perhaps "every void place of sky or earth," but the repetition of šw "void" suggests the reading adopted here (šw n for šw m). The text evidently defines the Duat as part of the world space surrounded by the universal Waters, but neither sky nor earth.

⁸ Or "Her head is in the western Akhet, her mouth is in the west," but the label "Western Akhet" on Nut's cheek suggests an identification.

⁹ The physical manifestation of a divinity (god, king, or deceased): von Beckerath 1984:39.

¹⁰ The first hour of night, beginning at sunset: Parker 1960:35, 62.

¹¹ Lit., "inside the arms" (hnm wj). The term refers to the usual means by which the ka, or life force, was passed: Pyr. 1653a.

¹² "Pregnancy" (bk't) is the term used of hours 2-4 of night: Parker 1960:35. Here it refers to the beginning of the second hour past sunset, when the sun's light disappears from the sky as it enters the Duat.

into the middle of the night,¹³ and as he sails inside the dusk these stars are behind him. When the Incarnation of this god enters her mouth, inside the Duat, it stays open after he sails inside her, so that these sailing stars¹⁴ may enter after him and come forth after him. Where they course is to their locales.

(Texts G, F, and E, to the sun-disk before Nut's foot)

The redness¹⁵ after birth, as he becomes pure in the embrace of his father Osiris. Then his father lives, as he becomes effective [again] through him, as he opens in his splitting¹⁶ and swims in his redness.

(Texts M-O, to the sun-disk on Nut's foot)

The Incarnation of this god comes forth from her rear. Then he is on course toward the world, apparent and born. Then he produces himself above.

Then he parts the thighs of his mother Nut. Then he goes away to the sky.

(Texts J-K and H, to the winged scarab at Nut's thigh)

When the Incarnation of this god comes forth from the Duat, these stars come forth after him at the birthplace.¹⁷ Then he is reared in the birthplace. Then he becomes effective again through his father Osiris, in the Abydene nome, on the first occasion of his original state. Then he is evolved and goes away to the sky, in the hour of "She Has Gone to Rest."¹⁸ Then he is dominant, having come into the world. Then his heart and his physical strength evolve. Then Geb sees the Chick,¹⁹ when the Sun has shown himself as he comes forth. Then he is entered into this (winged scarab).²⁰ Then he is evolved, like his original evolving in the world on the first occasion.

¹³ Hours 5-8 of night: Parker 1960:35.

¹⁴ A hapax (sqdw) evidently referring to the stars' motion through the sky. The Demotic text has sb²w "stars" (pCarlsberg I 3, 34).

¹⁵ Written ideographically with the red crown, but the interpretation of the Demotic text is clear: "The redness comes after birth. It is the color that comes in the sundisk at dawn ... his rays being upon earth in the color named ... The red crown is that which is read 'redness'" (pCarlsberg I 2, 1-3; Parker 1960:49).

¹⁶ Following the text of Seti I. The Demotic text glosses: "It opens to the sky" (pCarlsberg I 1, 39; Parker 1960:48).

¹⁷ The Demotic text has msqt "Milky Way" (pCarlsberg I 2, 4/6), but the earlier texts both have nmst — possibly an m-formation of msj "give birth," with dissimilation nmst* > nmst.

¹⁸ The ninth hour of night: Parker 1960:51.

¹⁹ Referring to the newborn sun. The word (w) is evidently the otherwise unattested origin of the phonetic value w of the quail-chick, its meaning suggested by the determinative of the seated child. The Demotic text has h "newborn" (pCarlsberg I 2, 18).

²⁰ The demonstrative either modifies the picture of the winged scarab (suggested by a space left blank in the text), or is used as a noun. The Demotic text explains: "that is to say, the form of the Scarab that is in [the picture]" (pCarlsberg I 1, 28-29; Parker 1960:46).

REFERENCES

Frankfort 1933 I:72-86, II pl. 81; Parker 1960 I:36-94, pl. 30-51; Hornung 1972:485-86; Allen 1988a:1-9.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 714 (1.2)

James P. Allen

This text is part of a series inscribed on coffins of the First Intermediate Period and Middle Kingdom, designed to aid the deceased's spirit in its daily journey from the Netherworld of the tomb to the world of the living. This particular spell, in which the deceased is identified with the primordial source of all matter as it first existed within the primeval waters, has so far been found only on one coffin.

The background of creation (CT VI 343j)

I am the Waters, unique, without second.

The evolution of creation (CT VI 343k-344d)

That is where I evolved, on the great occasion of my floating that happened to me.¹

a Gen 1:6-7

I am the one who once evolved —
Circlet,² who is in his egg.

I am the one who began therein, (in) the Waters.
See, the Flood is subtracted from me:³
see, I am the remainder.³

I made my body evolve through my own effec-

¹ The text opens with the universal waters as speaker, but from here to the end of the spell the speaker is Atum: cf. CT II 34g-h "Then said Atum to the Waters: I am floating, very weary." See n. 3 below.

² The term is a hapax (qbn), evidently a diminutive of qbn "circle." Both this and the following phrase refer to Atum's primordial, un-evolved state.

³ These two lines use mathematical terminology — prj "be subtracted" (Wb I 525, 1) and wḏ "remainder" (Wb I 400, 19) — to describe the distinction that existed between the primordial singularity of matter (Atum) and its environment (the universal waters).

tiveness. ⁴ I am the one who made me.	I built myself as I wished, according to my heart. ⁵
---	---

⁴ An abstract (²hw) denoting the quality of productive action, akin to magic: Friedman 1984-85; Borghouts 1987.

⁵ The seat of thought and emotion. These three lines indicate that Atum's evolution into the created world reflected his own concept of the world as it should be.

REFERENCES

CT VI 343j-344d; Faulkner 1977:270; Allen 1988a:13-14.

FROM PYRAMID TEXTS SPELL 527 (1.3)

James P. Allen

The Pyramid Texts were inscribed on the walls of the substructures of royal pyramids at the end of the Old Kingdom, with the same purpose as their descendants, the Coffin Texts. This spell begins by describing the material derivation of the first two elements of the world — the atmospheres above and below the earth (Shu and Tefnut) — from the single source of all matter (Atum), as a "mythological precedent" for the daily rebirth of the deceased king.

The birth of Shu and Tefnut from Atum (Pyr. 1248) Atum evolved ¹ growing ithyphallic, ² in Heliopolis. He put his penis in his grasp that he might	make orgasm with it, ³ and the two siblings were born — Shu and Tefnut.
--	--

¹ Following the text of Merenre (M). Pepi I (P) has "Atum is the one who evolved." The text of Pepi II (N) is a reinterpretation, with initial "Atum Scarab" as vocative and the following lines as imperatives.

² Lit., "as one who comes extended," (m jw s²w jr.f), where the self-referential jr.f indicates either the reflexive nature of the action or its relationship with the action of Atum's "evolution."

³ Atum's masturbation is one of the metaphors employed in Eg. cosmogonies to explain the physical origin of the world from a single material source: Allen 1988a:14.

REFERENCES

Pyr. 1248a-d; Faulkner 1969:198; Allen 1988a:13-14.

FROM PYRAMID TEXTS SPELL 600 (1.4)

James P. Allen

The beginning of this spell, another "mythological precedent," combines three images of the first moments of creation. The first lines invokes the divine source of all matter (Atum) in his evolution as the sun ("Scarab") and the world-space within the primeval waters. This is followed by references to the "etymological" origin of Shu and Tefnut and to the source of their life force.

Atum as the First Things (Pyr. 1652-1653a) Atum Scarab! ¹ When you became high, as the high ground,	when you rose, as the benben ² in the Phoenix ³ Enclosure in Heliopolis, you sneezed Shu, you spat Tefnut, ⁴
---	---

¹ Referring to Atum in his ultimate evolution, the rising sun. The sun was often represented as a scarab beetle (hpr) through "etymological" association with the verb hpr "evolve."

² A pyramidion or squat obelisk representing the primeval hill, first Place to emerge at the creation. The root of the word, bn "swell up," also appears in wbn "rise, swell forth" (used of the sun at sunrise), and bnw "heron, phoenix" (see next note).

³ Eg. bnw "heron," a metaphor for the rising sun through etymological association (wbn "rise"). The Greek concept of the phoenix rising from its own ashes derives from this image, but is not found as such in Eg. sources.

⁴ "Etymological" explanations of Atum's first two evolutions: jss "sneeze" and tf "spit." For the meaning of jss, cf. jss t²w "sneeze air": Parker et al. 1979:71 and pl. 27, 17.

and you put your arms about them, as the arms of ka,

that your ka might be in them.⁵

⁵ The image of the ka passed by means of an embrace reflects the hieroglyphic spelling of the word (kꜣ) as a pair of upraised arms. In Eg. thought, the ka is a spiritual aspect of men and gods, a kind of animating force, passed from the creator to the king, from the king to his subjects, and from a father to his children. The word is also the root of a derived abstract kꜣw "sustenance." Though usually represented only by its hieroglyph, the ka was occasionally depicted as a "twin" of the king's image — hence the older translation "double." See Allen 1988b:43-44.

REFERENCES

Pyr. 1652a-1653a; Faulkner 1969:246-247; Allen 1988a:13-14.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 75 (1.5)

James P. Allen

Spells 75-81 of the Coffin Texts, which identify the deceased as a manifestation (ba) of the first element of the world (Shu), are a major source for the evolutionary view of creation promulgated in Heliopolis. In at least two MSS (S1C and S2C), these seven spells were treated as a single text, with the title "Spell of the ba of Shu and evolution into Shu" (CT I 314a). Spell 75, one of the most frequently copied of all Coffin Texts, describes the birth of Shu. In the cosmogony of Heliopolis, this is the first stage in the evolution of Atum that produced the created world.

Shu's relationship to Atum (CT I 314/315b-326/327a)

I am the *ba*¹ of Shu, the self-evolving² god:
it is in the body of the self-evolving god that I have evolved.

I am the ba of Shu, the god mysterious(?)³ of form:

it is in the body of the self-evolving god that I have become tied together.

I am the utmost extent⁴ of the self-evolving god:
it is in him that I have evolved.

I am the one who stills the sky for him,
I am the one who silences the earth for him.⁵ ^a

I am the one who foretells him when he emerges from the Akhet,⁶ putting fear of him into those who seek his identity.

^a Hab 2:20

^b Lam 3:63;
Ps 139:2

I am one who is millions, who hears the affairs of millions.

I am the one who transmits the word of the self-evolving god to his multitude.

I am the one who officiates over his boat-crew, being stronger and more raging⁷ than every En-nead.

The origin of Shu (CT I 326/327b-338/339b)

The speech of the original gods, who evolved after me, has been repeated to me,⁸ when they asked of the Waters my evolution, seeing my strength in the great boat that the self-evolving god sails, and how I have acted⁹ ^b among them, causing my reputation according to my evolution.
I shall speak. Become still, Ennead! Become silent, gods, and I will tell you my evolution myself. Don't ask my evolution of the Waters.

¹ The term ba (bꜣ) denotes an aspect by which a god, person, or thing can be recognized. The ba is a nonphysical concept, perhaps best defined as the sum of an entity less its material form — in the case of human beings, somewhat akin to the notion of "soul" or personality. The ba of a deceased person traveled between the mummy, where it spent the night, and the world of daylight, where it was reunited with its life force (ka) to live as an "effective being" (akh). This mobile quality, combined with the hieroglyphic writing of the word (with the jairu bird), gave rise to the common representation of the ba as a human-headed bird. See Zakkar 1968; Allen 1988b:43.

² "Self-evolving" (hpr ds.f) is a common epithet of the creator god, denoting his independence from external causality: Allen (1988b) 17. The term is used most often, and par excellence, of Atum, who evolved into the created world.

³ The meaning of the term sfg is uncertain. The phrase "sfg of form" is used elsewhere of the sun (Pyr. *1061f = CT III 74e) and in the context of judgement (CT II 58a, 62d, 63f). The translation "mysterious" is based on Pyr. 665a, where sfg occurs in parallel with šꜣ "secret" (see n. 15 below). The term also occurs in the description of a god "sfg of body, (but) with many vessels": Vernus (1978) 183.

⁴ Lit., "the one who is in the limit" (jmy dr).

⁵ A reference to the quelling of chaos attendant on the creation, with its establishment of order.

⁶ The creation of the atmosphere produced a void in the universal waters, into which the sun could rise for the first time. Shu thus "foretells" the sunrise.

⁷ The term (dnd, later dndn) describes a quality directed against an enemy (Wb V 579, 4 = 471, 4/22 — here, against the enemies of the sun); it is also used of fire (Wb V 471, 23; cf. Wb V 530, 1, and the spelling in CT IV 328g). The M-Ann. MS substitutes "aggressive" (hꜣw.kw).

⁸ Variant "I have heard" in some MSS (M-Ann., G1C, A1T).

⁹ Lit., "how I stood up and sat down" (hꜣw.n.j hms.n.j): see Williams 1969:94.

When the Waters saw me, I was already evolved.
He does not know where I evolved. He did not see with his face how I evolved.¹⁰

It is in the body of the great self-evolving god that I have evolved,
for he created me in his heart,
made me in his effectiveness,
and exhaled me from his nose.¹¹

Shu's nature (CT I 338/339c-344/345c and 354/355b-358/359a)

I am exhale-like of form, created by that august self-evolving god who strews the sky with his perfection, the total of the gods' forms,¹² whose identity the gods who sail him do not know,
whom the "sunfolk"¹³ follow.

It is in his feet that I have grown,
in his arms that I have evolved,
in his limbs that I have made a void.

He created me himself in his heart,
he made me in his effectiveness.

I was not born by birth.

...

I am one exhale-like of form.
He did not give me birth with his mouth,
he did not conceive me with his fist.¹⁴
He exhaled me from his nose,

c Gen 2:7;
6:17; 7:15;
7:22

d Job 22:12

e Jer 4:28

he made me in the midst of his perfection, which excites those who are in the inaccessible places¹⁵

when he strews the sky with his perfection.

Shu's relationship to the rest of creation (CT I 372/373b-376/377c, 384b-385c, and 405b-c)

I do not have to listen to magic:¹⁶

I evolved before it.

My clothes are the wind of life:¹⁷ c it came forth about me, from the mouth of Atum.

I evolved in the god who evolved on his own, alone, older than the gods.

I am the one who touches¹⁸ for him the height of the sky.¹⁹ d

I am the one who brings to him his effectiveness, who unites for him his million of ka placed in protection of his associates.¹⁹

...

For it is through creation in its entirety that I evolved,²⁰

at the utterance of that august self-evolving god who does not turn back on what he has said.²¹ e

For I am the one who made to the limit, according to his command.

...

I am the god mysterious(?)²² of form,
but I am in the utmost extent of sunlight.

¹⁰ Compare the description of the Waters in the "Book of Nut" (above, text 1.1) as existing "above" the sky. Shu, as the void, is distinct from the universal waters, and thus cannot be "known" by them.

¹¹ A two-stage description of Shu's birth, from the creator's original concept "in his heart" to the "effective" action that produced Shu. The third line refers to the "etymological" etiology of Shu, by "sneezing" (jšš).

¹² A reference to Atum's name (j.tmw), which is formed from the root tm "finish, end, complete," also found in the noun tmw "totality." As the singularity from which all matter derived, Atum is the sum of all the forces and elements of the created world (the gods).

¹³ A general term for humanity, as the people on whom the sun shines: Gardiner 1947 I:111*-112*.

¹⁴ These lines evidently contrast Shu's "immaterial" nature, as air, with the standard metaphors for his etiology via Atum's "sneezing" and masturbation.

¹⁵ The term "inaccessible places" (šf'w) is a designation of the Duat: Hornung (1975-76) I 4; II 49, 99 nn. 15-16. The sun's passage through this region at night "excites" (makes active) the beings who dwell in this region in a state of "inertness."

¹⁶ Magic (*hk*², hk'w) broadly denotes the power to produce an effect by indirect means, somewhat akin to the western notion of sympathetic magic. In creation accounts, magic is the link between the creator's concept of the world and its physical evolution. It was considered a natural force, and thus a god (Heka, Hike). See Ritner 1993:4-28.

¹⁷ Shu's "clothing" is a metaphor for the physical effect of the air, otherwise invisible. The same concept is elaborated in greater detail in CT Spell 80 (CT II 29f-31a). See p. 12 below.

¹⁸ Variants have "who unites" (dmd: B1C) and "who ties together" (l'z: CT I 377d).

¹⁹ The term "associates" (wmdwt) derives from a designation of domesticated animals (Wb I:326, 2-4). As used here it evidently refers to the totality of humankind: compare the description of people as "noble animals" (w' špst) in pWestcar 8, 17, and "the animals of the god" (w' nt ntr) in the Instruction for Merikare (pPetersburg 1116A 12, 1). See texts 1.11 and 1.35 below.

²⁰ Lit., "it is through making completely that I evolved" (hpr.n.j šs m' jrt mj qd). Variants have "through the one who made completely" (m' jr mj qd: B1C, B2L, B1P), "through making similarly to me" (m' jrt my r.j: M3C, M5C, M28C), and "it is through my agency that doing similarly has evolved entirely" (hpr.n šs m' j jrt my r dr: S1-2C, T3C, M23C, G1T). The reference is evidently to Shu's causal priority over the rest of creation.

²¹ A reference to the concept of creation by means of the spoken word, and to its irreversible nature.

²² See n. 3 above.

REFERENCES

CT I 314/315b-405c; de Buck 1947; Faulkner 1964; Zandee 1971-72; Faulkner 1973:72-77; Allen 1988a:14-18.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 76 (1.6)

James P. Allen

This text continues the tale of Shu's birth by describing how the structure of the world-space and its contents derive from the initial creation of the atmosphere. It also contains one of the first references to the four negative qualities of the primordial waters, later developed by the theologians of Hermopolis into a cosmogony of four divine couples, the Ogdoad.

Initial invocation: the deceased as Shu (CT II 1a-2a)
O you eight Infinite Ones,¹ who are at the parts of the sky,^a whom Shu made from the efflux² of his limbs, who tie together the ladder³ for Atum!

Come to meet your father in me!
Give me your arms,
tie together a ladder for me.

I am the one who created you,
I am the one who made you,
as I was made by my father Atum.

Shu's nature (CT II 2b-3c)

I am weary at the Uplifting of Shu,⁴ since I lifted my daughter Nut atop me that I might give her to my father Atum in his utmost extent.

I have put Geb under my feet:
this god is tying together the land for my father
Atum,
and drawing together the Great Flood for
him.

I have put myself between them without the Ennead seeing me.⁵

Shu's birth (CT II 3d-4d)

It is I who am Shu,

^a Deut 30:4

^b Isa 44:2,
24; 49:5; Job
31:5

^c Gen 1:2;
2 Sam 22:12;
Ps 18:12;
88:6; Job
10:22;
22:11;
38:19

whom Atum created on the day that he evolved.⁶

I was not built in the womb,^a

I was not tied together in the egg,

I was not conceived by conception.

My father Atum sneezed me in a sneeze of his mouth,⁷

together with my sister Tefnut.

She emerged after me,

while I was still hooded with the air of the Phoenix's⁸ throat,

on the day that Atum evolved⁹ —

out of the Flood, out of the Waters,

out of darkness, out of lostness.^{10 c}

Shu's relationship to the gods (CT II 5a-6b)

It is I who am Shu, father of the gods,

in search of whom, together with my sister
Tefnut,

Atum once sent his Sole Eye.¹¹

I am the one who made brightening the darkness possible for it.¹²

It found me as a man of infinite number.¹³

I am the begetter of repeated millions —

out of the Flood, out of the Waters,

out of darkness, out of lostness.^c

It is I who am Shu, begetter of the gods.

¹ Four or eight gods (hḥw) thought to assist Shu in holding the waters of the universe off the earth.

² A term (rgw) broadly denoting a material link between two things: for example, clouds are the "efflux" of the atmosphere, Shu.

³ A metaphor for ascent to the realm of the sky.

⁴ Term (wizw šw) referring to Shu's activity in holding the universal waters off the earth, often represented pictorially by the image of a male god (Shu) standing on the prone body of Geb, the earth, with arms upraised beneath the extended body of the sky (Nut).

⁵ The "Ennead" here refers to the subsequent generations of gods, whose evolution followed that of Shu.

⁶ The term "day" (here written with divine determinative, like the name Re) is a metaphor for the simultaneity of creation: Atum's evolution into the created world is equivalent to the birth of Shu, which created the world space within the universal waters.

⁷ See p. 7, n. 4.

⁸ See n. 3 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600 (p. 7). The term here is used in reference to Atum's solar aspect.

⁹ See n. 6 above.

¹⁰ These four terms refer to qualities of the primordial waters, defined in contrast to those of the created world: watery (nwḥ), vs. the "dryness" (šw) of the world; infinite in expanse (hḥw), vs. the world's "limits" (drw); darkness (kkw), vs. light; and tmnw, an abstract from the verb tm "become lost, go astray," probably referring to the chaotic or unknowable nature of the waters, in contrast to the order and tangibility of creation (Allen 1988a:20). The same qualities appear in the description of the universal waters in the "Book of Nut" (above text 1.1). As early as the Middle Kingdom, they were recognized as gods by the theologians of Hermopolis, and codified with four female counterparts into the Ogdoad. In the Coffin Texts, however, only the names of the Flood (hḥw) and the Waters (nwḥ) are written with divine determinatives; "darkness" and tmnw are treated as abstracts. In the Hermopolitan system, the last term is replaced by the god Amun (jmnw "hidden") and his counterpart, Amaunet.

¹¹ The term "eye" (jrt) is often used as a metaphor for the physical sun as an aspect of the creator or sun-god. The present passage refers to the sun as the final cause of creation, on whose behalf the world space was created.

¹² A similar line occurs in Spell 80 (CT II 30b) (see p. 12). The translation adopted here follows the text of B1Bo and G1T, with addition of the participle jr "who made possible" that appears in the other copies and in the parallel from Spell 80.

¹³ Compare the phrase z n nḥh "a man of eternity" (i.e., someone who will live forever), in the tale of the Eloquent Peasant (Peas. B1, 126; see text 1.43 below).

REFERENCES

CT II 1a-6b; Faulkner 1973:77-80; Zandee 1973a; Allen 1988a:18-21.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 78 (1.7)

James P. Allen

This text follows Coffin Texts Spell 76 after a few lines (Spell 77) that describe the birth of Shu through the combined metaphors of masturbation and spitting. The major theme in Spell 78 is the identification of this event with the evolution of Time in its two aspects: the permanent pattern of existence, identified with Tefnut; and the eternal repetition of life, identified with Shu.

Shu as the atmosphere (CT II 19a-b)

I am the *ba*¹ of Shu, to whom was given Nut atop him and Geb under his feet.
I am between them.

Shu as the cycle of time (CT II 22a-b)

I am Eternal Recurrence, father of an infinite number.²

My sister is Tefnut, daughter of Atum, who bore the Ennead.

Tefnut as the pattern of time (CT II 23a-c)

I am the one who bore repeated millions for Atum:
Eternal Sameness is (my sister) Tefnut.³

¹ See n. 1 to Coffin Texts Spell 75 (p. 8).

² The word nhh "Eternal Recurrence" derives from the root hḥ "million, infinite number" and denotes eternity conceived as the eternal repetition of the daily cycle of life. A dynamic concept, associated with the verbs hpr "evolve" and "nh" "live," it is exemplified on the cosmic scale in the daily setting and rising of the sun, and on the human scale in the cycle of generations. See Assmann 1975a. Its etiology here is equated with the birth of Shu, perhaps because both nhh and šw are grammatically masculine.

³ Following AIC, with the addition of snj (pw) from the other MSS. The word dt "Eternal Sameness" denotes eternity as the unchanging pattern of existence, established at the creation. It is a stable concept, associated with the verb wnt "exist" and exemplified in the concept of mꜣt (Maat) "(natural) order." See Assman (1975). Spell 78 equates its genesis, and that of mꜣt, with the birth of Tefnut, Shu's coeval "twin," probably because all three are grammatically feminine.

REFERENCES

CT II 19a-23c; Faulkner 1973:81-82; Zandee 1973b; Allen 1988a:21-27.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 80 (1.8)

James P. Allen

Following a short reprise of Spell 76 (Spell 79), this text continues the temporal theme first sounded in Spell 78 and expands it through the additional concepts of Life, identified with Shu, and the natural Order of the universe, associated with Tefnut. As part of its exposition, the spell concentrates on the notion of the One (Atum) evolving into the multiplicity of life. This includes the phenomenon of generational death and rebirth (codified in Osiris and Isis), the creation of people, and the interrelationship of all living things. The spell's physical description of Shu as the atmosphere is one of the clearest statements of the Egyptian concept of divinity immanent in the elements of nature. Together with a short summation (Spell 81), this text completes the theological exposition of the meaning of Shu's birth that began in Spell 75.

Introduction (CT II 23d-28d)

O you eight Infinite Ones — an infinite number of Infinite Ones,¹ who encircle the sky with your arms, who draw together the sky and horizon² of Geb!

a Gen 1:2;
2 Sam 22:12;
Ps 18:12;
88:6; Job
10:22;
22:11;
38:19;

Shu has given you birth
out of the Flood, out of the Waters, out of lostness, out of darkness,^{3 a} that he might allot you to Geb and Nut, Shu being Eternal Recurrence,

¹ See n. 1 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10.

² Eg. ꜥkr, a term for the visible interface of sky and earth, often represented as a two-headed lion (east and west).

³ See n. 10 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10.

and Tefnut, Eternal Sameness.⁴

The nature of Shu (CT II 28e-32a)

I am the *ba*⁵ of Shu, who is at the Great Flood, who goes up to the sky as he wishes,
who goes down to the earth as his heart decides.

Come in excitement⁶ to greet the god in me!
I am Shu, child of Atum.

My clothing is the air of life,⁶ which emerged for it around me, from the mouth of Atum
and opens for it the winds on my path.
I am the one who made possible the sky's brilliance after the Darkness.

My skin is the pressure⁷ of the wind, which emerged behind me from the mouth of Atum.

My efflux⁸ is the storm-cloud⁹ of the sky,
my fumes¹⁰ are the storm⁹ of half-light.

The length of the sky is for my strides, and the breadth of the earth is for my foundations.^c

I am the one whom Atum created, and I am bound for my place of Eternal Sameness.

It is I who am Eternal Recurrence, who bore repeated millions;
whom Atum sneezed,
who emerged from his mouth, as he used his hand that he desired, in order to let fall for the earth.¹¹

The origin of Shu and Tefnut (CT II 32b-35h)
Then said Atum:

b Gen 2:7;
6:17; 7:15,
22; Job 38:9

c Gen 13:17

d Is 44:24

My living daughter is Tefnut.
She will exist with her brother Shu.
Life is his identity,
Order¹² is her identity.

I shall live with my twins, my fledglings, with me in their midst —
one of them at my back,
one of them in my belly.

Life will lie with my daughter Order —
one of them inside me,
one of them about me.

It is on them that I have come to rely,¹³ with their arms about me.

It is my son who shall live,
he whom I begot in my identity, for he has learned how to enliven the one in the egg, in the respective womb, as people, that emerged from my eye¹⁴ —

(the eye) that I sent forth when I was alone ^d with the Waters, in inertness, not finding a place in which I could stand or sit, before Heliopolis had been founded, in which I could exist;
before the Lotus¹⁵ had been tied together, on which I could sit;
before I had made Nut so she could be over my head and Geb could marry her;
before the first Corps¹⁶ was born, before the original Ennead had evolved and started existing with me.

Then said Atum to the Waters:
I am floating, very weary,¹⁷ the natives inert.¹⁸

⁴ See nn. 2-3 to Coffin Texts Spell 78, p. 11.

⁵ See n. 1 to Coffin Texts Spell 75, p. 8.

⁶ The Eg. root h^cj or intensive h^cj^cj seems to denote arousal, sexual or otherwise, at the sight of someone or something, often from a state of prior inactivity. In the creation accounts it usually has a milder connotation of simple activity.

⁷ An abstract (mddw) from the verb mdd "press (Wb med I:416), strike (Wb II:191, 14-192, 2), adhere to (Wb II:192,3-5)," which seems to have the root meaning of forceful touching or pressure. The sentence is evidently an attempt to explain the physical reality of air, which is otherwise unseen.

⁸ See n. 2 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10.

⁹ For these terms (qrr and nšnj, respectively), see Roccati 1984:346.

¹⁰ A term (jdj) used of a god's scent (Pyr. 456a; Urk IV 339,15). It is a byproduct of burning incense (Simpson 1974 pl. 31 ANOC 69.1 vert. 4-5) and gives off smoke (Pyr. 365b).

¹¹ These lines are a conflation of the two metaphors used to describe the etiology of Shu, etymological (jšš "sneeze") and physical (masturbation). The image of Atum "desiring" his hand reflects its deification — thus transforming the metaphor of masturbation into the more usual one of birth.

¹² The term "order" (m^cṯ) is a fundamental component of the Eg. world-view, a concept combining the western notions of natural law and social and moral norms. Order was established as part of the creation itself, as a force of nature and thus divine (Maat). Like the other forces and elements of the world, it is unchanging, a quality expressed here by its equation with the temporal concept of Eternal Sameness. The opposite of order is disorder or chaos (jzff), which equally has both social and moral as well as natural aspects. The most recent comprehensive study is Assmann 1990.

¹³ Lit., "I have stood up" (ḥ^cḥ^c.n.j): cf. Wb I :219, 18. The same usage appears in Hornung 1975-76 II:38, 13.

¹⁴ A reference to the "etymological" etiology of human beings (rmj) from the "tears" (rmj) of the sun (the creator's "eye").

¹⁵ The Lotus (q^cd: cf. Pyr. 284c, 541d; CT I 94b) is part of an early Eg. metaphor for the first act of life following the creation — the initial sunrise from the opening petals of a lotus flower growing on the first Place, the primeval Hill.

¹⁶ A term (ḥt, lit., "body") for the group of gods usually known as the Ennead.

¹⁷ In creation accounts, weariness (wṛj), like inertness (see n. 4 to the "Book of Nut," p. 5), connotes the potentiality for activity — here, Atum's potentiality for the evolution that will produce the created world.

¹⁸ See note 17. "Natives" (p^cwṛ) is a term normally used of the Egyptians as original inhabitants of Egypt: Gardiner 1947 I:108*-110*.

It is my son Life, who lifts up my heart, that will enliven my heart¹⁹
when he has drawn together these very weary limbs of mine.

The Waters said to Atum:
Kiss²⁰ your daughter Order.
Put her to your nose and your heart will live.
They will not be far from you — that is, your daughter Order and your son Shu, whose identity is Life.
It is of your daughter Order that you shall eat,
it is your son Shu that shall elevate you.

Shu as Life (CT II 35i-36e and 39b-40b)

I, in fact, am Life, son of Atum — from his nose he bore me,
from his nostrils I emerged.
I shall put myself at his collar,
that he may kiss me and my sister Order, when he rises every day and emerges from his egg,
when the god is born in the emergence of sunlight²¹
and homage is said to him by those whom he begot.

I am Life, lord of years,
Life of Eternal Recurrence, lord of Eternal Sameness —
the eldest that Atum made with his effectiveness,²²
when he gave birth to Shu and Tefnut in Heliopolis,
when he was one and evolved into three,
when he parted Geb from Nut,
before the first Corps was born, before the two original Enneads evolved and were existing with me.

In his nose he conceived me,
from his nostrils I emerged.

e Gen 1:6

f Gen 2:7;
7:22;
Job 27:3

He has placed me at his collar and he does not let me get far from him.

The process of Life (CT II 40c-43h)

My identity is Life, son of the original god:
I live in the ...(?)²³ of my father Atum.
I am Life at his collar, the one who freshens the throat —
whom Atum made as Grain when he sent me down to this land,
and to the Isle of Fires, when my identity became Osiris, son of Geb.²⁴
I am Life, for whom the length of the sky and the breadth of Geb were made:
it is from me that presented offerings emerge for the god.²⁵
My father Atum will kiss me as he emerges from the eastern Akhet;
his heart will rest at seeing me as he proceeds in rest to the western Akhet.

He will find me on his way,
and I will tie on his head and enliven his uraeus.²⁶

I will fix the head of Isis on her neck,
and assemble Osiris's bones.
I will make firm his flesh every day and make fresh his parts every day — falcons living off birds, jackals off prowling, pigs off the highlands, hippopotami off the cultivation, men off grain, crocodiles off fish, fish off the waters in the Inundation²⁷ e —
as Atum has ordered.

I will lead them and enliven them, through my mouth, which is Life in their nostrils.²⁸

I will lead my breath into their throats, after I have tied on their heads by the Annunciation²⁸ that is in my mouth,

¹⁹ The text employs two different terms for "heart" here. The first, jb, is the more common term, usually connoting the heart as the seat of thought and emotion (compare the English "lift the spirits"). The second, h³tj, often has a more physical connotation, as here.

²⁰ Or perhaps "inhale." The verb (sn) denotes an action of the nose rather than the lips.

²¹ Following B7C, the only MS with m "in." The other copies apparently read "when the god is born and sunlight is sent forth" (ms.t ntr pr.t j³hw).

²² See n. 4 to Coffin Texts Spell 714, p. 7.

²³ A word (bznw) of unknown meaning, perhaps a mineral: Harris 1961:190-191.

²⁴ These two lines define the realm of life. In the world of the living, it is embodied in grain, the fundamental staple of the Eg. diet. In the Duat, it is concentrated within the mummy of Osiris, the source of all potential life.

²⁵ The presentation of offerings was the major component of Eg. rituals, in both divine and mortuary cults. It was perhaps the chief responsibility of the Egyptians to their gods. See Assmann 1970:63-65. In mortuary cults, food and drink were offered so that the deceased might benefit from the life-sustaining force within them.

²⁶ The term "uraeus," a Greek vocalization of Eg. j³rt, refers to the protective serpent usually depicted on the forehead of gods and the king.

²⁷ Following B1C, the only copy with initial n³h "live off." In the other MSS, these clauses specify what is meant by "make fresh his parts," with the first noun in each clause in apposition to "his parts" and the prepositional phrase indicating the means. The position of human beings in this list is noteworthy — as part rather than the apex of the natural order. Contrast Gen 1:26.

²⁸ "Annunciation" (hw) denotes the power of bringing about a result by enunciating it with the tongue. It is often divinized (Hu) and usually paired with Perception (sj³, Sia), the power of conceptualization associated with the heart. Annunciation was considered an aspect of magic (see n. 16 to Coffin Texts Spell 75, p. 9), exercised by the creator and the king.

which my father Atum, who emerged from the eastern Akhet, has given me.
I will enliven the little fish²⁹ and the crawling things on Geb's back.

I, in fact, am Life that is under Nut.

²⁹ A hapax (hddw) probably identical with the Ptolemaic hddw "fish, fowl" (Wb III:355, 19-20). The determinative here indicates a kind of fish.

REFERENCES

CT II 27d-43b; Faulkner 1973:83-87; Zandee 1974; Allen 1988a:21-27.

FROM PAPYRUS BREMNER-RHIND (1.9)

James P. Allen

The papyrus from which this text is taken (pBM 10188) is a collection of theological treatises and magic spells against the dangers of the Netherworld (represented in sum by the demon Apophis), compiled from various sources at the beginning of the Ptolemaic Period. This selection, originally composed perhaps as early as the Ramesside Period, describes the evolution of multiplicity from the unity of Atum, who is both the "Lord to the Limit" (of the created world) and the sun at the dawn of creation ("Evolver").¹ It is unusual for its use of abstract terminology, based on the verb hpr "evolve,"² in addition to the physical metaphors that Egyptian theologians regularly used to describe the process of creation.

Title (26,21) SCROLL OF KNOWING THE EVOLUTION of the Sun AND OF OVERTHROWING APOPHIS. RECITATION.

Evolution of the many from the one (26,21-24)
The Lord to the Limit, speaking after he evolved:
I am the one who evolved as Evolver.
When I evolved, evolution evolved.
All evolution evolved after I evolved, evolutions becoming many in emerging from my mouth,
without the sky having evolved, without the earth having evolved, without the ground or snakes³ having been created in that place.
I became tied together in them⁴ out of the Waters, out of inertness, without having found a place in which I could stand.⁵
I became effective in my heart,
I surveyed with my face.
I made every form alone,

a Job 26:7

without having sneezed Shu, without having spat Tefnut,⁶ without another having evolved and acted⁶ with me.

I surveyed in my heart by myself and the evolutions of evolutions became many,
in the evolutions of children and in the evolutions of their children.

The first generation (26,24-27,2)

I am the one who acted as husband with my fist:
I copulated with my hand,
I let fall into my own mouth,
I sneezed Shu and spat Tefnut.⁷
It is my father, the Waters, that tended them, with my Eye⁸ after them since the time they became apart from me.
After I evolved as one god,
that was three gods with respect to me.

The sun (27,2-4)

When I evolved into this world,

¹ The papyrus contains two versions of this text. The second, with the same title, is slightly longer (28, 20-29, 6).

² The text uses three writings of this root: (1) that of the verb and its conjugated forms (sdm.f, sdm.n.f, and participle), with bookroll determinative; (2) the same spelling with plural strokes, apparently with the meaning of the infinitive "(process of) evolution" (only in 26, 22); (3) a form with written (curl) w (hprw), plural strokes, and the determinatives of the upright mummy and falcon on a standard. The last is evidently a concrete noun, and is treated grammatically as plural ("evolutions").

³ The word (ddft) is a collective, and includes worms and crawling insects such as centipedes, as well as snakes. These forms of life were viewed by the Egyptians as chthonic beings, primordial to the creation.

⁴ The pronoun probably refers to the elements of the created world mentioned in the preceding lines. "Tie together" (ḥꜣz) is an Eg. idiom for physical realization.

⁵ A reference to the "etymological" etiology of these two gods, via "sneezing" (jšf : šw) and "spitting" (tf : tfnt).

⁶ Or "who acted for himself" (jr n.f).

⁷ These lines represent an attempt to syncretize the "etymological" and physical explanations of the birth of Shu and Tefnut. Atum's semen is envisioned as falling into his mouth, from which it is "sneezed" and "spat" to produce the two gods.

⁸ A metaphor for the sun as a manifestation of the creator.

Shu and Tefnut grew excited in the inert waters ⁹ in which they were, and brought me my Eye after them. ¹⁰ And after I joined together my parts, I wept over them: that is the evolution of people, from the tears that came from my Eye. ¹¹ She raged against me after she returned and found I had made another in her place to replace her as (my) effective one. So I promoted her place on my face, and afterward she began to rule this entire land. ¹²	b Job 31:2; Is 5:24 c Gen 1:24	When their rage fell to their roots ^b I replaced what she had taken from her. ¹³ The creation of multiplicity (27.4-6) When I emerged from the roots I created all the snakes and everything that evolved from them. ^{14 c} Then Shu and Tefnut gave birth to Geb and Nut. Then Geb and Nut gave birth to Osiris, Horus Fore-Eyed, ¹⁵ Seth, Isis and Nephthys, from one womb, ¹⁶ (one) after the other, and they gave birth to their multitude in this world.
--	--	--

⁹ The writing combines that of nwj "the Waters" and nww "inertness," and may reflect the variant form of the former name (Nun), which is derived from the same root as nww.

¹⁰ See n. 6 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 12. In this case, the "excitement" of Shu and Tefnut refers to their evolution as a void in the universal waters, which produces a space for the sun ("my Eye") to appear in.

¹¹ See n. 14 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 12.

¹² These lines are a logical outgrowth of the metaphor of the sun as the creator's eye. Its departure into the world at the dawn of creation leaves a void in Atum's "face," which he fills by making a new eye to serve as his "effective" instrument in governing the world. The conflict between the two is resolved by Atum's promotion of the eye to his uraeus.

¹³ The parallel text (29.4-5) has "Her anger fell to her roots because of the roots I replaced in her, (but) she became soothed when her place in my face was promoted, and she began to rule the entire land." On that basis, the present sentence seems to mean "When the rage of my eye and its replacement abated(?), I replaced what my new eye had taken from the previous one." The referents of the third-person pronouns, however, are unclear, and the interpretation of the phrase "fall to the roots" (hr r w²bw) as an idiom for "abate" is speculative; for the latter, cf. the idiom shr r t² "throw to the ground," used of removing defects (Wb IV:258, 1).

¹⁴ "Emerging from the roots" (prj m w²bw) is otherwise unattested, but evidently refers to Atum's transition from his primordial state of existence to his ultimate realization as the created world. The "snakes and all that evolved from them" are the chthonic elements of Atum's first evolution (see n. 3 above).

¹⁵ "Fore-eyed" (hntj-n-jrtj, lit., "forward of eyes") is an epithet of Horus in his solar aspect.

¹⁶ I.e., all from the womb (hr "body") of Nut. The text omits the second "one," probably from haplography (m hr w^c t <w^c> m s² w^c).

REFERENCES

Faulkner 1933:59, 15-61, 12; Faulkner 1937:172-73; Faulkner 1938:41-42; ANET 6-7; Piankoff 1955:24; Sauneron 1959:48-51; Allen 1988a:28-30.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 335 = BOOK OF THE DEAD SPELL 17 (1.10)

James P. Allen

This spell, the most frequently copied of all major Egyptian funerary texts, equates the deceased's passage from the tomb to daylight with the sun's journey from night to day, a theme summarized in its title. It originated in the Coffin Texts and was subsequently incorporated in their New Kingdom descendant, the so-called Book of the Dead, which was known by the same title. Almost from its inception, the spell accumulated extensive glosses on the original text. The excerpt below contains its opening lines along with the most important of their glosses from both the Coffin Texts and Book of the Dead.¹ The text deals with the concept of the sunrise as both the culminating act of Atum's evolution and the determining factor in the newly-created world.

Title (CT IV 184/185a) SPELL FOR EMERGING BY DAY IN THE NECROPOLIS. ²	Introduction (CT IV 184/185b-186/187a) The word evolved, totality was mine ³ when I existed alone.
--	---

¹ The translation is based on the earlier, Coffin Texts version, which is generally better than the later copies in the Book of the Dead. The glosses from the Book of the Dead are based on the archetype text established by Rölliger-Köhler 1979.

² The Eg. prt m hrww "emerging by day" is ambiguous: "emerging into daylight" is also possible. In Urk IV 148, 12, the phrase is contrasted with nwyf m grh r jz "returning by night to the tomb," suggesting the translation adopted here.

³ Most copies have mdt, a concrete noun meaning "word, content (of a letter or decree), matter, affair"; the abstract mdw "speech, speaking" appears in M4C, T2Be, and M1NY. The latter, plus the determinative of the "man with hand to mouth" in T1C, M7-8C, and T3Be, indicates that the reference here is to the creator's fiat ("word") rather than to the act of creation itself ("matter, affair"). Book of the Dead copies have generally reinterpreted the line as hpr mdt n nb tmw "The word of the Lord of Totality evolved."

The first sunrise (CT IV 186/187b)

I am the Sun⁴ in his first appearances.

Glosses (CT IV 187d-f, BD 17)

CT That is him rising in the east of the sky.

Variant: it is the beginning of the Sun appearing over the world.

BD Who then is he? It is the Sun when he began the reign he has exercised. It is the Sun's beginning to appear in the kingship he has exercised, when Shu's uplifting had not yet evolved and he was on the high ground⁵ in Hermopolis, when the children of exhaustion⁶ had been given to him as the Hermopolitans.⁷

The sun as Atum (CT IV 188/189a-190/191b)

I am the great self-evolving god,

Glosses (CT IV 188/189b-c, BD 17)

CT Who is he, the great self-evolving one?

It is water: it is the Waters, father of the gods.

BD Variant: it is the Sun.

who created his identities,⁸ lord of the Enneads,

Glosses (BD 17)⁹

BD Who then is he? It is the Sun when he created the identities of his parts. It is those gods who are after him evolving.

the unopposable one of of the gods.

Glosses (CT IV 191c-d, BD 17)

CT Who is it? It is Atum in his disk.

BD Variant: it is the Sun rising in the eastern Akhet of the sky.

The sun determines time (CT IV 192/193a)

Yesterday is mine;¹⁰ I know tomorrow.

a Ps 90:4

Glosses (CT IV 192/193b-c and 193d-f, BD 17)

CT As for yesterday, it is Osiris; as for tomorrow, it is the Sun. Who is it? The day of We Are Enduring. It is the burial of Osiris and causing his son Horus to rule.¹⁰

BD Who then is he? As for yesterday, it is Osiris; as for tomorrow, it is the Sun, on the day when the enemies of the Lord to the Limit were destroyed and his son Horus was caused to rule. Variant: It is the day of We Are Enduring. It is the burial of Osiris being directed by his father the Sun.

The sun establishes order (CT IV 194/195a-196/197a)

The gods' battleship/battleplace¹¹ was made in accordance with my say.

Glosses (CT IV 194/195b-d, BD 17)

CT As for the god's battleplace, it is the West. It was made in order to battle the gods' enemies.¹²

BD What then is it? It is the West. It was made for the gods' ba's in accordance with the command of Osiris, lord of the western cemetery. Variant: It is the West. This is what the Sun caused every god to descend to. Then he fought it¹³ for them.

I know the identity of that great god who is in it.

Glosses (CT IV 196/197c, BD 17)

CT The Acclaimed,¹⁴ the Sun, is his identity.

BD Who then is he? It is Osiris. Variant: the Acclaimed, the Sun, is his identity. It is the ba of the Sun, by means of which he himself copulates.

⁴ Eg. r^cw (Re, Ra). Book of the Dead copies substitute "Atum."

⁵ A reference to the primeval hill, the first Place to emerge at the creation.

⁶ The root bdš is used both of physical and moral exhaustion. Here, however, it appears to be a synonym for the "inert" (see n. 4 to the "Book of Nut," p. 5) and chaotic qualities of the primeval waters, since the "children of exhaustion" (msw bdš) — a term that normally describes the sun's enemies in the Duat — are clearly equated here with the Ogdoad (see next note).

⁷ I.e., the four pairs of gods representing the negative qualities of the universal waters, focus of the Hermopolitan cosmogony (see n. 10 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10).

⁸ A few MSS have reinterpreted the relative clause as "for whom the lord of the Ennead created" (qm².n n.f nd psdš) or "who created the Enneads for himself" (qm² n.f psdwt); the standard text is preserved in Book of the Dead copies. Establishment of the name (rn) of a thing creates its "identity": thus, the evolution of Atum into the substance of the world is equivalent to the "naming" of his parts, as explained in the gloss to this line.

⁹ This line has no glosses in the Coffin Texts.

¹⁰ These glosses are among the most informative sources for the Eg. concept of linear time. The past (sf "yesterday") is equated with the preceding generation (Osiris) and death ("the burial of Osiris"), the future with the present generation (Horus) and the sunrise. Together, the two form a permanent pattern of existence ("the day of We Are Enduring").

¹¹ "Battleship" is undoubtedly the original text, as indicated by the next line. A number of copies have reinterpreted the word as "battle-place," and this in turn seems to have served as the basis of the gloss. Of the Coffin Texts MSS that have glosses, only two (B1Y and B9C²) show the ship determinative; one of these (B9C²) has the unique gloss nšmtj pw "It is the nšmt boat (of Osiris)" (the gloss of B1Y is lost).

¹² This sentence appears only in M1C and M54C. Both copies read jr.n.t.s r s^ch² hfjw ntrw; the context, and later versions, suggest the meaning "battle" for the rare infinitive s^ch² (Wb IV 53,1) rather than the normal causative "cause to battle." The Book of the Dead's "for the god's ba's" (n b²w ntrw) first appears in the Coffin Texts MS BH1Br.

¹³ Evidently referring to the West; but cf. Rölller-Köhler 1979:172-73 (26*).

¹⁴ The epithet "Acclaimed" (hknw) reappears in the New Kingdom "Litany of the Sun," where the solar deity is called hkn n jrt.f "acclaimed because of his eye": Hornung 1975-76 I:35.

The sun as the determinant of all things (CT IV 198/199a-200/201a)

I am the great Phoenix¹⁵ that is in Heliopolis, the accountant¹⁶ of that which exists.

Glosses (CT IV 200b-203b)¹⁷

CT Who then is he? It is Osiris. As for that which exists, it is Eternal Recurrence and Eternal Sameness. As for Eternal Recurrence, it is day; as for Eternal Sameness, it is night.¹⁸

¹⁵ See n. 3 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600, p. 7.

¹⁶ Lit., "the one who pertains to allotting" (jrj spt): cf. Englund 1978:81.

¹⁷ The Book of the Dead glosses are essentially the same as those of the Coffin Texts.

¹⁸ The identification of the sun as Osiris evidently refers to the moment when the two join in the depths of the Duat, thus regenerating Osiris and giving the sun the power of rebirth. At this point the two gods are one, as shown by a relief in the tomb of Nefertari that depicts a mummified body (Osiris) with ram's head and solar disk (the sun), identified by the labels "It is the Sun resting in Osiris, Osiris resting in the Sun": Hornung 1973: pl. 5. This is the defining moment of all existence ("that which exists"), when its permanent pattern ("Eternal Sameness") is reaffirmed for yet another daily cycle ("Eternal Recurrence") (see nn. 2-3 to Coffin Texts Spell 78, p. 11). In keeping with the concept of time elaborated in a preceding gloss (see n. 10, above), the text also identifies the former with the past ("night") and the latter with the future ("day").

REFERENCES

CT IV 184/185a-201f; Faulkner 1973:262-269; Rößler-Köhler 1979:157-158, 212-215; Allen 1988a:30-35.

COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 261 (1.11)

James P. Allen

While the Heliopolitan accounts of creation concentrate primarily on the material origins of the world, they also acknowledge the role played by magic, the divine force that translated the creator's will into reality.¹ In Egyptian thought, magic has two components: conceptualization ("Perception"), which takes place in the heart; and Annunciation, the creative expression of a thought through the medium of the spoken word. Spell 261 of the Coffin Texts identifies the deceased with this force; as such, it presents a good exposition of the role that magic played in the creation.²

Title (CT III 382a)

EVOLVING INTO MAGIC.

Invocation (CT III 382b-d)

O noble ones who are before the Lord of Totality!³

Behold, I am come to you.

Be afraid of me, in accordance with what you have learned.

The role of Magic (CT III 382e-387b)

I am the one whom the Sole Lord made⁴ before two things had evolved in this world,⁵ when⁶ he sent his sole eye,⁷ when⁸ he was one,

when something came from his mouth,

when his million of ka was in protection of his associates,⁹ when he spoke with the one who evolved with him, than whom he is mightier,¹⁰

when he took Annunciation in his mouth.¹¹

I, in fact, am that son of Bore-All,¹²

¹ For a discussion of the Eg. concept of magic, see Ritner 1993:4-28.

² The spell exists in two versions, one from Asyut, preserved in four copies, and the other from el-Bersheh, for which only one MS survives. The translation here is based on the Asyut copies, with the more important variants from the Bersheh version noted in the notes.

³ The "Lord of Totality" (nb tmw) is an epithet of Atum (j.tmw), reflecting his role as material source of the created world. The "noble ones who are before" him are the gods.

⁴ Variant "I am the identity that the Sole Lord made" (S1C^b). The Bersheh version replaces this line with the clause "about the identity of the Sole Lord" continuing the preceding sentence.

⁵ I.e., when Atum was still one and had not yet evolved into the multiplicity of the world.

⁶ Bersheh version "after."

⁷ See n. 11 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10.

⁸ Bersheh version "because."

⁹ The same phrase occurs in Coffin Texts Spell 75; see p. 9, n. 19. The Bersheh version adds "who shine in his eye."

¹⁰ The Bersheh version has "when he spoke to Scarab" (see n. 1 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600, p. 7), suggesting that the reference here is to the sun.

¹¹ See n. 28 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13. The idiom jtj hw "take Annunciation" may have the sense of "starting to announce": cf. Lacau and Chevrier 1977 I:123 n. c, and compare English "take flight."

¹² There is no obvious referent for the demonstrative pw "that," unless it is meant to relate the term "son" to the preceding description. The Bersheh version adds "born without a mother." "Bore-All" (ms tmw) is another epithet of Atum.

and I am the protection ¹³ of that which the Sole Lord commanded.	a Prov 8:22-31	Bow down to me!
I am the one who gave life to the Ennead. ¹⁴		I have come to tread on the bulls of the sky and sit on the bulls of the sky ¹⁷
I am Acts-As-He-Likes, father of the gods, high of stand, ¹⁵		in my great rank of Lord of Ka's, ¹⁸ the heir of Atum.
who made the god functional in accordance with that which Bore-All commanded,		I have come to take my seat and receive my rank.
a noble god, who speaks and eats with his mouth. ¹⁶		All was mine before you evolved, gods. ¹⁹ a
The status of Magic (CT III 387c-389e)		Go down, you who came at the end! ²⁰
Become still for me!		I am Magic.

¹³ S1C* adds a human determinative, perhaps indicating "I am the magician."

¹⁴ The Bersheh version adds "the met one of the gods, that which they met without that noble one, lord of the noble ones, having made them" — evidently referring to the priority of magic.

¹⁵ Referring to the standard on which the gods' images were carried.

¹⁶ "Eating with the mouth" reflects a common concern of the Coffin Texts for the deceased's ability to use his bodily functions properly after death. Here the deceased, as magic, "speaks" as well as "eats" with this faculty.

¹⁷ A reference to the four winds (CT II 399a), here exemplifying the deceased's control (as magic) over the forces and elements of nature.

¹⁸ See n. 5 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600, p. 8.

¹⁹ Note the same phrase used of the creator himself in the opening lines of Coffin Texts Spell 335 (p. 15 above).

²⁰ I.e., who evolved after magic itself.

REFERENCES

CT III 382a-389e; te Velde 1970:180; Faulkner 1973:199-201; Allen 1988a:37-38; Ritner 1993:17.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 647 (1.12)

James P. Allen

The conceptual link between the creator's fiat and its material realization in the forces and elements of the world was conceptualized by the theologians of Memphis in the creative role of their god Ptah. The earliest exposition of this theology appears in Spell 647 of the Coffin Texts. Attested in only one copy, it is a long spell identifying the deceased with all aspects of the Memphite god. The excerpts below concern Ptah's role in the creation.

Title (CT VI 267a) PROTECTION THROUGH PTAH.	"He to whom report is made in the palace of the lord of life,
Ptah's etiology (CT VI 267f-s)	to whom his places report,
Thus said Atum:	for whom his ranks are promoted beyond those greater than him,"
"Let my vertebra be fixed,	said Perception ³ about me.
let my egg be firm on the vertebrae of the Great Flood. ¹	That is the evolution of my identity of helper,
Oh, oh, my son!	lord of order, Scribe at the fore of the Great House. ⁴
How good is your disposition,	Order is excited at my command [for] life and dominion. ⁵
how creative is he whom I have begotten!"	Thoth is on my "great flood" against that from
That is the evolution of my identity of Ptah, good of disposition, great of strength. ²

¹ This sentence establishes the evolutionary background to Ptah's origin: Atum's desire to evolve precedes Ptah's role in that process.

² Ptah was frequently called "good of disposition" (nfr hr) because of his reputation for answering prayers. The adjective "creative" (pth), from a rare verb meaning "sculpt, fashion") supplies the etymological origin of the god's name (pth): see Osing 1976:652-53. The concept of "(physical) strength" (pthj), paronomastic with the name, refers to the effectiveness of Ptah's role in creation.

³ Perception (sf) denotes the power of conceptualization based on observation. As here, it is frequently deified (Sia), and coupled with Annunciation, which it logically precedes (see n. 28 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13).

⁴ The epithet "helper" (smj) evidently reflects Ptah's reputation for answering prayers (see n. 2 above). The phrase "lord of order" (nb m^{2c}t) probably refers to his role in the creation (see next note); it is also used of the sun/Atum (CT I 352/353d; VII 268a, 279b-c). The role of scribe reflects Ptah's function as intermediary to the creator; the "Great House" (pr wr) is the archetypal royal shrine of Upper Egypt.

⁵ This line explains what is meant by the epithet "lord of order": Ptah's commands activate ("excite": see n. 6 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 12) the natural and moral order of the world.

which my pen is barred,
there being nothing the gods can do.⁶
Ptah establishes order (CT VI 267i-268b)
I am one noble in his place, who is in the heart of the Lord of the Shrine.⁷
I emerge from and enter into the shrine of the Lord to the Limit, elevating Order on the offering-slab of Shu and him in the sarcophagus,⁸ causing the Sound Eye⁹ to enter, punishing disorder in the council,¹⁰ and driving off the Sun's abomination from his boat,
while every god is exalting me,
every akh is in awe of me,
and the subjects are worshipping my goodness.¹¹
Ptah governs all life (CT VI 268c-o, 269j-k, and 269r-u)
I am the one who makes plants grow, who makes green the shores of the Nile Valley;
lord of desert lands, who makes green the wadis,
chief of the Nubians, Asiatics, and Libyans.
The Nine Bows have been netted for me,
and totality has been given me by the Sun, Lord to the Limit.
I am South of His Wall,¹² sovereign of the gods.
I am king of the sky,

distributor of ka's,¹³ who officiates over the Two Lands;
distributor of ka's, who gives ba's,¹⁴ manifestations,¹⁵ ka's, and beginnings.
I am distributor of ka's, and they live according to my action:
when I wish, I make it possible for them to live, there being none of them who can speak to me except for [the one who made] that unique identity of mine,
because I am Annunciation in his mouth and Perception in his body.
...
I emerge from and enter into [the shrine of the Lord] to the Limit, telling him the conduct of the Two Lands in accordance with how I make it possible for them to live there,
...
giving life and conducting gifts to the gods who have offerings.¹⁶
It is I who am lord of life, who officiates in Nut,¹⁷
while Seth is my escort because he knows the conduct of what I do.
I am the lord of life.

⁶ Ptah's role as "scribe" involves the participation of Thoth, god of writing. The meaning of "on my great flood" (hr mht.j wrt) is uncertain: it may be a "cosmogonic" variant of the idiom "on the water" (hr mw), meaning "loyal." Thoth's assistance insures that Ptah's "written" commands cannot be opposed.

⁷ The phrase "in the heart" (jnj jb) is normally used by officials to indicate their access to the king. While it probably carries this connotation here as well, it also has a deeper meaning, since the spell later describes Ptah's relationship to the creator as "Annunciation in his mouth and Perception in his body." The "Lord of the Shrine" is Atum, as the next line indicates; the "shrine" here is a metaphor for the created world.

⁸ Ptah's actions establish the order of creation, both in the world of the living ("Shu") and in the Duat, the domain of Osiris ("him in the sarcophagus").

⁹ The Sound Eye (wḏt) is a metaphor for the sun as an aspect of Horus, the god of kingship; Ptah's role makes the sunrise possible.

¹⁰ "Disorder" (jzḥ) is the opposite of natural and moral law (mꜣꜥt "order"). As "lord of order," Ptah evaluates the actions of each individual at the final judgement in the "council" (dꜣdꜣt) of gods.

¹¹ The beings mentioned in the last three clauses are three of the four classes of sentient beings recognized by the Egyptians: the gods are the original forces and elements of the created world; the akh's (ꜣḥw) are human beings who have died and joined the gods in an "effective" (ꜣḥ) form of new life; the word "subjects" (rhwt) denotes the living (as subjects of the pharaoh). The fourth class of sentient beings is that of the dead, human beings who have not made a successful transition to new life after death and now float lifeless in the waters of the Duat. All four classes are mentioned later in this spell (CT VI 269p), as "people, gods, akh's, and the dead."

¹² A frequent epithet of Ptah, referring to the location of his major temple in Memphis, outside the "White Walls" that delimited the town for much of its early history.

¹³ This phrase (nḥb-kꜣw) denotes a deity (Neheb-kau) specifically associated with the transmission of life force (ka), for unknown reasons depicted (as here, via the determinative) as a serpent. The transmission of ka's is a prime function of kingship (see n. 5 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600, p. 8).

¹⁴ See n. 1 to Coffin Texts Spell 75, p. 8.

¹⁵ The word is an abstract from the verb ḥꜣj "appear," here denoting "appearance" as a verbal noun (the act of appearing) rather than a concrete term (the outward appearance of something).

¹⁶ See n. 25 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13.

¹⁷ I.e., in the boat of the sun, which sails across the waters of the sky (Nut) during the day.

REFERENCES

CT VI 267a, 267f-268o, 269j-k/r-u; Faulkner 1977:221-23; Allen 1988a:38-42.

FROM A RAMESSIDE STELA (1.13)

James P. Allen

In the Middle Kingdom Coffin Texts, the creative role of Ptah is clearly secondary to that of Atum, the material source of creation. In the New Kingdom, however, it evolved into a full cosmogony in its own right, combining the intellectual principle of Ptah with the material role of Ta-tenen ("Rising Land"), the deified Primeval Hill representing the first instance of created matter. One of the most concise expositions of this Memphite system appears on a private stela of the Ramesside Period, now in Copenhagen (GNC 897/AEIN 54).

Introduction (col. 1)

Yours truly¹ is worshipping your perfection, great Ptah, South of His Wall,²
Ta-tenen in the midst of the Walls.³

Ptah as creator (cols. 1-4)

Noble god of the first occasion, who built people and gave birth to the gods,⁴ original one who made it possible for all to live;
in whose heart it was spoken, who saw them evolve,
who foretold what was not and thought of what is.

There is nothing that has evolved without him, he whose evolution is their evolution⁵ in the course of each day,
anterior to what he has determined.

Ptah as king (cols. 4-5)

You have set the world to its laws as you made
it,
and the Black Land is fixed under your command, like the first occasion.

¹ This expression (b²k jm, lit., "the servant there") derives from the epistolary style of the Middle Kingdom, where it is regularly used as a circumlocution for the first person when addressing someone of higher rank.

² See n. 12 to Coffin Texts Spell 647, p. 19.

³ A short form of the original name of Memphis, "White Walls."

⁴ Cf. Urk IV 1850,2-3 "Ta-tenen, who caused people and the gods to evolve."

⁵ In the Eg., a relative clause impossible to render in grammatical English: lit., "he who they evolved when he evolved" (hpr.w hpr.f).

REFERENCES

Koefoed-Petersen 1936:57; Koefoed-Petersen 1948:37 and pl. 37A; Assmann 1975b:466; Allen 1988a:38-42.

FROM THE BERLIN "HYMN TO PTAH" (1.14)

James P. Allen

Although much of what we know about Egyptian cosmogony derives from funerary compositions such as the Pyramid Texts, Coffin Texts, and Book of the Dead, informative reflections of these creation accounts are also preserved in hymns designed for use in daily temple rituals. One such hymn to Ptah, preserved on a papyrus from the reign of Ramesses IX now in Berlin (pBerl. 3048), is an important source for the Memphite cosmogony centered on the creative role of Ptah Ta-tenen.

Introduction (2.1-2 and 3.1-2)

Worshipping Ptah, father of the [god]s,
Ta-tenen, eldest of the originals, [at] daybreak.¹
[Recitation]:
Greetings, Ptah, father of the gods,
Ta-tenen, eldest of the originals,
...

who begot himself by himself, without any evolving² having evolved;
who [craf]ted³ the world in the design of his heart;
evolution of his evolutions,² model who gave birth to all that is, begetter who created what exists.⁴

¹ The hymn was designed to be used in the ritual of opening the god's shrine at daybreak.

² This text uses virtually the same orthography as that of Papyrus Bremner-Rhind (see p. 14, n. 2) to distinguish the various forms of the root hpr — verb ("evolve"), infinitive ("[process of] evolution"), and concrete noun ("evolution," here both singular and plural).

³ A reference to Ptah's association with the work of artisans. The high priest of Ptah in Memphis was called "greatest of the directors of artistry" (wr hpr hmwt).

⁴ These two lines display a subtle use of wordplay and grammatical gender, contrasting "model" (fem. twf) and "begetter" (masc. wtf), and associating the notion of "birth" with the former and "creation" with the latter.

Ptah as creator (4.3-5.1)

PHARAOH⁵ has come before you, Ptah:
he has come before you, god distinguished of
form.

Greetings before your originals, whom you made after you evolved in the god's body,
(you) who built his body by himself, without the earth having evolved, without the sky
having evolved, without the waters having been introduced.⁶

You tied together the world, you totalled your flesh,
you took account of your parts and found yourself alone,
place-maker, god who smelted⁷ ^a the Two Lands.

There is no father of yours who begot you in your evolving,
no mother of yours who gave you birth:
your own Uniter,⁸ ^b active one who came forth active.

When you stood up on the land in its inertness,
it drew together thereafter,
you being in your form of Ta-tenen,

^a Is 44:24

^b Gen 2:7;
Isa 29:16;
Jer 18:6

in your evolution of the one who totals the Two Lands.⁹

The one whom your mouth begot and your arms have created¹⁰ —
you took him from the Waters,
your action modelling your perfection:
your son, distinguished in his evolving, who dispels for you the uniform darkness¹¹ with the radiance of his two eyes.¹²

Ptah's character (11.4-8)

O be fearful of him, O be afraid of him — this god who made your needs.
Give adulation to his might and become content in the presence of his two sound eyes.¹²

Since his words are the balance of the Two Lands,¹³
there is no bypassing the utterance he has made.¹⁴

The great identity that lays storms, which [every] face fears when his *ba*¹⁵ [e]volves;
magic that has control of the gods,
whose respect is great in the Ennead:
the reckoning [of him] is in what he has begun,
his control is among that which he has made.

⁵ A generic designation, which would have been replaced by the name of the ruling pharaoh in the actual ritual.

⁶ Written here as the term for the physical substance rather than the name of the universal waters. The former was thought to derive from the latter, entering the world from under the earth or, as the Nile, through caverns in the south of Egypt.

⁷ A further reference to Ptah's association with craftsmanship: in this case, metalworking.

⁸ Lit., "your own Khnum." Khnum (ḫnmw), whose name means "uniter," was the deity who formed the physical substance of each individual like a vessel of clay on a potter's wheel. Cp. Gen 2:7; Isa 29:16; Jer 18:6. See Gordon 1982:203-214.

⁹ The Two Lands (Upper and Lower Egypt) were united (dmḏ "combine, total") both physically and symbolically at the site of Memphis.

¹⁰ Referring to the sun, as the last clause of this sentence makes clear. In another section of this hymn (10.3-5), the sun, speaking as Ptah's "eldest son," says of him: "I came forth from him, the lord of all people, who created me in the Waters, raised up the sky for me and supported the earth for me, and sails me in the body of Nut."

¹¹ The darkness before creation (dispelled by the first sunrise) and still existing unbroken in the universal waters outside the world: see n. 1 to the "Book of Nut," p. 5.

¹² The sun and moon, which were identified respectively as the right and left eyes of the solar aspect of Horus.

¹³ The phrase "balance of the Two Lands" (mḥꜣt tꜣwꜣ) carries a dual connotation here: as the measure of the natural and moral order (mꜣꜣt) established by the creator's "words" with the creation of the world, and as a reference to Memphis, which was often described by the same phrase (see n. 9 above).

¹⁴ A reference to the immutability and permanence of the natural order. Compare the description of the creator in Coffin Texts Spell 75 as the god "who does not turn back on what he has said" (p. 9).

¹⁵ Referring to the sun as a manifestation (ba) of Ptah: here written like the homonymous word "Ram," often used of the sun.

REFERENCES

Möller 1905:36-46; Wolf 1929; Sauneron 1953; Assmann 1975b:322-33; Allen 1988a:38-42.

FROM THE "MEMPHITE THEOLOGY" (1.15)

James P. Allen

Perhaps the most famous of all Egyptian creation accounts is preserved on a worn slab of black granite, created for erection in the temple of Ptah at Memphis during the reign of the Nubian pharaoh Shabako and now in the British Museum (BM 498). As its dedicatory text records, the stone was purportedly inscribed in order to preserve a much older document, probably on papyrus or leather; lacunae deliberately incorporated in the copy support this claim. For a long time the original was thought to derive from the Old Kingdom or even earlier, but advances in our understanding of Egyptian grammar and theology have now made a date in the Nineteenth Dynasty more likely.¹ The text is remarkable not only for its history but more importantly for the content of its closing section, translated here.

Dedication (line 2)

His Incarnation² copied this writing anew in the house of his father Ptah South of His Wall,³ when His Incarnation found it as something that the predecessors had made, worm-eaten and unknown from beginning to end. Then [His Incarnation] copied [it] anew — and it is better than its former state — for the sake of his name enduring and making his monuments last in the house of his father Ptah South of His Wall, for the length of eternity, as something that the Son of Re [SHABAQO]⁴ did for his father Ptah Tatenen that he might achieve given life eternally.

Creation by thought and expression (cols. 53-56)

There was evolution into Atum's image through both the heart and the tongue.⁵ And great⁶ and important is Ptah, who gave life to all the [gods] and their ka's as well through this heart and this tongue, as which Horus and Thoth have both evolved by means of Ptah.⁷

It has evolved that heart and tongue have control of [all] limb[s], show[ing] that he is preeminent in every body and in every mouth — of all the gods, all people, all animals, and all crawling things that live — planning and governing everything he wishes.⁸

a Deut 29:3

b Gen 1:27

His Ennead is before him, in teeth and lips⁹ — that seed and those hands of Atum: (for) Atum's Ennead evol[ed] through his seed and his fingers, but the Ennead is teeth and lips in this mouth that pronounced the identity of everything, and from which Shu and Tefnut emerged and gave birth to the Ennead.

The eyes' seeing, the ears' hearing, the nose's breathing of air send up (information) to the heart, and the latter is what causes every conclusion¹⁰ to emerge; ^a it is the tongue that repeats what the heart plans.

The result of creation (cols. 56-58)

So were all the gods born, Atum and his Ennead as well, for it is through what the heart plans and the tongue commands that every divine speech¹¹ has evolved.

So were the male life-principles made and the female life-principles set in place^{12 b} — they who make all food and every offering¹³ — through that word that makes what is loved and what is hated.¹⁴

So has life been given to him who has calm and

¹ For the dating see Schlögl 1980:110-117. Junge (1973) has argued that the text is an original composition of the 25th Dyn.

² The standard form of reference to the ruling pharaoh as the current "incarnation" of kingship: see n. 9 to the "Book of Nut," p. 5.

³ For this epithet, see n. 12 to Coffin Texts Spell 647, p. 19.

⁴ The name inside the cartouche was erased, but can be restored on the basis of the prenomen elsewhere on the stone.

⁵ These words begin a new section, the final one on the stone. What precedes is the script of a ritual commemorating the unification of the Two Lands and the founding of Memphis, and a list of the various forms of Ptah. The sentence reads lit., "(Something) evolved through the heart, (something) evolved through the tongue, into the image of Atum," with the subject of the verbs unexpressed. The word tjt "image" is used of depictions and hieroglyphic signs; the sense here is evidently that the world, which evolved from Atum, is an "image" of its material source. This text uses the words jb and h'tjt interchangeably for "heart," although the sense is that normally associated with the former, as the seat of thought and emotion, rather than the latter, which often denotes the physical organ.

⁶ The word wr "great" connotes both status and age: as the link between the creator's expressed thought and its realization in the "image of Atum," Ptah is prior to all other forces and elements of the created world. This creative function is consonant with the principle of "information" that Ptah represents, exemplified in his role as patron of sculptors: the link between the concept of a statue in the sculptor's mind and its ultimate material realization.

⁷ Thoth, the power of rationalization, and Horus, the force of kingship, reflect the operation of "heart" (thought) and "tongue" (command) in the created world. These principles, like all the other forces and elements of nature, came into being through Ptah's mediation.

⁸ This sentence continues the theme stated in the final clause of the preceding sentence. The principle of expressed thought, which produced the created world, continues to affect it, thus showing that Ptah's mediation is still operative.

⁹ This clause echoes a line from the much older Pyramid Texts: "My lips are the two Enneads: I am the great expression" (Pyr. 1100a-b); see Schott 1938. The initial pronoun "his" evidently refers to Ptah; although he is not otherwise associated with the Ennead, its gods derive from his action, as the following clauses make clear.

¹⁰ Like its English calque, the Eg. rꜥyt derives from a root meaning "conclude," which is used both in the sense of "complete, finish" and "understand" (Wb 1:212, 3-6, 10-15). The entire sentence explains how the material principle embodied in the Ennead can be derived from the intellectual principle of thought and expression: like a "conclusion" expressed in speech, the created world is the expression of the creator's concept of it.

¹¹ The phrase "divine speech" is the Eg. term for the hieroglyphic writing system, concrete symbols (tjt "image": see n. 5, above) of mental concepts. The entire created world ("Atum and his Ennead as well") is thus a hieroglyphic text of the creator's original concept.

¹² The text here employs both the generic term for life force, kꜣ (ka: see n. 5 to Pyramid Texts Spell 600, p. 8), which is grammatically masculine, and its much rarer feminine counterpart hmwt.

¹³ The two terms used here relate grammatically to their subjects: masculine ḏꜣw "food" and feminine hꜣpt "offerings." The link between life force (kꜣ) and food (including food offerings) is reflected in the abstract kꜣw "sustenance," a concept that underlies the present passage.

¹⁴ The significance of this final clause is unclear. Doing "what is loved and what is hated" are concepts normally associated with moral order, which is the subject of the next line. On that basis it has been suggested that the sentence should end with "through that word" and that the next sentence began with a conjoined clause that has been omitted: "<So has order been given> to the one who does what is loved death given to him who has wrongdoing.^{15 c}

So was made all construction and all craft, the hands' doing, the feet's going, and every limb's movement, according as he governs that which the heart plans, which emerges through the tongue, and which facilitates¹⁶ everything.

The role of Ptah (cols. 58-61)

It has evolved that Ptah is called "He who made totality and caused the gods to evolve," since he is Ta-tenen,¹⁷ who gave birth to the gods, from whom everything has emerged — offerings and food, gods' offerings, and every good thing. So is it found understood¹⁸ that his physical strength is greater than the gods'.

c Deut 30:15;
Eccl 7:12

d Gen 2:2

So has Ptah come to rest after his making everything^d and every divine speech¹⁹ as well, having given birth to the gods, having made their towns, having founded their nomes, having set the gods in their cult-places, having made sure their bread-offerings, having founded their shrines, having modelled their bodies to what contents them. So have the gods entered their bodies — of every-kind of wood, every kind of mineral, every kind of fruit, everything that grows all over him,²⁰ in which they have evolved.

So were gathered to him all the gods and their ka's as well, content and united in the lord of the Two Lands.²¹

<and disorder given> to the one who does what is hated": Sethe 1928:64-65. The use of the demonstrative ("that word"), however, suggests a following relative clause.

¹⁵ The establishment of moral order is used here to exemplify the creation of order (m^ct) as part of the natural world.

¹⁶ Lit., "which makes the help (of)" (irrt smw): see Grdseloff 1952. This sentence concludes and summarizes the text's exposition of creation through expressed thought.

¹⁷ Ptah is here equated with the Memphite god representing the first matter to emerge at creation (the primeval hill). This in turn is the source of all subsequent matter in the world, which is the subject of this and the following paragraph.

¹⁸ Or "found recognized" (*gm s(j)*² rather than gm s^c): Allen 1988a:93. The verb *sj*², which denotes the faculty of Perception (see n. 28 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13) is perhaps more appropriate to the text; its operation via the senses was described at the end of the preceding section.

¹⁹ See n. 11 above.

²⁰ As Ta-tenen, the physical earth: see n. 17 above.

²¹ This line, which identifies Ptah as king, ends the cosmogonic exposition of the text. It also reflects the ritual that precedes the cosmogony (see n. 5 above), and introduces the final few columns on the stone (61-64), which summarize the themes of the ritual.

REFERENCES

Breasted 1902; Erman 1911; Sethe 1928:1-80; Junker 1939; ANET 4-6; Sauneron 1959:62-64; Lichtheim 1973:51-57; Allen 1988a:42-47.

FROM PAPYRUS LEIDEN I 350 (1.16)

James P. Allen

While the cosmogonies of Heliopolis and Memphis were concerned with the material source and the means of creation, respectively, that of Thebes was devoted to its ultimate cause, the creator himself, conceptualized in the god Amun. Among the many texts of New Kingdom and later date describing the role of Amun in the creation, the most extensive is that preserved on a papyrus from the end of Ramesses II's reign, now in Leiden (I 350). It is divided into a series of eulogies, artificially numbered as "chapters," each dealing with a different aspect of the god.¹ The five "chapters" excerpted below deal most directly with Amun's nature and his role as creator.

Amun as self-generating (2,25-28)

40TH CHAPTER.

The one who crafted himself, whose appearance² is unknown.

Perfect aspect, who evolved into a sacred emana-

tion.³

Who built his processional images and created himself by himself.

Perfect icon,⁴ whom his heart made perfect.

Who tied his fluid together with his body

¹ The papyrus originally contained 26 "chapters," of which 22 are preserved. The numbering is artificial, by units (1-9, the first four lost), tens (10-90), and hundreds (100-800). Most "chapters" begin and end with a word similar in sound to the number. The text also employs "verse points," superlinear dots that mark the end of each line.

² The term (qj) refers to the external appearance of something, its way of acting, or its situation (Wb V:15, 6-16, 8) — in essence, the means by which something is perceived by others.

³ This term, whose root (bsj) means "introduce," refers to the sun (Wb I:475, 2), here as the means by which Amun is "introduced" into the world.

⁴ The word literally means "controller" (sjm): see Hornung 1971:52-53.

to bring about his egg in his secret interior.
Evolution of evolution,⁵ model of birth.
Who finished himself in proper order,⁶
[...] who crafted 40.⁷

Amun as the source of all evolution (3,22-28)
80TH CHAPTER.

The Hermopolitans⁸ were your first evolution until you completed these,⁹ while you were alone.
Your body was secreted among the elders,¹⁰ you hiding yourself as Amun,¹¹ at the head of the gods.

You made your evolution into Ta-tenen,
in order to cause the original ones to be born from your first original state.

Your perfection was raised aloft as Bull of His Mother,¹²
and you distanced yourself as the one in the sky, fixed in the sun.

You are come in fathers, maker of their sons, in order to make functional heirs for your children.

You began evolution with nothing,¹³ without the world being empty of you on the first occasion.

All gods are evolved after you,
[...].¹⁴

Amun as the source of creation (3,28-4,8)
[90TH CHAPTER].

The Ennead is combined in your body:
your image¹⁵ is every god, joined in your person.
You emerged first, you began from the start.
Amun, whose identity is hidden¹⁶ from the gods;
oldest elder, more distinguished than these.

a Judg 13:18

b Gen 1:3-5

c Ps 143:8

Ta-tenen,¹⁷ who smelted [himself] by himself, in Ptah:

the toes of his body are the Hermopolitans.
Who appeared in the Sun, from the Waters, that he might rejuvenate.

Who sneezed, [as Atum, from] his [mouth, and gave birth to] Shu and Tefnut combined in manifestation.

Who appears on his throne as his heart prompts, who rules for himself all that is, in his [disk].
Who ties together for himself the kingship of Eternal Recurrence,

down to Eternal Sameness, permanent as Sole Lord.

Light was his evolution on the first occasion,^b with all that exists in stillness for awe of him.
He honked by voice, as the Great Honker,¹⁸ at the District,¹⁹ creating for himself while he was alone.

He began speaking²⁰ in the midst of stillness,
opening every eye and causing them to look.
He began crying out while the world was in stillness,^c

his yell in circulation while he had no second, that he might give birth to what is and cause
them to live,
and cause every person to know the way to walk.^c

Their hearts live when they see him.

His are the effective forms of the Ennead.²¹

Amun as pre-existing (4,9-11)

100TH CHAPTER.

Who began evolution²² on the first occasion.

Amun, who evolved in the beginning, with his

⁵ This text uses the same orthographic conventions as those found in a similar phrase predicated of Ptah in the "Berlin Hymn": see n. 2 to that text (p. 20).

⁶ Lit., "orderliness" (bw m²c) an abstract formed from the root of the word m²c "order." The verse point here has been placed erroneously after bw and before m²c.

⁷ The meaning of this phrase is unknown: one or more key words have been lost at the beginning of the line.

⁸ I.e., the Ogdoad. The word here is a nisbe (hmnjw) from the name of Hermopolis (hmnw), itself a reference to the Ogdoad (hmn "group of eight"), and used as a play on the "chapter" number (hmnw "80").

⁹ The notion of "completing" (km) has a dual reference here. Amun "completes" the Ogdoad through the creation; he also "completes" them as the fourth of four pairs, together with his female counterpart Amaunet.

¹⁰ I.e., the gods of the Ogdoad, who, as qualities of the primeval waters, existed before all the other gods.

¹¹ A reference to the etymology of Amun's name (jmnw "hidden").

¹² This term is normally used of Amun's solar aspect. Amun created the sky and is immanent in the sun, son of the sky (Nut): he is thus the male sexual partner ("bull") of his own mother.

¹³ Or "you began to evolve." The line reads š²c .n.k hpr nn wnt, lit., "You began evolving without what exists."

¹⁴ Some two lines (6 verses) are lost.

¹⁵ For this term (ijt) see the "Memphite Theology," p. 22, n. 5.

¹⁶ This phrase (jmn m.f) is occasionally used as a fuller form of Amun's name, and is perhaps its origin.

¹⁷ Ta-tenen, the primeval hill, occurs first in the list of Amun's creations as the first element of the created world to emerge from the universal waters. The name (t²-t²nnj "land that becomes distinct") also reflects the adjectival phrase used of Amun in the preceding line (tnj r nn "more distinguished than these").

¹⁸ The goose was sacred to Amun, probably because its morning honking suggested the god's voiced that "spoke" the first dawn into existence — as indicated by this and the following lines.

¹⁹ Probably a reference to the primeval hill, the first Place ("District").

²⁰ Lit., "He parted words" (wf m²wt). The phrase recalls the idiom "part the mouth" (wfj r) for "speak" (Wb II :300, 1-2) and is used here as a conscious parallel to "opening the eye" (wn jrt) in the following line.

²¹ The reading of the final word is uncertain. "Ennead" (psdt) is possible, and seems required by the homonymy with the "chapter" number (here, psdww "90") that usually ends each "chapter."

²² Or "began to evolve": cf. n. 13 above.

emanation unknown,
no god evolving prior to him,
no other god with him to tell of his appearance,²³
there being no mother of his for whom his name was made,
and no father of his who ejaculated him so as to say "It is I."²⁴
Who smelted his egg by himself.
Icon²⁵ secret of birth, creator of his (own) perfection.
Divine god, who evolved by himself and every god evolved since he began himself.
Amun as transcendent (4,12-21)
200TH CHAPTER.
Secret of evolution (but) glittering of forms, wonderful god of many evolutions.
All gods boast in him,
in order to magnify themselves in his perfection,
like his divinity.
The Sun himself is joined with his person.
It is he who is the Great One in Heliopolis,²⁶ who is also called Ta-tenen.
Amun, who emerged from the Waters that he might lead everyone.
Another of his evolutions is the Hermopolitans.
Original one who begot the original ones and caused the Sun to be born, completing himself in Atum,²⁷ one body with
him.
It is he who is the Lord to the Limit, who began existence.
His ba, they say, is the one who is in the sky.²⁸
It is he who is the one who is in the Duat,²⁹ fore-

d Prov 25:2-3

e Judg 13:18

most of the east.
His ba is in the sky, his body in the west, and his cult-image in Southern Heliopolis,³⁰ elevating his appearances.
Amun is one, hiding himself from them.³¹
He is concealed from the gods, and his aspect is unknown.
He is farther than the sky, he is deeper than the Duat.³² d
No god knows his true appearance,³³ no processional image of his is unfolded through inscriptions,³⁴
no one testifies to him accurately.
He is too secret to uncover his awesomeness, he is too great to investigate, too powerful to
know.
Instantaneously falling face to face into death is for the one who expresses his secret identity,^e unknowingly or knowingly.³⁵
There is no god who knows how to invoke him
with it.
Manifest one whose identity is hidden,^e inasmuch as it is inaccessible.³⁶
Amun as One (4,21-26)
300TH CHAPTER.
All the gods are three:
Amun, the Sun, and Ptah, without their seconds.
His identity is hidden in Amun,
his is the Sun as face, his body is Ptah.³⁷
Their towns are on earth, fixed for Eternal Recurrence:
Thebes, Heliopolis, and Memphis, unto Eternal Sameness.

²³ See n. 2 above.

²⁴ These two lines may reflect Eg. customs in naming a newborn: Zandee 1947:74; Posener 1970:204-205.

²⁵ See n. 4 above.

²⁶ I.e., Atum. The first sixteen lines of this "chapter," dealing with Amun's perceptibility through nature, explain his relationship to the other major cosmogonic systems (Heliopolis, Memphis, and Hermopolis), and to the two major forces in the created world (the sun, in the world of the living, and Osiris, in the Duat).

²⁷ This line (tm.f sw m tmw) is similar to the one that established the etymology of Amun's name in the "80th Chapter" (see n. 11 above).

²⁸ I.e., the sun, which is the primary manifestation (ba) of Amun in the created world.

²⁹ I.e., Osiris.

³⁰ This phrase was often used as a designation of Thebes, reflecting its theological prominence, similar to that established earlier for Heliopolis.

³¹ Having dealt with the many immanent means through which Amun can be perceived, the text now turns to a discussion of his true nature, which, by contrast, is imperceptible, unknowable, and one. "Them" refers to all the gods mentioned in the preceding lines.

³² These two phrases describe the limits of the created world. As the creator, Amun must necessarily be separate from the world he has created.

³³ See n. 2 above.

³⁴ This line refers to the frequent scenes of the god's bark carried in procession, sculpted on temple walls throughout Egypt.

³⁵ Rather than a prescription for punishment, these lines reflect the philosophical contradiction inherent in a knowledge of Amun's true nature. In Eg. epistemology, knowledge entails the internalization of external reality: "perception" (sj), which takes place in the heart. Since Amun transcends all created beings, his subordination in this manner is physically impossible, thus producing instant annihilation for the perceiver.

³⁶ A summation of the entire "chapter": although the nature of Amun can be perceived to some extent through what he has created (b²y "manifest one," lit., "ba-like"), Amun himself transcends creation ("whose identity is hidden") and is therefore physically unknowable ("inaccessible" to knowledge).

³⁷ The Eg. construction (3 pw ntrw nbw) is ambivalent as to subject and predicate; in this case, however, the list of three gods in the next line identifies "three" as the predicate. Although the "chapter" begins with a triad, the pronoun "his" in its second sentence reveals that its true subject is the oneness of God: hidden in his true nature (jmw rn.f; see n. 16 above), but manifest in the sun (his "face") and in the physical substance ("his body") of which all created matter partakes (Ptah here in his role as Ta-tenen; see n. 17 to the "Memphite Theology," p. 23). The "chapter" also unites the three cosmogonies associated with these aspects of God, which is the subject of the lines that follow.

When a message is sent from the sky, it is heard in Heliopolis, and repeated in Memphis to (Ptah) of good dis- position, ³⁸ put in a report, in Thoth's writing, for the town of Amun, bearing their concerns, and the matter is answered in Thebes by an Oracle emerging, ³⁹ intended for the En- nead. ⁴⁰	f 1 Sam 2:6	Everything that comes from his — Amun's — mouth, ⁴¹ the gods are bound by it, according to what has been decreed. When a message is sent, whether for killing or for giving life, ^f life or death are in it for everyone except him — Amun together with the Sun [and Ptah:] total, 3. ⁴²
--	-------------	--

³⁸ See n. 2 to Coffin Texts Spell 647, p. 18.
³⁹ The word translated as "Oracle" here is the phrase hr.tw "one says" with divine determinative.
⁴⁰ All divine decisions reflect the original process of creation: the creator's spoken word activates Atum's evolution ("heard in Heliopolis"), via the mediation of Ptah ("repeated in Memphis"), and results in physical reality ("intended for the Ennead").
⁴¹ The expression used here (prt m r "what emerges from the mouth") is also an idiom for "utterance."
⁴² All creation is affected by the creator's word except for the creator himself; this includes the sun and Ptah, who are merely aspects of Amun.

REFERENCES

Gardiner 1905; Erman 1923; Zandee 1947; Fecht 1964:46-52; Assmann 1975b:312-21; Allen 1988a:48-55.

FROM COFFIN TEXTS SPELL 1130 (1.17)

James P. Allen

Egyptian cosmogonies were concerned primarily with explaining the origin of the world and its elements. The creation of human beings was considered part of this process, and as such was not given special attention in and of itself: if noted at all, it is usually explained by a simple "etymological" metaphor, which derives people (rmt) from the "tears" (rmyt) of the creator's eye. By the same token, the establishment of social and moral norms is generally absent from the creation accounts, since these were considered part of the natural order governing the operation of the world as a whole. Spell 1130 of the Coffin Texts is perhaps the major exception to this tradition. Like all Egyptian cosmogonies, it equates the creation with the establishment of order and the attendant quelling of chaos; but unlike most, it describes this process in largely human terms — the relationship of people to nature and to one another. The spell is also unusual in its reference to the end of the world, which is conceived essentially as a return to chaos, a reversal of the process of creation itself.

Introduction (CT VII 461c-462c) RECITATION BY INACCESSIBLE-OF-IDENTITIES, the Lord to the Limit, speaking before those who still the storm during the sailing of the entourage. ¹ Please proceed in calm, and I will repeat to you the four deeds ² that my own heart did for me in- side the Coil ³ ^a for the sake of stilling disorder. ⁴	a Prov 8:27 b Jer 39:46; Eze 37:9; Zec 2:6; Dan 7:2; 8:8; 11:4 c 1 Sam 2:7; Prov 22:2 d Jer 4:22	the Akhet. ⁵ I have made the four winds, ⁶ so that every person might breathe in his area. ⁶ That is one of the deeds. I have made the great inundation, so that the poor might have control like the rich. ⁷ ^c That is one of the deeds. I have made every person like his fellow. ^d
---	--	---

¹ The "entourage" are the gods that accompany the sun in his voyage by boat across the waters of the Duat, by night, and remove the dangers of the Duat from his path ("who still the storm"). This introduction sets the scene of the spell at night, which is equivalent to the situation before creation.
² The translation "deeds" is somewhat misleading. The term (zp) is closer to the English concepts "occasion, event, happening."
³ The "Coil" (mhn) is a metaphor for the primeval singularity from which the world evolved, envisioned as a coiled serpent.
⁴ The act of creation involved both the establishment of order and the consequent stilling of disorder.
⁵ I.e., within the space between the Duat and the visible horizon: thus, before the first sunrise at the dawn of creation.
⁶ Air is one of the two prime requisites of life: as all living things have life in common, so too do they benefit from the universal presence of air.
⁷ Food, the second necessity of life, derives in Egypt from the Nile, either directly or, through its irrigation of the land, indirectly. Like air, the river's inundation exists without regard to social distinctions — here, between poor (hwrw) and rich (wsr, lit., "powerful").

I did not decree that they do disorder: it is their hearts that break what I said.⁸ That is one of the deeds. I have made their hearts not forget the West, for the sake of making offerings to the nome gods.⁹ That is one of the deeds. The operation of order in the world (CT VII 464g-467d) I made the gods evolve from my sweat, while people are from the tears of my Eye.¹⁰ I shine anew every day in this my rank of Lord to the Limit. I made night for Weary-hearted,¹¹ while I am bound for sailing aright in my boat. I am lord of the Flood¹² in crossing the sky. I do not have to show respect for any of my	ε Jer 22:16; Ps 35:10; 72:4	parts:¹³ Annunciation and Magic are felling for me that evil-charactered one¹⁴ that I might see the Akhet and come to sit at its head, that I might separate the needy from the rich,¹⁵ e and do likewise to the disorderly. Life is for me, I am its lord: the scepter will not be taken from my hand. The end of creation (CT VII 467e-468b) And when I have spent millions of years between myself and that Weary-hearted one, the son of Geb,¹⁶ I will come to sit with him in one place, and mounds will become towns, and towns mounds: one enclosure will destroy the other.¹⁷
--	--	---

⁸ Since creation involved the establishment of order, subsequent disorder in the world derives not from the creator but from human failings. The phrase "what I said" here refers not to a code of divine law, but to the order of creation itself, which arose with the creation from the creator's fiat (cf. n. 21 to Coffin Texts Spell 75, p. 9). Social inequality is a prime source of disorder in the world; thus, the natural order must necessarily involve no such distinctions: "I have made every person like his fellow."

⁹ All people are conscious of their mortality and the fact that they will have to find acceptance in the company of the gods after death. Thus, offerings are presented to the gods in this life in that anticipation: see n. 25 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13.

¹⁰ Although both people and the gods derive from the creator, the latter evolved directly from the creator's substance ("sweat": cf. n. 2 to Coffin Texts Spell 76, p. 10), whereas people are a secondary creation, here explained "etymologically" (see n. 14 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 12).

¹¹ An epithet of Osiris, denoting both his inert state and his potentiality for life: cf. n. 17 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 12.

¹² Variant "lord of Eternal Recurrence" (nḥḥ). Either suits the context: the sky is the surface of the "Flood" (ḥḥw), and the sun's daily cycle defines the eternal repetition of life.

¹³ All of creation is the creator's "parts," derived from him: he is therefore prior to and greater than any of them.

¹⁴ "Evil-charactered" (ḡw qd) is an epithet of Apophis, the serpent that opposes the sun's journey through the Duat. "Annunciation" and "Magic" are two of the gods in the sun's "entourage" (see n. 1 above): for these gods, see n. 28 to Coffin Texts Spell 80, p. 13, and n. 16 to Coffin Texts Spell 75, p. 9, respectively.

¹⁵ Like the dawn of creation, sunrise from the Akhet each morning reestablishes the order of the created world — here exemplified in its social component. "Separation" (wḏꜥ) is a term deriving from Eg. jurisprudence: wḏꜥ mdw "judgement" is lit., "separating the matter." Note the repeated theme of social inequality, here involving the needy (mꜣr) vs. the rich (wsr): see n. 7 above.

¹⁶ See n. 11 above. The line refers to the daily cycle of the sun, which travels from daylight ("myself") to the Duat, where it joins with the body of Osiris and receives the power of rebirth. This cycle is the determinant of "Eternal Recurrence": see n. 18 to Coffin Texts Spell 335, p. 17.

¹⁷ I.e., all things will return to their original state of oneness. Atum's unification with Osiris reflects the state farthest removed from that of life, but also contains, through Osiris, the hope of rebirth once again (see the preceding note).

REFERENCES

CT VII 461c-468b; ANET 7-8; Lichtheim 1973:131-33; Faulkner 1978:167-169; Hermesen 1991:227-234.

BOOK OF THE DEAD 175 (1.18)
"Rebellion, Death and Apocalypse"

Robert K. Ritner

Through a series of dialogues between divine speakers, this famous theological treatise details the corruption of the original creation with the introduction of death and concomitant anxiety regarding an afterlife, as well as apocalyptic pronouncements of the world's ultimate dissolution and recreation. A final section relates an ontological myth describing the origin of ritual, deities and names. Thought to have been composed as early as the First Intermediate Period (Kees 1956:207), the six surviving manuscripts range in date from the 18th Dynasty to the Roman Period.¹ In addition to the basic manuscript in Naville (1886, vol. 1, pls. cxcviii-cxcix), primary bibliography may be found in Hornung (1979:517-518), adding the published translations in Allen (1974:183-185), Barguet (1967:260-263), Faulkner (1985:175), Hornung (1979:365-371), and Wilson (ANET 9-10). No previous translation has included detailed critical analysis of the differing versions.

SPELL FOR NOT DYING AGAIN.² WORDS SAID BY the Osiris NN:

"O, Thoth, what is it that has happened through the children of Nut? They have made war. They have raised disturbance. When they committed evil, then they created rebellion. When they committed slaughter, then they created imprisonment. Indeed, they have converted what was great into what is small in all that I have done.

Hail(?),³ O great one Thoth" - so says Atum.

"You shall not see evil. You shall not suffer. Curtail their years, hasten their months, since they have betrayed secrets⁴ in all that you have done."

"Mine is your palette, O Thoth. To you I have brought your ink pot. I am not among those who betray their secrets. No injury shall be done through me."

WORDS SAID BY the Osiris NN:

"O, Atum,⁵ what does it mean that I go to the desert, the Land of Silence, which has no water, has no air, and which is greatly deep, dark, and lacking?"⁶

"Live in it in contentment."⁷

"But there is no sexual pleasure in it."

"It is in exchange for water and air and sexual pleasure that I have given spiritual blessedness, contentment in exchange for bread and beer" - so says Atum.

"It is too much for me, my lord, not to see your face."⁸

"Indeed, I shall not suffer that you lack."⁹

"But every god has taken his throne¹⁰ in the bark Millions (of Years)."

"Your throne belongs to your son Horus" - so says Atum.¹¹ "He now will dispatch the elders.¹² He now will rule the two banks.¹³ He will inherit the throne¹⁴ which is in the Island of Flames."

"Then command that the god see his equal,¹⁵ for my face will see the face of my lord Atum."¹⁶

"What is the span¹⁷ of my life" - so says Osiris.

"You shall be for millions of millions (of years),¹⁹ a lifetime of millions.²⁰ Then I shall destroy all that I have made. This land will return into the Abyss, into the flood as in its former state. It is I who shall remain together with Osiris, having made my transformations into other snakes²¹ which mankind will not know, nor gods see. How beautiful is that which I have done for Osiris, exalted more than all the gods! I have given to him rulership²² in the desert, the Land of Silence, while his son Horus is the heir upon his throne²³ which is in the Island of Flames. I have made his seat²⁴ in the bark of Millions (of Years). I have caused that he dispatch the elders.²⁵ I have caused that his monuments be founded, while love of him is on earth, while the falcon is distant,²⁶ secure in

¹ Sources labeled following Szczudloska 1963 and Kees 1930, adding Lute 1977 as Ke.

² Lb adds "in the Necropolis;" Kd substitutes: "Spell for Revivifying in the Necropolis, giving love to the blessed spirit before the great god who is in the underworld." The term nn is the deceased individual, equated with Osiris, whose name is inserted here.

³ Cf. (?) Coptic miok "hail."

⁴ Lit., "inflicted damage to secrets."

⁵ Later variants Lb and Sp add "(my) lord" before Atum. The early text JI reads instead "That which Osiris said to Atum."

⁶ Or "unfathomable/boundless." Lit., "of seeking."

⁷ Possibly conclusion of preceding sentence (as Allen): "while one lives in it in contentment." Negated in late editions Sp and Kd: "(Indeed), one does not live in it in contentment." JI and Eb add signs suggesting "contentment of the Land of Silence."

⁸ So JI; reduced in Eb and Ke to "See your face;" Sp: "It is too painful for me, lord Atum, not to see your face;" similarly Kd, but moving "lord Atum" to the end of the sentence.

⁹ Sp adds: "You are for millions of millions (of years)!"

¹⁰ So JI, Eb and Ke; all others: "seated himself."

¹¹ JI drops "so says Atum;" Kd consistently misunderstands "so says" as "to be good." Sp reads "... your son Horus as the sun disk on earth."

¹² Sp and Kd: "those elder than him."

¹³ Eb reads "your throne," while Ke has "his throne."

¹⁴ JI: "He will be my heir of my throne;" Sp and Kd: "he being (your) heir of (your) throne."

¹⁵ So JI and Sp; Lb inserts "me" after "command;" Eb and Ke read "Then command that I see his equal." Kd is garbled: "while there is no god, his second or his third."

¹⁶ Late versions Lb, Sp, and Kd read "your sacred face."

¹⁷ Dropped in Ke.

¹⁸ Late versions add "there" (i.e., in the underworld).

¹⁹ Lb inserts "— so says Atum."

²⁰ Lb and Ke read "a great lifetime of millions." Eb and Ke insert "I have caused that he dispatch the elders," wrongly displaced from below. Sp contains a long and broken interpolation.

²¹ Eb and Ke read "worms."

²² Eb and Ke read "I have given to him the desert," and Eb confuses "Land of Silence" with "while then."

²³ JI reads "my heir of my throne."

²⁴ Eb and Ke insert "provision for" his seat.

²⁵ Displaced above by Eb and Ke. Kd reads "those elder than him."

²⁶ Eb and Ke simplify "Horus is secure in his palace ..." All other variants favor the translation "be distant" and not the homophonous "Horus (the falcon)."

his palace through the desire of founding his monuments.²⁷ I have sent²⁸ the soul of Seth²⁹ distinct from all³⁰ the gods. I have caused that his soul be under guard in the bark³¹ through the desire that he not frighten the god's limbs."

"O, my father Osiris, may you do for me what your father Re did for you. May I endure upon earth,³² may I found my throne, may my heir be healthy, may my tomb stand firm. They are my servants upon earth.³³ May my enemies be as split sycamore figs,³⁴ with Selket over their bonds.

I am your son, O my father Re. May you make for me this life, prosperity, and health,³⁵ while the falcon is distant,³⁶ secure in his palace. May one go forth to this lifetime of one who seeks for reverence among these revered ones."³⁷

The sound of praise is in Heracleopolis, joy in Naref, since Osiris has appeared as Re, having inherited his throne, ruling the two banks completely.³⁸ The Ennead is satisfied concerning it; Seth is as a great split sycamore fig.

"O³⁹ my lord Atum," so says Osiris.⁴⁰ "May Seth be afraid of me when he sees that my form is as your form. May all people come to me — all patricians, all commoners, all sunfolk, gods, blessed spirits and the dead — in bowing when they see me, since you have placed fear of me and created respect for me."

Then Re [acted] in accordance with all that he said.⁴¹ Then Seth came with his head downcast, touching the earth, since he had seen what Re had had done for Osiris. Blood then descended from his nose. Then Re⁴² hacked the blood that came forth from his nose. That is how there came to be the ritual hacking of the earth in Heracleopolis.⁴³

Then Osiris became ill in his head, through the heat of the Atef-crown that was on his head — on the first day when he put it on his head — ⁴⁴ through the desire that the gods might fear him. Then Re returned in peace to Heracleopolis⁴⁵ to see his son⁴⁶ Osiris, and he found him sitting in his house, his head fallen into swelling⁴⁷ through the heat of the Atef-crown that was on his head.⁴⁸ Then Re emptied out these swellings, extracting the blood, pus and corruption, so that they ended up in a swamp. Then Re said to Osiris: "From the blood and pus descended from your head you have made a swamp." Thus came to be the great⁴⁹ swamp that is in Heracleopolis.

Then Osiris said to Re: "How healthy and how relieved is my face! How uplifted I am regarding what you commanded for my face regarding the ornament."⁵⁰

Then Re [said] to Osiris: "Let your face be secure, your front be uplifted! How great is fear of you, how vast your respect! Behold the beautiful name come forth to you from my mouth! Behold your name remains for millions of many millions (of years)"! That is how there came to be the name of Harsaphes, foremost of his place⁵¹ in Heracleopolis, while the great⁵² Atef-crown is on his head, with millions and hundreds of thousands⁵³ of bread, beer, bulls for slaughter,

²⁷ Kd substitutes "this land."

²⁸ So JI, garbled elsewhere.

²⁹ Lb, Sp and Kd all add "to the West."

³⁰ Dropped only by JI.

³¹ Eb alone omits "in the bark."

³² Late versions all in third person.

³³ Sp reads "that which Pharaoh desires." Kd substitutes "since he loves Osiris on earth."

³⁴ Sp specifies "great" split figs.

³⁵ Sp adds "on earth."

³⁶ Eb and Ke again simplify "Horus is secure in his palace." Kd terminates the spell with "The falcon is established."

³⁷ Eb and Ke substitute "May you cause that this my lifetime attain to that of one who seeks ..." JI and Sp conclude the section with variants of "How happy is (your) heart."

³⁸ Texts for this final section in Kees 1930.

³⁹ Garbled in Sp.

⁴⁰ Sp adds "to Re."

⁴¹ So JI, Sp: "Good is that which Re did for Osiris when he acted in accordance with all that he said"

⁴² So JI, Lb and Sp substitute "Osiris."

⁴³ JI omits "in Heracleopolis."

⁴⁴ Only in Sp.

⁴⁵ JI ends clause here.

⁴⁶ Only in Sp.

⁴⁷ So JI, Lb has "swollen;" Sp reads "weighted down."

⁴⁸ Final phrase in Sp.

⁴⁹ JI reads "this noble swamp."

⁵⁰ So JI, Lb seemingly corrupt: "My front is uplifted. Command the chief of craftsmen since ..."

⁵¹ Lb reads "name."

⁵² So Lb and Sp.

⁵³ Lb adds "tens of thousands and thousands."

birds for wringing, everything good and pure,⁵⁴ greater than the fluid of his spirit, while his spirit is before him, the spirit of sexual pleasure elevating to him all offerings.⁵⁵

Then Re said to him: "How beautiful is this that has been done⁵⁶ for you. Never has the like been done."⁵⁷

Then Osiris said: "It is by the authoritative power of my speech that I did it. How good is the king with authoritative utterance in his mouth!"

Then Re said to Osiris: "Behold, goodness has come forth to you from my mouth. By means of it your primal state has come into being. Then your name is fixed through it for millions of millions (of years)."⁵⁸ That is how the name of Heracleopolis came to be.⁵⁹

"How great is fear of you, how vast your respect! So long as there exists Horus, son of Osiris, born of Isis the goddess, may I exist as he exists, may I endure as he endures, my years like his years, his years like my years on earth for millions of many millions (of years)."⁶⁰

Words to be said over an image of NN made of lapis lazuli, given to a man at his neck. It is a great protection on earth and enhances a man in the necropolis. It gives love of him to people, gods, blessed spirits and the dead. It protects him from the assault of a god and protects a man from everything evil.⁶¹ Truly effective, (proved) millions of times.

⁵⁴ So Lb and Sp.

⁵⁵ So JI. Lb and Sp have instead: "greater than the flood waters on the river to count, the recurrence of his offerings by the millions fixed before him, while drunkenness by the thousands elevates to him his offerings of all good things."

⁵⁶ JI reads "that I have done."

⁵⁷ JI adds "for me."

⁵⁸ So Sp. Lb is corrupt, and JI reads "Its name thereby is for millions of millions (of years)."

⁵⁹ So JI. Lb reads "That is how it became very great in Heracleopolis."

⁶⁰ Further fragmentary passages in Sp only.

⁶¹ So JI. Lb reads "It is effective for the one who recites it in the necropolis. May you not be silent." Sp reads "It is effective for the one who recites the book on earth, and effective for him in the necropolis. May you not be silent about it."

REFERENCES

Naville 1886 1:xcviii-xcix; Allen 1974:183-185; Barguet 1967:260-263; Faulkner 1985:175; Hornung 1979:365-371, 517-518; Kees 1930; 1956; ANET 9-10.

COFFIN TEXT 157 (1.19) "Cultic Abomination of the Pig"^a

Robert K. Ritner

This spell for "Knowing the Souls of Pe" (with its descendant Book of the Dead 112) provides a theological explanation for the Egyptian pork taboo, a prohibition never uniformly accepted (Darby et al. 1977:171-209; Miller 1990). The conclusion to the companion Coffin Text spell 158 is instructive: "Not to be said while eating pork." No less interesting is the medical aspect of spell 157, since it details the first recorded ophthalmological exam, perhaps including reference to a type of eye chart with "strokes." The form of the myth is aetiological, explaining the origin of animals and customs.

BEING ORDAINED FOR FOODSTUFFS IN THE NECROPOLIS, PRAISE AND LOVE ON EARTH, AND EXISTENCE AMONG THE FOLLOWING OF HORUS AND HIS ATTENDANTS. A MYSTERY KNOWN IN THE ESTATE (IN PE). KNOWING THE SOULS OF PE.

O female souls of night, female marsh dwellers, Mendesian women, women of the Mendesian nome, dwellers in the Mansion of Iap, shadowy ones ignorant of praise, brewers of Nubian beer, do you know the reason for which Pe was given to Horus? You do not know it, but I know it. It was Re who gave it in recompense for the mutilation in his eye. I know it. It was the case that Re

^a Lev 11:7-8;
Isa 65:2-5;
66:3, 17

said to Horus: "Let me see your eye since this has happened to it." He then saw it and he said: "Look, pray, at that stroke while your hand covers the healthy eye which is there." Then Horus looked at that stroke. Horus then said: "Behold, I see it completely white." THAT IS HOW THE ORYX ("See-white") CAME TO BE.

Re then said: "Look at that black pig." Then Horus looked at that black pig. Then Horus cried out over the condition of his throbbing ("raging") eye, saying: "Behold, my eye feels as at that first wound which Seth inflicted against my eye."

Then Horus lost consciousness ("swallowed his heart") before him. Re then said: "Place him on his bed until he is well." It was the case that Seth made transformations against him as that black pig. Then he cast a wound into his eye. Re then said: "Abominate the pig for Horus." "Would that he be well," SO SAID THE GODS. THAT IS HOW THE ABOMINATION OF THE PIG CAME TO BE FOR HORUS BY THE GODS AND THEIR FOLLOWERS.

NOW when Horus was in his childhood, his sacrificial animal came to be a pig though his eye had not yet suffered. As for Imsety, Hapy, Duamutef, and Qebehsenuef, their father is Horus the elder and their mother is Isis. It was the case that Horus said to Re: "Give to me two in Pe and two in Hierakonpolis from this corpus of brethren to be with me in eternal assignment so that the earth might flourish and disturbance be extinguished in this my name of Horus upon his papyrus column."¹

I KNOW THE SOULS OF PE: ONE IS HORUS; ONE IS IMSETY; ONE IS HAPY.

¹ An image commonly found on healing stelae known as "Horus cippi," used to avert and cure the wounds of scorpions and snakes.

REFERENCES

Textual edition: de Buck 1938:326-348. Further discussion and translations: ANET 9-10; Faulkner 1973:135-136.

BOOK OF THE DEAD 112 (1.20)

(Variant of CT 157)

Robert K. Ritner

The primary manuscript (18th Dynasty) appears in Naville (1886: pl. cxxiv), with translations in Barguet (1967:148-150), Allen (1974:91) and Faulkner¹ (1985:108-109). A vignette depicts the seated gods Horus, Imsety and Hapy.

Spell for Knowing the Souls of Pe.

It is NN who shall say: "O marsh dwellers, those among the marsh dwellers, Mendesian women, those of the Mendesian nome, lady trappers² who are in Pe, shadowy ones who know no return, brewers of beer who knead bread, do you know the reason for which Pe was given to Horus? I know it, but you do not know it. It was Re who gave it in recompense for the mutilation in his eye by this which Re said to Horus: 'Let me see this which happened in your eye.' When Re investigated, then he saw. Re then said to Horus: 'Look, pray, at that black boar.' Then he looked. And then his throbbing ("raging") eye suffered greatly. Horus then said to Re: 'Behold, my eye feels as at that wound which Seth inflicted against my eye.' The he lost consciousness ("swallowed his heart"). Re then said to the gods: 'Place him on his bed. Let him recover.' It was the case that Seth had made his transformations into a black boar. Then that one cast a wound into his eye. Re then said to the gods:

^a Lev 11:7-8;
Deut 14:3, 8;
Isa 65:2-5;
66:3, 17

'Let the pig be abominated for Horus. Let him recover.' That is how the pig came to be the abomination of Horus by the Ennead that is in his following.^a

When Horus was in his youth, his sacrificial animal came to be as his cattle and his pigs, though his followers abominate (them). Imsety, Hapy, Duamutef, and Qebehsenuef, (he is) their father, and Isis is their mother. Horus then said to Re: 'May you give to me two brothers in Pe, and the remaining two in Hierakonpolis from this corpus together with me, to be in eternal assignment so that the earth might flourish, and disturbance be extinguished. That is how his name came to be as 'Horus upon his Papyrus Column.' I know the souls of Pe. One is Horus. One is Imsety. One is Hapy.

Lift up your heads, O gods who are in the underworld. It is so that you might see him having become as a great god that I have come before you."

¹ Translation conflated with Coffin Text 157 version.

² Or "weavers."

REFERENCES

Naville 1886: pl. cxxiv; Barguet 1967:148-150; Allen 1974:91; Faulkner 1985:108-109.

2. OTHER MYTHS

THE REPULSING OF THE DRAGON (I.21)

(Coffin Text 160)

Robert K. Ritner

During the course of each day's journey, the sun god confronted a serpent adversary^a whom he vanquished with the assistance of the militant god Seth and the force of divine magic. Within the following Coffin Text spell, this battle with the "dragon" is located at Bakhu, the mountainous western support of heaven where the sun sets. Elsewhere the serpent is styled Apep (Apopis), who threatens to devour the solar boat in the seventh and twelfth hours of night and thereby destroy the created order, returning the world to a state of chaos. Various temple, and even private, rituals were devised to ensure the victory of Re and the consequent maintenance of world stability (Ritner 1993:210-212). By the recitation of a victorious "mythic precedent" on the divine plane, this Coffin Text spell was designed to accomplish a variety of positive goals for the living and the dead, including protection against deadly serpents.^a (Spell for) ENDURING ON EARTH, NOT EATING EXCREMENT IN THE NECROPOLIS,¹ NOT PERISHING IN THE NECROPOLIS BY A LIVING OR DEAD BA-SPIRIT, NOT DYING BY MEANS OF A SERPENT,² ENTERING AND EXITING THROUGH THE EASTERN PORTALS OF HEAVEN, BEING HEALTHY ON EARTH BY A LIVING OR DEAD BA-SPIRIT, HAVING POWER OVER OFFERINGS THAT AN HEIR MAKES FOR HIS FATHERS IN THE NECROPOLIS,³ KNOWING THE SPIRITS OF THE WEST.

I know that mountain of Bakhu upon which the sky leans. Of crystal(?) it is, 300 rods in its length, 120 rods in its width. On the east of this mountain is Sobek, Lord of Bakhu. Of carnelian is his temple. On the east of that mountain is a serpent, 30 cubits in his length, with three cubits of his forefront being of flint. I know the name of that serpent who is on the mountain. His name is "He overthrows."⁴ Now at the time of evening he turns his eye over against Re, and there occurs a halting among the (solar) crew, a great astonishment(?) within the voyage, so that Seth bends himself against him.⁵ What he says as magic:

a Isa 51:9

Let me stand against you so that the voyage be set right. O you whom I have seen from afar, close your eye since I have bound you!⁶ I am the male! Cover your head so that you may be well and I may be well!⁷ I am "Great of Magic."⁸ I have used (it) against you. What is it? It is effectiveness.⁹

O you who goes on his belly, your strength belongs to your mountain. But watch me as I go off with your strength in my hand! I am one who lifts up¹⁰ strength. I have come just so that I might plunder the (serpent-formed) earth gods.

As for Re, may he who is in his evening (i.e. Re) be satisfied with me when we have circled the sky, while you (the serpent) are in your fetters. It is what has been commanded against you in the divine presence. Thus does Re set¹¹ in life.

I KNOW THE SOULS OF THE WEST. ONE IS RE.¹² ONE IS SOBEK, LORD OF BAKHU. ONE IS HATHOR, LADY OF THE EVENING.¹³

¹ An unfortunate fate of the damned, whose world and bodily functions are reversed.

² A variant adds: "being healthy on earth," displaced from below.

³ Displaced in two variants to the end of the text.

⁴ Variant "He who is in his burning."

⁵ Perhaps a reference to Seth's standard posture in lancing the serpent adversary at the prow of the solar bark.

⁶ Variants substitute: "Close your eye, be veiled for me!"

⁷ Variants conclude: "since I am hostile."

⁸ See Ritner 1993:19, n. 78.

⁹ Variants have: "This effective power, what is it?"

¹⁰ Or "displays/wears."

¹¹ The term forms a pun with "be satisfied" at the beginning of the paragraph.

¹² Variant "Atum," the form of the sun god at sunset.

¹³ Variant. "Seth, Lord of life."

REFERENCES

Primary textual edition: de Buck 1938:373-388. Further discussion and translations: ANET 11-12; Faulkner 1973:138-139.

THE LEGEND OF ISIS AND THE NAME OF RE (1.22)

(P. Turin 1993)

Robert K. Ritner

Few texts illustrate so clearly the ritual significance of the personal name. Felt to be an intrinsic element and source of power, the name did not simply identify but defined an individual.¹ ^a For hostile purposes, the destruction of a name could effect the death or misfortune of its owner, and this belief underlies both the prominent role of naming in execration texts (see text 1.32 below) and the well attested expunging of royal names in dynastic feuds. Divinities were often said to have secret names guarded from devotees and other deities alike. The inherent power of such divine names is stated directly in the late Papyrus BM 10188, in which Re-Atum declares: "Magic is my name."² In similar fashion, bodily "relics" are repositories of personal energy and equally subject to manipulation. In this spell, it is the spittle of the creator that serves to animate lifeless clay, in conformity with traditional Egyptian accounts of the creation.

SPELL of the divine god, who came into being by himself, who made heaven, earth, water, the breath of life, fire, gods, men, flocks, herds, reptiles, birds, and fish, the kingship of gods and men altogether,³ with limits beyond numerous years, [...] and with numerous names. One did not know that (name); one did not know this (name).

Now, Isis was a wise woman. Her heart was more devious than millions among men; she was more selective than millions among the gods; she was more exacting than millions among the blessed dead. There was nothing that she did not know in heaven or earth, like Re, who made the substance of the earth. The goddess planned in her heart to learn the name of the noble god.

Now, Re entered every day in front of the crew (of the solar bark), being established on the throne of the two horizons. A divine old age had weakened his mouth so that he cast his spittle to the earth. He spat out, it lying fallen upon the ground. Isis kneaded it for herself with her hand, together with the earth that was on it. She formed it into a noble serpent; she made (it) in the form of a sharp point. It could not move, though it lived before her. She left it at the crossroads by which the great god passed in accordance with his heart's desire through his Two Lands.⁴ The noble god appeared outside, with the gods from the palace in his following, so that he might stroll just like every day. The noble serpent bit him, with a living fire coming forth from his own self.⁵ It raged(?) among the pines. The divine god worked his mouth; the voice of his majesty reached up to heaven. His Ennead said: "What is it? What is it?" His gods said: "What? What?" He could not find his speech to answer concerning it. His lips were quivering, and all his limbs were trembling. The poison seized upon his flesh as the inundation seizes what is behind it. The great god regained his composure⁶ and cried out to his followers: "Come to me, you who have come to be from my body, gods who came forth from me, so that I might let you know its development. Something painful has stabbed me. My heart does not know it. My eyes did not see it. My hand did not make it. I cannot recognize it among any of the things that I have made. I have not tasted a suffering like it. There is nothing more painful than it."

^a Gen 3:19-20

"I am a noble, son of a noble, the fluid of a god come forth from a god. I am a great one, son of a great one. My father thought out my name. I am one who has numerous names and numerous forms. My form exists as every god. I am called Atum and Horus of Praise. My father and mother told me my name. I have hidden it in my body from my children⁷ so as to prevent the power of a male or female magician from coming into existence against me. I went outside to see what I had made, to stroll in the Two Lands that I created, and something stung me. I do not know it. It is not really fire; it is not really water, though my heart is on fire and my body is trembling, all my members giving birth to a chill."

"Let the children of the gods be brought to me, whose words are magically effective, who know their spells, whose wisdom reaches up to heaven!"

The children of the god then came, each man of them bearing his boasting.⁸ Isis came bearing her ¹ Cf. Gen 3:19-20, where the naming of creatures by Adam signifies man's control over them.

² See Ritner 1993:26.

³ Lit., "as a single thing."

⁴ Egypt.

⁵ The serpent's fiery venom derives ultimately from the god's own fluids.

⁶ Lit., "established his heart."

⁷ Or "at my birth."

⁸ Following P. Chester Beatty XI, 2/8 (ib^c < ^c*b*^c); Turin 1993 has ikb "mourning."

effective magic, her speech being the breath of life, her utterance dispelling suffering, her words revivifying one whose throat is constricted. She said: "What is it, what is it, my divine father? What, a serpent has inflicted weakness upon you? One of your children has raised his head against you? Then I shall overthrow it by efficacious magic, causing him to retreat at the sight of your rays."

The holy god opened his mouth: "It was the case that I was going on the road, strolling in the Two Lands and the deserts. My heart desired to see what I had created. I was bitten by a serpent without seeing it. It is not really fire; it is not really water, though I am colder than water and hotter than fire, my entire body with sweat. I am trembling, my eye unstable; I cannot see. Heaven beats down rain upon my face in the time of summer!"⁹

THEN SAID Isis to Re: "Say to me your name, my divine father, for a man lives when one recites in his name."¹⁰

(Re said:) "I am¹¹ the one who made heaven and earth, who knit together the mountains, who created that which exists upon it. I am the one who made the water, so that the Great Swimming One¹² came into being. I made the bull for the cow,¹³ so that sexual pleasure came into being. I am the one who made heaven and the mysteries¹⁴ of the horizons; I placed the ba-spirits of the gods inside it. I am the one who opens his two eyes so that brightness comes into being, who closes his two eyes so that darkness comes into being, according to whose command the inundation surges, whose name the gods do not know. I am the one who made the hours so that the days came into being. I am the one who divided the year, who created the river.¹⁵ I am the one who made living fire, in order to create the craft of the palace. I am Khepri in the morning, Re at

b Gen 32:27,
29; Exod
20:7

c Exod 3:13-14

noon, and Atum who is in the evening."

The poison was not repelled in its course; the great god was not comforted.

Then Isis said to Re: "Your name is not really among those that you have said to me. Say it to me so that the poison might go out, for a man lives when one pronounces his name."

The poison burned with a burning; it was more powerful than flame or fire.

Then the majesty of Re said: "May you give to me your two ears, my daughter Isis, so that my name might go forth from my body to your body. The most divine one among the gods had hidden it, so that my status might be broadened within the Bark of Millions.¹⁶ If there occurs a similar occasion when a heart goes out to you, say it to your son Horus after you have bound him by a divine oath, placing god in his eyes."¹⁷ The great god announced his name to Isis, the Great One of Magic.

"Flow out, scorpions! Come forth from Re, Eye of Horus! Come forth from the god, flame of the mouth.¹⁸ I am the one who made you; I am the one who sent you. Come out upon the ground, powerful poison! Behold, the great god has announced his name. Re lives; the poison is dead. NN, born of NN, lives; the poison is dead, through the speech of Isis the Great, the Mistress of the Gods, who knows Re by his own name."

Words to be recited over an image of Atum and of Horus-of-Praise, a figure of Isis, and an image of Horus,¹⁹ DRAWN (ON) THE HAND OF THE SUFFERER AND LICKED OFF BY THE MAN; DO LIKEWISE ON A STRIP OF FINE LINEN, PLACED ON THE SUFFERER AT HIS THROAT. THE PLANT IS SCORPION PLANT. GROUND UP WITH BEER OR WINE, IT IS DRUNK BY THE MAN WHO HAS A SCORPION STING. IT IS WHAT KILLS THE POISON — TRULY EFFECTIVE. (PROVED) MILLIONS OF TIMES.¹⁹

⁹ A reference to his fevered sweat, contrasted with the typically cooling water of the Nile.

¹⁰ Cf. Exod 3:13-14.

¹¹ A name of the heavens, symbolized by a celestial cow bearing the bark of the sun.

¹² Common Eg. euphemisms for penis and vagina, see Ritner 1987 col. 645.

¹³ Not a verb, contra Borghouts "(I made) the horizon inaccessible."

¹⁴ The connection is logical in Egypt, where the fluctuation of the Nile determined the seasons.

¹⁵ The solar bark.

¹⁶ A reference to the injured eye of Horus, cured by Isis after an attack by Seth. Cf. text 1.20 above.

¹⁷ Venom.

¹⁸ Shown in a vignette on the Turin papyrus.

¹⁹ For discussion, see Ritner 1993:95.

REFERENCES

Primary manuscript: P. Turin 1993 (19th Dyn.): Pleyte and Rossi 1869-76 pls. cxxxi:12 - cxxxiii:14; and lxxvii + xxi:1-5; excerpted in Möller 1927:29-32. Other contemporary exemplars: HO 2 and HO 3, 2; O. Deir el-Medineh 1263; and Papyrus Chester Beatty 11. Bibliography and translations: ANET 12-14; Borghouts 1978:51-55; Ritner 1993:76, n. 337. For methodological commentary, see Ritner (ibid., 76, 83, 95-96, and 164).

THE LEGEND OF ASTARTE AND THE TRIBUTE OF THE SEA (1.23)

P. Amherst (Pierpont Morgan) XIX-XXI

Robert K. Ritner

The tattered remains of a once magnificent manuscript, the "Astarte Papyrus" nevertheless provides tantalizing evidence of Egyptian traditions regarding the Asiatic goddess who had been adopted into cult and mythology by the beginning of the New Kingdom. While this legend has been shown to have an indigenous Egyptian setting, it is yet parallel to, and likely inspired by, the Ugaritic story of the Fight between Baal and the sea god Yam (text 1.86), whose Semitic name is also used for the threatening deity in the Egyptian tale. Helck, in contrast, has suggested that the tale is an adaptation derived from the Hurrian "Song of Ullikummi." In the Egyptian legend, the Sea seems to threaten to overwhelm heaven, earth and mountains unless provided with tribute. When Astarte is sent to deliver the tribute, the Sea demands further that she be given to him in marriage, perhaps with a dowry including the seal of the earth god and the beads of the sky goddess. From other sources, it appears that the Sea is ultimately vanquished in combat by Seth (the Egyptian counterpart of Baal), mentioned in the fragmentary concluding lines.

(Col. 1) [...] ... his two bulls. "Let me praise [...] ... Let me praise the [earth(?) ...] ... Let me praise the sky [in its(?) place [...] the earth." [...] Ptah. Now after [...] the earth. The earth rested¹ [...] "[...] I strip off her [...]" Then they bent like [...] Then [each(?) man embraced [his fellow(?). Now] after [seven(?) days, the sky did [...] descending upon [...] the Sea. The [...] the] earth gave birth² to [...] the four banks of the [Sea(?)]³ [...] in its midst like the suspension [...] his throne of Ruler. He [...] carry for him the tribute. [...] in the council. Then Renenutet carried [...] as Ruler [...] sky. Now, behold, one brought to him the tribute [...] or his [...] he will seize us as plunder [...] our own to [...] Renenutet his tribute in silver and gold, lapis lazuli [and turquoise(?)] the boxes. Then they said to the Ennead: "[...] the tribute of the Sea, so that he might hear for us [all] the matters [of the earth(?)], protected from his hand. Will he [...]"

(Col. 2) [...] Now they were fearful of [...] the [tribute] of the Sea. Give [...] the tribute of the Sea. [...] evil. Renenutet took a [...] Astarte. Then the³ [...] said: "[...] birds hear what I might say. May you⁴ not depart [...] another." Hurry, go to Astarte [...] her house. And you should cry out below [the window of the room in which(?) she sleeps. And should say to her: "If you are [awake, ...] If you are asleep, may I wake you. [...] the] Sea as Ruler over the earth and the mountains and(?) the sky. Please, may you come before them at this [moment. [...] Asiatics. Then Astarte [...] the daughter of Ptah.

a Isa 51:10;
Jer 5:22;
Ps 104:6-9;
Job 38:8-11

Now [...] of the Sea, the [...] "[...] you go yourself bearing the tribute of [the Sea] ..." Then Astarte wept [...] its⁵ Ruler was silent. [...] "Lift up your⁷ face. [...] Lift up your face. And you should [...] away." Then he lifted up [his face [...] the [...] singing and laughing at him. [...] Then the Sea] saw Astarte while she was sitting on the edge of the Sea. Then he said to her: "Where have you come from, O daughter of Ptah, O angry and raging goddess? Have you worn out your sandals that are on your feet; have you frayed your clothes that are on you, by the going and coming that you have done from the sky and the earth?" Then [Astarte] said to him [...]

(Col. 3) The Sea instructs Astarte to carry a message to the Ennead, probably demanding the goddess in marriage as security against his further depredations.

[...] say to Ptah before(?) the Ennead. "If they give to me Your⁸ [daughter(?) ...] them. What would I do against them for my part?" Astarte heard what the Sea said to her. She lifted herself up to go to the Ennead to the place where they were gathered. The greater ones saw her; they stood up before her. The lesser ones saw her; they lay down on their bellies. She was given her throne and she sat down. She was presented with the (Col. 4) [tribute of the Sea(?) ...] [the] earth [...] the beads. [...] Then the beads [...] the messenger of Ptah going to say these words to Ptah and to Renenutet. Then Renenutet took off

¹ Or "became satisfied."

² Or, as restored by Gardiner, "the four regions of the [earth]."

³ Masculine.

⁴ Masculine.

⁵ Long lacuna, followed by a determinative suggesting "compel/strike."

⁶ Or "his."

⁷ Masculine.

⁸ Masculine.

the beads that were on her neck. Behold, she placed [them] on the balance [...]

(Col. 5) [...] Astarte. "O my [...] It means an [argument(?)] with the Ennead. Therefore he will send and he will demand [...] the seal of Geb [...] the balance in it." Then (Col. 6) [...] (Col. 7) [...] my basket of [...] (Cols. 8-9) [...] (Col. 10) [...] tribute(?) of the Sea [...] pass(?) by the gates [...] the gates, go out (Col. 11) [...] If they come again [...] (Cols. 12-13) [...] (Col. 14) [...] the] Sea. And he shall [...] to cover the earth and the mountains and (Col. 15) [the sky.(?)] [...] to fight with him to the effect that [...] he sat down calmly. He will not come to fight with us. Then Seth sat down. [...]

(Verso) [...] "Behold, I am with your¹⁰ [...]" The Sea left [...] the seven [...] together with the sky and [...]

⁹ Masculine.

¹⁰ Masculine.

REFERENCES

Text: Gardiner 1932a:74-85; 1932b:76-81. Studies: ANET 17-18; Stadelmann 1975; Helck 1983; van Dijk 1986:31-32; Ritner 1989:112-113.

THE DESTRUCTION OF MANKIND (1.24)

Miriam Lichtheim

This mythological tale forms the first part of a longer text known as "The Book of the Cow of Heaven," which is inscribed in five royal tombs of the New Kingdom (the tombs of Tutankhamun, Seti I, Ramses II, Ramses III, and Ramses VI). The first part relates how the sun-god Re set out to destroy the human race because mankind was plotting rebellion against him. But after an initial slaughter, carried out by the "Eye of Re," the sun-god relented and devised a ruse to stop the goddess from further killing. The interest of the tale lies, of course, in the theme of human wickedness arousing the divine wrath and resulting in a partial destruction of mankind, a theme that received its classic treatment in the Mesopotamian and biblical stories of the Flood.

The second part of the text (not translated here) tells how the sun-god, weary of government, withdrew into the sky and charged the other great gods with the rule of heaven and earth.

Though recorded in the New Kingdom, the text is written in Middle Egyptian, and it probably originated in the Middle Kingdom. The tale thus stands apart from stories which are written in Late Egyptian, the vernacular of the New Kingdom.

(1) It happened [in the time of the majesty of] Re, the self-created, after he had become king of men and gods together: Mankind plotted against him, "while his majesty had grown old, his bones being silver, his flesh gold, his hair true lapis lazuli. When his majesty perceived the plotting of mankind against him, his majesty said to his followers: "Summon to me my Eye,¹ and Shu, Tefnut, Geb, Nut, and the fathers and mothers who were with me when I was in Nun,² and also the god Nun; and he shall bring his courtiers (5) with him. But bring them stealthily, lest mankind see, lest they lose heart.³ Come with them (the gods) to the Palace, that they may give their counsel. In the end I may return to Nun, to the place where I came into being."

a Gen 6:5-7,
11-13; 11:4

The gods were brought, the gods were lined up on his two sides, bowing to the ground before his majesty, that he might make his speech before the eldest father, the maker of mankind, the king of people.⁴ They said to his majesty: "Speak to us, that we may hear it." Then Re said to Nun: "O eldest god in whom I came into being, and ancestor gods, look, mankind, which issued from my Eye,⁵ is plotting against me. Tell me what you would do about it, for I am searching. I would not slay them until I have heard what you might (10) say about it."

Then spoke the majesty of Nun: "My son Re, god greater than his maker, more august than his creators, stay on your throne! Great is fear of ¹ The eye of the sun-god is viewed as a being distinct from him.

² The primordial water in which creation began.

³ Lit., "lest their heart flee."

⁴ The god Nun.

⁵ An allusion to the idea that mankind (rmf) issued from a tear (rmr) of the sun-god. See above Coffin Texts Spell 80 (above text 1.8, p. 12, n. 14).

you when your Eye is on those who scheme against you." Said the majesty of Re: "Look, they are fleeing to the desert, their hearts fearful that I might speak to them." They said to his majesty: "Let your Eye go and smite them for you, those schemers of evil! No Eye is more able to smite them for you. May it go down as Hathor!"

The goddess returned after slaying mankind in the desert, and the majesty of this god said: "Welcome in peace, Hathor, Eye who did what I came for!" Said the goddess: "As you live for me, I have overpowered mankind, and it was balm to my heart." Said the majesty of Re: "I shall have power over them as king (15) by diminishing them." Thus the Powerful One (Sakhmet) came into being.⁶

The beer-mash of the night for her who would wade in their blood as far as Hnes.⁷ Re said: "Summon to me swift, nimble messengers that they may run like a body's shadow!" The messengers were brought immediately, and the majesty of this god said: "Go to Yebu and bring me red ochre⁸ in great quantity!" The red ochre was brought to him, and the majesty of this god ordered the Side-Lock Wearer in On⁹ to grind the ochre, while maidservants crushed barley for beer. Then the red ochre was put into the beer-mash, and it became like human blood; and seven thousand jars of beer were made. Then the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Re came together with the gods to see the beer.

^b Gen 7:19-20

Now when the day dawned (20) on which the goddess would slay mankind in their time of traveling south,¹⁰ the majesty of Re said: "It is good;¹¹ I shall save mankind by it!" And Re said: "Carry it to the place where she plans to slay mankind!" The majesty of King Re rose early before dawn, to have this sleeping draught poured out. Then the fields were flooded three palms high with the liquid ^b by the might of the majesty of this god. When the goddess came in the morning she found them flooded, and her gaze was pleased by it.¹² She drank and it pleased her heart. She returned drunk without having perceived mankind. The majesty of Re said to the goddess: "Welcome in peace, O gracious one!" Thus beautiful women came into being in the town of Imu.¹³

⁶ A word play on shm, "power," and shmt, the lion-goddess Sakhmet.

⁷ This sentence serves as introduction to what follows.

⁸ Or hematite.

⁹ The high priest of Re in Heliopolis.

¹⁰ Emend to "her time of traveling south"?

¹¹ I.e., "the beer is good."

¹² Or, "her face was beautiful in it"?

¹³ A word play on im, "gracious."

REFERENCES

Maystre 1941; Erman 1927:47-49; ANET 10-11; Piankoff 1955:27-29; Brunner-Traut 1965:69-72; Lichtheim AEL 2:197-199.

3. HYMNS

THE GREAT CAIRO HYMN OF PRAISE TO AMUN-RE (1.25)

P. Cairo 58038 (P. Bulaq 17)

Robert K. Ritner

While the initial sections of this universalist hymn are carved on a statue of the Second Intermediate Period (12th-17th Dynasties; see Hassan 1928:157-193), the best preserved manuscript is a Theban papyrus of the early 18th Dynasty (Amenhotep II). The papyrus text is published in Mariette (1872: pls. xi-xiii) and excerpted in Möller (1927:33-34). Commentary, bibliography, and translations are found in Grébaut 1874; Wilson ANET; Assmann 1975b:199-207, 549-553; and Römer 1987. Later New Kingdom excerpts are well-attested on ostraca from Deir el-Medineh (see Römer 1987:406).

I. ADORATION OF Amon-Re,
The bull resident in Heliopolis, Chief of all the gods,

The good god, the beloved,
Who gives life to every warm being
And to every good herd.¹

¹ The Eg. creator is commonly described as a "Good Shepherd." Many similar references follow.

Hail to you, Amon-Re, Lord of the Thrones
of the Two Lands,
Foremost of Karnak,
Bull of his Mother,² foremost of his fields,
Wide of stride, foremost of Upper Egypt,
Lord of the Medjay³ Nubians, Ruler of Punt,
Oldest One of heaven, Eldest of earth,
Lord of what exists, enduring in all things.⁴

UNIQUE ONE, LIKE WHOM⁵ AMONG the gods?
Goodly bull of the Ennead,
Chief of all the gods,
Lord of Truth, Father of the gods,
Who made mankind, who created the flocks,
Lord of what exists, who created the tree of life,⁶

Who made the herbage, who vivifies the herd,
Goodly Power, whom Ptah engendered,
Youth, beautiful of (2/1) love,
To whom the gods speak praise,
Who made what is below and what is above,
illuminating the Two Lands,
Ferried across the sky in peace,
King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Re, triumphant, Chief of the Two Lands,
Great of strength, Lord of respect,
Chief who made the land in its entirety.

WHOSE PLANS ARE MORE EXALTED THAN those of any god,
At whose beauty the gods rejoice,
For whom jubilation is spoken in the great shrine of El-Kab,
With festal processions in the fire shrine at Pe,
Whose fragrance the gods love,
When He returns from Punt,⁶ Great of perfume, when He descends {from} the Medjay,⁷
Beautiful of face, returned from God's land.

DOGGING whose feet are the gods,
As they recognize His Majesty as their Lord,
Lord of fear, rich in terror,
Great in wrathful manifestations, powerful in appearances,⁸
Whose offerings flourish, who made foodstuffs,
Jubilation to you, who made the gods,

a Gen 2:9;
3:22, 24;
Prov 3:18

Who suspended heaven, who laid down the ground!

(3/1) CAESURA

II. Awake soundly, Min-Amon,
Lord of eternity, who made endlessness,
Lord of praise, foremost of the [Ennead],⁹ Whose horns are firm, whose face is beautiful,
Lord of the uraeus, lofty of plumage,
With beautiful fillet, lofty of White Crown,
Before whom coil the two uraeus cobras,
Fragrant One who is in the palace,
(with) Double Crown, Headdress, Blue
Crown,
Beautiful of face when He receives the Atef-
Crown,
Whom Upper and Lower Egypt love,
Lord of the Double Crown when He receives the Ames-sceptre,
Lord of the Mekes-sceptre, bearer of the Flail.

GOODLY Ruler HAVING APPEARED WITH THE WHITE CROWN,

Lord of solar rays, who made brightness,
To whom the gods speak jubilation,
Who extends His arms to the one He loves,
While His enemies fall to the flame.
It is His Eye that overthrows the rebels,
Placing its spear into the one who sucks up the Abyss,¹⁰
Forcing (4/1) the villain to disgorge what it has swallowed.

HAIL TO YOU, Re, Lord of the Two Truths,
Whose shrine is hidden, Lord of the gods,
Khepri in the midst of His bark,
Who issued command that the gods might be,
Atum, who made the common man,
Who distinguished their forms, who made their lives,
Who separated the races,¹¹ one from another,
Who hears the prayer of the one who is in distress,
Graciously disposed when He is entreated.
WHO RESCUES THE FEARFUL FROM THE HAND OF THE BRAZEN,
Who judges the wretch and the ruined,

² An epithet designating the creator as self-begotten, who impregnated his own mother.

³ The Beja nomads, living between the Nile and the Red Sea.

⁴ For this pantheistic notion, cf. the daily ritual, text 1.34 below.

⁵ Lit., "like whom (of) the gods" mi m (n) ntr.w. Translators have assumed wrongly that the writing here and in col. 9/3 must be an error for imy ntr.w "among" the gods, though elsewhere imy is written standardly (e.g., col. 3/3, 5/4, 9/6, etc.). Wilson (ANET 365) suggests "like the fluid(?) of the gods."

⁶ Source of incense and exotic African produce, thought to be inland Somalia.

⁷ Erroneously written "when He sends the Medjay."

⁸ The final word has been added in red as a correction.

⁹ Restored from statue BM 40959, right side, line 4 (Hassan 1928).

¹⁰ Apep (Apophis).

¹¹ Lit., "colors."

Lord of perception, with effective utterance
on his mouth,
For love of whom the Inundation has come,
Lord of sweetness, rich in love,
Coming so that the common man might live,
Who gives movement to every eye,
Formed in the Abyss,
Whose grace created brightness,
At whose beauty the gods rejoice,
(5/1) Their hearts living when they see him.
CAESURA

b Gen 2:9;
3:22, 24;
Prov 3:18

III. Re, REVERED IN KARNAK,
Grand of appearances in the Mansion of the Benben,¹²
Heliopolitan, Lord of the new moon festival,
For whom are performed the six-day and quarter month festivals,
Sovereign — life, prosperity, health! — Lord
of all the gods,
Falcon(?)¹³ in the midst of the horizon,
Chief of patricians of the Land of Silence,¹⁴
Whose name is hidden from His children
In this His name of "Amon."¹⁵

HAIL TO YOU WHO ARE IN PEACE,
Lord of joy, powerful in appearances,
Lord of the uraeus, lofty of plumage,
With beautiful fillet, lofty of White Crown,
You, whom the gods love to see,
The Double Crown fixed on Your brow,
Love of You pervading the Two Lands,
Your rays shining in the eyes.
The patricians are happy when You rise;
The flocks languish when You shine.
Love of You is in the southern heaven,
(6/1) Your sweetness in the northern heaven.
Your beauty captivates hearts,
Love of You wearying the limbs,¹⁶
Your beautiful form relaxing the hands.
Thoughts go astray at the sight of you.

YOU ARE the Sole One,¹⁷ WHO MADE [ALL]
THAT EXISTS,
One, alone, who made that which is,
From whose two eyes mankind came forth,
On whose mouth the gods came into being.
Who made the herbage [for] the herds,¹⁸
The tree of life^b for the sunfolk,
Who made that on which the fish live [in]
the river,
And the birds flying through heaven,
Who gave breath to the one in the egg,
Who vivifies the son of the slug,

Who made that on which the gnat lives,
The worm and the flea likewise,
Who made the sustenance of the mice in [their] holes,
Who vivifies the winged creatures in every tree.

HAIL TO YOU, WHO DID THIS ENTIRELY,
One, alone, with numerous arms,
Who spends the night (7/1) watchful, while everyone sleeps,
Who seeks what is useful for his flock,
Amon, enduring in all things,
Atum, Horachty,
Praise to you, as they all say.
Jubilation to you, because you have wearied yourself with us.
Let the earth be kissed for you, because you have created us.

HAIL TO YOU — by all flocks,
Jubilation to you — by all foreign lands,
To the heights of heaven, to the breadth of
the earth,
To the depths of the ocean,
The gods bowing to Your Majesty,
Exalting the might of Him who created
them,
Rejoicing at the approach of Him who begot
them,
Saying to you: "Come in peace,
Father of the fathers of all the gods,
Who suspended heaven, who laid down the
ground.

WHO MADE WHAT EXISTS, WHO CREATED THAT WHICH IS,
Sovereign, — life, prosperity, health! —
Chief of the gods.
Let us adore your might (8/1) in as much as you have made us,
Let {us} act for you because you have borne us.
Let us give you jubilation because you have wearied yourself with us."

HAIL TO YOU, WHO MADE ALL THAT EXISTS,
Lord of Truth, Father of the gods,
Who made mankind, who created the flocks,
Lord of Grain,
Who made the life of the desert flocks,
Amon, the bull, beautiful of face,
Beloved in Karnak,
Grand of appearances [in] the Mansion of the Benben,

¹² The primordial mound first risen from the Abyss.

¹³ Assuming an unorthographic spelling; otherwise: "when he is viewed."

¹⁴ The underworld.

¹⁵ See "The Legend of Isis and the Name of Re," text 1.22 above. The name Amon means "hidden."

¹⁶ So great is the love that it overwhelms the bearer.

¹⁷ Or, "Sole Image, who made ..."

¹⁸ Provided with five determinatives for specificity: ox, ibex, goat, pig and ram.

Repeating investitures¹⁹ in Heliopolis,
Who judges the two contestants²⁰ in the great broad hall,
Chief of the Great Ennead.

SINGLY UNIQUE ONE, WITHOUT HIS SECOND,
Foremost of Karnak,
Heliopolitan, foremost of His Ennead,
Living on Truth every day,
Horizon-dweller, Horus of the East,
For whom the desert creates silver and gold,
Genuine lapis lazuli for love of him,
Balsam and various incenses among the Medjay,
(9/1) Fresh myrrh for your nostrils,
O Beautiful of face, returned {from} the Medjay,
Amon-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands,
Foremost of Karnak,
Heliopolitan, foremost of His harem.
CAESURA

- IV. Unique king, like whom among the gods?
With numerous names, the number unknown,
Who rises in the eastern horizon,
Who sets in the western horizon,
Who overthrows His enemies
In the course of every day,²¹
Whose two eyes²² Thoht elevates,
Pacifying Him with his efficacious spells,
At whose beauty the gods rejoice,
He whom His solar apes exalt.²³
Lord of the Night bark and the Day bark,
They traversing for you the Abyss in peace,
YOUR CREW IN JOY,
When they see the rebel overthrown,

His body licked by the knife,
(10/1) The flame having eaten him,
His ba-spirit more destroyed than his corpse.
That VILLAIN,²⁴ his movement is removed,
While the gods rejoice,
The crew of Re at peace,
Heliopolis rejoicing,
For the enemies of Atum are overthrown,
Karnak at peace, Heliopolis rejoicing.
The Lady of Life, her heart is glad,
For the enemy of her lord is overthrown,
The gods of Babylon²⁵ in jubilation,
Those in their shrines kissing the ground,
WHEN THEY SEE THE ONE MIGHTY IN HIS STRENGTH,
Power of the gods,
True One, Lord of Karnak,
In this Your name of Maker of Truth,
Lord of sustenance, bull of offerings,
In this Your name of Amon, Bull of His Mother,
Maker of all peoples,
Creator and Maker of all that exists,
In this Your name (11/1) of Atum-Khepri,²⁶
Great falcon, with festive breast,
Beautiful of face, with festive chest,
Pleasing of form, lofty of feather,
Before whom the uraeus cobras sway,
To whom the hearts of patricians draw near,
For whom the sunfolk turn about,
Who makes festive the Two Lands in His epiphanies.
Hail to You, Amon-Re, Lord of the Thrones
of the Two Lands,
Whose city desires that he rise!
IT IS COMPLETED, satisfactorily, as found.

¹⁹ Lit., "diadems."

²⁰ Horus and Seth.

²¹ Another uncertain verse is added as a correction in red above the line: "On the morning of his birth every day." See Römer 1987:422-423.

²² The sun and the moon.

²³ The apes whose antics announce the rising sun.

²⁴ The Apep serpent.

²⁵ Eg. Babylon, a suburb of modern Cairo.

²⁶ "All peoples" (t³-tm.w) provides a pun with Atum (Tmw), and "Creator" (šp^r) a pun with Khepri (Hpri).

REFERENCES

Assmann 1975b:199-207, 549-553; Grébaut 1874; Hassan 1928:157-193; Mariette 1872: pls. xi-xiii; Möller 1927:33-34; Römer 1987:406; ANET 365.

THE GREAT HYMN TO OSIRIS (1.26)
(On the Stela of Amenmose — Louvre C 286)

Miriam Lichtheim

A round-topped limestone stela, 1.03 x 0.62 m, of fine workmanship dating from the 18th Dynasty. In the lunette there are two offering scenes showing, on the left, the official Amenmose and his wife Nefertari seated before an offering table and, on the right, a lady named Baket, whose relationship to Amenmose is not stated. Before Amenmose stands a son with his arms raised in the gesture of offering. Another son stands behind the couple, and more sons and daughters are seated below. A priest also performs offering rites before the lady Baket. Below the scenes is the hymn to Osiris in twenty-eight horizontal lines.

This hymn contains the fullest account of the Osiris myth extant in Egyptian, as distinct from Greek, sources. Allusions to the Osiris myth are very frequent in Egyptian texts, but they are very brief. It seems that the slaying of Osiris at the hands of Seth was too awesome an event to be committed to writing. Other parts of the story could be told more fully, especially the vindication of Osiris and of his son Horus, to whom the gods awarded the kingship of Egypt that had belonged to Osiris. The latter, though resurrected, no longer ruled the living but was king of the dead in the netherworld. The final part of the hymn praises the beneficent rule of Horus and, since each living Pharaoh represented Horus, the praise is directed to the reigning king as well.

(1) Adoration of Osiris by the overseer of the cattle of [Amun], [Amen]mose, and the lady Nefertari. He says:

Hail to you, Osiris,
Lord of eternity, king of gods,
Of many names, of holy forms,
Of secret rites in temples!
Noble of ka he presides in Djedu,¹
He is rich in sustenance in Sekhem,²
Lord of acclaim in Andjty,³
Foremost in offerings in On.^{4 a}
Lord of remembrance in the Hall of Justice,⁵ Secret ba of the lord of the cavern,
Holy in White-Wall,⁶
Ba of Re, his very body.
Who reposes in Hnes,⁷
Who is worshiped in the naret-tree,
That grew up to bear his ba.⁸
Lord of the palace in Khmun,⁹
Much revered in Shashotep,¹⁰
Eternal lord who presides in Abydos,¹¹
Who dwells distant in the graveyard
Whose name endures in people's mouth.
Oldest in the joined Two Lands,
Nourisher¹² before the Nine Gods,

^a Gen 41:45,
50; 46:20;
Ezek 30:17

Potent spirit among spirits.
Nun has given him his waters,
Northwind journeys south to him,
Sky makes wind before his nose,
That his heart be satisfied.
Plants sprout by his wish,
Earth grows its food for him,
Sky and its stars obey him,
The great portals open for him.
Lord of acclaim in the southern sky,
Sanctified in the northern sky,
The imperishable stars are under his rule,
The unwearying stars are his abode.
One offers to him by Geb's command,
The Nine Gods adore him,
Those in the Duat kiss the ground,
Those on high¹³ bow down.
The ancestors rejoice to see him,
Those yonder are in awe of him.

The joined Two Lands adore him,
When His Majesty approaches,
Mightiest noble among nobles,
Firm of rank, of lasting rule.
Good leader of the Nine Gods,
Gracious, lovely to behold,

¹ Busiris.

² Letopolis.

³ The Ninth Nome of Lower Egypt.

⁴ Heliopolis.

⁵ Lit., "the Two Justices" (or, "the Two Truths"), the name of the hall in the netherworld in which the judgment of the dead takes place.

⁶ Memphis and its nome.

⁷ Heracleopolis Magna.

⁸ According to the tradition of Heracleopolis the tomb of Osiris was located in that town, and the sacred naret-tree grew over the tomb and sheltered the ba of Osiris.

⁹ Hermopolis.

¹⁰ Hypselis.

¹¹ The hymn enumerates the chief cult centers of Osiris from north to south, beginning with Busiris, his foremost northern center of worship, and ending with Abydos, his main cult center in Upper Egypt.

¹² Df is abundance of food personified as a divinity. Cf. below, notes 15 and 17.

¹³ I.e., those buried in the high ground of the desert tombs.

Awe inspiring to all lands,
That his name be foremost.
All make offering to him,
The lord of remembrance in heaven and earth,
Rich in acclaim at the wag-feast,
Hailed in unison by the Two Lands.
The foremost of his brothers,
The eldest of the Nine Gods,
Who set Maat throughout the Two Shores,
Placed the son on his father's seat.
Lauded by his father Geb,
Beloved of his mother Nut,
Mighty when he fells the rebel,
Strong-armed when he slays (10) his foe.
Who casts fear of him on his enemy,
Who vanquishes the evil-plotters,
Whose heart is firm when he crushes the rebels.

Geb's heir (in) the kingship of the Two Lands,
Seeing his worth he gave (it) to him,
To lead the lands to good fortune.
He placed this land into his hand,
Its water, its wind,
Its plants, all its cattle.
All that flies, all that alights,
Its reptiles and its desert game,
Were given to the son of Nut,
And the Two Lands are content with it.
Appearing on his father's throne,
Like Re when he rises in lightland,
He places light above the darkness,
He lights the shade with his plumes.¹⁴
He floods the Two Lands like Aten¹⁵ at dawn,
His crown pierces the sky, mingles with the stars.

He is the leader of all the gods,
Effective in the word of command,
The great Ennead praises him,
The small Ennead loves him.

His sister was his guard,
She who drives off the foes,
Who stops the deeds of the disturber
By the power of her utterance.
The clever-tongued whose speech fails not,
Effective in the word of command,
Mighty Isis who protected her brother,
Who sought him without wearying.
Who roamed the land lamenting,
Not resting till she found him,
Who made a shade with her plumage,
Created breath with her wings.
Who jubilated, joined her brother,
Raised the weary one's inertness,

b Gen 3:22

Received the seed, bore the heir,
Raised the child in solitude,
His abode unknown.
Who brought him when his arm was strong
Into the broad hall of Geb.

The Ennead was jubilant:
"Welcome, Son of Osiris,
Horus, firm-hearted, justified,
Son of Isis, heir of Osiris!"
The Council of Maat assembled for him
The Ennead, the All-Lord himself,
The Lords of Maat, united in her,
Who eschew wrongdoing,
They were seated in the hall of Geb,
To give the office to its lord,
The kingship to its rightful owner.
Horus was found justified,
His father's rank was given him,
He came out crowned by Geb's command,
Received the rule of the two shores.

The crown placed firmly on his head,
He counts the land as his possession,
Sky, earth are under his command,
Mankind is entrusted to him,
Commoners, nobles, sunfolk.¹⁶
Egypt and the far-off lands,
What Aten (20) encircles is under his care,
Northwind, river, flood,
Tree of life,¹⁷ all plants.
Nepri gives all his herbs,
Field's Bounty¹⁷ brings satiety,
And gives it to all lands.
Everybody jubilates,
Hearts are glad, breasts rejoice,
Everyone exults,
All extol his goodness:
How pleasant is his love for us,
His kindness overwhelms the hearts,
Love of him is great in all.
They gave to Isis' son his foe,
His attack collapsed,
The disturber suffered hurt,
His fate overtook the offender.
The son of Isis who championed his father,
Holy and splendid is his name,
Majesty has taken its seat,
Abundance is established by his laws.
Roads are open, ways are free,
How the two shores prosper!
Evil is fled, crime is gone,
The land has peace under its lord.
Maat is established for her lord,

¹⁴ šw is written, but šwt must have been intended. Note the word play on šw(r), "shade," and šwty, "plumes."

¹⁵ Though written without the divine determinative, the word im has probably already assumed the connotation of a divinity. The divine determinative is also lacking in the two occurrences of df, "Abundance," where the personification is clear.

¹⁶ The population of Egypt and mankind as a whole.

¹⁷ See note 12.

One turns the back on falsehood.
May you be content, Wennofer!¹⁸
Isis' son has received the crown,
His father's rank was assigned him
In the hall of Geb.
Re spoke, Thoth wrote,
The council assented,
Your father Geb decreed for you,
One did according to his word.

An offering which the king gives (to) Osiris Khentamentiu, lord of Abydos, that he may grant an offering of bread and beer, oxen and fowl, ointment and clothing and plants of all kinds, and the making of transformations: to be powerful as Hapy, to come forth as living ba, to see Aten at dawn, to come and go in Rostau,¹⁹ without one's ba being barred from the necropolis.

May he be supplied among the favored ones before Wennofer, receiving the offerings that go up on the altar of the great god, breathing the sweet northwind, drinking from the river's pools:
for the ka of the overseer of the cattle of [Amun], [Amen]mose, justified, born of the lady Henut, justified, and of his beloved wife, [the lady Nefertari, justified].

¹⁸ A name of Osiris.

¹⁹ A name for the necropolis and specifically that of Giza.

REFERENCES

Moret 1931; Erman 1927:140-145; Lichtheim AEL 2:81-86.

TWO HYMNS TO THE SUN-GOD (1.27) From a Stela of the Brothers Suti and Hor — BM 826

Miriam Lichtheim

In the course of the 18th Dynasty, the rise to prominence of Amun of Thebes resulted in his assimilation to the supreme god, the sun-god Re. Furthermore, the conceptual dominance of sun worship had turned the sun-god into the all-embracing creator-god who manifested himself in many forms and under many names. Thus he absorbed Amun and Horus, and he was Atum, Harakhti, and Khepri. And his visible form, the sun-disk (Aten) became yet another manifestation of the god himself. The hymns to the sun-god of the twin brothers Suti and Hor, who lived in the reign of Amenhotep III, address the god in these various forms, and they accord a prominent place to the Aten, the most recently evolved personification of the god. In the first hymn the sun-god is addressed as Amun, Harakhti, Re, and Khepri; in the second hymn he is Aten, Khepri, and Horus.

The hymns are inscribed on a rectangular stela in door form, of gray granite and measuring 1.44 x 0.88 m. The central portion of the surface is carved to resemble a round-topped stela. In the lunette are the standing figures of Anubis and Osiris who are adored by the brothers Suti and Hor and their wives. The figures of the worshipping couples have been erased. Below the figures are twenty-one horizontal lines of text. The first hymn ends in the middle of line 8. The second runs from the middle of line 8 to near the end of line 14. The remaining lines consist of personal statements and prayers of the two brothers.

First Hymn

(1) Adoration of Amun when he rises as Harakhti by the overseer of the works of Amun, Suti,
(and) the overseer of the works of Amun, Hor.
They say:

Hail to you, Re, perfect each day,
Who rises at dawn without failing,
Khepri who wearies himself with toil!
Your rays are on the face, yet unknown,
Fine gold does not match your splendor;
Self-made you fashioned your body,
Creator uncreated.
Sole one, unique one, who traverses eternity,

[Remote one],¹ with millions under his care;
Your splendor is like heaven's splendor,
Your color brighter than its hues.
When you cross the sky all faces see you,
When you set you are hidden from their (5)
sight;

Daily you give yourself at dawn,
Safe is your sailing under your majesty.
In a brief day you race a course,
Hundred thousands, millions of miles;
A moment is each day to you,
It has passed when you go down.
You also complete the hours of night,
You order it without pause in your labor.

¹ What is written is hry w³wt, "who is above the ways," but perhaps hryw, "remote," was intended.

Through you do all eyes see,
They lack aim when your majesty sets.
When you stir to rise at dawn,
Your brightness opens the eyes of the herds;
When you set in the western mountain,
They sleep as in the state of death.

Second Hymn

Hail to you, Aten of daytime,
Creator of all, who makes them live!
Great falcon, brightly plumed,
Beetle who raised himself.
Self-creator, uncreated,
Eldest Horus within Nut,
Acclaimed (10) in his rising and setting.
Maker of the earth's yield,
Khnum and Amun of mankind,
Who seized the Two Lands from great to small.
Beneficent mother of gods and men,
Craftsman with a patient heart,
Toiling long to make them countless.
Valiant shepherd who drives his flock,
Their refuge, made to sustain them.
Runner, racer, courser,
Khepri of distinguished birth,
Who raises his beauty in the body of Nut,
Who lights the Two Lands with his disk.
The Two Lands' Oldest who made himself,
Who sees all that he made, he alone.
Who reaches the ends of the lands every day,
In the sight of those who tread on them.
Rising in heaven formed as Re,
He makes the seasons with the months,
Heat as he wishes, cold as he wishes.
He makes bodies slack, he gathers them up,
Every land rejoices at his rising,
Every day gives praise to him.

Prayers

The overseer of works, Suti; the overseer of works, (15) Hor. He says:

I was controller in your sanctuary,
Overseer of works in your very shrine,
Made for you by your beloved son,
The Lord of the Two Lands, Nebmare,³ given life.

My lord made me controller of your monuments,
Because he knew my vigilance.

I was a vigorous controller of your monuments,
One who did right (maat) as you wished.

For I knew you are content with right,
You advance him who does it on earth.

I did it and you advanced me,
You made me favored on earth in Ipet-sut,⁴
One who was in your following when you appeared.⁵

I was a true one who abhors falsehood,
Who does not trust the words of a liar.

But my brother, my likeness, his ways I trust,
He came from the womb with me the same day.

The overseer(s) of Amun's works in Southern Ipet,⁶ Suti, Hor.

When I was in charge on the westside,
He was in charge on the eastside.

We controlled great monuments in Ipet-sut,
At the front of Thebes, the city of Amun.

May you give me old age in your city,
My eye <beholding> your beauty;
A burial in the west, the place of heart's content,
As I join the favored ones who went in peace.
May you give me sweet breeze when I land,
And [garlands]⁷ on the day of the wag-feast.

¹ Or, "when he embraces them?" But a contrast with slackness is more plausible.

³ Amenhotep III. The two brothers were architects in the service of this king.

⁴ Karnak.

⁵ When the statue of Amun appeared in a festival procession.

⁶ Luxor.

⁷ The sšdw received on a feast day must be decorative ribbons, scarves, or garlands rather than wrappings.

REFERENCES

Text: Hiero. Texts, Part 8:22-25 and pls. xxi; Varille 1942; Urk. IV 1943-1947; Stewart 1957:3-5. Translations: Sainte Fare Garnot 1948; 1949; Helck 1961; Fecht 1967; ANET 367-368; Lichtheim AEL 2:86-89.

THE GREAT HYMN TO THE ATEN (1.28)

In the Tomb of Ay — West Wall, 13 Columns

Miriam Lichtheim

The texts in the tomb of the courtier Ay have yielded the most extensive statements of Aten worship. Here we have not only several short hymns and prayers but, above all, the long text which has come to be known as "The Great Hymn to the Aten." The east wall of the tomb is inscribed with three hymns and prayers to the Aten and to the king, and the west wall contains the great hymn. The long text columns begin at the top of the wall. Below the text are the kneeling relief figures of Ay and his wife.

"The Great Hymn to the Aten" ^a is an eloquent and beautiful statement of the doctrine of the one god. He alone has created the world and all it contains. He alone gives life to man and beast. He alone watches over his creations. He alone inhabits the sky. Heretofore the sun-god had appeared in three major forms: as Harakhti in the morning, as Khepri in midday, and as Atum in the evening. His daily journey across the sky had been done in the company of many gods. It had involved the ever-recurring combat against the primordial serpent Apopis. In traversing the night sky the god had been acclaimed by the multitudes of the dead who rest there; and each hour of the night had marked a specific stage in his journey. Thus the daily circuit of the sky was a drama with a large supporting cast. In the new doctrine of the Aten as sole god all these facets were eliminated. The Aten rises and sets in lonely majesty in an empty sky. Only the earth is peopled by his creatures, and only they adore his rising and setting.

(1) Adoration of Re-Harakhti-who-rejoices-in-lightland In-his-name-Shu-who-is-Aten, living forever; the great living Aten who is in jubilee, the lord of all that the Disk encircles, lord of sky, lord of earth, lord of Lower Egypt, who lives by Maat, the lord of the Two lands, Nefer-kheprure, Sole-one-of-Re; the Son of Re who lives by Maat, the Lord of Crowns, Akhenaten, great in his lifetime; (and) his beloved great Queen, the Lady of the Two Lands, Nefer-nefru-Aten Nefertiti, who lives in health and youth forever. The Vizier, the Fanbearer on the right of the King, ---- [Ay]; he says:¹

Splendid you rise in heaven's lightland,
O living Aten, creator of life!
When you have dawned in eastern lightland,
You fill every land with your beauty.
You are beauteous, great, radiant,
High over every land;
Your rays embrace the lands,
To the limit of all that you made,
Being Re, you reach their limits,²
You bend them <for> the son whom you love;
Though you are far, your rays are on earth,
Though one sees you, your strides are unseen.

When you set in western lightland,
Earth is in darkness as if in death;^b
One sleeps in chambers, heads covered,
One eye does not see another.
Were they robbed of their goods,
That are under their heads,
People would not remark it.
Every lion comes from its den,

^a Cf. Ps 104

^b Ps 104:20

^c Ps 104:23

^d Ps 104:12

^e Ps 104:25-26

All the serpents bite;³
Darkness hovers, earth is silent,
As their maker rests in lightland.

Earth brightens when you dawn in lightland,
When you shine as Aten of daytime;
As you dispel the dark,
As you cast your rays,
The Two Lands are in festivity.
Awake they stand on their feet,
You have roused them;
Bodies cleansed, (5) clothed,
Their arms adore your appearance.
The entire land sets out to work,^c
All beasts browse on their herbs;
Trees, herbs are sprouting,
Birds fly from their nests,
Their wings greeting your ka.^d
All flocks frisk on their feet,
All that fly up and alight,
They live when you dawn for them.
Ships fare north, fare south as well,
Roads lie open when you rise;
The fish in the river dart before you,
Your rays are the midst the sea.^e

Who makes seed grow in women,
Who creates people from sperm;
Who feeds the son in his mother's womb,
Who soothes him to still his tears.
Nurse in the womb,
Giver of breath,
To nourish all that he made.
When he comes from the womb to breathe,
On the day of this birth,
You open wide his mouth,

¹ Though the hymn was undoubtedly composed for recitation by the king, inscribed in the tomb of Ay, it was adapted to recitation by the courtier.

² The sentence consists of a wordplay on r^c, "Sun," and r^c, "end," "limit."

³ This is one of several passages that recall similar formulations in Ps 104 and have led to speculations about possible interconnections between the Hymn to the Aten and the psalm. The resemblances are, however, more likely to be the result of the generic similarity between Eg. hymns and biblical psalms. A specific literary interdependence is not probable. For many of the generic similarities, see Auffret 1981:133-316.

You supply his needs,
When the chick in the egg speaks in the shell,
You give him breath within to sustain him;
When you have made him complete,
To break out from the egg,
He comes out from the egg,
To announce his completion,
Walking on his legs he comes from it.

How many are your deeds,^f
Though hidden from sight,
O sole God beside whom there is none!^g
You made the earth as you wished, you alone,
^h All peoples, herds, and flocks;
All upon the earth that walk on legs,
All on high that fly on wings,^h
The lands of Khor and Kush,
The land of Egypt.
You set every man in his place,
You supply their needs;
Everyone has his food,
His lifetime is counted.
Their tongues differ in speech,
Their characters likewise;
Their skins are distinct,
For you distinguished the peoples.⁴

You made Hapy in the Duat,⁵
You bring him when you will,
To nourish the people,
For you made them for yourself.
Lord of all who toils for them,
Lord of all lands who shines for them,
Aten of daytime, great in glory!
All distant lands, you make them live,
You made a heavenly Hapy descend from them;
(10) He makes waves on the mountains like the sea,
To drench their fields and their towns.
How excellent are your ways, O Lord of eternity!
A Hapy from heaven for foreign peoples,
And all lands' creatures that walk on legs,
For Egypt the Hapy who comes from the Duat.⁶

f Ps 104:24

g Isa 43:10

h-h Ps 8:7-8

Your rays nurse all fields,
When you shine they live, they grow for you;
You made the seasons to foster all that you made,
Winter to cool them, heat that they taste you.
You made the far sky to shine therein,
To behold all that you made;
You alone, shining in your form of living
Aten,
Risen, radiant, distant, near.
You made millions of forms from yourself alone,
Towns, villages, fields, the river's course;
All eyes observe you upon them,
For you are the Aten of daytime on high.
... --- ...⁷

You are in my heart,
There is no other who knows you,
Only your son, Neferkheprure, Sole-one-of-Re,
Whom you have taught your ways and your might.
<Those on> earth come from your hand as you made them,
When you have dawned they live,
When you set they die;
You yourself are lifetime, one lives by you.
All eyes are on <your> beauty until you set,
All labor ceases when you rest in the west;
When you rise you stir [everyone] for the King,
Every leg is on the move since you founded the earth.
You rouse them for your son who came from your body,
The King who lives by Maat, the Lord of the Two Lands,
Neferkheprure, Sole-one-of-Re,
The Son of Re who lives by Maat, the Lord of crowns,
Akhenaten, great in his lifetime;
(and) the great Queen whom he loves, the Lady of the Two Lands,
Nefer-nefru-Aten Nefertiti, living forever.

⁴ The Hymn to the Aten expresses the cosmopolitan and humanist outlook of the New Kingdom at its purest and most sympathetic. All peoples are seen as the creatures of the sun-god, who has made them diverse in skin color, speech, and character. Their diversity is described objectively, without a claim of Eg. superiority. On the theme of the differentiation of languages see Sauneron 1960:31-41.

⁵ The netherworld.

⁶ Hapy, the inundating Nile, emerges from the netherworld to nourish Egypt, while foreign peoples are sustained by a "Nile from heaven" who descends as rain.

⁷ Several obscure sentences containing corruptions and a lacuna.

REFERENCES

Text: Davies 1903-08 6:29-31 and pls. xxvii and xli; Sandman 1938:93-96. Translation: ANET 369-371; Gardiner 1961:225-227; Simpson 1973:289-295; Lichtheim AEL 2:96-100; Studies: Auffret 1981:133-316.

4. PRAYERS

PRAYER TO RE-HARAKHTI (1.29)

Michael V. Fox

This is an individual supplication in a fairly stereotypic form, probably designed for use by different people in various situations. The worshipper asks for acceptance of his prayers without praying for anything in particular and confesses his sins and folly without reference to specific transgressions.

The worshipper seems to be a pilgrim to the temple at Heliopolis. The prayer is an expression of "personal piety," a form of religion prominent in the Ramesside period (see, e.g., Fecht 1965). It emphasizes the individual's humility and frailty and his dependence on god.

Some biblical psalms speak out of a similar context: a pilgrim expressing his confidence and joy when visiting the temple, where he imagines himself dwelling always in God's presence. Compare Pss 23:6; 26:8; 27:4; 84, esp. vv 3, 5, 11; 42:3; 43:3-4; 122:1. Other psalms resemble this prayer in confessing frailty and sinfulness, e.g. Pss 25:7; 51; 40:13.

Prayer to Pre^c-Harakhty¹

(1) Come to me, Pre^c-Harakhty, that you may perform (your) will.
You are the one who takes action, there being none who takes action apart from
you,
but (one can act) only if you are acting with him.²

(6) Come to me, Atum, every day!
You are the noble god.
My heart has gone forth,
travelling southward to Heliopolis.
[...]

(11) My heart rejoices, my bosom exults.

Hear my prayers —
my supplications by day,
(15) my hymns by night.
For my petitions are constant in my mouth,

a Ps 84:3, 5, 11; 42:3;
43:3-4

They are heard throughout the day.⁴

O sole one, unique!⁵
(20) O Pre^c-Harakhty,
the likes of whom does not exist here.
Protector of millions,
who deliverers hundreds of thousands,
the helper of the one who cries to him,
(25) the lord of Heliopolis.⁶

Visit not my many offenses upon me,
I am one ignorant of himself.
I am a mindless man,
who all day follows his mouth,
(30) like an ox after grass.⁷

If my evenings (?) [...] I am one who to whom repose comes.
I spend the day walking about in the (temple) court,^a
(35) I spend the night [...] ⁸

¹ Text: Pap. Anastasi II, 10, 1-11, 2; late New Kingdom (Gardiner 1937:18-19). Translations and bibliography: Caminos 1954:60ff.; ANET 379; Assmann no. 176; Barucq and Daumas 1980:145-46. The text appears in an anthology of model texts for scribal students. Pre^c-Harakhty is a Late Eg. name of the sun god in his daytime form; Re-Harakhti is the more common earlier name.

² Stanza I (invocation) plays on the word iri, "do," "take action," "perform," "create," etc. The theme is that God alone can act effectively of his own accord. Similar phraseology is elsewhere used in praising a god as creator, but the theme here seems to be God's effectiveness in general.

³ Stanza II (invocation) declares the worshipper's delight in God's presence.

⁴ In Stanza III (appeal), the worshipper calls upon god to hear his prayers.

⁵ "Sole One" or "unique" (w^c) is a common sobriquet of gods. It praises a particular god's uniqueness without denying the existence of other gods. See Hornung 1982:185-86, 230-37.

⁶ Stanza IV (praise) is a series of epithets praising the god as protector and deliverer.

⁷ In Stanza V (confession), the penitent declares his weakness and ignorance. He says that he follows his mouth—his ungoverned desires—as thoughtlessly as a grazing ox does his.

⁸ Stanza VI (confidence) is uncertain and incomplete. The penitent finds serenity in the "temple court" (uncertain, but the divine determinative shows that it is a location associated with the temple). There he spends his days and (possibly) his nights.

REFERENCES

Assmann 1975b; Barucq and Daumas 1980; Caminos 1954; Fecht 1965; Gardiner 1937; Hornung 1982.

5. HARPERS' SONGS

THE SONG FROM THE TOMB OF KING INTEF (1.30)

Miriam Lichtheim

The song is preserved in two New Kingdom copies. First, on pages vi, 2-vii, 3, of the Ramesside Papyrus Harris 500 (= P. British Museum 10060); and, second, carved on a wall of the tomb of Paatenemheb from Saqqara, now in Leiden, which dates from the reign of Amenhotep IV (Akhenaten). The latter copy, which is incomplete, is written above the heads of a group of four musicians led by a blind harpist. The song's introductory line states that it reproduces a song inscribed in the tomb of a King Intef — a name that was borne by a number of kings of the 11th and of the 17th Dynasties. Since the two New Kingdom copies reproduce a genuinely Middle Egyptian text, we need not doubt that an original text, carved in a royal tomb of the Middle Kingdom, existed.

The phrase "make holiday" (ir hrw nfr), which the singer of the Intef Song addresses to the audience, was a term employed in situations of daily life as well as in reference to death and the afterlife. Furthermore, it is known that funerary banquets were held in the cemeteries on feast days. It is thus quite possible that Harpers' Songs were sung at such funerary banquets, and that they employed the "make holiday" theme in its multiple meanings. In the context of the funerary banquet the various meanings would blend into one.

The theme of sorrow over death properly belonged to the Laments on Death which were an integral part of the burial ceremony. What is noteworthy is that these laments juxtapose sorrow and joy in a manner similar to the Intef Song and subsequent Harpers' Songs, and move rapidly back and forth between grief and joy:

I have wept, I have mourned!
O all people, remember getting drunk on wine,
With wreaths and perfume on your heads!¹

The dead too had joy: "How good is this which happens to him!"²

Given the multiple meanings of the "make holiday" theme, it follows that it was not the use of this theme which made the Intef Song so startling, but rather its skepticism concerning the reality of the afterlife and the effectiveness of tomb-building. It was this skepticism which injected a strident note of discord into a class of songs that had been designed to praise and reassure. The incongruity is of the same order as that which one observes in the Dispute between a Man and His Ba. For there the ba, though itself the guarantor of immortality, is given the role of denigrating death and immortality, denying the worth of tombs, and counseling enjoyment of life. The incongruity was not lost on the Egyptians, as the subsequent development of Harpers' Songs reveals. The Harpers' Songs of the New Kingdom show two responses to the Intef Song: an outright rejection of its "impious" thoughts, and a toning down of its skepticism so as to remove the sting. Both solutions are found side by side in two Harpers' Songs carved on the walls of the New Kingdom tomb of a priest Neferhotep.³

The objection to the skeptic-hedonistic message is phrased thus:

I have heard those songs that are in the tombs of old,
And what they relate in extolling life on earth,
And in belittling the land of the dead.
Why is this done to the land of eternity,
The just and fair that holds no terror?

There follows the praise of eternal life.

The toning down of the skeptical approach took various forms, and resulted in Harpers' Songs that were eclectic and lacked unity. But though toned down, the note of skepticism could be heard, sometimes faintly, sometimes clearly, in Harpers' Songs and in other compositions, as a haunting suspicion that the struggle to win immortality was at best beset by uncertainties and at worst, futile.

(vi 2) Song which is in the tomb of King Intef, the justified, in front of the singer with the harp.

He is happy, this good prince!
"Death is a kindly fate".⁴

¹ See Lüddeckens 1943:149-150; the passage is from a Saqqara tomb in Leiden (Holwerda-Boeser 1905-1932 4:pl. 15).

² Lüddeckens 1943:100: wꜥꜥꜥ wy nn hpr n.f., from Theban tomb number 49.

³ Theban tomb number 50; see Lichtheim 1945:178ff. and below, pp. 49-50.

⁴ Šꜥw nfr ḥꜥꜥ has been variously interpreted. In Lichtheim 1945:192, I emended ḥꜥꜥ to hpr in accordance with the parallel introductory phrase in the first Harper's Song of the Tomb of Neferhotep. Ferdm (1946:259) proposed a different division of the sentences: wꜥꜥꜥ pw sr pn/ nfr šꜥw/ nfr ḥꜥꜥ, and rendered, "A happy one is this prince; good is the destiny; good is the injury." Wilson (ANET 467) retained the

A generation passes, ^a	a Eccl 1:4	Hence rejoice in your heart! ^c
Another stays,	b Eccl 1:11	Forgetfulness profits you, ⁶
Since the time of the ancestors.		Follow your heart as long as you live!
The gods who were before rest in their tombs,	c Eccl 11:9-10	(vi 10) Put myrrh on your head,
Blessed (vi 5) nobles too are buried in their tombs.	d Eccl 3:22	Dress in fine linen,
(Yet) those who built tombs,		Anoint yourself with oils fit for a god. ⁷
Their places are gone,		Heap up your joys,
What has become of them?		Let your heart not sink!
I have heard the words of Imhotep and Harde def, ⁵		Follow your heart and your happiness, ^d
Whose sayings are recited whole.		Do your things on earth as your heart commands!
What of their places?		When there comes to you that day of mourning,
Their walls have crumbled,		The Weary-hearted ⁸ hears not their mourning,
Their places are gone,		Wailing saves no man from the pit!
As though they had never been! ^b		Refrain (vii 2): Make holiday,
None comes from there,		Do not weary of it!
To tell of their state,		Lo, none is allowed to take his goods with him,
To tell of their needs,		Lo, none who departs comes back again!
To calm our hearts,
Until we go where they have gone!

earlier division and translated: "Prosperous is he, this good prince/ Even though good fortune may suffer harm." In addition, some have wanted to read wḏ rather than wḏḏ. But wḏḏ is strongly supported by the parallel phrases in the Totenklagen. The sentence wḏḏ wy nn ḥpr n.f from Theban tomb number 49 recurs in Theban tomb number 106 in the form of a quotation (See Lüddeckens 1943:100-101), thereby showing that it was the proper thing to say at a funeral.

I now attempt yet another rendering, in which ḥḏy is taken to be a noun denoting destruction, i.e., death, and ḥw nfr, though undoubtedly a euphemism for death, is retained in its literal meaning, the whole being a nominal sentence without pw.

The new interpretation of the whole song which Lorton (1968:45ff) tried is entirely mistaken.

⁵ The two famous sages of the Old Kingdom, who were worshiped as gods. An Instruction ascribed to Imhotep, the vizier of King Djoser, has not come to light.

⁶ Contrary to my earlier rendering I now divide wḏḏ.k ib.k rs/ mhḏ ib ḥr sḏḥ n.k; for I have become convinced that any overlong and unbalanced sentence in a poetic text is the result of wrong division and mistranslation.

⁷ Lit., "with the genuine marvels that belong to a god."

⁸ The god Osiris.

REFERENCES

Text: Budge 1910:23-24, pls. xlv-xlvi; Müller 1899:29-30, pls. xii-xvi; Holwerda-Boeser 1905-1932 4:pl. 6 (the tomb copy). Translation: Erman 1927:133-134; Breasted 1933:163-164; Lichtheim 1945:192-193; AEL 1:194-197; ANET 467-468; Daumas 1965:404.

THE SONG FROM THE TOMB OF NEFERHOTEP (1.31)

(Theban Tomb No. 50)

Miriam Lichtheim

When they first appeared in the Middle Kingdom, the texts known as Harper's Songs were designed to praise death and the life after death. But in the famous Harper's Song from the Tomb of King Intef, preserved in a papyrus copy, the praises of the afterlife were replaced by anxious doubts about its reality, and by the advice to make merry while alive and to shun the thought of death. Such a skeptic-hedonistic message may have originated in songs sung at secular feasts; but when transmitted as a funerary text inscribed in a tomb and addressed to the tomb-owner, the message became incongruous and discordant. The incongruity did not pass unnoticed. In the tomb of the priest Neferhotep there are three Harper's Songs, each expressing a particular response. One song continued the skeptic-hedonistic theme but blended it with elements of traditional piety in an attempt to tone down and harmonize the contrary viewpoints. The second song is an outright rejection of skepticism and hedonism, coupled with a praise of the land of the dead. The third is a description of life after death in traditional ritualistic terms. Thus, the three songs in one and the same tomb reflect the Egyptian preoccupation with the nature of death and the varying and conflicting answers and attitudes which continued side by side.

The second and third songs, and the figures of the harpers who recite them, form part of a banquet scene on the left rear wall of the hall. The first song occurs in the context of an offering-table scene, in the passage leading from the hall to the inner shrine. The second song, the one that deliberately rejects the skeptic message, is translated below.

Says the singer-with-harp of the divine father of Amun, Neferhotep,¹ justified:

All ye excellent nobles and gods of the grave-yard,
Hearken to the praise-giving for the divine father,
The worship of the honored noble's excellent ba,
Now that he is a god everliving, exalted in the West;
May they² become a remembrance for posterity,
For everyone who comes to pass by.
I have heard those songs that are in the tombs of old,
What they tell in extolling life on earth,

a Job 4:12-21; 7:7-9;
10:20-21
Ps 62:9

In belittling the land of the dead.³
Why is this done to the land of eternity,
The right and just that has no terrors?
Strife is abhorrent to it,
No one girds himself against his fellow;
This land that has no opponent,
All our kinsmen rest in it
Since the time of the first beginning.
Those to be born to millions of millions,
All of them will come to it;
No one may linger in the land of Egypt,
There is none who does not arrive in it.⁴
As to the time of deeds on earth,^a
It is the occurrence of a dream;⁵
One says: "Welcome safe and sound,"
To him who reaches the West.

¹ The name and priestly title of the tomb-owner. The harpist remains unnamed.

² The praises.

³ In these lines the singer explicitly refers to harper's songs that express skepticism (see the previous song).

⁴ The thought expressed in this quatrain occurs in almost identical terms in hymns to Osiris, where it is the god, rather than the land of the dead, to whom all must come; see Louvre Stela C 218 (Pierret 1874-1878 2:134-138) and BM Stela 164 (Hiero. Texts, 9:25-26 and pls. xxi-xxia).

⁵ Note the appearance of the thought that life is a dream.

REFERENCES

Text: Pierret 1874-1878 2:134-138; Gardiner 1913:165-170; Erman 1927:253-254; Hiero. Texts, 9:25-26, pls. xxi-xxia. Translation: Lichtheim 1945:178-212 and pls. i-vii; AEL 2:115-116; ANET 33-34.

6. DIVINATION, INCANTATION, RITUAL

EXECRATION TEXTS (1.32)

Robert K. Ritner

From the Old Kingdom through the Roman era, priests performed official ritual cursings of the potential enemies of Egypt. The ceremonies included the breaking of red pots¹ and figurines inscribed with formal "Execration Texts" listing Nubians, Asiatics, Libyans, living and deceased Egyptians, as well as generally threatening forces. The texts themselves contain no explicit curses, but instead serve to identify the fate of the enemies with that of the destroyed pot or image. The texts were seemingly compiled by the state chancellor, since they were updated to reflect changes in rulers and territories. This translation follows the Middle Kingdom Berlin bowls (mid-12th Dynasty), supplemented by slightly earlier parallel texts from an intact deposit at the Nubian fortress of Mirgissa.

A. Nubia

The ruler of Kush, Auau, born of [...], and all the stricken ones² who are with him.

a Jer 19:1-11;
Amos 1:2-4;
Num 22-24

The ruler of Saï, Seteqtenkekh, and all the stricken ones who are with him.
The ruler of Webasepet, Bakuayt, called

¹ Cp. the biblical "Oracles against the Nations" where the places named become the target of magic or divine action (e.g., Isa 13-27; Jer 45-51; Ezek 25-29; Amos 1-2; Zeph 2; Zech 9 and scripture note a above). See Ritner 1993:140, n. 623.

² For the corrected reading and prospective nuance of "captive," see Ritner 1993:141, n. 628.

Tchay, born of Ihaas, born to Wenkat, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Webasepet, Iauny, born of Gem-hu(?) [...], born to Ti[...], and all the stricken ones who are with him. The Medjay, Wah-ib, born of [...]tphua, born to Wenkat, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Ausheq, and all the stricken ones who are with him. Every Nubian of Kush, of Muger, of Saï, of Irs[...], of Nasem, of Rida, of Irsukhet, of Iamnas, of Ia[...], [of ...]jamu, of Tuksa, of Bahass, of Ma[...]ia, of Ibis, of Gas(?), of Ausheq, of Webasepet, of laat-..., of laat, of Tcheksis, of Megseruia, of Ruhpuba-wit(?), Their strong men, their messengers, their confederates, their allies, who will rebel, who will plot, who will fight, who will say³ that they will fight, who will say that they will rebel, in this entire land.	b Num 13:22-33; Deut 2:10; Josh 11:21-22; 14:6-15; 15:13-19 c Num 24:17 d Josh 13:3; Judg 1:18 e Josh 15:8	The ruler of Qhrmw, 'Ammu-(y)atar,¹³ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Qhrmw, Hm̄inw, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Qhrmw, 'Ammu-yakûn,¹⁴ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Arhâbu,¹⁵ prwhq, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Arhâbu, Iym^cn^cwmw, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Isinw, Iykwdd²'s son mmwt²i, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Isinw, wdwšnw, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Isinw, M²mw, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Inhi², Malki-ilum,¹⁶ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Inhi², qhm, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Inhi², Kamarum,¹⁷ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Inhi², Yap^cânu,¹⁸ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of qhi, Iyq²dmw, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of qhi, šmšw²ir²im, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of 'Irqatum,¹⁹ Pwmqhti, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Ashkelon,²⁰ H²ykm,²¹ and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Ashkelon, Hkt̄nw (?), and all the stricken ones who are with him. [The ruler of ..., and all the stricken ones who are] with him. The ruler of Muti-ilu,²² Mnt̄m, and all the stricken ones who are with him. The ruler of Jerusalem,²³ 'Yaqr-'Ammu,²⁴
--	--	---

B. Asia

The ruler of Iy-anq,⁴ Er̄um,⁵ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of Iy-anq, Abi-yamimu,⁶ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of Iy-anq, Akirum,⁷ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of Shutu,⁸ Ayyabum,⁹ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of Shutu, Kushar,¹⁰ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of Shutu, Zabulanu,¹¹ and all the stricken ones who are with him.

The ruler of ymw^crrw, Hâlu-barîh,¹² and all the stricken ones who are with him.

³ Or "think."⁴ Wilson (ANET 329) notes the suggested relation of ym^cnq to 'Anaqim "giants" in Canaan; see also Lipiński 1974:41-48.⁵ So suggested by Wilson (ANET 328) for cm.⁶ So suggested by Wilson (ANET 328) for ibym^cm^cw.⁷ So suggested by Wilson (ANET 328) for k²m.⁸ Wilson (ANET 329) suggests the identification of šmw with Moab on the basis of Num 24:17, "sons of Sheth."⁹ Wilson (ANET 329) identifies ym^cbm with cuneiform Ayyab, "Job."¹⁰ Suggested by Wilson (ANET 329) for Kwšr.¹¹ Wilson (ANET 329) identifies Tb²nw with cuneiform for "Zebulon."¹² Lit., H²wb²h, see: Albright 1934:7.¹³ Lit., mmwt², see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁴ Lit., mmwikn, see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁵ Lit., prhbw, see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁶ Lit., M²(?)k²m, see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁷ Lit., Km²m, see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁸ Lit., Iyp^cnw, see: Albright 1934:7.¹⁹ Lit., cm²qm, see: Albright 1934:7.²⁰ Wilson (ANET 329) identifies Isq²nw with cuneiform "Ashqaluna."²¹ Wilson (ANET 329) suggests a vocalization Khalu-kim.²² So Albright 1934:7, for Mwt².²³ Hieroglyphic wš²mm.²⁴ Hieroglyphic Iyq²cmw.

and all the stricken ones who are with him.
 The ruler of Jerusalem, Seti-^cAnu,²⁵ and all the stricken ones who are with him.
 The ruler of ^chmt, [...]^{ks}^m, and all the stricken ones who are with him.
 The ruler of Alhânu,²⁶ ^{lym}^cⁱ^w, and all the stricken ones who are with him.
 All rulers of ^{lysipi}, and all the stricken ones who are with them.
 All the Asiatics of Byblos,^f of Ullaza, of Iy-anq, of Shutu, of ^{lymw}^c^{rrw}, of ^{Qhrmw}, of ^{Arhâbu}, of Yarmût,²⁷ of ^{lnhi}², of ^{qhi}, of ^cIrqatum, of Yarmût (sic.), of ^{Isinw}, of Ashkelon, of ^{Dmit}ⁱ^w, of Muti-ilu, of Jerusalem, of Alhânu, of ^{lysipi},
 Their strong men, their messengers, their confederates, their allies, the tribesmen in Asia, who will rebel, who will plot, who will fight, who will say that they will fight, who will say that they will rebel, in this entire land.

C. Libya

The chiefs in Libya, all Libyans and their rulers.

Their strong men, their messengers, their confederates, their allies, who will rebel, who will plot, who will fight, who will say that they will fight, who will say that they will rebel, in this entire land.

D. Egyptians

All people (i.e., "Egyptians"), all patricians,

f Josh 13:5

all commoners, all men, all eunuchs, all women, all nobles, who will rebel, who will plot, who will fight, who will say that they will fight, who will say that they will rebel, every rebel who will say that he will rebel, in this entire land.

The deceased²⁸ Ameni, tutor of Sit-Bastet, who raised Sit-Hathor, daughter of Neferu.

The deceased Senwosret-seneb, the younger, called "Little One," tutor of Sit-Ipi, daughter of Sit-Hathor, who raised Kamu, daughter of Sit-Hathor.

The deceased Sehetep-ib, tutor of Sit-Hathor, who raised Iwt-rehu-ankh.

The deceased Sobekhotep, born of Renes-ankh.

The deceased Seni-ankh, born of Iwrw, born to Hetepi.

The deceased Senwosret, called Witu, born to Ameny.

The deceased Amenemhat, born of Hepiu, born to Mutchau.

The deceased Ameny, born of Hetep, born to Senwosret.

E. Evil Things

Every evil word, every evil speech, every evil slander,²⁹ every evil intent, every evil plot, every evil fight, every evil disturbance, every evil plan, every evil thing, every evil dream in every evil sleep.

²⁵ Hieroglyphic ^{Sf}^c^{mw}.

²⁶ So Albright 1934:7 for ^{ly}^h^{mw}.

²⁷ So Albright 1934:7 for ^{ly}²^{mw}.

²⁸ For the corrected reading, see Ritner 1993:141, n. 627.

²⁹ Or "incantation."

REFERENCES

Texts: Sethe 1926; Koenig 1990. Translations and studies: ANET 328-329; Ritner 1993:136-190.

DREAM ORACLES (1.33) (P. Chester Beatty III, P. BM 10683)

Robert K. Ritner

The Chester Beatty "Dream Book" is currently the oldest surviving manual of dream interpretation. Perhaps deriving from a 12th Dyn. original, the present manuscript dates from the 19th Dynasty and was the property of senior scribes at the royal workmen's village of Deir el-Medineh.¹ The book comprises eleven columns in tabular form, each preceded by the vertically-written heading: "If a man see himself in a dream." The horizontal lines of the columns briefly detail the dream image, whether or not it is favorable, and the prognostication for the dreamer. The text is arranged in discrete units, with good dreams listed before bad ones (highlighted by red ink), and a concluding incantation to avert any evil results. The entire pattern was repeated twice, once for "followers" of Horus and again for those associated with Seth.² The interpretations are often based on religious symbolism or paronomasia ("puns"), with many sexual situations and ironic reversals.³

For the Egyptians, as for many cultures, dreams provided a point of contact between the divine and human worlds, so that dreams might be sought for inspiration or healing (incubation), or for communication with the dead; see Vernus 1986. Conversely, enemies might send evil dreams, and the execration texts (above, pp. 50-52) specifically combat "every evil dream in every evil sleep." For other protections against night terrors, see Ritner 1990.

If a man see himself in a dream: ^a

(2/7) Shooting at a target. [Good.] It means something good will happen to him.

(2/9) [Mentioning] his wife to a husband. Good. It means the retreat of evils attached to him.

(2/11) His penis having become large. Good. It means an increase of his property.

(2/12) [Taking(?)] a bow in his hand. Good. The giving to him of his (most) important office.

(2/13) Dying adversely. Good. It means living after the death of his father.

(2/14) Seeing the god who is above.⁴ Good. It means much food.

(2/20) His mouth filled with dirt. Good. Living off⁵ of his townsmen.

(2/21) Eating the flesh of a donkey. Good. It means his promotion.⁶

(2/22) Eating the flesh of a crocodile. Good. [It means] living off⁷ the property of an official.

(2/24) Looking through a window. Good. The hearing of his cry by his god.

(2/25) Being given papyrus reeds. Good. It means hearing his cry.

(2/26) Seeing himself atop a house. Good. [It means] finding something.

(3/2) [Seeing] himself in mourning. Good. An increase of his property.

(3/3) His hair having become long.⁸ Good. It means something at which his face will light up (i.e., "be be joyful").

(3/4) Being given white bread. Good. It means something [at which his face] will light up.⁹

(3/5) Drinking wine. Good. It means living in Truth.

(3/7) Copulating with his mother ... Good. [It means] cleaving to him by his relatives.

^a Gen 37:5-10; 40:5-41, 36; 1 Sam 28:6; Dan 2:1-45; Jer 29:8-9

(3/8) Copulating with his sister. Good. It means the transferral to him of property.

(3/17) Being given a head. Good. The opening of his mouth to speak.

(4/1) Killing a snake. Good. Killing a quarrel.¹⁰

(4/2) Seeing his face as a panther. Good. Acting as chief.

(4/3) Seeing a large cat. Good. It means a large harvest will occur for him.¹¹

(4/4) Drinking wine. Good. The opening of his mouth to speak.¹²

(4/5) Binding malefic people at night. Good. Taking away the speech of his enemies.

(4/6) Crossing in a ferry-boat. Good. It means coming forth from all quarrels.¹³

(4/7) Seated on a sycamore. Good. Driving off all his ills.

(4/12) Destroying his clothes. Good. Releasing him from all ills.

(4/13) Seeing himself dead. Good. A long life before him.

(4/14) Binding his own two legs. Good. It means dwelling among his townsmen.

(4/15) Falling from a wall. Good. It means coming forth from all quarrels.¹⁴

(5/5) [Drinking] his own urine. Good. It means eating¹⁵ the property of his son.

(5/19) Submerging in the Nile. Good. It means purification from all evil.¹⁶

(6/1) Burying an old man. Good. It means prosperity.

(6/24) Seeing Asiatics. Good. The love of his father when he dies comes into his presence.

(7/4) Drinking warm beer. BAD. It means suppurating illness infects him.

(7/6) Chewing cucumber. BAD. It means quarrel-

¹ For the date, see Gardiner 1935:8-9. For the owners of the papyrus, see Pestman 1982.

² Corresponding to the two personality types recognized in Eg. wisdom literature: the ideal, restrained man (of Horus) and the intemperate man (of Seth).

³ Since words were felt sacred, and not the chance products of linguistic history, puns were believed to express inherent links between individual words and concepts. For ironic reversals, note the many favorable dreams entailing death or mourning — suggesting an inheritance for the dreamer.

⁴ Perhaps a reference to the moon god, see van Dijk 1986:37.

⁵ Lit., "eating."

⁶ A pun on ꜥ "donkey" and ꜥꜥ "make great/promote."

⁷ Cf. 2/20. The rapacious crocodile is here a symbol of the bureaucratic official.

⁸ Probably a symbol of mourning.

⁹ A pun on ḥꜥ "white" and ḥꜥꜥ "light up/be bright."

¹⁰ Lit., "words."

¹¹ A pun on mꜥiw ꜥ "large cat" and šmw ꜥ "large harvest."

¹² Cf. 3/5 and 3/15.

¹³ Lit., "words."

¹⁴ Lit., "words."

¹⁵ Or figuratively "living off."

¹⁶ Probably a reference to divinization by drowning in the Nile.

ing¹⁷ with him occurs when he is met.
 (7/8) Eating a filleted catfish. BAD. His seizure by a crocodile.
 (7/11) Seeing his face in a mirror. BAD. It means another wife.
 (7/12) God dispelling his tears. BAD. It means fighting.
 (7/13) Seeing himself enchanting¹⁸ his side. BAD. Exacting property from him.
 (7/17) Copulating with a woman. BAD. It means mourning.
 (7/18) Bitten by a dog. BAD. His being touched by magic.¹⁹
 (7/19) Bitten by a snake. BAD. It means the occurrence of a quarrel against him.²⁰
 (7/20) Measuring barley. BAD. It means the occurrence of a quarrel against him.
 (7/21) Writing upon a papyrus roll. BAD. The reckoning of his transgressions by his god.
 (7/22) Moving his house. BAD. [It means] his illness.
 (7/23) Enchanted by another with his spell.²¹ BAD. It means mourning.
 (7/24) Acting as helmsman in a boat. BAD. Regarding any judgment of him, he will not be victorious.
 (7/25) His bed catching fire. BAD. It means the driving off of his wife.
 (7/27) Being pricked by a thorn. BAD. It means telling lies.
 (7/28) Seeing the trapping of birds. BAD. It means the seizure of his property.²²
 (8/1) Seeing his penis hard. BAD. Victory to his enemies.²³
 (8/5) Looking into a deep well. BAD. Putting him in prison.
 (8/6) He catching on fire. BAD. His being slaughtered.
 (8/12) His teeth falling out.²⁴ BAD. It means the death of a man among his dependants.
 (8/13) Seeing a dwarf. BAD. Taking away half of his life.
 (8/25) Carrying off temple goods. BAD. Seizure of his property before him.

(9/3) An Asiatic cloak upon him. BAD. His removal from his office.
 (9/9) Seeing a woman's vulva. BAD. The ultimate in misery against him.
 (9/10) Uncovering his own rear. BAD. He will be orphaned in the end.²⁵
 (9/14) Placing his face to the ground. BAD. The seeking of something from him by the dead.
 (9/15) Seeing a blazing fire. BAD. It means the seizure of his son or his brother.
 (9/16) Copulating with a sow. BAD. Being deprived of his property.²⁶
 (9/22) Copulating with his wife in the daylight. BAD. The seeing of his transgressions by his god.
 (9/27) Guarding monkeys. BAD. A reversal is before him.
 (9/28) Bringing mice from the field. BAD. A bad heart.
 (10/9) Breaking a pot with his feet. BAD. It means fighting.²⁷
 (10/10-10/19) WORDS SAID BY A MAN WHEN HE AWAKENS IN HIS PLACE.

"Come to me, come to me, my mother Isis! Behold, I am seeing what is far from me in my city."

"Behold me, my son Horus, as one come forth bearing away what you have seen, so that your deafness be ended as your dream recedes, and fire go forth against him who frightens you. Behold, I have come so that I might see you, that I might drive off your ills, and that I might eradicate all terror."²⁸

"Hail, good dream seen (by) night and by day. Drive off every evil terror that Seth, son of Nut, has made. As Re is victorious against his enemies, so I am victorious against my enemies."

THIS SPELL IS SAID by a man when he awakes in his place. Pesen-loaves are placed in (his) presence with some fresh herbs moistened with beer and myrrh. The man's face is to be wiped with them and all evil dreams that he has seen are driven off.

¹⁷ Lit., "words."

¹⁸ Gardner 1935:16, followed by Wilson (ANET 495), assume a garbled writing and translate "with a pain in his side."

¹⁹ For the fear of hostile magic, see Ritner 1993:20-22.

²⁰ Cf. 4/1.

²¹ For the defensive need to preserve the secrecy of spells, see Ritner 1993:202-204.

²² A pun on hm "trapping" and nhm "seizure."

²³ A pun on nht "firm/strong" and nhtw "victory."

²⁴ Lit., "down from him."

²⁵ A pun on ph.wy "rear" and ph.w "end." Likely a reference to the orphaned Horus; cf. "The Tale of Horus and Seth."

²⁶ For the unlucky nature of the pig, see text 1.19 above.

²⁷ Cf. the execration ritual of breaking pots, noted above, p. 50.

²⁸ Lit., "redness," see Ritner 1993:170, n. 787.

REFERENCES

DAILY RITUAL OF THE TEMPLE OF AMUN-RE AT KARNAK (1.34)

P. Berlin 3055 - A Selection

Robert K. Ritner

Dating from the 22nd Dynasty, this Theban ritual papyrus is one of the best sources for the standardized morning liturgy used for divine and royal cults throughout Egypt from the New Kingdom until Roman times. The Seti temple at Abydos depicts thirty-six chapters or "spells," with nineteen represented at the Ptolemaic temple of Edfu and six at the contemporary temple of Dendera. In contrast, this Berlin papyrus adapted for Amon (together with P. Berlin 3014 + 3053 designed for his consort Mut), contains sixty-six recitations. No single source provides the complete ritual, but the constituent elements are easily reconstructed. The royal representative enters the chapel, censes and opens the naos to reveal the cult image. Thereafter follow spells of prostration, praise and offerings, after which the cult statue is removed, salved, clothed, adorned, and provided with unguent and eye-paint. In the concluding rites, fresh sand is strewn on the chapel floor, and the god is purified by water and natron and replaced in the naos. On exiting, the priest sweeps away his footprints, banishing impurities and demonic forces.

BEGINNING OF THE SPELLS¹ of the divine ritual enacted in the temple of Amon-Re, king of the gods, in the course of every day by the chief wab-priest² who is in his daily service.

SPELL FOR striking the fire.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "Come, come in peace, Eye of Horus, luminous, sound, rejuvenated in peace! May it shine like Re in the two horizons, since the power of Seth has hidden himself before the Eye of Horus, who took it and brought it to put in its place for Horus. Concerning his Eye, Horus is triumphant, while the Eye of Horus repels the enemies of Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, in all their places. May the King give an offering! I am pure."

SPELL FOR taking the censer.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "Hail to you, [censer of the gods] who are in the following of Thoth; my arms are upon you as (those of) Horus, my hands upon you like (those of) Thoth, my fingers on you like (those of) Anubis, foremost of the divine booth.³ I am the living servant of Re. I am a wab-priest, since I am pure (wab). The purity of the gods is my purity. May the King give an offering! I am pure."

[SPELL FOR] PLACING the incense-bowl on the censer arm.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "Hail to you, incense-bowl of [...] the field in Mendes, the clay in Abydos. I am purified by the Eye of Horus so that I might perform the rites with you, they being pure for Amon-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, and his Ennead. May the King give an offering! I am pure."

SPELL FOR putting incense on the flame.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "To the ba-soul of the East, to Horus of the East, to Kamutef⁴ within the solar disk, to the Terrible One who shines with his two Sound Eyes, to Re-harakhti,⁵ the great god, the winged power, foremost of the two southern conclaves of heaven."

SPELL FOR advancing [to] the sacred place.⁶

WORDS TO BE SAID: "O ba-souls of Heliopolis, as you are sound, so I am sound, and vice-versa. Your ka-spirits are sound precisely because my ka-spirit is sound before all the ka-spirits of the living. As all live, so I live. The two jugs of Atum are the protection of my body. For me Sakhmet the great, beloved of Ptah, placed life, stability and dominion around all my flesh by an oath of Thoth. I am Horus the chief, beautiful of respect, lord of terror, great of respect, high of plumage, great in Abydos. May the King give an offering! I am pure."

ANOTHER SPELL.

"Awake happily in peace, Karnak, mistress of the temples of the gods and goddesses who are in her! O gods and goddesses who are in Karnak, gods and goddesses who are in Thebes, gods and goddesses who are in Heliopolis, gods and goddesses who are in Memphis, gods and goddesses who are in heaven, gods and goddesses who are in the earth, gods and goddesses who are in the South, North, West and East, the kings of Upper and Lower Egypt, children of kings, who took the White Crown, who made monuments for ¹ The translation "spell" has been adopted to conform with the rendering of the same Eg. term in so-called "magical" texts. One could as easily adopt "recitation" or "utterance" for all contexts. There is no distinction in Eg. terminology — or theology — between official cultic "recitations" and private magical "spells"; see Ritner 1993:41-42.

² Lit., "pure priest."

³ The embalming booth.

⁴ "Bull of His Mother," an epithet of Min-Amun.

⁵ A fusion of Re and "Horus of the Two Horizons."

⁶ The holy of holies or naos in which the divine image resides.

Amun in Karnak, may you awaken, may you be in peace. May you awaken happily in peace."

SPELL FOR breaking the cord.⁷

WORDS TO BE SAID: "The cord is broken, the seal is loosened. Bringing to you the Eye of Horus, I have come. You have your Eye, O Horus."

SPELL FOR breaking the clay seal.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "The clay seal is broken, the waters are breached, the vessels⁸ of Osiris are drained. I have come not to drive the god away from his throne. It is to put the god upon his throne that I have come. May you be established upon your great throne, O Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands. I am the one whom the gods initiated.⁹ May the King give an offering! I am pure."

SPELL FOR unfastening the naos.¹⁰

WORDS TO BE SAID: "The finger of Seth is withdrawn from the Eye of Horus so that it be well. The finger of Seth is released from the Eye of Horus so that it be well. The hide is loosened from the back of the god.¹¹ O Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, receive for yourself your two plumes and your White Crown as the Eye of Horus, the right (plume) being the right Eye, the left (plume) being the left Eye. You have your beauty, O Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands. Naked one, be clothed. Dressed one, be dressed, though I am but a prophet. It is the king who sent me to see the god."¹²

SPELL FOR revealing the god.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "The doors of heaven are opened. The doors of the earth are opened. Hail to Geb, as the gods have said, established on their thrones. The doors of heaven are opened so that the Ennead might shine. As Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, is exalted, so the great Ennead is exalted upon their thrones. You have your beauty, O Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands. Naked one, be clothed. Dressed one, be dressed."

SPELL FOR seeing the god.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "My face is protected from¹³ the god and vice-versa. O gods, make way for me so that I might pass. It is the king who has sent me to see the god."

SPELL FOR kissing the ground.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "I have kissed the ground; I have embraced Geb. For Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, have I performed the chants {by which}¹⁴ I am purified for him. You have your sweat, O gods. You have your perfumes, O goddesses. You have the perfumes of your bodies.¹⁵ My kiss is life for Pharaoh, praise for the Lord of the Two Lands."¹⁶

SPELL FOR prostrating.¹⁷

WORDS TO BE SAID: "Hail to you, Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands, enduring upon your great throne. I have prostrated (myself) through fear of you, fearful of your dignity. I have embraced Geb and Hathor so that she might cause that I be great. I shall not fall to the slaughter of this day."

SPELL FOR prostrating and for rising.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "Hail to you, Amun-Re, Lord of the Thrones of the Two Lands. I have not acted with your secretions;¹⁸ I have not removed your dignity.¹⁹ I have not conflated your appearance with that of another god.²⁰ I have prostrated myself through fear of you, so that I might perceive what you desire. You shall not fall to your enemies on this day. Your enemies whom you hate, may you overthrow them as your enemies of this day.²¹ There is no wretchedness for the one who adores his lord."

SPELL FOR kissing the ground with the face bowed.

WORDS TO BE SAID: "I have kissed the ground with my face bowed; I have caused Truth to ascend to you. There is no god who has done

⁷ The knotted and sealed cord securing the door of the naos.

⁸ As noted by Wilson, the breaking of the seal is symbolized by the opening of a clay dam. The term "vessels" designates the arteries and veins of the god, from which flow the waters of the Nile.

⁹ Moret translates: "who enters (to) the gods."

¹⁰ The parallel ritual for the goddess Mut reads "drawing back the bolt."

¹¹ Perhaps a reference to a shroud placed over the statue at night.

¹² In theory, only the king should be able to confront the statue of the god. Of necessity, this privilege was delegated to local high priests as royal representatives.

¹³ Moret translates "protection for the god."

¹⁴ Restored from the Abydos variant.

¹⁵ The "sweat" and "secretions" of the gods are perfume.

¹⁶ Moret translates: "I have smelled (these things) so that Pharaoh live and the Lord of the Two Lands be adored."

¹⁷ Lit., "placing (oneself) upon the belly."

¹⁸ All fluids are restored to the gods to avoid potential misuse as in "The Legend of Isis and the Name of Re" (text 1.22 above).

¹⁹ See above, n. 14.

²⁰ Lit., "I have not caused your color to resemble another god."

²¹ Probably the enemies included in the daily execration rite; see text 1.32 above.

what I have done. I have not lifted up my face. I have not inflicted impurities. I have not conflated your appearance with that of another god.”
... (col. 5, 3)

SPELL FOR adoring Amun.

WORDS TO BE SAID: “Into your presence
Pharaoh has come, O male one of the gods, primordial one of the Two Lands, He of the Sacred Arm,²² Amun-Re, Lord of the two plumes, great one with the crown of greatness on your head, king of the gods resident in Karnak, image of Amun,²³ enduring in all things in your name of ‘Amun, more powerful than all the gods.’ They will not turn their backs on you in their name of ‘Ennead.’”²⁴

²² The epithets describe the standard posture of the male, ithyphallic creator with upraised arm.

²³ Contra Assmann, who translates: “You are Amun.”

²⁴ A pun on psd “back” and psd.t “ennead.”

REFERENCES

Text: Königlichen Museen zu Berlin (1901: pls. I-XXXVII). Translations: Moret 1902; Roeder 1960:72-141; ANET 325-326; Assmann 1975:260-273; and Barta 1980: cols. 841-45.

This page intentionally left blank

B. ROYAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. INSTRUCTIONS

MERIKARE (1.35)

Miriam Lichtheim

The text is preserved in three fragmentary papyri which only partly complement one another. They are Papyrus Leningrad 1116A, dating from the second half of the 18th Dynasty; P. Moscow 4658, from the very end of the 18th Dynasty; and P. Carlsberg 6, from the end of the 18th Dynasty or later. Unfortunately, the most complete manuscript, P. Leningrad, is also the most corrupt. The numerous lacunae and the many scribal errors make this text one of the most difficult.

The work is cast in the form of an Instruction spoken by an old king to his son and successor. The fragmentary beginning has preserved the name of the son: Merikare. But that of the father is lost except for the still visible outline of the cartouche and traces of two vertical hieroglyphs forming the end of the king's name. This name is assumed to be that of one of the several kings of the 9th/10th Dynasties who bore the nomen Khety (Akhtoi). However, since the order of the kings of this dynasty has not yet been fully clarified, it has not been determined which of the several Khetys preceded Merikare. J. von Beckerath (1966:13-20) has proposed as the most suitable candidate the Khety whose prenomen was Nebkaure.

As an Instruction, it continues the genre Instruction which originated in the Old Kingdom. But a new element has been added: it is a royal instruction, and specifically, a royal testament. It is the legacy of a departing king which embodies a treatise on kingship.

The treatise on kingship in the form of a royal testament is a literary genre that was to flourish many centuries later in the Hellenistic world and subsequently in the Islamic East as well as in medieval Europe: the speculum regum. It is, of course, not possible to draw a connecting line from the ancient Egyptian type to its Hellenistic and medieval counterparts — far too little is preserved from all ancient literatures to make it possible to reconstruct their interconnections — but it is interesting to see the emergence of the genre. Not that the Instruction to Merikare was the first work of this type (an Instruction of an earlier king Khety is referred to in the text), but it is the earliest preserved, and probably also an early work of the genre, for it shows compositional weaknesses that suggest experimentation.

I believe the work to be pseudepigraphic in the sense of not having been composed by King Khety himself, but genuine in the sense of being a work composed in the reign of King Merikare, designed to announce the direction of his policy and containing valid, rather than fictitious, historical information.

Set beside such literary antecedents as the Maxims of Ptahhotep, the work shows intellectual and literary progress. Its morality has grown in depth and subtlety; and there is a parallel growth in the ability to formulate concepts, and to develop themes and topics at greater length. A fully sustained compositional coherence as found in comparable works of the 12th Dynasty has not been achieved. There are several instances in which the same topic reappears in different places, and in which a buildup to a climax is deflected. Yet an overall plan and progression can be recognized.

The first major portion, of which almost nothing is preserved, deals with rebellion and how to overcome it. The second major section gives advice on dealing wisely and justly with nobles and commoners and is climaxed by a view of the judgment in the hereafter. Next comes advice on raising troops and on performing the religious duties. Then follows the "historical section" in which the old king describes his accomplishments and advises on how to continue them. At this point there is the beginning of a paean on the glory of kingship which is interrupted by a reference to the tragic destruction of monuments in the holy region of Abydos, a matter that had previously been alluded to. This leads to a reflection on divine retribution and rises to the recognition that the deity prefers right doing to rich offerings. Then comes the true climax: a hymn to the creator god, the benefactor of mankind. The concluding section exhorts acceptance of the royal teachings.

The scribes of the New Kingdom divided the work into sections by means of rubrication. At an average such sections consist of twelve sentences and clauses. Where these rubrics were logical I have maintained them; but not all of the rubrics of the principal manuscript, P. Leningrad, are judicious, for the scribes often introduced rubrics mechanically without regard to content. The major topics encompass more than one rubricated section. The building blocks within each section are the small units of two, three, and four sentences, which are joined together by parallelism in its several forms, such as similarities, elaborations, and contrasts. And since all sentences and clauses are of approximately the same length, there results a clearly marked, regular, sentence rhythm.

All Instructions are composed in this rhythmic style marked by symmetrical sentences which I call the orational style. On occasion, when specific events are told, it turns into prose. At other moments it rises into poetry, as in the hymn to the creator-god which crowns the Instruction addressed to Merikare.

(25) The hothead¹ is an inciter of citizens,
He creates factions among the young;
If you find that citizens adhere to him,

Denounce him before the councillors,
Suppress [him], he is a rebel,
The talker is a troublemaker for the city.
Curb the multitude, suppress its heat,

(30) -----
May you be justified before the god,
That a man may say [even in] your [absence]
That you punish in accordance [with the crime].
Good nature is a man's heaven,
The cursing of the [furious] is painful.

If you are skilled in speech, you will win,
The tongue is [a king's] sword;
Speaking is stronger than all fighting,
The skillful is not overcome.

----- on the mat,
The wise is a [school]² to the nobles.
Those who know that he knows will not attack
him,

No [crime] occurs when he is near;
Justice comes to him distilled,
Shaped in the sayings of the ancestors.

(35) Copy your fathers, your ancestors,

See, their words endure in books,
Open, read them, copy their knowledge,
He who is taught becomes skilled.
Don't be evil, kindness is good,
Make your memorial last through love of you.
Increase the [people], befriend the town,
God will be praised for (your) donations,
One will -----

Praise your goodness,
Pray for your health ---.

Respect the nobles, sustain your people,
Strengthen your borders, your frontier patrols;
It is good to work for the future,

One respects the life of the foresighted,
While he who trusts fails.
Make people come [to you] (40) through your good nature,
A wretch is who desires the land [of his neighbor],
A fool is who covets what others possess.
Life on earth passes, it is not long,
Happy is he who is remembered,
A million men do not avail the Lord of the Two Lands.

Is there [a man] who lives forever?
He who comes with Osiris passes,
Just as he leaves who indulged himself.

Advance your officials, so that they act by your laws,

He who has wealth at home will not be partial,
He is a rich man who lacks nothing.

The poor man does not speak justly,
Not righteous is one who says, "I wish I had,"
He inclines to him who will pay him.

Great is the great man whose great men are great,

Strong is (45) the king who has councillors,
Wealthy is he who is rich in his nobles.

Speak truth in your house,
That the officials of the land may respect you;
Uprightness befits the lord,
The front of the house puts fear in the back.³

Do justice, then you endure on earth;
Calm the weeper, don't oppress the widow,
Don't expel a man from his father's property,
Don't reduce the nobles in their possessions.
Beware of punishing wrongfully,
Do not kill, it does not serve you.
Punish with beatings, with detention,
Thus will the land be well-ordered;
Except for the rebel whose plans are found out,
For god knows the treason plotters,
(50) God smites the rebels in blood.

He who is merciful --- lifetime;
Do not kill a man whose virtues you know,

¹ The hnn-ib, the person whose heart is inflamed.

² In place of Gardiner's restoration, "schoolhouse," Williams 1964:16, has proposed "storehouse."

³ The "back of the house" is the rear where women, children, and servants had their quarters.

With whom you once chanted the writings,
 Who was brought up ... --- before god,
 Who strode freely in the secret place.
 The ba comes to the place it knows,
 It does not miss its former path,
 No kind of magic holds it back,
 It comes to those who give it water.
 The Court that judges the wretch,⁴
 You know they are not lenient,
 On the day of judging the miserable,
 In the hour of doing their task.
 It is painful when the accuser has knowledge,
 Do not trust in length of years,
 (55) They view a lifetime in an hour!
 When a man remains over after death,
 His deeds are set beside him as treasure,
 And being yonder lasts forever.
 A fool is who does what they reprove!
 He who reaches them without having done wrong
 Will exist there like a god,
 Free-striding like the lords forever!
 Raise your youths and the residence will love
 you,
 Increase your subjects with 'recruits',⁵
 See, your city is full of new growth.
 Twenty years the youths indulge their wishes,
 Then 'recruits' go forth ...
 Veterans⁶ return to their children ...
⁷
 (60) I raised troops from them on my accession.
 Advance your officials, promote your [soldiers],
 Enrich the young men who follow you,
 Provide with goods, endow with fields,
 Reward them with herds.
 Do not prefer the well born to the commoner,
 Choose a man on account of his skills,
 Then all crafts are done --- ...
 Guard your borders, secure your forts,
 Troops are useful to their lord.
 Make your monuments [worthy] of the god,
 This keeps alive their maker's name,
 A man should do what profits his ba.
 In the monthly service, wear the white sandals,
 Visit the temple, rob 'observe'⁸ the mysteries,
 Enter (65) the shrine, eat bread in god's house;
 Proffer libations, multiply the loaves,

Make ample the daily offerings,
 It profits him who does it.
 Endow your monuments according to your wealth,
 Even one day gives to eternity,
 An hour contributes to the future,
 God recognizes him who works for him.
⁹
 Troops will fight troops
 As the ancestors foretold;
 Egypt (70) fought in the graveyard,
 Destroying tombs in vengeful destruction.
 As I did it, so it happened,
 As is done to one who strays from god's path.
 Do not deal evilly with the Southland,
 You know what the residence foretold about it;
 As this happened so that may happen.
 'Before they had trespassed' ... ---
 I attacked This 'straight to' its southern border
 'at Taut',
 I engulfed it like a flood;
 King Meriyebe, justified, had not done it;
 Be merciful on account of it,
 ----- renew the treaties.
 (75) No river lets itself be hidden,
 It is good to work for the future.
 You stand well with the Southland,
 They come to you with tribute, with gifts;
 I have acted like the forefathers:
 If one has no grain to give,
 Be kind, since they are humble before you.
 Be sated with your bread, your beer,
 Granite comes to you unhindered.
 Do not despoil the monument of another,
 But quarry stone in Tura.
 Do not build your tomb out of ruins,
 (Using) what had been made for what is to be made.
 Behold, the king is lord of joy,
 (80). You may rest, sleep in your strength,
 Follow your heart, through what I have done,
 There is no foe within your borders.
 I arose as lord of the city,
 Whose heart was sad because of the Northland;
 From Hetshenu to 'Sembaga', and south to Two-
 Fish Channel¹⁰

⁴ Baer would render s²ry as the "oppressed" and wq² as "providing justice" to the aggrieved, whence the judgment would be the vindication of those who were wronged on earth, rather than a general judgment of the dead. My feeling is that an overall judgment is envisaged in the passage as a whole; but the first part may well be the vindication of the innocent.

⁵ Sw in Ptahhotep, line 489 means "neighbors, friends, helpers," or the like. Here it has been thought to mean "feathers" in the sense of "Nachwuchs" (Volten 1945:20), "recruits" (Wilson 1964:16-19), or "milice active" (Posener 1964:305).

⁶ S^ckyw, "veterans" (Volten, Posener), but it is uncertain.

⁷ One obscure sentence.

⁸ Kf hr sst has been translated "reveal the mysteries," except by Gardiner who rendered "be discreet concerning the mysteries." On kf in the compound kf ib see Litchheim AEL 1:78 n. 27.

⁹ Four sentences which, though free of lacunae, are very obscure. The word written tww.k has been rendered as "your statues," but I cannot believe that the king is speaking of dispatching royal statues to foreign countries.

¹⁰ Lit., "its southern border at Two-Fish Channel." The "Two Fish Channel," known from P. Westcar IX, 16 and elsewhere, appears to be the name for the Nile branch in the nome of Letopolis, i.e., the southernmost part of the Canopic branch. In this passage it designates the

I pacified the entire West as far as the coast of the sea.
It pays taxes, it gives cedar wood,¹¹
One sees juniper wood which they give us.
The East abounds in bowmen,
[Their labor] -----
The inner islands are turned back,
And every man within,
The temples say, "you are greater (85) than I."¹²
The land they had ravaged has been made into nomes,
All kinds of large towns [rare in its];
What was ruled by one is in the hands of ten,
Officials are appointed, tax-[lists drawn up].
When free men are given land,
They work for you like a single team;
No rebel will arise among them,
And Hapy will not fail to come.
The dues of the Northland are in your hand,
For the mooring-post is staked in the district I made in the East
From Hebenu to Horusway;¹³
It is settled with towns, filled with people,
Of the best in the whole land,
To repel (90) attacks against them.
May I see a brave man who will copy it,
Who will add to what I have done,
A wretched heir would [disgrace] me.
But this should be said to the Bowman:¹⁴

Lo, the miserable Asiatic,
He is wretched because of the place he's in:
Short of water, bare of wood,
Its paths are many and painful because of mountains.
He does not dwell in one place,
Food propels his legs,
He fights since the time of Horus,
Not conquering nor being conquered,
He does not announce the day of combat,
Like a thief who darts about a group.¹⁵
But as I live (95) and shall be what I am,
When the Bowmen were a sealed wall,
I breached [their strongholds],
I made Lower Egypt attack them,
I captured their inhabitants,
I seized their cattle,
Until the Asiatics abhorred Egypt.
Do not concern yourself with him,
The Asiatic is a crocodile on its shore,
It snatches from a lonely road,
It cannot seize from a populous town.
Medenyt has been restored to its nome,
Its one side is irrigated as far as Kem-Wer,
It is the [defense] against the Bowmen.¹⁷
(100) Its walls are warlike, its soldiers many,
Its serfs know how to bear arms,
Apart from the free men within.
The region of Memphis totals ten thousand men, southern boundary of the western Delta.

¹¹ Mrw-wood is rendered "Zedernholz" by Helck 1961-70 esp. 5:906. The Merikare passage conveys the fact that imports of foreign timber again reach the Heracleopolitan realm.

¹² I.e., the temples (or: "administrative districts?") of the central Delta, called "the inner islands," acknowledge the king and pay homage to him.

¹³ Kees (1962:6) insisted that Hebenu is not an unknown locality in the eastern Delta, as Scharff and Volten had thought, but is the well-known metropolis of the sixteenth nome of Upper Egypt, hence that the king is speaking of an extensive system of border strongholds which stretched from the eastern side of the sixteenth nome all the way to the northeastern Delta, to the border fortress of Sile, where the "Horus-way," the road to Palestine, began. "Horusway" and "Horusways" are synonymous with Sile.

¹⁴ This celebrated passage has been reexamined by Seibert 1967:90-98. The principal difficulty lies in št-w m ht š-w, which had been rendered "difficult from many trees," despite the fact that an arid landscape cannot have many trees. Drioton (1960:90-91) proposed the meaning "debarred from having many trees." Seibert takes m ht to be the compound preposition "after," to which he assigns the meaning "despite," and proposes to read: št-w m ht š-w <ny> w-wt iry/ksn m-š dww, which he renders, "verborgen trotz der Menge der Wege dahin/ (und) schlimm durch Berge." However, the meaning "despite" assigned to the alleged m-ht is impossible in this context. Only when m-ht serves as conjunction in a temporal clause can it acquire the overtone of "despite," as in the two references from Urk. 1:49 and 1:283, cited in Wb., 3 345.21, and in Edel 1955-64:§797: m-ht nn dd.n.(f), and m-ht nn wd.n hm.(f), where the literal meaning "after" has the overtone "despite," as is possible in any language. Said in a tone of rebuke, the sentence "after I told you to stay at home, you went out," means "despite my telling you to stay at home." But the spatial preposition "after" is not capable of such manipulation: "after many paths" does not yield "despite many paths."

I divide the sentences into: šhw m mw/ št-w m ht š-w w-wt iry/ ksn m-š dww; and following Drioton I take št-w m ht to mean "debarred from trees." For šhw, the meaning "short of," "lacking," is inescapable (Volten: "kümmerlich;" Seibert: "dürftig"), and it agrees with the š-hhw of Ptahtotep line 485, which I have rendered "deprived." As to the initial ksn pw n bw nif im, Seibert rightly pointed out that the n cannot be ignored, hence "he (the Asiatic) is wretched." It may be recalled that the personal use of ksn pw occurs twice in Ptahtotep, lines 81 and 446.

¹⁵ Šn^c, "dart about," as in Peasant, B i 61. The Moscow var. has šn^c, an unknown compound for which Seibert proposed the meaning "to ban."

¹⁶ I.e., the east bank of the twenty-second nome was recovered by the Heracleopolitans and brought under cultivation up to the point where it joined the Fayum which they had held all along. This rendering was suggested to me by K. Baer. On km-wr of the Fayum see Yoyote 1962:116f.

¹⁷ While P. Leningrad has hp^c, "navel-cord," P. Carlsberg has hpw with fighting-man determinative. Scharff and Volten chose hpw and assigned it the meaning "Abwehr." Wilson and others preferred "navel cord." In any case "it" refers to Medenyt; hence the town and its nome are either "the defense against" the Asiatics or the "point of entry" that attracts the Asiatics.

Free citizens¹⁸ who are not taxed;
 Officials are in it since the time it was residence,
 The borders are firm, the garrisons valiant.
 Many northerners irrigate it as far as the North-
 land,
 Taxed with grain in the manner of free men;¹⁹
 Lo, it is the gateway of the Northland,
 They form a dyke as far as (105) Hnes.²⁰
 Abundant citizens are the heart's support, Beware of being surrounded by the serfs of the foe,
 Caution prolongs life.

If your southern border is attacked,
 The Bowmen will put on the girdle,
 Build buildings in the Northland!
 As a man's name is not made small by his actions,
 So a settled town is not harmed.
 Build -----

The foe loves destruction and misery.
 King Khety, the justified, laid down in teaching:
 (110) He who is silent toward violence diminishes
 the offerings.

God will attack the rebel for the sake of the temple,

He will be overcome for what he has done,
 He will be sated with what he planned to gain,
 He will find no favor on the day of woe.
 Supply the offerings, revere the god,
 Don't say, "it is trouble," don't slacken your hands.

He who opposes you attacks the sky,
 A monument is sound for a hundred years;²²
 If the foe understood, he would not attack them,²³
 There is no one who has no (115) enemy.

The Lord of the Two Shores is one who knows,
 A king who has courtiers is not ignorant;
 As one wise did he come from the womb,
 From a million men god singled him out.
 A goodly office is kingship,
 It has no son, no brother to maintain its memorial,

But one man provides for the other;

a Isa 27:1;
 Pss 74:14;
 104:26; Job
 3:8; 26:13;
 41:1

b Gen 1:26-
 27

A man acts for him who was before him,
 So that what he has done is preserved by his successor.

Lo, a shameful deed occurred in my time:
 (120) The nome of This was ravaged;
 Though it happened through my doing,
 I learned it after it was done.²⁴
 There was retribution for what I had done,
 For it is evil to destroy,
 Useless to restore what one has damaged,
 To rebuild what one has demolished.
 Beware of it! A blow is repaid by its like,
 To every action there is a response.

While generation succeeds generation,
 God who knows characters is hidden;
 One can not oppose the lord of the hand,²⁵
 He reaches all (125) that the eyes can see.
 One should revere the god on his path,
 Made of costly stone, fashioned of bronze.²⁶
 As watercourse is replaced by watercourse,
 So no river allows itself to be concealed,
 It breaks the channel in which it was hidden.
 So also the ba goes to the place it knows,
 And strays not from its former path.
 Make worthy your house of the west,
 Make firm your station in the graveyard,²⁷
 By being upright, by doing justice,
 Upon which men's hearts rely.
 The loaf²⁸ of the upright is preferred
 To the ox of the evildoer.

Work for god, he will work for you also,
 With offerings (130) that make the altar flourish,
 With carvings that proclaim your name,
 God thinks of him who works for him.

Well tended is mankind — god's cattle,
 He made sky and earth for their sake,
 He subdued the water monster,²⁹ ^a
 He made breath for their noses to live.
 They are his images, ^b who came from his body,
 He shines in the sky for their sake;
 He made for them plants and cattle,
 Fowl and fish to feed them.
 He slew his foes, reduced his children,

¹⁸ Here, above in line 86 and below in line 103 I have, following Volten, rendered w²bw as "free men" rather than "priests." But it is uncertain; see Volten's discussion 1945:54.

¹⁹ If b²kw is the passive, as I think it is, then the next sentence, sw²t pw hr.i n ir st, "it means surpassing me for him who does it," is out of place here.

²⁰ "Dyke" here is surely metaphorical for "protection." A real dyke all the way from the Delta to Heracleopolis is hardly possible.

²¹ N in.tw hr mw.f, "one will not bring him on one's water." "To be on someone's water" is usually taken to mean "to be loyal to someone." This passage suggests a broader meaning, a mutual relationship of friendship and favor.

²² Posener 1965:345 read the numeral "hundred" after mpt.

²³ The sentence m mrwt smnh ir.t.n.f etc. which follows here is out of place; it recurs in its proper context in line 118.

²⁴ The destruction of tombs in the Thinite nome during warfare against the Thebans had already been mentioned in line 70. Here the king takes the blame for the action of his troops.

²⁵ The sun-god in his aspect as creator.

²⁶ Apparently a reference to the cult statues of the gods carried in procession during festivals.

²⁷ See Lichtheim AEL 1:59, n. 3. Here in Merikare the advice on tomb-building is spiritualized: the funerary monument is to be built on right doing.

²⁸ Bit, "loaf," rather than "character," as suggested by R. Williams 1964:19.

²⁹ A reference to the concept of a primordial water monster, defeated at the time of creation.

When they thought of making rebellion.³⁰ He makes daylight for their sake, He sails by to see them. He has built (135) his shrine around them, When they weep he hears. He made for them rulers in the egg, Leaders to raise the back of the weak. He made for them magic as weapons To ward off the blow of events, Guarding³¹ them by day and by night. He has slain the traitors among them, As a man beats his son for his brother's sake, For god knows every name. Do not neglect my speech, Which lays down all the laws of kingship,	Which instructs you, that you may rule the land, And may you reach me with none to accuse you! Do not kill (140) one who is close to you, Whom you have favored, god knows him; He is one of the fortunate ones on earth, Divine are they who follow the king! Make yourself loved by everyone, A good character is remembered [When his time] has passed. May you be called "he who ended the time of trouble," By those who come after in the House of Khety, In thinking³² of what has come today. Lo, I have told you the best of my thoughts, Act by what is set before you!
---	---

³⁰ An allusion to the myth of the "destruction of mankind," a text that forms part of the composition known as "the book of the cow of heaven," which is inscribed on the walls of three royal tombs of the 19th Dynasty; see above, text 1.24.

³¹ Rsi, "to watch," not rsw, "dream," as suggested by Federn 1960:256-257.

³² Reading iw dd tw.k, and taking ntyw m phwy m pr Hty in the temporal sense, in accordance with Posener 1966:345. On m sfw see Lichtheim AEL 1:79 n. 50; the rendering of m sfw as "in contrast" negates the whole thrust of the king's speech — the description of his achievements which his son is asked to emulate and surpass.

REFERENCES

Text: Golenischeff 1916 pls. ix-xiv; Volten 1945:3-82 and pls. 1-4. Translation: Gardiner 1914:20-36; Erman 1927:75-84; ANET 414-418; Scharff 1936 (lines 69-110 and most of lines 111-144); Lichtheim AEL 1:97-109. Discussion: Posener 1950; 1962; 1963; 1964; 1965; 1966; Drioton 1960:90-91; Williams, 1964:16-19; Seibert, 1967:90-98; Müller 1967:117-123; Kees 1962:86.

AMENEMHET (1.36)

Miriam Lichtheim

When first studied, the text was regarded as the genuine work of King Amenemhet I, composed by him after he had escaped an attempt on his life. The currently prevailing view is that the king was in fact assassinated in the thirtieth year of his reign, and that the text was composed by a royal scribe at the behest of the new king, Sesostri I.

The attack on the king's life is told in a deliberately veiled manner; yet there are sufficient hints in the account and elsewhere in the text to convey to the Middle Kingdom audience that the speaker is the deceased king who speaks to his son in a revelation, and to later audiences, including the sophisticated one of the New Kingdom, that the work was composed by a court writer.

It is a powerful and imaginative composition, distinguished by its personal tone and by the bitterness born of experience with which the old king castigates the treachery of his subjects, and warns his son not to place trust in any man. The theme, then, is regicide. In contrast with the theme "national distress," regicide was not a topic that could be treated fully and openly, for it conflicted too strongly with the dogma of the divine king. Hence the work is the only one of its kind.

The orational style is used throughout, except in the description of the assassination which is rendered in prose.

The text was preserved in Papyrus Millingen of the 18th Dynasty, a copy of which was made by A. Peyron in 1843. Subsequently the original papyrus was lost. Portions of the work are preserved on three wooden tablets of the 18th Dynasty, some papyrus fragments, and numerous ostraca of the New Kingdom.

The line numbers are those of Papyrus Millingen, which is a good manuscript but fragmentary in the final portion.

(1.1) Beginning of the Instruction made by the majesty of King Sehetepibre, son of Re, Amen-emhet, the justified,¹ as he spoke in a revelation of truth, to his son the All-Lord. He said:

¹ In Papyrus Chester Beatty IV, a New Kingdom scribe drew up a list of famous authors of the past and assigned the composition of the In-

Risen as god,² hear what I tell you,
That you may rule the land, govern the shores,
Increase well-being!
Beware of subjects who are nobodies,
Of whose plotting one is not aware.³
Trust not a brother, know not a friend,
Make no (I.5) intimates, it is worthless.
When you lie down, guard your heart yourself,
For no man has adherents on the day of woe.
I gave to the beggar, I raised the orphan,⁴
I gave success to the poor as to the wealthy;
But he who ate my food raised opposition,⁵
He whom I gave my trust used it to plot.⁶
Wearers of my fine linen looked at me as if they were needy,⁵
Those perfumed with my myrrh [poured water while wearing it].⁶
You my living peers, my partners among men,
Make for me mourning such as has not (I.10)
been heard,
For so great a combat had not yet been seen!
If one fights in the arena forgetful of the past, Success will elude him who ignores what he should know.

It was after supper, night had come. I was taking an hour of rest, lying on my bed, for I was weary. As my heart (II.1) began to follow sleep, weapons for my protection were turned against me,⁷ while I was like a snake of the desert. I awoke at the fighting, [alert],⁸ and found it was a combat of the guard. Had I quickly seized weapons in my hand, I would have made the cowards retreat [in haste]. But no one is strong at night;
no one can fight alone; no success is achieved without a helper.

(II.5) Thus bloodshed occurred while I was without you; before the courtiers had heard I would

a Job 29:12

b Job 29:30

c Judg 4-5

hand over to you; before I had sat with you so as to advise you.⁹ For I had not prepared for it, had not expected it, had not foreseen the failing of the servants.

Had women ever marshaled troops?^c
Are rebels nurtured in the palace?
Does one release water that destroys the soil
And deprives people of their crops?¹⁰
No harm had come to me since my birth,
No one equaled me as a doer of deeds.

(II.10) I journeyed to Yebu, I returned to the Delta,

Having stood on the land's borders I observed its interior.

I reached the borders of [the strongholds]¹¹
By my strength and my feats.

I was grain-maker, beloved of Nepri,
Hapy honored me on every field.

None hungered in my years,

None (III.1) thirsted in them,

One sat because I acted and spoke of me,

I had assigned everything to its place.

I subdued lions, I captured crocodiles,

I repressed those of Wawat,

I captured the Mediai,

I made the Asiatics do the dog walk.

I built myself a house decked with gold,

Its ceiling of lapis lazuli,

Walls of silver, floors of [acacia wood],

(III.5) Doors of copper, bolts of bronze,

Made for eternity, prepared for all time,

I know because I am its lord.

Behold, much hatred is in the streets,

The wise says "yes," the fool says "no,"

For no one knows it [without your presence],¹²

Sesostris my son!

As my feet depart, you are in my heart,

struction of Amenemhet to a scribe by the name of Khety. Whether or not his attribution was correct, it reveals that the New Kingdom scribe understood the pseudepigraphic nature of the work (see Posener 1956:67). But as regards the audience of the Middle Kingdom, it seems to me probable that it took the work to be the genuine testament of King Amenemhet; for pseudepigrapha would lose much of their effectiveness if they were not, at least initially, believed to be the works of the men whose name they bore.

² The much debated introductory passage was reexamined by Goedicke 1968:15-21 who made a case for taking qđ.f h^c m ntr as a single sentence, in accordance with the verse-points, and having it refer to the dead king who is "risen as god," rather than to the accession of Sesostris I. If so taken, however, the address to Sesostris becomes very abrupt, consisting only of "listen to me," and the sentence lacks balance. Helck summarized the previous renderings and preferred to take h^c as imperative, "rise," rather than the participle, "risen."

³ As Helck and Goedicke observed, the two tmmt refer back to smdt. I take the passage to mean that subjects who are unknown are dangerous because they can plot in secrecy. Hrw in the sense of "plot" is well attested (see Volten 1945:108).

⁴ Lit., "he whom I gave my hands."

⁵ Following Gardiner 1939:483, I read sšwyw, rather than šw, "grass."

⁶ Ši mw has generally been interpreted as an act of disrespect or defiance, e.g., Helck: "spuckten vor mir aus." The inner logic of the composition requires, however, that the king, looking back on the treacherous behavior of the plotters, should describe it in terms of covert acts, since any open defiance would have drawn immediate punishment. The "pouring water" in Admonitions, 7, 5, suggests a menial task.

⁷ I take spħr in the literal sense of "turn around."

⁸ The meaning of iw.i n h^cw.i, "I being to my body" is uncertain. Gardiner's "by myself" was disputed by Anthes and Helck; the latter suggested "kam zu mir," i.e., "became alert."

⁹ I.e., the old king was prevented from "sitting together" with his son in a formal ceremony of abdication.

¹⁰ The context here, and in Neferti, line 46, suggests that iryt means "produce" and "crops."

¹¹ For hpswt Gardiner (1939:493) proposes "frontier-strongholds," while Helck assumes a corrupted writing of hps, the constellation "great bear."

¹² The three sentences recur in Admonitions, 6, 13. Helck has pointed out that msyt is a corruption of msd, "hatred." The third sentence is obscure.

My eyes behold you, child of a happy hour
 'Before the people as they hail you'.¹³
 I have made the past and arranged the future,
 I gave you the contents of my heart.
 You (III.10) wear the white crown of a god's son,
 The seal is in its place, assigned you by me,

Jubilation is in the bark of Re,
 Kingship is again what it was in the past!
¹³
 Raise your monuments, establish your strongholds,
 Fight¹⁴

¹³ A garbled sentence, not preserved in P. Millingen.

¹⁴ The two concluding sentences are corrupt.

REFERENCES

Text: Griffith 1896:35-51; Maspero 1914; Volten 1945:104-128; Lopez 1963:29-33; Helck 1969. Translation: BAR 1:474-483; Erman 1927:72-74; ANET 418-419; Lichtheim AEL 1:135-139. Discussion: Posener 1956; Gardiner 1939:479-496; Malinine 1934:63-74; de Buck 1939:847-852; 1946:183-200; Faulkner 1932:69-73; Anthes 1957:176-190; 1958:208-209; Goedicke 1968:15-21.

2. HISTORIOGRAPHY

KING LISTS (1.37)

James K. Hoffmeier

King-lists of various types abound in ancient Egyptian sources. Technically, a collection of three or more names is a "group" and a true king-list arranges names in proper historical order and provides the length of reign. Following this definition, the only Egyptian source that meets these requirements is the Turin Canon, and it is not fully preserved. Nevertheless, the term king-list has been applied to a wider variety of lists, including the funerary offering lists, such as those at Karnak, Abydos and Sakkara. Such "cultic assemblages of deceased kings," as Donald Redford calls them, are abundant, and vary considerably in length. Of this type, dozens are known, but they are rarely consulted in historical reconstructions because of their brevity and, in some cases, confused order.

While no direct ties exist between the Old Testament and the king-lists presented here, they do shed light on genealogical lists such as those found in Genesis, 1 Chronicles and elsewhere. The Turin Canon contains what is believed to have been an exhaustive list of kings who ruled beginning with Meni (Menes) down into the empire period, complete with the duration of reigns. Prior to the beginning of 1st Dynasty in column II of the papyrus, the initial column contains a list of deities who are called "king of Upper and Lower Egypt." Following this title, the deity's name is written in a cartouche, the cylindrical enclosure reserved for royal names. The length of the reigns are also added after the name, and the figures are extremely long, e.g. Thoth 7726 years and another deity whose name is lost, 7718 years. Once the dynastic kings are introduced, the figures are realistic. A parallel might be drawn between this practice and that found in the Sumerian King-list and the Genesis 5 and 11 genealogies. In both of these cases, very long reigns are listed prior to the flood, but the numbers are reduced significantly thereafter. Unfortunately, the fragmentary state of column I prevents us from knowing how the Egyptian scribes understood the difference between the pre-dynastic divine rulers and Meni and his successors. The inclusion of pre-dynastic (legendary?) divine rulers along with historical kings from the 1st Dynasty on, indicates that the Egyptians made no distinction between "historical" and "mythic" or "legendary" individuals as modern historians do.

Unlike the original Turin Canon, the famous king-lists at Abydos and Sakkara are not complete lists of the kings from Dynasties 1-19. Rather they are selective. For instance, the kings of the 1st and 2nd Intermediate periods, as well as Queen Hatshepsut and Akhenaten, Smenkhkare, Tutankhamun, and Ay, the so called Amarna kings are omitted in the Abydos list. Similar selectivity is found in the Sakkara list. The practice of omitting entire epochs, such as the Amarna and Hyksos periods, were ways that later kings could expunge embarrassing forebears and not make offerings to them. On the other hand, there is no evidence that superfluous names were added to the Egyptian lists. Selectivity, apparently, violated no literary or political expectations in ancient Egypt. By extension, it holds that the omission of individuals or groups of ancestors from Israelite genealogies in the Bible was practiced for ideological or structural purposes, while not violating any Near Eastern canons of historiography.

1. KARNAK LIST (1.37A)

A small chapel once stood in Thutmose III's Akh-menu temple complex at Karnak. Over 150 years ago it was removed to the Louvre in Paris. While its list is offertory in nature, it is made up of seated figures of the kings with various regal titles before the cartouche. The names are grouped in eight parts, but the particular alignments are not always clear. The importance of these name-lists is that they include names omitted from AL and SL, such as earlier Theban 11th Dynasty kings, and some from 2nd Intermediate Period, are included. There has been considerable scholarly discussion about the criteria used for the compilation of the lists. Suggestions include that these were monarchs who actually ruled from Thebes or those who engaged in building activities there; that the figures represent actual statues of royal forebears at Karnak or that lists were comprised of ancient offering lists. Regardless of how this list originated, its use for historical reconstruction is of limited value.

(Group I)

1. [lost]
2. Sneferu
3. Sahure
4. Inen/Iny
5. Isesi
6. [lost]
7. [lost]
8. Sekhemre-semntawyre

(Group II)

1. [lost]
2. Intef
3. In[tef]
4. Mon[tuhotep]
5. Mayor Int[ef]
6. [Sa Re T]eti
7. [P]epy
8. Merenre

(Group III)

1. Sehetepibre (Amenemhet I)
2. Nebkaure (Amenemhet II)
3. [lost]
4. [lost]
5. Maakherure (Amenemhet IV)
6. Sobekneferu
7. Intef

(Group IV)

1. Kheperkare (Senusert I)
2. Sekennenre
3. Senakhtenre
4. Niuserre
5. Nebkheperre (Senusert II)
6. Nebhepetre (Montuhotep II)
7. Sneferkare
8. /////re

(Group V)

1. [lost]
2. Khaneferre
3. Khasekhemre
4. Sekhemre-snefertawy
5. Sekhemre-khuitawy
6. Seankhibre
7. Sewadjenre
8. ///kau-[re]

(Group VI)

1. [lost]
2. Merisekhemre
3. Merikaure
4. ///s re-wesertawy
5. /////re
6. Snefer///re
7. Khahe[tep]re
8. Khaankhre

(Group VII)

1. [Sekhem]re-wahkhau
2. Sewahenre
3. Merihetepre
4. Khuitawyre
5. [lost]
6. [lost]
7. Sekhemre-wadjkhau

(Group VIII)

1. /////re
2. Snefer///re
3. Sewadjenre
4. Sekhemre-[///]tawy
5. [lost]
6. [lost]
7. [lost]

2. ABYDOS LIST (AL) (1.37B)

In the cenotaph of Seti I at Abydos, which was completed by Ramesses II, is found a sequential list of kings from Dynasty 1 through reigning monarch Seti of Dynasty 19. To the left of the list, stand Seti and crown-prince Ramesses who holds a papyrus containing the list that is recorded to the right. The accompanying inscription indicates that the list was made up of the beneficiaries of the offerings being made. Because this list was made up of the royal ancestors whom the reigning monarch wished to honor, it was selective. Thus while historians may wish to consult this list, and ones like it (e.g. the Sakkara list), it is not relied upon for historical reconstruction without the aid of more complete lists, like the Turin Canon or an annalistic report such as the Palermo Stone.

(Dynasty 1) 1. Meni 2. Teti 3. Iti 4. Ita 5. Semti 6. Merpabia 7. (Not translatable) 8. Qebah (Dynasty 2) 9. Bedjau 10. Kakau 11. Baninetjer 12. Wadjnes 13. Sendi 14. Djadjay (Dynasty 3) 15. Nebka 16. //djeser-sa 17. (Djeser)-teti 18. Sedjes 19. Neferkare (Dynasty 4) 20. Sneferu 21. Khufu 22. Djedefre 23. Khaefre 24. Menkaure 25. Shepseskaf (Dynasty 5) 26. Userkaf 27. Sahure 28. Kakai 29. Reneferef 30. Niuserre 31. Menkauhor 32. Djedkare 33. Unas (Dynasty 6) 34. Teti 35. Userkare 36. Meryre (Pepy I) 37. Merenre 38. Neferkare (Pepy II)	39. Merenre-Antyemsaef (1st Intermediate Period) 40. Netjerkare 41. Menkare 42. Neferkare 43. Neferkare-Neby 44. Djedkare-Shema 45. Neferkare-Khenedu 46. Merenhor 47. Sneferka 48. Nikare 49. Neferkare-Teruru 50. Neferkahor 51. Neferkare-Pepysenb 52. Sneferka-Anu 53. Ka[//]kaure 54. Neferkaure 55. Neferkauhor 56. Neferirkare (Dynasty 11) 57. Nebhepetre (Montuhotep II) 58. Sankhkare (Montuhotep III) (Dynasty 12) 59. Sehetepibre (Amenemhet I) 60. Kheperkare (Senusert I) 61. Nebkaure (Amenemhet II) 62. Khakheperre (Senusert II) 63. Khakaure (Senusert III) 64. Nimaare (Amenemhet III) 65. Maakherure (Amenemhet IV) (Dynasty 18) 66. Nebpehtyre (Ahmose) 67. Djeserkare (Amenhotep I) 68. Aakheperkare (Thutmose I) 69. Aakheperenre (Thutmose II) 70. Menkheperre (Thutmose III) 71. Aakheperure (Amenhotep II) 72. Menkheperure (Thutmose IV) 73. Nebmaatire (Amenhotep III) 74. Djeserkheperure-setepenre (Horemheb) (Dynasty 19) 75. Menphtyre (Ramesses I) 76. Menmaatire (Seti I)
--	--

3. SAKKARA KING LIST (SL) (1.37C)

Carved on the Sakkara tomb of the "Overseer of Works" from the reign of Ramesses II is the so called "Sakkara King List." Like its counterpart at Abydos, this is an offering list which originally recorded the names of 58 monarchs. Above each cartouche is the word nsw, "king" with determinative of a seated king, a white or red crown; they alternate throughout. Below each cartouche is the epithet m³c hrw, "justified," indicating that these kings were deceased. While this list is laid out much like Seti I list from Abydos, it includes kings not mentioned at Abydos. For instance, while AL records the names of eight 1st Dynasty kings, SL has but two. Among those excised is Meni, the legendary Menes of Herodotus. Owing to the selectivity, and sequential problems with this list, it is not relied upon in serious historical reconstruction.

(Dynasty 1)		30. Menkahor
1. Merbiapen		31. Maakare
2. Qebehu		32. Unas
(Dynasty 2)		(Dynasty 6)
3. Baunetjer		33. Teti
4. Kakau		34. Pepy (I)
5. Banetjeru		35. Merenre
6. Wadjnes		36. Neferkare (Pepy II)
7. Senedj		(Dynasty 11)
8. Neferkare		37. Nebhepetre (Montuhotep II)
9. Neferkasokar		38. Sankhkare (Montuhotep III)
10. Hudjefa		(Dynasty 12)
11. Beby		39. Sehetepibre (Amenemhet I)
(Dynasty 3)		40. Kheperkare (Senusert I)
12. Djeser		41. Nebkare (Amenemhet II)
13. Djeser-Teti		42. Khakheperre (Senusert II)
14. Nebkare		43. Khakare (Senusert III)
15. Huny		44. [Nimaa]re (Amenemhet III)
(Dynasty 4)		45. Maakherure (Amenemhet IV)
16. Sneferu		46. Sobekkare
17. Khufu		(Dynasty 18)
18. Djedefre		47. Nebpehtyre (Ahmose)
19. [lost]		48. Djeserkare (Amenhotep I)
20. [lost]		49. [lost] (Thutmose I)
21. [lost]		50. [lost] (Thutmose II)
22. [lost]		51. [lost] (Thutmose III)
23. [lost]		52. [lost] (Amenhotep II)
24. [lost]		53. [lost] (Thutmose IV)
(Dynasty 5)		54. [lost] (Amenhotep I)
25. Userka[ef]		55. [Djeserkheperre S]etepen[re] (Horemheh)
26. [S]ahure		(Dynasty 19)
27. Neferirkare		56. Men [pehtyre] (Ramesses I)
28. Shepseskare		57. Men [maatre] (Seti I)
29. Khaneferre		58. [Usermaatre] Setepenre (Ramesses II)

4. TURIN CANON (1.37D)

Located in the Museo Egizio in Turin, Italy, this papyrus is the most important source for the historical and chronological reconstruction of ancient Egypt. It is more than a list. Rather it originally contained a sequence of kings from Dynasty 1, with regnal years assigned to each king. Beginning with Menes (Meni), it continues down to the 19th Dynasty, the period to which this papyrus dates. According to Sir Alan Gardiner who published a hieroglyphic transcription of the hieratic original (1959), it is a "genuine chronicle remarkably like the Manetho of Africanus and Eusebius" (1962:47). This papyrus was apparently in near perfect condition when discovered by Drovetti in 1822 in western Thebes. However, by the time Champollion studied it a few years later, it was regrettably in a poor, fragmented state, with large sections having been lost or destroyed in the intervening years. This sad fact has long been lamented by historians because knowledge of certain kings and durations of certain reigns remain lost. Nevertheless, the Turin canon continues to be the most important document from pharaonic times for historical reconstruction. The list begins with a series of deities, such as Seth, Horus and Thoth who are called "King of Upper and Lower Egypt" and whose names are written in a cartouche. Following this in column II is the sequence of kings beginning with Meni, the legendary Menes. In the following translation, the three columns represent: the column and line number of the manuscript, the royal name, and the year/month/day.

(Dynasty 1)
II.11	Meni	lost		II.13	lost
II.12	It//	lost		II.15	//[H]ori

II.16	Semti	lost
II.17	Merbiapen	lost
II.18	Semsem	lost
II.19	[Ke]beh	lost
II.20	Bau[netjer]	lost
II.21	[Ka]kau	lost
(Dynasty 2)
II.22	[Bau]netjeren	lost
II.23	lost	lost
II.24	Senedj	lost
II.25	Aaka	lost
III.1	Neferkasokar	8 / 3 / [//]
III.2	Hudjefa	[11]/ 8 / 4
III.3	Bebty	27 / 2 / 1
(Dynasty 3)
III.4	Nebka	19/0/0
III.5	Djeserit	19
III.6	Djeserti	6
III.7	[Hudje]fa	6
III.8	Hu[ni]	24 / [lost]
(Dynasty 4)
III.9	Sneferu	24 / [lost]
III.10	[Khufu]	23 / [lost]
III.11	[Djedefre]	8 / [lost]
III.12	Kha[efre]	lost
III.13	lost	lost
III.14	[Menkaure]	18 / [lost]
III.15	lost	4
III.16	lost	2
(Dynasty 5)
III.17	[User]ka[f]	7
III.18	[Sahure]	12
III.19	lost	lost
III.20	lost	7
III.21	lost	// + 1
III.22	lost	11
III.23	Menkauhor	8
III.24	Djedy (Djedkare)	28
III.25	Unas	30
(Dynasty 6)
IV.1	lost	lost
IV.2	lost	lost / 6 / 21
IV.3	lost	20
IV.4	lost	44
IV.5	[Pepi II]	90 + X
IV.6	[Merenre]	1 / 1 /
IV.7	lost	lost
IV.8	Nitikerty	lost
IV.9	Neferka, child	lost
IV.10	Nefer	2 / 1 / 1
IV.11	Ibi	4 / 2
IV.12	lost	2 / 1 / 1
IV.13	lost	1 / 0 / 1/2 day
IV.14-19	[Poorly prserved or lost]
(Dynasties 9-10)
IV.20	Neferkare	lost

IV.21	Khety	lost
IV.22	Senenh///	lost
IV.23	////////	lost
IV.24	Mer/////	lost
IV.25	Shed////	lost
IV.26	H////////	lost
(Dynasty 11)
V.1-11	lost	lost
V.12	Wah///	lost
V.13	lost	lost
V.14	lost	49
V.15	lost	8
V.16	Nebhepetre	51
V.17	Sankhka[re]	12
V.18	Total 143 years
(Dynasty 12)
V.19	[Kings of]the Capital Itjtawy
V.20	[Sehet]epib[re]	lost
V.21	[Kheper] ka[re]	45/ lost
V.22	lost	10 +
V.23	lost	19 / lost
V.24	lost	30+ /lost
V.25	lost	40+ /lost
VI.1	Maakherure	9 / 3 / 27
VI.2	[Sobek]nefer[u]re	3 / 10 / 14
VI.3	Kings of the [Capital Itjtawy] 8, total 213 / 1 / 16
(Dynasty 13)
VI.5	[Khitawy]re	2 / 3 / 24
VI.6	[Sekhemka]re	lost
VI.7	//amenemhet	3 /lost
VI.8	Sehetepibre	1
VI.9	Iufni	lost
VI.10	Sankhibre	lost
VI.11	Smenkare	lost/lost/4
VI.12	Sehetepibre	lost/lost/3
VI.13	Sewadjkare	lost/lost/6
VI.14	Nedjemibre	/ /lost
VI.15	Re-Sobek[hote]p	2
VI.16	Ren[se]neb, he function for 4 months
VI.17	Autibre	/ 7 /
VI.18	Sedjefakare	lost
VI.19	Sekhemre-khuitawy-Sobekhetep	lost
VI.20	User[ka]re - //re//ndjer	lost
VI.21	[Smenekh]kare the General	lost
VI.22	////ka[re] - Intef	lost
VI.23	////ib-Seth	blank
VI.24	Sekhemkare-Sobekhetep	3 / 2/lost
VI.25	Khasekhemre-Neferhotep	11 / 1 /lost
VI.26	Sihathor	lost/ 3 /lost
VI.27	Khaneferre-Sobekhetep	lost
VII.1	Khahetepre	4 / 8 / 29
VII.2	Wahibre-Iaib	10 / 8 / 28
VII.3	Merneferre	23 / 8 / 18
VII.4	Merhotepre	2 / 2 / 9
VII.5	Seankhenswadjetu	3 / 2 / lost
VII.6	Mersekhemre-Ined	3 / 1 / 1

VII.7	Sewadjkare-Hori	5 / 8 /	VIII.23	Ia////re	lost / lost
VII.8	Merika[//]-Sobek[hetep]	2 / // / 4	VIII.24	Kha///re	lost
VII.9	lost	lost/lost/11	VIII.25	Aaka///re	lost
VII.10	lost	lost/lost/3	VIII.26	Smen///re	lost
VII.11	lost	lost	VIII.27	Djedi///re	lost
VII.12	lost	lost	IX.1-6	lost	lost
VII.13	////mose	lost	IX.7	Senefer[ka/]re	lost
VII.14	////maat-re- [I]bi	lost	IX.8	Men////re	lost
VII.15	////webenre-Hor[i]	lost	IX.9	Djedi//[re]	lost
VII.16	////kare	lost	IX.10-13	lost	lost
VII.17	////enre	lost	IX.14	Inek///	lost
VII.18	/////re	lost	IX.15	Ineb///	lost
VII.19	lost	lost	IX.16	Ip///	lost
VII.20	lost	lost	IX.17-27	lost	lost
VII.21	///rre	lost	IX.28	////ren-Hapu	lost
VII.22	Merkheperre	lost	IX.29	///ka[re?]-Nebennati	lost
VII.23	Merika[re]	lost	IX.30	///ka[re?]-Bebnem	lost
VIII.1	Nehesy	lost/ 3 /	IX.31	lost	lost
VIII.2	Khatyre	lost/3 /	X	lost	lost
VIII.3	Nebefautre	1 / 5 / 15	X.20	Khamudy
VIII.4	Sehebre	3 / lost / 1	X.21	[Total of] Foreign [Chieftains] 8, they functioned 100+ years.
VIII.5	Merdjefare	3 /lost	X.21-30	(very fragmentary)
VIII.6	Sewadjkare	1 / lost		(Dynasty 17)
VIII.7	Nebdjefare	1 / lost	XI.1	Sekhemre-////	3 /
VIII.8	Webenre	1	XI.2	Sekhemre-////	16 /
VIII.9	lost	1 / 1 / lost	XI.3	Sekhemre-s[menttawy]	1 /
VIII.10	/// djefa[re]	4 /	XI.4	Sewadje[n]re	///1 /
VIII.11	///[w]eben[re]	3 /	XI.5	Nebiryautre	29 /
VIII.12	Autibre	lost	XI.6	Nebitautre	lost
VIII.13	Heribre	lost/lost/ 29	XI.7	Semen[wadj?]re	lost
VIII.14	Nebsenre	lost / 5 / 20	XI.8	Seweser///re	12 /
VIII.15	/////re	lost / lost / 21	XI.9	Sekehre-Shedwaset	lost
VIII.16	Sekheperenre	2 / /1	XI.10-15	lost	lost
VIII.17	Djedkherure	2 / /5	XI.16	Weser///re	lost
VIII.18	Sankhibre	lost / lost / 19	XI.17	Weser/////	lost
VIII.19	Nefertumre	lost / lost / 18	XI.18-end	(lost or too fragmentary for translation)
VIII.20	Sekhem//re	lost
VIII.21	Kakemutre	lost / lost
VIII.22	Neferibre	lost / lost

REFERENCES

Caulfield and Saint Thomas 1902:pl.43; Gardiner 1959; 1962:430-445; Kitchen 1992:328-329; Redford 1986; Swelim 1983; Urk IV.

This page intentionally left blank

C. INDIVIDUAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. NARRATIVES

SINUHE (1.38)

Miriam Lichtheim

The numerous, if fragmentary, copies of this work testify to its great popularity, and it is justly considered the most accomplished piece of Middle Kingdom prose literature.

The two principal manuscripts are: (1) P. Berlin 3022 (abbr., B) which dates from the 12th Dynasty. In its present state, it lacks the beginning of the story and contains a total of 311 lines; (2) P. Berlin 10499 (abbr., R) which contains 203 lines and includes the beginning. It dates to the end of the Middle Kingdom.

A third major copy is on a large ostrakon in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford, which gives 130, partly incomplete, lines. It is, however, an inferior copy, dating to the 19th Dynasty. Its principal value lies in the detailed commentary of its editor, J. Barns. In addition, small portions of the text are preserved on papyrus fragments and on numerous ostraca.

The present translation uses as principal manuscripts the text of R for the beginning and of B for the bulk, and incorporates an occasional variant from other manuscripts.

(R 1) The Prince, Count, Governor of the domains of the sovereign in the lands of the Asiatics, true and beloved Friend of the King, the Attendant Sinuhe, says:

I was an attendant who attended his lord, a servant of the royal harem, waiting on the Princess, the highly praised Royal Wife of King Sesostri in Khenemsut, the daughter of King Amenemhet in Kanefru, Nefru, the revered.¹

Year 30, third month of the inundation, day 7: the god ascended to his horizon. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sehetepibre, flew to heaven and united with the sun-disk, the divine body merging with its maker. Then the residence was hushed; hearts grieved; the great portals were shut; (10) the courtiers were head-on-knee; the people moaned.

His majesty, however, had despatched an army to the land of the Tjemeh, with his eldest son as its commander, the good god Sesostri. He had been sent to smite the foreign lands and to punish those of Tjehenu.² (15) Now he was returning, bringing captives of the Tjehenu and cattle of all kinds beyond number. The officials of the palace sent to the western border to let the king's son know the event that had occurred at the court. The messengers met him on the road, (20) reaching him at night. Not a moment did he delay. The falcon flew with his attendants, without letting his army know it.

But the royal sons who had been with him on this expedition had also been sent for. (B 1) One of them was summoned while I was standing (there). I heard his voice, as he spoke, while I was in the near distance. My heart fluttered, my arms spread out, a trembling befell all my limbs. I removed myself in leaps, to seek a hiding place. I put (5) myself between two bushes, so as to leave the road to its traveler.

I set out southward. I did not plan to go to the residence. I believed there would be turmoil and did not expect to survive it. I crossed Maaty near Sycamore; I reached Isle-of-Snefru.³ I spent the day there at the edge (10) of the cultivation. Departing at dawn I encountered a man who stood on the road. He saluted me while I was afraid of him. At dinner time I reached "Cattle-Quay." I crossed in a barge without a rudder, by the force of the westwind. I passed to the east of the quarry, (15) at the height of "Mistress of the Red Mountain." Then I made my way northward. I reached the "Walls of the Ruler," which were made to repel the Asiatics and to crush the Sand-farers. I crouched in a bush for fear of being seen by the guard on duty upon the wall.

¹ Sinuhe was specifically in the service of Princess Nefru, the wife of Sesostri I, the latter being co-regent at the time of his father's death. Khenemsut and Kanefru are the names of the pyramids of Sesostri I and Amenemhet I.

² Tjemeh and Tjehenu designated two distinct Libyan peoples who merged in the course of time. In this story the terms are used interchangeably.

³ Goedicke (1957:77-85) has made it plausible that M^cry was not a lake but a name for the Giza region (see also Gauthier 1925-31 4:218 on a town M^cry), and that Isle-of-Snefru and Isle-of-Kem-Wer were not islands. Sinuhe is traveling south along the edge of the western desert, until he crosses the Nile at a spot the name of which Goedicke explained as "Cattle-Quay." He landed in the vicinity of the "Red Mountain" (today's Gebel al-Ahmar), and only then did he decide to flee the country and hence turned northward.

I set out (20) at night. At dawn I reached Peten. I halted at "Isle-of-Kem-Wer." An attack of thirst overtook me; I was parched, my throat burned. I said, "This is the taste of death." I raised my heart and collected myself when I heard the lowing sound of cattle (25) and saw Asiatics. One of their leaders, who had been in Egypt, recognized me. He gave me water and boiled milk for me.^a I went with him to his tribe. What they did for me was good.

Land gave me to land. I traveled to Byblos; I returned to Qedem. I spent (30) a year and a half there. Then Ammunenshi,⁴ the ruler of Upper Retenu, took me to him, saying to me: "You will be happy with me; you will hear the language of Egypt." He said this because he knew my character and had heard of my skill, Egyptians who were with him having borne witness for me. He said to me: "Why (35) have you come here? Has something happened at the residence?" I said to him: "King Sehetepibre departed to the horizon, and one did not know the circumstances." But I spoke in half-truths:⁵ "When I returned from the expedition to the land of the Tjemeh, it was reported to me and my heart grew faint. It carried (40) me away on the path of flight, though I had not been talked about; no one had spat in my face; I had not heard a reproach; my name had not been heard in the mouth of the herald. I do not know what brought me to this country; it is as if planned by god. As if a Delta-man saw himself in Yebu, a marsh-man in Nubia."

Then he said to me: "How then is that land without that excellent god, fear of whom was throughout (45) the lands like Sakhmet in a year of plague?" I said to him in reply: "Of course his son has entered into the palace, having taken his father's heritage."

He is a god without peer,
No other comes before him;
He is lord of knowledge, wise planner, skilled leader,
One goes and comes by (50) his will.

He was the smiter of foreign lands,
While his father stayed in the palace,
He reported to him on commands carried out.

He is a champion who acts with his arm,

a Judg 4:19;
5:25

A fighter who has no equal,
When seen engaged in archery,
When joining the melee.

Horn-curber who makes hands turn weak,
His foes (55) can not close ranks;
Keen-sighted he smashes foreheads,
None can withstand his presence.

Wide-striding he smites the fleeing,
No retreat for him who turns him his back;
Steadfast in time of attack,
He makes turn back and turns not his back.

Stouthearted when he sees the mass,
He lets not slackness fill his heart;
(60) Eager at the sight of combat,
Joyful when he works his bow.

Clasping his shield he treads under foot,
No second blow needed to kill;
None can escape his arrow,
None turn aside his bow.

The Bowmen flee before him,
As before the might of the goddess;
As he fights he plans the goal,
(65) Unconcerned about all else.

Lord of grace, rich in kindness,
He has conquered through affection;
His city loves him more than itself,
Acclaims him more than its own god.

Men outdo women in hailing him,
Now that he is king;
Victor while yet in the egg,
Set to be ruler since his birth.

Augmenter of those born with him,
(70) He is unique, god-given;
Happy the land that he rules!

Enlarger of frontiers,
He will conquer southern lands,
While ignoring northern lands,
Though made to smite Asiatics and tread on Sand-farers!

"Send to him! Let him know your name as one who inquires while being far from his majesty. He will not fail to do (75) good to a land that will be loyal to him."

He said to me: "Well then, Egypt is happy knowing that he is strong. But you are here. You shall stay with me. What I shall do for you is good."

⁴ K. Baer would read the name as Amorite ^c Ammulanasi, "God is verily (my) prince." On the name pattern see Huffmon (1965:223, 240). I retain the reading "Ammunenshi" largely because I adhere to the method of transliterating the Eg. consonantal script with a minimum of vocalization and without regard for actual pronunciation.

⁵ Some scholars have adopted the rendering, "It was told to me incorrectly" (see Barns 1952:5 n. 23). I do not find this convincing. Simuhe's "half-truths" consist in pretending that the death of the old king was reported to him when in fact he had only overheard a conspiratorial message, and in disclaiming any knowledge of the circumstances.

He set me at the head of his children. He married me to his eldest daughter.^b He let me choose for myself of his land, (80) of the best that was his, on his border with another land. It was a good land called Yaa. Figs were in it and grapes. It had more wine than water. Abundant was its honey,^c plentiful its oil. All kinds of fruit were on its trees. Barley was there and emmer, and no end of cattle of all kinds. (85) Much also came to me because of the love of me; for he had made me chief of a tribe in the best part of his land. Loaves were made for me daily,^d and wine as daily fare, cooked meat, roast fowl, as well as desert game. (90) For they snared for me and laid it before me, in addition to the catch of my hounds. Many sweets were made for me, and milk^e dishes of all kinds.

I passed many years, my children becoming strong men, each a master of his tribe. The envoy who came north or went south to the residence (95) stayed with me. I let everyone stay with me. I gave water to the thirsty; I showed the way to him who had strayed; I rescued him who had been robbed. When Asiatics conspired to attack the Rulers of Hill-Countries,⁷ I opposed their movements. For this ruler of (100) Retenu made me carry out numerous missions as commander of his troops. Every hill tribe against which I marched I vanquished, so that it was driven from the pasture of its wells. I plundered its cattle, carried off its families, seized their food, and killed people (105) by my strong arm, by my bow, by my movements and my skillful plans. I won his heart and he loved me, for he recognized my valor. He set me at the head of his children, for he saw the strength of my arms.

There came a hero of Retenu,^{8 d}
To challenge me (110) in my tent.
A champion was he without peer,
He had subdued it all.
He said he would fight with me,
He planned to plunder me,
He meant to seize my cattle
At the behest of his tribe.

The ruler conferred with me and I said: "I do not know him; I am not his ally, (115) that I could walk about in his camp. Have I ever opened his back rooms or climbed over his fence? It is envy, because he sees me doing your commissions. I am

^b Gen 30:16-30; Exod 2:21

^c Exod 3:8; Num 13:27

^{d-d} 1 Sam 17

indeed like a stray bull in a strange herd, whom the bull of the herd charges, (120) whom the longhorn attacks. Is an inferior beloved when he becomes a superior? No Asiatic makes friends with a Delta-man. And what would make papyrus cleave to the mountain? If a bull loves combat, should a champion bull retreat for fear of being equaled? (125) If he wishes to fight, let him declare his wish. Is there a god who does not know what he has ordained, and a man who knows how it will be?"

At night I strung my bow, sorted my arrows, practiced with my dagger, polished my weapons. When it dawned Retenu came. (130) It had assembled its tribes; it had gathered its neighboring peoples; it was intent on this combat.

He came toward me while I waited, having placed myself near him. Every heart burned for me; the women jabbered. All hearts ached for me thinking: "Is there another champion who could fight him?" He <raised> his battle-axe and shield,⁹ (135) while his armful of missiles fell toward me. When I had made his weapons attack me, I let his arrows pass me by without effect, one following the other. Then, when he charged me, I shot him, my arrow sticking in his neck. He screamed; he fell on his nose; (140) I slew him with his axe. I raised my war cry over his back, while every Asiatic shouted. I gave praise to Mont, while his people mourned him. The ruler Ammunenshi took me in his arms.

Then I carried off his goods; I plundered his cattle. What he had meant to do (145) to me I did to him. I took what was in his tent; I stripped his camp. Thus I became great, wealthy in goods, rich in herds. It was the god who acted, so as to show mercy to one with whom he had been angry, whom he had made stray abroad. For today his heart is appeased.^d

A fugitive fled (150) his surroundings — ¹⁰

I am famed at home.

A laggard lagged from hunger —

I give bread to my neighbor.

A man left his land in nakedness —

I have bright clothes, fine linen.

A man ran for lack of one to send —

I am (155) rich in servants.

My house is fine, my dwelling spacious —

⁶ Or: "supplies of mint-drink;" see Barns 1952:9 n. 38.

⁷ Sinuhe is on the side of the hkꜣw ḥꜣswt, the "rulers of mountainlands," the term from which the name "Hyksos" was derived.

⁸ In this passage Sinuhe's prose assumes the symmetrical rhythm of poetry.

⁹ The insertion of a verb still seems to me the best solution for this much debated passage. Weapons, including a shield, do not simply "fall" from a fighter. Only missiles, whether arrows or javelins, "fall." An alternative might be to take ḥꜣn not as the auxiliary but as the verb "to stand" referring to shield and axe. The champion held his shield and axe in readiness while shooting his missiles.

¹⁰ Westendorf (1968:128) gave a new analysis and translation of this beautiful poem which climaxes the account of Sinuhe's career abroad. While it is true that the preposition n in all four occurrences here has the meaning "because of," to translate it thus would destroy the attempt to render the poem as a poem. The change of mood, from Sinuhe's exultation over his success to his intense longing for the lost homeland,

My thoughts are at the palace!

Whichever god decreed this flight, have mercy, bring me home! Surely you will let me see the place in which my heart dwells! What is more important than that my corpse be buried in the land (160) in which I was born!¹⁰ Come to my aid! What if the happy event should occur!¹¹ May god pity me! May he act so as to make happy the end of one whom he punished! May his heart ache for one whom he forced to live abroad! If he is truly appeased today, may he hearken to the prayer of one far away! May he return one whom he made roam the earth to the place from which he carried him off!

(165) May Egypt's king have mercy on me, that I may live by his mercy! May I greet the mistress of the land who is in the palace! May I hear the commands of her children! Would that my body were young again! For old age has come; feebleness has overtaken me. My eyes are heavy, my arms weak; (170) my legs fail to follow. The heart is weary; death is near. May I be conducted to the city of eternity! May I serve the Mistress of All! May she speak well of me to her children; may she spend eternity above me!¹²

Now when the majesty of King Kheperkare was told of the condition in which I was, his majesty sent word (175) to me with royal gifts, in order to gladden the heart of this servant like that of a foreign ruler. And the royal children who were in his palace sent me their messages. Copy of the decree brought to this servant concerning his return to Egypt:

Horus: Living in Births; the Two Ladies: Living in Births; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Kheperkare; the Son of Re: (180) Sesostris, who lives forever. Royal decree to the Attendant Sinuhe:

This decree of the King is brought to you to let you know: That you circled the foreign countries, going from Qedem to Retenu, land giving you to land, was the counsel of your own heart. What had you done that one should act against you? You had not cursed, so that your speech would be reproved. You had not spoken against the counsel of the nobles, that your words should have been rejected. (185) This matter — it carried away your heart. It was not in my heart against you. This your heaven in the palace lives and prospers to this day.¹³ Her head is adorned with the kingship of the land; her children are in the palace. You will store riches which they give you; you will live on their bounty. Come back to Egypt! See the residence in which you lived! Kiss the ground at the great portals, mingle with the courtiers! For today (190) you have begun to age. You have lost a man's strength. Think of the day of burial, the passing into reveredness.

e Gen 49:29-32

A night is made for you with ointments and wrappings from the hand of Tait. A funeral procession is made for you on the day of burial; the mummy case is of gold, its head of lapis lazuli. The sky is above you as you lie in the hearse, oxen drawing you, musicians going before you. The dance of (195) the mw-w-dancers is done at the door of your tomb; the offering-list is read to you; sacrifice is made before your offering-stone. Your tomb-pillars, made of white stone, are among (those of) the royal children. You shall not die abroad! Not shall Asiatics inter you. You shall not be wrapped in the skin of a ram to serve as your coffin.¹⁴ Too long a roaming of the earth! Think of your corpse, come back!

This decree reached me while I was standing (200) in the midst of my tribe. When it had been read to me, I threw myself on my belly. Having touched the soil, I spread it on my chest.¹⁵ I strode around my camp shouting: "What compares with this which is done to a servant whom his heart led astray to alien lands? Truly good is the kindness that saves me from death! Your ka will grant me to reach my end, my body being at home!"

Copy of the reply to this decree:

The servant of the Palace, Sinuhe, (205) says:¹⁶ In very good peace! Regarding the matter of this flight which this servant did in his ignorance. It is your ka, O good occurs in the last distich (as Westendorf suggested), and provides the transition to the prayers for return.

¹⁰ I.e., "what if death should occur while I am still abroad?" So with Westendorf 1968:129-130.

¹² In this context the "Mistress of All" could be either the queen or the goddess Nut. The latter interpretation was preferred by Sander-Hansen 1955-1957:147.

¹³ The queen is meant.

¹⁴ The Ashmolean Ostrakon (Barns 1952:2, 48) reads: n ṯir.tw ḡri.k, and Barns suggests to read nn ṯir.tw ḡri.k (1952:21 n. 18). But since elsewhere ḡrit means "container," "coffin," I assume the same word here and, following the text of B, take it to mean that the ram's skin will not be Sinuhe's coffin.

¹⁵ As a gesture of humility.

¹⁶ This translation of Sinuhe's reply to the king's letter follows in essentials that of Barns 1967:6-14.

god, lord of the Two Lands, which Re loves and which Mont lord of Thebes favors and Amun lord of Thrones-of-the-Two-Lands, and Sobk-Re lord of Sumenu, and Horus, Hathor, Atum with his Ennead, and Sopdu-Neferbau-Semseru the Eastern Horus, and the Lady of Yemet — may she enfold your head — and the conclave upon the flood, and Min-Horus of the hill-countries, and Wereret lady of (210) Punt, Nut, Haroeris-Re, and all the gods of Egypt and the isles of the sea — may they give life and joy to your nostrils, may they endow you with their bounty, may they give you eternity without limit, infinity without bounds! May the fear of you resound in lowlands and highlands, for you have subdued all that the sun encircles! This is the prayer of this servant for his lord who saves from the West.

The lord of knowledge who knows people knew (215) in the majesty of the palace that this servant was afraid to say it. It is like a thing too great to repeat. The great god, the peer of Re, knows the heart of one who has served him willingly. This servant is in the hand of one who thinks about him. He is placed under his care. Your Majesty is the conquering Horus; your arms vanquish all lands. May then your Majesty command to have brought to you the prince of Meki from Qedem, (220) the mountain chiefs from Keshu, and the prince of Menus from the lands of the Fenkhu. They are rulers of renown who have grown up in the love of you. I do not mention Retenu — it belongs to you like your hounds.

Lo, this flight which the servant made — I did not plan it. It was not in my heart; I did not devise it. I do not know what removed me from my place. It was like (225) a dream. As if a Delta-man saw himself in Yebu, a marsh-man in Nubia. I was not afraid; no one ran after me. I had not heard a reproach; my name was not heard in the mouth of the herald. Yet my flesh crept, my feet hurried, my heart drove me; the god who had willed this flight (230) dragged me away. Nor am I a haughty man. He who knows his land respects men. Re has set the fear of you throughout the land, the dread of you in every foreign country. Whether I am at the residence, whether I am in this place, it is you who covers this horizon.¹⁷ The sun rises at your pleasure. The water in the river is drunk when you wish. The air of heaven is breathed at your bidding. This servant will hand over his possessions (235) to the brood¹⁸ which this servant begot in this place. This servant has been sent for! Your Majesty will do as he wishes! One lives by the breath which you give. As Re, Horus, and Hathor love your august nose, may Mont lord of Thebes wish it to live forever!

f Gen 25:5;
Deut 21:15-
17

I was allowed to spend one more day in Yaa, handing over my possessions to my children, my eldest son taking charge of my tribe; (240) all my possessions became his — my serfs, my herds, my fruit, my fruit trees.¹⁹ This servant departed southward. I halted at Horus-ways. The commander in charge of the garrison sent a message to the residence to let it be known. Then his majesty sent a trusted overseer of the royal domains with whom were loaded ships, (245) bearing royal gifts for the Asiatics who had come with me to escort me to Horus-ways. I called each one by his name, while every butler was at his task. When I had started and set sail, there was kneading and straining beside me, until I reached the city of Itj-tawy.

When it dawned, very early, they came to summon me. Ten men came and ten men went to usher me into the palace. My forehead touched the ground between the sphinxes, (250) and the royal children stood in the gateway to meet me. The courtiers who usher through the forecourt set me on the way to the audience-hall. I found his majesty on the great throne in a kiosk of gold.¹⁹ Stretched out on my belly, I did not know myself before him, while this god greeted me pleasantly. I was like a man seized by darkness. (255) My ba was gone, my limbs trembled; my heart was not in my body, I did not know life from death.

His majesty said to one of the courtiers: "Lift him up, let him speak to me." Then his majesty said: "Now you have come, after having roamed foreign lands. Flight has taken its toll of you. You have aged, have reached old age. It is no small matter that your corpse will be interred without being escorted by Bowmen. But don't act thus, don't act thus, speechless (260) though your name was called!" Fearful of punishment²⁰ I answered with the answer of a frightened man: "What has my lord said to me, that I might answer it? It is not disrespect to the god!²¹ It is the terror which is in my body, like that which caused the fateful flight! Here I am before you. Life is yours. May your Majesty do as he wishes!"

¹⁷ Or: yours is all that the horizon covers.

¹⁸ Taking f²t to mean "progeny, brood," as proposed by Barns 1952:26 n. 36.

¹⁹ There is no need to transpose the word before nt q^cm if it is read as wmt (not wmt), this being the word for "enclosure" (see Wb. 1:307). I take it to refer to the light, kiosk type of structure which was built over the dais on which the throne stood, and surrounded the throne on three sides.

Then the royal daughters were brought in, and his majesty said to the queen: "Here is Sinuhe, (265) come as an Asiatic, a product of nomads!" She uttered a very great cry, and the royal daughters shrieked all together. They said to his majesty: "Is it really he, O king, our lord?" Said his majesty: "It is really he!" Now having brought with them their necklaces, rattles, and sistra, they held them out to his majesty:²²

Your hands (270) upon the radiance, eternal king,

Jewels of heaven's mistress!

The Gold²³ gives life to your nostrils,
The Lady of Stars enfolds you!

Southcrown fared north, north crown south,
Joined, united by your majesty's word.
While the Cobra decks your brow,
You deliver the poor from harm.
Peace to you from Re, Lord of Lands!
Hail to you and the Mistress of All!

Slacken your bow, lay down your arrow,
(275) Give breath to him who gasps for breath!
Give us our good gift on this good day,²⁴
Grant us the son of north wind, Bowman born in Egypt!

He made the flight in fear of you,
He left the land in dread of you!
A face that sees you shall not pale,
Eyes that see you shall not fear!

His majesty said: "He shall not fear, he shall not (280) dread!" "He shall be a Companion among the nobles. He shall be among the courtiers. Proceed to the robing-room to wait on him!"

I left the audience-hall, the royal daughters giving me their hands. (285) We went through the great portals, and I was put in the house of a prince. In it were luxuries: a bathroom and mirrors.²⁵ In it were riches from the treasury; clothes of royal linen, myrrh, and the choice perfume of the king and of his favorite courtiers were in every (290) room. Every servant was at his task. Years were removed from my body. I was shaved; my hair was combed. Thus was my squalor returned to the foreign land, my dress to the Sand-farers. I was clothed in fine linen; I was anointed with fine oil. I slept on a bed. I had returned the sand to those who dwell in it, (295) the tree-oil to those who grease themselves with it.

I was given a house and garden that had belonged to a courtier. Many craftsmen rebuilt it, and all its woodwork was made anew. Meals were brought to me from the palace three times, four times a day, apart from what the royal children gave without a moment's pause.

(300) A stone pyramid was built for me in the midst of the pyramids. The masons who build tombs constructed it. A master draughtsman designed in it. A master sculptor carved in it. The overseers of construction in the necropolis busied themselves with it. All the equipment that is placed in (305) a tomb-shaft was supplied. Mortuary priests were given me. A funerary domain was made for me. It had fields and a garden in the right place, as is done for a Companion of the first rank. My statue was overlaid with gold, its skirt with electrum. It was his majesty who ordered it made. There is no commoner for whom the like has been done. I was in (310) the favor of the king, until the day of landing²⁶ came.

(Colophon) It is done from beginning to end as it was found in writing.

²⁰ The Ashmolean Ostrakon (Barns 1952:2, 49) reads: "fear your punishment," seems to me inferior.

²¹ Read: n hr-c n ntr is pw, and see Barns's note on hr-c, "shortcoming," (1952:30-32 n. 50).

²² The princesses hold out the emblems sacred to Hathor and perform a ceremonial dance and a song in which they beg a full pardon for Sinuhe. The song was studied by Brunner 1955:5-11.

²³ Epithet of Hathor.

²⁴ Reading imi n n hnt n nfr m hrw pn nfr, according to Barns (1952:2, 58 and p. 33 n. 58).

²⁵ Following Sander-Hansen (1955-1957:149) in taking mw nw ²*ht* to mean "mirrors."

²⁶ The day of death. Through its beginning and its ending, the story is given the form of the tomb-autobiography in which the narrator looks back on his completed life.

REFERENCES

- Publication: Gardiner 1909; Blackman 1932:1-41; Barns 1952; Sethe 1924:3-17; 1927:5-21. Translation and commentary: Gardiner 1916; Grapow 1952. Translation: Erman 1927:14-29; Lefèbvre 1949:1-25; ANET 18-22; Edel 1968:1-12; Lichtheim AEL 1:222-235. Analysis and evaluation: Posener 1956:87-115. Comments (selection): Alt 1923:48-50; 1941:19ff; Blackman 1930:63-65; 1936:35-40; de Buck 1932:57-60; Clère 1939a:16-29; 1939b 2:829ff.; Brunner 1955:5-11; 1964:139-140; Goedicke 1957:77-85; 1965:29-47; Huffmon 1965; Yoyotte 1964:69-73; Lanczkowski 1958:214-218; Barns 1967:6-14; Westendorf 1968:125-131.

THE SHIPWRECKED SAILOR (1.39)

Miriam Lichtheim

The tale is set in a narrative frame. A high official is returning from an expedition that apparently failed in its objective, for he is despondent and fearful of the reception awaiting him at court. One of his attendants exhorts him to take courage, and as an example of how a disaster may turn into a success, tells him a marvelous adventure that happened to him years ago. At the end of his tale, however, the official is still despondent.

The only preserved papyrus copy of the tale was discovered by Golenischev in the Imperial Museum of St. Petersburg. Nothing is known about its original provenience. The papyrus, called P. Leningrad 1115, is now in Moscow. The work, and the papyrus copy, date from the Middle Kingdom.

(1) The worthy attendant said: Take heart, my lord! We have reached home. The mallet has been seized, the mooring-post staked, the prow-rope placed (5) on land. Praise is given, god is thanked, everyone embraces his fellow. Our crew has returned safely; our troops have had no loss. We have left Wawat behind, we have passed (10) Senmut; we have returned in safety, we have reached our land. Now listen to me, my lord! I am not exaggerating. Wash yourself, pour water over your fingers. You must answer (15) when questioned. You must speak to the king with presence of mind. You must answer without stammering! A man's mouth can save him. His speech makes one forgive him. (20) But do as you like! It is tiresome to talk to you.

But I shall tell you something like it that happened to me. I had set out to the king's mines, and had gone (25) to sea in a ship of a hundred and twenty cubits in length and forty cubits in width. One hundred and twenty sailors were in it of the pick of Egypt. Looked they at sky, looked they at land, their hearts were stouter (30) than lions. They could foretell a storm before it came, a tempest before it broke.

A storm came up while we were at sea, before we could reach land. As we sailed (35) it made a 'swell', and in it a wave eight cubits tall. The mast — it (the wave) struck (it).¹ Then the ship died. Of those in it not one remained. I was cast (40) on an island by a wave of the sea. I spent three days alone, with my heart as companion. Lying in the shelter of trees I hugged (45) the shade.

Then I stretched my legs to discover what I might put in my mouth. I found figs and grapes there, all sorts of fine vegetables, sycamore figs, unnotched and notched,² (50) and cucumbers that were as if tended. Fish were there and fowl; there is nothing that was not there. I stuffed myself and put some down, because I had too much in my arms. Then I cut a fire drill, (55) made a fire and gave a burnt offering to the gods.

Then I heard a thundering noise and thought, "It is a wave of the sea." Trees splintered, (60) the ground trembled. Uncovering my face, I found it was a snake that was coming. He was of thirty cubits; his beard was over two cubits long. His body was overlaid (65) with gold; his eyebrows were of real lapis lazuli. He was bent up in front.

Then he opened his mouth to me, while I was on my belly before him. He said to me: "Who brought you, who brought you, fellow, (70) who brought you? If you delay telling me who brought you to this island, I shall make you find yourself reduced to ashes, becoming like a thing unseen." <I said>: "Though you speak to me, I do not hear (75) it; I am before you without knowing myself." Then he took me in his mouth, carried me to the place where he lived, and set me down unhurt, (80) I being whole with nothing taken from me.

Then he opened his mouth to me, while I was on my belly before him. He said to me: "Who brought you, who brought you, fellow, who brought you to this island (85) of the sea, whose two sides are in water?" Then I answered him, my arms bent before him. I said to him: "I had set out (go) to the mines on a mission of the king in a ship of a hundred and twenty cubits in length and forty cubits in width. One hundred and twenty sailors were in it of the pick of Egypt. (95) Looked they at sky, looked they at land, their hearts were stouter than lions. They could foretell a storm before it came, a tempest before it struck. Each of them — his heart was stouter, (100) his arm stronger than his mate's. There was no fool among them. A storm came up while we were at sea, before we could reach land. As we sailed it made a 'swell', and in it a wave (105) eight cubits tall. The mast — it struck (it). Then the ship died. Of those in it not one remained, except myself who is here with you. I was brought to this island (110) by a wave of the sea."

¹ The sentence has been read as: in ht hw n.i s(t), and rendered as "the mast (or, a piece of wood) struck the wave for me," thereby flattening it and thus helping the sailor, while the ship nevertheless sank. But the sense is poor, for the context leads one to expect that the wave hit the ship and sank it. I believe that the element n.i is not the preposition with suffix but rather the common graphic peculiarity of the spelling of hwi, "to strike," and also of hwi, "to flood," with an intrusive n.i (see Wb. 3:49). I also take the s to be the suffix referring to the wave; and the dependent pronoun sw needs to be added as the object. This admittedly imperfect solution is presented largely in order to emphasize that the passage remains problematic.

² I.e., unripe and ripe figs; the ripe ones were notched, as was explained by Keimer 1928:288ff. and 1928:50ff.

Then he said to me: "Don't be afraid, don't be afraid, fellow; don't be pale-faced, now that you have come to me. It is god who has let you live and brought you to this island of the ka.³ (115) There is nothing that is not in it; it is full of all good things. You shall pass month upon month until you have completed four months in this island. Then (120) a ship will come from home with sailors in it whom you know. You shall go home with them, you shall die in your town.

"How happy is he who tells what he has tasted,⁴ when the calamity has passed. (125) I shall tell you something similar that happened on this island. I was here with my brothers and there were children with them. In all we were seventy-five serpents, children and brothers, without mentioning a little daughter whom I had obtained through prayer. Then a star (130) fell, and they went up in flames through it. It so happened that I was not with them in the fire, I was not among them. I could have died for their sake when I found them as one heap of corpses."

"If you are brave and control your heart, you shall embrace your children, you shall kiss your wife, you shall see your home. It is better than everything else. (135) You shall reach home, you shall be there among your brothers."

Stretched out on my belly I touched the ground before him; then I said to him: "I shall speak of your power to the king, I shall let him know (140) of your greatness. I shall send you ibi and hknw oils, laudanum, hsyt-spice, and the incense of the temples which pleases all the gods. I shall tell what happened to me, what I saw of your power. One will praise god for you in the city before the councillors of the whole land. I shall slaughter (145) oxen for you as burnt offering; I shall sacrifice geese to you. I shall send you ships loaded with all the treasures of Egypt, as is done for a god who befriends people in a distant land not known to the people."

Then he laughed at me for the things I had said, which seemed foolish to him. (150) He said to me: "You are not rich in myrrh and all kinds of incense. But I am the lord of Punt, and myrrh is my very own. That hknw-oil you spoke of sending, it abounds on this island. Moreover, when you have left this place, you will not see this island again; it will have become water."

Then the ship (155) came, as he had foretold. I went and placed myself on a tall tree, I recognized those that were in it. When I went to report it, I found that he knew it. He said to me: "In health, in health, fellow, to your home, that you may see your children! Make me a good name in your town; that is what I ask (160) of you." I put myself on my belly, my arms bent before him. Then he gave me a load of myrrh, hknw-oil, laudanum, hsyt-spice, tišpss-spice, perfume, eyepaint, giraffe's tails, great lumps of incense, (165) elephant's tusks, greyhounds, long-tailed monkeys, baboons, and all kinds of precious things.

I loaded them on the ship. Then I put myself on my belly to thank him and he said to me: "You will reach home in two months. You will embrace your children. You will flourish at home, you will be buried."⁵

I went down to the shore (170) near the ship; I hailed the crew which was in the ship. I gave praise on the shore to the lord of the island, those in the ship did the same. We sailed north to the king's residence. We reached the residence in two months, all as he had said. I went in to the king; (175) I presented to him the gifts I had brought from the island. He praised god for me in the presence of the councillors of the whole land. I was made an attendant and endowed with serfs of his.

See me after (180) I had reached land, after I saw what I had tasted! Listen to me! It is good for people to listen.

He said to me: "Don't make an effort, my friend. Who would give water at dawn (185) to a goose that will be slaughtered in the morning?"⁶ (Colophon) It is done from beginning to end as it was found in writing, by the scribe with skilled fingers, Imenaa, son of Imeny — life, prosperity, health!

³ The expression "island of the ka" is curious. Gardiner rendered it as "phantom island" (1908:65).

⁴ Eg. says "to taste" for "to experience."

⁵ This has been the usual rendering of mpy.k m hnw krst.k, in which hnw was taken to mean "home," as it does elsewhere in the tale, and krst.k to stand for krs.tw.k. Brunner-Traut (1963:9) now renders: "und wirst dich in deinem Grabe verjüngen." This is grammatically perfect, but I find the older rendering more plausible, since the emphasis of the tale is on the "return home."

⁶ For this timeless proverb see Spalinger 1984.

REFERENCES

Publication: Golenischev 1912; 1916:pls. 1-8; Erman 1906:1-26; Blackman 1932:41-48. Translation: Erman 1927:29-35; Lefebvre 1949:29-40; Keimer 1928a:288 ff.; 1928b:50 ff.; Gardiner 1908:65; Brunner-Traut 1963:5-10; Lichtheim AEL 1:211-215.

THE TWO BROTHERS (1.40)
(P. D'Orbiney = P. BM 10183)

Miriam Lichtheim

This is a complex and vivid tale, rich in motifs that have parallels in later literatures. The two protagonists have some connection with a myth of the two gods, Anubis and Bata, that was told as a tradition of the Seventeenth Nome of Upper Egypt. The myth is preserved in a late form in the Papyrus Jumilhac (see Vandier 1962). More important than the mythological connection is the depiction of human characters, relationships, and feelings in a narration of sustained force. The episode of Bata and his brother's wife has a remarkable similarity with the tale of Joseph and Potiphar's wife, a similarity that has often been commented on. References to the recurrence in other literatures of the tale's folkloristic motifs will be found in the works cited, especially in Lefebvre's and Brunner-Traut's comments to their translations.

Papyrus D'Orbiney is written in a beautiful hand by the scribe Ennana who lived at the end of the 19th Dynasty.

(1.1) It is said, there were two brothers, of the same mother and the same father. Anubis was the name of the elder, and Bata the name of the younger. As for Anubis, he had a house and a wife; and his young brother was with him as if he were a son. He was the one who made clothes for him, and he went behind his cattle to the fields. He was the one who did the plowing, and he harvested for him. He was the one who did for him all kinds of labor in the fields. Indeed, his young brother was an excellent man. There was none like him in the whole land,^a for a god's strength was in him.

Now when many days had passed, his young brother [was tending] his cattle according to his daily custom. And he [returned] to his house in the evening, laden with all kinds of field plants, and with milk, with wood, and with every [good thing] of the field. He placed them before his [elder brother], as he was sitting with his wife. Then he drank and ate and [went to sleep in] his stable among his cattle.

Now when it had dawned and another day had come, [he took foods] that were cooked and placed them before his elder brother. Then he took bread for himself for the fields, and he drove his cattle to let them eat in the fields. He walked behind his cattle, and they would say to him: "The grass is good in such-and-such a place." And he heard all they said and took them to the place of (2.1) good grass that they desired. Thus the cattle he tended became exceedingly fine, and they increased their offspring very much.

Now at plowing time his [elder] brother said to him: "Have a team [of oxen] made ready for us

^a Job 1:8;
2:3

^b Gen 39:7

for plowing, for the soil has emerged and is right for plowing. Also, come to the field with seed, for we shall start plowing tomorrow." So he said to him. Then the young brother made all the preparations that his elder brother had told him [to make].

Now when it had dawned and another day had come, they went to the field with their [seed] and began to plow. And [their hearts] were very pleased with this work they had undertaken. And many days later, when they were in the field, they had need of seed. Then he sent his young brother, saying: "Hurry, fetch us seed from the village." His young brother found the wife of his elder brother seated braiding her hair. He said to her: "Get up, give me seed, (3.1) so that I may hurry to the field, for my elder brother is waiting for me. Don't delay." She said to him: "Go, open the storeroom and fetch what you want. Don't make me leave my hairdo unfinished."

Then the youth entered his stable and fetched a large vessel, for he wished to take a great quantity of seed. He loaded himself with barley and emmer and came out with it. Thereupon she said to him: "How much is what you have on your shoulder?" He said to her: "Three sacks of emmer and two sacks of barley, five in all, are on my shoulder." So he said to her. Then she [spoke to] him saying: "There is [great] strength in you. I see your vigor daily." And she desired to know him as a man. She got up, took hold of him, and said to him: "Come, let us spend an hour lying together.^b It will be good for you. And I will make fine clothes for you."

Then the youth became like a leopard in [his] anger over the wicked speech she had made to him; and she became very frightened. He rebuked her, saying: "Look, you are like a mother to me; and your husband is like a father to me. He who is older than I has raised me. What (4.1) is this great wrong you said to me? Do not say it to me again! But I will not tell it to anyone. I will not let it come from my mouth to any man." He picked up his load; he went off to the field. He reached his elder brother, and they began to work at their task. When evening had come, his elder brother returned to his house. And his young brother tended his cattle, loaded himself with all things of the field, and drove his cattle before him to let them sleep in their stable in the village.

Now the wife of his elder brother was afraid on account of the speech she had made. So she took fat and grease and made herself appear as if she had been beaten, in order to tell her husband, "It was your young brother who beat me." Her husband returned in the evening according to his daily custom. He reached his house and found his wife lying down and seeming ill. She did not pour water over his hands in the usual manner; nor had she lit a fire for him. His house was in darkness, and she lay vomiting.

Her husband said to her: "Who has had words with you?" She said to him: "No one has had words with me except your (5.1) young brother. When he came to take seed to you, he found me sitting alone. He said to me: 'Come, let us spend an hour lying together; loosen¹ your braids.' So he said to me. But I would not listen to him. 'Am I not your mother? Is your elder brother not like a father to you?' So I said to him. He became frightened and he beat <me>, so as to prevent me from telling you. Now if you let him live, I shall die! Look, when he returns, do [not let him live]!² For I am ill from this evil design which he was about to carry out in the morning."³

Then his elder brother became like a leopard. He sharpened his spear and took it in his hand. Then his elder <brother> stood behind the door <of> his stable, in order to kill his young brother when he came in the evening to let his cattle enter the stable. Now when the sun had set he loaded himself with all the plants of the field according to his daily custom. He returned, and as the lead cow was about to enter the stable she said to her herdsman: "Here is your elder brother waiting for you with his spear in order to kill you. Run away from him." He heard what his lead cow said, and (6.1) when another went in she said the same. He looked under the door of his stable and saw the feet of his elder brother as he stood behind the door with his spear in his hand. He set his load on the ground and took off at a run so as to flee. And his elder brother went after him with his spear.

Then his young brother prayed to Pre-Harakhti, saying: "My good lord! It is you who judge between the wicked and the just!" And Pre heard all his plea; and Pre made a great body of water appear between him and his elder brother, and it was full of crocodiles. Thus one came to be on the one side, and the other on the other side. And his elder brother struck his own hand twice, because he had failed to kill him. Then his young brother called to him on this side, saying: "Wait here until dawn! When the Aten has risen, I (7.1) shall contend with you before him; and he will hand over the wicked to the just! For I shall not be with you any more. I shall not be in the place in which you are. I shall go to the Valley of the Pine."

Now when it dawned and another day had come, and Pre-Harakhti had risen, one gazed at the other. Then the youth rebuked his elder brother, saying: "What is your coming after me to kill me wrongfully, without having listened to my words? For I am yet your young brother, and you are like a father to me, and your wife is like a mother to me. Is it not so that when I was sent to fetch seed for us your wife said to me: 'Come, let us spend an hour lying together?' But look, it has been turned about for you into another thing." Then he let him know all that had happened between him and his wife. And he swore by Pre-Harakhti, saying: "As to your coming to kill me wrongfully, you carried your spear on the testimony of a filthy whore!" Then he took a reed knife, cut off his phallus, and threw it into the water; and the catfish swallowed it. And he (8.1) grew weak and became feeble. And his elder brother became very sick at heart and stood weeping for him loudly. He could not cross over to where his young brother was on account of the crocodiles.

Then his young brother called to him, saying: "If you recall something evil, will you not also recall something good, or something that I have done for you? Go back to your home and tend your cattle, for I shall not stay in the place where you are. I shall go to the Valley of the Pine. But what you shall do for me is to come and look after me, when you learn that something has happened to me. I shall take out my heart and place it on top of the blossom of the pine. If the pine is cut down and falls to the ground, you shall come to search for it. If you spend seven years searching for it, let your heart not be disgusted. And when you find it and place it in a bowl of cool water, I shall live to take revenge on him who wronged me. You will know that something has happened to me when one puts a jug of beer in your hand and it ferments. Do not delay at all when this happens to you."

¹ Wnh here does not mean "to put on"; on the contrary, it means "to loosen" one's braids, as a woman does when she lies down. This meaning of wnh is known from the medical texts; see von Deines and Westendorf 1961-1962 2:194, where the authors write: "Der Terminus wnh bezeichnet eine Lösung zweier Teile von einander, ohne dass eine vollständige Trennung erfolgt."

² Or restore: "You shall kill him."

³ Lit., "yesterday." The day ended at sunset.

Then he went away to the Valley of the Pine; and his elder brother went to his home, his hand on his head and smeared with dirt.⁴ When he reached his house, he killed his wife, cast her to the dogs,⁵ and sat mourning for his young brother.

Now many days after this, his young brother was in the Valley of the Pine. There was no one with him, and he spent the days hunting desert game. In the evening he returned to sleep under the pine on top of whose blossom his heart was. And after (9.1) many days he built a mansion for himself with his own hand <in> the Valley of the Pine, filled with all good things, for he wanted to set up a household.

Coming out of his mansion, he encountered the Ennead as they walked about administering the entire land. Then the Ennead addressed him in unison, saying: "O Bata, Bull of the Ennead, are you alone here, having left your town on account of the wife of Anubis, your elder brother? He has killed his wife and you are avenged of all the wrong done to you." And as they felt very sorry for him, Pre-Harakhti said to Khnum: "Fashion a wife for Bata, that he not live alone!" Then Khnum made a companion for him who was more beautiful in body than any woman in the whole land, for <the fluid of> every god was in her. Then the seven Hathors came <to> see her, and they said with one voice: "She will die by the knife."

He desired her very much. She sat in his house while he spent the day (10.1) hunting desert game, bringing it and putting it before her. He said to her: "Do not go outdoors, lest the sea snatch you. I cannot rescue you from it, because I am a woman like you. And my heart lies on top of the blossom of the pine. But if another finds it, I shall fight with him." Then he revealed to her all his thoughts.

c2 Kgs 9:30-37

Now many days after this, when Bata had gone hunting according to his daily custom, the young girl went out to stroll under the pine which was next to her house. Then she saw the sea surging behind her, and she started to run before it and entered her house. Thereupon the sea called to the pine, saying: "Catch her for me!" And the pine took away a lock of her hair. Then the sea brought it to Egypt and laid it in the place of the washermen of Pharaoh. Thereafter the scent of the lock of hair got into the clothes of Pharaoh. And the king quarreled with the royal washermen, saying: "A scent of ointment is in the clothes of Pharaoh!" He quarreled with them every day, and (11.1) they did not know what to do.

The chief of the royal washermen went to the shore, his heart very sore on account of the daily quarrel with him. Then he realized⁵ that he was standing on the shore opposite the lock of hair which was in the water. He had someone go down, and it was brought to him. Its scent was found to be very sweet, and he took it to Pharaoh.

Then the learned scribes of Pharaoh were summoned, and they said to Pharaoh: "As for this lock of hair, it belongs to a daughter of Pre-Harakhti in whom there is the fluid of every god. It is a greeting to you from another country. Let envoys go to every foreign land to search for her. As for the envoy who goes to the Valley of the Pine, let many men go with him to fetch her." His majesty said: "What you have said is very good." And they were sent.

Now many days after this, the men who had gone abroad returned to report to his majesty. But those who had gone to the Valley of the Pine did not return, for Bata had killed them, leaving only one of them to report to his majesty. Then his majesty sent many soldiers and charioteers to bring her back, and (12.1) with them was a woman into whose hand one had given all kinds of beautiful ladies' jewelry. The woman returned to Egypt with her, and there was jubilation for her in the entire land. His majesty loved her very very much, and he gave her the rank of Great Lady. He spoke with her in order to make her tell about her husband, and she said to his majesty: "Have the pine felled and cut up." The king sent soldiers with their tools to fell the pine.

⁴ Gestures of mourning.

⁵ Smw, "to establish," evolved to include the meanings "to record" and "to determine." Hence the chief washerman did not "stand still" but rather he "determined" or "realized" that he was standing opposite the lock of hair.

They reached the pine, they felled the blossom on which was Bata's heart, and he fell dead at that moment.

When it had dawned and the next day had come, and the pine had been felled, Anubis, the elder brother of Bata, entered his house. He sat down to wash his hands. He was given a jug of beer, and it fermented. He was given another of wine, and it turned bad. Then he took his (13.1) staff and his sandals, as well as his clothes and his weapons, and he started to journey to the Valley of the Pine. He entered the mansion of his young brother and found his young brother lying dead on his bed. He wept when he saw his young brother lying dead. He went to search for the heart of his young brother beneath the pine under which his young brother had slept in the evening.⁶ He spent three years searching for it without finding it.

When he began the fourth year, his heart longed to return to Egypt, and he said: "I shall depart tomorrow." So he said in his heart. When it had dawned and another day had come, he went to walk under the pine and spent the day searching for it. When he turned back in the evening, he looked once again in search of it and he found a fruit. He came back with it, and it was the heart of his young brother! He fetched a bowl of cool water, placed it in it, and sat down according to his daily <custom>.

When night had come, (14.1) his heart swallowed the water, and Bata twitched in all his body. He began to look at his elder brother while his heart was in the bowl. Then Anubis, his elder brother, took the bowl of cool water in which was the heart of his young brother and <let> him drink it. Then his heart stood in its place, and he became as he had been. Thereupon they embraced each other, and they talked to one another.

Then Bata said to his elder brother: "Look, I shall change myself into a great bull of beautiful color, of a kind unknown to man, and you shall sit on my back. By the time the sun has risen, we shall be where my wife is, that I may avenge myself. You shall take me to where the king is, for he will do for you everything good. You shall be rewarded with silver and gold for taking me to Pharaoh. For I shall be a great marvel, and they will jubilate over me in the whole land. Then you shall depart to your village."

When it had dawned (15.1) and the next day had come, Bata assumed the form which he had told his elder brother. Then Anubis, his elder brother, sat on his back. At dawn he reached the place where the king was. His majesty was informed about him; he saw him and rejoiced over him very much. He made a great offering for him, saying: "It is a great marvel." And there was jubilation over him in the entire land. Then the king rewarded his elder brother with silver and gold, and he dwelled in his village. The king gave him many people and many things, for Pharaoh loved him very much, more than anyone else in the whole land.

Now when many days had passed, he⁷ entered the kitchen, stood where the Lady was, and began to speak to her, saying: "Look, I am yet alive!" She said to him: "Who are you?" He said to her: "I am Bata. I know that when you had the pine felled for Pharaoh, it was on account of me, so that I should not live. Look, (16.1) I am yet alive! I am a bull." The Lady became very frightened because of the speech her husband had made to her. Then he left the kitchen.

His majesty sat down to a day of feasting with her. She poured drink for his majesty, and he was very happy with her. Then she said to his majesty: "Swear to me by God, saying: 'Whatever she will say, I will listen to it!'" He listened to all that she said: "Let me eat of the liver of this bull; for he is good for nothing." So she said to him. He became very vexed over what she had said, and the heart of Pharaoh was very sore.

When it had dawned and another day had come, the king proclaimed a great offering, namely, the sacrifice of the bull. He sent one of the chief royal slaughterers to sacrifice the bull. And when he had been sacrificed and was carried on the shoulders of the men, he shook his neck and let fall two drops of blood beside the two doorposts of his majesty, one on the one side of the great portal of Pharaoh, and the other on the other side. They grew into two (17.1) big Persea trees, each of them outstanding. Then one went to tell his majesty: "Two big Persea trees have grown this night — a great marvel for his majesty — beside the great portal of his majesty." There was jubilation over them in the whole land, and the king made an offering to them.

Many days after this, his majesty appeared at the audience window of lapis lazuli with a wreath of all kinds of flowers on his neck. Then he <mounted> a golden chariot and came out of the palace to view the Persea trees. Then the Lady came out on a team behind Pharaoh. His majesty sat down under one Persea tree <and the Lady under the other. Then Bata> spoke to his wife: "Ha, you false one! I am Bata! I am alive

⁶ The phrasing fails to take into account that the pine has been felled.

⁷ The bull.

[in spite of you]. I know that when you had <the pine> felled for Pharaoh, it was on account of me. And when I became a bull, you had me killed.”

Many days after this, the Lady stood pouring drink for his majesty, and he was happy with her. Then she said to his majesty: “Swear to me by God, saying: ‘Whatever she will say, I will listen to it!’ So you shall say.” He listened (18.1) to all that she said. She said: “Have the two Persea trees felled and made into fine furniture.” The king listened to all that she said. After a short while his majesty sent skilled craftsmen. They felled the Persea trees of Pharaoh, and the Queen, the Lady, stood watching it. Then a splinter flew and entered the mouth of the Lady. She swallowed it, and in a moment she became pregnant. The king <ordered> made of them⁸ whatever she desired.

Many days after this, she gave birth to a son. One went to tell his majesty: “A son has been born to you.” He was fetched, and a nurse and maids were assigned to him. And there was jubilation over him in the whole land. The king sat down to a feast day and held him on his lap. From that hour his majesty loved him very much, and he designated him as (19.1) Viceroy of Kush. And many days after this, his majesty made him crown prince of the whole land.

Now many days after this, when he had spent [many years] as crown prince of the whole land, his majesty flew up to heaven.⁹ Then the king¹⁰ said: “Let my great royal officials be brought to me, that I may let them know all that has happened to me.” Then his wife was brought to him. He judged her in their presence, and they gave their assent. His elder brother was brought to him, and he made him crown prince of the whole land. He <spent> thirty years as king of Egypt. He departed from life; and his elder brother stood in his place on the day of death.

(Colophon) It has come to a good end under the scribe of the treasury, Kagab, and the scribes of the treasury, Hori and Meremope. Written by the scribe Ennana, the owner of this book. Whoever maligns this book, Thoth will contend with him.

⁸ The Persea trees.

⁹ I.e., the king died.

¹⁰ Bata.

REFERENCES

Publication: SPHC pls. 9-19; Möller 1927 1:1-20; Gardiner 1932b:9-29; Translation: Lefébvre 1949:137-158; Schott 1950:193-204; Brunner-Traut 1963:28-40; Wente 1973:92-107. Comments: Yoyotte 1952:157-159; Vandier 1962:45-46, 105-106, 114-115; Jesi 1962:276-296; Blumenthal 1973:1-17; von Deines and Westendorf 1961-62 2:194; Lichtheim AEL 2:203-211.

THE REPORT OF WENAMUN (1.41) (P. Moscow 120)

Miriam Lichtheim

In its present state the papyrus consists of two pages with a total of 142 lines. The first page has numerous lacunae, and the end of the story is missing. The papyrus was written at the end of the 20th Dynasty, that is to say, directly after the events which the report relates. Whether or not the report reflects an actual mission, it depicts a true historical situation and a precise moment. It is the third decade of the reign of Ramses XI (1090-1080 BCE), during which the king yielded power to the two men who shared the effective rule of Egypt: Herihor in the south and Smendes in the north. The empire had been lost, and thus so simple an enterprise as the purchase of Lebanese timber could be depicted as a perilous adventure.

What makes the story so remarkable is the skill with which it is told. The Late-Egyptian vernacular is handled with great subtlety. The verbal duels between Wenamun and the prince of Byblos, with their changes of mood and shades of meaning that include irony, represent Egyptian thought and style at their most advanced. What Sinuhe is for the Middle Kingdom, Wenamun is for the New Kingdom: a literary culmination. The differences between them are not only that the one reflects political power and the other political decline, but more importantly that almost a millennium of human history has gone by, a time during which the peoples of the ancient world lost much of their archaic simplicity. Wenamun stands on the threshold of the first millennium BCE, a millennium in which the modern world began, a world shaped by men and women who were the likes of ourselves.

(1.1) Year 5,¹ fourth month of summer, day 16, the day of departure of Wenamun, the Elder of the Portal of the Temple of Amun, Lord of Thrones-of-the-Two-Lands, to fetch timber for the great noble bark of Amun-Re, King of Gods, which is upon the river and [is called] Amun-user-he.²

On the day of my arrival at Tanis, the place where Smendes and Tentamun are,³ I gave them the dispatches of Amun-Re, King of Gods. They had them read out before them and they said: "I will do, I will do as Amun-Re, King of Gods, our lord has said."

I stayed until the fourth month of summer in Tanis. Then Smendes and Tentamun sent me off with the ship's captain Mengebet,⁴ and I went down upon the great sea of Syria in the first month of summer,⁵ day 1. I arrived at Dor,⁶ a Tjeker town; and Beder, its prince, had fifty loaves, one jug of wine, (1.10) and one ox-haunch brought to me. Then a man of my ship fled after stealing one vessel of gold worth 5 deben, four jars of silver worth 20 deben, and a bag with 11 deben of silver; [total of what he stole]: gold 5 deben, silver 31 deben.

That morning, when I had risen, I went to where the prince was and said to him: "I have been robbed in your harbor. Now you are the prince of this land, you are the one who controls it. Search for my money! Indeed the money belongs to Amun-Re, King of Gods, the lord of the lands. It belongs to Smendes; it belongs to Herihor, my lord, and (to) the other magnates of Egypt. It belongs to you; it belongs to Weret; it belongs to Mekmer; it belongs to Tickerbaal, the prince of Byblos!"⁷ He said to me: "Are you serious? 'Are you joking?'⁸ Indeed I do not understand the demand you make to me. If it had been a thief belonging to my land who had gone down to your ship and stolen your money, I would replace it for you from my storehouse, until (1.20) your thief, whatever his name, had been found. But the thief who robbed you, he is yours, he belongs to your ship. Spend a few days here with me; I will search for him."

I stayed nine days moored in his harbor. Then I went to him and said to him: "Look, you have not found my money. [Let me depart] with the ship captains, with those who go to sea."

[The next eight lines are broken. Apparently the prince advises Wenamun to wait some more, but Wenamun departs. He passes Tyre and approaches Byblos. Then he seizes thirty deben of silver from a ship he has encountered which belongs to the Tjeker. He tells the owners that he will keep the money until his money has been found. Through this action he incurs the enmity of the Tjeker].

They departed and I celebrated [in] a tent on the shore of the sea in the harbor of Byblos. And [I made a hiding place for] Amun-of-the-Road⁸ and placed his possessions in it. Then the prince of Byblos sent to me saying: "[Leave my] harbor!" I sent to him, saying: "Where shall [I go]? -----. If [you have a ship to carry me], let me be taken back to Egypt." I spent twenty-nine days in his harbor, and he spent time sending to me daily to say: "Leave my harbor!"

Now while he was offering to his gods, the god took hold of a young man [of] his young men and put him in a trance. He said to him:⁹ "Bring [the] god up! Bring the envoy who is carrying him! (1.40) It is Amun who sent him. It is he who made him come!" Now it was while the entranced one was entranced that night that I had found a ship headed for Egypt. I had loaded all my belongings into it and was watching for the darkness, saying: "When it descends I will load the god so that no other eye shall see him."

Then the harbor master came to me, saying: "Wait until morning, says the prince!" I said to him: "Was it not you who daily took time to come to me, saying: 'Leave my harbor'? Do you now say: 'Wait this night,' in order to let the ship that I found depart, and then you will come to say: 'Go away'?" He went and told it to the prince. Then the prince sent to the captain of the ship, saying: "Wait until morning, says the prince."

When morning came, he sent and brought me up, while the god rested in the tent where he was on the shore of the sea. I found him seated in his

¹ The year date is reckoned by the "Renaissance Era" introduced by Herihor in the 19th regnal year of Ramses XI. The month dates given for the beginning of Wenamun's journey are garbled and require emendation. This first date might be emended to "second month of summer."

² The name of the great processional bark of Amun of Thebes.

³ Smendes, the ruler of Tanis, subsequently became the first king of the 21st Dyn. The fact that, in the tale, his wife Tentamun is always mentioned together with him suggests that she was an important person, perhaps a Ramesside princess, who shared the rule with her husband.

⁴ The captain is a Syrian, and so apparently is the crew; but the ship is in the service of Egypt.

⁵ Emend to: "first month of the inundation."

⁶ A port town on the coast of northern Palestine, controlled by the Tjeker, a people belonging to the "sea peoples" who, having failed to invade Egypt, had settled on the Palestinian coast. Concerning Dor, see now Stern 1994.

⁷ I.e., the stolen money was intended for the persons with whom Wenamun expected to do business.

⁸ The statuette which represented Amun in his aspect of protector of travelers.

⁹ I.e., the man in a trance says to the prince.

upper chamber with his back against a window, and the waves of the great sea of Syria broke behind (1.50) his head. I said to him: "Blessings of Amun!" He said to me: "How long is it to this day since you came from the place where Amun is?" I said to him: "Five whole months till now." He said to me: "If you are right, where is the dispatch of Amun that was in your hand? Where is the letter of the High Priest of Amun that was in your hand?" I said to him: "I gave them to Smendes and Tentamun." Then he became very angry and said to me: "Now then, dispatches, letters you have none. Where is the ship of pine-wood¹⁰ that Smendes gave you? Where is its Syrian crew? Did he not entrust you to this foreign ship's captain in order to have him kill you and have them throw you into the sea? From whom would one then seek the god? And you, from whom would one seek you?" So he said to me.

I said to him: "Is it not an Egyptian ship? Those who sail under Smendes are Egyptian crews. He has no Syrian crews."¹¹ He said to me: "Are there not twenty ships here in my harbor that do business with Smendes? As for Sidon, (2.1) that other (place) you passed, are there not another fifty ships there that do business with Werekter and haul to his house?"

I was silent in this great moment. Then he spoke to me, saying: "On what business have you come?" I said to him: "I have come in quest of timber for the great noble bark of Amun-Re, King of Gods. What your father did, what the father of your father did, you too will do it." So I said to him. He said to me: "True, they did it. If you pay me for doing it, I will do it. My relations carried out this business after Pharaoh had sent six ships laden with the goods of Egypt, and they had been unloaded into their storehouses. You, what have you brought for me?"

He had the daybook of his forefathers brought and had it read before me. They found entered in his book a thousand deben of silver and all sorts of things. (2.10) He said to me: "If the ruler of Egypt were the lord of what is mine and I were his servant, he would not have sent silver and gold to say: 'Carry out the business of Amun.' It was not a royal gift that they gave to my father! I too, I am not your servant, nor am I the servant of him who sent you! If I shout aloud to the Lebanon, the sky opens and the logs lie here on the shore of the sea! Give me the sails you brought to move your ships, loaded with logs for <Egypt>! Give me the ropes you brought [to lash the pines] that I am to fell in order to make them for you ---. ----- that I am to make for you for the sails of your ships; or the yards may be too heavy and may break, and you may die <in> the midst of the sea. For Amun makes thunder in the sky ever since he placed Seth beside him!¹² Indeed, Amun has (2.20) founded all the lands. He founded them after having first founded the land of Egypt from which you have come. Thus craftsmanship came from it in order to reach the place where I am! Thus learning came from it in order to reach the place where I am!¹³ What are these foolish travels they made you do?"

I said to him: "Wrong! These are not foolish travels that I am doing. There is no ship on the river that does not belong to Amun. His is the sea and his the Lebanon of which you say, 'It is mine.' It is a growing ground for Amun-user-he, the lord of every ship. Truly, it was Amun-Re, King of Gods, who said to Herihor, my master: 'Send me!' And he made me come with this great god. But look, you have let this great god spend these twenty-nine days moored in your harbor. Did you not know that he was here? Is he not he who he was? You are prepared to haggle over the Lebanon with Amun, its lord? As to your saying, the former kings sent silver and gold: If they had owned life and health, they would not have sent these things. (2.30) It was in place of life and health that they sent these things to your fathers! But Amun-Re, King of Gods, he is the lord of life and health, and he was the lord of your fathers! They passed their lifetimes offering to Amun. You too, you are the servant of Amun!

If you will say 'I will do' to Amun, and will carry out business, you will live, you will prosper, you will be healthy; you will be beneficent to your whole land and your people. Do not desire what belongs to Amun-Re, King of Gods! Indeed, a lion loves his possessions! Have your scribe brought to me that I may send him to Smendes and Tentamun, the pillars Amun has set up for the north of his land; and they will send all that is needed. I will send him to them, saying: 'Have it brought until I return to the south; then I shall refund you all your expenses.'¹⁴ So I said to him.

¹⁰ Or, "for (the transport of) the pine wood."

¹¹ Wenamun claims that Syrian crews who sail for Egypt are Egyptian crews.

¹² Seth was equated with the Syrian Baal and both were storm gods.

¹³ The gist of the prince's speech is that, though Egypt was created by Amun before all other lands and is thus the motherland of all the arts, the civilization of Syria is now fully grown and no longer dependent on Egypt.

¹⁴ I.e., after Wenamun has returned to Thebes, his master Herihor will reimburse Smendes and Tentamun.

He placed my letter in the hand of his messenger; and he loaded the keel, the prow-piece, and the stern-piece, together with four other hewn logs, seven in all, and sent them to Egypt. His messenger who had gone to Egypt returned to me in Syria in the first month of winter, Smendes and Tentamun having sent: (2.40) four jars and one kakmen-vessel of gold; five jars of silver; ten garments of royal linen; ten hrd-garments¹⁵ of fine linen; five hundred smooth linen mats; five hundred ox-hides; five hundred ropes; twenty sacks of lentils; and thirty baskets of fish. And she had sent to me:¹⁶ five garments of fine linen; five hrd-garments of fine linen; one sack of lentils; and five baskets of fish.

The prince rejoiced. He assigned three hundred men and three hundred oxen, and he set supervisors over them to have them fell the timbers. They were felled and they lay there during the winter. In the third month of summer they dragged them to the shore of the sea. The prince came out and stood by them, and he sent to me, saying: "Come!" Now when I had been brought into his presence, the shadow of his sunshade fell on me. Then Penamun, a butler of his,¹⁷ intervened, saying: "The shadow of Pharaoh, your lord, has fallen upon you." And he was angry with him and said: "Leave him alone."

As I stood before him, he addressed me, saying: "Look, the business my fathers did in the past, I have done it, although you did not do for me what your fathers did for mine. Look, the last of your timber has arrived and is ready. Do as I wish, and come to load it. For has it not been given to you? (2.50) Do not come to look at the terror of the sea. For if you look at the terror of the sea, you will see my own! Indeed, I have not done to you what was done to the envoys of Khaemwese,¹⁸ after they had spent seventeen years in this land. They died on the spot." And he said to his butler: "Take him to see the tomb where they lie."

I said to him: "Do not make me see it. As for Khaemwese, the envoys he sent you were men and he himself was a man. You have not here one of his envoys, though you say: 'Go and see your companions.' Should you not rejoice and have a stela [made] for yourself, and say on it:

'Amun-Re, King of Gods, sent me Amun-of-the-Road, his envoy, together with Wenamun, his human envoy, in quest of timber for the great noble bark of Amun-Re, King of Gods. I felled it; I loaded it; I supplied my ships and my crews. I let them reach Egypt so as to beg for me from Amun fifty years of life over and above my allotted fate.' And if it comes to pass that in another day an envoy comes from the land of Egypt who knows writing and he reads out your name on the stela, you will receive water of the west like the gods who are (2.60) there."

He said to me: "A great speech of admonition is what you have said to me."¹⁹ I said to him: "As to the many <things> you have said to me: if I reach the place where the High Priest of Amun is and he sees your accomplishment, it is your accomplishment that will draw profit to you."

I went off to the shore of the sea, to where the logs were lying. And I saw eleven ships that had come in from the sea and belonged to the Tjekker (who were) saying: "Arrest him! Let no ship of his leave for the land of Egypt!" Then I sat down and wept. And the secretary of the prince came out to me and said to me: "What is it?" I said to him: "Do you not see the migrant birds going down to Egypt a second time? Look at them traveling to the cool water!"²⁰ Until when shall I be left here? For do you not see those who have come to arrest me?"

He went and told it to the prince. And the prince began to weep on account of the words said to him, for they were painful. He sent his secretary out to me, bringing me two jugs of wine and a sheep. And he sent me Tentne, an Egyptian songstress who was with him, saying: "Sing for him! Do not let his heart be anxious." And he sent to me, (2.70) saying: "Eat, drink; do not let your heart be anxious. You shall hear what I will say tomorrow."

When morning came, he had his assembly summoned. He stood in their midst and said to the Tjekker: "What have you come for?" They said to him: "We have come after the blasted²¹ ships that you are sending to Egypt with our enemy." He said to them: "I cannot arrest the envoy of Amun in my country. Let me send him off, and you go ¹⁵ The nature of hrd is not known. Černý (1958:208-209) suggested the meanings "awning," and "veil." To my knowledge Eg. art never depicts the wearing of veils.

¹⁶ Tentamun had sent a personal gift to Wenamun.

¹⁷ An Eg. in the service of the prince of Byblos.

¹⁸ We do not know to whom the prince is referring. A vizier Khaemwese served under Ramses IX.

¹⁹ This reply of the prince seems to be ironic.

²⁰ I.e., Wenamun has now been abroad for more than a year and is thus witnessing for the second time the annual flight to Egypt of migratory birds.

²¹ It looks as if the verb knkn, "to beat," is here used idiomatically as a curse word. Cf. the name *knkn-r*² given to a lonely foreign place in P. Anastasi IV.12,6 (Gardiner 1937:48).

after him to arrest him.”

He had me board and sent me off from the harbor of the sea. And the wind drove me to the land of Alasiya.²² Then the town's people came out against me to kill me. But I forced my way through them to where Hatiba, the princess of the town was. I met her coming from one of her houses to enter another. I saluted her and said to the people who stood around her: “Is there not one among you who understands Egyptian?” And one among them said: “I understand it.” I said to him: “Tell my lady that I have heard it said as far away as Thebes, the place where Amun is: ‘If wrong is done in every town, in the land of Alasiya right is done.’ Now is wrong done here too every day?”

She said: “What is it (2.80) you have said?” I said to her: “If the sea rages and the wind drives me to the land where you are, will you let me be received so as to kill me, though I am the envoy of Amun? Look, as for me, they would search for me till the end of time. As for this crew of the prince of Byblos, whom they seek to kill, will not their lord find ten crews of yours and kill them also?” She had the people summoned and they were reprimanded. She said to me: “Spend the night _____²³

²² Alasiya is thought to be Cyprus, but the identification is not certain.

²³ The remainder of the report is lost.

REFERENCES

Publication: Golenishchev 1899:74-102; Gardiner 1932b:61-76; Korostovtsev 1960. Translation: Erman 1900:1-14; 1927:174-185; Lefebvre 1949:204-220; ANET 25-29; Gardiner 1961:306-313; Edel 1968:41-48; Wente 1973:142-155; Lichtheim AEL 2:224-230. Comments: Nims 1968:161-164.

2. “PROPHECY”

THE ADMONITIONS OF AN EGYPTIAN SAGE: THE ADMONITIONS OF IPUWER (1.42)

Nili Shupak

The “Admonitions” was composed during the First Intermediate period (c.a. 2000 BCE) or the late Middle Kingdom.¹ The text is preserved on Papyrus Leiden 344, dating to the 18th or 19th Dynasty (1580-1200 BCE).

The original composition contained a narrative frame which has been lost, and which established the setting of the utterances of the sage as a council at the royal court, in a manner similar to that of the “Prophecies of Neferti” (text 1.45 below).

The speeches of the sage are arranged in six poems, each of which opens with an identical formula,² although the poems are not continuous with regard to content.

A considerable portion of this work is concerned with an account of ordeals and calamities of the times. The second part of the composition consists of exhortations to the people to repent by destroying the enemy and fulfilling their religious obligations. The climax of the work is in the third part, which portrays an ideal monarch who will rehabilitate the country,³ and concludes by pinning the blame for the decline into evil days on an unnamed regnant king⁴ and presenting the fortunate conditions in store for Egypt once the nation is redeemed.

The composition closes with an obscure passage which speaks of an aged monarch, and may allude to actual historical circumstances.

The work, which is clearly a document of social criticism and contains some sections referring to events in the future,⁵ has common features with the biblical prophecy.⁶ Note: l.p.h. = “life, prosperity, health!” — the traditional blessing over the king.

¹ For a review of the various scholarly opinions concerning the date of “The Admonitions” see: Barta 1974:21. Some scholars, however, believe that this text is a pure literary fiction and does not relate to any historical situation; see: Lichtheim AEL 1:149-150; Hornung 1990:190.

² The same device is used in “The Eloquent Peasant” and “The Dispute between a Man and His Ba”; see: Shupak 1989-1990, Table II, 38-39, and text 1.43 below.

³ For an alternative explanation see n. 34, below.

⁴ It has been proposed that “The Admonitions” of Ipuwer are addressed to Pepi II, one of the kings of the Sixth Dynasty.

⁵ Scholarly opinion is divided as to whether these sections which describe the redemption of the land contain a prediction of things to come or merely express a yearning for better days.

⁶ On the question of the existence of prophecy in the biblical sense in Ancient Egypt see: Shupak 1989-1990.

Calamities of the Times (1.1-10.6)Introduction (1.1-1.9)

(1.1) The doorkeepers say: "Let us go and plunder" ...,

The washerman refuses to carry his load [...],
The bird [-catchers] have drawn up in line of battle,

[The inhabitants] of the Delta marshes carry shields ...,

A man looks upon his son as his enemy ...,

(1.8) The virtuous man goes in mourning because of what has happened in the land ...

(1.9) Foreigners⁷ have become Egyptians⁸ everywhere.

First Poem (Introduction Formula — iw ms) (1.9-6.14)

(1.9) Indeed, the face is pale,

(1.10) What the ancestors foretold has happened [...].⁹

Indeed [...] the land is full of gangs,

A man goes to plough with his shield ...

Indeed, the Nile overflows, none plough for it;
Everyone says: "We do not know what has happened throughout the land."

(2.4) Indeed, women are barren, and none conceive,

Khnum¹⁰ does not create because of the condition of the land,

(2.4-2.5) Indeed, poor men have become owners of wealth,

He who could not make for himself sandals owns riches.¹¹

(2.6-7) Indeed, many dead are buried in the river,
The stream is a grave, and the tomb has become a stream.

(2.7-2.8) Indeed, the noblemen are in mourning and the poor man is full of joy,

Every town says: "Let us expel the powerful among us."

Indeed, men are like ibises; dirt is throughout the land,

There is none indeed whose clothes are white at this time.

a Exod 7:14-25; Pss 78:44; 105:29

Indeed, the land turns around like a potter's wheel,

The robber is a possessor of riches and [the rich man has become (?)] a plunderer ...

(2.10) Indeed, the river is blood, yet one drinks from it,^a

Men shrink from people and thirst after water.

Indeed, gates, columns and walls are burning,
While the hall of the palace l.p.h. stands firm and endures ...

(2.12-2.13) Indeed, crocodiles are glutted on their catch,

People go to them of their own will ...

(2.14) Indeed, the well born man ... passes without being recognized,

The child of his lady has become the son of his maid.

(3.1) Indeed, the desert is throughout the land,
The nomes are laid waste,

Foreign tribes¹² come into Egypt ...

(3.6) Indeed, the builders [of pyramids have become] farmers of fields,

Those who were in the sacred bark are yoked [to it].¹³

None, indeed, sail northward to (3.7) Byblos¹⁴ today,

What shall we do for cedar trees for our mummies?

The priests are buried with their produce,

The [chiefs] are embalmed with their oil,

As far as (3.9) Crete,¹⁴ they come no more,

Gold is lacking ...

(3.10-3.13) Indeed, Elephantine and Thines (?) [the dominion of] Upper Egypt are not taxed because of civil war.

Lacking are grain, charcoal ...

To what purpose is a treasure-house without its revenues?

Glad indeed is the heart of the king, when gifts come to him.

Look, every foreign country [says?]: "This is our water!¹⁵ This is our fortune!"

What shall we do about it? All is ruin!

⁷ Eg. ḥ²styw, a nisbe adjective derived from ḥ²st "foreign country," used here as term for Asiatics; cf. line 4.5 and n. 19, below.

⁸ Lit., "have become people."

⁹ The contemporary disasters are represented as a fulfilment of what was foretold (sr) by the ancestors. Sr, foretelling, also appears in connection with the ancestors in "The Instructions Addressed to Merikare" 69-71. On the relationship between prediction and the genre of speculative wisdom literature see: Shupak 1989-1990:25-28 and cf. also "The Prophecies of Neferti" notes 5, 16; see above, p. 63.

¹⁰ Cf. 5.7.

¹¹ The stylistic device appearing here, i.e., series of contrasts to highlight the absurdity of the current state of affairs — a reversed social order, is a dominant feature in "The Admonitions;" cf. 2.4-2.8; 2.14; 3.6; 7.8-8.5. This device is common in the Eg. as well as the biblical wisdom literature; cf. "The Eloquent Peasant" n. 32 and "The Prophecies of Neferti" n. 29.

¹² Lit., "bowmen" Eg. ḥḏtyw. The word is often used in "The Admonitions" to denote the Asiatics cf. 14.13 and also 2.2; 15.1 (untranslated); see also n. 19, below.

¹³ The passage probably refers to the change in occupation of the funerary professionals who, owing to lack of needed materials, turned to agriculture; see Goedicke 1967:93.

¹⁴ This section (3.6-3.9) relates to a break in trade between Egypt and her significant commercial partners, Byblos and Crete. Byblos supplied Egypt with timber from early dynastic times; strong cultural contacts between Egypt and Crete existed during the Hyksos times and the 18th Dynasty, when goods such as textiles and carpets were imported to Egypt from the Aegean.

¹⁵ Obscure phrase which may have here a figurative sense, i.e., "This is our fate"; see: Faulkner 1964:26; Lichtheim AEL 1:161 n. 7.

Indeed, merriment has perished, is [no longer] made,
 There is groaning throughout the land mingled with laments ...
 (4.2-4.3) Indeed, great and small [say] "I wish I were dead,"
 Little children say "He should not have caused [me] to live."¹⁶
 Indeed, the children of princes are dashed against walls,
 And the infants¹⁷ are laid on the high ground.
 Indeed, those who were in the place of embalming are laid on high ground,
 And the secrets of the embalmers are thrown away ...
 (4.5) Indeed, the whole Delta will no longer be hidden,¹⁸
 Lower Egypt will trust trodden roads.
 What shall one do? ...
 Behold, it is in the hands of those who do not know it, like those who know it,
 The foreigners are skilled in the crafts of the Delta ...¹⁹
 Indeed, all maid servants are rude in their tongue,
 When their mistress speaks it is irksome to the servants ...
 (5.2-5.3) Indeed, princes are hungry and perish,
 Servants are served ...
 Indeed, the hot-tempered man says: "If I knew where god is, then I would serve him."
 Indeed, [justice]²⁰ is throughout (5.4) the land in its name, but what they (men) do in appealing to it, is wrong ...
 Indeed, all animals, their hearts weep,
 Cattle moan because of the state of the land.
 Indeed, the children of princes are dashed against walls,
 The infants are laid on the high ground,
 (5.7) Khnum groans in weariness ...
 (5.9-5.11) Indeed, a slave (?) [has the power?] throughout the land, b Job 3:3ff.,

 20:22; 10:18-19; 13:15;
 14:13; 17:13-
 14

The strong man sends to all people.²¹
 A man strikes his maternal brother —
 What has been done?
 Indeed, the ways are (blocked), the roads are watched,
 Men sit in the bushes, until the night traveller comes, in order to plunder his load.
 What is upon him is taken away;
 He is thrashed with blows of a stick and criminally slain.
 Indeed, perished is what yesterday was seen ...
 If only this were the end of men,
 No conceiving, no birth,
 Then the land would be quiet of noise, and tumult be no more.
 Indeed [men eat] herbs and wash (them) down with water,
 No seeds nor herbs are found for the birds ...
 (6.5-6.6) Indeed, the writings of the private council-chamber²² are taken away,
 Laid bare are the secrets which were in it ...
 (6.7-6.8) Indeed, (public) offices are opened and their records are taken,
 The serf becomes lord of serfs. (?)
 Indeed, [scribes?] are killed and their writings stolen,
 Woe is me because of the misery of this time!
 Indeed, the scribes of the land-register — their writings are destroyed,
 The grain of Egypt is common²³ property.
 Indeed, the laws of the council-chamber are thrown out,
 Men walk on them in public places,
 Beggars break them up in the streets.
 Indeed, the beggar has attained the state of the Nine Gods,²⁴
 The instructions of the House of the Thirty²⁵ are divulged.
 (6.12) Indeed, the great council chamber is a public resort,
 Beggars come and go in the Great Houses.²⁶
 Indeed, the children of princes are cast out in the streets,

¹⁶ The attitude of despair and weariness with life which is echoed in the utterances of Ipuwer (cf. 2.12-2.13 above) is also expressed in "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" (see COS 3) where the hero longs for death (cf. 20.21); and Job persistently wishes for death throughout his bewailings, cf. Scripture References b.

¹⁷ Lit., "Children of neck," i.e., infants who when carried by their parents clasp them round the neck.

¹⁸ Alternative reading: "will not be seen". Eg. dgi has double meaning, "to hide" and "to see." Here both senses are appropriate.

¹⁹ The picture drawn in this passage of the Delta overflowing with Asiatics is similar to that appearing in other texts relating to the second millennium BCE (cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti" n. 8). It seems that the Asiatics have adapted the Eg. culture and replaced the Egyptians in key positions; see Van Seters 1964:21.

²⁰ On "justice" (mꜣꜥꜣ) and its antonym "wrong" (isf), see "The Eloquent Peasant" n. 27 (p. 100, below).

²¹ This sentence appears with a slight difference in "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" 107 (see COS 3).

²² Lines 6.5-6.12 may refer to the activity of the hnrt, the Great Prison at Thebes, which was the center for the administration of justice; see: Van Seters 1964:18.

²³ Lit., "I go get it."

²⁴ Eg. Psd.

²⁵ The law court in Upper Egypt consisted of thirty judges who also functioned as district chiefs.

²⁶ The six "Great Houses," already known from the Old Kingdom, were the law courts to which all the Eg. judges belonged.

The wise man says: "Yes", the fool says: "No"
And it is pleasing to him who knows nothing about it.²⁷

Second Poem (Introduction Formula — mtn, mtn is) (7.1-9.7)

(7.1) Behold, the fire has risen high,
Its burning goes forth against the enemies of the
land.

Behold, things have been done that have not happened for a long time,

The King has been disposed of by beggars.

Behold, he who was buried like a falcon ... has no bier,

What the pyramid concealed has become empty.

Behold, it has befallen that the land is deprived of kingship by a few people who ignore the custom,

Behold, men have fallen into rebellion against the Uraeus.²⁸

The [...] of Re, who pacifies the Two Lands,

(7.4) Behold, the secrets of the land, whose limits are unknown, are divulged,

The Residence is thrown down in a minute ...

(7.5) Behold, the Kṛht serpent²⁹ is taken from his hole,

The secrets of Egypt's kings are bared ...

(7.8) Behold, the possessors of tombs are cast on high ground,

He who could not make a grave is [possessor] of a treasury.

Behold, the change among the people:

He who could not build a room for himself is
(now) a possessor of walls ...

Behold, noble ladies are on rafts,

Magnates are in the workhouse;

He who could not even sleep on a wall is (now)
possessor of a bed ...

(7.11-7.12) Behold, the possessors of robes are
(now) in rags,

He who never wove for himself is (now) the possessor of fine linen.

Behold, he who never built for himself a boat is
(now) the possessor of ships,

He who possessed the same looks at them, (but) they are not his ...

(8.1) Behold, he who had no property is (now) a possessor of wealth,

The magnate sings his praise.

Behold, the poor of the land have become rich,

The possessor of property has become one who has nothing ...

Behold, he whose hair had fallen out and lacked oil,

Has become a possessor of jars of sweet myrrh.

(8.5) Behold, she who had no box is a possessor of a coffer,

She who looked at her face in the water is possessor of a mirror.

Behold, a man is happy when he eats his food,

Consume your goods in gladness,

Without being hindered by anybody;

It is good for a man to eat his food,

God commands it for him whom he favours ...

(9.2) Behold, all the offices, they are not in their (right) place,

Like a herd running at random without its herds-man,³⁰

Behold, cattle stray and there is none to collect them ...

(9.3) Behold, a man is slain beside his brother ...

(9.5) Behold, he who had no dependents (?) is
(now) a lord of serfs,

He who was a [magnate] does commission himself ...

Third Poem (Introduction Formula — hd) (9.8-10.6)

(9.8) Destroyed is [...] in that time ...

Destroyed is [...]

Their food [is taken?] from them ...

(10.3) Lower Egypt weeps,

The storehouse of the king is the common property of everyone;

The entire palace l.p.h. is without its revenues:

To it belong wheat and barley, fowl and fish

To it belong white cloth and fine linen, copper and oil ...

Exhortations (10.6-11.11)

Fourth Poem (Introduction Formula: hd) (10.6-10.12)

Destroy the enemies of the noble Residence,

Splendid of magistrates ...

(10.7) Destroy the enemies of the noble Residence
...

(10.8) [Destroy the enemies] of the formerly noble Residence,

Manifold of laws ...

Fifth Poem (Introduction Formula: sh²) (10.12-11.10)

Remember to immerse [...] ³¹

Him who is in pain when (?) he is sick in his body ...

²⁷ This sentence also appears in "The Instruction of Amenemhet" (text 1.36 above) XIV b-c.

²⁸ Eg. i^crt, symbol of Eg. kingship.

²⁹ The Kṛht serpent was a guardian spirit.

³⁰ See note 37, below.

³¹ According to a different view the following section (10.12ff.) does not deal with a call for pious conduct but rather recalls the golden past, when the right order prevailed see: ANET 443 n. 33 and Lichtheim AEL 1:162 n. 23.

Remember to ... to fumigate with incense,
To offer water in a jar in the early morning.
(11.1-11.2) Remember [to bring] the fatted r geese,
trp geese and st geese,
To offer offerings to the gods.
Remember to chew natron and to prepare white bread,
A man (should do it) on the day of wetting the head.³²
(11.3-11.4) Remember to erect flagstaffs and to carve stelae,
The priest cleansing the shrines,
The temple being plastered (white) like milk.
Remember to make pleasant the perfume of the sanctuary,³³
To set up the bread-offerings.
Remember to observe regulations, to adjust dates,
To remove him who enters the priestly office with impure body, for to do so is wrong ...
(11.6) Remember to slaughter oxen ...
Remember to come forth pure ...

Redemption (11.11-13.9)

Criticism of the Sun-God and the Description of the Ideal Monarch (11.11-12.11)³⁴ (11.11) Lack of people ... Re who commands [...] ... worshipping him ...
Behold, why does he see (11.13) to fashion (men)?
The timid man is not distinguished from the violent one.³⁵
He has brought coolness upon the heat,³⁶ (12.1) Men say: "He is the herdsman of all, and there is no evil in his heart."
His herds are few (but) he spends a day collecting them,³⁷ c
(12.2) (Because) fire is in their heart.
Would that he had perceived their nature in the first generation,
Then he would have smitten the evil,

c Jer 3:15;
23:1-4; Ezek
34; 37:24;
Mic 5:3-5;
Zech 9:16

d 1 Kgs
18;27;
Ps 44:24;
121:4

He would have stretched out his arm against it,
He would have destroyed (12.3) their seed and
their heirs,
While the people still desired to give birth.
Sadness overwhelms, misery is everywhere ...
(12.4) Combat has gone forth,
(12.5) The redresser of evil is one who commits
it.
There is no pilot in their hour,
Where is he today?
Is he asleep?^d Behold (12.6), his power is not seen
...

Criticism of the King (12.11-13.9)
Authority, Knowledge and Truth³⁸ are with you, Yet confusion is what you set throughout the
land,
And the noise of tumult.
Behold, one fights against another,
For men obey³⁹ what you have commanded.
If three men travel (12.14) on the road,
They are found to be only two,
For the many kill the few.
Does a herdsman desire death?
Then may you command it done ...
It is your doing that brought those things to pass,
You have told lies.
The land is weed which destroys men,
None is named among the living.
All these years are strife,
A man is murdered on his roof top ...
(13.5) O that you could taste something of the misery of it,
Then you would say ...

The Happy Days (Contrasted with the Contemporary Adversities) (13.9-16.1)

Sixth Poem (Introduction Formula: iw ir.f hmw nfr)
[It is indeed good] when ships sail upstream ...

³² Moistening the head, like cleansing the mouth with natron, were probably some kind of purifactory rites.

³³ Lit., "the horizon."

³⁴ The following section is very problematic and has been discussed at length in research. Scholarly opinion is divided as to whether we are dealing here with criticism directed to god Re, (see Gardiner 1909b:13-14, 79-80; Barta 1974:22-29; Lichtheim AEL 1:162 n. 24) or with a description of an ideal redeemer (see ANET 443 n. 36).

The translation given here assumes that the main part of the section is indeed addressed to Re and goes back to primeval times, since some of the details presented here (see 11.11-11.13; 12.2-3) accord with the famous myth about the "Destruction of Mankind" (text 1.25 above). But some lines (11.13: "He has ... heat"; 12.1; 12.5: "There is no pilot ..."; 12.6) undoubtedly refer to the image of the redeemer king, a motif characteristic of this literary genre appearing also in "The Prophecies of Neferti" (58-62); see: Shupak 1989-1990:31-34 and text 1.45.

³⁵ Re is rebuked for his passive behaviour: He did not discern the bad character of the human beings so he is responsible for its existence. The idea that evil in man's nature is not the work of the creator accords with CT 1130 where the god declares: "I made every man equal to his fellow and I forbade them to do wrong but their hearts disobeyed."

³⁶ Coolness of temperament is a quality that is mentioned repeatedly in the wisdom texts as well as the autobiographical and king's court writings. The ideal king is he who cools the heat (cf. "Sehetep-ib-Ra" St 3.5). Heat as a metaphor for anger and hot temper reappears in 12.2.

³⁷ The image of the ruler as herdsman of his people is common in the literature of the Ancient Near East. In relation to the god Re it comes also in "The Instructions Addressed to Merikare" (text 1.35, above) 130. For further examples see Van Seters 1964:19; for biblical parallels see: Scripture References c.

³⁸ Hu, Sia and Maat are the three divine attributes in the possession of the king. In the following section Ipuwer rebukes the king and blames him for being the cause of the calamities and miseries that have fallen on the land. Since the three attributes mentioned above and the title "herdsman" may also refer to the god Re, some scholars believe that he is the one addressed here. See: Fecht 1972:87-88; Otto 1951:6.

³⁹ Lit., "imitate." Shi has double meaning "to imitate," "copy" and "to disobey," "go beyond"; cf. Shupak 1993:80-81. Since in the fol-

(13.10) It is indeed good when [...] [It is indeed] good when the net is drawn, And birds are tied up [...] ... It is indeed good when the hands of men build pyramids, (13.13) Ponds are dug and orchards made for the gods. It is indeed good when people are drunk, When they drink myt and their hearts are glad ... It is indeed good when shouting is in (men's) mouths ... (14.1) It is indeed good, when beds are made ready, The head-rests of magistrates are safely secured ... The door is shut upon him who slept in the bushes, (14.10) [...] [in their midst] like Asiatics ...⁴⁰ None are found who would stand up to protect them ... Every man fights for his sister and to save his own skin. (14.11) Is it the Nubians? Then we will protect ourselves!	Warriors are made many in order to repel foreigners;⁴¹ Is it the Libyans? Then we will turn them back! The Medjai are pleased with Egypt. How does it come that every man kills his brother? The troops (15.1) we raised for ourselves have become foreigners and taken to ravaging. What has come to pass has caused the Asiatics to know the state of the land ... (15.13) What Ipuwer said when he answered the majesty of the All-Lord:⁴² [...] all herds ... You have done what pleases their heart, You have nourished the people among them, Yet, they cover (16.1) their faces in fear of tomorrow. Obscure Proverb (16.1-17.2) (16.1) There was an old man who was about to die, While his son was a child without knowledge; He has not yet opened his mouth to speak to you, When you seize and kill him (?)
--	---

lowing lines the stress is laid on the king's guilt and he is blamed as well for telling lies, the first sense of sni seems to be more appropriate.

⁴⁰ Different people are listed here among Egypt's enemies: The Asiatics (Eg. Styw) in the north (cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti" 18.32-33, 63.66ff. and ibid. n. 8.), the Nubians (Eg. Nḥsyw) in the south, and the Libyans (Eg. ṯmhyw) in the west. The Medjai (Eg. Md'yw) whose home was the Nubian western steppe are distinct here from the other Nubian people since, being regimented as professional soldiers and desert police, they were in friendly contact with Egypt. Cf. Van Seters 1964:14-15. For the historical and political setting of this section see ibid., 14-16, 22.

⁴¹ See note 12, above.

⁴² Here for the first time appears the name of the speaker, a sage called Ipuwer. The words of Ipuwer are represented as a reply to the king whose speech may have preceded in the original text, but is not to be found in the present manuscript. For a different opinion, assuming that relics of the king's words are to be found in 14.10ff., see: Lichtheim AEL 1:162 n. 29.

REFERENCES

Barta 1974:19-33; Faulkner 1964:24-36; Fecht 1972; Gardiner 1909; Goedicke 1967:93-95; Hornung 1990:83-100, 190-191; Lichtheim AEL 1:149-163; Otto 1951; Shupak 1989-90:1-40; 1993; Van Seters 1964:13-23; Westendorf 1973:41-44; ANET 441-444.

THE ELOQUENT PEASANT (1.43)

Nili Shupak

This work was composed during the Middle Kingdom (in the 12th or 13th Dynasty)¹ and has been preserved on four papyri of that time. Three of these, known as B1 and B2 and R, are now in Berlin, and the fourth, Pap. Butler, is in London.

The composition, which pertains to the class of speculative wisdom literature, contains a narrative frame and text set out in verse form. This structure is common to works composed during that period, such as "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage," "The Prophecies of Neferti," "The Dispute between a Man and his Ba." The frame narrates the circumstances that gave rise to the peasant's complaint, i.e., his having been robbed of his property. The body of work consists of nine complaints that the peasant addresses to the high steward Rensi, son of Meru. These are spoken in an eloquent rhetorical style in which images and proverbs are employed, as well as word plays and assonances.

The grievances that the peasant puts to the judge contain no more than allusions to his private misery and are primarily concerned with the broad issue of doing justice. This is, therefore, essentially a moral document which is at once an earnest appeal for the preservation of social order and justice ($m^{\text{c}}t$) and a condemnation of the corruption of the times.

¹ This date of composition was recently demonstrated by Berlev 1987; see also Parkinson 1991a.

Frame-Story: Introduction (R1-41)

There was a man Khu-n-Anup was his name. A peasant of Salt-Field² was he. He had a wife. [M]ryt was her name.

This peasant said to his wife: "Behold, I am going down to Egypt to bring provisions from there for my children. Go and measure for me the barley (4) which is in the storehouse, the (barley) remaining from [yesterday]."³ Then he measured [twenty]-six gallons of barley. Then this peasant said to his wife: "Behold, (I give) you twenty gallons of grain for provisions for you and your children and you will make for me six gallons into bread and beer for every day (on which) [I will live]."⁴

(7) This peasant went down to Egypt after he had loaded his donkeys with vines, rushes, natron, salt, wood ... panther skins, wolf hides ... (35) full (measure) of all the good products of Salt-Field.

This peasant went south toward Herakleopolis⁵ and he reached the region of Per-fefi north of Medenit.⁶

He met a man there standing on the river bank, Nemty-nakht was his name. He was son of a man whose name was Isri and he was a subordinate of the high steward, Rensi, son of Meru.

Frame-Story (cont.): The Robbery (R 42-60; B1 1-30)

Then this Nemty-nakht said, when he saw this peasant's donkeys which were tempting to his heart, "Would that I had some effective idol⁷ that I might steal the goods of this peasant with it!" Now the house of Nemty-nakht was at the beginning of a path⁸ which was narrow, not so wide as to exceed the width of a loin-cloth. One side of it was under water; the other side of it was under barley. And then this Nemty-nakht said to his servant "Go and bring me a cloth⁹ from my house." It was brought to him immediately. Then he spread it out on the beginning of the path so that its fringe was on the water and its hem on the barley.

This peasant came along the public road.¹⁰ Then this Nemty-nakht said, "Be careful peasant. (2) Will you tread on my clothes?" And then this peasant said "I shall do as you wish, my way is good."¹¹

So he went upwards. And then this Nemty-nakht said, "Will my barley be your path?" Then this peasant said "My way is good. The bank is high. The (only) way is under barley, for you are blocking our path with your clothes. Will you then not let us pass by on the road?"

(R 59) He had just reached saying (this) word (B1 9) when one of these donkeys filled his mouth with a wisp of barley. Then this Nemty-nakht said: "Behold, I will take away your donkey, peasant, for eating my barley. Behold, it will tread out (grain) because of its offense (13)."¹²

And then this peasant said "My course is good. (Only) one (wisp) has been damaged. Could I buy back my donkey for its (the wisp's) value if you seize it for filling its mouth with a wisp of barley? (15-16). But I know the lord of this district, it belongs to the high steward Rensi, son of Meru. He indeed is one who punishes every robber in this land. Shall I be robbed in his district?"

(19) This Nemty-nakht said: "Is this the proverb which men say: 'The name of a poor man is pronounced for his master's sake?' I am the one who is speaking to you, yet the high steward it is whom you have invoked!" Then he took a stick of green tamarisk and thrashed all his limbs with

² Eg. Šyt-hm^r; usually identified with Wadi Natrun northwest of Herakleopolis.

³ Thus Parkinson 1991b; for other reconstructions see: Lichtheim AEL 1:170: "[last year];" Perry 1986:98: "[the harvest]."

⁴ Alternative reconstruction: "(in which) [I shall travel]." See: Lichtheim AEL 1:170.

⁵ Eg. Nn-nsw. Herakleopolis was the capital of the 9th and 10th Dynasties.

⁶ The locations of Per-fefi and Medenit are unknown. For most recent suggestion see Kuhlmann 1992:205-207.

⁷ This is the common interpretation of the Egyptian word šsp. For another translation šsp-cloth, see Perry 1986:125-127.

⁸ The meaning of sm^r t^r n r^r w^r t is obscure and various interpretations have been suggested: a crossing, riverside path, a point at which the narrow path merged with the public road, landing place. The best solution would be to suppose that sm^r t^r marks the merging of Nemty-nakht's private home path with the public road, which narrowed at that point so that it could be covered by a garment. Cf. Lichtheim AEL 1:183 n. 5.

⁹ Eg. ifd is a four-cornered fringed piece of cloth and it signifies here the usual man's garment (Cf. B1 2 where it is replaced by hbsw-clothes). Nemty-nakht placed his own garment on the road. According to the ancients a man's garment contains his identity and has magical properties, therefore damaging a man's garment was considered a disgrace to him. See: Shupak 1992:7 n. 22.

¹⁰ Lit., "On the way of all people."

¹¹ Eg. nfr mtn. Meaning: my conduct is proper, my intentions are pure.

¹² Nemty-nakht confiscated the donkey. See: Perry 1986:141. For the custom of confiscating the property of a debtor as a pledge in the ancient world see: Shupak 1992:8 n. 28.

it, and his donkeys (24) were seized and driven into the district.

Then this peasant wept very greatly because of the pain of what had been done to him. And then this Nemty-nakht said "Do not raise your voice peasant! Behold you are in the city of the Lord of Silence."¹³

Then this peasant said: "You beat me, you steal my goods and now you take away the complaint¹⁴ of my mouth! O Lord of Silence may you give me back my property! Then I shall stop screaming which you fear."

Frame-Story (cont.): The Peasant Appealed to Rensi Son of Meru (B1 31-51)

Then this peasant spent a period of ten days appealing to¹⁵ Nemty-nakht who did not pay attention to it (32). So this peasant went¹⁶ to Herakleopolis to appeal to the high steward, Rensi, son of Meru. He met him going out of the door of his house to his court¹⁷ boat. And then this peasant said, "Would that I might be permitted to inform you concerning this complaint. It is a case¹⁸ of letting your favourite servant come to me so that I might send him back to you about it."

And then the high steward Rensi, son of Meru, allowed his favorite servant to go in front of him and this peasant sent him concerning his case in its entirety.

Then the high steward Rensi, son of Meru accused¹⁹ this Nemty-nakht before the magistrates²⁰ who were at his side. And then they said to him a-a Exod

22:22-23;
Deut 10:18;
14:28-29;
24:17-22;
27:19;
Prov 23:10;
Job 24:3

"Probably it is a peasant of his who has gone to someone else beside him. Behold, that is what they do to a peasant of theirs who goes to (46) others beside them. Is it a case of one punishing this Nemty-nakht for a little natron and a little salt? Let him be ordered to give compensation²¹ for it, and he will give compensation."

Then the high steward Rensi, son of Meru, was silent; he did not reply to these magistrates; he did not reply to the peasant.

First Petition (B1 52-71)

Then this peasant came to appeal to the high steward Rensi, son of Meru; he said:

"High steward, my lord,
Greatest of the great, leader of all that is and all that is not!

If you embark on a lake of justice²²
May you sail on it with fair breeze,
Let not the fastener²³ of your sail unravel!

Your boat shall not lag,
No misfortune shall take your mast,
Your yards will not break (59) ...
You will not taste the river's evils,
You will not see the face of fear.²⁴

(62) "For you are father to the orphan,
Husband to the widow,
Brother to the rejected woman,
Apron²⁵ to the motherless."

Let me make your name in this land according to every good law:²⁶

Leader free from covetousness,
A great man free from baseness,
(67) Destroyer of falsehood,

¹³ The epithet "Lord of silence" designates Osiris, the god of the dead; cf. Urk. IV 1031.

¹⁴ Eg. nḥwt means complaint and at times bears the sense of lamentation; see: "Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" (text 1.42) 2.7; 3.14.

¹⁵ Eg. spr, to appeal, which appears at the beginning of each new complaint of the peasant, is a legal terminus technicus of a kind prevalent in our text; cf. Shupak 1992:10-11.

¹⁶ Another variant: "sailing south" (R 82).

¹⁷ rryt denotes an administrative body or institution or location involved in legal procedures. Here it appears in connection with a boat's structure k²k²w n rryt — court boat, and relates to the custom of the Egyptian judges to circulate throughout the kingdom to make themselves available to anyone wishing to approach them in legal matters. See Shupak 1992:16-18.

¹⁸ The Egyptian word sp is used in this text in its technical sense — a case; cf. B1 46-47, 203. See Shupak 1992:12.

¹⁹ For the legal aspect of srh — to accuse see Shupak 1992:11.

²⁰ The magistrates — srw were involved in the legal system and served as judges. See: Shupak 1992:6.

²¹ Db² — compensation is a terminus technicus related to the execution of a sentence. See: Shupak 1992:13.

²² The comparison of the judge to a sailor and the metaphor of navigation for the administration of land affairs are common in our text; cf. B1 89-91, 156-158, 221, 278-279; B2 98-103 and "Rekhmire" Urk. IV 1077, 3. Rensi is described as a sailor sailing on a lake of truth (m²c²r — see n. 27) relating to his lawful administration which is based on justice. Cf. "The Instruction of Ptahhotep" 93.

²³ Ndbyt — meaning uncertain. See Perry 1986:180-185.

²⁴ "The face of fear" — meaning the crocodile, "the lord of fear" Urk. IV 616,9; cf. "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" 79 (see COS 3), where the drowned children see the "face of the crocodile."

²⁵ The high official's garment, called an apron, is mentioned here in connection with its owner's functions of protecting the lower class. In Egypt and throughout the Ancient Near East the rulers were considered protectors of the poor and the oppressed, patron to widows and orphans; cf. "Rekhmire": Urk. IV 1078, 6-10; "The Instruction Addressed to Merikare" 47; "The Instruction of Amenemhet" I 6-7. For more parallels from Egypt as well as from Mesopotamia see: Perry 1986:196-204; Fensham 1962.

²⁶ "Name" relates to the high steward's title consisting of five great names enumerated in the following lines. The title which emphasizes the duties of the high official, is analogous to the fivefold royal titulary.

²⁷ "Justice" — Eg. "maat" (m²c²t). The good judge is one who "does maat" and destroys its antonyms i.e., isft — wrong (B1 67) and grg — falsehood (cf. B1 159 - 160, 182, 197). In a period of anarchy falsehood replaces m²c²r (B1 198 cf. B1 182) and also: "The Prophecies of Neferu" 68-69; "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb" Recto 11, and "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage," 5.3-5.4; "The Dispute between a Man and his Ba," 122-123 (see COS 3).

Creator of justice,²⁷

Who comes at (68) the voice of the caller,^{28 b}
When I speak may you hear!

Do justice you praised one,
Whom the praised ones praise!

Remove my grief, I am burdened with sorrow,
I am weak on account of it,
Examine me, I am lacking!"

Frame-Story (cont.) (B1 71-87, R 117-138)

Now this peasant made this speech in the time of the majesty of King of Upper and Lower Egypt Nebkaure, the justified. Then the high steward Rensi, son of Meru, went before his majesty. He said: "My lord, I have found one of those peasants who is really eloquent of speech.²⁹ His goods have been stolen, and, behold, he has come to appeal to me about it." And then his majesty said: "If you wish to see me in health, you shall retain him here without replying to anything he says. In order to keep him (80) talking, be silent. Then have it brought to us in writing, that we may hear it. But provide for his wife and his children. For one of those peasants comes here (only) just before his house is empty. And provide for this peasant himself. You shall cause food to be given to him without letting him know that it is you who are providing it."

Then he was given ten loaves and two jugs of beer every day. The high steward Rensi, son of Meru, gave it. He gave it to a friend of his and he gave it to him (the peasant). Then the high steward Rensi, son of Meru, wrote to the mayor of Salt-Field about providing food for this peasant's wife, a total of three measures of grain every day.

Second Petition (B1 88-138)

Then this peasant came to appeal to him a second time; he said:

"High steward, my lord
Greatest of the great, richest of the rich,
Great for his great ones, rich for his rich ones!
Steering oar of heaven, beam of earth,
Plumb-line which carries the weight!³⁰
(91) Steering oar, do not diverge

b Exod 22:22,
26; 2 Kgs
4:1; 8:3, 5;
Job 19:7;

c Eccl 3:16

d Eccl 5:7

e-e Lev
19:15;
Deut 1:17;
Prov 18:5;
24:23; 28:21

f-f Deut
25:13-15;
Prov 20:10,
23; 11:1

g Prov 6:30

Beam, do not tilt

Plumb-line, do not swing awry!

The great lord takes possession of the ownerless, stealing from the lonely man. Your portion is in your house: a jug of beer and three loaves. But what are you doing to satisfy the hunger of your dependents? A mortal man, along with his underlings, must die. Will you be a man of eternity?³¹

Is it not wrong: a balance that tilts,

A plummet that strays,

(97) The straight becoming crooked?

Behold, justice flees from you,

Banished from its (98) seat! ^c

When the magistrates do wrong,^{32 d}

"When he who is in charge of examining the plea shows partiality,³³

When judges snatch what has been stolen.^e

He who trims a matter's rightness makes it swing awry,

The breath-giver languishes on the ground (?) ...

(104) This peasant said:

^f "The measurer of grain-piles trims for him self.

He who fills for another diminishes the other's share;^f

He who should rule by law, commands theft,

Who then will punish wrongdoing?

The straightener of another's crookedness supports another's crime ...

(115) You are strong and mighty. Your arm is active, your heart greedy, mercy has passed you by ... (121) He who has bread should be merciful. Violence is for the criminal; robbing suits him who has nothing. The stealing done by the robber is the misdeed of one who is poor. One cannot reproach him; he (merely) seeks for himself.^g But you are sated with your bread, drunken with your beer, rich in all" ...

Third Petition (B1 139-193)

Then this peasant came to appeal to him a third time; he said:

²⁸ The judge's basic duty is "to come at the voice of the caller," i.e., to listen to the complaint. This obligation is clearly explained in "The Installation of the Vizier Rekhmire" (13-14) and in "The Instruction of Prahhotep" (264-276); cf. also Urk. IV 1082, 15-16 and "The Stele of Mentuhotep" 11-12, 14.

²⁹ Eg. nfr mdt, lit. good, fine speech; a saying that is perfect in form as well as in content. See: Shupak 1993:325-326, 332.

³⁰ The image of balance as a symbol of justice and honesty occurs often in the tale (cf. B1 96-97, 148-149, 160-162, 311-313; B2 92-93). The judge whose duty is to oversee justice is likened to it, as well as some parts of his body (cf. B1 92-93, 165-167). See: Gardiner 1923:10 n. 4; Hermann 1963; Perry 1986:253-261, 332-333.

³¹ Cf. "The Instruction Addressed to Merikare" (text 1.35 above) 41-42, 53-57.

³² Here follows a section consisting of oppositions that are intended to point out the ironies in the current state of affairs. This literary pattern is characteristic of the genre of speculative wisdom literature; cf. B1 247 ff; "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" n. 11; "The Complaints of Khakheperre-senb." n. 16; "The Prophecies of Neferti" n. 29 and "The Dispute between a Man and his Ba," 113ff (see COS 3). It appears also in biblical wisdom; cf. Eccl 10:6-7, 3:16, 7:15, 8:10; Prov 30:22-24.

³³ "Shows partiality" Eg. rdi hr gs lit., "incline sideways." This is a legal terminus technicus probably derived from the image of scales. Cf. B1 149, 312-313 and see: Shupak 1992:15-16.

"High steward, my lord,
 You are Re, the lord of heaven, with your courtiers.
 Men's sustenance is from you as from the flood,
 You are Hapy who makes green the fields
 And re-establishes destroyed mounds.³⁴
 Punish the robber and protect the miserable.
 (144) Be not flood against the pleader! ...
 (148) Does the hand-balance deviate?
 (148-149) Does the stand-balance tilt?³⁵
^h Does Thoth³⁶ show favour
 So that you may do wrong? ...^h
 (156) By the sail-wind you should steer,
 Control the waves to sail aright,
 Guard from landing by the helm-rope ...
 (160) Speak not falsely — you are the standard,
 You are the one with the hand-balance,
 If it tilts you may tilt ...
 (165) Your tongue is the plummet,
 Your heart is the weight,
 Your two lips are its arms (167) ...
 (180) Hearer, you hear not! Why do not you hear!
 ... (182) When the secret of truth is found,
 falsehood is thrown on its back on the ground.
 Trust not the morrow before it has come;ⁱ one knows the trouble in it."³⁷

Now this peasant had made this claim³⁸ to the high steward Rensi, son of Meru, at the entrance of the judgement hall.³⁹ Then he had two guards stand up against him bearing whips and they thrashed all his limbs. The peasant said:

"The son of Meru goes on erring. His face is blind to what he sees, deaf to what he hears, forgetful about what he should have remembered.

Behold, you are a town (190) without a mayor,
 Like a group without its ruler,
 Like a ship without a captain,
 Like a band without a leader.
 Behold, you are an officer who steals,

h-h Prov 21:2;
 24:12; 16:2;
 Job 31:6

i Prov 16:9;
 19:21; 27:1

A mayor who accepts (bribes),
 A district overseer who should punish crime
 Who is the model for him who does (it)."

Fourth Petition (B1 194-225)

And then this peasant came to appeal to him a fourth time ... he said:

(197) "Goodness is destroyed, none adhere to
 it

(198) Throwing falsehood's back to the ground
 (has also perished)⁴⁰ ...

(201) Who can sleep until daybreak? Gone is working by night, travel by day⁴¹ and letting a man defend his own right case.⁴²

Behold, it is of no use telling you this; mercy has passed you by. How miserable is the wretch whom you have destroyed! ...

(215) He who eats tastes; he who is asked answers; he who sleeps sees (217) the dream; and a judge who deserves punishment is a model for him who does evil. Fool, you are attacked! Ignorant man you are questioned! ...

(221) Steersman, let not drift your boat

Life-sustainer, let not one die

Provider, let not one perish.

Shadow, be not sunlight

Shelter, let not the crocodile snatch!

The fourth time I apply to you! Shall I go on all day!"

Fifth Petition (B1 225-239)

And then this peasant came to appeal to him a fifth time; he said:

"High steward, my lord ... (231) Rob not a poor man of his property, a weak man whom you know. Breath to the poor is his property; he who takes it away stops up his nose. You are appointed to investigate complaints and pass judgement between two (litigants),⁴³ to punish the robber.
 But behold, supporting the thief is what you do!
 One puts his trust in you, but you have become a ³⁴ The reference here is to the fertilizing process performed by the Nile, whereby the river first destroys the land and then rebuilds it. Cf. B1 144. See: Götula 1978:129-130.

³⁵ Eg. rdi hr gs; see n. 33, above.

³⁶ Thoth, the god of wisdom and writing is in charge of writing down the results of the judgement of the dead, alluded to here. Thoth is the ideal judge "who never inclined sideways" (B1 268-269). Cf. also B1 305, where the writing instruments with which Thoth recorded justice are enumerated.

³⁷ The idea that the knowledge of the future is hidden from human beings is common to the Egyptian and biblical wisdom literature. Cf. "The Instruction of Kagemni" II 2; "The Instruction of Ptahhotep" 343; "The Instruction of Anii" 8, 9-10; "The Instruction of Amenemope" 19, 10-13; Prov 17:9, 19:21, 27:1. For more parallels from the New Kingdom see Lichtheim 1983:7 and Griffiths 1960:219-222.

³⁸ The Egyptian word mdt usually meaning "words", "matter", designates "complaint", "claim", in legal context. Cf. B1 234, B2 118 and see Shupak 1992:12 n. 46.

³⁹ Eg. rryt see n. 17, above.

⁴⁰ See n. 27, above.

⁴¹ For a similar description of dangers and bloodshed on the highways, see "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" (text 1.42 above) 12.13.

⁴² Lit., "letting a man stand up to his case," i.e., to defend his case in the court. Cf. "The Installation of a Vizier" (5) where the vizier is warned to enable man to present his arguments in court.

⁴³ Lit., "you are appointed to hear (sdm) complaints and to cut (wꜥꜥ) between two." The double task of the judge is marked by two verbs: sdm appearing in legal context often means "to investigate" and wꜥꜥ has the sense of "to adjudicate between two litigants," "to pass judgement." Cf. B1 217, 269, B2 133.

transgressor. You were placed as a dam for the poor, as a safeguard against drowning. But, behold, you are his lake, a water pourer!"

Sixth Petition (B1 239-265)

And then this peasant came to appeal to him a sixth time; he said:

"High steward, my lord! ...

(247) Look with your own eyes:

The arbitrator is a robber,

The peace-maker is one who makes grief,

He who should soothe causes suffering ...

(260) You are learned, skilled, accomplished,

But not in order to plunder!

You should be the model for all men,

But your affairs are crooked!

(263) The standard for all men cheats the whole land! ..."

Seventh Petition (B1 266-289)

And then this peasant came to appeal to him a seventh time; he said:

"High steward, my lord!

You are the steering oar of the whole land,

This land sails around by your command.

(268) You are brother to Thoth,

The judge who is not partial ...⁴⁴

(275) Indeed my belly is full, my heart is heavy. Therefore it has come out from my belly.⁴⁵

When there is a breach in a dam its waters rush out. (278) So my mouth opened to speak.

I have fought my sounding pole.⁴⁶ I have boiled (279) out my water. I have emptied what was in my belly;⁴⁷ I have washed my soiled linen. My speech is over; my grief is all before you.

Eighth Petition (B1 289-322)

Then this peasant came to appeal to him an eighth time; he said:

"High steward, my lord ...

(303) Do justice for the Lord of Justice⁴⁸

Whose justice is always true;

(305) Pen, papyrus, palette of Thoth,⁴⁹

May you be afar from wrongdoing!

When good is good, it is really good.

For justice is for eternity;

It enters the Necropolis with its doer,⁵⁰

When he is buried and interred.

His name does not pass from the earth,

He is remembered because of (his) goodness,

This is the rule of god's command.

The hand-balance — it tilts not; the ⁵¹ stand-balance — it leans not to one side. (313) Whether I come or whether another comes, you will have to address (us). Do not answer (us) with the answer of silence.⁵² Do not attack one who cannot attack you. You have no pity, you are not troubled, you are not disturbed! You do not repay my good speech⁵³ which comes from the mouth of Re himself ..."

Ninth Petition (B2 91-115)

And then this peasant came to appeal to him a ninth time; he said:

"High steward, my lord! (92-93) The tongue is men's stand-balance. It is the hand-balance that detects deficiency. Punish him who should be punished ... (98) If falsehood walks it goes astray. It cannot cross in the ferry; it cannot advance. He who is enriched by it has no children, has no heirs on earth. He who sails (102) with it cannot reach land; (103) his boat cannot moor at its landing place ... (113) Behold, I have been appealing to you (but) you do not listen to it. I shall go and appeal to Anubis about you."⁵⁴

Frame-Story: Conclusion (B2 115-142)

And then the high steward, Rensi, son of Meru caused two guards to go to bring him back. Then this peasant was fearful, thinking it was done so as (118) to punish him for the claim he made ... (123) And then the high steward, Rensi, son of Meru said: "Just stay here so you can hear your petitions."

Then he caused them to be read from a new papyrus-roll, each petition in its turn.

⁴⁴ Alternative interpretation: "who investigates without being partial." On "being partial" see n. 33, above.

⁴⁵ In the Egyptian perception the heart is the seat of wisdom and intellect and it dwells within the belly. When a man expresses his thoughts it is as if his heart was going out of his belly. Cf. "The Instruction of Amenemope" 22, 11-16; "The Instruction of Khety" XXV B-C.

⁴⁶ See: Gardiner 1923:17 n. 10.

⁴⁷ The comparison of the act of giving voice to one's troubles to a purgation, an "emptying of the belly," is widespread in the Egyptian wisdom literature. It derives from the belief that the belly is the seat of human thought and intelligence; cf. "The Complaints of Khakheperresonb" Recto 3 and n. 7; "The Instruction of Ptahhotep" 266-267; "The Stele of Mennuhotep" 11-12.

⁴⁸ "Lord of Justice" may apply to Re, the sun god who is the creator of Maat-justice. But it may equally denote Thoth, "the ideal judge" (see n. 36 above) or another god, since various gods carried this epithet. See: ANET 410, n. 25.

⁴⁹ See note 36, above.

⁵⁰ The high official is warned that after his death — when his heart will be weighed up against the emblem of justice — he will have to pay for his misdeeds. Cf. "The Instruction Addressed to Merikare" (text 1.35 above) 127-128; "The Instruction of Ptahhotep" 84-99.

⁵¹ See n. 30, above.

⁵² Alternative interpretation: "Answer not as one who addresses a silent man"; "silent man" denoting the petitioner.

⁵³ See n. 29, above.

⁵⁴ Being disenchanted with the corrupt legal system of mere mortals the peasant asked in his final appeal for the help of Anubis, i.e., he expressed his desire to consult the oracle, one of the means of passing a verdict in Egypt. See: Shupak 1992:11 n. 39. Similarly, the biblical Job disappointed by his friends' counsels appealed to God as the last means of restoring justice to earth.

The high steward, Rensi, son of Meru, presented them to his majesty, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nebkaure, the justified. And then it pleased the heart of his majesty more than anything in this whole land. And then his majesty said: (133) "May you yourself judge, son of Meru!" And then the high steward, Rensi son of Meru, caused two guards to go to [bring Nemty-nakht] (135). He was brought and a report was made of [all his property] ... his wheat, his barley, his donkeys ... of this Nemty-nakht [which was given] to this peasant ...

REFERENCES

ANET 407-410; Urk. IV; Berlev 1987:78-83; Fensham 1962:129-139; Gardiner 1923:5-23; Gilula 1978:129-130; Griffiths 1960:219-221; Herrmann 1963:106-115; Kuhlmann 1992:191-207; Lichtheim AEL 1:169-184; 1983; Parkinson 1991a:171-181; 1991b; Perry 1986; Shupak 1992:1-18; 1993.

THE COMPLAINTS OF KHAKHEPERRĒ-SONB (1.44)

Nili Shupak

The work was composed during the Middle Kingdom and has been preserved on a writing tablet from the 18th Dynasty. This tablet, no. 5645 in the BM, is the single surviving copy. The author is a priest of Heliopolis and his name contains the pronomen of Sesostriis II who ruled during the 12th Dynasty.

Unlike other compositions pertaining to the genre of speculative wisdom literature — "The Eloquent Peasant," "The Prophecies of Neferti," "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage," and "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" — this one does not contain a narrative frame in prose that serves as a setting for a rhetoric section in verse. But it has a title which is usually characteristic of the wisdom instructions (Lebenslehre) and which informs us of the nature of the subject and gives us the name of the author.¹

The items enumerated in the title as making up the contents of the work are called — "words," "maxims," and "phrases."² These words are used again in the prologue of Khakheperre-sonb's instruction where he announces his literary ambition to say things that have never been said before.³ Nevertheless, when he comes to speak of the grievous state of society, his observations differ in no way from the utterances of either his predecessors or those who would come after him. Like them Khakheperre-sonb gives an account of adversities and calamities falling on the land and describes the ruin of the country. It also contains social admonition concerning inversion of normal social hierarchies and religious censure.

It is not clear whether the text is complete or not; it may have continued on another tablet. The author Khakheperre-sonb was famous in the Ramesside period, as one may conclude from the appearance of his name among the eight great Egyptian scribes in Papyrus Chester Beatty IV. On the manuscript, the verses of the composition are marked off by red dots.

Title (Recto 1) The collection of words,⁴ The gathering of maxims, The quest of phrases^a with a searching heart,^{5 b} Made by the priest of Heliopolis, the ... Khakheperre-sonb called Ankhu.	a Eccl 12:9 b Eccl 1:13, 17; 8:16; 9:1	Prologue: the Aim of the Composition or the Author's Literary Ambitions (Recto 2-7) He says: Would I had unknown phrases, Maxims that are strange, Novel untried words,
--	---	--

¹ For a discussion of parallels to Khakheperre-sonb's title and prologue in the Egyptian wisdom instructions ("The Instruction of Ptah-hotep" [1; 47-50], "The Instruction of Amenemope" [1, 1-12; 1, 13-3, 7 etc.], and in the biblical wisdom literature (Prov 1:1, 2-6; 30:1; 31:1; Eccl 1:1, 12) see: Shupak 1990:84-85.

² See n. 4, below.

³ For a different explanation of the aim and message of Khakheperre-sonb see Ockinga 1983:89-90.

⁴ The three terms appearing here — "words" (mdwt), "maxims" (ḡsw) and "phrases" (ḡnw) are repeated in the next section, which stands in chiasmic parallelism with it. These terms belong to the terminology of the wisdom literature and are regularly applied to wisdom utterances. In the speculative compositions they are used to designate the complaints and exhortations of the authors. Thus the sayings of "The Eloquent Peasant" are "phrases" (B1 280); Neferti is able to address "some good words" and "chosen maxims" to the king (l. 7-8, 13 and see "The Prophecies of Neferti" n.1). For discussion of the etymology and the semantics of mdwt, ḡsw, ḡnw and their parallels in biblical Hebrew, see Shupak 1993:313-321, 324-325.

⁵ In Recto 1-4 Khakheperre-sonb expresses his desire to say new things. These concerns of the Egyptian priest are very similar to those of the architect Amenhetep of the 18th Dynasty and his Hebrew counterpart Ecclesiastes. Amenhetep sings his own praise as one who "has a hearing heart seeking (ḡḥr) counsel regarding strange things, like one whose heart understands them" (Urk. IV 1817,8-9); cf. Khakheperre-sonb's "the quest (ḡḥr) of phrases with searching heart." This spirit of inquiry is also characteristic of Ecclesiastes who uses his heart as an

Void of repetitions; Not maxims of past speech, ⁶ (3) Spoken by the ancestors. I empty my belly of that which is in it, ⁷ In loosing all that I have said (before); For what has been said is repetition, When what was said is said. There is no boasting in the speech of the ancestors, When those of later times find them. (5) One who has spoken should not speak, ⁸ But one should speak who has something to speak, May another find what he will speak, Not a teller of tales afterwards, ⁹ This is vain endeavour, it is lies, And no one will mention his name to others. ^c I said this in accord with what I have seen: ¹⁰ From the first generation, Down (7) to those who come after, They imitate ¹¹ that which is past. ^d The Author's Complaint about His Inability to Speak to His Heart about It (Recto 7-9) Would that I knew what others do not know, ¹² Things that have never been repeated, Then I would say them and my heart would answer me! ^{13 e} (8) Then I would explain to it my distress, Then I would shift to it the burden which is on	c Eccl 1:11 d Eccl 1:9-10 e Eccl 1:16; 2:1, 15; 3:17-18 f Isa 21:3-4; Jer 23:9; cf. Jer 4:19	my back, The matters that oppress me, I would express to it what I suffer through it ¹⁴ (9) And I would say "ah" with relief. The Calamities of the Times: The Description of the Ruined Land (Recto 10-12) I meditate on what has happened, ¹⁵ The events that have passed throughout the land. Changes have taken place, it is not like last year, One year is more burdensome than the others, The land is in confusion and is destroyed, Made as ... (11) Right is cast outside, Wrong is in the council hall; ¹⁶ The plans of the gods are violated, Their ordinances neglected, ¹⁷ The land is in turmoil, ¹⁸ Mourning is in everyplace, The towns (12), the districts are in grief. Everybody alike is subjected to wrongs, (As for) reverence, backs are turned to it, The Lords of Silence ¹⁹ are disturbed; (When) morning comes every day, The faces shrink back from what has happened. The Author Tries to Speak with His Heart about These Calamities (Recto 12 - Verso 1) I cry out about it, My limbs are weighed down; I grieve in my heart, ^{20 f} instrument to search out and to gain knowledge see: Scripture References a (cf. Sira 44:5) and b.
---	---	---

⁶ Eg. sbt r. Alternative translation: "Transmitted (familiar) language."

⁷ Khakheperre-sonb compares the act of giving voice to his troubles to a purgation "emptying the belly." This image, which is widespread in the Egyptian wisdom literature, derives from the belief that the belly is the seat of human thought and intelligence. Cf. "The Eloquent Peasant" B1 275-277, 280 and p. 103, n. 47; "The Instruction of Ptahhotep" 266-267. See also Shupak 1993:293-295.

⁸ Lit., "There speaks one who will speak." Alternative translation: "But one who (at first time) speaks should speak."

⁹ Cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti" where Neferti asks the king what he prefers: "Something that happened or something that is going to happen" (14).

¹⁰ Khakheperre-sonb does not foretell of things to come but relies, rather, on the experience of the past: "I meditate on what has happened" (Recto 10); cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti": "I cannot foretell what has not yet come" (26). The Hebrew sages too drew on their own experience. The method of learning through personal experience is characteristic of Ecclesiastes (1:12-2:26; 7:23-39; 8:16-17). And in the Book of Proverbs the sage learns a lesson by observing the fate of the slothful (24:30-32), or from his personal experience as a pupil (4:3-4).

¹¹ Eg. sni. See "The Admonitions" n. 39.

¹² The author cannot express himself since he knows only the traditional-conventional sayings. Yet he rejects the uttered repetitions of the past and thus deviates from the wisdom instructions based on the experience of previous generations.

¹³ The formula of a man speaking to his heart or his soul is a literary pattern frequently used in the genre of speculative wisdom literature. Khakheperre-sonb seeks to share his troubles with his heart (Recto 7-9, Recto 12 - Verso 1). Neferti begins his speech with "Stir, my heart" etc. (8 cf. ibid. n.9), and "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" (see COS 3) is conceived as a dialogue between a man and his soul. The same device is used by the authors of the Hebrew speculative wisdom literature; in Ecclesiastes the speaker addresses his heart six times; see Scripture References e.

¹⁴ Eg. s3r nf nnt m'f for which different readings have been suggested; cf. Kadish 1973:78, Lichtheim AEL 1:147.

¹⁵ This section and Verso 1-5, which begin with the same phrase, "I meditate on what has happened," describe the troubled conditions of the country in a way similar to that of Ipuwer, Neferti and the Eloquent Peasant, at times even using the same words and phrases. Cf. Junge 1977:275 and Shupak 1990:91-92.

¹⁶ The stylistic device of contrasts used here and in Verso 2-3 is aimed to describe the turbulent state of the land. This device is a dominant feature in the Egyptian as well as in the biblical wisdom literature. Cf. "The Eloquent Peasant" n. 32, "The Admonitions" n. 11, and "The Prophecies of Neferti" n. 29. On the antonyms "right-wrong" (m'3t - isft) see "The Prophecies of Neferti" 68-69 and p. 110, n. 39. See also "The Eloquent Peasant" n. 27.

¹⁷ Cf. "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage," 10, 12-11, 10.

¹⁸ Eg. sny mn. Cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti" where the following refrain appears: "I show you the land in turmoil (sny mn)" (38,54).

¹⁹ The "Lords of Silence" are the dead in the necropolis who are identified with Osiris, the god of the dead, whose epithet is the "Lord of Silence" in "The Eloquent Peasant" B1 27.

²⁰ The sense of anguish and physical suffering that accompanies Khakheperre-sonb's complaints (cf. also Recto 3) recalls the agonies

It is hard to keep silent²¹ about it.

Another heart would bend,
(But) a stout heart in trouble,
It is companion to his master.

Would that I had (such) a heart (14) that knew how to suffer,

Then I would find relief in it,
I would load it with my words²² of grief,
I would impose on it my malady.

(Verso 1) He said to his heart:

Come my heart, that I may speak to you —
Answer me my maxims,
And explain to me what is going on in the land,
Why those who were bright²³ have been cast down.

*Description of the Bad State of the Land (cont.)
and the Inability to Speak with the Heart about It*
(Verso 1-6)

I meditate about what has happened,
Misery enters in today,
Strange deeds²⁴ will not cease (also) tomorrow,
And all are silent about it.²⁵

The whole land is in great confusion,

Nobody is free from wrong,

All people alike are doing it,

Hearts are greedy.²⁶

He who used to give commands (3) is (now) one to whom commands are given,²⁷

And the hearts of both of them are content.

One awakes to it every day,

And the hearts do not reject it,

The state of yesterday is like today;

And one passes over it because it (the bad) is much,²⁸

(Thus) the faces (stay) solid.

None is wise (enough) to recognize it,

(4) None is angry (enough) to cry out,

One awakes to suffer every day.

Long and heavy is (my) malady,

There is no strength in the wretched man to save himself from one who overwhelms him.

It is painful to remain silent about what one hears,

It is misery to answer the ignorant.

To oppose speech makes enmity,

The heart does not accept the truth,

None endures contradiction,

Every man loves his own words.

Every man is lying²⁹ in crookedness,

Right speaking is abandoned.

I speak to you (6) my heart,

Answer me!

A heart that is approached does not keep silent,

Behold the affairs of the slave are like those of his master,³⁰

There is much that weighs upon you!

associated with the vocation of the biblical prophets, see Scripture References f.

²¹ Eg. h²p hr. Lit., "to hide the belly" is a common expression denoting that the belly is man's innermost soul, the seat of his intelligence and thoughts which should be well guarded and wisely used. Cf. n. 7, above and see Urk. IV 47, 10; 971,2; 1198, 13 and Wb. III 357,3.

²² Eg. hnw here may also mean "complaints"; see: Ockinga 1983:89-90.

²³ "Who were bright" refers to those wearing white garments.

²⁴ Eg. drdr, lit., "strange," is not suitable in this context; but since the word stands in parallelism with "misery" it might be understood as "strange deeds," "hostilities." Another suggestion proposed in research is instead of drdrw to read dr drtiw, i.e., "since the ancestors" (Kadish 1973:83).

²⁵ Silence in response to the anarchy prevailing in the land is condemned see Verso 4,5 and cf. "The Prophecies of Neferti" 20; "The Admonitions" 6,5.

²⁶ Eg. snm may be also translated "sad."

²⁷ See n. 16, above.

²⁸ Difficult sentence. Alternative readings suggested in research are: "Because it is imitated by the masses, because of inflexibility," Ockinga 1983:92; "Because of the transpiring of many things because of the cruelty (?)," Kadish 1973:78. The keyword is smi which can be explained as "to go beyond," "pass over," "miss" as well as "to imitate," "copy," see "The Admonitions" (p. 97 above) n. 39.

²⁹ Eg. grg has double meaning "to rely on," and "to lie" both of which may be suitable in this context.

³⁰ The word "slave" here relates to the heart.

REFERENCES

Urk. IV; Wb.; Junge 1977:275-284; Kadish 1973:77-90; Lichtheim AEL 1:145-149; Ockinga 1983:88-95; Shupak 1990:81-102; 1993.

THE PROPHECIES OF NEFERTI (1.45)

Nili Shupak

The single complete version of this composition is preserved on Pap. Petersburg 1116B which derives from the 18th Dynasty. This is augmented by fragments preserved on writing tablets and ostraca. "The Prophecies of Neferti" is a political document which was apparently composed in the court of the King Amenemhet I (1990-1960 BCE) who is here cast in the role of a redeemer-king. The text is introduced by a narrative frame, setting the work in the court of King Snefru of the Fourth Dynasty. The king wishing to be entertained, a lector-priest named Neferti is brought before him. Neferti is also a sage, able to utter "good words" and "choice maxims," qualities that place him in the same category as Khakheperre-sonb and the "Eloquent Peasant." His speech, which is presented as a prophecy, contains two main topics: The calamities of the time followed by redemption by a royal deliverer called Ameni; and social admonition concerning a variety of wrong-doings (murder, family rivalry, inversions of normal social hierarchies). But the pattern of prophecy is here only a literary disguise. The aim of the composition is to criticize the current government of the realm on the one hand, and to legitimize the monarchy of Amenemhet I on the other.

Frame-story: Introduction (1-18)

It happened when his majesty the King of Upper and Lower Egypt Snefru, the justified, was potent in this entire land. On one of these days it happened that the administrative council of the residence entered the palace l.p.h. to greet (the king). And they went out after they had greeted (him) according to their daily custom. Then his majesty l.p.h. said to the seal-bearer who was at his side: "Go and bring me back the administrative council of the residence who have gone from here after greeting (me) on this day."

They were brought to him (5) at once and they were on their bellies before his majesty l.p.h. once more. His majesty l.p.h. said to them: Fellows, behold I have caused you to be called that you seek for me a son of yours who is wise, a brother of yours who is excellent, a friend of yours who has done a good deed, who will tell me some good words, choice formulations,¹ which should entertain my majesty on hearing them.

Frame-Story (cont): The Summoning of Neferti (8-19)

They were on their bellies before his majesty once more. Then they said before his majesty l.p.h.: "There is a great lector priest of Bastet,² O sovereign, our lord, Neferti³ is his name. He is a citizen valiant with his arm;⁴ he is excellent with his fingers; he is a wealthy man, who has greater wealth (11) than any peer of his. Let him [be permitted] to see his majesty." Then said his majesty l.p.h. "Go and bring him to me." And he was brought to him immediately. And he was on his belly before his majesty l.p.h. Then his majesty l.p.h. said: "Come now Neferti (13) my friend, tell me some good words, choice formulations, which will entertain my majesty on hearing them. And the lector-priest Neferti said: "Something that happened or something that is going to happen, O sovereign l.p.h., my lord." (15) Then his majesty l.p.h. said "Something that is going to happen. It is (still) today and the passing of it already happens."⁵ He stretched out his arm to a writing case and then he took for him a papyrus roll and a palette and put in writing what the lector-priest Neferti said;⁶ A sage from the east he was, one belonging to Bastet when she appears, a child of the Heliopolitan⁷ nome. He was concerned about what was happening in the land, calling to mind the state of the east with the Asiatics⁸ travelling in their strength (19) upsetting those who were harvesting and grabbing the taxes (assigned) for the time of ploughing.

Neferti's Prophecies (20-71)

I. Calamities (20-57)

The Ruin of the Country (20-24)

He said:

Stir, my heart,⁹

Bemoan this land from which you derived.

¹ Mastery of the art of eloquence is a major attribute of the Egyptian sage (also see I. 13ff.). Neferti, like the Eloquent Peasant (see there n. 29) and Khakheperre-sonb (Recto 1-13), is distinguished by his accomplishments in rhetoric. In the Book of Proverbs too there is frequent praise of eloquence: cf. Prov 15:23; 24:26; 25:10 and Shupak 1993:334-336. On the connection of the Eg. word ts, formulation, maxim, with the image of knots and its Hebrew parallel taḥbulôt, see ibid., 313-317.

² Bastet. The cat-goddess of Bubastis in the eastern Delta.

³ Neferti is mentioned among the eight great Egyptian scribes who are praised in Pap. Chester Beatty IV, dating from the period of the New Kingdom (Verso 3,6).

⁴ "Valiant with his arm" - Eg. kn n g³b.f means a self-made official who rose to a high rank through his own efforts. See: Derchain 1972; cf. Westendorf 1973.

⁵ Here the King declares his preference for hearing "something that is going to happen," i.e., the future, after which the verb sr, foretell, is employed in the text (see n. 16 below). Although the following words of Neferti are presented as prophecy it seems that they are a portrayal of contemporary or past events.

⁶ Cf. "The Eloquent Peasant" (B1 80, B2 123ff.) where the words of the peasant are similarly written down at the king's command.

⁷ "Heliopolitan nome." The northern derivation of Neferti is emphasized since Amenemhet I moved his seat from Thebes in the south, to the area of Memphis in the north.

⁸ Also see 32-33, 63ff. On the phenomenon of Asiatics (ḥmw) penetrating into Egypt cf. "Pap. Anastasi VI" 51ff.; for a detailed description of their land and way of life see: "The Instruction Addressed to Merikare" 92. In the light of II. 32ff. one may assume that the ḥmw were Palestinians who sought refuge in Egypt for economic reasons, as described in the patriarchs' stories in the book of Genesis; see: Scripture References d; Goedicke 1977:71.

⁹ A literary pattern frequently used in works belonging to the speculative wisdom literature is the opening formula of a man speaking to his heart (ib) or to his soul (ba). Cf. "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb" Recto 7, Verso 1.5ff. and "The Dispute between a Man and His Ba" (see COS 3). The same device is used in the Hebrew speculative wisdom literature: Eccl 1:16; 2:1, 15-16; 3:17-18 and also ibid., 1:13,17; 2:20; 8,16, 19; 9,1. See also "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb" n. 13.

He who is silent is a wrongdoer. ¹⁰	a Ezek 30:3, 17; 32:7-8	Delta
Behold, there was something of which one talks respectfully, ¹¹		After making a nest near the people.
Behold, he who was official is cast to the ground. ¹²	b-b Isa 19:5-7; Ezek 30:12; 31:15	The people let them approach because of the shortage. ²⁰
Weary not of what is in front of you, (22) Stand against that which is before you!		Perished indeed are those good things, ^c
Behold, officials in the governance of the land are no more;	c Isa 19:19-20	Those fish ponds (where there were) those who clean fish, ²¹
What is to be done is no (longer) done, Re should begin to recreate.		Overflowing with fish and fowl.
(23) The land is entirely lost, ¹³ no remnant is left,	d Gen 12:10-20; 42:1-5; 43:1-2; 47:1-11	All good things have passed away, (32) The land is burdened with misfortune
Without that the black of a nail (remains) from its taxes, ¹⁴		Because of those looking (?) for food, Asiatics roaming the land. ²²
(24) This land is destroyed, none cares about it, None speaks and none sheds a tear: "How will this land be?"	e Isa 19:2	Foes (33) have arisen in the east, Asiatics have descended into Egypt. ^d
		The fortifications are destroyed ...
		(34) When one will enter the fortifications, When sleep will be banished from my eyes, I spend the night wakeful.
		The wild beasts of the desert will drink from the river (36) of Egypt,
		They will be content on their banks by the absence of anyone to chase them away. ²³
		For the land is seized and recovered (lit., brought)
		And no one knows the result.
		What will happen is hidden according to the saying,
		(38) "When sight and hearing fail, the mute leads." ²⁴
Natural Disasters (25-29)
The sun is covered and does not shine for the people to see, ^{15 a}
No one can live when the clouds cover (the sun),
Every face is numb from lack of it.
I shall say what is before me,
I cannot foretell what has not yet come. ¹⁶
The river of Egypt is empty, ^b
One can cross the water on foot,
One will seek water for the ships to sail on.
Its course has become a riverbank,
A riverbank will be water,
What is in the water place will be riverbank. ^{17 b}
Southwind will combat northwind,
So that sky will lack the single wind. ¹⁸
Disasters Caused by Human Beings (29-57)
1. Infiltration of Delta by Asiatics (29-38) Strange birds ¹⁹ will breed in the marshes of the
		2. Civil Disasters (38-54)
		I show you the land in turmoil, ²⁵
		(39) That which has never happened has happened.
		One will seize the weapons of warfare, ^c
		The land lives in (40) confusion.
		One will make arrows of copper,
		One will beg for bread with blood,

¹⁰ A difficult sentence. For different readings see: Barta 1971:37, Goedicke 1977:75-76, Helck 1970a:18 and Lichtheim AEL 1:140.

¹¹ The reading "respectfully" follows Helck 1970a:18.

¹² šc.n.k probably crept in from l. 20 and should be deleted, as suggested by Helck 1970a:18.

¹³ "Land" Eg. ꜥꜣ, is one of the key terms in the composition. Synonymous formulas consisting of the word accompanied by phrases expressing loss, grief, or distress appear in ll. 23-24, 37. See also: 39,40; 45-46; 50 and cf. 20.

¹⁴ "The black of the nail" is a metaphor for small measure and the phrase stresses the bad economic situation of the land. Alternative explanation: "The black of the nail" refers to Re's work of creation, meaning that everything that was created by him is now destroyed, even the black under the nail.

¹⁵ The motif of the "hidden sun" returns in detail in ll. 51-54.

¹⁶ "I cannot foretell (sr) what has not yet come." Cf. "foretelling by the ancestors," in "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" 1,10.

¹⁷ The metaphorical use of the image of the course of the Nile in reference to the fate of human beings appears in the wisdom literature. Cf. "The Instruction Addressed to Merikare" 125-126; "The Instruction of Amenemope" 6, 18-7,6; "The Instruction of Anii" 8,3-10.

¹⁸ Another variation: "So that sky will consist of only one wind."

¹⁹ The metaphor of "strange birds" refers to the foreign Asiatic tribes who were accustomed to settling down in the eastern Delta in order to survive the summer. For an alternative explanation see Blumenthal 1982:3 n. 24.

²⁰ Alternative reading: "After the weakened people let them come near."

²¹ Lit., "Fish-slitting people."

²² See n. 8 above.

²³ Another variation: "For lack of one to fear."

²⁴ Alternative reading: "Behold, when one who should hear is deaf the silent one is in front."

²⁵ This refrain reappears in l. 54. The phrase "the land is in turmoil" (Eg. šny mny) also comes in "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb" Recto 11 and Urk. IV 2027. 11; The introductory phrase "I show you ..." (lit., "I give you") is repeated five times in our text (38, 44, 48, 54, 55).

One will laugh²⁶ at distress;
 None will weep over death,
 None spends the night fasting because of death,
 The heart of a man cares only for himself.
 Mourning is no (longer) carried out today,
 Hearts have quite abandoned it.
 A man sits with his back turned,
 While one man kills another.
 I show you a son as an enemy,
 A brother as a foe,
 A man (45) killing his (own) father.^{27 f}

Every mouth is full of "love me,"
 Everything good has disappeared.
 The land has perished, laws are destined for it,
 Deprived of produce, lacking in crops,²⁸
 What was done is (47) as if it were not done.
 One will take the property of a man, and give it to a stranger,
 I show you a lord in worries, the stranger satisfied.
 (48) He who has never filled up for himself is now empty.^{29 g}

One will give something (only) out of hatred,
 In order to silence the mouth that speaks;
 One answers a complaint with an arm holding a stick
 And says, Kill him!
 The words fall on the heart like fire,
 (50) None can endure a saying.
 The land diminishes but its rulers are numerous,^h
 Bare, (but) its taxes are great.³⁰
 The grain is low (51) the measure is large,
 One measures it in overflow.

Re separates himself (from) mankind^a
 If he shines the hour exists
 (But now) none knows when noon comes;
 None can discern his shadow,
 None is dazzled by seeing (him),
 Nor do the eyes fill with water.
 As he is in the sky like the moon,
 But his time of nightfall cannot be transgressed
 (i.e., remains unchanged),

ff Isa 1:21,
 23; 59:3-8;
 Prov 30:11-
 14; cf. ibid.,
 6:17-19

g Prov 30:22;
 Eccl 10:6-7

h Eccl 5:7

i Isa 11:1,
 10; Jer 23:5;
 30:9; Ezek
 34:23; Hos
 3:5

j Isa 11:12-
 13; Ezek
 37:15-28;
 Mic 5:2;

k-k Isa 9:3-6,
 11; Mic 5:3-
 5; Zech 9:10

(54) His rays will be on the face again as in former times.

3. The World Upside Down: Inversion of Social Order (54-57)

I show you the land in turmoil,³¹
 The weak of arm is (now) the possessor of an arm,
 One salutes him who (formerly) saluted.
 I show you the lowly as superior ...^g
 One lives in the necropolis.
 The poor man will make wealth,
 The great one will [pray]³² to live.
 The beggar will eat bread,
 The slaves will be exalted (?).^{33 g}
 The Heliopolitan nome, the birthplace of every god, will not (longer) be.

II. Redemption (58-71)

The Redeemer King (58-62)

Then a king will come from the south,
 Imeny,³⁴ the justified, is his name,
 A son is he of a woman of the land of Nubia,ⁱ
 A child is he of Upper Egypt.³⁵
 He will take the white crown,
 He will wear the red crown;
 (60) He will unite the Two Mighty Ones,^{36 j}
 He will appease the Two Lords with what they desire,
 The field-encircler in his fist, the oar in motion.³⁷
 Rejoice, O people of his time,
 The son of man will make his name forever and ever.

The Rehabilitation of the Country: Driving Away the Enemy and Restoring Order (62-71)

They who incline toward evil,^k
 Who plot rebellion,
 (63) They subdued their mouth in fear of him.
 The Asiatics will fall to his slaughter,
 The Libyans will fall to his flame,
 The rebels to his wrath, the traitors to (65) his might,
 The serpent which is on his forehead will still the traitors for him.

²⁶ A bitter laugh derives from a disturbed social order; cf. Blumenthal 1982:4 n. 33.

²⁷ Cf. "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" 1.5.

²⁸ Cf. Lichtheim AEL 1:144 n. 11; alternative reading: "Damaging has been done, that which was lost is found."

²⁹ The stylistic device used in ll. 48, 54-57, i.e., presenting a series of contrasts to highlight absurdity, is common in the Egyptian as well as the Hebrew wisdom literature. See "The Eloquent Peasant" n. 32; "The Admonitions" n. 11; "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb" n. 16.

³⁰ Another variation: "While it dries up, its servants are rich."

³¹ See n. 25 above.

³² Obscure sentence; the reading above follows Goedicke's reconstruction: wr(t) r ftjri hpr. Goedicke 1977:123-124.

³³ *Bhk*² an obscure word to which a variety of meanings have been given. It may derive from bh forced labour, and *k*², high.

³⁴ Ameny is a short name of Amenemhet I (1990-1960 BCE), the first King of the Twelfth Dynasty. The motif of a redeemer king also appears in "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage" (11.11-12.6) and see p. 97, n. 34, and has common features with the portrayal of the eschatological king in the Bible. See Shupak 1989-90:32-33.

³⁵ Eg. Hn - nhn designates the southern region of Egypt.

³⁶ "Two Mighty Ones" are the two goddesses, the vulture goddess Nekhebet of Upper Egypt and the cobra goddess Wadjet of Lower Egypt who preside over the double crown. These goddesses, like the "Two Lords" Horus and Seth, symbolize the unified Kingdom.

³⁷ Objects carried by the King during the coronation ceremony.

One will (66) build the Walls of the Ruler³⁸
 l.p.h.,
 To prevent Asiatics from descending to Egypt;
 They will beg for water in the customary manner,
 In order to let their herds drink.
 Then order will come into its place
 While wrongdoing is driven out.³⁹

k-k see note on previous page

Joyful will be he who will observe and he who will serve the king.⁴⁰
 The wise man will pour out water for me,⁴⁰
 When he sees that what I have spoken comes to pass.
 It has come to its end successfully by the scribe
 ...

³⁸ A series of fortresses built by Amenemhet I to protect the eastern frontier from penetration by foreign tribes. Cf. "The Story of Sinuhe" B17.

³⁹ The contrast pair mꜣꜥꜣ — justice and isft — wrong symbolize order and chaos and play an important part in the Egyptian wisdom ideology, as shown by their common usage in the wisdom texts. See: "The Eloquent Peasant" B1 67, and ibid., n. 27; "The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage," n. 20 (text 1.42); "The Complaints of Khakheperre-sonb," n. 16 (see text 1.44).

⁴⁰ The custom of the Egyptian scribes to bring libation for the sages of bygone times is alluded to here. Cf. Blumenthal 1982:11.

REFERENCES

Barta 1971; Blumenthal 1982; Derchain 1972; Goedicke 1977; Helck 1970a; Lichtheim AEL 1:139-145; Shupak 1989-90:1-40; 1993; Westendorf 1973.

3. INSTRUCTIONS

INSTRUCTION OF ANY (1.46)

Miriam Lichtheim

The Instruction of Any has long been known through a single manuscript: Papyrus Boulaq 4 of the Cairo Museum, which dates from the 21st or 22nd Dynasty. Of the first pages only small fragments have remained, and the copy as a whole abounds in textual corruptions due to incomprehension on the part of the copying scribe. The introductory sentence of the work is preserved on a tablet in the Berlin Museum (No. 8934), and small portions of the text are found in three papyrus fragments in the Musée Guimet, in Papyrus Chester Beatty V of the British Museum, and in four ostraca from Deir el Medina.

Given the corruption and lacunae of the main text copy and the absence of sizeable duplicate copies, the text has presented great difficulties to editors and translators. In the words of Gardiner: "The papyrus known as P. Boulaq IV, to the contents of which Chabas gave the name Les Maximes du scribe Anii, has long enjoyed the unenviable reputation of being the obscurest of all Egyptian wisdom texts" (1959a:12).

The work itself was composed in the New Kingdom, almost certainly in the 18th Dynasty. It combines traditional themes with a certain amount of innovation. Two aspects, in particular, distinguish it from most earlier Instructions. One is the fact that the Instruction of Any comes from the sphere of the middle class and is meant for the average man. The author presents himself as a minor official, and the advice he dispenses, in the usual form of a father instructing his son, is suited to the thinking of anyone who possessed a modicum of education and of material comforts. Thus there is nothing specifically aristocratic about the values that are taught. This is, of course, in keeping with the evolution of Egyptian society and with the growth of the middle class.

The other novel feature appears in the epilogue. In earlier Instructions the epilogue had consisted either in the grateful acceptance of the teaching by the listeners, or in the teacher's conclusion urging compliance. The epilogue of Any, however, is a debate between father and son in which the son makes the objection that the father's teachings are too difficult to be understood and obeyed. By making the son disinclined to learn and obey, the author of the work introduced a new dimension into the concept of didactic literature: the thought that instruction might fail to have an impact. The thought is introduced in order to be refuted. The father has the last word as well as the more telling arguments. Yet the expression of a negative point of view adds a fresh and realistic note to the Instruction genre by showing an awareness that the efficacy of teaching could be questioned and that the teachability of man had its limitations.

The page and line numbering used here is that of Suys's publication (1935) which was also employed by Volten (1937-38). My translation begins with page 3.1 preceded by the title of the work found on the Berlin tablet.

Beginning of the educational instruction made by the Scribe Any of the Palace of Queen Nefertari.¹

(3.1) Take a wife while you're young,
That she make a son for you;
She should bear for you while you're youthful,
It is proper to make people.²
Happy the man whose people are many,
He is saluted on account of his progeny.^a

Observe the feast of your god,³
And repeat its season,
God is angry if it is neglected.
Put up witnesses (3.5) when you offer,
The first time that you do it.
When one comes to seek your record,
Have them enter you in the roll;
When time comes to seek your purchase,⁴
It will extol the might of the god.
Song, dance, incense are his foods,
Receiving prostrations is his wealth;
The god does it to magnify his name,
But man it is who is inebriated.

Do not (3.10) enter the house of anyone,
Until he admits you and greets you;
Do not snoop around in his house,
Let your eye observe in silence.
Do not speak of him to another outside,
Who was not with you;
A great deadly crime

.....

^b Beware of a woman who is a stranger,
One not known in her town;
Don't stare at her when she goes by,
Do not know her carnally.
A deep water whose course is unknown,
Such is a woman away from her husband.
"I am pretty," she tells you daily,
When she has no witnesses;
She is ready to ensnare you,
A great deadly crime when it is heard.^b
.....⁵

Do not leave when the chiefs enter,
Lest your name stink;
In a quarrel (4.1) do not speak,

a Prov 17:6

b-b Prov
6:24-26; 7:6-27; 2:16-19

c-c Prov
20:1;
30:4-5

Your silence will serve you well.

Do not raise your voice in the house of god,
He abhors shouting;
Pray by yourself with a loving heart,
Whose every word is hidden.
He will grant your needs,
He will hear your words,
He will accept your offerings.
Libate for your father and mother,
Who are resting in the valley;
When the gods (4.5) witness your action,
They will say: "Accepted."
Do not forget the one outside,
Your son will act for you likewise.

^c Don't indulge in drinking beer,
Lest you utter evil speech⁶
And don't know what you're saying.
If you fall and hurt your body,
None holds out a hand to you;
Your companions in the drinking
Stand up saying: "Out with the drunk!"
If one comes to seek you (4.10) and talk with
you.
One finds you lying on the ground.
As if you were a little child.^c

Do not go out of your house,
Without knowing your place of rest.
Let your chosen place be known,
Remember it and know it.
Set it before you as the path to take,
If you are straight you find it.
Furnish your station in the valley,
The grave that shall conceal your corpse;
Set it before you as your concern,
A thing that matters in your eyes.
Emulate the great departed,
Who are at rest within their tombs.
No blame accrues to him who does it,
It is well that you be ready too.
When your envoy⁷ (5.1) comes to fetch you,
He shall find you ready to come
To your place of rest and saying:
"Here comes one prepared before you."

¹ Queen Ahmes-Nefertari, the wife of King Ahmose. The reading is due to Posener 1949:42 n. 2.

² Or: "Teach him to be a man" (Wilson ANET 420). There is no doubt that iri rmt sometimes means "to be a man"; but in this context a term denoting procreation seems more suitable. I can, however, not quote parallels.

³ The understanding of this maxim was much advanced by Gardiner's rendering (1959a:12-14).

⁴ Gardiner (1935b:143 n. 10) pointed out that šsp can have the meaning "purchase." This meaning suits here: the worshiper pays for offerings that are made in his name.

⁵ Several obscure sentences.

⁶ Šmi snw, "evil speech," "noxious remarks," and the like.

⁷ Death.

Do not say, "I am young to be taken,"
For you do not know your death.
When death comes he steals the infant
Who is in his mother's arms,
Just like him who reached old age.

Behold, I give you these useful counsels,
For you to ponder in your heart;
Do it (5.5) and you will be happy,
All evils will be far from you.
Guard against the crime of fraud,
Against words that are not <true>;
Conquer malice in your self,
A quarrelsome man does not rest on the morrow.

^d Keep away from a hostile man,
Do not let him be your comrade; ^d
Befriend one who is straight and true,
One whose actions you have seen.
If your rightness matches his,
The friendship will be balanced.
Let your hand preserve what is in your house,
Wealth accrues to him who guards it;
Let your hand not scatter it to (5.10) strangers,
Lest it turn to loss for you.
If wealth is placed where it bears interest,
It comes back to you redoubled;
Make a storehouse for your own wealth,
Your people will find it on your way.
What is given small returns augmented,
What is replaced brings abundance.¹
The wise lives off the house of the fool,
Protect what is yours and you find it;
Keep your eye on what you own,
Lest you end as a beggar.
He who is slack amounts to nothing,^c
Honored is the man who's active.

.....⁸

(6.1) Learn about the way of a man
Who undertakes to found his household.
Make a garden, enclose a patch,
In addition to your plowland;
Set out trees within it,
As shelter about your house.
Fill your hand with all the flowers
That your eye can see;
One has need of all of them,
It is good fortune not to lose them.⁹

Do not rely on another's goods,
Guard what you acquire yourself;
Do not depend on another's wealth,
Lest he become master in your house.
Build a house or find and buy one,
Shun 'contention'
Don't say: "My mother's father has a house, d-d Prov

22:24; 29:22

e Prov 6:6-11

['A house that lasts,¹ one calls it;"]

When you come to share with your brothers,
Your portion may be a storeroom.

If your god lets you have children,
They'll say: "We are in our father's house."

Be a man hungry or sated in his house,
It is his walls (6.10) that enclose him.

Do not be a mindless person,
Then your god will give you wealth.

Do not sit when another is standing,
One who is older than you,

Or greater than you in his rank.

No good character is reproached,

An evil character is blamed.

Walk the accustomed path each day

Stand according to your rank.

"Who's there?" So one always says,

Rank creates its rules;

A woman is asked about (6.15) her husband

A man is asked about his rank.

Do not speak rudely to a brawler,

When you are attacked hold yourself back;

You will find this good (7.1) when your relations are friendly,

When trouble has come it will help you bear up,
And the aggressor will desist.

Deeds that are effective toward a stranger

Are very noxious to a brother.¹⁰

Your people will hail you when you are joyful,

They will weep freely <when you are sad>;

When you are happy the brave look to you,

When you are lonely you find your relations.

One will do all you say

If you are versed in writings;

Study the writings, put them in your heart,

(7.5) Then all your words will be effective.

Whatever office a scribe is given,

He should consult the writings;

The head of the treasury has no son,

The master of the seal has no heir.

The scribe is chosen for his hand,

His office has no children;

His pronouncements are his freemen,

His functions are his masters.

Do not reveal your heart to a stranger,

He might use your words against you;

The noxious speech that came from your mouth,

He repeats it and you make enemies.

A man may be ruined by his tongue,

Beware and you will do well.¹¹

A man's belly is wider than a granary,

And full of all kinds of answers;

(7.10) Choose the good one and say it,

⁸ I do not understand the maxim in lines 5.15-17.

⁹ The flowers are a metaphor for children.

¹⁰ Parts of this maxim were rendered by Posener 1964:42-43.

¹¹ Read ikr.

While the bad is shut in your belly.
 A rude answer brings a beating,
 Speak sweetly and you will be loved.
 Don't ever talk back to your attacker,
 'Do not set a trap <for him>';
 It is the god who judges the righteous,
 His fate comes and takes him away.^{12 f}

Offer to your god,
 Beware of offending him.
 Do not question his images,
 Do not accost him when he appears.
 Do not jostle him in order to carry him,
 Do not disturb the oracles.¹³
 Be careful, help to protect him,
 Let your eye watch out (7.15) for his wrath,
 And kiss the ground in his name.
 He gives power in a million forms,
 He who magnifies him is magnified.
 God of this earth is the sun in the sky,
 While his images are on earth;
 When incense is given them as daily food,
 The lord of risings is satisfied.

Double the food your mother gave you,
 Support her as she supported you;
 She had a heavy load in you,
 But she did not abandon you.
 When you were born after your months,
 She was yet yoked <to you>,
 Her breast in your mouth for three years.⁸
 As you grew and your excrement disgusted,
 She was not disgusted, saying: "What shall I do!"

When she sent you to school,
 And you were taught to write,
 She kept watching over you daily,
 With bread (8.1) and beer in her house.
 When as a youth you take a wife,
 And you are settled in your house,
 Pay attention to your offspring,
 Bring him up as did your mother.
 Do not give her cause to blame you,
 Lest she raise her hands to god,
 And he hears her cries.

Do not eat bread while another stands by Without extending your hand to him.
 As to food, it is here always,
 It is man (8.5) who does not last;
 One man is rich, another is poor,
 But food remains for him 'who shares it.'¹
 As to him who was rich last year,
 He is a vagabond this year;
 Don't be greedy to fill your belly,

f Prov 25:11

g 1 Sam 1:22-
24

You don't know your end at all.
 Should you come to be in want,
 Another may do good to you.
 When last year's watercourse is gone,
 Another river is here today;
 Great lakes become dry places,
 Sandbanks turn into depths.
 Man does not have a single (8.10) way,
 The lord of life confounds him.¹⁴

Attend to your position,
 Be it low or high;
 It is not good to press forward,
 Step according to rank.
 Do not intrude on a man in his house,
 Enter when you have been called;
 He may say "Welcome" with his mouth,
 Yet deride you in his thoughts.
 One gives food to one who is hated,
 Supplies to one who enters uninvited.

Don't rush to attack your attacker,
 Leave him to the god;
 Report him daily to the god,
 (8.15) Tomorrow being like today,
 And you will see what the god does,
 When he injures him who injured you.

Do not enter into a crowd,
 If you find it in an uproar
 And about to come to blows.
 Don't pass anywhere near by,
 Keep away from their tumult,
 Lest you be brought before the court,
 When an inquiry is made.
 Stay away from hostile people,
 Keep your heart quiet among fighters;
 An outsider is not brought to court,
 One who knows nothing is not bound in fetters.

(9.1) It is useful to help one whom one loves,
 'So as to cleanse him of his faults;'¹
 'You will be sage from his errors,'¹

.....
 The first of the herd leads to the field.
¹⁵

Do not control your wife in her house,
 When you know she is efficient;
 Don't say to her: "Where is it? Get it!"
 When she has put it in the right place.
 Let your eye observe in silence,
 Then you recognize her (9.5) skill;
 It is joy when your hand is with her,
 There are many who don't know this.
 If a man desists from strife at home,

¹² I.e., the aggressor will be punished.¹³ This passage was explained by Posener 1963a:98-102.¹⁴ The theme is the reversal of fortune, a topos that plays a considerable part in Eg. wisdom literature. Some of its aspects were studied by Volten 1941:371-379. A wide-ranging study of the theme in Mesopotamian literature is by Buccellati 1972:241-264.¹⁵ Several sentences which I do not understand. The whole maxim which occupies lines 9.1-3 is obscure to me.

He will not encounter its beginning.
Every man who founds a household
Should hold back the hasty heart.
Do not go after a woman,
Let her not steal your heart.¹⁶

Do not talk back to an angry superior,
Let him have his way;
Speak sweetly when he speaks sourly,^h
It's the remedy that calms the heart.
Fighting answers carry sticks,
And your strength collapses;

.....

Do not vex your heart.
He will return to praise you soon,
When his hour of rage has passed.
If your words please the heart,
(9.10) The heart tends to accept them;
Choose silence for yourself,
Submit to what he does.

Befriend the herald¹⁷ of your quarter,
Do not make him angry with you.
Give him food from your house,
Do not slight his requests;
Say to him, "Welcome, welcome here,"
No blame accrues to him who does it.

.....¹⁸

Epilogue

The scribe Khonshotep answered his father, the scribe Any:

I wish I were like (you),
As learned as you!
Then I would carry out your teachings,
And the son would be brought to his father's place.

Each man (9.15) is led by his nature,
You are a man who is a master,
Whose strivings are exalted,
Whose every word is chosen.
The son, he understands little
When he recites the words in the books.
But when your words please the heart,
The heart tends to accept them with joy.
Don't make your virtues too numerous,
That one may raise one's thoughts to you;
A boy does not follow the moral instructions,
Though the writings are on his tongue!

The scribe Any answered his son, the scribe Khonshotep:

Do not rely on such worthless thoughts,
Beware of what you do to yourself!
I judge your complaints to be wrong,
I shall set you right about them.

^h Prov 15:1

There's nothing [superfluous in] our words,
Which you say you wished were reduced.
The fighting (10.1) bull who kills in the stable,
He forgets and abandons the arena;
He conquers his nature,
Remembers what he's learned,
And becomes the like of a fattened ox.
The savage lion abandons his wrath,
And comes to resemble the timid donkey.
The horse slips into its harness,
Obedient it goes outdoors.
The dog obeys the word,
And walks behind its master.
The monkey carries the stick,
Though its mother did not carry it.
(10.5) The goose returns from the pond,
When one comes to shut it in the yard.
One teaches the Nubian to speak Egyptian,
The Syrian and other strangers too.
Say: "I shall do like all the beasts,"
Listen and learn what they do.

The scribe Khonshotep answered his father, the scribe Any:

Do not proclaim your powers,
So as to force me to your ways;
[Does it not happen to a man to slacken his hand,¹
So as to hear an answer in its place?
Man resembles the god in his way
If he listens to a man's answer.
[One (man) cannot know his fellow,¹
If the masses are beasts;
[One (man) cannot know his teachings,¹
And alone possess a mind,
If the multitudes are foolish.
All your sayings are excellent,
But doing them [requires virtues]¹
Tell the god who gave you wisdom:
"Set them on your path!"

The scribe Any answered his son, the scribe Khonshotep:

Turn your back to these many words,
That are [not worth]¹ being heard.
The crooked stick left on the ground,
With sun and shade attacking it,
If the carpenter takes it, he straightens it,
Makes of it a noble's staff,
And a straight stick makes a collar.¹⁹
You foolish heart,
Do you wish us to teach,
Or have you been corrupted?
"Look," said he,²⁰ "you [my father,¹

¹⁶ If that is the meaning, the two lines are tacked on incongruously. Volten 1937-38:132 and 136, tried to obtain a different meaning.

¹⁷ The policeman.

¹⁸ The remainder of the maxim is obscure to me.

¹⁹ ḏrt, a horse collar; i.e., the crooked stick is made straight, and the straight one is rounded. On the passage see Posener 1973:130.

²⁰ The son speaks.

You who are wise and strong of hand:
The infant in his mother's arms,
His wish is for what nurses him."

"Look," said he,²¹ "when he finds his speech,
He says: 'Give me bread.'"

²¹ The father answers. Any's concluding answer apparently means that when a child is old enough to speak he asks to be nourished materially and spiritually.

REFERENCES

Text: Mariette 1871 pls. 15-28; Suys 1935. Other fragments: Gardiner 1935a 2:50 and 2:27; P. Chester Beatty V, verso 2,6-11 (= P. Boulaq 4, 3,1-3 and 6,1-4); Posener 1935: nos. 1063, 1257, 1258, 1259. Translation: Volten 1937-38; Erman 1927:234-242. ANET 420-421 (excerpts); Volten 1941:373-374; Gardiner 1959a; Lichtheim AEL 2:135-146.

INSTRUCTION OF AMENEMOPE (1.47)

Miriam Lichtheim

With this long work, the Instruction genre reaches its culmination. Its worth lies not in any thematic richness, for its range is much narrower than, for example, that of the Instruction of Ptahhotep. Its worth lies in its quality of inwardness. Though it is still assumed that right thinking and right action will find their reward, worldly success, which had meant so much in the past, has receded into the background. Even poverty is no longer viewed as a misfortune.

The shift of emphasis, away from action and success, and toward contemplation and endurance, leads to an overall regrouping of values and a redefinition of the ideal man. As early as Ptahhotep, the ideal man lacked all martial values; he was a man of peace who strove for advancement and was generous with his wealth. The new ideal man is content with a humble position and a minimal amount of material possessions. His chief characteristic is modesty. He is self-controlled, quiet, and kind toward people, and he is humble before God. This ideal man is indeed not a perfect man, for perfection is now viewed as belonging only to God.

The style of Amenemope is rich in similes and metaphors which are sustained at length and with skill. The work as a whole is carefully composed and unified, both through the device of thirty numbered chapters and through a concentration on two basic themes: first, the depiction of the ideal man, the "silent man," and his adversary, the "heated man"; second, the exhortation to honesty and warnings against dishonesty. All other themes are subservient to these central ones.

The composition of the work is now usually assigned to the Ramesside period, although all the manuscript copies that have reached us are of later date. It was during the Ramesside age that the tribes of Israel became a nation, and much of Israelite knowledge of things Egyptian, as reflected in the Bible, resulted from contacts during this period. The most tangible literary evidence of these contacts is found in the chips from the Instruction of Amenemope that are embedded in the Book of Proverbs.⁶ It can hardly be doubted that the author of Proverbs was acquainted with the Egyptian work and borrowed from it, for in addition to the similarities in thought and expression — especially close and striking in Proverbs 22 and 23 — the line in 22:20: "Have I not written for you thirty sayings of admonition and knowledge" derives its meaning from the author's acquaintance with the "thirty" chapters of Amenemope. Ever since Adolf Erman pointed this out there has been a consensus among scholars on a literary relationship, although some scholars have tried to interpret it in reverse by claiming priority for the Hebrew text, or have proposed to derive both works from a lost Semitic original.

The Instruction of Amenemope is completely preserved in the British Museum Papyrus 10474. Small portions of it are found on a papyrus in Stockholm, three writing tablets in Turin, Paris, and Moscow, respectively, and an ostrakon in the Cairo Museum. In the British Museum papyrus and on the Turin and Louvre tablets the text is written stichically, that is to say, in lines that show the metrical scheme. This is unusual and important, for it allows us to see the metrical organization rather than having to guess it. And since the work is also divided into thirty numbered chapters, we are here precisely informed about two basic features of Egyptian prosody as applied to a particular work: the organization of the metrical line and the grouping of lines into sections or chapters.

The metrical line turns out to be exactly what one expects it to be. It consists of self-contained sentences or clauses. Through parallelism and related devices the lines are grouped loosely into distichs, tristichs, and quatrains. There is no indication that these groups of lines were further gathered into strophes or stanzas. Nor would such strophes be suited to the nature of instructional works. For the Instructions consist of thoughts developed freely over greater or lesser length, and the natural divisions occur when one topic is concluded and another taken up. In earlier Instructions such divisions were not marked by graphic or verbal devices; in Amenemope they are brought out clearly through the use of numbered chapters.

Amenemope is a difficult text. It abounds in rare words, elliptic phrases, and allusions whose meaning escapes us. Furthermore, the copying scribes introduced numerous errors. But we are fortunate to have the complete text preserved in the British Museum Papyrus, where it occupies all twenty-seven pages of the recto and the first line of the verso.

Prologue

- I.1 Beginning of the teaching for life,
The instructions for well-being,
Every rule for relations with elders,
For conduct toward magistrates;
5 Knowing how to answer one who speaks,
To reply to one who sends a message.
So as to direct him on the paths of life,
To make him prosper upon earth;
To let his heart enter its shrine,¹
10 Steering clear of evil;
To save him from the mouth of strangers,
To let (him) be praised in the mouth of people.
Made by the overseer of fields, experienced in his office,
The offspring of a scribe of Egypt, 15 The overseer of grains who controls the measure,
Who sets the harvest-dues for his lord,
Who registers the islands of new land,
In the great name of his majesty,
Who records the markers on the borders of
fields,
II.1 Who acts for the king in his listing of taxes,
Who makes the land-register of Egypt;
The scribe who determines the offerings for all the gods.
Who gives land-leases to the people,
5 The overseer of grains, [provider of] foods,
Who supplies the granary with grains;
The truly silent in This of Ta-wer,
The justified in Ipu,
Who owns a tomb on the west of Senu,
10 Who has a chapel at Abydos,
Amenemope, the son of Kanakht,
The justified in Ta-wer.²
<For> his son, the youngest of his children,
The smallest of his family,
15 The devotee of Min-Kamutef,
The water-pourer of Wennofer,
Who places Horus on his father's throne,
Who guards him in his noble shrine,

a Prov 22:17-24:22

b Prov
22:22-23

Who ----

- III.1 The guardian of the mother of god, Inspector of the black cattle of the terrace
of Min,
Who protects Min in his shrine:
Hor-em-maakher is his true name,
5 The child of a nobleman of Ipu,
The son of the sistrum-player of Shu and Tefnut,
And chief songstress of Horus, Tawosre.

Chapter 1

- He says:
Give your ears, hear the sayings,
10 Give your heart to understand them;
It profits to put them in your heart,^a
Woe to him who neglects them!
Let them rest in the casket of your belly,
May they be bolted in your heart;
15 When there rises a whirlwind of words,
They'll be a mooring post for your tongue.
If you make your life with these in your heart,
You will find it a success;
IV.1 You will find my words a storehouse for life,
Your being will prosper upon earth.

Chapter 2

- Beware of robbing a wretch,^b
5 Of attacking a cripple;
Don't stretch out your hand to touch an old
man,
Nor 'open your mouth¹³ to an elder.
Don't let yourself be sent on a mischievous errand,
Nor be friends with him who does it.
10 Don't raise an outcry against one who attacks you,
Nor answer him yourself.
He who does evil, the shore rejects him,
Its floodwater carries him away.
The northwind descends to end his hour,
15 It mingles with the thunderstorm.
The storm cloud is tall, the crocodiles are vicious,

¹ The heart is viewed as the god who dwells in man. On this concept see Bonnet, RÄRG 225-228.

² Ipu and Senu are names for Akhmim (Panopolis); Ta-wer is the nome of Abydos. Amenemope identifies himself as a citizen of Akhmim who has built his tomb there and also owns a funerary monument at Abydos.

³ The meaning of t²i-r, which recurs in 15.13, is not clear and it has been variously rendered. See Grumach 1972:31.

- You heated man, how are you now?
He cries out, his voice reaches heaven,
It is the Moon⁴ who declares his crime.
- V.1 Steer, we will ferry the wicked,
We do not act like his kind;
Lift him up, give him your hand,
Leave him <in> the hands of the god;
- 5 Fill his belly with bread of your own,
That he be sated and weep.
Another thing good in the heart of the god:
To pause before speaking.

Chapter 3

- 10 Don't start a quarrel with a hot-mouthed
man,
Nor needle him with words.
Pause before a foe, bend before an attacker,
Sleep (on it) before speaking.
A storm that bursts like fire in straw,
- 15 Such is the heated man in his hour.
Withdraw from him, leave him alone,
The god knows how to answer him.
If you make your life with these (words) in your heart,
Your children will observe them.

Chapter 4^c

- As for the heated man in the temple,⁵
He is like a tree growing 'indoors';
A moment lasts its growth of 'shoots';
Its end comes about in the 'woodshed';
- VI.5 It is floated far from its place,
The flame is its burial shroud.
The truly silent, who keeps apart,
He is like a tree grown in a meadow.
It greens, it doubles its yield,
- 10 It stands in front of its lord.
Its fruit is sweet, its shade delightful,
Its end comes in the garden.

Chapter 5

- Do not falsify⁶ the temple rations,
- 15 Do not grasp and you'll find profit.
Do not remove a servant of the god,
So as to do favors to another.
Do not say: "Today is like tomorrow,"
How will this end?
- VII.1 Comes tomorrow, today has vanished,
The deep has become the water's edge.
Crocodiles are bared, hippopotami stranded,
The fish crowded together.⁷
- 5 Jackals are sated, birds are in feast,

c Ps 1:3-4

d Prov 22:8;
23:10

- The fishnets have been drained.⁸
But all the silent in the temple,
They say: "Re's blessing is great."
Cling to the silent, then you find life.
- 10 Your being will prosper upon earth.

Chapter 6

- Do not move the markers on the borders of fields,^d
Nor shift the position of the measuring-cord.
Do not be greedy for a cubit of land,
- 15 Nor encroach on the boundaries of a widow.
The trodden furrow worn down by time,
He who disguises it in the fields,
When he has snared (it) by false oaths,
He will be caught by the might of the Moon.

VIII.1 Recognize him who does this on earth:

- He is an oppressor of the weak,
A foe bent on destroying your being,
The taking of life is in his eye.
- 5 His house is an enemy to the town,
His storage bins will be destroyed
His wealth will be seized from his children's hands,
His possessions will be given to another.
Beware of destroying the borders of fields,
- 10 Lest a terror carry you away;
One pleases god with the might of the lord
When one discerns the borders of fields.⁹
Desire your being to be sound,
Beware of the Lord of All;
- 15 Do not erase another's furrow,
It profits you to keep it sound.
Plow your fields and you'll find what you need,
You'll receive bread from your threshing-
floor.
Better is a bushel given you by the god,
- 20 Than five thousand through wrongdoing.
- IX.1 They stay not a day in bin and barn,
They make no food for the beer jar,
A moment is their stay in the granary,
Comes morning they have vanished.
- 5 Better is poverty in the hand of the god,
Than wealth in the storehouse;
Better is bread with a happy heart
Than wealth with vexation.

Chapter 7

- 10 Do not set your heart on wealth,

⁴ The god Thoth.⁵ On this chapter see now Posener 1973:129-135.⁶ The verb sg recurs in 7.17, 18.12, and 18.15. I follow Griffith in taking it to mean "overlay," "falsify," "disguise."⁷ So with Grumach 1972:50.⁸ The theme is the reversal of fortune; see the "Instruction of Any," text 1.46, n. 14 (above).⁹ Some translators take wpt as a participle referring to god: "He who determines the borders of fields." But then the meaning of the couplet is poor. I have followed Griffith.

There is no ignoring Fate and Destiny;
Do not let your heart go straying,
Every man comes to his hour.
* Do not strain to seek increase,
15 What you have, let it suffice you.
If riches come to you by theft,
They will not stay the night with you.
Comes day they are not in your house
Their place is seen but they're not there; 20 Earth opened its mouth, leveled them,
swallowed them,
X.1 And made them sink into dat.
They made a hole as big as their size,
And sank into the netherworld;
They made themselves wings like geese,
5 And flew away to the sky.⁴
Do not rejoice in wealth from theft,
Nor complain of being poor.
If the leading archer presses forward,
His company abandons him;
10 The boat of the greedy is left (in) the mud,
While the bark of the silent sails with the Wind.
You shall pray to the Aten when he rises,
Saying: "Grant me well-being and health";
He will give you your needs for this life,
15 And you will be safe from fear.

Chapter 8

Set your goodness before people,
Then you are greeted by all;
One welcomes the Uraeus,
20 One spits upon Apopis. Guard your tongue from harmful speech,
XI.1 Then you will be loved by others.
You will find your place in the house of god,
You will share in the offerings of your
lord.
When you're revered and your coffin conceals you
5 You will be safe from the power of god.¹⁰
Do not shout "crime" against a man,
When the cause of (his) flight is hidden.
Whether you hear something good or evil,
Do it outside where it is not heard.
10 Put the good remark on your tongue,
While the bad is concealed in your belly.

Chapter 9

Do not befriend the heated man,
Nor approach him for conversation.⁷ 15 Keep your tongue from answering your superior,
And take care not to insult him.
Let him not cast his speech to catch you,
Nor give free rein to your answer.

e-e Prov
23:4-5

f Prov 23:24-
25

Converse with a man of your own measure,
20 And take care not to 'offend' him.
XII.1 Swift is the speech of one who is angered,
More than wind 'over' water.
He tears down, he builds up with his tongue,
When he makes his hurtful speech.
5 He gives an answer worthy of a beating,
For its weight is harm.
He hauls freight like all the world,
But his load is falsehood.
He is the ferry-man of snaring words,
10 He goes and comes with quarrels.
When he eats and drinks inside,
His answer is (heard) outside.
The day he is charged with his crime is misfortune for his children.
15 If only Khnum came to him,
The Potter to the heated man,
So as to knead the 'faulty' heart.
He is like a young wolf in the farmyard,
He turns one eye against the other,
XIII.1 He causes brothers to quarrel.
He runs before every wind like clouds,
He dims the radiance of the sun;
He flips his tail like the crocodile's young,
5 'He draws himself up so as to strike.'¹
His lips are sweet, his tongue is bitter,
A fire burns in his belly.
Don't leap to join such a one,
Lest a terror carry you away.

Chapter 10

Don't force yourself to greet the heated
man,
For then you injure your own heart;
Do not say "greetings" to him falsely,
While there is terror in your belly.
15 Do not speak falsely to a man,
The god abhors it;
Do not sever your heart from your tongue,
That all your strivings may succeed.
You will be weighty before the others,
XIV.1 And secure in the hand of the god.
God hates the falsifier of words,
He greatly abhors the dissembler.

Chapter 11

5 Do not covet a poor man's goods,
Nor hunger for his bread;
A poor man's goods are a block in the
throat,
It makes the gullet vomit.
He who makes gain by lying oaths,
10 His heart is misled by his belly;
Where there is fraud success is feeble,
The bad spoils the good.¹¹

¹⁰ "Power" here in the sense of "wrath."

¹¹ Assuming *wh*² to be transitive. The usual rendering, "good and bad fail," is not satisfactory.

- You will be guilty before your superior,
And confused in your account;
15 Your pleas will be answered by a curse,
Your prostrations by a beating.
The big mouthful of bread — you swallow,
you vomit it,
And you are emptied of your gain.⁸
Observe the overseer¹² of the poor,
XV.1 When the stick attains him;
All his people are bound in chains,
And he is led to the executioner.
If you are released before your superior,
5 You are yet hateful to your subordinates;
Steer away from the poor man on the road,
Look at him and keep clear of his goods.

Chapter 12

- Do not desire a noble's wealth,
10 Nor make free with a big mouthful of bread;
If he sets you to manage his property,
Shun his, and yours will prosper.
Do not converse¹³ with a heated man,
So as to befriend a hostile man.
15 If you are sent to transport straw,
Stay away from its container.
If a man is observed on a fraudulent errand,
He will not be sent on another occasion.

Chapter 13

- Do not cheat a man <through> pen on scroll,
The god abhors it;
XVI.1 Do not bear witness with false words,
So as to brush aside a man by your tongue.
Do not assess a man who has nothing,
And thus falsify your pen.
5 If you find a large debt against a poor man,
Make it into three parts;
Forgive two, let one stand,
You will find it a path of life.
After sleep, when you wake in the morning,
10 You will find it as good news.
Better is praise with the love of men
Than wealth in the storehouse;
Better is bread with a happy heart
Than wealth with vexation.

15 Chapter 14

Do not recall yourself to a man,
Nor strain to seek his hand.
If he says to you: "Here is a gift.

g Prov 23:6-8

"No have-not¹ will refuse it,"¹⁴
Don't blink at him, nor bow your head,
Nor turn aside your gaze.
Salute him with your mouth, say,
"Greetings,"

- XVII.1 He will desist, and you succeed.
Do not rebuff him in his approach,
"Another time he'll be taken away."¹

Chapter 15

- 5 Do the good and you will prosper,
Do not dip your pen to injure a man.
The finger of the scribe is the beak of the Ibis,
Beware of brushing it aside.
The Ape dwells in the House of Khmun,¹⁵
10 His eye encircles the Two Lands;
When he sees one who cheats with his finger,
He carries his livelihood off in the flood.
The scribe who cheats with his finger,
His son will not be enrolled.
15 If you make your life with these (words) in your heart,
Your children will observe them.

Chapter 16

- Do not move the scales nor alter the weights,
Nor diminish the fractions of the measure;
20 Do not desire a measure of the fields,
Nor neglect those of the treasury.
The Ape sits by the balance,
XVIII.1 His heart is in the plummet;
Where is a god as great as Thoth,
Who invented these things and made them?
Do not make for yourself deficient weights,
5 They are rich in grief through the might of god.
If you see someone who cheats,
Keep your distance from him.
Do not covet copper,
Disdain beautiful linen;
10 What good is one dressed in finery,
If he cheats before the god?
Faience disguised as gold,
Comes day, it turns to lead.

Chapter 17

- 15 Beware of disguising the measure,
So as to falsify its fractions;
Do not force it to overflow,
Nor let its belly be empty.
Measure according to its true size,

¹² The meaning of hy is not well established; the word recurs in 24.17 where the meaning "overseer," or "superior," is suitable. But here a negative connotation such as "oppressor" seems called for.

¹³ See note 3.

¹⁴ The verb b^c (or b^c) recurs in 21.2, 27.1, and 27.5. The meaning assigned in Wb. 1:446 "beachten, berücksichtigen," does not appear suitable here. The four occurrences in Amenemope suggest "rebuff," "refuse," as well as "pass up," "let pass."

¹⁵ The ibis and the ape are the images of Thoth.

- 20 Your hand clearing exactly.
Do not make a bushel of twice its size,
For then you are headed for the abyss.
The bushel is the Eye of Re,
XIX.1 It abhors him who trims;
A measurer who indulges in cheating,
His Eye seals (the verdict) against him.
Do not accept a farmer's dues
5 And then assess him so as to injure him;
Do not conspire with the measurer,
So as to defraud the share of the Residence.
Greater is the might of the threshing floor
Than an oath by the great throne.

10 Chapter 18

- Do not lie down in fear of tomorrow:
"Comes day, how will tomorrow be?"
Man ignores how tomorrow will be;
God is ever in his perfection,
15 Man is ever in his failure.¹⁶
The words men say are one thing,
The deeds of the god are another.
Do not say: "I have done no wrong,"
And then strain to seek a quarrel;
20 The wrong belongs to the god,
He seals (the verdict) with his finger.
There is no perfection before the god,
But there is failure before him;¹⁷
XX.1 If one strains to seek perfection,
In a moment he has marred it.
Keep firm your heart, steady your heart,
Do not steer with your tongue;
5 If a man's tongue is the boat's rudder,
The Lord of All is yet its pilot.

Chapter 19

- Do not go to court before an official
In order to falsify your words;
10 Do not vacillate in your answers,
When your witnesses accuse.
Do not strain <with> oaths by your lord,
<With> speeches at the hearing;
Tell the truth before the official,
15 Lest he lay a hand on you.
If another day you come before him,
He will incline to all you say;
He will relate your speech to the Council of Thirty,
It will be observed on another occasion.

20 Chapter 20

Do not confound a man in the law court,
In order to brush aside one who is right.

- XXI.1 Do not incline to the well-dressed man,
And rebuff the one in rags.
Don't accept the gift of a powerful man,
And deprive the weak for his sake.
5 Maat is a great gift of god,
He gives it to whom he wishes.
The might of him who resembles him,
It saves the poor from his tormentor.
Do not make for yourself false documents,
10 They are a deadly provocation;
They (mean) the great restraining oath,¹⁸
They (mean) a hearing by the herald.
Don't falsify the oracles in the scrolls,¹⁹
And thus disturb the plans of god;
15 Don't use for yourself the might of god,
As if there were no Fate and Destiny.
Hand over property to its owners,
Thus do you seek life for yourself;
Don't raise your desire in their house,
20 Or your bones belong to the execution-block.

Chapter 21

- XXII.1 Do not say: "Find me a strong superior,
For a man in your town has injured me";
Do not say: "Find me a protector,
For one who hates me has injured me."
5 Indeed you do not know the plans of god,
And should not weep for tomorrow;
Settle in the arms of the god,
Your silence will overthrow them.²⁰
The crocodile that makes no sound,²¹
10 Dread of it is ancient.
Do not empty your belly to everyone,
And thus destroy respect of you;
Broadcast not your words to others,
Nor join with one who bares his heart.
15 Better is one whose speech is in his belly
Than he who tells it to cause harm.
One does not run to reach success,
One does not move to spoil it.

Chapter 22

- 20 Do not provoke your adversary,
So as to <make> him tell his thoughts;
Do not leap to come before him,
XXIII.1 When you do not see his doings.
First gain insight from his answer,
Then keep still and you'll succeed.
Leave it to him to empty his belly,
5 Know how to sleep, he'll be found out.
[Grasp his legs,²² do not harm him,

¹⁶ Lit., "the god," and "the man." Amenemope says "god" and "the god," interchangeably. The presence or absence of the definite article seems to be a matter of style.

¹⁷ I emend mn to wn; otherwise the sentence contradicts all that has gone before.

¹⁸ On the oath sdf tr see Baer 1964:179-180.

¹⁹ The passage was explained by Posener 1963a.

²⁰ The adversaries.

²¹ On this passage see Posener 1968.

²² This meaning does not suit; I suspect a corruption.

Be wary of him, do not ignore him.
Indeed you do not know the plans of god,
And should not weep for tomorrow;
10 Settle in the arms of the god,
Your silence will overthrow them.

Chapter 23

Do not eat in the presence of an official
And then set your mouth before <him>;
15 If you are sated pretend to chew,
Content yourself with your saliva.²³
Look at the bowl that is before you,
And let it serve your needs.
An official is great in his office,
20 As a well is rich in drawings of water.

Chapter 24

Do not listen to an official's reply indoors
XXIV.1 In order to repeat it to another outside.
Do not let your word be carried outside,
Lest your heart be aggrieved.
The heart of man is a gift²⁴ of god,
5 Beware of neglecting it.
The man at the side of an official,
His name should not be known.

Chapter 25

Do not laugh at a blind man,
Nor tease a dwarf,²⁵
10 Nor cause hardship for the lame.
Don't tease a man who is in the hand of the god,²⁶
Nor be angry with him for his failings.
Man is clay and straw,
The god is his builder.
15 He tears down, he builds up daily,
He makes a thousand poor by his will,
He makes a thousand men into chiefs,
When he is in his hour of life.²⁷
Happy is he who reaches the west,
20 When he is safe in the hand of the god.

Chapter 26

Do not sit down in the beer-house
XXV.1 In order to join one greater than you,
Be he a youth great through his office,
Or be he an elder through birth.
Befriend a man of your own measure,
5 Re is helpful from afar.
If you see one greater than you outdoors,
Walk behind him respectfully;

h Prov
22:20-21

Give a hand to an elder sated with beer,
Respect him as his children would.
10 The arm is not hurt by being bared,²⁸
The back is not broken by bending it.
A man does not lose by speaking sweetly,
Nor does he gain if his speech bristles.
The pilot who sees from afar,
15 He will not wreck his boat.

Chapter 27

Do not revile one older than you,
He has seen Re before you;
Let <him> not report you to the Aten at his rising,
20 Saying: "A youth has reviled an old man."
Very painful before Pre
XXVI.1 Is a youth who reviles an elder.
Let him beat you while your hand is on your chest,
Let him revile you while you are silent;
If next day you come before him,
5 He will give you food in plenty.
A dog's food is from its master,
It barks to him who gives it.

Chapter 28

Do not pounce on a widow when you find her in the fields²⁹
10 And then fail to be patient with her reply.
Do not refuse your oil jar to a stranger,
Double it before your brothers.
God prefers him who honors the poor
To him who worships the wealthy.

Chapter 29

Do not prevent people from crossing the river,
If you stride freely in the ferry.³⁰
When you are given an oar in the midst of the deep,
Bend your arms and take it.
20 It is no crime before the god,
XXVII.1 'If the passenger is not passed up'³¹
Don't make yourself a ferry on the river
And then strain to seek its fare;
Take the fare from him who is wealthy,
5 And let pass him who is poor.

Chapter 30

Look to these thirty chapters,^h
They inform, they educate;

²³ So following Polotsky 1973:140 n. 3.

²⁴ The Turin tablet has "gift" instead of the "nose" of the British Museum papyrus; see Posener 1966b:61-62.

²⁵ In the British Museum papyrus the two sentences appear as a single line but on the Turin tablet as two lines.

²⁶ Here in the special meaning of one who is ill or insane.

²⁷ Volten (1963:88) explained this to mean that the sun-god acts through the gods who are assigned to each hour of the day.

²⁸ I.e., stretching the arm out of the sleeve in a gesture of greeting. The same remark occurs in "Prahhotep," line 445/448.

²⁹ I.e., when you find her gleaning in fields not her own.

³⁰ I.e., when there is ample room in the ferry.

³¹ It is not clear whether hwy means "passenger" or "sailor"; in any case, the meaning is that the passenger should help with the rowing if asked to do so.

They are the foremost of all books, 10 They make the ignorant wise. If they are read to the ignorant, He is cleansed through them. Be filled with them, put them in your heart, And become a man who expounds them, 15 One who expounds as a teacher.	Prov 22:29	The scribe who is skilled in his office,ⁱ He is found worthy to be a courtier. Colophon That is its end. XXVIII.1 Written by Senu, son of the divine father Pemu.
--	-------------------	---

REFERENCES

Text: Budge 1923:9-18 and 41-51 and pls. 1-14; Lange 1925. Translation: Erman 1924b cols 241-252; Budge 1924:93-234; Griffith 1926:191-231; Lexa 1929:14-49; von Bissing 1955:80-90; ANET 421-424 (excerpts); Simpson, 1972:241-265; Grumach 1972; Lichtheim AEL 2:146-163. Discussion: Erman 1924 no.15; Simpson 1926:232-239; Humbert 1929 ch. 2; Williams 1961:100-106; Peterson 1966:120-128 and pls. xxxi-xxxia (the Stockholm fragment); Posener 1966:45-62 and pls. 1-2 (the three tablets); Anthes 1970:9-18; Posener 1973:129-135; Loprieno 1980:47-76; Ruffle 1977:29-68.

DUA-KHETY OR THE SATIRE ON THE TRADES (1.48)

Miriam Lichtheim

Like the other Instructions, this work has a prologue and an epilogue which frame the actual teaching and set its stage. A father conducts his young son to the residence in order to place him in school, and during the journey he instructs him in the duties and rewards of the scribal profession. In order to stress the amenities and advantages that accrue to the successful scribe, he contrasts the scribal career with the hardships of other trades and professions, eighteen of which are described in the most unflattering terms.

Ever since Maspero called this Instruction "Satire des Métiers," scholars have understood it to be a satire, that is to say, a deliberately derisive characterization of all trades other than the scribal profession. Helck, however, in his new edition of the text has denied its satiric character and has claimed it to be a wholly serious, non-humorous work. I continue to think of it as a satire. What are the stylistic means of satire? Exaggeration and a lightness of tone designed to induce laughter and a mild contempt. Our text achieves its satirical effects by exaggerating the true hardships of the professions described, and by suppressing all their positive and rewarding aspects.

If it were argued that the exaggerations were meant to be taken seriously we would have to conclude that the scribal profession practiced deliberate deception out of a contempt for manual labor so profound as to be unrelieved by humor. Such a conclusion is, however, belied by all the literary and pictorial evidence. For tomb reliefs and texts alike breathe joy and pride in the accomplishments of labor. Moreover, the principal didactic works, such as Ptahhotep and the Eloquent Peasant, teach respect for all labor.

In short, the unrelievedly negative descriptions of the laboring professions are examples of humor in the service of literary satire. The result is obtained through unflattering comparisons and through exaggerations that rise to outright fabrications. What if not a fabrication for the sake of caricature is a bird-catcher who does not have a net — the very tool of his trade? What if not a caricature is a potter who is compared to a grubbing pig, a cobbler whose hides are termed "corpses," a courier terrorized out of his wits by the dangers of the road, and a fisherman blinded by his fear of crocodiles?

The text is preserved entirely in P. Sallier II, and partially in P. Anastasi VII (both in the British Museum), both of which were written by the same Nineteenth Dynasty scribe. Small portions are preserved on an Eighteenth Dynasty writing board in the Louvre, the Eighteenth Dynasty P. Amherst in the Pierpont Morgan Library, P. Chester Beatty XIX of the British Museum, and numerous, mostly Ramesside, ostraca.

Though ample, the textual transmission is exceedingly corrupt. Helck's comprehensive new edition has advanced the understanding considerably. But the corruptions are so numerous and so extreme that there remains much room for differing conjectures and interpretations.

(3.9) Beginning of the Instruction made by the man of Sile, ¹ whose name is 'Dua-khety', ² for his son, called Pepi, as he journeyed south (4.1)	to the residence, to place him in the school for scribes, among the sons of magistrates, with the elite of the residence. He said to him:
--	---

¹ Tꜣn, or Tꜣrw, i.e., Sile, the border fortress in the eastern Delta.

² Three manuscripts write the name as "Khety, son of Duauf," two write "Dua-Khety"; a sixth gives yet another form. Helck has adopted Seibert's preference for "Dua-Khety." Brunner 1969:71, has reaffirmed his support for "Khety, son of Duauf."

I have seen many beatings —
Set your heart on books!
I watched those seized for labor —
There's nothing better than books!
It's like a boat on water.

Read the end of the Kemit-Book,³
You'll find this saying there:
A scribe at whatever post in town,
He will not suffer in it;
As he fills another's need,
He will 'not lack rewards'.
I don't see a calling like it
Of which this saying could be (5) said.

I'll make you love scribedom more than your mother,
I'll make its beauties stand before you;
It's the greatest of all callings,
There's none like it in the land.

Barely grown, still a child,
He is greeted, sent on errands,
Hardly returned he wears a gown.
I never saw a sculptor as envoy,
Nor is a goldsmith ever sent;
But I have seen the smith at work
At the opening of his furnace;
With fingers like claws of a crocodile
He stinks more than fish roe.

The carpenter who wields an adze,
He is wearier than a field-laborer;
His field is the timber, his hoe the adze.
There is no end to his labor,
He does more (5.1) than his arms can do,
Yet at night he kindles light.
The jewel-maker bores with his chisel⁴
In hard stone of all kinds;
When he has finished the inlay of the eye,
His arms are spent, he's weary;
Sitting down when the sun goes down,
His knees and back are cramped.

The barber barbers till nightfall,
He betakes himself to town,⁵
He sets himself up in his corner,
He moves from street to street,
Looking for someone to barber.
He strains his arms to fill his belly,

(5) Like the bee that eats as it works.

The reed-cutter travels to the Delta to get arrows;
When he has done more than his arms can
do,
Mosquitoes have slain him,
Gnats have slaughtered him,
He is quite worn out.

The potter is under the soil,
Though as yet among the living;
He grubs in the mud more than a pig,
In order to fire his pots.
His clothes are stiff with clay,
His girdle is in shreds;
If air enters his nose,
It comes straight from the fire.
He makes a pounding with his feet,
And is himself crushed;⁶
He grubs the yard of every house
And roams the public places.

(6.1) I'll describe to you also the mason:
His loins give him pain;
Though he is out in the wind,
He works without a cloak;
His loincloth is a twisted rope
And a string in the rear.⁷
His arms are spent from exertion,
Having mixed all kinds of dirt;
When he eats bread [with] his fingers,
'He has washed at the same time'.⁸

The carpenter also suffers much⁸

.....
The room measures ten by six cubits.
A month passes after the beams are laid,
.....

And all its work is done.
(5) The food which he gives to his household,
It does not 'suffice' for his children.

The gardener carries a yoke,
His shoulders are bent as with age;
There's a swelling on his neck
And it festers.
In the morning he waters vegetables,
The evening he spends with the herbs,⁹

³ A book of Instructions, the fragments of which were published by Posener 1972 2:pls. 1-25; see also Posener 1956:4-6.

⁴ Eg. Ms-^cr. Brunner, "Steinmetz," Wilson, "fashioner of costly stones," Seibert, "Schmuckarbeiter," and Helck, "Juwelier." The activity of this craftsman is described by the verb whb in DM 1014, which means "to bore." The conjecture that mnh means "to string beads" lacks support, for in Admonitions 3.3 Gardiner merely took it to mean "to fasten."

⁵ Emending m^cyt to dwyt, as proposed by Vandier 1949:15.

⁶ The pounding with the feet that occurred in pottery making was in the initial molding of the clay prior to its being shaped by hand. I see no occasion for the conjectured pounding tools.

⁷ This seems to refer to the narrow strip of cloth tied in front, with its ends hanging down to cover the genitals, which was worn by some laborers. The dangling ends were sometimes tucked into the waistband or turned to the back. The resulting nudity may have aroused the derision of the well-dressed scribes.

⁸ As Helck pointed out, this section deals with the carpenter. Unfortunately it is very obscure.

⁹ A meaning broader than "coriander" is indicated for j²w. In the sun-temple of Ni-user-re, j²w is a water plant eaten by fish; see Edel 1961-1964:217.

While at noon he has toiled in the orchard.
He works himself to death
More than all other professions.

The farmer wails more than the guinea fowl,
His voice is louder than a raven's;
His fingers are swollen
And stink to excess.
He is weary

... (7.1) ...

He is well if one's well among lions.¹⁰

.....

When he reaches home at night,
The march has worn him out.

The weaver¹¹ in the workshop,
He is worse off than a woman;
With knees against his chest,
He cannot breathe air.
If he skips a day of weaving,
He is beaten fifty strokes;
He gives food to the doorkeeper,
To let him see the light of day.

The arrow-maker suffers much
As he goes out (5) to the desert;
More is what he gives his donkey
Than the work it does for him.
Much is what he gives the herdsmen,
So they'll put him on his way.
When he reaches home at night,
The march has worn him out.

The courier¹² goes into the desert,
Leaving his goods to his children;
Fearful of lions and Asiatics,
He knows himself (only) when he's in Egypt.
When he reaches home at night,
The march has worn him out;
Be his home of cloth or brick,
His return is joyless.¹³

The 'stoker', his fingers are foul,
Their smell is that of corpses;
His eyes are inflamed by much smoke,
(8.1) He cannot get rid of his dirt.
He spends the day cutting reeds,
His clothes are loathsome to him.

The cobbler suffers much
Among his vats of oil;
He is well if one's well with corpses,
What he bites is leather.

The washerman washes on the shore
With the crocodile as neighbor;
[“Father, leave the flowing water,”]
Say his son, his daughter,
[It is not a job that satisfies]

.....

His food is mixed with dirt,
No limb of his is clean
[He is given] (5) women's clothes,

.....

He weeps as he spends the day at his wash-board

.....

One says to him, “Soiled linen for you,”

.....

The bird-catcher suffers much
As he watches out for birds;
When the swarms pass over him,
He keeps saying, “Had I a net!”
But the god grants it not,
And he's angry with his lot.

I'll speak of the fisherman also,
His is the worst of all the jobs;
He labors on the river,
Mingling with crocodiles.
When the time of reckoning comes,
He is full of lamentations;
He does not say, “There's a (9.1) crocodile,”

Fear has made him blind.
[Coming from] the flowing water
He says, “Mighty god!”

See, there's no profession without a boss,
Except for the scribe; he is the boss.
Hence if you know writing,
It will do better for you
Than those professions I've set before you,
Each more wretched than the other.¹⁴
A peasant is not called a man,
Beware of it!

Lo, what I do in journeying to the residence,
Lo,¹⁵ I do it for love of you.
The day in school will profit you
Its works are for ever ...

.....

I'll tell you also other things,
So as to teach you knowledge.
Such as: if a quarrel breaks out,

¹⁰ This rendering, which is Brunner's, was rejected by Seibert and Helck but seems to me the right one. The sentences following it are extremely obscure.

¹¹ Or specifically, the “mat-weaver.”

¹² Eg. Šḫꜣḫꜣty. Brunner, “Eilbote,” Helck, “Karawanenträger.” A member of a caravan would have much less reason to be frightened than a lone courier.

¹³ This was Brunner's tentative rendering and seems to me the best guess.

¹⁴ I emend to: mk ky iry ḥwrr r iry.f.

¹⁵ Connective iterated mk, as also in the first poem of the “Dispute between a Man and His Ba,” and in the “Prophecies of Neferti” (see there n. 2).

Do not approach the contenders!
 If you are chided
 And don't know how to repel the heat,
 'Call the listeners to witness',
 And delay the answer.

When you walk behind officials,
 Follow at a proper distance.
 When you enter a man's house,
 And he's busy with someone before you,
 Sit with your hand over your mouth.
 Do not ask him for anything,
 Only do as he tells you,
 Beware of rushing to the table!

Be weighty and very dignified,
 Do not speak of (10.1) secret things,
 Who hides his thought¹⁶ shields himself.
 Do not say things recklessly,
 When you sit with one who's hostile.
 If you leave the schoolhouse
 When midday is called,
 And go roaming in the streets,
 'All will scold you in the end'.¹⁷
 When an official sends you with a message,
 Tell it as he told it,
 Don't omit, don't add to it.¹⁸
 He who neglects to praise,
 His name will not endure;
 He who is skilled in all his conduct,
 From him nothing is hidden,
 He is not 'opposed' anywhere.

Do not tell lies (5) against your mother,
 The magistrates abhor it.
 The descendant who does what is good,
 His actions all emulate the past.

Do not consort with a rowdy,
 It harms you when one hears of it.
 If you have eaten three loaves,
 Drunk two jugs of beer,
 And the belly is not sated, restrain it!
 When another eats, don't stand there,
 Beware of rushing to the table!
 It is good if you are sent out often,
 And hear the magistrates speak.
 You should acquire the manner of the well-born,¹⁹
 As you follow in their steps.
 The scribe is regarded as one who hears,
 For the hearer becomes a doer.
 You should rise when you are addressed,
 Your feet should hurry when you go;
 'Do not' (11.1) 'trust'.
 Associate with men of distinction,
 Befriend a man of your generation.

Lo, I have set you on god's path,
 A scribe's Renenet²⁰ is on his shoulder
 On the day he is born.
 When he attains the council chamber,
 The court
 Lo, no scribe is short of food
 And of riches from the palace.
 The Meskhenet assigned to the scribe,
 She promotes him in the council.
 Praise god for your father, your mother,
 Who set you on the path of life!
 This is what I put before you,
 Your children and their children.

Colophon

(5) It has come to a happy conclusion.

¹⁶ Lit., "his belly."

¹⁷ In this garbled passage I chose the reading of DM 1039, emending only bw nk to bw nb.

¹⁸ Cp. the eighth maxim of the Instruction of Ptahhotep, see Lichtheim AEL 1:65.

¹⁹ Lit., "the children of people," which is the plural counterpart of the term s' s, "son of man."

²⁰ Renenet (Thermuthis) was a goddess of bounty and good luck. She was frequently associated with the goddess Meskhenet who presided over births.

REFERENCES

Text: Budge 1910:pls. 65-73. Brunner 1944; Helck 1970. Translation: Erman 1927:67-72; Van de Walle 1949:244-256; ANET 432-434; Lichtheim AEL 1:184-192; Studies: Piankoff 1933:51-74; Théodorides 1958-1960:39-69; Van de Walle 1947:50-72;11; Seibert 1967:99-192.

4. LOVE POEMS

The extant Egyptian love song texts all date from the 19th dynasty (ca. 1305-1200 BCE) and the early 20th dynasty (ca. 1200-1150 BCE). The songs' composition too seems to date from the Ramesside period. They are collected on large papyri or inscribed on ostraca. They are sometimes labelled "Entertainment" (lit. "diverting the heart") and probably served to entertain guests at banquets. Numerous tomb murals show musicians singing to the guests and urging them to "divert" their hearts.

The sex of the speakers is indicated by grammatical gender. They all seem to be adolescents living under their parents' control. For a hieroglyphic transcription, translation, commentary, see Fox (1985). The numbering in the following is according to the numeration in Fox 1985 (see 5-7). Some of the following are stanzas extracted from longer songs. The translation below presupposes some minor emendations and supplies some pronouns and minor connectives.

PAPYRUS HARRIS 500 (1.49)

Michael V. Fox

BM 10060 (HPBM 2, pls. XLI-XLVI). The manuscript is a sort of literary anthology, containing two stories ("The Doomed Prince" and "The Capture of Joppa"), a mortuary song (the "Harper's Song") and three groups of love songs.

(Girl) (Number 4) My heart is not yet done with your love, my wolf cub!^a Your liquor is your lovemaking.^{1 b} I will not abandon it until blows drive me away to spend my days in the marshes, (or) to the land of Syria with sticks and rods, to the land of Nubia with palms, to the highlands with switches, to the lowlands with cudgels. I will not listen to their advice.²	a Cant 2:15 b Cant 5:1; 8:2b c Cant 2:5; 5:8 d Cant 7:9	your love captured me.⁶ (Girl) (Number 11) The goose soars and alights: while the ordinary birds circle, he has disturbed the garden.⁷ ... I am excited (?) by your love⁸ alone. My heart is in balance with your heart.⁹ May I never be far from your beauty! (Girl) (Number 12) I have departed [from my brother]. [Now when I think of] your love, my heart stands still within me. When I behold sw[et] cakes, [they seem like] salt. Pomegranate wine, (once) sweet in my mouth — it is (now) like the gall of birds. The scent of your nose alone^{10 d} is what revives my heart. I have obtained forever and ever what Amun has granted me.¹¹ (Girl) (Number 13) The most beautiful thing has come to pass! My heart [desires] (to tend) your property (?) as the mistress of your house, while your arm rests on my arm, for my love has surrounded you. I say to my heart within me in prayer:
(Boy) (Number 6) I will lie down inside, and then I will feign illness. Then my neighbors will enter to see, and then my sister³ will come with them. She'll put the doctors to shame for she (alone) will understand my illness.^{4 c}
(Girl) (Number 10) The voice of the goose cries out, as he's trapped by the bait. Your love restrains me, so that I can't release it. I'll take my nets⁵, but what shall I say to Mother, to whom I go every day laden down with birds? I set no trap today —

¹ I.e., your lovemaking is what intoxicates me. The word for lovemaking, dd, with the phallus determinative, is a semiticism cognate to Hebrew dodim. It refers to acts of erotic love, from caresses to intercourse.

² "They" — her family, perhaps, or the society about her — try to separate the girl from her lover, but she defies them. For the motif of hostile surroundings compare the brothers in Cant 1:6 and (more severely) the watchmen in 5:7. For the maiden's defiance cf. Cant 8:5b-7.

³ "Brother" (sn) and "sister" (sn) are common epithets of endearment. In the Song of Songs, only the latter is used.

⁴ The boy plans a ruse to get his beloved to visit him. But his feigned sickness may be a reality: love-sickness, which cannot be cured by physicians; cf. numbers 21F, 32, 37. Mr "sickness" may be a pun on mrwt "love."

⁵ The net is the girl's hair. snw represents consonantal homonyms meaning "garden," "hair," and "net" (number 10); cf. Cant 7:6.

⁶ The "love trap" theme. The girl has set out her bird traps (a favorite activity portrayed in tomb murals) and has caught a goose, yet she has no birds to take home that evening. The trapped goose is the youth, and she herself is ensnared in love. Several poems play on the love-trap theme; e.g. P. Chester Beatty I (text 1.51, no. 43 below).

⁷ snw; see n. 5. Here, the garden is the girl herself; cf. Cant 4:12-5:1a.

⁸ "Your love" here and elsewhere may mean "you" or "your lovemaking" and well as "your love for me."

⁹ That is, we feel the same way. The image of "balance" (mh), used also in numbers 17 and 20A, suggests an equal and mutual emotion.

¹⁰ Love paralyzes and confuses both in presence (Cant 2:5) and in absence (as here and in nos. 6, 34, and 37). "Scent of your nose" (as in Cant 7:9) may refer to the practice of nose kissing. The Eg. word for "kiss" is, in fact, written with a nose-determinative.

¹¹ I have obtained what the god Amun determined as my lot, namely your love.

["Give me] my prince tonight,¹² or I am like one who lies in her grave!" For are you not health and life itself? The approach [of your face will give me joy for your health, for my heart seeks you. The Beginning of the Song of Entertainment¹³ (Girl) (Number 17) Mhmh-flowers: my heart is in balance¹⁴ with yours. For you I'll do what it wills, when I'm in your embrace. It is my prayer that paints my eyes. Seeing you has brightened my eyes. I've drawn near you to see your love, O prince of my heart!¹⁵ How lovely is my hour (with you)! This hour flows forth for me forever — it began when I lay with you. In sorrow and in joy, you have exalted my heart. Do not [leave] me.	e Cant 4:12-5:1	(Girl) (Number 18) In it are s^{c2}m-trees; before them one is exalted¹⁶: I am your favorite girl.¹⁷ I am yours like the field planted with flowers and with all sorts of fragrant plants.¹⁸ e Pleasant is the canal within it, which your hand scooped out, while we cooled ourselves in the north wind: a lovely place for strolling about, with your hand upon mine! My body is satisfied, and my heart rejoices in our walking about together. To hear your voice is pomegranate wine (to me): I draw life from hearing it. Could I see you with every glance, it would be better for me than to eat or to drink.
--	------------------------	---

¹² Lovers speak of themselves and each other as royal or noble because of the way they feel. The youth is a "prince" in her affections, a "prince of my heart" (number 17), while the maiden is the Mistress of the Two Lands, i.e. the queen of Egypt (number 8), when she is with her beloved. The references to royalty (1:4a, 12; 3:7-11) and nobility (7:2) in the Song of Songs can be understood similarly.

¹³ This is the title given a song of three stanzas, each one opening with a pun on the name of a flower. "Entertainment" (shmh ib), cf. number 31, is lit., "making the heart forget" or "diverting the heart."

¹⁴ Eg. *mh*². See n. 9.

¹⁵ See n. 12.

¹⁶ Eg. s^{c2}, playing on s^{c2}m.

¹⁷ Lit. "foremost sister."

¹⁸ The girl is likened to a garden; see n. 7. The flowers are, perhaps, her perfumes.

CAIRO LOVE SONGS (1.50)

(Deir el-Medineh 1266 + Cairo cat. 25218; Posener 1972)

Michael V. Fox

The following are stanzas from the second of two seven-stanza love songs (numbers 21A-21G) written on a vase, now shattered.¹

(Boy) (Number 21A) If only I were her Nubian maid, her attendant in secret! She brings her [a bowl of] mandragoras ... It is in her hand, while she gives pleasure. In other words: she would grant me the hue of her whole body. (Boy) (Number 21B) If only I were the laundryman of my sister's linen garment		even for one month! I would be strengthened by grasping [the clothes] that touch her body. For it would be I who washed out the moringa oils that are in her kerchief. Then I'd rub my body with her cast-off garments, and she ... [Oh I would be in] joy and delight, my [bo]dy vigorous!
---	--	--

¹ In each stanza of this song the youth expresses a wish to be something in close contact with the beloved, something that can touch and see her. The wish theme appears elsewhere in Eg. love poetry (numbers 7, 38-40) and in Cant 8:1-2.

(Boy) (Number 21C) If only I were her little seal-ring, the keeper of her finger! ^f	f Cant 8:6	I would see her love ² each and every day, ... [and it would be I who] stole her heart ...
--	------------	---

² I.e., her.

PAPYRUS CHESTER BEATTY I (1.51)
(Gardiner 1931)

Michael V. Fox

A large papyrus containing three groups of love songs, the tale of "Horus and Seth," two hymns to the king, and a short business note.

From Pap. Chester Beatty I, C1,1-C5,2; the first group of love songs.

The Beginning of the Sayings of the Great Entertainer¹ (Boy) (Number 31) One alone is my sister, having no peer: more gracious than all other women. Behold her, like Sothis² rising at the beginning of a good year: shining, precious, white of skin, lovely of eyes when gazing. Sweet her lips when speaking: she has no excess of words. Long of neck, white of breast, her hair true lapis lazuli. Her arms surpass gold, her fingers are like lotuses. Full (?) her derrière, narrow (?) her waist, her thighs carry on her beauties. Lovely of walk when she strides on the ground, she has captured my heart in her embrace.³ She makes the heads of all men turn about when seeing her. Fortunate is whoever embraces her — he is like the foremost of lovers. Her coming forth appears like (that of) the one yonder — the Unique One.^{3 h}	g Cant 4:9 h Cant 4:1-7; 4:9-15; 5:10-16; 6:4-10; 7:2-10a	(Girl) (Number 32) Second Stanza My brother roils my heart with his voice, making me take ill. Though he is among the neighbors of my mother's house, I cannot go to him. Mother is right to command me thus: "Avoid seeing him!" Yet my heart is vexed when he comes to mind, for love of him has captured me. He is senseless of heart — and I am just like him! He does not know my desires to embrace him, or he would send word to my mother. O brother, I am decreed for you by the Golden One.⁴ Come to me that I may see your beauty! May father and mother be glad! May all people rejoice in you together, rejoice in you, my brother!⁵ ... (Girl) (Number 34) Fourth Stanza My heart quickly scurries away⁶ when I think of your love.

¹ The feminine participle (šmḥt ib [Ⓢ]) suggests that the composer was a woman, a professional singer. In this song, each stanza after the first is labelled hwt (lit., "house") and numbered. Each stanza begins and ends with a word playing on the stanza-number. A similar device is used in a hymn to Amun from the same period.

The stanzas alternate between the boy and the girl, who are speaking to their hearts, not to each other. The underlying story is that the youth passed by the maiden's house and they fell in love with each other. Later, she passed by his house when walking with her mother. But the young lovers never got together to declare their love and make it public.

² The star Sirius, whose rising was supposed to occur in conjunction with the rise of the Nile and to bring fertility to the land.

³ That is, Sothis-Sirius, who "goes forth" every year. The first stanza is a praise song enumerating the beloved's beauties approximately from head to foot.

⁴ Hathor, goddess of love.

⁵ Cf. numbers 36, 54. Compare the Shulammite's wish that her love will become public and accepted, Cant 8:1.

⁶ The Egyptians often spoke of the heart as an independent entity and pictured it that way. The heart "goes forth" or "flees" to the object of its longing. In this stanza, the girl has a little argument with her heart.

It does not let me act like a (normal) person —
 it has leapt from its place.
 It does not let me don a tunic;
 I cannot put on my cloak.
 I cannot apply paint to my eyes;
 I cannot anoint myself at all!
 "Don't stop until you get inside" —
 thus it says to me, whenever I think of him.
 O my heart, don't make me foolish!
 Why do you act crazy?
 Sit still, cool down, until (my) brother comes
 to you,
 when I shall do many such things (?).
 Don't let people say about me:
 "This woman has collapsed out of love."⁷
 Stand firm whenever you think of him, my heart, and scurry not away.

i Cant 8:1b

Then I could hurry to my brother and kiss him before his company, and not be ashamed because of anyone.⁹
 I would be happy to have them see that you know me,
 and I'd hold festival to my goddess.
 My heart leaps up to go forth to make me gaze on my brother tonight.
 How lovely it is to pass by!

(Boy) (Number 37)

Seventh Stanza

Seven whole days I have not seen my sister.
 Illness has invaded me,
 my limbs have grown heavy,
 and I barely sense my own body.
 Should the master physicians come to me,
 their medicines could not ease my heart.
 The lector-priests have no (good) method,
 because my illness cannot be diagnosed.
 Telling me, "Here she is!" — that's what will revive me.
 Her name — that's what will get me up.
 The coming and going of her messengers —
 that's what will revive my heart.
 More potent than any medicine is my sister
 for me;
 she is more powerful for me than the Compendium.¹⁰
 Her coming in from outside is my amulet.
 I see her — then I become healthy.
 She opens her eyes — my limbs grow young.
 She speaks — then I become strong.
 I hug her — and she drives illness from me.
 But she has left me for seven days.¹¹

(Girl) (Number 36)

Sixth Stanza

I⁸ passed close by his house,
 and found his door ajar.
 My brother was standing beside his mother,
 and with him all his kin.
 Love of him captures the heart of all who stride upon the way —
 a precious youth without peer!
 A brother excellent of character!
 He gazed at me when I passed by,
 but I exult by myself.
 How joyful my heart in rejoicing,
 my brother, since I (first) beheld you!
 If only mother knew my heart —
 she would go inside for a while.
 O Golden One, put that in her heart!

This song is from another group of seven independent songs on the Papyrus Chester Beatty I (ro. 16,9-17:13; nos. 41-47) that are ascribed to the scribe Nakhtsobek.

(Boy) (Number 43)

How skilled is she — my sister — at casting the lasso,
 yet she'll draw in no cattle!¹²

With her hair¹³ she lassos me, with her eye she pulls me in,
 with her thighs she binds,
 with her seal she sets the brand.¹⁴

⁷ See P. Harris 500 (text 1.49, n. 4 above).

⁸ The text has "he passed," an error.

⁹ Cf. n. 5.

¹⁰ A medical text.

¹¹ See P. Harris 500 (text 1.49, n. 4 above).

¹² A difficult line. This rendering takes ms as an aural error for ms "bring" and irw as a variant of iry "cow."

¹³ šnw; see P. Harris 500 (text 1.49, n. 5).

¹⁴ The young lady lassoes not cattle but the youth. Cf. the "love trap" in P. Harris 500 (text 1.49, no. 10 above). The sexual allusions are transparent.

OSTRACON GARDINER 304 (1.52)

Recto (HO I, 38)Michael V. Fox

A number of ostraca, mostly written as school exercises, hold love songs or phrases typical of love songs. This ostrakon dates to the reign of Ramses III (ca. 1182-1151 BCE).

(Boy) (Number 54)

My sister's love is in the ...
 Her necklace is of flowers;
 her bones are reeds.
 Her little seal-ring is [on her finger],
 her lotus in her hand.

J Cant 8:1

k Cant 4:9

I kiss [her] before everyone, that they may see my love.¹ J
 Indeed it is she who captures my heart,^k
 when she looks at me,
 I am refreshed.

¹ See P. Chester Beatty I (text 1.51, n. 5) above.

REFERENCES

Texts and translations: Fox 1985; Gardiner 1931; Schott 1950.

5. PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA

THE FAMINE STELA (1.53)

(On Sehel Island)

Miriam Lichtheim

The inscription is carved in thirty-two columns on the face of a granite rock where it was given the shape of a rectangular stela. The rock face is split by a broad horizontal fissure, which already existed when the inscription was carved. After the carving, further ruptures occurred in the rock, and they have caused a number of textual lacunae. Above the text is a relief scene showing King Djoser offering to Khnum-Re, Satis, and Anukis, the gods of the cataract region.

The stela purports to be a decree by King Djoser of the Third Dynasty addressed to a "Governor of the South" at Elephantine. In it the king informs the governor that, distressed over the country's seven-year famine, he had consulted a priest of Imhotep. After a study of the sacred books, the priest had informed him in detail about the temple of Khnum at Elephantine, and how Khnum controlled the inundation. The priest had also named to him all the minerals, precious stones, and building stones found in the border region. In the following night the king had seen Khnum in his dream, and the god had promised him an end to the famine. In gratitude to the god, the king now issues a decree granting to the temple of Khnum of Elephantine a share of all the revenue derived from the region extending from Elephantine south to Takompso, a distance of "twelve iter." In addition, a share of all Nubian imports was to be given to the temple. The governor was charged with carrying out the decree.

In its present form, the text is undoubtedly a work of the Ptolemaic period. Some scholars have surmised that it was based on a genuine Old Kingdom decree from the time of Djoser. Others take it to be a complete fiction. In any case, the text puts forth a claim to revenue on behalf of the Khnum temple of Elephantine.

Who stood behind this claim? According to P. Barguet, it was Ptolemy V who issued the decree as a means of proclaiming Ptolemaic control of this Nubian region. H. de Meulenaere countered this suggestion by asking whether the "governor of the south," who bore the non-Egyptian name Mesir, may not have been a Nubian chief ruling the area in defiance of the Ptolemaic king. The most plausible hypothesis, it seems to me, is the one that sees the inscription as the work of the priesthood of the Khnum temple, who were anxious to strengthen their privileges in the face of the encroaching claims made by the clergy of Isis of Philae.

The extent of the "12-iter land" or, Dodekaschoinos, has also been much discussed, for the location of Takompso, its southern limit, is not known, and the length of the iter appears to have varied. The problem now seems to have been settled in favor of an iter usually averaging 10.5 km, except for a much shorter iter indicated by the boundary stelae of Akhenaten at El-Amarna. Thus, the "12-iter land" would designate the northern half of Lower Nubia, extending south from Elephantine for a length of about eighty miles.

Barguet's good edition has greatly advanced the understanding of this difficult text. There remain a number of problems and uncertainties.

(1) Year 18 of Horus: Neterkhet; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Neterkhet; Two Ladies: Neterkhet; Gold-Horus: Djoser; under the Count, Prince, Governor of the domains of the South, Chief of the Nubians in Yebu, Mesir.¹ There was brought to him this royal decree. To let you know:

I was in mourning on my throne,
Those of the palace were in grief,
My heart was in great affliction,
Because Hapy had failed to come in time
In a period of seven years.²

Grain was scant,
Kernels were dried up,
Scarce was every kind of food.
Every man robbed (3) his twin,³
Those who entered did not go.⁴
Children cried,
Youngsters fell,
The hearts of the old were grieving;
Legs drawn up, they hugged the ground,
Their arms clasped about them.
Courtiers were needy,
Temples were shut,
Shrines covered with dust,
Everyone was in distress.

I directed my heart to turn to the past,
I consulted one of the staff of the Ibis,
The chief lector-priest of Imhotep,
Son of Ptah South-of-his-Wall;⁵
"In which place is Hapy born?
Which is the town of the Sinuous one?
Which god dwells there?
That he might join with (5) me."

^a Gen 41:25-32

He stood "I shall go to Mansion-of-the-Net,⁶
[it is designed to support a man in his deeds]⁷

I shall enter the House of Life,
Unroll the Souls of Re,⁸
I shall be guided by them."

He departed, he returned to me quickly,
He let me know the flow of Hapy,
[His shores] and all the things they contain.
He disclosed to me the hidden wonders,
To which the ancestors had made their way,
And no king had equaled them since.

He said to me:

"There is a town in the midst of the deep,
Surrounded by Hapy, (7) Yebu by name;
It is first of the first,
First nome to Wawat,⁹
Earthly elevation, celestial hill,
Seat of Re when he prepares
To give life to every face.
Its temple's name is 'Joy-of-life,'
'Twin Caverns' is the water's name,
They are the breasts that nourish all.

It is the house of sleep of Hapy,¹⁰
He grows young in it in [his time],
[It is the place whence] he brings the flood:
Bounding up he copulates,
As man copulates with woman,
Renewing his manhood with joy;
Coursing twenty-eight cubits high,
He passes Sema-behdet (9) at seven.¹¹
Khnum is the god [who rules] there,
[He is enthroned above the deep],¹²
His sandals resting on the flood;

¹ The reading of the name is not quite certain, and the name is probably not an Eg. one.

² When the inscription was first published, the description of a seven year famine was believed to be connected with the biblical story of a seven-year famine in Egypt (Gen 41). Since then it has been shown that a tradition of seven years of famine was widespread in the literatures of the ancient Near East; see Gordon 1953:79-81. Hapy is the deified Nile.

³ Barguet 1953a:15, took htr to be the word for "revenue," while I take it to be the word for "twin."

⁴ The meaning seems to be that those who had entered a house were too weak to leave it again.

⁵ The "staff of the Ibis" designates the corporation of scribes whose patron was Thoth. As Barguet (1953a:16) pointed out, the king consults a priest of Imhotep, not the god Imhotep himself, as previous translators had thought. The earlier view is argued by Wildung 1977:149-152.

⁶ Hwt-ibt.t, the "Mansion of the Net," appears to have been a name for the temple of Thoth at Hermopolis Magna. The logic of the tale would seem to require that the king's consultation with the priest of Imhotep takes place in the capital, i.e., at Memphis, which was also the cult center of Imhotep. Since the priest is said to have returned "quickly," or "immediately," poetic license might stretch this to include a quick trip from Memphis to Hermopolis, but surely not a voyage to the Khnum temple of Elephantine. Hence the "Mansion of the Net," if it does not here refer to the temple of Hermopolis, could only designate a sanctuary in, or close to, Memphis.

⁷ A somewhat obscure sentence which rendered literally would be: "gathered for the steadfastness of everyone for what they do," which I take to refer to the sanctuary, whereas Barguet construed it as referring to the priest.

⁸ The "Souls of Re" are the sacred books kept in the temple's "House of Life."

⁹ I.e., Elephantine, in the first nome of Upper Egypt, faces toward Lower Nubia (Wawat).

¹⁰ The passage gives the traditional view that the inundation rose from twin caverns at Elephantine.

¹¹ I.e., by the time the inundation has reached the Delta town of Sema-behdet, the metropolis of the 17th nome of Lower Egypt, its height of twenty-eight cubits above low water has diminished to seven cubits.

¹² I have restored the lacuna merely to indicate that some such meaning is required. It is Khnum, the creator, who releases Hapy, the inundating Nile.

He holds the door bolt in his hand,
 Opens the gate as he wishes.
 He is eternal there as Shu,¹³
 Bounty-giver, Lord-of-fields,
 So his name is called.
 He has reckoned the land of the South and the North,¹⁴
 To give parts to every god;
 It is he who governs barley, [emmer],
 Fowl and fish and all one lives on.
 Cord and scribal board are there,
 The pole is there with its beam
¹⁵
 (11) His temple opens southeastward,
 Re rises in its face every day;
 Its water rages on its south for an iter,
 A wall against the Nubians each day.¹⁶
 There is a mountain massif in its eastern region,
 With precious stones and quarry stones of all kinds,
 All the things sought for building temples
 In Egypt, South and North,¹⁷
 And stalls for sacred animals,
 And palaces for kings,
 All statues too that stand in temples and in shrines."

"Their gathered products are set before the face of Khnum and around him; likewise (13) tall plants and flowers of all kinds that exist between Yebu and Senmut,¹⁸ and are there on the east and the west."

"There is in the midst of the river — covered by water at its annual flood — a place of relaxation for every man who works the stones on its two sides."

"There is in the river, before this town of Yebu, a central elevation of difficult body which is called grf-bw."¹⁹

"Learn the names of the gods and goddesses of the temple of Khnum: Satis, Anukis, Hapy, Shu, Geb, Nut, Osiris, Horus, Isis, Nephthys."

"Learn the names of (15) the stones that are there, lying in the borderland:²⁰ those that are in the east and the west, those [on the shores] of Yebu's canal, those in Yebu, those in the east and west, and those in the river: bhn,²¹ *mt*²²,²² mhbtb,²³ r^cgs, *wšy*²⁴ in the east; *prdn*²⁵ in the west; *tšy*²⁶ in the west and in the river."

"The names of the precious stones of the quarries that are in the upper region — some among them at a distance of four iter — are: gold, silver, copper, iron, lapis lazuli, turquoise, thnt,²⁷ red jasper, k^c,²⁸ mnw,²⁹ emerald,³⁰ tm-ikr.³¹ In addition, nšmt,³² t^c-mhy,³³ hm^cgt,³⁴ (17) ibht,³⁵ bks-nh,³⁶ green eye-paint, black eye-paint, carnelian,³⁷ shrt,³⁸ mm,³⁹ and ochre⁴⁰ are within this township."

¹³ The identification of Khnum with Shu also occurs in other texts of the Ptolemaic period, notably at Esna.

¹⁴ Lit., "the land of Upper Egypt and Lower Egypt."

¹⁵ Despite Barguet's explanation I fail to understand the words used to describe the instrument, its location, and its relation to Shu. Barguet 1953a:20-21 translated: "Il y a là un support de bois et sa croix faite de poutres swt, pour son poisson, qui sont sur la rive; à cela est affecté Chou, fils de Re, en tant que 'maître de largesse'," and he discussed the instrument further in CdE 28 1953:223-227.

¹⁶ I.e., the first cataract of the Nile, which was an effective boundary throughout Egypt's history.

¹⁷ Lit., "temples of Upper and Lower Egypt."

¹⁸ The island of Biggah, south of Elephantine and opposite Philae.

¹⁹ The two elevations described here, a pleasant one and a difficult one, have been identified with the "two mountains called Crophi and Mophi," mentioned in Herodotus 11.28. See Barguet 1953a:22, where Crophi is identified with grf-bw.

²⁰ Since many of the stones have not been identified, it is not clear to what extent the list may have been accurate.

²¹ On the much discussed bhn stone see now Harris 1961:78-82, where the translation "greywacke" is favored.

²² Harris (1961:74) thinks it probable that *mt*²² was merely another spelling of m^ct, "granite."

²³ An unidentified material seemingly of golden color; see Harris 1961:88.

²⁴ The stones r^cgs and wšy have not been identified; see Harris 1961:85 and 89.

²⁵ According to Harris (1961:105), this may be the Greek prason, "prase."

²⁶ An unidentified stone, see Harris 1961:92.

²⁷ This is both a precious stone and a term for faience, glass, and glaze, see Harris 1961:135-138.

²⁸ An unidentified stone, see Harris 1961:133 and 232.

²⁹ Harris (1961:110-111) thinks it probable that this is "quartz."

³⁰ Or perhaps "beryl," see Harris 1961:105.

³¹ An unidentified stone, see Harris 1961:92.

³² According to Harris (1961:115), this term usually designates "green felspar."

³³ According to Harris (1961:154), this is a writing of tmhy and signifies a species of "red ochre."

³⁴ Harris (1961:118-120) thinks it probable that this is "garnet."

³⁵ An unidentified stone, see Harris 1961:96-97.

³⁶ Harris (1961:168 and 933-234) concludes that this stone, originally called bt^c ksy, is haematite and possibly also magnetite.

³⁷ On hrt, "carnelian," see Harris 1961:120-121.

³⁸ Harris (1961:130-131) concludes that this was a semiprecious stone probably of green color.

³⁹ Mm or mini is known as a word for seed-grain, but that does not suit here.

⁴⁰ On sty and t^c-sty, "ochre," see Harris 1961:150-152.

When I heard what was there my heart ¹was guided¹. Having heard of the flood <I> opened the wrapped books.⁴¹ <I> made a purification; <I> conducted a procession of the hidden ones; <I> made a complete offering of bread, beer, oxen, and fowl, and all good things for the gods and goddesses in Yebu whose names had been pronounced.

As I slept in peace, I found the god standing before me. <I> propitiated him by adoring him and praying to him. He revealed himself to me with kindly face; he said:

"I am Khnum, your maker!
My arms are around you,
To steady your body,
To (19) safeguard your limbs.⁴²
I bestow on you stones upon stones,
That were not found¹ before,
Of which no work was made,
For building temples,
Rebuilding ruins,
Inlaying statues' eyes.

For I am the master who makes,
I am he who made himself,
Exalted Nun, who first came forth,
Hapy who hurries at will;
Fashioner of everybody,
Guide of each in his hours,
Tatenen, father of gods,
Great Shu, high in heaven!

The shrine I dwell in has two lips,⁴³
When I open up the well,⁴⁴
I know Hapy hugs the field,
A hug that fills each nose with life,
(21) For when hugged the field is reborn!
I shall make Hapy gush for you,
No year of lack and want anywhere,
Plants will grow weighed down by their fruit;
With Renuet ordering all,
All things are supplied in millions!
I shall let your people fill up,
They shall grasp together with you!
Gone will be the hunger years,
Ended the dearth in their bins.
Egypt's people will come striding,

b Gen 14:20
etc.

Shores will shine in the excellent flood,
Hearts will be happier than ever before!"

The Donation

I awoke with speeding heart. Freed of fatigue I made (23) this decree on behalf of my father Khnum. A royal offering to Khnum, lord of the cataract region and chief of Nubia:

In return for what you have done for me, I offer you Manu as western border, Bakhu as eastern border,⁴⁵ from Yebu to Kemsat,⁴⁶ being twelve iter on the east and the west, consisting of fields and pastures, of the river, and of every place in these miles.

All tenants⁴⁷ who cultivate the fields, and the vivifiers who irrigate the shores and all the new lands that are in these miles, their harvests shall be taken to your granary, in addition to (25) your share which is in Yebu.⁴⁸

All fishermen, all hunters, who catch fish and trap birds and all kinds of game, and all who trap lions in the desert — I exact from them one-tenth of the take of all of these, and all the young animals born of the females in these miles [in their totality].

One shall give the branded animals for all burnt offerings and daily sacrifices; and one shall give one-tenth⁴⁹ ^b of gold, ivory, ebony, carob wood, and ochre, carnelian, shrt, diw-plants, nfw-plants, all kinds of timber, (being) all the things brought by the Nubians of Khent-hen-nefer⁵⁰ (to) Egypt, and (by) every man (27) ¹who comes with arrears from them.¹

No officials are to issue orders in these places or take anything from them, for everything is to be protected for your sanctuary.

I grant you this domain with (its) stones and good soil. No person there ----- anything from it. But the scribes that belong to you and the overseers of the South shall dwell there as accountants, listing everything that the kiry-workers, and the smiths, and the master craftsmen, and the goldsmiths, and the ...,⁵¹ (29) and the Nubians, and the crew of Apiru,⁵² and all corvée labor who ⁴¹ I.e., the king consulted the manuals that taught how to perform the temple ritual.

⁴² The speech of the god abounds in assonances, which I have imitated whenever possible.

⁴³ The "lips" suggest some kind of gate or lid made of two sections which, when opened, releases the water.

⁴⁴ I take this to be the word for "well" rather than "sieve."

⁴⁵ Lit., "your west as Manu, your east as Bakhu," the two names for the mountain ranges bordering the Nile valley on the west and east.

⁴⁶ The Greek Takompos, the locality that marked the southern limit of the Dodekaschoinos.

⁴⁷ Barguet (1953a:29) read imy s nb; I wonder if it might be imy nhb nb, meaning the nhb of Wb. 2:293.15.

⁴⁸ Barguet (1953a:29) read the name as "Ville du Piège" (Hermopolis). I think it is merely another writing of "Yebu."

⁴⁹ Barguet (1953a:30) read the signs as rf, "sack," rather than di r-10. I have retained the reading di r-10 and have discussed the problem of the whole donation in my article on the Naucratis Stela in Lichtheim 1977:142-144.

⁵⁰ A region of Nubia south of the second cataract; see Vandersleyen 1971:64-68.

⁵¹ I wonder if the unread word might be hnrw, "prisoners"?

⁵² On the Apiru, see Rowton 1976:13-20.

fashion the stones, shall give of gold, silver, copper, lead, baskets of ...,⁵³ firewood, the things that every man who works with them shall give as dues, namely one-tenth of all these. And there shall be given one-tenth of the precious stones and quarrying stones that are brought from the mountain side, being the stones of the east.

And there shall be an overseer who measures the quantities of gold, silver, copper, and genuine precious stones, the things which the sculptors shall assign to the gold house, (31) (to) fashion the sacred images and to refit the statues that were damaged, and any implements lacking there.

Everything shall be placed in the storehouse until one fashions anew, when one knows everything that is lacking in your temple, so that it shall be as it was in the beginning.

Engrave this decree on a stela of the sanctuary in writing, for it happened as said, (and) on a tablet, so that the divine writings shall be on them in the temple twice.⁵⁴ He who spits (on it) deceitfully shall be given over to punishment.

The overseers of the priests and the chief of all the temple personnel shall make my name abide in the temple of Khnum-Re, lord of Yebu, ever-mighty.

⁵³ It is not clear what word is written, see Barguet 1953a:31. Since the edible produce has been listed separately, a species of grain is hardly suitable.

⁵⁴ What is written is: "in the temples twice on it."

REFERENCES

Text: Brugsch 1891; Barguet 1953a. Translation: Roeder 1915:177-184. Translation of excerpts: Vandier 1936:38-44 and 132-139; ANET 31-32. Studies: Sethe 1901; 1904:58-62; Schubart 1910:154-157; de Meulenaere 1957:33-34; Brunner 1967:cols. 2255-2256. Wildung, 1969:85-91; Schwab-Schlott 1969; 1972:109-113; 1975:cols. 1112-1113. Lichtheim 1977:142-144; AEL 3:94-103; Harris 1961.

THE LEGEND OF THE POSSESSED PRINCESS ("BENTRESH STELA") (1.54)

(From Karnak, Louvre C 284)

Miriam Lichtheim

A stela of black sandstone, 2.22 x 1.09 m, found in 1829 in a small, no longer extant, Ptolemaic sanctuary near the temple of Khons erected at Karnak by Ramses III. The stela was brought to Paris in 1844. The scene in the lunette shows King Ramses II offering incense before the bark of Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep. Behind the king, a priest offers incense before the smaller bark of Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes. Below the scene is the text in twenty-eight horizontal lines.

Though made to appear as a monument of Ramses II, the stela is in fact a work of either the Persian or the Ptolemaic period. It tells a wondrous tale of healing performed by the Theban god Khons-the-Provider. If the tale had been written on papyrus it would rank with other stories told about the gods. But in the guise of a monument of Ramses II it possessed a propagandistic purpose. Just what the purpose was does not emerge very clearly. Was it meant to glorify the two principal manifestations of the Theban god Khons: Khons-the-Merciful (nfr-htp) and Khons-the-Provider (p³ ir shr)? Or did it project a rivalry between their two priesthoods? Was it also designed to recall the glory of Egypt's native kings at a time of foreign — Persian or Ptolemaic — domination?

(1) Horus Mighty bull beautiful of crowns; Two Ladies abiding in kingship like Atum; Gold-Horus: Strong-armed smiter of the Nine Bows; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands Usermare-sotpenre; the Son of Re, of his body: Ramesses beloved of Amun,¹ lord of Thrones-of-the-Two-Lands, and of the Ennead, mistress of Thebes.

Good god, Amun's son,
Offspring of Harakhti,
Glorious seed of the All-Lord,

Begotten by Kamutef,
King of Egypt, ruler of Red Lands,
Sovereign who seized the Nine Bows; Whom victory was foretold as he came from the womb,
Whom valor was given while in the egg,
Bull firm of heart as he treads the arena,
Godly king going forth like Mont on victory
day,
Great of strength like the Son of Nut!

When his majesty was in Nahrin according to his annual custom,² the princes of every foreign land came bowing in peace to the might of his majesty from as far as the farthest marshlands. Their gifts of gold, silver, lapis lazuli, (s) turquoise, and every kind of plant of god's land³ were on their backs, and each was outdoing his fellow. The prince of Bakhtan⁴ had also sent his gifts and had placed his eldest daughter in front of them, worshipping his majesty and begging life from him. The woman pleased the heart of his majesty greatly and beyond anything. So her titulary was established as Great Royal Wife Nefrure.⁵ When his majesty returned to Egypt, she did all that a queen does.

¹ The two principal royal names are those of Ramses II, but the Horus, Two-Ladies, and Gold-Horus names are mistakenly composed, being derived from the titulary of Thutmose IV.

It happened in year 23,⁶ second month of summer, day 22, while his majesty was in Thebes-the-victorious, the mistress of cities, performing the rites for his father Amun-Re, lord of Thrones-of-the-Two-Lands, at his beautiful feast of Southern Ipet, his favorite place since the beginning, that one came to say to his majesty: "A messenger of the prince of Bakhtan has come with many gifts for the queen." He was brought before his majesty with his gifts and said, saluting his majesty: "Hail to you, Sun of the Nine Bows! Truly, we live through you!" And kissing the ground before his majesty he spoke again before his majesty, saying "I have come to you, O King, my lord, on account of Bentresh,⁷ the younger sister of Queen Nefrure. A malady has seized her body. May your majesty send a learned man to see her!"

His majesty said: "Bring me the personnel of the House of Life⁸ and the council (10) of the residence." They were ushered in to him immediately. His majesty said: "You have been summoned in order to hear this matter: bring me one wise of heart with fingers skilled in writing from among you." Then the royal scribe Thothemheb came before his majesty, and his majesty ordered him to proceed to Bakhtan with the messenger.

The learned man reached Bakhtan. He found Bentresh to be possessed by a spirit; he found him to be an enemy whom one could fight.⁹ Then the prince of Bakhtan sent again to his majesty, saying: "O King, my lord, may your majesty command to send a god [to fight against this spirit!]" The message reached his majesty in year 26, first month of summer, during the feast of Amun while his majesty was in Thebes. His majesty reported to Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep, saying: "My good lord, I report to you about the daughter of the prince of Bakhtan." Then Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep proceeded to Khons-the-Provider, the great god who expels disease demons.¹⁰ His majesty spoke to Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep: "My good lord, if you turn your face to (15) Khons-the-Provider, the great god who expels disease demons, he shall be dispatched to Bakhtan." Strong approval twice.¹¹ His majesty said: "Give your magical protection to him, and I shall dispatch his majesty to Bakhtan to save the daughter of the prince of Bakhtan." Very strong approval by Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep. He made magical protection for Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes four times. His majesty commanded to let Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes proceed to the great bark with five boats and a chariot, and many horses from east and west.¹² This god arrived in Bakhtan at the end of one year and five months.¹³ The prince of Bakhtan came with his soldiers and officials before Khons-the-Provider. He placed himself on his belly, saying: "You have come to us to be gracious to us, as commanded by the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Usermare-sotpenre!" Then the god proceeded to the place where Bentresh was. He made magical protection for the daughter of the prince of Bakhtan, and she became well instantly.

Then spoke the spirit who was with her¹⁴ to Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes: "Welcome in ² The land of Mitanni on the Upper Euphrates had been reached by Thutmose I and III, but Ramses II had never been there.

³ On "god's land" meaning wooded regions see Lichtheim AEL 3:84, n. 105 and 86, n. 2.

⁴ It has been surmised that the name "Bakhtan" is a corrupted Eg. version of the name of Bactria; see Lefebvre 1949:222.

⁵ The historical marriage of Ramses II with a Hittite princess who was given the Egyptian name Maatnefrure is the basis for this fictional marriage.

⁶ The scribe wrote "year 15," but the easy emendation to "year 23," first proposed by Erman, is very probable in view of the dates given later.

⁷ This may be a Canaanite name; see Lefebvre 1949:222, n. 7.

⁸ On the "House of Life" see Lichtheim AEL 3:36, n. 10.

⁹ The learned scribe Thothemheb diagnosed the malady as one that might be cured, but he himself could not effect the cure, i.e., expel the demon.

¹⁰ The Theban god Khons was worshiped under several distinct manifestations, with Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep occupying the leading position, while the most outstanding trait of Khons-p³-ir-s³hr was that of a healer. The epithet p³ ir s³hr has been translated in various ways, including "he who determines fate." Bearing in mind that we do not know the exact shade of meaning, I have preferred "the Provider." See also Lichtheim AEL 3:33, n. 4.

¹¹ A movement on the part of the god's statue signifying approval.

¹² The chariot and horses were needed for the overland part of the journey.

¹³ The remoteness of the land of Bakhtan is indicated in fairy-tale manner by the extreme length of the journey.

¹⁴ I.e., "who had been in her."

peace, great god who expels disease demons! Bakhtan is your home, its people are your servants, I am your servant! (20) I shall go to the place from which I came, so as to set your heart at rest about that which you came for. May your majesty command to make a feast day with me and the prince of Bakhtan!" Then the god motioned approval to his priest, saying: "Let the prince of Bakhtan make a great offering before this spirit."

Now while this took place between Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes and the spirit, the prince of Bakhtan stood by with his soldiers and was very frightened. Then he made a great offering to Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes and the spirit; and the prince of Bakhtan made a feast day for them. Then the spirit went in peace to where he wished, as commanded by Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes. The prince of Bakhtan rejoiced very greatly together with everyone in Bakhtan.

Then he schemed with his heart, saying: "I will make the god stay here in Bakhtan. I will not let him go to Egypt." So the god spent three years and nine months in Bakhtan. Then, as the prince of Bakhtan slept on his bed, he saw the god come out of his shrine as a falcon of gold and fly up to the sky toward Egypt. (25) He awoke in terror and said to the priest of Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes: "The god is still here with us! He shall go to Thebes! His chariot shall go to Egypt!" Then the prince of Bakhtan let the god proceed to Egypt, having given him many gifts of every good thing and very many soldiers and horses.

They arrived in peace in Thebes. Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes went to the house of Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep. He placed the gifts of every good thing which the prince of Bakhtan had given him before Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep, without giving anything to his (own) house.¹⁵ Khons-the-Provider-in-Thebes arrived in his house in peace in year 33, second month of winter, day 19, of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Usermare-sotpenre, given eternal life like Re.

¹⁵ I.e., Khons-the-Provider delivered all the presents to his superior, Khons-in-Thebes-Neferhotep, without keeping anything for his own temple.

REFERENCES

Text: Tresson 1933:57-78 and pl. i; de Buck 1948:106-109; Kitchen KRI 2:284-287. Translation: Lefebvre 1949:221-232; ANET 29-31; Brunner-Traut 1965:163-167; Bresciani 1969:533-536; Lichtheim AEL 3:90-94. Studies: Erman 1883:54-60; Spiegelberg 1906:181; Posener 1934:75-81; Lefebvre 1944:214-218; Donadoni 1957:47-50.

EGYPTIAN BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ALBRIGHT, W. F.
1934 The Vocalization of the Egyptian Syllabic Orthography. New Haven: American Oriental Society.
- ALLEN, T. G.
1974 The Book of the Dead or Going Forth by Day. SAOC 37. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
- ALLEN, J. P.
1988a Genesis in Egypt, the Philosophy of Ancient Egyptian Creation Accounts. YES 2. New Haven: Yale Egyptological Seminar.
1988b "Funerary Texts and Their Meaning." Pp. 38-49 in Mummies & Magic, the Funerary Arts of Ancient Egypt. Ed. by S. D'Auria, P. Lacovara, and C. Rochrig. Boston: Museum of Fine Arts.
- ALT, A.
1923 "Zwei Vermutungen zur Geschichte des Sinuhe." ZÄS 58:48-50.
1941 PJ 37:19ff.
- ANTHES, R.
1957 "The Legal Aspect of the Instruction of Amenemhet." JNES 16:176-191.
1958 "A Further Remark on the Introduction to the Instruction of Amenemhet." JNES 17:208-209.
1970 Pp. 9-18 in Studies Gallig.
- ASSMANN, J.
1970 Der König als Sonnenpriester. ADAIK Ägyptologische Reihe, 7. Glückstadt: J. J. Augustin.
1975a Zeit und Ewigkeit im alten Ägypten. AHAW Phil.-hist. Kl. 1. Heidelberg: Karl Winter, Universitätsverlag.
1975b Ägyptische Hymnen und Gebete. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
1990 Ma'at, Gerechtigkeit und Unsterblichkeit im Alten Ägypten. Munich: C. H. Beck.
- AUFFRET, P.
1981 Hymnes d'Égypte et d'Israël: études de structure littéraires. OBO 34. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag.
- BAER, K.
1964 JEA 50:179-180.
- BARGUET, P.
1953a La stèle de la famine à Séhel. Institut français d'archéologie orientale, Bibliothèque d'étude 34. Cairo.
1953b "Khnoum-Chou patron des arpenteurs." CdE 28:223-227.
1967 Le Livre des Morts des anciens Égyptiens. LAPO 1. Paris: Les Éditions du Cerf.
- BARNES, J. W. B.
1952 The Ashmolean Ostrakon of Sinuhe. London: Oxford University Press.
1967 "Sinuhe's Message to the King." JEA 53:6-14.
- BARTA, W.
1971 "Zu einigen Textpassagen der Prophezeiung des Neferti." MDAIK 27:35-45.
1974 "Das Gespräch des Ipuwer mit dem Schöpfergott." SÄK 1:19-33.
1980 "Kult," LdÄ 3:cols. 839-848.
- BARUCQ, A., and F. DAUMAS.
1980 Hymnes et prières de l'Égypte ancienne. Paris: Cerf.
- VON BECKERATH, J.
1966 "Die Dynastie der Herakleopoliten (9./10. Dynastie)." ZÄS 93:13-20.
1984 Handbuch der ägyptischen Königsnamen. MÄS 20. Munich: Deutscher Kunstverlag.
- BERLEV, O. D.
1987 "The Date of the Eloquent Peasant." Pp. 78-83 in Studies Fecht.
- VON BISSING, F. W.
1955 Ägyptische Lebensweisheit. Die Bibliothek der alten Welt. Reihe der Alte Orient. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
- BLACKMAN, A. M.
1930 "Notes on Certain Passages in Various Middle Egyptian Texts." JEA 16:63-72.
1932 Middle Egyptian Stories. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 2. Brussels: Fondation égyptologique reine Elisabeth.
1936 "Some Notes on the Story of Sinuhe and Other Egyptian Texts." JEA 22:35-44.
- BLUMENTHAL, E.
1973 "Die Erzählung des Papyrus d'Orbiney als Literaturwerk." ZÄS 99:1-17.
1982 "Die Prophezeiung des Neferti." ZÄS 109:1-27.
- BORGHOUTS, J.
1978 Ancient Egyptian Magical Texts. Nisaba 9. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
1987 "Akhu and Hekau. Two Basic Notions of Ancient Egyptian Magic, and the Concept of the Divine Creative Word." Pp. 29-46 in La Magia in Egitto ai Tempi dei Faraoni. Ed. by A. Roccati and A. Siliotti. Milan: Ressegna internazionale di cinematografia archeologica.
- BREASTED, J. H.
1902 "The Philosophy of a Memphite Priest." ZÄS 39: 39-54
1906-1907 Ancient Records of Egypt. 5 Vols. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press. Reprint, 1962.
1933 The Dawn of Conscience. New York.
- BRESCIANI, E.
1969 Letteratura e poesia dell' antico egito. Turin.
- BRUGSCH, H. K.
1891 Die biblischen sieben Jahre der Hungersnoth. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- BRUNNER, H.
1944 Die Lehre des Cheti, Sohnes des Duauf. Ägyptologische Forschungen 13. Glückstadt: J. J. Augustin.
1955 ZÄS 80:5-11.

- 1964 ZÄS 91:139-140.
 1967 "Die Hungersnotstele" in Kindlers Literatur Lexikon. Zürich: Kindler. 111:cols. 2255-2256.
 1969 BiOr 26:71.
- BRUNNER-TRAUT, E.
 1963 Altägyptische Märchen. Märchen der Weltliteratur. Dusseldorf-Cologne: Diederichs. 2nd edition, 1965.
- BUCCELLATI G.
 1972 BeO 14:241-264.
- DE BUCK, A.
 1932 Pp. 57-60 in Studies Griffith.
 1938 The Egyptian Coffin Texts. vol. 2. OIP 49. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
 1939 Pp. 847-852 in Orient Ancien. Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale. Mémoires 66. Cairo.
 1946 Le Muséon 59:183-200.
 1947 "Plaats en betekenis van Sjoë in de egyptische theologie." Mededeelingen der Koninklijke Nederlandsche Akademie van Wetenschappen, afd. Letterkunde 10: 215-249.
 1948 Egyptian Readingbook. Leiden: Nederlandsh Archaeologisch-Philologisch Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten.
- BUDGE, E. A. W.
 1910 Facsimiles of Egyptian Hieratic Papyri in the British Museum. London.
 1923 Facsimiles of Egyptian Hieratic Papyri in the British Museum, Second Series. London.
 1924 The Teaching of Amen-em-apt, Son of Kanekht. London.
- CAMINOS, R.
 1954 Late-Egyptian Miscellanies. London: Oxford University.
- CAULFEILD, A., and T. ST. GEORGE.
 1902 The Temple of the Kings at Abydos I. London: B. Quaritch.
- ČERNÝ, J.
 1958 "Some Coptic Etymologies." BIFAO 57:203-215.
- ČERNÝ, J., and A. H. Gardiner.
 1957 HO.
- CLÈRE, J.
 1939a JEA 25:16-29.
 1939b Studies Dussaud 2:829-832.
- CLIFFORD, R. J.
 1994 Creation Accounts in the Ancient Near East and in the Bible. CBQMS 26. Washington: Catholic Biblical Association.
- DARBY, W. J., P. GHALJOUNGUI, and L. GRIVETTI.
 1977 Food: the Gift of Osiris. London, New York and San Francisco: Academic Press.
- DAUMAS, F.
 1965 La civilisation de l'Égypte pharaonique. Collection les grandes civilisations 4. Paris: Arthaud.
- DAVIES, N. de G.
 1903-08 The Rock Tombs of El Amarna. 6 parts. Egypt Exploration Society, Archaeological Survey 13-18. London: Egypt Exploration Society.
- VON DEINES, H. and W. WESTENDORF.
 1961-62 Wörterbuch der medizinischen Texte. 7 volumes. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- DERCHAIN, P.
 1972 "Intelligenz als Karriere (Neferti 10-11)." GM 3:9-14.
- DEROUSSEAU, L.
 1987 Editor. La création dans l'orient ancien. Paris: Cerf.
- VAN DIJK, J.
 1986 "Anat, Seth and the Seed of Pre." Pp. 31-51 in Studies Hospers.
- DONADONI, S.
 1957 MDAIK 15:47-50.
- DRIOTON, E.
 1960 RdÉ 12:90-91.
- EDEL, E.
 1955-1964 Altägyptische Grammatik. 2 volumes. AnOr 34/39. Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum.
 1961-1964 Zu den Inschriften auf den Jahreszeitenreliefs der "Weltkammer" aus dem Sonnenheiligtum des Nuserre. NAWG Phil.-hist. Kl., 1961 number 8 and 1963 numbers 4-5. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.
 1968 Pp. 1-12 in Textbuch zur Geschichte Israels. Ed. by K. Galling. 2nd Edition. Tübingen: Mohr (Siebeck).
- ENGLUND, G.
 1978 Akh — une notion religieuse dans l'Égypte pharaonique. Boreas, 11. Uppsala: University of Uppsala.
- ERMAN, A.
 1883 ZÄS 21:54-60.
 1900 ZÄS 38:1-14.
 1906 ZÄS 43:1-26.
 1911 Ein Denkmal memphitischer Theologie. SPAW Phil.-hist. Kl. 1. Berlin: Verlag der Königl. Akademie der Wissenschaften.
 1923 Der Leidener Amonshymnus. SPAW Phil.-hist. Kl. 11. Berlin: Verlag der Akademie der Wissenschaften.
 1924 OLZ 27:241-252.
 1927 The Literature of the Ancient Egyptians. Trans. by A. M. Blackman. London: Methuen & Co. Reprint New York, 1966 as The Ancient Egyptians; A Sourcebook of Their Writings. Original: Die Literatur der Aegypter. Leipzig, 1923.
- FAULKNER, R. O.
 1932 Pp. 69-73 in Studies Griffith.

- 1933 The Papyrus Bremner-Rhind (British Museum No. 10188). Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 3. Brussels: Édition de la Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth.
- 1937 "The Bremner-Rhind Papyrus — III." JEA 23:166-185.
- 1938 "The Bremner-Rhind Papyrus — IV." JEA 24:41-53.
- 1964 "Notes on 'The Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage'." JEA 50:24-36.
- 1969 The Ancient Egyptian Pyramid Texts. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- 1964 "Some Notes on the God Shu." JEOL 18:266-71.
- 1973 The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts. Vol. 1: Spells 1-354. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
- 1977 The Ancient Egyptian Coffin Texts. Vol. 2: Spells 355-787. Warminster: Aris & Phillips.
- 1985 The Book of the Dead. Rev. edition. London: The British Museum.
- FECHT, G.
- 1964 "Die Form der altägyptischen Literatur: metrische und stylistische Analyse." ZÄS 91: 11-63.
- 1965 Literarische Zeugnisse zur "Persönlichen Frömmigkeit" in Ägypten. AHAW, Phil.-hist. Kl. 1965 no. 1. Heidelberg: Carl Winter.
- 1967 "Zur Frühform der Amarna-Theologie: Neubearbeitung der Stele der Architekten Suti und Hor." ZÄS 94:25-50.
- 1972 Der Vorwurf an Gott in den "Mahnworten des Ipu-wer". Heidelberg: Carl Winter.
- FENSHAM, F. C.
- 1962 "Widow, Orphan and the Poor in Ancient Near Eastern Legal Wisdom Literature." JNES 21:129-139.
- FOX, M. V.
- 1985 The Song of Songs and Ancient Egyptian Love Songs. Madison: University of Wisconsin.
- FEDERN, W.
- 1946 "The Opening Lines of the Antef Song." JNES 5:259.
- 1960 "The 'Transformations' in the Coffin Texts: A New Approach." JNES 19:241-257.
- FOX, M. V.
- 1985 The Song of Songs and the Ancient Egyptian Love Songs. Madison: University of Wisconsin.
- FRANKFORT, H.
- 1933 The Cenotaph of Seti I at Abydos. 2 vols. Egypt Exploration Society, 39th memoir. London: Egypt Exploration Society.
- FRIEDMAN, F.
- 1984-85 "The Root Meaning of ḥ : Effectiveness or Luminosity." Serapis 8:39-46.
- GARDINER, A. H.
- 1905 "Hymns to Amon from a Leiden Papyrus." ZÄS 42: 12-42.
- 1908 "Notes on the Tale of the Shipwrecked Sailor." ZÄS 45:60-66.
- 1909a Die Erzählung des Sinuhe und die Hirtengeschichte. Literarische Texte des mittleren Reiches 2. HPKMB 5/2. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- 1909b Admonitions of an Egyptian Sage. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- 1913 "In Praise of Death: A Song from a Theban Tomb." PSBA 35:165-170.
- 1914 "New Literary Works from Ancient Egypt." JEA 1:20-36.
- 1916 Notes on the Story of Sinuhe. Paris: Librairie Honore Champion.
- 1923 "The Eloquent Peasant." JEA 9:5-23.
- 1931 The Chester Beatty Papyri, No. I. London: Oxford University Press.
- 1932a "The Astarte Papyrus." Pp. 74-85 in Studies Griffith.
- 1932b Late-Egyptian Stories. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 1. Brussels: La fondation égyptologique reine Élisabeth.
- 1935a HPBM 3.
- 1935b "A Lawsuit Arising from the Purchase of Two Slaves." JEA 21:143.
- 1937 Late-Egyptian Miscellanies. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 7. Brussels: La fondation égyptologique reine Élisabeth.
- 1939 Pp. 479-496 in Orient Ancien. Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale. Mémoires 66. Cairo.
- 1959a "A Didactic Passage Re-Examined." JEA 45:12-15.
- 1959b The Royal Canon of Turin. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- 1961 Egypt of the Pharaohs. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- GILULA, M.
- 1978 "Peasant B1 141-145." JEA 64:129-130.
- GOEDICKE, H.
- 1957 "The Route of Sinuhe's Flight." JEA 43:77-85.
- 1965 "Sinuhe's Reply to the King's Letter." JEA 51:29-47.
- 1967 "Admonitions 3.6-10." JARCE 6:93-95.
- 1968 "The Beginning of the Instruction of King Amenemhet." JARCE 7:15-21.
- 1977 The Protocol of Neferyt. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- GOLENISHCHEV, V. S.
- 1899 "Papyrus hiératique de la collection W. Golénischeff." RT 21:74-102.
- 1912 Le conte du naufrage. Bibliothèque d'étude 2. Cairo: Impr. de l'Institut français d'archéologie orientale.
- 1916 Les papyrus hiératiques nos. 1115, 1116A et 1116B de l'Ermitage impériale à St-Petersbourg. St. Petersburg.
- GORDON, C. H.
- 1953 "Sabbatical Cycle or Seasonal Pattern? Reflections on a New Book." Or 22:79-81.
- 1982 "Khnum and El." Pp. 203-214 in Egyptological Studies. Ed. by S. Israelit-Groll. SH 28. Jerusalem: The Magnes Press.
- GRAPOW, H.
- 1952 Der stilistische Bau der Geschichte des Sinuhe. Untersuchungen zur ägyptischen Stilistik 1. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- GRDSELOFF, B.
- 1952 "Sur un passage de l'inscription de Shabaka." ArOr 20:484-486.
- GRÉBAUT, E.
- 1874 Hymne à Ammon-Ra. Paris: A. Franck.

- GRIFFITH, F. LI.
 1896 "The Millingen Papyrus." ZÄS 34:35-51.
 1926 "The Teaching of Amenophis the Son of Kanakht." JEA 12:191-231.
- GRIFFITHS, J. G.
 1960 "Wisdom about Tomorrow." HTR 53:219-221.
- GRUMACH, I.
 1972 Untersuchungen zur Lebenslehre des Amenope. MÄS 23. Munich: Deutscher Kunstverlag.
- HARRIS, J. R.
 1961 Lexicographical Studies in Ancient Egyptian Minerals. Deutsche Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin, Institut für Orientalforschung, Veröffentlichung 54. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- HASSAN, S.
 1928 Hymnes religieux du moyen empire. Cairo: IFAO.
- HELCK, W.
 1961 Urkunden der 18. Dynastie: Übersetzungen zu den Heften 17-22. Urk. IV. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
 1961-1970 Materialien zur Wirtschaftsgeschichte des neuen Reiches. Teil 1-6 und Indices. Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur, Mainz. Abhandlungen der geistes- und sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse 1960, 10-11; 1963, 2-3; 1964, 4; 1969, 4; 1969, 13. Mainz: Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur.
 1969 Der Text der "Lehre Amenemhets I. für seinen Sohn". Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
 1970a Die Prophezeiung des Nfr. tj. Kleine ägyptische Texte. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
 1970b Die Lehre des Dw³-Htj. Kleine ägyptische Texte. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
 1983 "Zur Herkunft der Erzählung des sog. 'Astartepapyrus.'" Pp. 215-223 in Studies Brunner.
- HERMSEN, E.
 1991 Die zwei Wege des Jenseits. OBO 112. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag.
- HERRMANN, S.
 1963 "Steuerruder, Waage, Herz und Zunge in ägyptischen Bildreden." ZÄS 79:106-115.
- HOFFMEIER, J. K.
 1983 "Some Thoughts on Genesis 1 & 2 and Egyptian Cosmology." JANES 15:39-49.
- HOLWERDA, A. and P. BOESER.
 1905-1932 Beschreibung der ägyptischen Sammlung. 14 Volumes. Leiden. Rijksmuseum van Oudheden. The Hague.
- HÖRNUNG, E.
 1963-67 Das Amduat. 3 parts. ÄA 7. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
 1972 Ägyptische Unterweltbücher. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
 1973 Der Eine und die Vielen. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft.
 1975-76 Das Buch der Anbetung des Re im Westen. 2 vols. Aegyptiaca Helvetica, 2-3. Geneva: Ägyptologisches Seminar der Universität Basel and Centre d'études orientales de l'Université de Genève.
 1979 Das Totenbuch der Ägypter. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
 1982 The One and the Many. Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press.
- HÖRNUNG, G.
 1990 Gesänge vom Nil. Dichtung am Hofe der Pharaonen. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
- HUFFMON, H.
 1965 Amorite Personal Names in the Mari Texts. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- HUMBERT, P.
 1929 Recherches sur les sources égyptiennes de la littérature sapientiale d'Israël. Mémoires de l'Université de Neuchâtel 7. Neuchâtel: Secrétariat de l'Université.
- JESI, F.
 1962 "Il tentato adulterio mitico in Grecia e in Egitto." Aegyptus 42:276-296.
- JUNGE, F.
 1973 "Zur Fehldatierung des sog. Denkmals memphitischer Theologie oder Der Beitrag der ägyptischen Theologie zur Geistesgeschichte der Spätzeit." MDAIK 29: 195-204.
 1977 "Der Welt der Klagen." Pp. 275-284 in Studies Ono.
- JUNKER, H.
 1939 Die Götterlehre von Memphis. APAW 23. Berlin: Verlag der Akademie der Wissenschaften.
- KADISH, G. E.
 1973 "British Museum Writing Board 5645: The Complaints of Kha-kheper-Rē^c-senebu." JEA 59:77-90.
- KEES, H.
 1930 "Göttinger Totenbuchstudien. Ein Mythos von Königtum des Osiris in Herakleopolis aus dem Totenbuch Kap. 175." ZÄS 65:65-83.
 1956 Totenglauben und Jenseitsvorstellungen der alten Ägypter. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs. 4th ed., Berlin: Akademie Verlag, 1980.
 1962 "Ein Handelsplatz des MR im Nordostdelta." MDAIK 18:1-13.
- KEIMER, L.
 1928a ActOr 6:288ff.
 1928b "Sur quelques petits fruit en faïence émaillée datant du Moyen Empire." BIFAO 28:50-97.
- KITCHEN, K. A.
 1979 "The Basic Literary Forms and Formulations of Ancient Instructional Writings in Egypt and Western Asia." Pp. 236-257 in Studien zu altägyptischen Lebenslehren. Ed. by E. Hörnung and O. Keel.
 1992 "Egypt, History of (Chronology)." ABD 2:321-331.
- KOEFOD-PETERSEN, O.
 1936 Recueil des inscriptions hiéroglyphiques de la Glyptothèque Ny Carlsberg. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 6. Brussels: Édition de la Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth.
 1948 Les stèles égyptiennes. Publications de la Glyptothèque Ny Carlsberg, 1. Copenhagen: Glyptothèque Ny Carlsberg.

- KOENIG, Y.
1990 "Les textes d'envoûtement de Mirgissa." RdÉ 41:101-25.
- KÖNIGLICHE MUSEEN ZU BERLIN.
1901 Rituale für den Kultus des Amon und für den Kultus der Mut. HPKMB 1. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- KOROSTOVTSSEV, M. A.
1960 Puteshestvie Un-Amuna v Biblos: Egipetskii ieraticeskii papirus no 120 Gosudarst. Muzeia im A. S. Pushkina. Pamiatniki literatury narodov Vostoka. Teksty. Bol'shaia seriia, 4 Moscow: Akademia Nauk S.S.S.R. Institut Vostoknedemia.
- KUHLMANN, K. P.
1992 "Bauernweisheiten." Pp. 191-207 in Studies Brunner-Traut.
- LACAU, P., and H. CHEVRIER.
1977 Une chapelle d'Hatshepsout à Karnak, vol. 1. Cairo: Institut français d'archéologie orientale.
- LANCZKOWSKI, G.
1958 "Die Geschichte vom Riesen Goliath und der Kampf Sinuhes mit dem Starken von Retenu." MDAIK 16:214-218.
- LANGE, H. O.
1925 Das Weisheitsbuch des Amenemope, aus dem Papyrus 10,474 des British Museum. Danske videnskabernes selskab, historisk-filologiske meddelelser 11/2 Copenhagen: A. F. Høst & Son.
- LEFEBVRE, G.
1944 "Encore la stèle de Bakhtan." CdÉ 19:214-218.
1949 Romans et contes égyptiens de l'époque pharaonique. Paris: A. Maisonneuve. Reprint 1988.
- LEXA, F.
1929 ArOr 1:14-49.
- LICHTHEIM, M.
1945 JNES 4:178-212.
1973-76 AEL. 1-2.
1977 "The Naucratis Stela Once Again." Pp. 142-144 in Studies Hughes.
1983 Late Egyptian Wisdom Literature in the International Context: A Study of Demotic Instructions. OBO 52. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag.
- LIPINSKI, E.
1974 "'Anaq-Kiryat 'Arba' — Hébron et ses sanctuaires tribaux." VT 24:41-48.
- LOPEZ, J.
1963 "Le Papyrus Millingen." RdÉ 18:29-33 and pls. 4-8.
- LORTON, D.
1968 "The Expression Šms-³ib." JARCE 7:41-54.
- LÜDDECKENS, E.
1943 Untersuchungen über religiösen Gehalt, Sprache und Form der ägyptischen Totenklagen. MDAIK 11. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- LUFT, U.
1977 "Das Totenbuch des Ptahmose." ZÄS 104:46-75.
- MALININE, M.
1934 "Un fragment de l'enseignement d'Amenemhat Ier." BIFAO 34:63-74.
- MARIETTE, A.
1871 Les papyrus égyptiens du musée de Boulaq. Vol. 1. Paris: A. Franck.
1872 Les papyrus égyptiens du musée de Boulaq. Vol. 2. Paris: A. Franck.
- MASPERO, G.
1914 Les enseignements d'Amenemhat Ier à son fils Sanouasrit Ier. Cairo.
- MAYSTRE, Ch.
1941 "Le livre de la vache du ciel." BIFAO 40:53-115.
- DE MEULENAERE, H.
1957 "Review of Barquet 1953a." BiOr 14:33-34.
- MILLER, R. L.
1990 "Hogs and Hygiene." JEA 76:125-140.
- MÖLLER, G.
1905 Hymnen an verschiedenen Götter. HPKMB 2. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
1927 Hieratische Lesestücke für den akademischen Gebrauch. 3 fascicles. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs. Reprint, 1961.
- MORET, A.
1902 Le rituel du culte divin journalier en Égypte. Paris: Ernest Leroux.
1931 BIFAO 30:725-750 and 3 plates.
- MÜLLER, D.
1967 "Grabausstattung und Totengericht in der Lehre für König Merikare." ZÄS 94:117-124.
- MÜLLER, W. M.
1899 Die Liebespoesie der alten Ägypter. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- NAVILLE, É.
1886 Das aegyptische Tottenbuch der XVIII. bis XX. Dynastie aus verschiedenen Urkunden zusammengestellt und herausgegeben. 2 vols. Berlin: A. Asher & Co.
- NIMS, C. F.
1968 "Second Tenses in Wenamün." JEA 54:161-164.
- OCKINGA, B.
1983 "The Burden of Kha^ckheperre^c-sonbu." JEA 69:88-95.
- OSING, J.
1976 Die Nominalbildung des Ägyptischen. 2 vols. Mainz/Rhein: Philipp von Zabern Verlag.

- OTTO, E.
1951 Der Vorwurf an Gott. Hildesheim.
- PARKER, R. A.
1960 Egyptian Astronomical Texts. Vol. 1. The Early Decans. BES 3. Providence: Brown University Press.
- PARKER, R. A., J. LECLANT, and J.-C. GOYON.
1979 The Edifice of Taharqa. BES 8. Providence: Brown University Press.
- PARKINSON, R. B.
1991a "The Date of the 'Tale of the Eloquent Peasant.'" RdÉ 42:171-181.
1991b The Tale of the Eloquent Peasant. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- PERRY, E.
1986 A Critical Study of the Eloquent Peasant. Ph.D. dissertation. Johns Hopkins University.
- PESTMAN, P. W.
1982 "Who were the Owners, in the 'Community of Workmen', of the Chester Beatty Papyri." Pp. 155-172 in Gleanings from Deir el-Medīna. Ed. by R. Demarée and J. Janssen. Egyptologische Uitgaven 1. Leiden: Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten.
- PETERSON, B. J.
1966 "A New Fragment of The Wisdom of Amenemope." JEA 52:120-128.
- PIANKOFF, A.
1933 "Quelques passages des 'Instructions de Douai' sur une tablette du Musée du Louvre." RdÉ 1:51-74.
1955 The Shrines of Tur-Ankh-Amon. Bollingen Series 40. ERTR 2. New York: Pantheon Books. Reprint: Harper Torchbook.
- PIERRET, P.
1874-1878 Recueil d'inscriptions inédites du Musée Égyptien du Louvre. 2 Volumes. Paris.
- PLEYTE, W. and F. ROSSI.
1869-76 Papyrus de Turin. 2 vols. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- POLOTSKY, H. J.
1973 "Notre connaissance du néo-égyptien." Pp. 133-141 in Textes et langages de l'Égypte Pharaonique: Hommage à Jean-François Champollion, 1. BdÉ 64/1. Cairo.
- POSENER, G.
1934 "A propos de la stèle de Bentresh." BIFAO 34:75-81.
1935 Catalogue des ostraca hiératiques littéraires de Deir el Médīneh. Vol. 1. FIFAO 1. Cairo.
1949 "Les richesses inconnues de la littérature égyptienne (Recherches littéraires I)." RdÉ 6:27-48.
1950 "Trais passages de l'enseignement à Merikarê." RdÉ 7:176-180.
1956 Littérature et politique dans l'Égypte de la xii^e dynastie. Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études 307. Paris.
1962 "L'enseignement pour le roi Mérikarê." ACF 62:290-295.
1963a "Aménémopé 21,13 et bj³.t au sens d'«oracle»." ZÄS 90:98-102.
1963b "L'enseignement pour le roi Mérikarê." ACF 63:303-305.
1964 "L'expression bj³.t «mauvais caractère»." RdÉ 16:37-43.
1965 "L'enseignement pour le roi Mérikarê." ACF 65:305-307.
1966a "L'enseignement pour le roi Mérikarê." ACF 66:342-345.
1966b "Quatre tablettes scolaires de basse époque (Aménémopé et Hardjedef)." RdÉ 18:45-62 and pls. 1-2.
1968 Pp. 106-111 in Studies Schott.
1972 Catalogue des ostraca hiératiques littéraires de Deir el Médīneh. Vol. 2. FIFAO 18. Cairo.
1973 "Le chapitre IV d'Aménémopé." ZÄS 99:129-135.
1977-80 Catalogue des ostraca hiératiques littéraires de Deir el Médīneh. Vol. 3. FIFAO 20. Cairo.
- REDFORD, D. B.
1986 Pharaonic King-Lists, Annals and Day Books. Mississauga: Benben.
- RITNER, R. K.
1987 "Review of H. J. Thissen, Die Lehre des Anchsheschonqi (P. BM 10508)." BiOr 44:641-646.
1989 "Horus on the Crocodiles: A Juncture of Religion and Magic in Late Dynastic Egypt." Pp. 103-116 in Religion and Philosophy in Ancient Egypt. Ed. by W. K. Simpson. YES 3. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.
1990 "O. Gardiner 363: A Spell Against Night Terrors." JARCE 27:25-41.
1993 The Mechanics of Ancient Egyptian Magical Practice. SAOC 54. Chicago: The Oriental Institute.
- ROCCATI, A.
1984 "Lessico Meteorologico." Pp. 343-354 in Studien zu Sprach und Religion Ägyptens zu Ehren von Wolfhart Westendorf. Volume 1: Sprache. Ed. by F. Junge. Göttingen: Hubert & Co.
- ROEDER, C.
1915 Urkunden zur Religion des alten Ägypten. Jena.
- ROEDER, G.
1960 Kulte, Orakel und Naturverehrung im alten Ägypten. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
- RÖMER, M.
1987 "Der kairener Hymnus an Amun-Re zur Gliederung von pBoulaq 17." Pp. 405-428 in Studies Fecht.
- RÖBLER-KÖHLER, U.
1979 Kapitel 17 des ägyptischen Totenbuches. Göttinger Orientforschungen, IV. Reihe: Ägypten, 10. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
- ROWTON, M. B.
1976 "Dimorphic Structure and the Problem of the 'Apirū-^cIbrīm." JNES 35:13-20.
- RUFFLE, J.
1977 "The Teaching of Amenemope and its Connection with the Book of Proverbs." TynBul 28:29-68.
- SAINT FARE GARNOT, J.
1948 CRAIBL 1948:543-549.
1949 "Notes on the Inscriptions of Suty and Hor (British Museum Stela No. 826)." JEA 35:63-68.

- SANDMAN, M.
1938 Texts from the Time of Akhenaten. Bibliotheca Aegyptiaca 8. Brussels: Édition de la Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth.
- SAUNERON, S.
1953 "L'Hymne au soleil levant des Papyrus de Berlin 3050, 3056, et 3048." BIFAO 53: 65-102.
1959 "La naissance du monde selon l'Égypte ancienne." in Sources orientales 1: La naissance du monde. Paris: Éditions du Seuil.
1960 "La différenciation des langages d'après la tradition égyptienne." BIFAO 60:31-41.
- SCHARFF, A.
1936 Der historische Abschnitt der Lehre für König Merikare. SBAW 8. Munich: Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften.
- SCHLÖGL, H. A.
1980 Der Gott Ta-tenen. OBO 29. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag.
- SCHOTT, S.
1938 "Die beiden Neunheiten als Ausdruck für 'Zähne' und 'Lippen'." ZÄS 74: 94-96.
1950 Altägyptische Liebeslieder, mit Märchen und Liebesgeschichten. Zürich: Artemis Verlag.
- SCHUBART, W.
1910 "Dodekaschoinos." ZÄS 47:154-157.
- SCHWAB-SCHLOTT, A.
1969 Die Ausmasse Ägyptens nach altägyptischen Texten. Dissertation, University of Tübingen.
1972 "Altägyptische Texte über die Ausmaße." MDAIK 28:109-113.
1975 "Dodekaschoinos" in LdÄ 1:cols. 1112-1113.
- SEIBERT, P.
1967 Die Charakteristik. Untersuchungen zu einer altägyptischen Sprechsitte und ihren Ausprägungen in Folklore und Literatur. ÄA 17. Wiesbaden: Harrassowitz.
- SETHE, K.
1901 Dodekaschoinos das Zwölfmeilenland an der Grenze von Ägypten und Nubien. Untersuchungen 2/3. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
Reprint: Hildesheim, 1964.
1904 "Schoinos und Dodekaschoinos." ZÄS 41:58-62.
1924 Ägyptische Lesestücke. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
1926 Die Ächtung feindlicher Fürsten, Völker und Dinge auf altägyptischen Tongefäßsscherben des Mittleren Reiches. Berlin: Akademie der Wissenschaften.
1927 Erläuterung zu den ägyptischen Lesestücken. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
1928 Dramatische Texte zu altägyptischen Mysterienspielen. Untersuchungen zur Geschichte und Altertumskunde Ägyptens 10. Leipzig: J.C. Hinrichs. Reprint: Hildesheim: Georg Olms Verlagsbuchhandlung, 1964.
- SHUPAK, N.
1989-90 "Egyptian 'Prophecy' and Biblical Prophecy: Did the Phenomenon of Prophecy, in Biblical Sense, Exist in Ancient Egypt?" JEOL 31:1-40.
1992 "A New Source for the Study of the Judiciary and Law of Ancient Egypt: 'The Tale of the Eloquent Peasant'." JNES 51:1-18.
1993 Where Can Wisdom Be Found? The Sage's Language in the Bible and in Ancient Egyptian Literature. OBO 130. Freiburg: Universitätsverlag.
- SIMPSON, D. C.
1926 "The Hebrew Book of Proverbs and the Teaching of Amenophis." JEA 12:232-239.
- SIMPSON, W. K.
1973 Editor. The Literature of Ancient Egypt: An Anthology of Stories, Instructions and Poetry. 2nd edition. New Haven: Yale University Press.
1974 The Terrace of the Great God at Abydos. PPYEE 5. New Haven: Peabody Museum.
- SPALINGER, A.
1984 "An Alarming Parallel to the End of the Shipwrecked Sailor." GM 73:91-95.
- SPIEGELBERG, W.
1906 "Zu der Datierung der Bentresch-Stele." RT 28:181.
- STADELMANN, R.
1975 "Astartepapyrus." LdÄ 1:cols. 509-511.
- STERN, E.
1994 Dor, Ruler of the Seas: Twelve Years of Excavations at the Israelite-Phoenician Harbor Town on the Carmel Coast. Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society.
- STEWART, H. M.
1957 "A Possibly Contemporary Parallel to the Inscription of Suty and Hor." JEA 43:3-5.
- SUYS, E.
1935 La sagesse d'Ani: Texte, traduction et commentaire. AnOr 11. Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum.
- SWELIM, N.
1983 Some Problems on the History of the Third Dynasty. The Archaeological Society of Alexandria, Archaeological & Historical Studies 7. Alexandria.
- SZCZUDŁOSKA, A.
1963 "The Fragment of the Chapter CLXXV of the Book of the Dead preserved in Sekoski's Papyrus." Rocznik Orientalistyczny 26:123-142.
- TE VELDE, H.
1970 "The God Heka in Egyptian Theology." JEOL 21: 175-186.
- THÉODORIDÈS, A.
1958-1960 Bruxelles Annuaire 15:39-69.
- TRESSON, R.
1933 RB 42:57-78.

- VAN SETERS, J.
1964 "A Date for the 'Admonitions' in the Second Intermediate Period." JEA 50:13-23.
- VANDERSLEYEN, C.
1971 Les guerres d'Amosis, fondateur de la XVIII^e dynastie. Monographes reine Elisabeth 1. Brussels: Fondation égyptologique reine Elisabeth.
- VANDIER, J.
1936 La famine dans l'Égypte ancienne. Institut français d'archéologie orientale, Recherches 7. Cairo.
1949 BiOr 6:15.
1962 Le Papyrus Jumilhac. Paris.
- VARILLE, A.
1942 BIFAO 41:25-30.
- VERNUS, P.
1978 Athribis. BdÉ 74. Cairo: Institut français d'archéologie orientale.
1986 "Traum." LdÄ 6:cols. 745-749.
- VOLTEN, A. P. F.
1937-38 Studien zum Weisheitsbuch des Anii. Danske videnskabernes selskab, historisk-filologiske meddelelser, 23/3. Copenhagen: Levin & Munksgaard.
1941 "Ägyptische Nemesis-Gedanken." Pp. 371-379 in Miscellanea Gregoriana: raccolta di scritti pubblicati nel i centenario dalla fondazione del Pont. Museo egizio. Rome: Tipografia poliglotta vaticana.
1945 Zwei altägyptische politische Schriften. Analecta Aegyptiaca 4. Copenhagen: E. Munksgaard.
1963 Les Sagesses du proche-orient ancien. Colloque de Strasbourg 17-19 mai 1962. Paris.
- VAN DE WALLE, B.
1947 "Le thème de la satire des métiers dans la littérature égyptienne." CdÉ 22:50-72.
1949 "Review of Brunner 1944." CdÉ 24:244-256.
1969 L'Humour dans la littérature et dans l'art de l'ancienne Égypte. Scholae Adriani de Buck memoriae dicatae 4. Leiden: Nederlands Instituut voor het Nabije Oosten.
- WASHINGTON, H. C.
1994 Wealth and poverty in the Instruction of Amenemope and the Hebrew Proverbs. SBLDS 142. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- WENTE, E. F.
1973 Pp. 92-107 in Simpson, Literature.
- WESTENDORF, W.
1968 Pp. 125-131 in Studies Schott.
1973 "Die Qualitäten des Weisen Neferti." GM 4:41-44.
- WILDUNG, D.
1969 Die Rolle ägyptischer Könige im Bewusstsein ihrer Nachwelt. MÄS 17. Berlin: B. Hesslin.
1977 Imhotep und Amenhotep. Gottwerdung im alten Ägypten. MÄS 36. Munich: Deutscher Kunstverlag.
- WILLIAMS, R. J.
1961 JEA 47:100-106.
1964 Pp. 16-19 in Studies Meek.
1969 "Some Egyptianisms in the Old Testament." Pp. 93-98 in Studies Wilson.
- WILSON, J. A.
1969 ANET.
- WOLF, W.
1929 "Der Berliner Ptah-Hymnus (P 3048, II-XII)." ZÄS 64: 17-44.
- YOVOTTE, J.
1952 "Sur Bata, maître de Sako." RdÉ 9:157-159.
1962 "Processions géographiques mentionnant le Fayoum et ses localités." BIFAO 61:79-138 and pl. vii.
1964 "À propos du panthéon de Sinouhé (B 205-212)." Kemi 17:69-73.
- ZABKAR, L.
1968 A Study of the Ba Concept in Ancient Egyptian Texts. SAOC 34. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- ZANDEE, J.
1947 Hymnen aan Amon van Pap. Leiden I 350. Oudheidkundige Mededelingen uit het Rijksmuseum van Oudheden te Leiden, Nieuwe Reeks 28. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
1971-72 "Sargtexte Spruch 75." ZÄS 97: 155-162; 98:149-155; 99:48-63.
1973a "Sargtexte Spruch 76." ZÄS 100:60-71.
1973b "Sargtexte Spruch 78." ZÄS 100:141-144.
1974 "Sargtexte Spruch 80." ZÄS 101:62-79.

HITTITE CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. DIVINE FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. MYTHS

ELKUNIRŠA AND AŠERTU (1.55)

Gary Beckman

Although the particular events of this tale are not known from the mythological tablets recovered at Ugarit, the story certainly belongs to the corpus of northern Syrian myths which they represent. This composition has come down to us in a number of fragments which originally belonged to two or three separate manuscripts, but only two portions of the text are well-enough preserved for connected translation. The Hittite translator has misunderstood the Canaanite phrase "El, Creator of Earth" as a simple divine name, which he has rendered as Elkunirša.

Fragment 1

(A i 1'-7') (Ašertu said to Baal:) "[Get behind me, and I will get behind] you. I will press [you] down with [my] word. I will pierce [you] with [my] little spindle(?). I will stimulate(?) you [...]" Baal heard (this) [and he] stood [up]. He came to the headwaters of the Euphrates River. [He came to] Elkunirša, husband of Ašertu. He entered the tent [of] Elkunirša.

(A i 8'-21') [Elkunirša] saw Baal and asked him, "[Why] have you come?" Baal said, "When I came into your house, [just then] Ašertu sent girls to me (with the message): 'Come sleep with me!' I refused. She ... me and said [as follows]: 'Get behind me, and I will get behind you. I will press you down with my [word. I will pierce] you [with] my [little spindle(?)].' On that account I have come, my father. I have not come to you [as] a messenger. I [have come] to you on my own behalf. Ašertu is rejecting your manhood. [...] your wife. She keeps sending to me: '[Sleep with me]!'" Elkunirša [replied] to Baal: "Go, ... her! ... my [wife Ašertu]! Humiliate her!"

(A i 22'-27') [Baal] heard the word [of Elkunirša] and he [went] to Ašertu. Baal said to Ašertu: "I have slain your seventy-seven [sons]. I have slain eighty-eight." [When] Ašertu heard the humiliation, she was troubled in her soul and had mourning [women] take their places. She waited for seven years. [The ...] ate and drank for them (the sons).

a Ps 102:7

Fragment 2

(A ii 1'-3') (Ašertu said to Elkunirša:) "[...] I will press [down Baal with my word. I will pierce him with my little spindle(?). Then] I will sleep with you." [Elkunirša] listened and said to his wife: "Come, [I will turn] Baal [over to you. Do] with him as you wish."

(A ii 4'-16') Astarte overheard these words and became a goblet in the hand of Elkunirša. She became an owl and perched on his wall. Astarte overheard the words which husband and wife spoke to one another. Elkunirša and his wife went to her bed and they slept together. Astarte flew like a bird across the desert.^a In the desert she found Baal, [and said] to him: "O Baal, [the husband(?)] of Ašertu [...] Do not drink wine together [...] do not ...] against [...] she(?) will seek [...]"

It seems that despite Astarte's warning Ašertu took her vengeance on Baal, for the remaining fragments of the text, which are very badly broken, discuss the treatment of various parts of Baal's body, including his penis, tendons, and muscles, as well as his ritual purification. Also mentioned are the "Dark Earth," the Hittite term for the Netherworld, and the Annunaki-deities, known from Mesopotamian texts as the rulers of this dismal portion of the universe. Thus it seems that Baal must have died and been brought back from the dead, an impression strengthened by the presence of the Mother-goddesses in this portion of the composition.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 342; Fragment 1: A. KUB 36.35 i. B. KUB 36.34 i. Fragment 2: A. KUB 36.37 + KUB 31.118. B. KUB 12.61 ii. Literature: ANET 519; Bernabé 1987:127-29; Hoffner 1965; 1990:69-70; Laroche 1968b:25-30; Otten 1953.

THE STORM-GOD AND THE SERPENT (ILLUYANKA) (1.56)

Gary Beckman

The conflict between the Storm-god and the forces of chaos represented by the serpent (illuyanka- in Hittite) was the focus of two different tales known in second-millennium Anatolia, both of which served as etiological cult myths of the important Hittite festival called purulli, a term whose precise meaning remains unknown.

(A i 1-4) (This is) the text of the purulli (festival) for the [...] of the Storm-god of Heaven, according to Kella, [the "anointed priest"] of the Storm-god of (the town of) Nerik: When they speak thus —

(A i 5-8) "Let the land grow and thrive, and let the land be secure!" — and when it (indeed) grows and thrives, then they perform the festival of purulli.

(A i 9-11) When the Storm-god and the serpent came to grips in (the town of) Kiškilišša, the serpent smote the Storm-god.

(A i 12-14) (Thereafter) the Storm-god summoned all the gods (saying): "Come in! (The goddess) Inara has prepared a feast!"

(A i 15-18) She prepared everything in great quantity — vessels of wine, vessels of (the drink) marnuwan, and vessels of (the drink) walḫi. In the vessels [she made] an abundance.

(A i 19-20) Then [Inara] went [to] (the town of) Ziggurata and encountered Ḫupašiya, a mortal.

(A i 21-23) Inara spoke as follows to Ḫupašiya: "I am about to do such-and-such a thing — you join with me!"

(A i 24-26) Ḫupašiya replied as follows to Inara: "If I may sleep with you, then I will come and perform your heart's desire." [And] he slept with her.

(B i 3'-8') Then Inara transported Ḫupašiya and concealed him. Inara dressed herself up and invited the serpent up from his hole (saying): "I'm preparing a feast — come eat and drink!"

(B i 9'-12') Then the serpent came up together with [his progeny], and they ate and drank. They drank up every vessel and became intoxicated.

(B i 13'-16') They were no longer able to go back down into (their) hole, (so that) Ḫupašiya came and tied up the serpent with a cord.

(B i 17'-18') The Storm-god came and slew the serpent. The (other) gods were at his side.

(C i 14'-22') Then Inara built a house on a rock (outcropping) in (the town of) Tarukka and settled Ḫupašiya in the house. Inara instructed him: "When I go out into the countryside, you must not look out the window. If you do look out, you will see your wife and your children."

(C i 23'-24') When the twentieth day (after Inara's departure) had passed, he looked out the window and [saw] his wife and [his] children.

(C i 25'-27') When Inara returned from the countryside, he began to whine: "Let me (go) back home!"

(A ii 9'-14') Inara spoke as follows [to Ḫupašiya]: "... away [...] through an offense [...] the meadow of the Storm-god [...] she [...] killed(?) him.

(A ii 15'-20') Inara [went] to Kiškilišša and how she set her(?) house and [the river(?) of the watery abyss [into] the hand of the king — because (in commemoration thereof) we are (re-)performing the first purulli festival — the hand [of the king will hold(?) the house(?) of Inara and the [river(?) of the watery abyss.

(A ii 21'-24') (The divine mountain) Zaliyanu is first (in rank) among all (the gods). When he has allotted rain in Nerik, then the herald brings forth a loaf of thick bread from Nerik.

(A ii 25'-29') He had asked Zaliyanu for rain, and he brings it to him [on account of(?) the bread ...

[Several badly damaged lines are followed by a break.]

(D iii 2'-5') That which [Kella, the "anointed priest,"] spoke — [The serpent] defeated [the Storm-god] and took [(his) heart and eyes]. And the Storm-god [...] him.

(A iii 4'-8') And he took as his wife the daughter of a poor man, and he sired a son. When he grew up, he took as his wife the daughter of the serpent.

(A iii 9'-12') The Storm-god instructed (his) son: "When you go to the house of your wife, then demand from them (my) heart and eyes."

(A iii 13'-19') When he went, he demanded from them the heart, and they gave it to him. Afterwards he demanded from them the eyes, and they gave these to him. And he carried them to the Storm-god, his father, and the Storm-god (thereby) took back his heart and his eyes.

(A iii 20'-28') When he was again sound in body as of old, then he went once more to the sea for battle. When he gave battle to him and was beginning to smite the serpent, then the son of the Storm-god was with the serpent and shouted up to heaven, to his father:

(A iii 29'-33') "Include me! Do not show me any mercy!" Then the Storm-god killed the serpent and his (own) son. And now this one, the Storm-god

[...] (A iii 34'-35') Thus says Kella, [the "anointed priest" of the Storm-god of Nerik: "...] when the gods [...]" [A break intervenes.] (D iv 1'-4') [Then] for the "anointed priest" they made the foremost gods the humblest, and the humblest they made the foremost gods. (D iv 8'-10') The cultic revenue of Zaliyanu is great. Zašhapuna the wife of Zaliyanu is greater than the Storm-god of Nerik. (D iv 8'-10') The gods speak as follows to the "anointed priest" Tahpurili: "When we go to the Storm-god of Nerik, where will we sit?" (D iv 11'-16') The "anointed priest" Tahpurili speaks as follows: "When you sit on a diorite stool, and when the 'anointed priests' cast the lot,^a then the 'anointed priest' who holds (the image of) Zaliyanu — a diorite stool will be set above the spring, and	^a Esth 4:7; 9:26	he will be seated there." (A iv 14'-17') "All the gods will arrive, and they will cast the lot.^a Of all the gods of (the town of) Kaštama, Zašhapuna will be the greatest." (A iv 18'-21') "Because she is the wife of Zaliyanu, and Tazzuwašši is his concubine, these three persons will remain in (the town of) Tanipiya." (A iv 22'-23') And thereafter in Tanipiya a field will be handed over from the royal (property) — (A iv 24'-28') Six kapunu-measures of field, one kapunu-measure of garden, a house together with a threshing floor, three buildings for the household personnel. It is recorded [on] a tablet. I am respectful [of the matter], and I have spoken these things (truly). (A iv 29'-33') Colophon: One tablet, complete, of the word of Kella, the "anointed priest." [The scribe] Piḫa-ziti wrote it under the supervision of the chief scribe Walwa-ziti.
--	------------------------------------	--

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 321; A. KBo 3.7. B. KUB 17.5. C. KUB 17.6. D. KUB 12.66. E. KUB 36.54. F. KBo 12.83. G. KBo 12.84 (+) KBo 13.84. H. KBo 22.99. J. KUB 36.53. Bibliography: ANET 125-126; Beckman 1982; Bernabé 1987:29-37; Gonet 1987; Hoffner 1990:10-14; Laroche 1968b:65-72; Pecchioli Daddi and Polvani 1990:39-55.

THE WRATH OF TELIPINU (1.57)

Gary Beckman

In the Hittite view, the operation of the universe required that each deity and human conscientiously perform his or her proper function within the whole. Calamity manifested in some sector of the cosmos was an indication that the god or goddess responsible for it had become angry and had abandoned his or her post. The remedy for this evil situation was the performance by both human and divine practitioners of an expiatory ritual which included a mythological account of the deity's displeasure, departure, and reconciliation. Such "disappearing god texts" (Parker 1989) are attested for at least a dozen Hittite divinities. The example translated here, the best preserved and consequently best known to non-specialists, is addressed to Telipinu, who belonged to the large class of Anatolian Storm-gods.^a

[The beginning of the text has been lost.]

(A i 1'-4') Telipinu [became angry and said]: "Do not practice intimidation!" He slipped(?) his right [shoe] on his left (foot). [He slipped(?)] his left [shoe] on his right.

(A i 5'-9') Mist seized the windows. Smoke seized the house. On the hearth the logs were stifled. [On the altars] the gods were stifled. In the fold the sheep were stifled. In the corral the cows were stifled. The sheep refused her lamb. The cow refused her calf.

(A i 10'-15') Telipinu went off and took away grain, the fertility of the herds, growth(?), plenty(?), and satiety into the wilderness, to the meadow and the moor. Telipinu proceeded to disappear into the moor. The halenzu-plant spread over him. Barley and wheat no longer grow. Cows, sheep, and humans no longer conceive, and those who are (already) pregnant do not give birth in this time.

^a 1 Kgs 17:18

(A i 16'-20') The mountains dried up. The trees dried up, so that buds do not come forth. The pastures dried up. The springs dried up. Famine appeared in the land. Humans and gods perish from hunger. The great Sun-god prepared a feast and invited the Thousand Gods. They ate but were not sated; they drank but were not satisfied.

(A i 21'-25') The Storm-god concerned himself for his son Telipinu: "My son Telipinu is not here. He became angry and took away for himself everything good." The great gods and the lesser gods began to search for Telipinu. The Sun-god dispatched the swift eagle: "Go search the high mountains!

(A i 26'-31') Search the deep valleys! Search the blue sea! The eagle went, but he did not find him. He brought back a report to the Sun-god: "I didn't find him, the honored god Telipinu." The Storm-god said to the Mother-goddess: "What will we do? We will perish from hunger!" The Mother-goddess said to the Storm-god: "Do something, Storm-god! You go search for Telipinu!"

(A i 32'-35') The Storm-god set out and began to search for Telipinu. He [comes] to his city, to the city gate, but he is not able to open (it). He broke his mallet and wedge. The Storm-god [...], covered himself (with his garment), and sat down. The Mother-goddess [dispatched a bee]: "You go search for Telipinu!"

(A i 36'-39') [The Storm-god] spoke [to the Mother-goddess]: "The great gods and the lesser gods repeatedly searched for him, but [they did not find] him. Now [will] this [bee] go [find] him? His wingspan is small, he himself is small, and furthermore they (the gods) ..."

[A break intervenes. Parallel texts inform us that despite the scepticism of the Storm-god, the bee indeed succeeded in finding the lost god, who was asleep in a meadow. The bee stung Telipinu on his hands and feet, awakening him and only increasing his rage. It is to placating this anger that the program of ritual action which constitutes the remainder of this text is directed. Here the actions of the human magical specialist and of Kamrušepa, goddess of magic, are inextricably intertwined.]

(A ii 3'-8') And Telipinu [...] And she (the human practitioner) ground up(?) malt and beer-bread. [...] came forth(?). She cut off good [...] at the gate. [Let] the pleasant smell [summon(?) you], Telipinu. Choked (with rage), [may you be reconciled (with gods and humans)]!

(A ii 9'-11') Here (before you) [lies] water of wal-šeššar. [Let] your soul, O Telipinu, [be ... Turn] to the king in favor.

(A ii 12'-14') Here lies galaktar. Let [your soul, O Telipinu], be pacified. Here [lies parhuena]. Let (its) form entice you(!), [O Telipinu].

(A ii 15'-18') Here lie šamama-nuts. Let [your soul, O Telipinu], be sated with oil. Here [lie] figs. As [figs] are sweet, let [your soul, O Telipinu], likewise become sweet.

(A ii 19'-21') As the olive [holds] its oil in its heart, [and as the grape] holds its wine in its heart, may you, Telipinu, likewise hold goodness in your soul and heart.

(A 22'-27') Here lies liti-wood. Let it anoint [your soul(?)], O Telipinu. As the malt and beer-bread are joined in their essence, let your soul likewise [be] joined, [O Telipinu], to the words of the humans. [As ...] is pure, let Telipinu's soul likewise become pure. [As] honey is sweet and as ghee is mild, let [the soul] of Telipinu likewise become sweet and likewise become mild.

(A ii 28'-32') I have now sprinkled the paths of Telipinu with fine oil. O Telipinu, tread the paths sprinkled with fine oil. Let boughs of šahi- and happuriya- be your bed. As (stalks of) lemon grass(?) are intertwined, may you, O Telipinu, be reconciled (with gods and humans).

(A ii 33'-iii 2) In fury Telipinu came. He thunders with the lightning bolt. He smites the Dark Earth below. Kamrušepa saw him, [took] an eagle's wing (as an instrument of magic), and carried him off. She [brought] it, the displeasure, [to an end]. She brought it, the wrath, to an end. She brought [the offense] to an end. She brought the anger to an end.

(A iii 3-7) Kamrušepa speaks to the gods: "Go, O gods. Ḫapantali [is] now [herding] the sheep of the Sun-god. Cut out twelve rams so that I may treat the karāš-grain of Telipinu." I (the human practitioner) have taken for myself a sieve with a thousand 'eyes,' and I have sifted (in it) the karāš-grain, the rams of Kamrušepa.

(A iii 8-12) I have burned (a purificatory substance) over Telipinu on this side and that. I have taken his evil from Telipinu, from his body. I have taken his (perceived) offense. I have taken his displeasure. I have taken his wrath. I have taken his irritation. I have taken his anger.

(A iii 13-20) Telipinu is wrathful. His soul and [his] figure were stifled (like) kindling. As they have burned this kindling, let the displeasure, wrath, (perceived) offense, and anger of Telipinu likewise burn. As [malt] is meager (in fertility), and one does not take it to the field to use as seed, nor does one make it into bread, [nor] does one place [it] in the storehouse, so let the displeasure, [wrath], (perceived) offense, and anger of Telipinu likewise become meager (in effect).

(A iii 21-23) Telipinu is wrathful. His soul [and his figure] are a burning fire. As this fire [is extinguished], let (his) displeasure, wrath, and anger likewise [be extinguished].

(A iii 24-27) O Telipinu, let go of displeasure. [Let go of] wrath. Let go of anger. As a rain spout does not flow [backwards], so [let the displeasure, wrath], and anger of Telipinu not [come] back.

(A iii 28-34) The gods [take their seats in the place] of assembly beneath the hawthorn tree. Beneath the hawthorn tree [are set] long [...] All of the gods are seated (including): [Papaya], Ištuštaya, the Fate-deities, the Mother-goddesses, the Grain-deity, the Spirit of growth, Telipinu, the Tutelary Deity, Ḫapantali, [and ...] I have treated the deities for long years [and for ...] I have purified him (Telipinu).

(C 9'-12') [I have taken] evil from Telipinu, [from his body]. I have taken his [displeasure. I have taken his] wrath. I have taken [his (perceived) offense. I have taken his] anger. I have taken [the evil] tongue. [I have taken] the evil [...]

[There is a break. The preserved text resumes with an address to the hawthorn tree.]

(A iv 1-3) [The ox goes beneath you, and] you pluck [his] coat(?). The sheep [goes] beneath you, and you pluck her fleece. Pluck from Telipinu (his) wrath, displeasure, (perceived) offense, and anger.

(A iv 4-7) In fury the Storm-god comes, and the man of the Storm-god (his priest) brings him to a halt. A pot comes to a boil, and the wooden spoon(?) brings it to a halt. Furthermore, let my words, those of the human, likewise bring displeasure, wrath, and anger to an end for Telipinu.

(A iv 8-13) Let them depart, the displeasure, wrath, (perceived) offense, and anger of Telipinu. Let the house release them. Let the central ... release them. Let the window release them. Let the door-pivot <release them>. Let the central courtyard release them. Let the city gate release them. Let the gate structure release them. Let the royal road release them. They shall not go to the fertile field, or garden, or grove. They shall go along the road of the Sun-goddess of the Earth.

(A iv 14-19) The doorkeeper opened the seven doors; he drew back the seven bolts. Below, in the Dark Earth, there stand bronze kettles. Their lids are of lead. Their latches are of iron. Whatever goes into (them) does not come up again, but perishes therein. Let them capture the displeasure, wrath, (perceived) offense, and anger of Telipinu, so that they do not come back.

(A iv 20-26) Telipinu came back home and concerned himself for his land. The mist released the window. The smoke released the house. The altars were reconciled with the gods. The hearth released the log. In the fold he (Telipinu) released the sheep. In the corral he released the cows. Then the mother tended her child. The sheep tended her lamb. The cow tended her calf. And Telipinu <tended> the king and queen. He concerned himself for them in regard to life, vigor, and future (existence).

(A iv 27-31) Telipinu concerned himself for the king. An eya-tree stands before Telipinu. From the eya-tree hangs a hunting bag (fashioned from the skin) of a sheep. In it is mutton fat. In it are grain, the fertility of the herds, and the grape. In it are cow and sheep. In it are long years and progeny.

(A iv 32-35) In it is the gentle bleating of the lamb. In it are ... and renown. In it is the ... In it is the right shank. In it [is growth(?), plenty(?), and satiety].

[The preserved text ends.]

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 324.1; A. KUB 17.10. B. KUB 33.2. C. KUB 33.1. D. KUB 33.3. E. KBo 24.84. Bibliography: ANET 126-128; Bernabé 1987:49-54; Hoffner 1990:14-17; Kellerman 1986; Laroche 1965b:89-98; Parker 1989; Pecchioli Daddi and Polvani 1990:71-84.

APPU AND HIS TWO SONS (1.58)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

This text has been translated here as an independent story. According to Güterbock (1946), the text is continued in the tale of the Sun God, the Cow, and the Fisherman. Although the extant copies of the Appu story are New Hittite, archaic language indicates an archetype composed in the Old or Middle Hittite period. The story has a moral, which is stated in the proemium. The unnamed deity who is praised for always vindicating the just person will also thwart the evil son of Appu who attempts to defraud his honest brother. Only a little bit of the beginning is lost. Where the text becomes intelligible, a proemium is in progress.

He/she it is (i.e., some deity) who always exonerates just men, but chops down evil men like trees, repeatedly striking evil men on their skulls (like) ...s until he/she destroys them.

There was a city named Šudul. It was situated on the seacoast in the land of Lulluwa. Up there lived a man named Appu. He was the richest man in all the land. He had many cattle and sheep. He had amassed silver, gold and lapis lazuli like a huge heap of threshed grain. There was nothing which he lacked but one thing: he had neither son nor daughter.^{1 a}

^a Gen 15:2

The elders of Šudul sat eating in his presence. One gave bread and a piece of grilled meat to his son;

¹ With the wealthy Appu, who had everything anyone might want, but was childless, cp. biblical Abraham (Gen 15:2).

another gave his son a drink. But Appu had no one to whom to give bread. The table was covered with a linen cloth and stood in front of the altar. Appu arose, went home, and lay down on his bed with his shoes on.

Appu's wife questioned their servants: "He has never had success before. You don't think he has now had success, do you?" The woman went and lay down with Appu with her clothes on. Appu awoke from his sleep, and his wife questioned him: "You have never had success before. Have you now had success?" When Appu heard this, he replied: "You are a woman and think like one. You know nothing at all."^{2 b}

Appu rose from his bed, took a white lamb, and set out to meet the Sun God. The Sun God looked down from the sky, changed himself into a young man, came to him, and questioned him: "What is your problem, that [I may solve] it for you?"

When [Appu] heard this, he replied to him: "[The gods] have given me wealth. They have given [me cattle and sheep]. I lack only one thing: I have neither son nor daughter." When the Sun God heard this, he said: "Get drunk, go home, and sleep with your wife. The gods will give you a son."

When Appu heard this, he went back home, but the Sun God went back up to the sky. Now Teššub (the Storm God) saw the Sun God coming three miles distant, and said to his vizier: "Look who's coming: the Sun God, Shepherd of the Lands! You don't suppose that somewhere the land is laid waste? Might not cities somewhere be devastated? Might not troops somewhere be put to rout? Tell the cook and cupbearer to provide him with food and drink."

[The Sun God] came, [...], and [Teššub ...ed] him there. Teššub [...ed] the Sun God, and began to question him: "Why [have you come, O Sun God of the Sky? ...]"

[Long break.]

[Beginning of column iii broken.]

Appu's wife became pregnant. The first month, the second month, the third month, the fourth month, the fifth month, the sixth month, the seventh month, the eighth month, the ninth month passed, and the tenth month arrived. Appu's wife bore a son. The nurse lifted the boy and placed him on

b Job 2:9-10

c Gen 31:4-12

Appu's knees. Appu began to amuse the boy and to clean him off(?). He put a fitting name upon him: "Since my ancestral gods didn't [take] the right way for him, but followed a wrong way, let his name be Wrong."³

Again, a second time Appu's wife became pregnant. The [tenth] month arrived, and the woman bore a son. The nurse lifted [the boy] and (Appu) put the right name upon him, "Let them call him by a right name. Since my ancestral gods took the right way for him, let his name be Right."

[Appu's boys] grew up and matured and came into manhood. [When] Appu's boys had grown up [and matured] and come into manhood, they parted [from] Appu, and [divided up] the estate.

Brother Wrong said to Brother Right: "Let us separate and settle down in different places." Brother Right said [to Brother Wrong]: "Then who [...]?" Brother Wrong said to Brother Right: "Since the mountains dwell separately, since the rivers flow in separate courses, as the very gods dwell separately — I say these things to you: The Sun God dwells in Sippar. The Moon God dwells in Kuzina. Teššub dwells in Kummiya. And Šawuška dwells in Nineveh. Nanaya [dwells] in Kiššina. And Marduk dwells in Babylon. As the gods dwell separately, so let us also settle in different places."

Wrong and Right began to divide up (the estate), while the Sun God looked on from heaven. Brother Wrong took [a half] and gave the other half to his brother Right. They [...]ed among themselves. There was one plow ox and [one] cow. Wrong took the one healthy plow ox, and [gave] the unhealthy cow to his brother Right. The Sun God looked [on] from heaven (and said): "Let [Right's unhealthy] cow become healthy, and let her bear [...]"^{4 c} (Colophon:) First tablet of Appu: incomplete.

[A separate fragment offers part of the continuation. Beginning broken away.]

[But when they] arrived in Sippar and took their stand before the Sun God for judgment, [the Sun God] awarded the judgment to Brother Right.

[Then Brother Wrong] began to curse. The Sun God heard the curses [and] said: "I will not [decide] it for you. Let Šawuška (a goddess), Nineveh's Queen, judge it for you."

[Wrong and Right] set out. And when they arrived

² For the wife who mocks the suffering of her righteous husband compare Job's wife (Job 2:9-10).

³ For naming a child according to either circumstances at birth or its presumed destiny see Hoffner 1968a. This is a commonplace in the birth narratives of Genesis and Exodus.

⁴ For a just deity's unseen frustration of fraud attempted against his worshiper compare Yahweh's protection of Jacob from Laban (Gen 31:4-12).

at Nineveh and stood before Šawuška [for judgment, ...] drew one acre in one direction [and ... in the other direction].

[Rest of the text lost.]

REFERENCES

Hoffner 1975a; 1990.

THE SUN GOD AND THE COW (1.59)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

[Güterbock believes that this story is a continuation of Appu and his Two Sons. Beginning of the preserved portion is too broken for connected translation.]

The cow thrived and ...-ed. The Sun God looked down from the sky, and his desire leaped forward upon the cow. [He became] a young man, came down from the sky, and began to speak to the cow: "Who do you think you are, that you continually graze on our meadow [...] When the grass is tender and young, [and you graze here], you destroy the meadow."

[The cow] replied: "Is [...] hire [...] in its [...]?" Then the Sun God responded: "[...] and it [is] in bloom [...] me [...]" [The Sun God] spoke [further] to the cow: "[...]"

[The rest of the column is broken away, as are the first lines of the next column.]

The Sun God drove the cow [...], and the Sun God [...] the cow, [and ...] cattle [...] ¹

[Most of three lines missing.]

... the second, third, [fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth], ninth and tenth month arrived, [and the cow gave birth]. The cow [called] back up to the sky [and] glowered [at the Sun God]. She said [to the Sun God]: "Now I ask you please: [My calf] should have four legs. Why have I borne this two-legged thing?" Like a lion, the cow opened her mouth and went toward the child to eat (it?). The cow made her ... as deep as the Deep Blue and set out toward the child [to ...].

The Sun God looked down from the sky. [He came down] and took his stand beside the cow. He began [to say to her:] "And who are you, [that you have approached ...] to gulp down [...]"

The Sun God [...-ed] the cow [and ...]. And (s)he [...-ed ...]. When the child [...-ed, ...] grass [...] his eyes [...]. The Sun God [...] and him [...].

[Break of about 17 lines.]

"The great rivers [...] are troubled. The [...] are troubled for washing, [...] of blood [...] for washing. [...] let it keep on living." The day becomes warm [...]

When the Sun God had set out to go back up to the sky, he [...-ed] the child [...]. He strokes(?) its members along with [its head]. The Sun God spoke to [...]: ² "Take a staff in hand, put the winds on [your feet as] winged [shoes]. Make the trip in one stage. Over the child [...] birds, ...-birds, [...] ...-birds, eagles [...] Let them ... their pegs away from over him. [...] snakes intertwined [...]"

[The rest of column iii and the beginning of column iv lost.]

[A fisherman] said [to ...]: "I will go see. [The ...-s] are standing in the mountains [...]" The fisherman arrived at the child. ...-birds [...] shelducks fly up. [...] are ascending(?) and they [...] to the sky.

[When the fisherman approached], the poisonous snakes retired to a distance. [...] strokes (the child's) members along with its head. He strokes [...] He strokes its eyes [...] The fisherman said to himself: "Somehow I have pleased(?) the gods, so that they have removed the unfavorable bread from the rock.³ I have struck the Sun God's fancy, and he has led me out (here) for the sake of [the child]. Do you perhaps know about me, O Sun God, that I have no child, that you have led me out (here) for the sake of the child? Truly the Sun God puts [...] bread out for him who is dear to him!" The fisherman lifted the child up from the ground, tidied him up, rejoiced in him, held him close to his chest, and carried him back home.

The fisherman arrived at the city of Urma, went to his house, and sat down in a chair. The fisherman said to his wife: "Pay close attention to what I am about to say to you. Take this child, go into the bedroom, lie down on the bed, and wail. The whole city will hear and say: 'The fisherman's wife has borne a child!' And one will bring us bread, another will bring us beer, and still another will bring us fat. A(n ideal) woman's mind is clever. She has cut (herself) off from command(ing others).

¹ It appears that the Sun God copulated with the cow, since in the following context it gives birth to a two-legged being. Compare Ba'al's copulating with a cow in Ugaritic myths.

² His messenger.

³ This saying in the language of fishermen probably means: "Now the fish will take my bait."

She is dependent on the authority of the god. She stands in woman's subordination, and she does not disobey (her) husband's word."

(The fisherman's wife) heard the man's word, went into [the bedroom], lay down on the bed, [and began to wail]. When the men of the city heard, they said: "[The fisherman's] wife [has borne a child!]" The men of the city [said this] and began to bring [things to her. One] brought [bread, and another] fat [and beer].

[The colophon indicates that the story was continued on another tablet.]

REFERENCES

Hoffner 1975a; 1981; 1990.

2. PRAYERS

PLAGUE PRAYERS OF MURŠILI II (1.60)

Gary Beckman

When he came to the throne, the Great King Muršili II was confronted with both the fragmentation of the Hittite empire and the raging of an epidemic of uncertain character which had carried off in short succession both his father Šuppiluliuma I and his brother Arnuwanda II. Innumerable ordinary Hittites had perished as well. While Muršili mastered the political situation within the first decade of his rule, the plague continued unabated for many more years. To persuade the gods to bring the suffering to an end, the king (or his scribes) composed several prayers in which he confesses his own guilt and that of his land for various offenses, and details the reparations which have already been made. He also points out to the gods that they will only harm themselves by thinning out the ranks of their human servants. The order of the prayers is not indicated in the texts themselves but has been postulated by modern scholars on the basis of the development of Muršili's argumentation over the course of the series.

First Prayer

(A obv. 1-7) O [all of] you [male deities], all female deities, [all] male deities [of the oath], all female deities of the oath, [all] primeval [deities], all [male] deities and all female deities who were summoned to assembly for witnessing an oath in this [matter]! O mountains, rivers, springs, and underground watercourses! I, Muršili, your priest and servant, have now pled my case before you. O gods, my lords, [listen] for me to my concern about which I present you my justification.

(A obv. 8-15) O gods, [my] lords, a plague broke out in Ḫatti, and Ḫatti has been beaten down by the plague.^a It [has been] very much [oppressed]. This is the twentieth year. Because Ḫatti is (still) experiencing many deaths, the affair of Tudḫaliya the Younger, son of Tudḫaliya, began to haunt [me]. I inquired of a god through an oracle, [and] the affair of Tudḫaliya the Younger was ascertained by the god (as a source of our suffering). Because Tudḫaliya the Younger was lord of Ḫatti, the princes, the noblemen, the commanders of the thousands, the officers, [the subalterns(?)], and all [the infantry] and chariotry of Ḫattuša swore an oath to him. My father also swore an oath to him.

(A obv. 16-22) [But when my father (Šuppiluliuma I)] mistreated Tudḫaliya, all [the princes, the noblemen], the commanders of the thousands, and the officers of Ḫattuša [went over] to my [father].

a 2 Sam 24

Although they had sworn an oath (to him), [they seized] Tudḫaliya, and they killed [Tudḫaliya]. Furthermore, they killed those of his brothers [who stood by] him. [...] they sent to Alašiya (Cyprus). [Whatever] was their [...] they [...] in regard to him. [Thus the ...] and the lords transgressed the oath.

(A obv. 23-40) [But] you, [O gods], my [lords], safeguarded my father. [...] And because Ḫattuša [had been burned down(?)] by the enemy, and the enemy had taken [borderlands] of Ḫatti, [my father repeatedly attacked the enemy lands] and repeatedly defeated them. He took back the borderlands of Ḫatti which [the enemy had taken]. He [settled] them anew (with Hittites). Furthermore, [he conquered] additional foreign lands [during] his reign. He sustained Ḫatti and [secured] its frontiers on every side. All of Ḫatti prospered in his time. [Humans], cows, and sheep became numerous in his time. The civilian captives who [were carried off] from the land of the enemy survived; none died. But later you came, O gods, [my lords], and have now taken vengeance on my father for this affair of Tudḫaliya the Younger. My father [died] because of the blood of Tudḫaliya. And the princes, the noblemen, the commanders of the thousands, and the officers who went over [to my father] also died because of [this] affair. This same affair also affected the (entire) land of Ḫatti, and [Ḫatti] began to perish because of [this] affair. And Ḫatti [wasted(?)] away. Now the plague [has become] yet [worse]. Ḫatti has been [very much] oppressed by the plague and has become diminished. I, Muršili, [your servant], cannot [master] the turmoil [of my heart]. I cannot [master] the anguish of my body.

[The end of the obverse and the beginning of the reverse are too fragmentary for translation.]

(A rev. 8'-12') [... Because] my father [killed] this Tudḫaliya, my father therefore later [performed] a ritual of (expiation of) bloodshed. But Ḫattuša did not [perform] anything. I came along, and I performed [a ritual of bloodshed], but the population did [not] perform anything. [No one] did anything [on behalf of] the land.

(A rev. 13'-20') Now because Ḫatti has been very much beaten down by the plague, and Ḫatti continues to experience many deaths, the affair of Tudḫaliya has begun to trouble the land. It was ascertained for me (through an oracle) by [a god], and I made (further) oracular inquiries [about it]. They will perform before you, [the gods], my lords, the ritual of (transgressing of) the oath which was ascertained for you, [the gods], my lords, and for your temples in regard to the plague. They will purify [... before you]. And I will make restitution to you, the gods, my lords, with reparation and propitiatory gift on behalf of the land.

(A rev. 21'-40') Because you, the gods, my lords, have taken vengeance for the blood of Tudḫaliya, those who killed Tudḫaliya have made restitution for the blood. This bloodshed has again ruined Ḫatti. Ḫatti has already made (sufficient) restitution for it. Because I have now come along, I and my household will make restitution for it through reparation and propitiatory gift. Let the souls of the gods, my lords, again be appeased. May you, the gods, my lords, be well-disposed toward me once more. Let me appear [before you]. May you listen to what I say to you. I have [not] done anything evil. (Of) those who sinned and did do evil, not one is still here today. They all died off previously. But because the affair implicating my father has devolved upon me, on behalf of the land I am now giving to you, the gods, my [lords], a propitiatory gift on account of the plague. I am making restitution. I am making restitution to you with propitiatory gift and reparation. May you, the gods, my lords, [be] well-disposed toward me once more. Let me appear before you. Because Ḫatti has been oppressed by the plague, [and] has been diminished, [they prepared] the offering bread and libation for you, the gods, my lords. He (the murderer?) is very much beaten down by the plague, and it (Ḫatti?) was [...] from the plague. Meanwhile, the aforementioned plague does not simply take it (Ḫatti) away, but people continue to die. These few bakers of offering bread and libation bearers who [are still here] — if they perish, no one will any longer give you offering bread or libation.

(A rev. 41'-51') May you, [the gods, my lords], be [well-disposed toward me once more] because of the offering bread and libation which [they prepare]. Let me appear before you. Send the plague [out of Ḫatti]. Let (no one) beat down any further these few bakers of offering bread [and libation bearers] who [are still here] for you. Let them not [continue to die in great numbers]. They shall prepare [offering bread] and libation for you. [Come], O gods, my lords. Send the plague [away]. Whatever evils [...] to the enemy land, [or which] occurred in the midst of Ḫatti concerning [Tudḫaliya], send them [... away], O gods. Send them to the enemy land. May you be well-disposed toward Ḫatti. Let [the plague] abate once more. [Because] I am appearing before you as your priest and your servant, may you be well-disposed [toward me]. Send away the turmoil from my heart. Take away the anguish from my body.

(A Colophon): [One tablet], complete. When Muršili [pled] his case.

Second Prayer

(C i 1-18) O Storm-god of Ḫatti, my lord, [and gods], my [lords, King] Muršili, your servant, has sent me (saying): Go speak to the Storm-god of Ḫatti, my lord, and to the gods, my lords, as follows: What is this that you have done? You have allowed a plague into Ḫatti, so that Ḫatti has been beaten down severely by the plague. In the time of my father (Šuppiluliuma I) and of my brother (Arnuwanda II) people were dying, and since I have become priest of the gods, people are continuing to die in my time. This is the twentieth year that people have been dying in Ḫatti. By no means has the plague been removed from Ḫatti. I cannot master the turmoil of my heart. I can no longer master the anguish of my body.

(C i 19-28; A obv. 2'-5') Furthermore, when I performed festivals, I paced back and forth (in worship) for all the gods. I did not privilege any single temple. I have pled my case concerning the plague to all the gods, and I have repeatedly offered [votive gifts to you (saying)]: "Listen [to me, O gods], my [lords, and send the plague out of Ḫatti. Ḫattuša simply cannot ...] master [the plague. Let the matter on account of which] people have been dying [in Ḫatti either be established through oracle], or [let me see] it [in a dream, or let a prophet (lit., 'man of god')] speak [of it]." But the gods [did not listen] to me, [and] the plague did not abate [in] Ḫatti. [Ḫatti has been beaten down severely].

(A obv. 6'-12') The [few] bakers of offering bread

[and libation bearers] of the gods who [still] remained died off. [The affair of ...] continued to trouble [me. I sought (the cause of) the anger] of the gods, [and I found] two old tablets. One tablet [dealt with the ritual of the Euphrates River...] Earlier kings [performed] the ritual of the Euphrates [...], but since the time of my father (Šuppiluliuma I) [people have been dying] in Hatti, [and] we have never performed [the ritual] of the Euphrates.

(A obv. 13'-24') The second tablet dealt with (the town of) Kuruštama — how the Storm-god of Hatti took the men of Kuruštama to Egyptian territory, and how the Storm-god of Hatti made a treaty concerning them with the Hittites. Furthermore, they were put under oath by the Storm-god of Hatti. And although the Hittites and the Egyptians had been put under oath by the Storm-god of Hatti, the Hittites came to repudiate (the agreement), and suddenly the Hittites transgressed the oath. My father sent infantry and chariotry, and they attacked the border region of Egyptian territory in the land of Amka. He sent (them) again, and they attacked again. When the Egyptians became frightened, they came and actually asked my father for his son for kingship. When my father gave them his son, and when they took him off, they killed him. My father became hostile, went to Egyptian territory, and attacked Egyptian territory. He killed the infantry and chariotry of Egypt.

(A obv. 25'-34') And at that time the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, gave my father the upper hand in the lawsuit (manifest in the armed conflict), so that he defeated the infantry and chariotry of Egypt. He killed them. When the prisoners of war who had been captured were brought back to Hatti, the plague broke out among the prisoners of war, and they [began] to die in great numbers. When the prisoners of war were carried off to Hatti, the prisoners of war introduced the plague into Hatti, and from that time people have been dying in Hatti. When I found the tablet mentioned earlier dealing with Egypt, I made an oracular inquiry of a god about it: "Has this matter discussed earlier been brought about by the Storm-god of Hatti because the Egyptians and the Hittites had been put under oath by the Storm-god of Hatti?"

(A obv. 35'-46'; C iii 3'-7') It was ascertained (through an oracle) that the cause of the anger of the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, was the fact that (although) the damnaššara-deities (guarantors of the oath?) were in the temple of the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, the Hittites on their own suddenly transgressed the word (of the oath). Due to the plague I also made an oracular inquiry about the ritual of [the Euphrates], and at that point it was ascertained that I should appear before the Storm-

b Gen 4:7;
6:5; 8:21;
1 Kgs 8:46;
Ecc 7:20

c Deut 5:9;
Jer 31:29;
Ezek 18:2;
17:24

god of Hatti, my lord. I have (therefore) now confessed (my) [sin before the Storm-god]: It is true. We have done [it. But the sin] did [not] take place in my time. [Rather, it took place] in the time of my father. [...] I am certainly aware. [...] The Storm-god [of Hatti, my lord], is angry about [...] If people have been dying in Hatti, I am [now] pleading my [case] concerning this [to] the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord. I kneel down to you and [cry out]: "Have mercy!" Listen to me, O Storm-god, my lord. Let the plague be removed from Hatti.

(C iii 8'-19'; B iii 16'-20'; A rev. 8'-9') I will dispose of the matter which I thoroughly researched (through oracular inquiry) [and] of the affairs which were ascertained concerning the plague. I will make full restitution for them [...] In regard to the matter of [the oath] which was ascertained concerning the plague, I have offered the ritual [of] the oath for the Storm-god of Hatti, [my lord. For the gods, my lords], I have offered [it]. They have [...] a ritual] for you, the Storm-god of Hatti, [my lord], and [they have ...] a ritual for you, [the gods, my lords]. Because [the ritual of the Euphrates] was ascertained for me [concerning the plague], and because I am now on my way [to] the Euphrates, O Storm-god [of Hatti], my lord, and gods, my lords, leave me alone concerning the ritual of the Euphrates. I shall perform the ritual of [the Euphrates], and I shall perform it fully. In regard to such matter as I will do it, namely the plague — may the gods, my lords, be well-disposed toward me. Let the plague abate in Hatti.

(A rev. 10'-19') O Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, and gods, my lords — so it happens: People always sin.^b My father sinned and transgressed the word of the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord. But I did not sin in any way. But so it happens: The sin of the father devolves upon his son.^c The sin of my father has devolved upon me, and I have now confessed it to the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, and to the gods, my lords: It is true. We have done it. Because I have confessed the sin of my father, let the souls of the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, and of the gods, my lords, again be appeased. May you be well-disposed toward me once more. Send the plague away from Hatti again. Let those few bakers of offering bread and libation bearers who remain not die.

(A rev. 20'-36') I am now pleading my case concerning the plague to the Storm-god, my lord. Listen to me, O Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, and save me! [I say] to you [as follows]: The bird takes refuge in the nest, and the nest [saves] it. Or if anything has become troublesome to some servant, and he pleads his case to his lord, his lord will listen to him and correct for him whatever had become troublesome [to him]. Or if a sin (hangs over) some servant, and he confesses the sin before his lord, then his lord may treat him however he wishes. But since he confesses his sin before his lord, the soul of his lord is appeased, and his [lord] does not call that servant to account. I have confessed the sin of my father: It is true. I did it. [If] there is any reparation (due), then there has indeed already been much because of this [plague introduced by] the prisoners of war whom they brought from the territory of Egypt and the civilian captives whom [they brought]. What is [this]? Hattuša has made restitution through the plague. It [has made restitution] twenty-fold.^d So it happens. And the souls of the Storm-god of Hatti, my lord, [and of] the gods, my lords, are simply not appeased. Or if you wish to impose upon me some special restitution, tell me about it in a dream so that I can give it to you.

(A rev. 37'-40') I repeatedly plead my case [to you], Storm-god of Hatti, my lord. Save me! [If] perhaps people have (indeed) been dying because of this matter, let those bakers of offering bread and libation bearers who remain not continue to die while I am correcting it.

(A rev. 41'-44'; C iv 14'-22') [Or] if people have been dying because of some other matter, let me either see it in a dream, or [let] it [be discovered] by means of an oracle, or let a prophet speak of it.^e Or the priests will sleep long and purely (in an incubation oracle) in regard to that which I convey to all of them. [...] Save me, O Storm-god of Hatti, my lord! Let the gods, my lords, reveal to me their providence. Let someone then see it in a dream. Let the matter on account of which people have been dying be discovered... Save me, O Storm-god of Hatti, my lord! Let the plague be removed from Hatti.

(C Colophon): One tablet, complete. [When] Muršili [...] because of the plague [...] pled his case].

Third Prayer

(obv. 1-6) O Sun-goddess of (the town of) Arinna, my lady, and gods, my lords, what [have you done]? You have allowed a plague into Hatti, so that Hatti has been beaten down severely [by the plague]. In the time of my father (Šuppiluliuma I) and of my brother (Arnuwanda II), [people were dying]. Now I have become priest of the gods, [and] people are continuing to die [in my time]. This is the twentieth year [that] people have been dying [in great numbers in Hatti]. Hatti [has been very much oppressed] by the plague.

(obv. 7-13) Hatti has been very much beaten down by the plague. [If someone] produces a child, the [...] of plague [will ...] to him. He may attain adulthood, but he will not [grow old...] will remain for someone. He [will experience the plague(?)]. To [his] previous condition [he will] not [return]. If he should become old [...], he will not be warm.

^d Isa 40:2

^e 1 Sam 28:6

[The bottom of the obverse and the upper portion of the reverse have been lost.]

(rev. 2'-14') Now I, Muršili, [have pled my case. Listen] to me, O gods, my lords. [Send(?) away] the turmoil from my heart. [Let] the plague [be removed] from Hatti. Send [it] to the enemy lands. In Hatti [...] If you, the gods, my lords, [do not send] the plague [away] from Hatti, the bakers of offering bread and the libation bearers [will die]. And if they die off, [the offering bread] and the libation will be cut off for the gods, [my lords]. Then you will come to me, O gods, [my lords], and hold this (to be) a sin [on my part] (saying): "Why [don't you give] us offering bread and libation?" May you now be well-disposed to Hatti once more, O gods, my lords. Send the plague away again. [Let the plague abate] in Hatti. Let it (Hatti) thrive and grow. Let it [return] to its previous condition.

Fourth Prayer

(A i 1-16) O gods, my lords: Exalted Storm-god, the two lords of Landa, Iyarri, the deities of Hattuša, the deities of Arinna, the deities of Zippalanda, the deities of Tuwanuwa, the deities of Hupišna, the deities of Turmitta, the deities of Ankuwa, the deities of Šamuha, the deities of Šarišša, the deities of Hurma, the deities of Hanhana, the deities of Karaḥna, the deities of Illaya, Kamrušepa of Taniwanda, the deities of Zarruiša, the Storm-god of Liḫzina, the Tutelary Deity of the Army Camp of the father of My Majesty which is in Maraššantiya, Uliliyašši of Parmanna, the deities of Kattila, the Storm-god of Hašuna, the deities of Muwanu(?), the deities of Zazziša, the Telipinus whose temples(?) in the land have been destroyed, the deities of Šalpa, and the Storm-god of [Arziya(?)].

(A i 17-20) O gods, my lords, I, Muršili, your priest, have now bowed down to you. Lend an ear and listen for me to the matter on account of which I have bowed down to you.

(A i 21-35) O gods, my lords, since earliest times you have been concerned with [humans], and you have [not] abandoned humankind. [You have] (rather) very much [safeguarded] humankind. Your divine servants [were] numerous, and they(!) set out for the gods, my lords, offering bread and libation. But now you have turned on humankind, so that it happened that in the time of [my] grandfather (Tudḫaliya III) Hatti was oppressed. [It was devastated] by the enemy. Then humankind [was diminished] by the plague; your [divine] servants [were reduced in number]. And of you, [the gods], my lords, [one had no] temple, and [the temple] of another [fell into ruin]. Whoever [served] before a god perished. [No] one performed for you the rites [which ...]

(A i 36-46) [But] when my [father] took his seat in kingship, [you], the gods, my lords, stood with him. He resettled once more the [depopulated] lands. [And for you], the gods, my lords, in whatever temple there were no [furnishings], or whatever divine image had been destroyed — my father made up that which he was able to do. He did not make up that which he was not able to do. O gods, [my] lords, you were never troublesome to my father, and you were never troublesome to me, but now you have troubled me.

(A i 47-55) When it happened that my father [went] to Egypt — since the time of (the campaign against) Egypt, the plague has persisted in [Ḫatti]. And from that [time] (the population of) Ḫatti has been dying. [My] father repeatedly made oracular inquiries, but he did not discover (the mind of) you, the gods, <my> lords, through the oracles. And I have repeatedly made oracular inquiries of you, but I have not discovered (the mind of) you, the gods, my lords, through the oracles.

[For the following section the scribe of the primary manuscript indicates that the tablet from which he was copying had been destroyed.]

(B ii 3'-11') Because the gods, my lords, not [...] Because your eyes [...] I am already aware in regard to you [...] I will make] up [everything(?) for you]. I will restore the [furnishings] for whatever [god] has [a temple] but no divine [furnishings]. I will rebuild a temple for whatever god [has no temple]. I will restore whatever divine image has been destroyed, [as] the image [had been] previously [...]

[A long break intervenes.]

(A iv 1-5) [...] Should I have restored it for [the gods], my lords, either with (the resources of) the land, or with the infantry and chariotry? If I should reestablish the gods — since my household, land, infantry, and chariotry continue to die, by what means should I reestablish you, O gods?

[Here the earlier tablet had once more been damaged.]

(A iv 16-28) And since they(!) died, by what means should I reestablish [you]? O gods, be well-disposed to me once more because of this [fact]. Bring me peace. Send the plague away from the land once more. Let it abate in the towns where people are dying. Let the plague not return to the towns in which it has (already) abated. [I have said] to myself(?) thus: "[If] the previously-mentioned matter concerning the god is true, my father [could not discover it (the mind of the gods)] through an oracle, nor could I discover it [through an oracle]. But Ḫatti [has made an oracular inquiry], and [has now discovered] it through an oracle." I have pled my case. [...]

[The final few lines are too fragmentary for translation.]

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 378; First Prayer: A. KUB 14.14 + KUB 19.1 + KUB 19.2 + KBo 3.47 + 1858/u + Bo 4229 + Bo 9433. B. KUB 23.3. Second Prayer: A. KUB 14.8. B. KUB 14.11 + 650/u. C. KUB 14.10 + KUB 26.86. Third Prayer: KUB 14.12. Fourth Prayer: A. KUB 14.13 + KUB 23.124. B. KBo 22.71. Bibliography: ANET 394-396 (Second Prayer only); TUAT 2/6:808-810 (First Prayer only); Malamat 1955; Bernabé 1987:279-284; Hoffner 1971b; Goetze 1930; Lebrun 1980:191-239.

3. RITUALS

THE "RITUAL BETWEEN THE PIECES" (1.61)

Billie Jean Collins

This ritual is written on a Sammeltable, which, judging by the use of double paragraph dividers, contains at least ten separate compositions. The final composition is a lustration ritual to be performed in the event of military defeat. It has been dated to the Middle Hittite period. The tablet itself, however, was copied in the Empire period.

If the troops are defeated by the enemy, then they prepare the "behind the river" ritual as follows: Behind the river they sever a human,¹ a billy-goat, a puppy^a (and) a piglet. On one side they set halves

^a Isa 66:3-4a
^b Gen 15:7-18

and on the other side they set the (other) halves.^b In front (of these) they make a gate of hawthorn and stretch a cord(?) up over (it). Then, before the gate, on one side they burn a fire and on the other side they burn a fire. ² The troops go through, ^c but when they come alongside the river, they sprinkle water over them(selves). They perform the ritual	c Jer 34:18-20	again in the steppe. They celebrate the ritual of the steppe in the same way. ³

¹ Possibly a prisoner of war.

--	----------------	--

² A fire is not always required in such rituals.

³ For other examples of the "ritual between the pieces" see Collins (1990).

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 426; KUB 17.28 iv 45-56. Editions: Collins 1990; Kümmel 1967:150-152; Masson 1950. Discussion: Eitrem 1947; Moyer 1983.

PULIŠA'S RITUAL AGAINST PLAGUE (1.62)

Billie Jean Collins

Puliša's Ritual ^a was recorded on a Sammeltafel. It is one of a handful of Hittite scapegoat rituals, all of which were performed to counteract plague. This particular ritual uses human beings as the scapegoats, both belonging to the enemy population and therefore expendable. They act as substitutes for the king, with whom responsibility for divine disfavor and the welfare of the population ultimately lay. Both a male and a female substitute were required to allow for a deity of either sex. The rituals with the man and the woman are followed immediately by identical rites involving a bull and a ewe.

§1 [T]hus says Puliša [... when the king] strikes an enemy [la]nd and marches [away from the border of the enemy land, if then ...] either some [male] deity [or female deity of the enemy land is angered(?) and (as a result) among] the people a plague occur[s, I do the following:]	a Lev 16	§3 He speak[s t]o the woman also in the same way in case of a fema[le dei]ty.
§2 As he [is marching a]way from the border of the land of the enemy, they take one prisoner and one woman of the (enemy's) land. [On which(ever) road] the ki[ng] came from the land of the enemy, the king tr[avels] on that road. All of the lords travel with him. One prisoner and one woman they bring before him. He removes the garments from his body. They put them on the man. But on the woman [they p]ut the garments of a woman. To the man the king says as follows (if it is [not] convenient for the king, then he sen[ds] another and that one takes care of the ritual) that one [sa]ys [to] the man as follows: "If some male god of the enemy land has caused this plague, for him I have just given an adorned man as a substitute. This o[ne] is gr[ea]t with respect to his head, this one is great with respect to his heart, and this [one] is gr[ea]t with respect to his limb. You male god, be pacified with t[his ad]orned man. Turn [agai]n in friendship to the king, the [lords], the ar[my, and] to the land of Ḫatti. [...] but [let] this prisoner be[ar] the plague and transport (it) ba[ck] into the land of the enemy.]"		§4 Afterward, [they drive up] one bull and one e[we and ...] of the la[nd] of the enemy. Th[ey ...] him, his ears, an earrin[g ...]. Red wool, yellow-green wool, bla[ck] wool, [white wool ...] he dra[ws] forth from the king's mouth. [He says as follows:] "Because the king kept becoming blood[-red, yellow-green, b]lack [and white ..., let t]hat [...] back to the land of the en[emy] and [for] the person of [the king], the lords, the inf[antry], the [cha]riotry [...] do not] take notice, (but) take notice of it for the land of the enemy." ... The ašušant- bull [they bring before him(?) and] he [s]ays as follows: "The god [of]the enem[y] who [caused this plague], if he is a male god, to you I have gi[ven] an [ado]rned, ašušant-, and powerful(?) [bull]. You, O male god, be pacified. Let [th]is bull carry [this plague] back into the land of the enemy. [Turn again in friendship to the king, to the prin]ces, the lords, the army and to the la[nd of Ḫatti]."
		§5 Afterwards, he speaks to the ado[rned] ewe [also in the same way] in case of a female deity.
		§6 Then th[ey] send the ašušant- bull [and the ewe] to run in front [of the prisoner] and the woman.
		§7 Then afterwards [...].

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 407; Duplicates: A. KBo 15.1 i 1 - ii 4, B. KBo 21.9 (= A i 34-39); Edition: Kümmel 1967:111-125; Translation: Wright 1987:45-47. Discussions: Gurney 1977:47-58; Moyer 1983:35; Janowski and Wilhelm 1993.

UḪḪAMUWA'S RITUAL AGAINST PLAGUE (1.63) ^a

Billie Jean Collins

§1 Thus says UḪḪamūwa, man of Arzawa. If in the land there is continual dying and if some god of the enemy has caused it, then I do as follows:	a Lev 16
§2 They bring in one wether and they combine blue wool, red wool, yellow-green wool, black wool and white wool and they make it into a wreath and they wreath the one wether and they drive the wether forth on the road to the enemy and they say to him (the god) as follows: "What god of the enemy has made this plague, now this wreathed wether we have brought for your pacification, O god! Just as a fortress is strong and (yet) is at peace with this wether, may you, the god who has made this plague, be at peace in the same way with the land of Hatti. Turn again in friendship to the land of Hatti." Then they drive the wreath-		ed sheep into the enemy territory. §3 Afterward they bring fodder for the god's horses and sheep fat, and they recite as follows, "You have harnessed your horses. Let them eat this fodder and let them be satiated. Let your chariot be anointed with this sheep fat. Turn toward your land, O Storm God. Turn in friendship toward the land of Hatti." §4 Afterward they bring one billy goat and two sheep. He consecrates the goat to the Heptad, and one sheep he consecrates to the Sun God, but the other sheep they kill and (then) they cook it. Then they bring one cheese, one rennet, one pulla -vessel, a sour-bread, one hūppar -vessel of wine, one hūppar -vessel of beer, and fruit. They prepare these for the god of the journey.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 410; Duplicates: A. HT 1 ii 17-47 (NS), B. KUB 9.31 ii 43-iii 13 (NH), C. KUB 41.17 ii 18-24. Translations: Friedrich 1925:10; ANET 347; Wright 1987:55-57. Discussions: Gurney 1977:47-58; Janowski and Wilhelm 1993:135 and passim.

ZARPIYA'S RITUAL (1.64)

Billie Jean Collins

The Ritual of Zarpiya ^a is the second of three scapegoat rituals contained on a single Sammeltafel. The author of the text is from Kizzuwatna and as a result the text is laden with Luwian words and incantations, often rendering translation difficult. The first half of the ritual involves an oath-taking on the part of the participants; the second half is a scapegoat ritual of sorts. The human scapegoats in this case are nine young boys. The theme of the number nine is repeated throughout the ritual. The gods at whom the ritual is directed are Šantaš and the Innarawanteš, a group of deities perhaps totalling nine.

§1 [Thus says Zarpiya, physician of Kizzuwatna, (regarding) [when the year] is ruinous (and) in the land there is continual dying. [Then] in which(ever) city (there is) ruin as a result, [the master of (each)] house will do as follows:	a Lev 16
§2 I hang up the kelu - [of the cli]ent. Its huppali - is bronze. Its [kariu]/li-[cloth] is of a shaggy lion-skin. But its footstool is of basalt, and its (the footstool's) hazziul is a paw(?) of lapis, the strong paw(?) of a bear, [...] but he h[angs the ...] of a wild goat.		while on the other side he hangs one (piece) on a peg (made of) cornel wood. §4 First and foremost, in front on that side he hits the apricot(?) wood peg into the gate. He hangs a cooked kuggulaš of barley flour, a kuggulaš of hariyanti -barley flour, and one jug of wine. On this side, however, he hits [the peg] of cornel wood i[n]to the gate], and from it (the peg) he hangs a cooked kuggulaš of barley flour, a kuggulaš of hariyanti -barley flour, and one jug of wine.
§3 And the ali -s are of black wool and red wool (and) the yellow wool of the town of Ḫarnu-wašila. Before the sinew of a dog is ...ed, he [...] three [...]. On one side he hangs one (piece) on a peg (made of) apricot(?) wood, ¹		§5 With the pegs, a white bush is stuck in/planted. Downwards from the ground [...] downwards at the front. On either side he buries wašši -, whose name is huwallari . Furthermore, the gate behind the door of the courtyard on which he hangs the kelu -s — down in - front of the kelu-s he places a wicker table and on top of it he sets an ax² of bronze, one warm bread, thick bread (and) cheese. Thereon (he sets) a bronze ax, a bronze dagger, a strung bow, [and] one arrow.

¹ For the identification of GišSĒNNUR see Postgate 1987:131.

- §6 Down in front on the wicker table he places one huppar-vessel of wine from the puri-stand, and from the puri-stand he places one pitcher of PIHU drinking beer. Into the pitcher of PIHU drinking beer he inserts one straw.
- §7 They bring in one billy-goat and the master of the estate libates it with wine before the table for Šantaš. Then he holds out the bronze ax and says as follows: "Come Šantaš! Let the Innarawanteš-deities come with you, (they) who are wearing bloodied (clothes), who have bound on (themselves) the sashes(?) of the mountain dwellers,
- §8 who are girt(?) with daggers, who hold strung bows and arrows. "Come and eat! We will swear (an oath)." When he is finished speaking, he places the bronze ax³ down on the table and they slit (the throat of) the billy-goat.
- §9 He takes the blood and the straw that was left in the mug — he anoints that with the blood. Then they bring the raw liver and the heart and the master of the estate holds them out for the gods. Further he takes a bite (and) they imitate (him).⁴ He puts (his) lips on the straw and sips and says as follows:
- §10 "O Šantaš and Innarawanteš-deities, we have just taken the oath.
- §11 We have bitten from the raw liver; from a single straw we have drunk. O Šantaš and Innarawanteš-deities, do not approach my gate again." They cook the liver and heart on a fire and they butcher the entire goat "plain."
- §12 Then, when the fat arrives, they bring out the liver and heart and the flesh — everything — to the god. With it they bring two times nine thick loaves (made) from wheat flour of one-half handful (of flour). He breaks nine loaves. Over these they place the liver and heart and he sets them back on the table and says as follows: "Eat, O Sun God of Heaven above and below. Let the gods of the father of the house eat! Let the thousand gods eat.
- §13 And for this oath be witnesses." Next he libates the wine nine times before the table of the Innarawanteš-deities. He takes the shoulder and the breast (of the sacrifice) and breaks nine loaves of bread.
- §14 He scatters them on the potstand and pours wine opposite. Then they bring (in) nine(!)⁵ boys who have not yet gone to a woman. On one boy they put a goatskin and that one walks in front and calls (out) in the manner of a wolf. They surround the tables and devour the shoulder and breast.
- §15 But [when they] wish to eat [...], he brings (them) in the same way and they devour the li[ver and heart]. They also drink. [He brings] the pitcher [of PIHU drinking beer] and they drink the pitcher of PIHU beer.
- §16 The master of the house <holds> a staff/branch from a šuruhha-tree, steps into the gate and in Luwian conjures as follows:
- §§17-18 {Luwian incantation}
- §19 He breaks a thick bread, while reciting as follows in Luwian:
- §§20-21 {Luwian incantation}
- §22 They take up the ritual implements and he closes the door. He anoints it with fine oil, and says:
- §23 "Let (the door) shut out evil and let it keep in good."
- §24 One tablet. Finished. The word of Zarpiya, physician from Kizzuwatna. If a year is ruinous and the land is dying, then the kelu-rituals he offers in this way.

²Hittite ateš- is unambiguously translated "ax" although how big this weapon was and what type of ax are matters of speculation. See Beal 1986.

³Presumably the bronze dagger in §5 was used for slitting the animal's throat, which prompts the question: what is the purpose of the ax here? I would suggest, based on Greek parallels, that the ax was used to stun the animal prior to killing it. This must have occurred in §7 during the recitation, which is when he is said to be holding the ax. The text fails to mention the act itself, we must assume, because it was taken for granted, as were so many other details of Hittite sacrifice.

⁴Hitt. himma- "model, replica, imitation (of an object or animal)." The sense here seems to be that other participants in the ritual imitate the master of the house in biting from the liver and heart, since in §11 the text says that "we (plural) have bitten." Differently HED H 314.

⁵The text says eight.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 757. Duplicates: A = KUB 9.31 i - ii 42 (MH/NS); B = HT 1 i - ii 16 (MH/NS); C = KUB 35.9; D = KUB 35.10; E = Bo 4809 (Otten and Rüster 1978:276, no. 68); F. KBo 34.243 (Rüster 1992:477f.). Edition: Schwartz 1938; Parital Translation: Starke 1985b:46-55. Discussion: Collins 1989:55f.

RITUAL AND PRAYER TO ISHTAR OF NINEVEH (1.65)

Billie Jean Collins

The beginning of this text, containing a ritual for the goddess, is broken. In §4, where the text becomes legible, the officiant is reciting an invocation.

- §3 [...] they cover [her?] with a cloth [...] all the singers play [the ...-instruments] and sin[g]. [...] outside on seven paths [...] they go to [...] and [...]. The diviner [sets(?)] down a table. ... red, what are la[id] for soldier breads [...] he takes, and the singers pull [...] of the path (or: for the paths?).
- §4 [...] He says as follows "... O Ištar [...] I will keep [...]ing and for you ... [If you are in Nineveh] then come from Nineveh. (But) if you are [in] R[imuš], then come from Rimuš. If you are in Dunta, then come from Du[nta].
- §5 (O Ištar,) [if you are] in [Mittanni], then come from Mittanni. [If you are in ..., then come from] If you are in Dunippa then [come from] Duni[ppa]. If you are in Ugarit then com[e] from Ugarit. [If you are in ... then come from ...]. Come from Dunanapa. [Come from Come from Come] from Alal-haz. [Come from Come from] A[murra.] Come from Zīduna. [Come from] Come from Nu[hāšša]. Come from Kulzila. [Come from] Come from Zunzurha. Come from Aššur. [Come from] Come from Kašga. Come from every land. [Come from] Alašiya. Come from Ālziya. Come from Papanha. [Come from] Come from Ammaha. Come from Hayaša. [Come from] Come from Karkiya. [Come] from the lands of Arzauwa. [Come from] Come from the land of Maša. [Come] from Kuntara. [Come from] Come from Ura. Come from Luḥma. [Come from ...]. Come from Partahuina. Com[e] from Kašula. [Come from]
- §6 If (you are) in the rivers and streams [then come from there.] If for the cowherd and shepherds [you ...] and (you are) among them, then come away. If (you are) among [the ...], if you are with the Sun Goddess of the Earth and the Primor[dial Gods] then come from those.
- §7 Come away from these countries. For the king, the queen (and) the princes bring life, health, streng[th], longevity, contentment(?), obedience (and) vigor, (and) to the land of Ḥatti growth of crops (lit., grain), vines, cattle, sheep (and) humans, šalḫitti-, mannitti- and annari-.
- §8 Take away from the (enemy) men manhood,
- a Deut 18:9-12; 22:5
- b 1 Sam 28:8-15; Isa 8:19; 29:4
- courage, vigor and māl, maces, bows, arrows (and) dagger(s), and bring them into Ḥatti. For those (i.e., the enemy) place in the hand the distaff and spindle of a woman and dress them like women. Put the scarf¹ on them and take away from them your favor.^{2 a}
- §9 But from the women take away motherliness, love (and) mūšni- and bring it into the Ḥatti-land. Afterwards care for the king, the queen, the sons of the king (and) the grandsons of the king in wellbeing, life, health, vigor, (and) long years forever. Sustain it and make it rich. Let the land of Ḥatti, (which is) for you (both) bride and offspring, be a pure land.
- §10 I have handed over to you the land of Ḥatti (which) again (has been) damaged. O Ištar of Nineveh, Lady, do you not know how the land of Ḥatti is damaged by this deadly plague?
- §11 The diviner breaks one thin loaf for Ištar of Nineveh and crumbles it into the spring. Afterward he again breaks one thin loaf for Ištar of Nineveh and sets it down on the table. He sprinkles oatmeal before the table. Next he sprinkles meal into the spring.
- §12 Further, before the table on the oatmeal he sprinkles sweet oil cake (and) meal. He libates wine three times into the spring and libates three times before the table.
- §13 The diviner says these words, and when they attract (lit., pull) her with the thick loaf, they fill a KUKUB-vessel with water besides. Then in that place they open up ritual pits,^b and the diviner pulls the deity up from there seven times with "ear" loaves. He says, "If the king, queen, or princes — anyone — has done something and has buried it, I am now pulling it from the earth." He recites the same words again, and they do the same in that place also.
- §14 He cuts into one thin loaf and sets it on a pine cone. He pours fine oil on it and the diviner having taken the "ear" bread pulls the deity from the fire fourteen times and says as follows: "I have pulled it from the fire."
- §15 He recites the same words again. He sets down the "ear" bread at the soldier loaves and buries one large bird for Ištar of Nineveh and ḫūwalzi-s. But they burn two birds for unalzi.
- §16 When he is finished, the diviner takes up the table and in front of the red headband that lies

¹ A garment associated with women.² For Deut 18:9-12, see Hallo BP Sel. 53; for Deut 22:5, see Hoffner 1966:331.

on the table he holds another, and they bring (it) in to the goddess. The singers play the INANNA-instrument and the cymbals(?) and sing. They bring the god back into the temple.

[The remaining §§ are too fragmentary for translation.]

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 716. Duplicates: A = KUB 15.35 + KBo 2.9(MH/NS); B = KBo 2.36; C = KBo 21.48 (MH/NS). Discussions: Archi 1977; Bossert 1946:34f.; Ehret 1937:68; Hoffner 1966:331; 1967:391f.; Sommer 1921.

THE FIRST SOLDIERS' OATH (1.66)

Billie Jean Collins

The following is the second tablet¹ of a two-tablet text of a military oath, known as the first soldiers' oath. The language of the composition indicates that it was composed in the Middle Hittite period (late 15th century BCE), although the copies that survive were inscribed in the Empire period. The text is especially interesting for its parallels in the literature of other cultures, including Indian, Mesopotamian, Greek and Israelite.

- | | |
|---|---|
| §1 [...] he places [cedar in] their [hands]. [...] they [...] it]. He [spread]s [out]² a net [...] and he says to them, ["this [...] is it not [...] in(?)] his house? Do the gods [not [...] them? Just as cedar [...] its fragrance [...].³ §2 [...⁴ these oajth d[eities [...].⁵ §3 [The diviner(?)⁶ ...]s and says, ["Because] [this person wajs living and used to find heaven above, now they have blinded him in the place of the oath. [...] Who transgre[sses] these oaths and takes deceptive action against the king of Hatti, and sets (his) eyes upon the land of Hatti as an enemy, may these oath deities seize him and [may they] blind his army too, and further, may they deafen them. May comrade not see comrade. May this one not hear [that one]. May they give them a horrible d[eath]. May they fetter their feet with a wrapping below, and bind their hands above. Just as the oath deities bound the troops of the land of Arzawa by their hands and feet and set them in a heap, in the same way may they bind his troops too, and set them in a heap. §4 He places yeast in their hands and they lick it. | a Ps 68:2 Then he says as follows⁷: "What is this? Is it not yeast? Just as they take a little of this yeast and mix it into the kneading bowl and (as) they let the bowl sit for one day, and it (i.e., the dough) rises, who transgresses these oaths and takes deceptive action against the king of Hatti and sets his eyes upon Hatti as an enemy, may these oath deities seize him. May he be completely broken up by diseases. May he carry off (i.e., suffer) a horrible death." They say, "(So) be it."⁸ §5 He places wax and sheep fat in their hands and he casts (some) on the flame and says, "Just as this wax melts ^a and just as the sheep fat is rendered,⁹ who breaks the oath and takes deceptive action against the king of Hatti, may he melt like the wax and may he be rendered like the sheep fat." They say, "(So) be it." §6 He places sinew (and) salt in their hands and he casts (some of) them into the flame. He says as follows: "Just as this sinew melts(?)¹⁰ on the hearth, just as salt disintegrates on the hearth, so may he who transgresses these oaths and takes deceptive action against the |
|---|---|

¹ The first tablet of the First Soldiers' Oath survives in a fragmentary state only, making a coherent translation impossible. Duplicates to tablet one: A = KBo 21.10; B = KUB 40.13; C = KUB 48.75; D = KBo 27.12.

² This restoration has been proposed by H. A. Hoffner, Jr., personal communication. On the meaning of ekt- see Hoffner 1977.

³ Three lines broken.

⁴ Four lines broken.

⁵ One line broken.

⁶ The identity of the person administering the oath is not preserved. As suggested here, he may have been a diviner (^{1b}HAL), one of a select number of professions qualified to carry out rituals of this kind.

⁷ Text has KL.MIN "ditto."

⁸ Oettinger 1976:73.

⁹ English "render" refers to the extraction of the fat from the solid in the process of cooking, as for example, when bacon is fried. Cf. CHD L-N 180f.

¹⁰ A hapax legomenon. Oettinger 1976:9 translates: "verschmoren" ("smeared").

- king of Hatti and sets (his) eyes upon the land of Hatti as an enemy, may these oaths (var. oath deities) seize him and like the sinew may he melt(?) and like the salt may he disintegrate. Also, just as the salt does not (produce) its seed, for that man, may his name, his progeny, his household, his cattle, and his sheep perish in the same way."
- §7 He places malt and beer seasoning in their hands and they lick it. He says to them as follows: "Just as they mill this beer seasoning with a millstone and mix it with water and cook it and mash it, who transgresses these oaths and takes part in evil against the king, the queen or against the princes or against the land of Hatti, may these oath deities seize him and in the same way may they mill his bones and in the same way may they heat him up and in the same way may they mash him. May he carry off a horrible death." They say, "(So) be it."
- §8 "Just as this malt has no propagation, (and) they do not carry it to the field and make it (into) seed, and they do not make it (into) bread and store it in the storehouse, for him who transgresses these oaths and takes part in evil against the king, queen or against the princes, may the oath deities destroy his future in the same way, and may his wives not bear him a son or a daughter. In the plain, the field and the meadow may the vegetation not grow. May his cattle and sheep not bear calf or lamb."
- §9¹¹ They bring a woman's garment, a distaff and a spindle and they break an arrow (lit., reed). You say to them as follows: "What are these? Are they not the dresses of a woman? We are holding them for the oath-taking. He who transgresses these oaths and takes part in evil against the king, queen and princes may these oath deities make (that) man (into) a woman. May they make his troops women. Let them dress them as women.^b Let them put a scarf on them. Let them break the bows, arrows, and weapons in their hands and let them place
- b Deut 18:9-12; 22:5
- c Num 5:16-28
- the distaff and spindle in their hands (instead)."
- §10 They lead before them a woman, a blind man and a deaf man and you say to them as follows: "Here (are) a woman, a blind man and a deaf man. Who takes part in evil against the king and queen, may the oath deities seize him and make (that) man (into) a woman. May they b[li]nd him like the blind man. May they d[ea]f[en] him like the deaf man. And may they utt[erly] destroy him, a mortal, together with his wives, his sons, and his clan."
- §11^c ¹² He places [in] their hands a fig[urine of a man]¹³ with its [in]sides full of water, and says as follows: "Who is this? Has he no[t] taken an oath? He took [an oath] before the gods, then he [tra]nsgressed the oath, and the oath deities seized him. His insides filled (with water). With his hands he holds his stomach lifted up in front. May these oath deities seize whoever transgresses these oaths. May his insides fill (with water). Within his insides may the child(ren?) of Išhara¹⁴ (i.e., disease) [dwell(?)] and may they devour him."¹⁵
- §12 He holds out [a ...] and he [thro]ws it face (lit., eyes) down and they trample it with their foot. He says to them as follows: "Who breaks these oaths let it happen that the [troop]s of Hatti trample his city with (their) foot in the same way, and that they render the settlements deserted."
- §13 They inflate a [bl]adder¹⁶ and [tra]mple it with their foot, so that the air is [ex]pelled. He says, "As this has been emptied, let the house of who(ever) transgresses these oaths be emptied of people, his cattle and his sheep in the same way."
- §14 You set an oven down before them and you set down before (them) models of a plow, a wagon and a chariot. They break them up. And he says as follows: "Who transgresses these oaths, for him may the Storm God break up (his) plow. Just as vegetation does not come up from an oven, may wheat and barley not come up in his field. Let cress (var. weeds)

¹¹ See Hoffner 1966 on the meaning of the magic used in this paragraph.

¹² The figurine has dropsy. Oettinger 1976:72 has suggested that dropsy as a punishment for oath-breaking and the practice of "Schwur beim Wasser" was a legacy of proto-Indo-European religion. See his discussion on pp. 71-73.

¹³ Restoration suggested by H. A. Hoffner, Jr., personal communication. Such a figurine has been recovered; see Börker-Klähn 1992.

¹⁴ Išhara was a Netherworld goddess whose particular sphere was medicine and disease. See the discussion by Burde 1974:12-16. The "child" or "children(?)" of Išhara could therefore be disease(s), an idea that seems to suit this context. Alternatively, Oettinger 1976:41 attributes her presence here to her role as "Königin des Eides," further suggesting that Išhara together with the Moon God (who appears by name only in the second soldiers' oath, see below) are the oath deities referred to in this text.

¹⁵ Oettinger 1976:40f. offers an alternative possibility, restoring: an-dur-za-ma-[aš-ši]-kán I-NA ŠA-ŠU DUMU <-an> 'Iš-ḫa-a-ra <-aš> ['šN ap-pa-an-d]u na-an ka-ri-pa-an-du "drinnen aber in seinem Innern sollen [ihm] den Sohn Išhara (und) [der Mondgott ergreifen] und ihn fressen!" solving the problem of the plural verb by adding an additional subject. There is room for his restoration, but the fact that the Moon God does not appear elsewhere in this text (although he does appear in the second soldiers' oath, see below) renders his restoration uncertain.

¹⁶ [nu UZU]ulan is another possible restoration. ula- is a body part, but which one is not known. walula- may not be "bladder." Cf. CHD P panduḫa- "bladder(?)."

go up (instead)." §15 You give to them a red pelt and he says, "Just as they make this red pelt blood colored and from it the bl[oo]d color does not leach out, in the same way may the oath deities seize you and may it (i.e., the blood color) not leave you." §16 He sprinkles water on the fire and says to them as follows: "As this burning fire was extinguished, who[ever] breaks these oaths,		let these oath deities seize him, and also may his life, his youth, (and) his prosperity in future — together with his wives and his sons — be extinguished in the same way. May the oath deities curse him cruelly. May the meadow not thrive for his herd, his flock (and) his livestock. And from his field and furrow may vegetation not come for him." §17 Second Tablet. When they bring the troops for the oath.
--	--	---

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 427. Duplicates: A = KBo 6.34 + KUB 48.76; B = KUB 40.16 + KUB 7.59 (+) 342/u (+) 524/u (+) 1087/z + 797/v; C = KUB 40.13. Editions: Friedrich 1924; Oettinger 1976. Translations: ANET 353f.; Cornil 1994:102-108. Discussions: Börker-Klähn 1992; Burde 1974; Hoffner 1966; 1977.

THE SECOND SOLDIERS' OATH (1.67)

Billie Jean Collins

This text is of New Hittite date and shows many developments from the older example translated above. Among other things, there are marked Hurrian influences.¹

§1' [... If you transgress these oaths ...] may they [...], may they [...], may they [...]. §2' But [if you keep them], for you (pl.). [...] he says: [...] §3' [He] h[olds] out torches [to them, and says,] "[...] these torches [...], if [you transgress] these [words,] may Umpa² and Šarruma³ [destroy you along with your ...]." §4' "And as [the fire(?) ...] burns [the torches ...] again [he ...]s, (so) he who [transgresses] these wor[ds ...] entirely(?) from the dark [netherworld ...] again to the dark netherworld [may he not(?) ...]. §5' "[But if] you [keep them (i.e. the words), may it be] wel[l] with you." §6' [Afterwards] they extinguish [the torches], [and he says] to them [as follows: "...just as] the torches [...] and no one [...] him/it, [... in the same way who transgresses these words may] no one [... him ...]." §7' "[Just as you have] extinguish[ed the torches, ...], may he [who transgresses] these wo[rds b]e extinguished [in the same way along with] his [progeny,] his house, his wife [...⁴] and to you (pl.) [...]." §8' [He places bowls in their hands and] they break [them] up [...] at the same time [say- ing] as follows: "[These are not bowls], they		are your heads. [If] you do [not] keep [them (i.e., the words)] may the gods break [up your heads in the same way], and [may they ...] you in the [same way.] §9' "Bu[t if] you keep them may [the gods] break up [a horrible death] for [yo]u in the same way." §10' [Aft]erwards they pour out water [and simul- taneously] he sa[ys as follows]: "Just as the earth [swallows down] this water and after- ward no trace of it is visible, may the earth swallow [you] down in the same way, and, like the water, may no [trace] of you be visible afterward." §11' [Aft]erwards he pours out wine, and simul- taneously [he says as follows:] "[This] is not w[in]e, it is your blood. [Just as] the earth swallowed (this) dow[n], may the earth swal- low down your [blood] and [...] in the same way." §12' [After]wards he pours water into the wine and [simultaneously] says as [follo]ws: "Just as this water [is mixed] with the wine, may these oath deities mix sick[ness] within your bodies in the same way." §13' (Concerning) t[his wh]ich is from the head, may the Moon God continually strike you.⁵ May [...] flee from [your] insides and for you
--	--	---

¹ See Oettinger 1976:52f., 58, 94.

² This divine name, usually spelled Umbu, belongs firmly in the Hurrian pantheon. Umbu is a Moon God.

³ Storm God and son of Tešub and Hebat, forming the third member of the Hurrian triad adopted by the Hittites in the period of the Empire.

⁴ Two lines broken.

⁵ I.e., give an astronomical omen portending evil? Cf. "[Whe]n the Moongod gives an omen, and in the portent he strikes [a per]son", then I do as follows" KUB 17.28 i 1-2 (Incantation of the Moon, MH/NS).

[may] the inside [be ...], and may the Moon God make ..., and for you (pl.) ...[...], and may he [not] go to see the lands.		sickness become heavy [in your insides].
§14' [Afterwards] they hold a rock with their hands underneath (it) and [simultaneously] they say [as fol]lows: "As this rock is h[eavy], [in the same way] may the oath and		§15' [If] you keep these oaths, [just as] they are [everla]sting for you, in the same way [may you be] everlasti[ng]." §16' If (it is) a patili -priest ⁶ then [...] him in [but if (it is) a ... then ... be]fore the gate [...].

⁶ For the functions of the ^U*patili*-, see Beckman 1983:235-238.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 427; KUB 43.38. Edition: Oettinger 1976.

4. INCANTATIONS

PURIFYING A HOUSE: A RITUAL FOR THE INFERNAL DEITIES (1.68)

Billie Jean Collins

This text offers a tantalizing glimpse into Hurro-Hittite mythology. The underworld deities, referred to as the Primordial or Ancient Gods, are solicited on behalf of a house possessed of various types of uncleanness, to come up from below the earth and carry the uncleanness back down into the underworld with them.

The ritual is completed over two days, the location alternating between the house and various outdoor locales, including, at the end of the ritual, the steppe, where the ritual paraphernalia can be disposed of safely. The main recensions of this narrative were composed in the Middle Hittite period. The copies date to the Empire Period.

§1 When [they] cleanse a house of blood, impuri[ty], threat, (and) perjury, its treatment (is) as follows:		the house. May this now release the evil, impurity, perjury, bloodshed, curse, threat, tears (and) sin of the house. May the floor (lit., earth), the floorboard, the bedroom, the hearth, the four corners, (and) the gates of the courtyard release (them).
§2 In the morning the exorcist opens the house [and] he goes [in]. He holds a hoe, a spade and a shovel(?). He digs the ground (with) the hoe, (and) he [clears(?)] ¹ the (resulting) pit ² with the spade.		§7 He goes forth to the courtyard. He takes mud in the courtyard and speaks in the same way. He takes mud in the gatehouse and speaks in the same way.
§3 He digs in this same way at the four corners (of the house) and he digs in this very same way [to the side of(?) the hea]rth. The (resulting) pit [he clears(?)] ¹ with the shovel(?).		§8 He goes out. He cuts a reed off with an ax before the gate and says as follows: "Just as I cut this reed and it does not (re)attach (itself), now in the same way let it cut the evil bloodshed of the house, and let it not come back."
§4 He says as follows: "O Sun Goddess of the Earth, we are taking this m[atter ...]. Why is this house gasping? Why does it look upward to heaven?"		§9 [Then] at the top (lit., back) of the rain pipe they pour a hanešša -vessel of wine [and he says], "As water flows down [from the roof] and it does not go [back (up)] the rain pipe [again], may the evil, impurity, perjury, blood, tears, sin, curse, and threat of this house pour out and may they not come back again."
§5 Either a human has perjured (himself), or he has [shed] blood and has turned [up] his šeknu -garment to these houses, ³ or someone has made a threat, or someone has spoken a curse, or someone having shed blood or having committed perjury has entered,
§6 or someone has practiced (witchcraft(?)) ⁴ and [has] en[tered], or bloodshed has occurred in

¹ Restoration of liššaiuzzi "to clear" suggested to me by H. A. Hoffner, Jr. and H. G. Güterbock, personal communication.

² The Hittite uses pateššar and haneššar interchangeably in this text as a hole over which sacrifices are made. In contrast, an āpi is opened up in §31 as a hole through which to contact the Underworld Deities directly.

³ The interpretation of this line follows CHD P sub pippa-, contra Otten 1961.

⁴ So interpreted by Otten 1961:116f.

- §10 He throws the ḫanešša-vessel down from the roof and smashes it. But the mud that he had taken,⁵ that⁶ he carries to (the place) where all the ritual paraphernalia⁷ has been placed.
- §11 He goes to the river bank and takes oil, beer, wine, walḫi-drink, marnuan-drink, a cupful (of) each in turn, sweet oil cake, meal, (and) porridge. He holds a lamb and he slaughters it down into a pit. He speaks as follows:
- §12 "I, a human being, have now come! As Ḫannahanna takes children⁸ from the river bank and I, a human being, have come to summon the Primordial Deities of the river bank⁹, let the Sun Goddess of the Earth open the Gate and let the Primordial Deities and the Sun God(dess) of the Earth (var. the Lord of the Earth) up from the Underworld (lit., earth).
- §13 Aduntarri the diviner, Zulki the dream interpreter, Irpitiga Lord of the Earth, Narā, Namšarā, Minki, Amunki, *Ābi*¹⁰ — let them up! I, a human, have not come independently, nor have I come in quarrel. In a house, blood, tears, perjury, quarrel, (and) sin have occurred. Heaven above has been angered, and the Underworld below has been angered.
- §14 The exorcist of the Storm God¹¹ sent¹² you, the Primordial Deities, from the underworld. He said this word to you:
- §15 "[In this house] evil impurity, [blood, tears], quarrel, sin, (and) perjury [have occurred]. The exorcist¹³ [has] summon[ed you,] the [Primord]ial Deities. [...] go back and go [...]. Cleanse [the house from] the evil, impurity, blood, [perjury, sin], quarrel, curses, tears, (and) [threat].
- §16 "Bind [their (i.e., each evil's)] [fee]t (and) hands and carry them down to the Dark Underworld." He takes the clay of the river bank, but in its place he sets sweet oil cake, meal (and) porridge. He libates beer, wine, [walḫi]-drink, (and) [marnuan]-drink. He takes [up] (what has) bubbled and binds it in.
- §17 He stretches out a scarf along the ground [...]

- and] walks along the scarf [...] and he goes in.
- §18 He sprinkles the clay of the river bank with oil and honey. (With it) he fashions [the]se gods: Aduntarri the exorcist, Zulki the dream interpreter, Irpitiga, Narā, Namšara, Minki, Amunki, Ābi. He fashions them as (i.e., in the form of) daggers.¹⁴ Then he spreads them along the ground and settles these gods there (-šan).
- §19 He takes four jugs of wine, a thick loaf, meal, porridge, (and) gangati-vegetable soup and goes to the water and says as follows: "(Concerning) the matter for which I have come, let the spring, the water, ask me. With me the Lady (Ištar) has come from the vegetation.
- §20 In her [le]ft ear they set earrings (in the form) of a šuraššura-(bird). It is important. But she does not [re]move¹⁵ (her) cloak. She holds an empty vessel in her hand. [...] On her head was placed a wreath(?) of string.
- §21 She spoke to the spring, and she spoke to the swamp, she spoke to the deity [of(?)] the piten[...] water, "The water for which I have come, give that water to me — the water of purification that cleanses bloodshed and perjury, that cleanses the gatehouse, that cleanses com[mon gossip, cur]se, sin, (and) threat."
- §22 [The spring(?)] answered Ištar: "Draw the water seven times or draw the water eight times. Pour out [the water seven or eight times].¹⁶ But on the ninth time what water you request, draw that [wa]ter and ta[ke] it."
- §23 Her h[air fl]owed down from the throne to Kumarbi. Her hair flowed to [the under]world, to the Sun Goddess of the Earth. While you are carrying [tha]t water, the falcon then brings other water from the sea. He holds the water in the right hand, while in the left hand he holds the words.
- §24 Ištar is able to fly. She flew from Nineveh to ⁵ In §7.

⁶ The common accusative form apūn can only refer back to purut "mud" despite the fact that purut is a neuter noun. Cf. another case of gender disagreement in the following note and cf. CHD P purut.

⁷ aniyaz ḫuman "all the ritual paraphernalia," is a case of gender disagreement between a common noun and its attributive, here in the neuter.

⁸ KUB 41.8 i 20 has i-tar, 729/t i 3 has DUMU-tar. As the goddess of birth, Ḫannahanna fashions people from clay and gives fertility to women. See also Otten 1961:144.

⁹ KUB 41.8 i 21 wappuš, KBo 10.45 i 37 [wappu]waš, 729/t i 4 wappuw[aš].

¹⁰ Ābi is a divinization of the ritual pit and thus an underworld deity.

¹¹ Not the exorcist/diviner who is officiating in this ritual, but a mythological agent of the Storm God in an allusion to a mythological theomachy.

¹² Var. has "drove" in the sense of "transported" or "ferried".

¹³ The titles ¹⁰AZU and ¹⁰HAL are used interchangeably for the officiant of this text. Note also that the god Aduntarri is called the ¹⁰HAL in §13 but the ¹⁰AZU in §18.

¹⁴ Cf. the dagger god at Yazilikaya; see Akurgal n.d. plates 80-83.

¹⁵ Restoration follows CHD L-N 366 (mng. 1 g).

¹⁶ The main copy for this paragraph is KBo 10.45, restored from IBoT 2.128. The latter copy clearly contained more than was present in KBo 10.45. Cf. CHD L-N 4 which offers a translation based on a faulty transliteration.

- meet the falcon. In her right hand she took water, while in her left hand she took the words. The water she sprinkles to the right, while the words she speaks toward the left:
- §25 "May good enter the house. May it seek out the evil with (its) eyes and cast it out. May the pure water cleanse the evil tongue, impurity, bloodshed, sin, curse (var. adds: threat, [and] common gossip). Just as the wind blows away the chaff and carries it across to (var. into) the sea, let it likewise blow away the bloodshed and impurity of this house, and let it carry it across to (var. into) the sea.
- §26 "Let it go into the sacred mountains. Let it go into the deep wells." He breaks a thick loaf and libates wine. He draws water seven times and pours (it) out. [On the eighth] time what he draws, that [he] k[ee]ps. Further,] two times seven stones he takes from the spring and he throws [them] in[to the ...]. In-to a cup he throws two times seven kappi-measures. He takes red wool and binds it to <...>.
- §27 He brings the water into the house and carries that also there where all the implements are placed, and puts it on the pūriya-stands. All the paraphernalia he places before the Anunnaki-deities.¹⁷ He mingles(?) silver, gold, iron, tin, stone, oil, honey, baked clay implements, wicker implements, the mud of the house, (and) the mud of the gatehouse.
- §28 He fashions it (-an) (into a figurine of) the Deity of Blood and seats it (-an) before the taršanzipa.¹⁸ He takes all the seeds and grinds them (-at) with the millstone.
- §29¹⁹ He pounds (them) with the basalt(?) of the millstone and wipes them off and they fashion it (-an) (into) a kugulla-vessel. What is left over they fashion it (-at) (into) a kurtal-container and he fills it (-at) with mud. He sets it with/below the God of Blood and seats the gods thereon. He places the kugulla-vessel before the deity.
- §30 He washes his hands. He takes porridge and gangati-vegetable soup. The water that he had brought from the spring he libates into the water. Afterward he libates one lamb with
- a 1 Sam 28:8-15; Isa 8:19; 29:4
- the water and they slit it(s) throat). The blood flows into a clay basin and he sets it down before the God of Blood and recites as follows: ališ mammaš, O Anunnaki-deities, I have invoked you in this matter. (So) decide the case of this house. What evil blood is present, you take it and give it to the God of Blood. Let him carry it down to the Dark Underworld, and there let him nail it down.
- §31 Before the Anunnaki-deities he opens up a Pit²⁰ with a knife and into the Pit he libates oil, honey, wine, walhi-drink, and marnu-wan-drink. He also throws in one shekel of silver. Then he takes a hand towel and covers over the Pit.²¹ He recites as follows: "O Pit, take the throne of purification and examine the paraphernalia of purification.
- §32 "Examine the silver, gold, iron, tin, lapis lazuli, and carnelian with (your) scales.²¹ What the God of Blood has said, the exorcist has set it all up. But since the exorcist set up the implements of the gods, ... the exorcist ... [...] broke, and he cast it into the hearth.
- §33 "But if you (O Anunnaki) do not decide the case of this house fairly may the earth below you become the 'striker' and may the sky above become the 'crusher',²² and may the sky(?) crush [you(?)] therein.²³ May no one break a thick loaf for you and may you not taste the fragrance of cedar!"
- §34 He takes three birds and offers two of them to the Anunnaki deities, but the other bird he offers to the Pit and he says as follows: "For you, O Primordial Deities, cattle and sheep will not be forthcoming. When the Stormgod drove you down to the Dark Underworld he established for you this offering."²⁴
- §35 He cooks the birds with fire (and) places them before the deity. He also places PIHU-beer before the deity for drinking and provides four straws. He places assorted seeds before the deity: barley, wheat, šepit-grain, p[arh]uena-grain, chick peas, broad beans, lentils, karaš-grain, malt, beer-bread, coriander, apr[ico]t(?), white cumin, black cumin, tiapala-seed, salt, lakkarwan-plant, šeniya(?)-plant, a little (of) [ea]ch, and all these [he ...].

¹⁷ The Primordial Deities are sometimes referred to by the Akk. name for the group of deities with which they were identified.

¹⁸ A part of a building.

¹⁹ KBo 10.45 iii 3 (B) has no § divider here.

²⁰ Written with the divine determinative.

²¹ The new duplicate KBo 39.12:7, kindly provided to me by H. Otten, offers a heretofore unknown syllabic reading of ^{MS}ER/N ZI.BA.NA, the beginning of which is, unfortunately, broken: -]iš-wa-it.

²² CHD L-N 451 tr. mortar(?) and pestle(?).

²³ Following CHD P 59.

²⁴ Reference is made to a time when the Storm God exiled the Ancient Gods from the earth, and established that in their cult, as Underworld Deities, they would receive birds as their sacrifice rather than cattle or sheep. Cf. §14 which refers to the same mythological events.

- §36 The priest²⁵ [ta]kes [...]. For the PIHU-beer for drinking [...] he makes the offering rounds [for the god]s. Day one is finished.
- §37 [In the morning(?)] the exorcist [tak]es one sheep, one container of PIHU-beer, one thick loaf, wine, [...] and goes into the house. [...] he prepares. [...] he inscribes(?). The earth [...] he says as follows:
- §38 "[Memešarti of Heaven] and [Earth],²⁶ Moon God, Išhara, — gods [of perjury, curse, sin, (and) bloodshed — I have [...]ed [you ...] ... he(?) comes."
- §39 [this § is too fragmentary for translation]
- §40 "Push yourselves back! O Dark Underworld, restrain their inclination and swallow down the bloodshed, sin, impurity, perjury, evil step(?) (lit., "foot") and common gossip of the house (and) city."
- §41 He²⁷ cooks the liver and cuts it (in half). He also breaks thick loaves and lays them upon the hole and upon the hearth. He also libates wine and pours PIHU-beer for drinking and he provides straws. But no one drinks!
- §42 He says, "Memešarti of Heaven and Earth, Moon God, Išhara — gods of perjury, curse, and death — who(ever) is hungry, who(ever) is thirsty (among) the gods, come, eat and drink, and join with me. From the house and city may you cleanse the evil impurity, bloodshed, perjury, sin, and curse. He bound them, (each evil's) feet and hands, so let the Dark Underworld keep them in!"
- §43 Those who are in the house, the guardians of the hearth, sit down and they eat the fat but they do not drink the PIHU-beer. The exorcist comes back into the city and goes into the house and bows to the gods. He offers porridge, gangai-vegetable soup, beer, and wine to the gods.
- §44 And he says as follows: "O Anunnaki-deities, I have just been on the steppe. ... [...] restrain! O Memešarti of He[av]len and Earth! For you (gods) PIHU-beer (has been) poured out for drinking. Let them bind them (var. him) (with(?)) a haputri to the evil impurity, perjury, sin, bloodshed (and) curse. Let it pull those forward, and may you push them from behind.
- §45 The exorcist stands a ram and a ewe before the gods and says as follows: "The ram mounts the ewe and it becomes pregnant. Let this town and house become a ram, and in the steppe let it mount the dark earth and let the dark earth become pregnant with the blood, pollution, and sin. Just as the pregnant woman and ewe give birth, let this city and house bear evil blood in the same way, and let the Dark Underworld keep it in.
- §46 "As the downpour washes urine and mud from the city, (as) the water washes the roof, and flows down the rain gutters, let this ritual likewise clean away the evil tongue of this city (and) house and let the downpour carry it into the sea."
- §47 When he is finished, the exorcist sets the ritual paraphernalia on the copper vessel. He sets the gods thereon and picks it up and carries it to the steppe. He settles the deities where (the spot) is marked, and their ritual paraphernalia he sets before (them). He libates wine. He offers one lamb and eight birds to the Anunnaki-deities. On three hearths he burns (them) together with flat breads, cedar, oil and honey and he libates wine and says as follows:
- §48 "O Anunnaki-deities, your tribute has just been set up. Accept these offerings to you. Chase out the bloodshed, impurity, sin, perjury, (and) threat of the house and carry them down (with you to the Dark Underworld).
- §49 "You, O Primordial deities, who [...] come and [turn(?)] down from that [...]."
- §50 Tablet One finished. [When they cleanse a house of] bloo[dshed, impurity, sin, perjury (and) threat, this is its treatment.]

²⁵ Even after collation, I cannot dismiss the completely the possibility that the sign is an AZU, and thus that the exorcist who is the main officiant of this text is the person referred to here. Cf. n. 27 below.

²⁶ The syntax does not follow Hittite rules of grammar, and one expects the translation "Memešarti, Moon God of Heaven and Earth, Išhara ...," but see §44 where Memešarti appears alone with the epithet "of Heaven and Earth."

²⁷ Who is the officiant here? The activities of §§40-43 are taking place in the house, as the beginning §43 tells us. Although the exorcist was in the house in §37, he is said to return to the house again in §43 and so presumably had gone back out to the countryside somewhere in the fragmentary sections of §§38-39. This means that he cannot be officiating at the ritual meal described in §§41-43. If indeed another officiant is present, could it be the priest who is mentioned in §36?

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 446; Duplicates: A = KUB 7.41 (MH/NS), B = KBo 10.45 (MH/NS), C = KUB 41.8 + 251/w (MH/NS), D = KUB 12.56 (MH), E = IBoT 2.128 (MH/NS), F = KBo 7.57, G = 218/v, H = 427/t, I = III2/u, J = 208/u, K = 1621/u, L = 729/t, M = KBo 39.12. Edition: Otten 1961:114-157. Discussion: Hoffner 1967:391; Moyer 1983:21-24.

THE STORM GOD AT LIHZINA (1.69)¹

Billie Jean Collins

This is a mythological text belonging to the group of Anatolian myths known as the missing deity myths. The original composition dates to the period of the Hittite Old Kingdom. The supreme Storm God is the deity whose absence is the focus of this particular narrative. Presumably the Storm God absented himself in the first column of the tablet, after which chaos ensued for man and livestock. When the text picks up in col. ii, a ritual incantation is underway that successfully contains the evils resulting from his absence in copper cauldrons lying beneath the sea, where they can no longer cause harm. Mankind is thus restored. What follows then is a resumption of the mythological portion of the narrative relating the Storm God's interlude in the town of Lihzina, where he spent his time cultivating crops and fruit trees. He makes a triumphal return from Lihzina, meeting nine divinities on the way, who inquire of his whereabouts. His supremacy is proclaimed and sacrificial animals are assembled for a celebration. Col. iv may have contained details of this celebration.

§2² The palms [gave] it [to] the fingers, the fingers [gave] it to the nails, the nails gave it to the dark e[arth]. §3³ The dark earth [carried] it to the Sun God, and the Sun God carrie[d] it to the sea. §4⁴ "In the sea are lying cauldrons of copper.³ Their lids (are) of lead. ^a [Everything(?) he put therein: he put a demon (tarpin),⁴ ^b he put par[...], he put bloodshed, he p[ut] ha-panzi, §5⁵ he put "red,"⁵ he put tears, he put [...], he put ...,⁶ [he put] fog, he put "white,"⁷ he p[ut] disease. §6⁸ It became luminous on the human's [entire(?) body: On <his> head ditto (i.e., it became luminous), on the eyes ditto, on the walulaša-s ditto, on the white[s] of the eyes ditto, on his forehead ditto, [on] the eye-bro[ws] ditto, and on the eyelashes [ditto]. As (he was) formerly, just so did he become [again(?)].	a Zech 5:5-11 b Gen 31:34-35; Judg 17:5 1 Sam 19:16; Ezek 21:21; Hos 3:4; Zech 10:2	§7⁹ The Storm God went and keeps striking t[hem(?) and he kills him [...]. [In] Zihz[i-na] he worked [the land(?) and he harvested it.⁹ §8¹⁰ He planted an orchard¹⁰ and [opened(?)¹¹ it]. He [came] back from Lihzina. §9¹² The Storm God [met] nine lesser gods¹² on the road, and they bowed to him (saying), "O Storm God, [we were searching(?) for you. Where were you?" (He replies,) "In Lihzina [I worked the land(?) and I harvested it. I planted an or[chard] and [I] ope[ned(?) it." §10¹³ (They reply,) "Leave (it). In the fallow land¹³ the [...] of things/words is/are weak. W[e] are small, we are [...], we are in the land ...[...]." The Storm God their father [...] them/it and [he] conquered the lands §11¹⁴ Down in the holes [...] them/it and they assembled an ox, [they assembled] sheep, they assembled human beings. §12¹⁵ [...] Zihz[i-na ...]
---	--	---

¹ The name of the town in this text is twice spelled Lihzina and twice Zihzina. An explanation for this alternation of consonants is not easily forthcoming.

² The translation begins with col. ii; col. i is too fragmentary for connected translation.

³ Cf. KUB 17.10 iv 15 (Tel. myth), the standard version of the missing deity myth, in which the cauldron is of bronze rather than copper and is located in the "dark earth." For a comparison of the Anatolian motif of the banishment of evil to a container in the underworld with Zech. 5:7, see Haas 1993:77-83.

⁴ For Hitt. tarpin = Akk. šedu and a discussion of its possible range of meanings see Otten and von Soden 1968:27-32; Hoffner 1968b.

⁵ Hoffner 1968b:65 n. 30 suggests reading the SA₃ sign as DIRI "sorrow, grief." In my opinion, this suggestion causes more problems than it solves. In view of the presence of harki "white" two lines later, it seems simplest to give the Sumerogram its commonest value as SA₃, and to consider the two colors as symbolic of some specific kinds of evil, that is, as code words that would have been understood by the ancient audience.

⁶ The signs are ŠI-PA-AN. Moore 1975:180 suggested a translation "sheaves" noting the form še-e-pa-an "sheaf" in §158 of the Hittite Laws, ed. Friedrich, HG 72f. In 1968 Hoffner suggested reading lūm-pa-an (1968b:65 n. 31). The value lūm for ŠI/PI is not otherwise attested at Boğazköy, which makes his reading unlikely. Moreover, the parallel list transcribed KBo 23.4:5-11, not available in 1968, renders the reading šipān certain. Hoffner now reads ši-pa-an "daemon;" cf. divine names in -z/šipā-.

⁷ For possible alternative readings see Hoffner 1968b:65 n. 32 and cf. n. 5 above.

⁸ For this § cf. CHD L-N 28.

⁹ Cf. KUB 33.34 obv. 8.

¹⁰ For teššar as "orchard" (as opposed to warhuesšar "forest") see Košak 1993:112. The present text strongly supports Košak's supposition. I am grateful to R. Beal for bringing this reference to my attention.

¹¹ That is, he harvested the trees. This word is partially preserved in the following §, hence this restoration, suggested already by Moore 1975:181 with n. 6.

¹² Alternatively, "divine sons of the Storm God" (DUMU.MEŠ DINGIR.MEŠ 'IM-aš). But since no enclitic object is indicated, but rather the reflexive particle -za, the former translation seems more likely.

¹³ KI.KAL-li = Akk. kankallu seems likely here. The Hittite phonetic complement -li requires an underlying Hittite word with a stem ending in -li.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 331; KUB 33.66 (OH/MS). Discussions: Haas 1993:67-85; Hoffner 1968b:61-68; 1973a:197-228; Josephson 1979:177-184; Laroche 1965:70-71; Moore 1975:180-183; Moyer 1983:19-38; Otten and von Soden 1968:27-34.

ESTABLISHING A NEW TEMPLE FOR THE GODDESS OF THE NIGHT (1.70)

Billie Jean Collins

This is a four column tablet composed in the period of the Hittite Empire. It is the first of two tablets.¹ The second tablet is not preserved, although the first tablet has survived in four recensions. The main tablet describes the procedure for establishing a satellite temple for the Goddess of the Night. Her cult was centered in Kizzuwatna in south-eastern Anatolia, and thus many Hurrian offering terms appear in this text. The nature of this deity is ambiguous.²

- | | |
|--|---|
| §1 Thus says the priest of the Deity of the Night (var. [Thus says "NIG.BA-⁴U³"] the Babylonian [scribe(?) and Ulippi, priest of the Deity of the Night).⁴ If a person becomes associated with the Deity of the Night in some temple of the Deity of the Night and if it happens that, apart from that temple of the Deity of the Night, he builds still another temple of the Deity of the Night, and settles the deity separately, while he undertakes the construction in every respect: §2 The smiths make a gold image of the deity. Just as her ritual (is prescribed) for the deity, they treat it (the new image) for celebrating in the same way. Just as (it is) inlaid(?)⁵ (with) gems of silver, gold, lapis, carnelian, Babylon-stone, chalcedon(?), quartz(?), alabaster, sun disks, a neck(lace), and a comet(?) of silver and gold — these they proceed to make in the same way. §3 One sun disk of gold of one shekel (weight), its name is Pirinkir.⁶ One gold navel. One pair of gold purka- — they are set with Babylon stone. The priest assigns these to the smiths as their task. One (vessel) for "carry- | ing forth" (made) of stone inlaid(?)⁷ with silver, gold, lapis, carnelian, Babylon stone, quartz(?), NFR-stone, (and) alabaster. §4 Two broaches of iron inlaid with gold, two pegs of iron, two halwani-vessels of silver, two cups of silver, two ētmari- of silver, two ētmari- of bronze (and) a potstand of bronze are included. Six sun disks of bronze, among them three inlaid with silver and three inlaid with gold. Two knives of bronze, two pairs of bronze GİR.GÁN-vessels, one set of bronze cymbals(?),⁸ one set of tambourines(?) either of boxwood or of ivory, one drum. §5 One bull's horn (full of) fine oil, one set of cups either of boxwood or of ivory. One set of combs either of boxwood or ivory. Two wooden stands, two wooden tables, two wooden potstands. One set of kišhita-chairs, six šekan in height — they are doubly paz-zanān-ed. One set of kišhita-chairs for sitting. One footstool, one set of wooden tarmalla. §6 They take red wool, blue wool, black wool, green wool and white wool and they make two pair of āzzalli-. They again take blue |
|--|---|

¹ A catalog text (KUB 30.64, CTH 282, ed. CTH p. 191) reveals that this ritual was complete on two tablets: "[First tablet not finished. Second tablet [i]n[is]hed. [The word of NIG.BA-⁴U] and of Ulippi, priest of the Goddess of the Night. When] someone settles [the deity] separately, [th]is is the ritual [for it]."

² For the possible identifications of this goddess see Lebrun 1976:30f., where three not necessarily mutually exclusive possibilities are offered. A deity named Išpanza, also spelled Išpanzašepa and GE₂-za-⁴še-pa, may be the phonetic spelling of DINGIR.GE₂. Carruba 1971 and Lebrun 1976 have proposed an identification with the Moon God, Arma. But the Moon God is male, while in our text DINGIR.GE₂ appears to be female (her cult statue wears the kureššar, a woman's headdress or scarf, see §31). Lebrun suggests that DINGIR.GE₂ is to be identified with Ištar/Šauška, an idea that might help to explain the presence of Pirinkir in this ritual as well, since Pirinkir seems herself to be an aspect of Šauška. For all these possibilities see Ünal 1993.

³ Read Qišti-Adad?, or Ari-Tešub?

⁴ Var. D, KBo 16.85 + KBo 15.29 i 1: [UMMA "NIG.BA-⁴U L⁰DUB.SA]R(?) URU KÁ.DINGIR.RA Û "U-li-ip-pi L⁰SANGA DINGIR-LIM. At the time of Kronasser's edition, KBo 16.85 had not been identified as belonging to this tablet. The restoration of the name "NIG.BA-⁴U here and in note 2 above is based on KUB 29.4 i 39 (A).

⁵ appan išgarant- lit., "back stuck" perhaps meaning that the back of the gems are stuck to the image, thus the meaning "inlaid." The alternative, that the back of the image was encrusted with precious stones, doesn't seem logical. I am indebted to Richard Beal for this suggestion.

⁶ Present in the Temple of the Goddess of the Night apparently is a sun disk representing the goddess Pirinkir. An image of the goddess herself is not present (see Kronasser 1963:42). Kronasser attributes her presence here to the presumed similar nature and/or background of the two goddesses.

⁷ See n. 5.

⁸ HAŠKALLATUM is possibly the Akkadographic writing of galgalluri-, see Friedrich, HW 3. Erg. 18; Güterbock 1995:57-72.

wool, red wool, black wool, green wool and white wool and they make a šuturiya.⁹ They nail two bronze pegs into the entryway of the courtyard of the (new) temple — one on one side and one on the other side. The šuturiya (is made to) hang down (from them). One basket(?) either of wicker or of tamalata.¹⁰ One (bolt of?) hūpara-fabric, one red scarf, two bowls(?) of wine.

§7 These NĪG.BA-¹¹U dispatched: One door, one [..., two ...] — one for setting down and one for carr[ying] forth [...] — one set of small bed(s) of boxwood [...], one bronze cutting implement, one bronze-handled pitcher for viewing, one bronze [...] vessel, one small copper cauldron, seven TAKITTUM of bronze, one small bronze wash basin of one mina weight for the washing of the deity.

§8 One gathered garment,¹¹ one trimmed tunic, one hood, one cap, one kaluppa-garment, one set of belted tunics, one set of silver broaches — these are (the garments) of a woman. One garment, one set of tunics, one set of Hurrian tunics, one trimmed (and) ornamented cloth belt, one trimmed tunic, one set of robes, one set of šATURRATU-garments, one set of belted tunics, one bow, one quiver, one axe and one knife — these are (the garments) of a man. When they complete the making (of) the deity('s image), all this they arrange in (its) place. The officiant who is settling the goddess separately, the priest and the katra-priestesses wash on the following day. (Thus) that (first) day passes.

§9 When on the morning of the second day the Sun God has not yet risen, they take these things of his from the house of the officiant: One skein/strand of red wool, one skein/strand of blue wool, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, one shekel of silver, one (bolt of?) gazzarnul fabric, a small amount of fine oil, three flat breads, one pitcher of wine. They go for drawing to the waters of purification and they draw the waters of purification. They carry them to the temple of the Deity of the Night from the temple of the Deity of the Night — (that is from) the temple of the Deity of the Night which is being built to that (old) temple of the Deity of the Night. They set it (the water) on the roof and it spends the night (lit., sleeps) beneath the stars. On the day on which they take the waters of purification, (they attract) the previous deity with

a 1 Sam 28:8-15; Isa 8:19; 29:4

with red wool and fine oil along seven roads and seven paths from the mountain, from the river, from the plain, from heaven and from the earth.

§10 On that day they attract (lit., pull) (the deity). They attract (lit. pull) her into the previous temple and bind the ulīhi to the deity('s image). The servants of the deity take these things: One skein/strand of red wool, one skein/strand of blue wool, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, one white scarf, one gem, one kirinni-stone, one shekel of silver, a little fine oil, five flat breads, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful (of flour), one small cheese, one pitcher of wine — these they take for the ritual of "pulling up." One skein/strand of red wool, one skein/strand of blue wool, one loop of white wool, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful (of flour), five flat breads, a little fine oil — these they take for the ritual of dupšahi.

§11 One white scarf, one skein/strand of blue wool, one skein/strand of red wool, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, one set of blankets four layers thick, two shekels of silver of which one shekel is for the ritual pit and one shekel is for the gangata-, ten flat breads, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful (of flour), one small cheese, a little fine oil, ½ handful of vegetable oil, ½ handful of honey, 1½ handfuls of butter, one wakšur of wine, and either a lamb or a kid — these they take for the ritual of blood. Five flat breads, three mūlati-loaves of ½ handful (of flour), one measure of wine and one sheep they take for the ritual of praise. Twenty flat breads, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful, one measure of wine, ½ handful of vegetable oil, ½ handful of honey, ½ handful of butter, one handful of barley flour, one lamb — these they take for the ambašši- ritual. All this they arrange each in (its) place. The second day is finished.

§12 On the third day, at dawn, the officiant comes into the temple first thing in the morning. The stars are still standing (in the sky). Then they bring the waters of purification down from the roof and the officiant enters into the presence of the deity and bows to the deity. He then proceeds with¹² the ritual of "pulling up." The priest pulls the deity up from the pit seven times.^a The officiant also pulls (the deity) up seven times.

§13 Furthermore, they come forth from the tem-

⁹ HW² I:638f. follows Kronasser 1963:43 in suggesting that both azzalli- and šuturiya are types of weaves ("Gewebe") made of wool, such as gauze or netting.

¹⁰ Hitt. tamalata occurs only in this text.

¹¹ Lit., "one garment pulled up" may refer to a pleated or gathered skirt or dress. Such are known for Hittite women in the iconography.

¹² The verb is niya- "to step up, approach" etc. In this context it seems to denote getting on with the proceedings, hence the present translation.

ple into the storehouse. In the storehouse they perform the dupšāhi- ritual. For the dupšāhi-ritual they take one mūlati-loaf, but the single mūlati-loaf that remains they take later for the dupšāhi- ritual (or) for the ritual of praise. Wherever it is acceptable to the officiant, he goes thither.¹³ But when on the evening of that day a star rises (lit., leaps), the officiant comes into the old temple. He does not bow to the deity. He proceeds with the ritual of blood. They offer the ritual of blood with a bird. Afterward they offer either a kid or a lamb. They ...¹⁴ the officiant, and he stands up.

§14 He then proceeds with the ritual of praise. They make the sacrifice of praise with a sheep. Further, they purify the officiant along with the deity with silver and gangati-vegetable. Afterward, they burn the lamb for the ambašši- (ritual). The officiant bows and goes back home to his house.

§15 During the [night on that day], while the Sun God is still standing (in the sky), the servants of the deity [take these (things): one skein/strand] of red wool, one skein/strand of blue wool, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, [one shekel of silver, one (bolt of?) gazza] rnul fabric, three flat breads, one pitcher of wine, a [little] fine oil. They go to the waters of [purification and the waters of purification] they bring to the old temple. They set it on the roof and it spends the night (lit., sleeps) [beneath the stars. But those things (also they take): one sheep, one moist bread of ½ šātu, five loaves (made of) GÜG of a handful (of flour), three oil cakes of ½ handful, one mūlati-loaf of ½ handful, ten flat breads, three haršpauwant-breads, their flour of ½ handful, gangati-soup, porridge, chick pea soup, broad bean soup, lentil soup, euwan-stew, stew of ARSANNU-meal, each of ½ handful, dried fruits, a small quantity of each, cress, ŠU.KIŠ-herb, a little fine oil, two skeins/strands of red wool, two skeins/strands of blue wool, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, one jug of beer, one pitcher of wine — these they take up to the roof for the wellbeing (of) Pirinkir. One shekel of silver for the pit, two skeins/strands of red wool, two skeins/strands of blue wool, two plain (i.e. undyed) wools, a little fine oil, ½ handful of vegetable oil, ½ handful of butter, ½ handful of honey, one (bolt of?) gazzarnul fabric, one mūlati-loaf of ½ handful, three oil cakes of ½ handful, one loaf (made of) GÜG, one sweet bread of a handful, twenty flat breads, two huthatal-breads of ½ handful, three haršpauwant-breads, their flour of ½ handful,

§16 gangati-vegetable soup, porridge, chick pea soup, broad bean soup, lentil soup, euwan-stew, stew of ARSANNU-meal, each of ½ handful, dried fruits, a small quantity of each, one SÖTU-measure of barley flour, one sheep, one jug of beer, one pitcher of wine, cress, ŠU.GÁN-herb — these they take inside before the deity (for the ritual) of wellbeing.¹⁵ The officiant prepares a gift for the deity, either a neck(lace) of silver, or a "wannup-pastalla-star" of silver. Day three is finished.

§17 But when on the fourth day a star comes out (lit., leaps), the officiant comes into the temple and looks after Pirinkir. For Pirinkir they offer the ritual of wellbeing. But when they celebrate it, then they bring the deity down from the roof and for her they scatter dough balls and fruits and they bring her (i.e. the divine image) into the temple.

§18 Inside, before the deity they offer for wellbeing. The officiant rewards the deity, the priest and the katra-women. The officiant bows and goes out. Day four is finished.

§19 On the fifth day when it is morning, they take five flat breads, one mūlati-loaf of ½ handful, gangati-vegetable soup, cress, ŠU.KIŠ-herb, one pitcher of beer. They offer [to the deity for tuḫalzi]. The officiant [...] does not come again. The [ritual] of the old temple is finished.

§20 The new temples which have been built [...] because they were turned in, and them [...]. They wave [...] and a lamb. Afterward [...] they wave. A new gold [garment] [...] together with her implements they carry into the new temple and set it down on the table from the basket(?) thusly.

§21 When those <perform> the tuḫalzi ritual in the temple of the old deity, they pour fine oil into the tallai-container and he speaks thus to the deity: "You, honored goddess, protect your person/body, divide your divinity, come to these new temples, take an honored place." When she goes and take<s> the aforementioned place, then they pull the deity out from the wall with red wool seven times and he sets the *ulih*i in the tallai-container of fine oil.

§22 The tallai-container is stoppered, and they carry it into the new temple and set it down

¹³ This sentence simply means that the officiant has the afternoon off.

¹⁴ A Luwian verb.

¹⁵ Unless we supply <ANA SISKUR> keldiyaš, the sentence makes no sense grammatically. The ritual of well-being is performed in the following paragraph. The proposed emendation follows the grammatical pattern established in earlier paragraphs.

- apart. They do not put it with the deity.
- §23 If it is acceptable to the officiant, on the day on which they offer tuhalzi in(?) the old temple, on that day they also attract (lit., pull) the new deity into the new temples. If it is not acceptable to him, then they will attract (lit., pull) her on the second day. These (things) they will take for the attracting (lit., pulling): One skein/strand of red wool, one red scarf, a little fine oil, a tallai-container, twenty flat breads, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful, one small cheese, one pitcher of wine. They go out to the river.
- §24 They attract (lit., pull) the deity from Akkad, from Babylon, from Susa, from Elam, from Hursagkalamma to the city which she loves, from the mountain, from the river, from the sea, from the valley, from the meadow, from the uṣarunt-, from the sky, from the earth by means of seven roads and by means of seven paths. The officiant goes behind.
- §25 When they are finished attracting (lit., pulling) the deity, the tents have already been constructed before the river, and they carry the ulīhi- into the tents and set it on the wicker table. They (also) set (down) a little fine oil, a naḥzi-measure of vegetable oil, a naḥzi- of honey, a naḥzi- of fruit, twenty flat breads, three mūlati-loaves of ½ handful, three oil cakes of ½ handful, three small cheeses, one handful of barley flour, three pitchers of wine.
- §26 They offer the ritual of blood with a kid. Afterward, they offer the ritual of praise with a lamb. Afterward the lamb is burned for the ambašši- (ritual). Afterward, with (the help of) a table man, they bring for the deity all the stews, one warm bread of ½ šāṭṭ, one loaf (made of) GÜG, one sweet bread of one handful, one jug of beer, one pitcher of wine and give to the deity to eat. Then they carry the ulīhi- into the house of the officiant with (the accompaniment of) a drum and cymbals(?). They scatter sour bread, crumbled cheese and fruits down for him/her.¹⁶ Then they circle the deity with a ḥūšti-stone. Then they seat the deity in the storehouse.
- §27 For the ambašši- (ritual): One lamb, twenty flat breads, one mūlati-loaf of ½ handful, one oil cake of ½ handful, one handful of barley meal, ½ handful of vegetable oil, ½ handful of ghee, ½ handful of honey, ½ handful of fruit are arranged. They dedicate the lamb to the deity for the ambašši- (ritual). Then they bring in the ulīhi- for the deity and they bind the ulīhi- to the new deity. There is no ritual of blood and no ritual of praise. The officiant leaves.
- §28 Those take one skein/strand of red wool, one skein/strand of blue wool, one shekel of silver, one (bolt off[?]) gazzarnul fabric, one plain (i.e. undyed) wool, a little fine oil, three flat breads, one pitcher of wine and they go to the waters of purification. They carry the waters of purification to the new temple and set them on the roof and they spend the night (lit., sleep) beneath the stars. On that day they do nothing (more).
- §29 Those ones take twenty flat breads, two mūlati-loaves of ½ handful, three oil cakes of ½ handful, three ḥaršpauwant-breads, their flour (is) a tarna- in weight, porridge, gan-gati-vegetable stew, euwan-stew, chick pea soup, broad bean soup, stew of ARSANNU-meal, each of ½ handful of flour, cress, ŠU.GÁN-herb, one jug of beer, one pitcher of wine, one moist bread of ½ šāṭṭ, one loaf (made of) GÜG, one sweet bread (of) one handful, and a little fruit.
- §30 The ulīhi- which had been brought from the temple of the old (deity), they open that tallai-container and they wash the wall of the [tem]ple with this water. They mix that [in] with the old fine oil of the tallai-container and they wash the wall with that. The wall (is) pure. But the officiant does not come (in).
- §31 The old ulīhi- they bind to the red [s]carf of the new deity.
- §32 When at night on the second day (of the ritual)¹⁷ a star comes out (lit., leaps), the officiant comes to the temple and bows to the deity. They take the two daggers that were made along with the (statue of) the new deity and (with them) dig a ritual pit for the deity in front of the table. They offer one sheep to the deity for enumaššiya and slaughter it down in the hole. However, there is no [pulling] from the wall. The table (that) had been built¹⁸ they remove(?). They bloody the golden (image of the) deity, the wall and all the implements of the new [de]ity. Then the [ne]w deity and the temple are pure. But the fat is burned up. No one eats it.
- colophon: Tablet One. The word of the priest of the Deity of the Night. When someone set-

¹⁶ Does the pronoun refer to the goddess or to the officiant in whose house this action takes place?

¹⁷ That is, the second day of the ritual for the new temple, the ritual for the old one having been completed in §19 on day five.

¹⁸ In §5.

bles the Deity of the Night separately, for her/ it this is the ritual. Not finished. Hand of Ziti, son of Mr. "Gardener"¹⁹ written under the supervision of Anuwanza, the eunuch.

¹⁹ The Hittite or Hurrian reading of this Sumerogram is unknown.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 481. Duplicates: A = KUB 29.4 + KBo 24.86; B = KUB 29.5; C = KUB 12.23; D = KBo 16.85 + KBo 15.29 (+) KBo 8.90 (+) KUB 29.6 + KUB 32.68 + KBo 34.79 (edited as 102/f by Otten and Rüter 1981:123, 127f.). Edition: Kronasser 1963. Discussions: Beckman 1983:169; Carruba 1971:355; Haas 1993:74-76; Haas and Wegner 1979; Hoffner 1967; Lebrun 1976:28-31; Ünal 1993.

This page intentionally left blank

B. ROYAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EPIC

THE QUEEN OF KANESH AND THE TALE OF ZALPA (1.71)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

The Queen of Kanesh

The Queen of Kanesh in the course of a single year gave birth to thirty sons. She said: "What a multitude(?)¹ ^a I have begotten!" She filled² (the interstices of) baskets with grease,³ put her sons in them, and set them into the river.⁴ ^b The river carried them down to the sea,⁵ to the land of Zalpuwa.⁶ The gods recovered the children from the sea and raised them.

After several years had passed, the queen gave birth again — (this time) to thirty daughters. These she raised herself. The sons are on their way back to Neša, driving a donkey. When they reached the city of Tamar[marā], they say: "Heat up an inner-chamber here, and the donkey will climb(?)." The men of the city replied: "Where we came,⁷ a donkey [never(?)] climbs(?)." The sons said: "Where we came, a woman gives birth to [one or two] sons (at one time). Yet (our mother) begot us at one time!" The men of the city said: "Once our Queen of Kanesh⁸ gave birth to thirty daughters at one time. (Her) sons had disappeared." The boys said to themselves: "We have found our mother, whom we have been seeking. Come, let us go to Neša (= Kanesh)." When they had gone to Neša, the gods made them look different(?), so that their mother [...] did not recognize them. She gave her daughters in marriage to her sons. The older sons did not recognize their sisters. But the youngest [said]: "Shall we take [th]ese our own sisters in marriage? You must not go near them. [It is cer-

a Gen 25:22-23;
Gen 30:11

b Exod 2

c Judg 11

tainly not] right, that [we should] sl[ee]p with them. [...]⁹

When morning came, [they] wen[t] to the city of Zalpa. [...] thick bread to the Earth Goddess, the daughter of the Sungod [...] The Sungod strewed meal into her mouth [...], and she tasted it. The Sungod said: "[...] May it come about that the city of Zalpuwa prospers [...]."

When later on war broke out, [...] made peace with the grandfather of the king. [...] was the king of Zalpa, and to him in that same way [...] Allu[... was] the chamberlain of the king of Zalpa. He put to death [...] daughter [...], and Tabarna's¹⁰ [...] you put to death. And my daughter to/for [...] The [grand(?)]father of the king [went(?). Towards(?)] Zalpa, in Mt. Kapa[kapa], Alluwa died in that very defeat. [...] defeated [the allies(?) of] Zalpa. They [...] sixty houses [...] the "lord of his word(s)." And he brought them and settled them in Tawiniya. [...]ed.

Hittite King gives prince Hakkarpili to govern Zalpa.

The men of Zalpa heard, and they let him down from the city of [...]pina. [...]ed] them in Hatti peacefully. The [grand]father of the king [...]ed] the city Hurma to the old father of the king. [...] and Hatti. And the elders of Zalpa¹¹ asked for a son from him. He [sent] them his son Hakkarpili.¹² [And] he instructed [him] as follows: "What separately [...] you place, in the same way [...] on ¹ Some translate this word as "monstrosity" or "bad omen." More likely it is related to Latin vulgus "crowd," as indicated by Hoffner 1980. Cp. Gen 25:22-23 ("two nations are in your womb") and Gen 30:11 (KJV "a troop cometh").

² Perhaps caulking or sealing is the idea.

³ The Hittite word can be derived from either the word for "oil, fat, grease" or "dung." If waterproofing is intended, then "grease" is the preferred translation.

⁴ The Marašanta River (= classical Halys, Turkish Kizilirmak). The motif of setting an infant adrift in a basket on a river and its being found, raised by others, and becoming eminent has been often pointed out for Sargon and Moses (Lewis 1980). But it is often overlooked that the motive of the parent differs: the Queen of Kanesh wanted to get rid of her child. Jochebed, Moses' mother, wanted to save his life from the death decree of the Pharaoh (Exod 2). Moses' basket was placed in the reeds so that it would not flow with the Nile current.

⁵ The Black Sea.

⁶ Obviously, a region on the lowermost course of the Kizilirmak River, near to the coast of the Black Sea.

⁷ Or: "Where we have seen," reading a-ú-me-en with the copy against the edition's a-ru-me-en.

⁸ Tamarara must have been under the control of Kanesh/Neša at this time.

⁹ In the Hittite laws (§§187-200) brother-sister unions were prohibited as incest.

¹⁰ This could be the name of a non-royal person here.

¹¹ Compare Judg 11. On Hittite elders see Klengel 1965.

¹² An otherwise unknown Hittite prince.

whose head [he ...] a tupalan."

When Hakkarpili w[ent] to Zalpa, [he ...-ed] and he said to them: "The king gave this to me. He holds evil [in his heart(?)]. So make war. He sows(?) for himself [...]. So let the sword cut [...] down to the second and third generations."¹³ Now Kišwa said: "[...] defeated [them(?)] as far as Mt. Tapazzili. They defeated [...] So I will request a long weapon(?). Let him give [...], and indeed much." Hakkarpili replied: "I will request it from the king." Thus he said: "[...] we will [...], and [...] to us a weapon(?)." Kišwa came and [...]

(Continuation lost in large break in the text.)

Happi and Tamnaššu Incite Zalpa to Revolt.

[...] my brother [...] was king [...] the king of the city Zi[...] turned [...] Tamnaššu [...] m[ade ...] king [...] a gold throne [...] this to you [...] ... [...] the gods [...]. Happi [...] "..." if [...] let me take [...] I will fill for you [...] with a shovel." He wrote (thus). He set out [...] and went back to Kummanni. But Zalpa made war. He went away [to/from] the city of [...] But Happi [went(?)] to the city of Alhiuta.

d 2 Sam 13-19

Happi spoke to the men of Zalpa: "I am not loved by my father. I went to Hatti to die. Were there not 100 troops, men of Zalpa, with me? Yet they did not die."¹⁴

The Battle of Haraḥšu.

The king (of Hatti) heard (about this). He set out (for Zalpa) and arrived at Haraḥšu.¹⁵ The troops of Zalpa came against him. The (Hittite) king defeated them, but Happi escaped. They captured Tamnaššu alive and brought him to Hattuša.

The Siege and Destruction of Zalpa.

In the third year the king went and blockaded Zalpa. He remained there for two years. He demanded the extradition of Tabarna and Happi, but the men of the city would not give them up. So (the Hittite troops) besieged them until they all died. The king returned to Hattuša to worship the gods, but he left the old king there. He went up against the city (saying) "I will become your king". Troops were with them. And he destroyed the city. (The End)

¹³ Compare the rebellious prince Hakkarpili with David's son Absalom (2 Sam 13-19).

¹⁴ Happi's point seems to be that the Zalpans need not be intimidated by the Hittites. Although, as a prince not in favor, he went to Hattuša expecting death, neither he nor his Zalpan accompaniment were harmed.

¹⁵ On road North from Hattuša to Zalpa.

REFERENCES

Otten 1973; Tsevat 1983.

2. HISTORIOGRAPHY

PROCLAMATION OF ANITTA OF KUŠŠAR (1.72)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

Reign of Piṭhana of Kuššar

§1 (lines 1-4) (Thus speaks) Anitta, son of Piṭhana, king of Kuššar. Say:¹ (Piṭhana) was dear to the Stormgod of the Sky.² When (Piṭhana) was dear to the Stormgod of the Sky, the king of Neša³ was ...⁴ to the king of Kuššar (= Piṭhana).

§2 (lines 5-9) The king of Kuššar ca[me] down out of the city (of Kuššar) with large numbers and to[ok] Neša during the night by storm. He captured the king of Neša but did no harm to any of the citizens of Neša. He treated [them] (all) as mothers and fathers.⁵

Reign of Anitta, son of Piṭhana

§3 (lines 10-15) After (the death of) [Piṭ]hana, my father, in the first year I suppressed a revolt. [Whate]ver land arose (in revolt) from the

¹ Forrer 1922, 1926:8, not seeing the -MA sign which the scribe inserted slightly below and to the right of the final sign in this line, read Qf-B[if?]-MA? "speak!". Figulla correctly copied that "extra" sign in KBo 3.22, making a reading Qf-B[if?]-MA likely. Steiner 1984 modified the reading to: Qf-B[if?]-ŠU? "his utterance/command." Badali's reading 1987 as a Hittite verb: ki-ša-[a]r "(Anitta, son of Piṭhana,) has become (king of Kuššara)" encounters too many paleographic and grammatical difficulties to be acceptable. Therefore we must retain the reading Qf-B[if?]-MA favored by the combination of Forrer's and Figulla's copies.

² See Starke 1977 #46.

³ The modern site of Kaneš/Neša is Kültepe excavated by T. Özgüç.

⁴ For possible readings and interpretation see Neu 1974.

⁵ That is, he treated them mercifully. See Güterbock 1956; Archi 1979.

direction of the east,⁶ I de[feated] them all. §4 (lines 13-16) [...] the city of Ullamm[a⁷ ...] the king of Ḫatti⁸ c[ame(?) ...] back [...] in (the city of) [T]ešma⁹ I defeated. Neša f[ire(?) ...]. §5 (lines 17-19) [I took] the city of Harkiuana in broad daylig[ht]. I took the city [Ullam]ma at night. [I took] the city Tenenda in broad daylight. §6 (lines 20-26) I devoted¹⁰ (them) to the Stormgod of Neša.¹¹ We [all]otted¹² (them) to the Stormgod [of Neša(?) (as) a de[vo]ted thing].¹³ Whoever after me becomes king, whoever resettles [the cities of Ullamma, Tenend]a, and Harkiuana, [the enemies of] Neša, let him be enemy to [the Stormgod] of Neša.¹⁴ And he — let him be [...] of all the lands. Like a lion¹⁵ the land [...]. §7 (lines 27-29) (If) he [doe]s (any other) [harm], (if) he settles [...] upon [...], and [...] it to the Stormgod [...].	a Deut 13:16; Josh 6:26; 1 Kgs 16:34; Isa 25:2; Ezek 26:14; Ezra 4:12-22 b 1 Sam 4-6 c Judg 6:1; 13:1; 2 Kgs 18-19; Isa 36-37; Jer 12:7; 21:10 d Judg 9:45	Additions to the Original Monumental Inscription in the Gate §10 (lines 36-37) A second time Piyušti, king of Ḫattuša, came. At the city Šalampa [I defeated(?) his auxiliary troops²⁰ which he brought in (to aid him). §11 (lines 38-48) [I ...] all the lands [...] this side of Zalpuwa by the sea. Previously Uḫna, king of Zalpuwa, had carried off (the cult statue of) our goddess⁶ (Ḫalmaššuit) from Neša to Zalpuwa, and I brought [Hu]zziya, king of Zalpuwa, back alive to Neša. P[iyu]sti had [f]ortified Ḫattuša. So I left it alone. But subsequently, when it became most acutely beset with famine(?),²¹ their²² goddess Ḫalmaššuit gave it over (to me),^c and I took it at night by storm. In its place I sowed cress.²³ §12 (lines 49-51) Whoever after me becomes king and resettles Ḫattuša, [let] the Stormgod of the Sky strike him. §13 (lines 52-54) Toward Šalatiwara [I] tur[ned] my face. šalatiwara drew out [its] ... [...] (and) troops to meet me. I carried them off to Neša. §14 (lines 55-56) I built various city (fortifications) in Neša. Behind I built the temple of the Stormgod of the Sky and the temple of our goddess (Ḫalmaššuit). §15 (lines 57-58) I built the temple of Ḫalmaššuit,²⁴ the temple of the Stormgod my lord, [and the temple of ...].²⁵ And those goods which I had brought back from my campaign(s) I dedicated(?)²⁶ to that place.
---	--	---

Year Two

- §8 (lines 30-32) After (the death of) my father, [in the ... year, I proceeded(?) to the s[ea] of the city of Zalpuwa.¹⁶ The sea of [Zal]puwa [was my boundary].¹⁷
- §9 (lines 33-35) [I have copied] these [words] from the tablet(s) in my gate. Hereafter for all time [let no] one de[face] th[is tablet]. But whoever defaces¹⁸ it, [let him] b[e] an enemy of [the Storm]god.¹⁹

⁶ Less likely because of the word order: "Whatever land arose, I defeated them all with (the help of) the Sungod"; so Neu 1974:11.

⁷ To the SW of Neša. See del Monte and Tischler 1978:452.

⁸ Cf. §10 ("the second time").

⁹ Also written Taišama. Restoration according to Balkan, 1957:53. Neu 1974:10 considers the name [...]x-te-e-š-mi to be incomplete. Del Monte and Tischler 1978:429 sub Taišama do not list this passage.

¹⁰ Lit., "sold" (ḫappariya). See Deut 32:30; Judg 2:14; 3:8 for God "selling" Israel "into the hands" of its enemies.

¹¹ So in the Old Script copy A; var. in C (KUB 36.98 obv. 11) "Stormgod of the Sky."

¹² [ḫin]kuen in dupl. C obv. 12.

¹³ ḫappar. The following lines make it clear that this meant the permanent barring of human habitation from the site, i.e., its total annihilation. This is very much like the "ban" (Hebrew herem) imposed on certain Canaanite cities by Joshua in the Hebrew Bible. See Deut 7:2; 13:16-18; Josh 6:17-18; 7:1, 11; 10:28-41. See Stern 1991.

¹⁴ For the curse on one who resettles these cities see §12 below and Josh 6:26 (curse on builder of Jericho).

¹⁵ For the lion simile cf. Imparati and Saporetti 1965 (CTH 4) §§ 10 and 15. On the similes in the texts of Ḫattušili I see Hoffner 1980.

¹⁶ Zalpuwa (also known as Zalpa) was located close to the Black Sea coast, near the mouth of the Marassanta River (Classical name Halys, Turkish name Kizil Irmak). Cf. del Monte and Tischler 1978:490f. and literature cited there.

¹⁷ For subsequent Old Hittite kings making "the seas" their boundaries cf. Hoffmann 1984 (CTH 19) §§ 3, 6.

¹⁸ ḫulliezzi, Neu 1974:12f.: "zerschlägt."

¹⁹ Reading ku-i-ša-at ḫu-ul-li-ez-zi-ma ¹⁹ISKUR-un-n]a-aš. Neu 1974:12f. reads ku-i-ša-at ḫu-ul-li-ez-zi ¹⁹U[¹⁹Ne-eš]a-aš ("of Neša").

²⁰ šardiyāššann-a.

²¹ Steiner 1993 (esp. p. 174) questions the validity of the accepted interpretation "beset by famine/hunger" and suggests instead that it means the city was left unprotected by troops who had gone elsewhere on campaign.

²² Following Singer 1995, who reads: "Ḫal-ma-š[u-iz] / Ḫi-i-uš-mi-iš and correctly notes the difference between -šummiš "our" and -šmiš "their." Neu 1974:12f. differently: "lieferte sie [i.e., die Stadt] mein Gott Šiu der Throngöttin Ḫalmaššuit aus."

²³ On cress (saḫlū) in Hittite texts see Hoffner 1974a:111. For sowing ruins with cress see CAD S sub saḫlū 2 b 3' (p. 64). See also Judg 9:45, where a conqueror sows salt on a sacked city's ruins.

²⁴ The deified throne dais (see Starke 1979).

²⁵ The New Hittite duplicate reads here: "of our god(ess)." But, if this is taken to refer to Ḫalmaššuit, it would be redundant with the first part of the same sentence. There is, therefore, some reason to be skeptical about the accuracy of the late duplicate here.

²⁶ Hittite ḫališšiya usually means "to plate (with silver or gold)."

§16 (lines 59-63) I made a vow. And [I went on] a hun[t].²⁷ On the first day (I captured): two lions, seventy boars, one boar of the cane-brake, and 120 (other) wild animals, whether leopards, lions, mountain sheep, wild sheep, or [...], and I brought this to my city Neša.²⁸	f Josh 8:19	behind him (stealthily) and set fire to his city.²⁹ Them in[side(?) ...] in the city [...] his [...], 1400 troops, chariots, horses, ...[...] he drew up and marched off.
Year Four §17 (lines 64-67) In the following year I went to battle (again) a[gainst Šalatiwa]ra. The "man" (= ruler) of Salatiwara arose together with his sons and came against me. He left his land and his city behind and took up a position on the Hulanna River.		Year Five §19 (lines 73-79) When I went on a campaign [to ...], the "man" of Puruṣḥanda [...] of his hengur-gift. He brought to me as a hengur-gift one iron throne and one iron crook.²⁹ But when I returned to Neša, I brought with me the "man" of Puruṣḥanda. When he goes to the inner chamber,³⁰ he shall sit before me on the right.³¹
§18 (lines 68-72) [The army of] Neša came around

²⁷ For this reading see Hoffner 1977.

²⁸ Many think that these were not dead animals "bagged" in a hunt, but rather animals captured alive to stock a royal zoo. For possible Middle Hittite evidence for the collecting of live animals for such a park see Hoffner 1995.

²⁹ Sumerian PA.GAM "bent staff," perhaps = Hittite kalmuš.

³⁰ Late duplicate has "to Zalpa" instead of "to the inner chamber."

³¹ Imparati and Saporetti 1965 (CTH 4) §20, CTH 81 §12.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 1. A = KBo 3.22, B = KUB 26.71 i 1-19, C = KUB 36.98 (+) 98a (+) 98b obv.-rev.6'. Bibliography: Edition Neu 1974. Discussions: Badali 1987; Güterbock 1936:139ff.; 1983:23-25; Otten 1961:335-336; Hoffner 1980:291-293; Singer 1995; Steiner 1984; 1989; 1993.

CROSSING OF THE TAURUS (1.73)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

§1 Thus (says) Puḫanu, the servant of Šarmaššu [...] A person to him [...] is dressed in a colorful tunic/garment. On his head a basket¹ has been placed. He holds his bow (variant: a bow). He has called for help, (saying:) "What have I done? What?"	a Num 16:15; 1 Sam 12:3	rows. You, (O arrow,) will plunge into (i.e., penetrate) their heart(s)."⁴
§2 "I haven't taken anything from anyone. I haven't taken an ox from anyone.² I haven't taken a sheep from anyone.² I haven't taken anyone's male or female servants."	b Gen 27:40; Lev 26:13; Deut 28:48; 1 Kgs 12:4-14; Isa 14:25; Jer 27:8	§4 "Isn't that opponent of mine whom you (plural) escorted to Arinna my donkey?⁵ I will sit upon him,⁶ and you (plural) shall escort me there!"
§3 "Why have you (plural) treated me so and bound this yoke⁶ upon me? (Therefore) I must always bring ice³ in this basket and keep fighting (until) I destroy the land(s) with these ar-	c Jer 5:22	§5 "Who holds all the lands? Don't I fix in place the rivers, mountains and seas? I fix the mountain in place, so that it cannot move from its place. I fix the sea in place, so that it cannot flow back."⁶ §6 [Beh]ind them he became a bull, and its horns were a little bit bent. I ask [him:] "Why are its horns bent?" And he said: "[...] Whenever I went on campaigns/trips, the mountain was dif-

¹ Not "Korb in der Funktion als Köcher" (so Soysal 183f.), since the occurrence of patar together with bow and/or arrows in ritual texts is no proof that the former is serving as a quiver to hold arrows. Nor is it likely that the quiver would be placed on the head(!) of the man, whereas both male and female workers regularly carry cargo in baskets on their heads. In Mesopotamia even kings are shown with baskets on their heads in which they (ceremonially) carry bricks for building temples, etc. See: AHw 1371 sub tupšikku(m).

² See a similar statement in a quote inside a ritual: "He has committed no sin; he has not taken anything from anyone" KBo 10.37 i 59-60 (CTH 429.1).

³ Not "Todeskälte" (so Soysal). Even if my earlier explanation (Hoffner 1971) as one of the duties of vassals is unprovable and might turn out to be wrong, one should not force the translation of the words for "basket" and "ice" in order to achieve the description of a military action. Acquiring ice is included among the "public works" (luzzi and šahhan) in the Hittite laws (§56). Soysal's objections (233) and claim that e-ki in the OH copy A is a scribal error for e-di are unconvincing. One must first show that the emended reading is clearly preferable to explain the passage.

⁴ With Starke 1985b:35 ("und du wirst in ihr Herz dringen") and contra Soysal 1987:174, 179 ("ihn [= den Pfeil] wirst du auch in ihr Herz schießen").

⁵ Or perhaps: "Whom did you bring to Arinna? That opponent of mine? Isn't he my donkey?"

⁶ Not "Ich werde mich ihm widersetzen" (so Otten, followed by Soysal 1987:179), but with Neu apud Soysal 1987:252 (Nachträge).

ficult for us. But this bul[1] was [strong]. And when it came, it lifted that mountain and [m]oved it, so that we reached(?) the sea.⁷ That is why its horns are bent.”	d Deut 33:17; Pss 22:22; 92:11	Zidi are there. [...] The goddess Inara of Hatti and Zidi. [...] of Hatti [...]. [...] g]o, say: ‘Come (plural) to [Za]lpa! Come! [...] their/your land!’”
§7 The Sungod(dess) of [...]’ is sitting [...], and he sends out messengers, (saying:) “Go to Aleppo.” Say [...] to the troops: “Šuppiyahšu and		[The remainder of the tablet is too broken and disconnected for reliable translation.]

⁷ So Otten. Soysal “[Jetzt?] sitzt [e]r (auf dem Thron als) Majestät.”

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 16a; A = KUB 31.4 + KBo 3.41, B = KBo 12.22 i 1-14, C = KBo 13.78 obv. 1-15. Editions: Otten 1963b; Soysal 1987:173-176, 179-180, 183-190. Bibliography: Hoffner 1971; Otten 1963b; Soysal 1987.

DEEDS OF ŠUPPILULIUMA (1.74)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

Among the Hittite kings Šuppiluliuma I was the greatest conqueror. To him was due the destruction of the great and powerful rival kingdom of Mitanni and the eastward expansion of the Hittite state into North Syria during the first half of the 14th Century BCE. The story of his reign has often been told. Among the more recent attempts Güterbock 1960, Kitchen 1962, Bryce 1989, and Kempinski 1993 may be named. Letters from Šuppiluliuma to the Egyptian pharaoh Amenophis IV, which show the Hittite king's prestige and power, were found in the corpus of Akkadian tablets found at Amarna (Moran 1992). His reign was a long one, during which he established his sons as dynastic rulers in strategic Syrian urban centers such as Aleppo and Carchemish.

The Hittite text called “The Deeds of Šuppiluliuma” (CTH 40) was composed by one of his younger sons, who reigned as his second successor under the throne name of Muršili II. A first son and successor, Arnuwanda, was sickly and ruled only a few years. This composition was part of a large historiographic work by Muršili II comprising three compositions (Hoffner 1980, Güterbock 1983). The deeds of his father, the subject of the first part, served as a kind of prologue to the second and third parts: two sets of annals of his own reign, one a chronicle of his first ten regnal years, and the second a more detailed account of his entire reign. Muršili II's ten-year and extensive annals were edited by Goetze (1933). As might be expected, the Annals of Muršili II and the Deeds of Šuppiluliuma (abbreviated “DS”), since they are products of the same author, show many similarities in literary style.

In DS Muršili refers to Šuppiluliuma only as “my father,” and Šuppiluliuma's father, Tudḫaliya, as “my grandfather.” Even during the reign of his father, Šuppiluliuma was active as a battlefield commander, and on at least one occasion volunteered to lead campaigns when his father was ill (fragment 14, see also 11). Among the opponents faced by Tudḫaliya and Šuppiluliuma were armies from Ḫayaša and the Kaška, both located to the north or northeast of the Hittite capital. When campaigning in this region, the Hittite king used the city of Šamuḫa as a base of operations (fragment 10). Strategic maneuvers mentioned in this text included ambush (fragments 10, 14 and 17). Although usually the battles are described in a very general way, we occasionally meet with vivid details. In fragment 15 Šuppiluliuma fought Arzawan troops in the vicinity of Tuwanuwa and Tiwanzana. The text describes how he encountered them unexpectedly, while he was driving his own chariot in advance of his own supporting chariotry, and how the enemy assaulted him with arrows. In fragment 28 a plague broke out in the Hittite army, which must have been common enough in military encampments with so many people living together in close quarters. The glorification of the Hittite king as a warrior does not exclude the mention of the role of his commanders, Lupakki, Ḫimuili and Ḫannuti, or the activities of the corps of engineers (fragment 28), whose duties included the fortifying of towns and strong points along the way. Hittite princes, brothers of Muršili, such as Arnuwanda, Zita and “The Priest,” are also mentioned by name. Rarely, even the name of an enemy commander — such as Takuḫli the Hurrian (fragment 28, A ii 15-20) — is mentioned. The author lays stress on the military organization of his father's various opponents, calling some of them “tribal groups” (see Güterbock 1956:62 note c and Hoffner 1979). This organization especially characterizes the Kaška people, who in Muršili's own annals are described as not being ruled by kings (Goetze 1933:88f., lines 73-75). Such tribal fighting groups must have been quite elusive, since the author states that his father only defeated them when he was able to “catch” them (fragment 14). The Kaška enemy sometimes attacked by night (fragment 28, A i 21ff., ii 1ff.). Often the author indicates how many of such tribes or tribal groups were fighting in the confederation: nine in fragment 13, twelve in fragment 14, seven in fragment 15. This recalls the various groupings of the Israelite tribal confederacy involved in the localized wars of the Book of Judges. In one instance (fragment 13) an enemy surrenders to the Hittite army only to take up arms again behind its back and sabotage its recently built fortifications. Relocations of enemy population are also recorded. Both in this text (e.g., fragments 18, 19, 26) and in Muršili's own annals exchanges of messages by tablet are recorded, among which are several which challenge the enemy force to combat. Similar exchanges of messages prior to battle are recorded in Judg 11:12-28. The longest messages whose contents are recorded are those exchanged between Šuppiluliuma and the Egyptian queen in fragment 28.

The surviving colophons to the various tablets reveal not only that the native title of the work was "The Manly Deeds of Šuppiluliuma" (fragment 28, colophon of E₃), but also that the text of the Deeds was to be subsequently inscribed on a bronze tablet (fragment 28, colophon to copy A). Such a bronze tablet, although not containing this composition, was unearthed by Peter Neve in the 1986 season of excavations at Boğazköy (Otten 1988). It contained the full text of a state treaty between Tudḫaliya IV of Hatti and Kurunta of Tarḫuntašša.

A large part of the narrative is fragmentary, not lending itself to connected, easily understandable translation. We have limited ourselves therefore to the best preserved and most familiar parts. The full text with its many breaks and discontinuities may be found in Güterbock's edition.

This composition was first recognized by Emil Forrer, who collected all fragments he could identify in Forrer 1922, 1926) under numbers 31-37. These tablets were gradually republished in cuneiform, mostly by Goetze, in KUB 14 (1926: Nos. 22, 23), 19 (1927: Nos. 7, 10, 11, 13, 14, 18), 21 (1928: No. 10), 26 (1933: Nos. 73, 84), but some by Heinrich Otten and J. Sturm in KUB 31 (1939: Nos. 6, 7, 21, and 8). In addition, some fragments that Forrer had not recognized were published in cuneiform copies, in particular KUB 19: 4, 12, 47, 23: 2, 7, 8, 50, 31: 11, 25, 33 and 34. Excavations conducted by Kurt Bittel after 1931 added a large number of new fragments, almost all from Archive A in the south-east part of the acropolis. Hans Ehelolf made hand copies of some Šuppiluliuma fragments, which eventually appeared in two posthumous volumes, KUB 32 and 34.

An edition of the entire composition was published as Güterbock (1956). Further small fragments have continued to be identified since 1956, but none which adds appreciably to the text base used by Güterbock. Güterbock's numbering of the fragments has been retained. But since not all fragments are sufficiently well-preserved to allow coherent translation, there will be gaps in the numbering of fragments translated here.

Second and Third Tablets (Fragments 9-17)

(Fragment 10, D col. i) [beginning broken]

(2) When my father ma[rched on], he [did not] meet the Ḫayaša enemy in [the land of ...]. My father went [after the Ḫayaša] enemy, but again he did not [meet] him. (Instead) he met the Kaška enemy, all of their tribal troops,^a in [the midst of the land]. The gods stood by him: [the Sun Goddess of Arinna], the Storm God of Ḫatti, the Storm God of the Army, and Ištar of the Battlefield, (so that) the en[emy] suffered many casualties. He also [took] ma[n]y prisoners and brought them back to Šamuḫa.

(11) Again [my] fa[ther] set out from [Šamuḫa]. And [in the land(?) of ...] which had been laid waste by i[ts] enemy, there stood the a[rmy(?) of the enemy. [(Even) the ...] and the shepherds [had come to] help. [My father] laid an ambush^b [for them] and [attacked] the Ka[ška] men. [He also attacked] the auxiliaries who had come, (so that) the Kaška troops and the au[xiliary] troops [suffered many casualties]. But the captives whom [he took were beyond counting].

(Fragment 11, A ii // B ii and C)

"[...] let him go. [...] There [...] because [...] does not(?) die, kill him [...]." — Thus (spoke) my father to my grandfather: "O my lord, send me on that [campaign]. Then the gods will fulfill what is in my [heart]."

^a Judg 1:3;
6:34-35;
7:24; 8:1-2

^b Josh 8;
Judg 9 and 20

(8) So my grandfather sent forth my father from Šamuḫa. [And when he (my father)] arrived in the land of Ḫatti, since [the ... had been] burned down by the enemy, my father began to cast away the kunzi. And they cast it away [and] took [...]. ...

(Fragment 13, D iv // E i) [Beginning of the column in E is broken away.]

(end of D iii) [When my father] (iv 1) heard this, he set about [...].

(3) He proceeded to lay an ambush^b in front of [...]. And he [slew(?) the enemy who(?) had arrived [at ...]. [The Kaška men(?) assembled nine tribal groups.^a [My father took away] from him [what] he was holding. (8) And everyone [went away] to his own [town]. When my father [arrived with] l[arge numbers of troops], the Kaška enemy was afraid, and they put their weapons down.

(12) Si[nce] my father had built fortifications behind the empty towns of the whole land which had been emptied by the enemy, he brought the inhabitants back, everyone to his own town, and they occupied their towns again.

(E 7) My grandfather became well again and came down from the Upper Land. And since the troops of the lands of Maša and Kammala kept attacking the land of the Ḫulana River and the land of Kaš-šiya, my grandfather went to attack them. My father went along too on the campaign. (13) The gods went before my grandfather, (so that) he proceeded to destroy the land of Maša and Kammala. While my grandfather [was] in the land of Kammala, my father was with him. In the rear the Kaška enemy took up arms again; and the enemy for a second time destroyed the empty towns behind which my father had built fortifications.

(D 29) Now when my grandfather [came] back from the land of Maša — the lands of Kaḫariya and Kazzapa which kept destroying [towns(?) (as) the Kaška [troops] carried away their goods, silver, gold, bronze utensils and everything — my grandfather went to those towns in order to attack (the troops of Kaḫariya and Kazzapa). [Then] the gods marched before my grandfather, (so that) he destroyed (the towns of) Kaḫariya and Kazzapa and burned them down. The gods marched before my grandfather, (so that) he also defeated the Kaška troops who had come to help Kaḫariya — and those Kaška troops [...] died en masse.

(40) When my grandfather came back from there, he went to the land of Ḫayaša. And my father was still with him. When my grandfather arrived in the land of Ḫa[yaša], Karanni (or: Lanni?), king of Ḫayaša, [came] to (meet him in) battle below (the town of) Kummaḫa. [... broken]

(Colophon of E) Third (tablet), (text) not complete, of the Deeds of Šuppiluliuma, the great king, the hero. [erasure]

(Fragment 14, F iii) [beginning broken]

(2) [... laid an] am[bush for the K]aška people. [... Piy]apili (nom.) [...] they kill. [... Pi]yapili (nom.) [...] tr[eated] nothing [badly]. (7) But [when] my grandfather heard [of theof] Pi[y]apili — since my grandfather was still [si]ck, my grandfather (spoke) thus: “[Who] will go?” My father answered: “I will go.” [So] my grandfather sent my father out.

(12) When my father arrived in the land, (he found that) the Kaška enemy who had entered the land of Ḫatti had badly damaged the land. The Kaška enemy whom my father met inside the land consisted of twelve tribal groups.⁶ The gods marched before my father, (so that) he defeated the aforementioned Kaška enemy, the tribal troops, wherever he caught them. My father took away from (the enemy) what he was holding, and gave it back to the Hittites. (22) My grandfather became well again and came down from the Upper Land. And when he arrived at (the town of) Ziḫara, he met a[ll] the troops of (the town of) [...] in Ziḫara. (26) The gods marched before my grandfather, (so that) he defeated [the enemy]. ...

(38) [My father said] to my grandfather: “[O my lord, send] me aga[inst the Arz]awa enemy.” [So my grandfather sent my father(?) aga[inst] the Arzawa enemy. (41) [And when] my father [had marched for] the first [day(?), he came(?) to (the town of?) K]ašḫa. [The gods] — [the Sun Goddess of Arinna, the Storm God of] Ḫatti, the Storm God of the Army, and Ištar of the Battlefield] — marched before [my father] (45) [(so that) my father defeated the] Arzawa [enemy] and the enemy troops [died in] lar[ge numbers ... [end of column, continuation of text lost]

(Fragment 15, F iv // G i) [beginning broken]

(1) [...on Mo]unt Allina [...] and [...] it with (its) goods; [...] bu[ilt ...] again. [But when(?) he arrived [at ...], they brought [word to] my father below (the town of) [...]: “The enemy who had gone forth to (the town of) Aniša, is now below (the town of) [...]—išša.” (So) my father went against him. And the gods — the Sun Goddess of Arinna, the Storm God of Ḫatti, the Storm God of the Army, and the Lady of the Battlefield — marched before my father (so that) he slew that whole tribal group, and the enemy troops died en masse.

(11) Furthermore again he met six tribes in (the town of) Ḫuwana[...], and he (var: my father) defeated these, too, (so that) the enemy troops died en masse. He met still another seven tribal groups⁷ in (the towns of) Ni[-] and Šapparanda and defeated them, (so that) the enemy troops died en masse. Still another Arzawa enemy was out in the land of Tupaziya and on Mount Ammuna in order to attack. Anna(?) was helping(?) as an ally(?), and he attacked Mount Ammuna, the land of Tupaziya and the [...] Lake, and kept its goods, along with the inhabitants, cattle and sheep. (21) When he arrived at (the town of) Tuwanuwa, he stopped below Tuwanuwa and fought against Tuwanuwa. My father defeated the enemy in (the towns of) [...], Naḫhuriya and Šapparanda. Then he [we]nt back to (the town of) Tiwanzana to spend the night, and my father spent the night in Tiwanzana.

(26) In the morning my father drove down from Tiwanzana into the land, (while) in the rear his charioteers and six teams of horses were supporting him. And as my father was driving, he encountered(?) that whole enemy all at once, and my father engaged him in battle. Then the gods — the Sun Goddess of Arinna, the Storm God of Ḫatti, the Storm God of the Army, and [Ištar of the Battlefield] — marched before my father (so that) he (var.: my father) defeated that enemy. [And] because [the] was [v]ery(?) large, he cast away the civilian captives, cattle and sheep [which] they had taken. (36) When the enemy had abandoned the boot[y, [he] fled and took to the moun[tain]. [And ... (?) they attacked with arro[ws]. When my father saw the attack, he drove up to Tuwanuwa [and] bound the [...]. ... (end of tablet)

(Colophon of F) Second tablet, (text) not complete, of the [De]eds of Su[ppiluliuma ...]. [Hand of (?) ...]-su-ziti (?).

(Fragment 17, G iv) [beginning broken]

(1-2)(3) against my father [(4) Then the gods helped him, [(so that) he defeated the enemy, and the enemy] died [en masse]. The auxiliaries(?) [...-ed] Takkuri [and] Himuili [...].

(7) And when he had slain the enemy, he defeated [...] and made it again [into Hittite land]. Then [he went] to (the town of Anz[i]liya).

(10) And when Anzi[i]liya]. But my father haste[ned]. And when my fa[ther], they brought word] to my father:

(14) "The enemy who was [...], now [attacked(?) (the towns of)] and Pargalla." (17) "But besides [he attacked(?) (the towns of)], Hattina, [and] Ha[-...] and holds [their goods, inhabitants], cattle and sheep, and [...]." (20) When my father he[ard (this), he] and [laid] an ambush^b for the enemy. [And the gods] marched before [my father, (so that) he defeated] the enemy, and the enemy troops died] en masse.

(24) And the civilian captives, cattle, sheep and go[ods] which [the enemy held], he took away from him and ga[ve] them back [to the Hittites]. Then [...] forth [...] (end of tablet in G; continuation of text lost)

Fragments (18-27) Whose Tablet Numbers are Unknown

(Fragment 18, No. 4 i) (beginning of tablet) // No. 5 iv

(A i 1) The scout(?) troops of (the town(s) of) Peta [and Ma]hurašša who] had [gon]e [...] ... in the land of Arza[wa], tho[se] he brought back [and] settled [them again(?)] in their own lands.

(A i 4) Furthermore, while [my father(?)] was campaigning against the [...]s, (the towns of) Ma]hurašša, [...], and Peta rose u[p]. And he went [...into] the land of Arzawa to meet Anza-pahhaddu.....]. (8) And for(?) them Anza-pahhaddu,....] Alaltalli, Zapalli [.....] gov[ern-]ed] these. (10) [And] my father [wrote] [to Anza-pahhaddu]: "These (are) m[y subjects... ..], but you [ha]ve [taken them away from(?)] me. And [...] [. 1..... (14) [..... for] struggle [.....]" And [he.....] to him [.....: "...] my subjects up [in] the tow[n]" And it happened (that) my father [.....] said: "Go to [the land] (of) [...and] give [me ba]ck [my subjects]. But if [you do not] deli[ver my] subjects, then be [my ene]my and be...[...]." (21) [...] my father [...] to the people of Arza[wa] and he [.....] deli[ver]ed nothing.

c Judg 11:12-28; 1 Sam 22:3; 2 Sam 14:32

(23) [Then] my father consequently sent [out Himu-]ili, the commander, [and gave him(?) troops and ch]ariots. [And Hi]muili we[nt, and] attacked [the land of] Ma(huirašša [... and] held [it. But] w[hen] Anzapahhaddu [and (?) hea]rd [(this) thing], they [came] after (him) out of [...] and to[ok] him [by surpri]se on the way (28) [and defeated him]. When my father [heard] of the defeat of [Himu]ili, [his an]ger ro[se, and] he mobilized the troops and chariots [of Hatti at once and went into the land of Arzawa. [When] he [arri]ved [in the land of] Arzawa, he [...-ed] the land of Mira [...(broken)]

(Fragment 19, KBo 14.6 i) [beginning broken]

(2) [...] defeated [...]. But (the town of) Ma(huirašši [...] and al[l the inh]abitants of Arzawa took [Mount Tiwatašša, but ...] kept Mount Kuriwanda apart and [turned] it into(?) three fortified c[amps]. But] the enemy held [Mount Tiwatašša] with his force. [...] Alantalli [and] Zapalli [were.....] below(?) Mount Tiwatašša. [...] (10) He surrounded it and [besieged(?) it. [And] when [he] besieged it, [...] came [wi]th troops and chariots, and he [...].

(13) When my father heard [thi]s, [he... and] besieged the mountain. [And he wrote him: "Come, let us fight." [But] Anzapahhaddu] did not [...] come to a battle and was [...]. Of the mounta[in] held, and he [...] spoke [...] [broken]

(Fragment 20, KBo 14.7 i) [beginning broken]

(1) [.....ch]ariot[s.....]. ... (2) [When] my father hear[d.....], he gave [troops and ch]ariots [to Mammali] and [...]. And [the enemy(?) over-]took(?) Mammali [on the] wa[y], and [captured] his troops, chariots, (and) depor[tees]. Mammali alone d[i]ed(?)...]. (7) My father (abandoned?) Mount Tiwa[tašša]. When Zapalli [and ...] were [no longer(?)] besieged, they went [...] into (the town of) Hapalla. [But] my father [...], and so to his chariots [...] (end of column, continuation of text lost)

(Fragment 25, KUB 34.23 i) [beginning broken]

(1) [...] to the troops [.....the peop]le of H[ul]-... had] gone over [...] kept attacking [...] in [som]e rich tow[n(?) the.....of H]atti he took away and [.....] their father(s), their mother(s) (and) their brothers [...] to his own father, mother, and portico [...] who [had gone] over to [...] (10) [...] (he) led (away? the popula- tion, cattle and sheep, [and] brought [them to]. And everyone took [...]. But the people of Išuwa were [...], and to them, to (the things that had been) carried (away), they [...]ed. But the Hittite civilian captives to them [...], [...] (he) took away. (16) [...] (he) left [.....] (he) brought. [...] (he) was. But my father [...] revenge against [...] (20) [and] went [into the land of] Zuhhapa and [burned] it down: [What] was around [the town, that] he burned down, and [all] of the town of Zuhhapa he burned [down, (too)]. But the civilian captives went (sg. 1) [.....]into (the land of) Hayaša, [.....]-ed, and they [.....]-ed them from Mount Laša.

(27) [The.....] which [...] in the land of Išūwa, [.....]; they belonged to Hatti. [.....] something to someone [.....] (30) [.....] even in the winter (he) went [and] attacked [the land of]-šeni. And the civilian captives, [cattle, sheep, and bronze] utensils which the army had left behind [in....., those bronze utensils] he brought from there. [.....] (he) came, and in the land of Išūwa [.....] which [in(?)] Išūwa [.....] chariots [... [broken] [gap of about 25 lines]

(Fragment 26, KUB 34.2:3 ii) [beginning broken]

(2) from the battle [.....]. And the civilian captives, cattle [and sheep.....] back to the army [...] whom they held back(?) [.....]. Then in the land of Ha[tti] empty granaries(?) [.....] and him [.....] broke(?) [.....] 370[+]

(11) And when [my father....., he sent a message] to the k[ing of Mitanni and [wrote] him thus: ".....] came before [...] (the town of) Carchemish (acc.), the to[wn.....] I attacked, but to you [I wrote thus]: 'Come, let us fight.' But you] did not come [to battle]. So now [.....] and the land to you wi[th.....]. (20) So come and [let us] fight. [...]" But he stayed in (the town of) [Wašukanni], he did not [answer(?) ...] and did not [come] to a battle. [So my father went] there after [him]. (25) The harvest which was [.....,] in Wašukanni there was no water at all [.....] the towns which (nom.) [.....were] looted(?) [.....] (30) around [...] with fru[it]]. And again [.....] to drink [...to my father [broken]

Tablet Seven (Fragment 28, KBo 5.6 and duplicates)

(A i 1) Then he went back to Mount Zukkuki and built (fortified) two towns: Athulišša and Tuḫupur-puna. While (the Hittite) built the towns, the enemy kept boasting: "Down into the land of Almina we shall never let him (come)." But when he had finished building the towns, he went into Almina, and none of the enemies could any longer resist him in battle.

(A i 9) So he set out to fortify (the town of) Almina. In the rear, in the army, a plague^d broke out. Then my father took a stand on Mount Kuntiya. Ḫimuili, the commander, held the river Šariya, and Ḫannutti, the marshal, held a position in (the town of) Parparra. But the corps of engineers was still fortifying Almina. And because all Kaška-land was at peace, some of the Hittite people had inns behind Kaška towns, (while) some had again gone to the town.

d Num 11:33,
14:37; 16:46-
49; 17:13;
25:8-9

(A i 18) But when the Kaška men saw that there was a plague^d in the army, they seized the people who had again gone into their towns.

(A i 21) They killed some and seized others. Then the enemy came by night and deployed. They went to fight against all the fortified camps which the lords were holding. The gods of my father marched before the lords at whichever of the fortified camps they went for battle, so that they defeated them all, and the enemy died en masse. No one could resist the army of my father. When my father had killed the enemy, all the Kaška enemy feared him.

(A i 31) While he was fortifying Almina, he sent out Urawanni and Kuwalana-ziti, the Great Shepherd, to attack the land of Kašula. The gods of my father marched before them, so that they conquered all of the land of Kašula and brought its people, cattle and sheep before my father. There were one thousand civilian captives whom they brought. Then my father conquered all of the land of Tumanna and rebuilt it and reestablished it and made it again part of the Hittite land.

(A i 40) Afterwards he came back to Ḫattuša to spend the winter. When he had celebrated the year festival (in the spring), he went into the land of Išṭahara. And since the Kaška enemy [had] taken Išṭahara, Hittite territory, [my father] drove the enemy out of it and re fortified the town of [...], Manaziya[na(?)], Kalimuna, and the town of [...] and reestablished them and made them again part of [the Hittite land]. And when he had reestablished [the land of Išṭahara], he came back to Ḫattuša to spend the winter.

(A ii 1) Tribal troops came en masse and attacked his army by night. Then the gods of his father marched before my brother, so that he defeated the tribal troops of the enemy and [killed] them. And when he had defeated the tribal troops, [the land] of [the enemy] saw him, and they were afraid, and all the lands of Arziya and Carchemish made peace with him, and the town of Murmuriga made peace with him (too).

(A ii 9) In the land of Carchemish, Carchemish itself, as the one town, did not make peace with him. So the Priest, my brother, left six hundred men and chariots and Lupakki, the commander often of the army, in the land of Murmuriga, (while) the Priest came to Hatti to meet my father. And since my father was in the town of Uda performing festivals, he met him there. (A ii 15) When the Hurrians saw that the Priest was gone, the troops and chariots of the Hurrian land came — Takuḫli, the amumikuni, was among them — and surrounded Murmuriga. And they were superior to the troops and chariots of Hatti who were there.

(A ii 21) Egyptian troops and chariots came to the land of Kinza, which my father had conquered, and attacked the land of Kinza (Kadesh). My father was informed: "The Hurrians have surrounded the troops and chariots that are up in Murmuriga." (A ii 26) So my father mobilized troops and chariots and marched against the Hurrians. When he arrived in the land of Tegarama,¹ he reviewed his troops and chariots in (the town of) Talpa. Then he sent his son Arnuwanda and Zita, the Chief of the Royal Guard, from Tegarama ahead into the Hurrian country. When Arnuwanda and Zita arrived in the country, (A ii 33) [the enemy] attacked them. Then the gods of my father marched before them, [(so that) they defeat]ed [the enemy]. But the enemy [...] below the town and went [down] from the town [in order to escape(?) ... the moun]tains of the land of Tegarama [...]. When [my father he]ard: "He [is trying to] escape from the town ahead of time" — (A ii 42) when my father came down into the land, he did not meet the enemy from the Hurrian land (variant adds: below the town). So he went down to (the town of) Carchemish and surrounded it and (E₂ 6) [...]ed [...] on this side] and that side, (so that) he [surr]ounded it [completely]. The river [...] below the place [...] ships [...] (he) took, then [...] [broken]

(A iii 1) While my father was in the land of Carchemish, he sent Lupakki and Tarhunta(?)—zalma into the land of ^cAmqa. They went to attack ^cAmqa and brought civilian captives, cattle and sheep back to my father. (5) When the people of Egypt heard of the attack on ^cAmqa, they were afraid. And since their lord Nibhururiya (=Tutankhamun) had just died, the Queen of Egypt (=Ankhesenamun), who was the king's wife,¹⁷ sent a messenger to my father (10) saying: "My husband has died, and I have no son. They say you have many sons. If you will give me one of your sons, he will become my husband. I do not wish to choose a subject of mine and make him my husband ... I am afraid." (16) When my father heard this, he convened the Great Ones for council (saying): "Nothing like this has ever happened to me in my whole life." (20) My father sent Hattuša-ziti, the chamberlain, to Egypt (with this order): "Go bring back the true story to me. Maybe they are trying to deceive me. Maybe (in fact) they do have a son of their lord. Bring back the true story to me."

(A iii 26) (In the meantime) until Hattuša-ziti came back from Egypt, my father finally conquered the city of Carchemish. He had besieged it for seven days. Then on the eighth day he fought a battle against it for one day and [took(?)] it in a terrific battle on the eighth day, in [one] day. And when he had conquered the city — since [my father] fear[ed]

Gen 10:3

1 Kgs 11:19-20

the gods — on the upper citadel he let no one in[to the presence(?)] of (the deities) [Kubaba(?)] and LAMMA, and he did not intrude into any [of the temples]. (Rather,) he bowed (to them) and gave [...]. But from the lower town he removed the in-h[abitants], the silver, gold, and bronze utensils and carried them to Hatti. (42) And the civilian captives whom he brought to the palace numbered three thousand three hundred and thirty, (E₃ iii 15) [whereas] those whom the Hitti[tes] brought (home) [were beyond counting]. Then [he ...] his son Šarri-Kušuh and [gave] him the land of Carchemish [and] the city of [Carchemish] to govern and ma[de] him a king in his own right.

(E₃ iii 21) When he had e[stablished] Carchemish, he [went] back into the land of Hatti and spe[nt] the winter in the land of Hatti.

(E₃ iii 24) When spring arrived, Hattuša-ziti [came back] from Egypt, (A iii 44) and the messenger of Egypt, Lord Hani, came with him. Now, since my father — when he sent Hattuša-ziti to Egypt — had given him these orders: "Maybe they have a son of their lord. Maybe they deceive me and do not want my son for the kingship." — therefore the queen of Egypt wrote back to my father as follows: "Why did you say 'they deceive me' in that way? If I had a son, would I (A iv 1) have written about my own and my land's embarrassing predicament to a foreign land? You did not believe me and have dared to speak this way to me. My husband has died, (6) and I have no son. I do not wish to take one of my subjects and make him my husband. I have written to no other land, only to you. They say you have many sons. Well then, give me one of them. To me he will be a husband, but in Egypt he will be king." (A iv 13) So, since my father was kindhearted, he granted the woman's wish and set about choosing the son he would send. (end of tablet in A) (Colophon of A) Seventh tablet, (text) not complete. Not yet made into a bronze tablet.

[Gap of 6 to 12 lines. Šuppiluliuma speaks to ... Hani]

... [" ...] (E₃ iv 1) I [myself] was [...] friendly, but you, you suddenly did me evil. You [came(?)] and attacked the man of Kinza whom I had [taken away(?)] from the king of Hurri-land. (5) When I heard (this), I became angry and sent my own troops and chariots and the lords. They attacked your territory, the land of ^cAmqa. And when they attacked ^cAmqa, which is your territory, you were afraid. (10) (Therefore) you keep asking me for one of my sons (as if it were my) obligation. But [h]e will probably become a hostage, and you will not make him [king]." (13) Then Hani (replied) to my father: "O my lord, this [is ...] our land's humiliation. If we had any [a son of the king] at all, would we have come to a foreign land and kept asking for a lord for ourselves? Nibhururiya, who was our lord, has died. He had no son. Our lord's wife is childless. We are seeking a son of (you,) our lord, for the kingship of Egypt. And for the woman, our lady, we seek him as her husband. Furthermore, we went to no other land. We only came here. Now, O lord, (25) give us one of your sons." — So my father busied himself on their behalf with the matter of a son. Then my father asked for the tablet of the treaty again, (in which there was told) how formerly the Storm God took the people of Kuruštama, sons of Hatti, carried them to Egyptian territory, and made them Egyptian subjects, how the Storm God (30) concluded a treaty between the lands of Egypt and Hatti, and how they remained on friendly terms with each other.² And when they had read aloud the tablet before them, my father addressed them: (35) "Hatti and Egypt have been friends a long time. Now this too on our behalf has taken place between them. Thus Hatti and Egypt will keep on being friends." [End of tablet in E₃]

¹ "The king's wife" is a literal translation of an Eg. expression daḥamunzu which is used here. See: Federn 1960:33. Cf. the personal name Tahpenes in 1 Kgs 11:19-20. See: Krauss 1978. For the personal name Takuhli (above, A ii 18) see Laroche 1966:170-171, no. 1215; Owen 1981.

(Colophon of E₃) [... the table]t of the Deeds of Šuppiluliuma]

Fragments Following "Seventh Tablet"

(Fragment 31, KUB 19.4) [beginning broken] (5) [When] they brought this tablet, they spoke thus: ["The people of Egypt(?) killed (Šuppiluliuma's son) [Zannanza and brought word: 'Zannanza [died.]' And when] my father heard] of the slaying of Zannanza, (8) he began to lament ⁸ for [Zanna]nza, [and] to the god[s ...] he spoke [th]us: "O gods, I did [them no harm, [yet] the people of Egypt did [this to me], and they have (also) [attacked] the frontier of my land." [broken]

(Fragment 34, A. KUB 19.13 + KUB 19.14 i) [beginning broken]

(1) [...] before [... And the gods helped my father]: the Sun Goddess of Ari[nna, the Storm God of Hatti, the Storm God of the Army, and Ištar of the Battlefield, (so that)] he defeated the enemy. [...] he burned down (the towns of) [...] and [Pa]lhušša [...]. And [ag]ain [he went] to (the town of) Kamm[ama and] burned] down the town of [Kamm]ama.

(7) [When my father] had burned down [these] lands, he went [from there into] the land of Ištaḫara. [From Ištaḫara] he went into (the town of) Hattena, (10) [and] ascended [Mount ...]-šu. And he proceeded to burn down [the land of ... and the land of] Teššita. [From there] he went into (the town of) Tuḫpiliša [and re]fortified [it]. Furthermore, while my father was there, [the people of Zida]parḫa brought (him) word: "If you, O my Lord, (15) were to go [to ...] but not [to come] into the land of Zida[parḫa, [then] we would not hold out in front of the enemy." (17) [But my father] spoke [th]us: "If I from here I were [to march] along at the foot of [Mount ...]-mitta, [then I would] (have to) turn very much out [of my way." And he] (20) [marched on] from there and went into the land of T[i]kukuwa. And he] spent the night [in T[i]kukuwa. [From there he (went on and)] spent the night in Ḫurna [and] burned down [the land of Ḫurna. From there he ascended Mount Tiḫšina and burned [down] the land of Ḫauri[- ... and came t]o the river Marass[anta]. (25) [Then he went] in[to the land of D]arittara. [And becau]se it [was at pe]ac[e(?), he did not destroy(?)] the land of Daritta[ra]. But [Pitak]katalli mobilized [... in] (the town of) Š[ap]idduwa(?) [...], and he [came(?)] against my father(?). But when my father [saw(?)] h[im(?)], he did [no]t wait but [...

g 2 Sam 19:1

(31) My father [marched] away from there, as- [cended] Mount Iluriya and spent the night in (the town of) Wašḫaya. He burned down the land of Zina[- ...]. From there he (went on and) spent the night in (the town of) Kaškilišša (35) and burned down the lands of Kaškilišša and Tarukka. From there he (went on and) spent the night in (the town of) Ḫinariwanda and burned down the land of Ḫinariwanda and Iwatallišša. From there he (went on and) spent the night (in the town of) Šapidduwa and burned down the land of Šapidduwa.

(40) When he had burned down these lands, my father went into the land of Tumanna. And from [Tuma]nna he ascended Mount Kaššû and burned down [the land of ...]-naggara. And (the land of) the river Daḫara, [which] he had [con]quered, opened hostilities once again. (45) [So he] went into (the land of) the river Daḫara and burned down Daḫara and [the land of Ta]papiuwa. Then he came back [into (the town of) T]imuḫala. The town of Timuḫala was a place of pride [of the] Kaška men. He [would have] destroyed it, but they were afraid (50) [and] came to meet [him] and fell [down] to his feet; consequently, he did not destroy it, [but] made [it again part of the Hittite] land. [From there he marched away] and [went] into (the town of) [...], and from there he marched] into [the town of ...] [broken]

(Colophon) [... the tablet] of the Deeds [of Šuppiluliuma]. (Text) not complete.

² The text of the mentioned treaty has never been recovered. But it fits what we know about Hittite treaties, which always contained a historical prologue.

REFERENCES

Bryce 1989; Federn 1960; Forrer 1922; 1926; Goetze 1933; Güterbock 1956; 1960; 1983; Hoffner 1979; 1980:283-332; Houwink ten Cate 1966; Kempinski 1992; Kitchen 1962; Krauss 1978; Malamat 1955; Moran 1992; Otten 1988; Owen 1981.

THE HITTITE CONQUEST OF CYPRUS:
TWO INSCRIPTIONS OF SUPPILULIUMA II (1.75)

Harry A. Hoffner, Jr.

The present text derives from a single tablet found in the 1961 season of excavations at Boğazköy in the area of the House on the Slope. It was published in cuneiform copy by Heinrich Otten in 1963 in Keilschrifttexte aus Boghazköi, Heft XII, No. 38, and was partially transliterated and translated in the same year by Otten (1963a). The definitive edition was by Hans Güterbock in 1967 (see also Carruba 1968), who cites all anterior literature.

The tablet has four columns and contains two distinct compositions of related subject matter separated by a double horizontal rule near the bottom of column II, between lines 21 and 22. Both compositions describe Hittite military victories over the people of Cyprus, the first during the reign of the Hittite emperor Tudḫaliya IV (ca. 1239-1209) and the second under his direct successor Šuppiluliyama (=Šuppiluliuma II, ca. 1205-1175?), who was the last Hittite ruler reigning from Hattuša. Šuppiluliyama's own military operation included the first known Hittite sea battle, followed by disembarkation on Alašiya and a land battle.

Both compositions are by Šuppiluliyama, paralleling Muršili II's authoring of both the Deeds of his father Šuppiluliuma I and two sets of his own annals.¹ Šuppiluliyama tells us at the close of the first text (ii 4-21) that he made an image of his father Tudḫaliya, inscribed upon it his father's "true manly deeds," and installed it in a permanent royal mausoleum, called in Hittite ^{NA}hegur SAG.UŠ. Güterbock translated this expression as "Everlasting Peak." The determinative ^{NA} shows the structure was at least partly of stone, the verb "I built" (Hittite wedahḫun) shows it was man-made, and other texts inform us that it was reached by going "up," that it contained a shrine-like structure called the kuntarra, and that there was an inscription in it. But it is still unclear whether it was actually an entire hilltop or mountain top, or if it was a building or complex on an elevated part of the city. The most recently published Hittite textual reference to a ^{NA}hegur SAG.UŠ is found in the bronze tablet treaty between this same Tudḫaliya (IV) and King Kurunta of Tarḫuntašša.² The passage is difficult, and various translations and interpretations of the incident have been proposed.³ But in it the above-mentioned characteristics of a ^{NA}hegur SAG.UŠ are confirmed.

The second text in KBo XII 38 tells of a Hittite victory over Alašian ships, followed by further operations on Alašian soil. Güterbock has suggested that the originals of both texts were display inscriptions in Hieroglyphic Luwian: the first inscribed on a lost statue of Tudḫaliya, and the second on a relief of Šuppiluliyama, perhaps the famous Nišantaš relief. The latter, which is so badly worn as to be virtually illegible, is being studied by J. David Hawkins with a view to editing it. Since Güterbock's edition of the present text, a monumental hieroglyphic text of this same Šuppiluliyama has been unearthed in the Upper City in the area known as the "Southern Citadel" (German Südburg) and published by Hawkins.⁴ It is not only not the source of the present text, but Alašiya is not mentioned among the many geographical areas it lists where the king campaigned. This fact does not necessarily call into question the historicity of the Alašiya campaign, but it is somewhat disappointing that the newly discovered inscription does not confirm and elucidate our text. Although it is true that the opening words "I am (king so-and-so)" can be found on royal hieroglyphic display inscriptions, these inscriptions are sometimes accompanied by a relief or statue which actually depicts the king in battle dress. It is this which gives meaning to the words "I (the royal figure whom you see here) am PN." It is likely, therefore, that accompanying the second text which begins with these words was a relief or statue of Šuppiluliyama.

Since in ancient Israel it was forbidden to make an image representing God or a human ruler (see Exod 20), the mighty acts of Israelite kings were never inscribed on statues, as was the custom elsewhere in the ancient Near East. Instead the king's acts were commemorated in song (see the song about Saul and David in 1 Sam 18:6-7) and eventually in written records (2 Chr 32:32; 35:26). The mighty acts of Yahweh, Israel's true king, were similarly celebrated and remembered in song and story. But in addition certain artifacts associated with Yahweh's miraculous deeds

¹ For the former see: above, text 1.74; for the latter: Goetze 1933; Otten 1955.

² Otten 1988, col. I, lines 91ff.; see Otten's discussion on pages 42-46.

³ Among recent interpretations of the Bronze Tablet are del Monte 1991-92; Heinhöhl-Krahmer 1991-92; Houwink ten Cate 1992; Stefanini 1992; Sørensen 1992; Beal 1993.

⁴ Hawkins 1990.

were kept in the sacred ark: the manna, the stone tablets of the law, and Aaron's staff that budded (Exod 16:34; 25:16, 21; Deut 10:5; Num 17:25). In principle this corresponds to the commemoration of Tudḫaliya's mighty acts on an inscribed statue.

The First Text: About Tudḫaliya

[As an example of the nature of tribute imposed by an overlord on a vassal this text sheds light on many incidental references to paying tribute to overlords. In Num 31 the Mosaic laws governing the division of plunder and the share to be given to Yahweh's temple are regulated.]

(i 3-9) [...] I seized [...] with his wives, his children, [and ...]. I [re]moved all the goods, [including silver, gold, copper and all the captured people and [bro]ught them home to Ḫattuša. I [subjugated] the land of Alašiya and subjected it to tribute payment^a on the spot. I imposed [the following as tribute upon it:

(i 10-12) Let this tribute from the king of Alašiya and the pidduri-commissioner⁵ be (owed) to the Sungoddess of Arinna and to the Tabarna, the Great King, priest^b of the Sungoddess of Arinna:

(i 13-14) [...] of gold, one talent of copper, twenty-five liters of gayatum-grain for the Sungoddess of Arinna;

(i 15-16) [...] of gold, one talent of copper, twenty-five liters of gayatum-grain for the Stormgod of Zippalanda;

(i 17-18) [...] of gold, one talent of copper, three [sātu-measures] of gayatum-grain [for the Stormgod] of Ḫatti;

(i 19-20) [...] of gold, one talent of copper, three sātu-measures of gayatum-grain [for the Stormgod] of Nerik;

(i 21-23) [...] mi]ll(?), utensils [...] in [Ḫattu]ša they shall present.

(i 24-25) [...] all [...] they shall [...].

(ii 1-3) [...] arises [...] reverent [...]

(ii 4-10) [My father,] Tudḫaliya, [did] not [make] this statue;^c I, Šuppiluliyama, [Great King,] King of Ḫatti, son of Tudḫaliya, Great King, grandson of Ḫattušili, Great King, great-grandson of Muršili, Great King, made it.

(ii 11-16) And just as my father Tudḫaliya, Great King, was a true^d king, so I have engraved upon it a Num 31;

Judg 3;
2 Sam 8:2, 6;
1 Kgs 5:1;
17:3-4;
Hos 10:6;
Ps 72:10;
Esth 10:1

b Ps 110:4

c Exod 20:4;
Deut 5:8

d 2 Sam
18:18;
2 Kgs 13:13;
14:16;
2 Chr 21:20;
24:16, 25;
28:27

true exploits in the same way. What I have not accidentally omitted, I have also not deliberately suppressed.

(ii 17-21) I built a permanent mausoleum. I made the statue^e and had it carried into the permanent mausoleum. I installed and appeased(?) [the statue representing the deceased king].

The Second Text: About Šuppiluliyama

(ii 22-26) I am Your Majesty, the Tabarna, Šuppiluliyama, Great King, King of Ḫatti, Hero, son of Tudḫaliya, Great King, King of Ḫatti, Hero, [grandson of Ḫattušili, Great King, H[ero].

(ii 27-28) [My father,] Tudḫaliya, [...]

[The bottom of column II and the top of column III are broken away.]

(iii 1-4) And my father [...] I mobilized and I, Šuppiluliyama, Great King, immediately [crossed(?) the sea.

(iii 5-9) Ships of the land of Alašiya met me in battle three times on the high seas. I defeated them. I captured the ships and set fire to them in the sea.

(iii 10-16) When I disembarked on the shore, a large number of enemy troops came against me for battle. [I defeated] them [in] battle [...] and to me [...] sent [...]

[The following badly broken paragraph mentions troops and the land of Ḫatti. The rest of column III and the beginning of IV are lost.]

(iv 1-4) [My father, Tudḫaliya, Great King,] did [not] make [this statue.] Nothing belonging to any [...] did I [...] I, Šuppiluliyama, Great King, built for him this permanent mausoleum.^d

(iv 5-8) I installed and app[ea]sed(?) the statue [...]. I gave ... (As for) villages (to support the mausoleum) they will designate seventy.

(iv 9-14) Whoever takes (the mausoleum) away from him or subjects it to feudal duty, [the gods] who recognized Tudḫaliya (as king) will [(punish) him (in some way)].

⁵ Perhaps equivalent to the ^{LU}MAŠKIM = Akk. rābišu "royal commissioner" of Cyprus mentioned in the Amarna correspondence.

⁶ Although the term used here, ašant-, is not the technical term for "legitimate," there is probably an intended contrast of Tudḫaliya IV with Kurunta of Tarhuntašša who usurped the Hittite throne for a time in the middle of Tudḫaliya's reign. See Hoffner 1992.

REFERENCES

- Beal 1993; Carruba 1968; Del Monte 1991-92; Goetze 1933; Güterbock 1956; 1967; Hawkins 1990; Heinhold-Krahmer 1991-92; Hoffner 1992; Houwink ten Cate 1966; 1992; Otten 1955; 1963a; 1988; Stefanini 1992:143; Sørenhagen 1992.

3. BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY

THE PROCLAMATION OF TELIPINU (1.76)

Th. P. J. van den Hout

The Proclamation or Decree of King Telipinu (ca. 1500 BCE) is an attempt to put an end to the inner-dynastic strife and bloodshed which seems to have held the Hittite Empire in its grip since Hattušili I (ca. 1600 BCE). In order to do so, Telipinu refrained from killing his own opponents, sending them away unharmed, and firmly established rules of succession (§28) and of how to deal with such offenders in the future (§§29-34). As is characteristic of Hittite literature and political thinking, the need is felt to justify this ruling by giving an historical account of the reasons that led up to this decision (§§1-27). This first part of the Decree of Telipinu, thereby, is the major source for our knowledge of the Old Hittite Empire; for an historical overview of the Old Hittite Kingdom see Gurney, CAH 2:1235-1255. The second part of the text (§§35-50) seems to deal "with an agricultural-administrative reform" (Singer 1984:103) but is much less well preserved. Being a "comparatively unreligious" document (Hoffner 1975b:53) as opposed to, for instance, the Apology of Hattušili (text 1.77 below) there are not as many possible links to the Old Testament as in the latter.

This originally Old Hittite composition has come down to us only in thirteenth century copies of which there may have been as many as at least seven exemplars (Starke 1985a:101). There also existed an Akkadian version of which we have fragments of two different manuscripts. Usually this Akkadian version is taken to be a translation of the Hittite original (cf. Beckman 1985:571; Starke 1985a:109-111 vs. Hoffmann 1984:8-9).

The translation basically follows the Hittite text as given by Hoffmann 1984; for criticism see the reviews by Beckman 1985 and Starke 1985a. Where relevant the Akkadian text is used and referred to in the footnotes.

Introduction

§1 (Column 1:1-4) [Thus] the Labarna, Telipinu, Great King¹:

Historical outline: Labarna

[Fo]rmerly, Labarna was Great King² and his [son]s, [brother]s, as well as his in-laws, his (further) family members and his troops were united.

§2 (1:5-6) The land was small but wherever he went³ on campaign, he held the enemy country subdued by (his) might.

§3 (1:7-9) He destroyed the lands, one after another, stripped(?) the lands of their power and made them the borders of the sea.⁴ When he came back from campaign, however, each (of) his sons went somewhere to a country:

§4 (1:10-12) The cities of Hupišna, Tuwanuwa, Nenašša, Landa, Zallara, Paršuḫanta (and) Lušna,⁵ the(se) countries they each governed and the great cities made progress.⁶

Historical outline: Hattušili I

§5 (1:13-16) Afterwards Hattušili⁷ was King and his sons, too, his brothers, his in-laws as well as his (further) family members and his troops were united. Wherever he went on campaign, however, he, too, held the enemy country subdued by (his) might.

§6 (1:17-20) He destroyed the lands one after the other, stripped(?) the lands of their power and made them the borders of the sea. When he came back from campaign, however, each (of) his sons went somewhere to a country, and in his hand the great cities⁸ made progress.

§7 (1:21-23) When later on, however, the princes' servants became corrupt, they took to devouring their properties, they took to conspiring continually against their lords and they began to shed their⁹ blood.¹⁰

¹ That Telipinu offers no genealogy may be due to the fact that he was not of royal descent himself or at any rate not directly a king's son (see below §22 and Hoffner 1975b:51, 53). For his name as a reference to the Hattian god Telipinu, who stands for nature's prosperity, see Hoffner 1975b:53.

² The existence of a separate Great King Labarna (first half 17th century BCE) prior to and different from Hattušili I (see below §5) is now confirmed by the so-called cruciform seal; see Dinçol et al. 1993:104.

³ Lit., "goes." The historical present will be regularly translated as a past tense.

⁴ I.e., he made the sea the border of his empire; the same phrase occurs in §§6 and 8.

⁵ All to be located in southern Anatolia, just north of classical Cilicia.

⁶ Similarly Beal 1988:277; differently Hoffmann 1984:15 with n. 1 ("were well looked after"). The same phrase occurs in §6.

⁷ Hattušili I who reigned ca. 1650 BCE, and is known through several texts, among which his own annals describing his campaigns to eastern Anatolia and northern Syria.

⁸ Var. "countries."

⁹ Text: "our."

¹⁰ Kümmel (TUAT 1/5:465) took only the last sentence as the main sentence with all preceding ones as still dependent on "when."

Historical outline: Muršili I

- §8 (1:24-27) When Muršili¹¹ was King in Hattuša, his sons, too, his brothers, his in-laws, his (further) family members and his troops were united. The enemy country he held subdued by (his) might, he stripped(?) the lands of their power and made them the borders of the s[e]a.
- §9 (1:28-34) He went to the city of Halpa,¹² destroyed Halpa and brought Halpa's deportees (and) its goods to Hattuša. Now, later he went to Babylon, he destroyed Babylon¹³ and fought the Hurrian [troops]. Babylon's deportees (and) its goods he kept in Hat[tuša]¹⁴.
- §10¹⁵ And Hantili¹⁶ was cupbearer and he had Muršili's sister Har[apšili] for his wife.
- §11¹⁷ Zidanta,¹⁸ <[the ...,¹⁹ had ...] ..., the daughter of Hantili, for a wife, and he >²⁰ stole up to Hantili and they [committed] an evil deed: they killed Muršili and shed (his) blood.

Historical outline: Hantili I

- §12 (1:35-38) Hantili got afraid (saying): "Will I be protected? The gods protect him. [...] ... wherever (he) went, the population [...] ... the cities of Aštata, Šukziya, Hurpana, Carchemi[sh]²¹ [...] ... [troops] they began to [give] and troops [...]."
- §13 (1:39-42) And [when H]antili reac[hed] the city of Tegarama²² he began to say: "What (is) [t]his (that) I have done? [Why] did I listen to [the words of] Zidan[ta, m]y(?) [son-in-law]? [As soon as] he (however) [reigned] [as King],²³ the gods sought [t] (revenge for) the blood [of Muršili]²⁴."

a Gen 10:3

- §14 (1:43-46) [... the H]urrian [tr]oops, chased (like) foxes²⁵ in the b[ushes,] they [c]alled. [When the Hurrian enemy(?)²⁶ came [t]o Hatti-L[an]d, he [...]-[ed] [and ...] in(?) [the] land he roamed(?). [...] ... they called and the[m ...].
- §15 (1:47-52) (almost completed lost).
- §16 (1:53-57) [... a]nd the Queen of the city of [Šukziy]a²⁷ [... The Queen was dy[ing]. [...] Ilal[iuma] secretly s[e]n[t] out palace [attendant]s and [...] -[ed]: "May the Queen of Šukziya die!", so [they seized²⁸] her [and killed (her) [together with her children²⁹]].
- §17 (1:58-62) When Hantili inquired into (the case of) the Queen of Šukziya and her children (saying:) "Who [has] killed them?", the Chief of the palace attendants brought word. They rounded up²⁹ h[er fam]ily and [drove] them to Tega[rama].⁴ They chased them in the bushes and [they] died.
- §18 (1:63-65) And when Hantili [gre]w ol[d] and began to become a god, Zidanta killed Hantili's son, [Pišeni]³⁰ together with his sons, [and] his [chief] servants he killed.

Historical outline: Zidanta I

- §19 (1:66-68) And Zidanta bec[ame] King. The gods sought (revenge for) the blood of Pišeni, so the gods made him Ammuna,³¹ his begotten (son), his enemy³² and he killed his father Zidanta.

Historical outline: Ammuna

- §20 (1:69-71) And Ammuna became King. The gods sought (revenge for) the blood of his father Zidanta and [they did] no[t make] him, ¹¹ Grandson and adopted son of his predecessor Hattušili I, reigned ca. 1600 BCE.

¹² Aleppo.

¹³ In 1594 BCE according to the middle chronology.

¹⁴ Thus restored by Hoffmann 1984:18; in the handcopy there does not seem to be sufficient room for this restoration, however, so that a reading [KUR] ^{UR} Ha-ar[ti] "in Hat[ti]-Land" must be considered.

¹⁵ Separate paragraph in manuscript B.

¹⁶ Later successor to Muršili I.

¹⁷ Separate paragraph in manuscript B.

¹⁸ Later successor to Hantili I.

¹⁹ Probably some title has to be restored here.

²⁰ Interpolation in B.

²¹ All located in northern Syria.

²² To the south-east of Hatti-Land proper, bordering on the Hurrian territory.

²³ Restoration after Kümmel TUAT 1/5:466.

²⁴ Preserved in the Akkadian version KBo III 89 i 3 (ša "Muršili").

²⁵ The "donkeys" (ANSE.HI.A KBo III 89 i 4) of the Akkadian version may be due to a confusion of the cuneiform signs for "donkeys" and "fox" (KA₅.A).

²⁶ Restoration after Hoffmann 1984:20 n. i.

²⁷ For a provocative but highly speculative reconstruction of this affair of a Queen and the city of Šukziya, involving the Akkadian version, see Helck 1984; see also Soysal 1990.

²⁸ Preserved in the Akkadian version KBo I 27 ii 4.

²⁹ The verb "to unite" is used here but the context and the Akkadian version KBo I 27 ii 8 (iššabbatušun[uti] "they took them prisoner") suggest the above translation, cf. Starke 1985a:111.

³⁰ Also read Kaššeni (Kaš-še-ni).

³¹ Later successor to Zidanta I.

³² Var. "enemies."

the grain, wine, oxen (and) sheep [prosper(?) in his hand [but it all ...] in (his) hand.

- §21 (Column 2:1-7) Now, the land became his enemy: the cities of ...agga, [Mat]ila, Galmiya, Adaniy[a], Arzawiya,³³ Šallapa, Parduwata and Abhula. But wherever (his) troops went³⁴ on campaign, they did not come back successfully. When Ammuna, too, became god, Zuru, the Chief of the Royal Bodyguard, in those same days secretly sent, of his own offspring, his son Taḥurwaili,³⁵ Man of the Gold Spear, and he killed Titti(ya)'s family together with his sons.

Historical outline: Ḫuzziya I

- §22 (2:8-12) He sent Taruḫšu, a courier, as well and he killed Ḫantili together with [his] sons. Now, Ḫuzziya became King and Telipinu had Ištapariya, his³⁶ sister of first rank, <as his wife>. When Ḫuzziya wanted to kill them, the matter came to light and Telipinu chased them away.

Historical outline: Telipinu

- §23 (2:13-15) Five (were) his³⁷ br[ot]hers and he assigned houses to them (saying): "Let them go (and) live! Let them each eat (and) drink!" May nob[ody] do harm to them! And I declare: "They did evil to me, but I [will not do] evil to them."³⁸
- §24 (2:16-19) When I, Telipinu, had sat down on my father's throne,³⁸ I went on campaign to the city of Ḫaššuwa³⁹ and I destroyed Ḫaššuwa. My troops were in the city of Zizzilippa as well and in Zizzilippa a battle ensued.

b1 Sam 24:5-15; 26:9

- §25 (2:20-25) When I, the King, came to the city of Lawazantiya,⁴⁰ Laḫḫa⁴¹ was [hostile to me] and made Lawazantiya rebellious. The gods put him at my mercy.⁴² Of the Chiefs (there were) many: the Commander of Thousand, [...], Karuwa, the Commander of the Chamberlains, Inara, the Commander of the Cupbearers, Kill[a], the Commander of the [...], Tarḫumimma, the Commander of the Staffbearers, Zinwašeli and Lelli, and they secretly sent (a message) to Tanuwa, the Staffbearer.

- §26 (2:26-30) I, [the Ki]ng, did not k[no]w [and he killed Ḫ]u[zzi]y[a] and his brothers as well. [W]hen I, the King, heard (of it), they brought Tanuwa, Taḥurwaili [and] Taruḫš[u] and the Council⁴³ sentenced them to death. And I, the King, said: "[W]hy do they die? They will hide (their) eyes concerning them!"⁴⁴ I, the King, made them into tru[e⁴⁵] farmers: I have taken their weapons from the shoulder and have given them a yok[e(?)⁴⁶].

- §27 (2:31-35) The blood of the whole royal family spread: Ištapariy[a], the Queen, died, later it happened that Ammuna, the prince, died. The "Men of the Gods," too, each said: "Behold, blood(shed) is widespread in Ḫattuša." So I, Telipinu, summoned an assembly in Ḫattuša. From now on in Ḫattuša, let nobody do evil to a son⁴⁷ of the family and draw a dagger on him.

Succession rules

- §28 (2:36-39)⁴⁸ King shall become a son (who is a) prince of first rank⁴⁹ only.⁵⁰ If there is no first

³³ Country located in south-western Anatolia. Reading according to B with Hoffmann 1984:26, Kümmel TUAT 1/5:467; A has Ar-za-mi-ya, cf. Beckman 1985:571.

³⁴ Lit., "goes" (present singular). In spite of the formal accusative plural of ÉRIN.MEŠ-uš, which could either be emended into a nominative (-iš, cf. Starke 1985a:112) or taken as a modernization by a late thirteenth century scribe, this translation is preferred over the (formally possible) one offered by Hoffmann 1984:27 ("But wherever he went to the troops on campaign"); cf. CHD L-N 4 and Kümmel TUAT 1/5:467.

³⁵ For this Taḥurwaili see Carruba 1974. ("Became God" = died, said of kings and queens.)

³⁶ I.e., Ḫuzziya's; Telipinu's only explicit link to the royal family may thus have been his marriage to Ištapariya; see also §1 with note.

³⁷ I.e., Ḫuzziya's.

³⁸ In the case of Telipinu — not being a king's son himself — this clearly is a stock phrase, unless he was Ammuna's son; cf. Gurney CAH 2/1:663.

³⁹ In northern Syria.

⁴⁰ Near Ḫaššuwa in the Anti-Taurus.

⁴¹ This same Laḫḫa occurs otherwise only in connection with Ḫuzziya in an historical fragment by Telipinu; see Carruba 1974:77-78 and Hoffmann 1984:63-67.

⁴² Lit., "put him in my hand."

⁴³ Council to the Hittite king in mainly legal matters normally consisting of the highest authorities in the empire; most of these probably were members of the extended royal family.

⁴⁴ I.e., they will further ignore them completely; for this expression see Hoffmann 1984:120-122. For taking the two sentences as questions see the discussion in CHD L-N 331 with literature.

⁴⁵ Or "simp[le]"? The translation by Haase 1984:53 "I castrated them (and) made them into farmers" is a misinterpretation of the adj. karš[auš].

⁴⁶ Reading suggested after the context by Forrer 1926:42 n. 8 and followed by most scholars, although noting that the traces rather favor ^{46a}BA[LAG] (a musical instrument); differently Carruba 1974:75 ("And I gave them the hand(?) ..."), Hoffmann 1984:31 ("And I gave them shackles").

⁴⁷ Or "child."

⁴⁸ This paragraph states the actual rules for succession.

⁴⁹ I.e., a son of the main or first wife of the king.

⁵⁰ Translation with Hoffmann 1984:33 according to manuscript A; following the slightly differing manuscript G a translation "of the sons only the prince of first rank" is also feasible, cf. Starke 1985a:112.

rank prince, he who is a son of second rank shall become King. If there is no prince, (no) male, she who is a first rank princess, for her they shall take an in-marrying (son-in-law) and he shall become King.

§29 (2:40-45) Who will become king after me in future, let his brothers, his sons, his in-laws, his (further) family members and his troops be united! You will come (and) hold the country subdued with (your) might. And do not speak as follows: "I will clean (it) out," for you will not clean anything. On the contrary, you will get involved yourself.⁵¹ Do not kill anybody of your!⁵² family. It (is) not right.

§30 (2:46-49) Furthermore, whoever becomes King and seeks evil for (his) brother (or) sister, you too are his Council and tell him straight: "This (is) a matter of blood." Look at the tablet (that says):⁵³ "Formerly, blood(shed) became excessive in Ḫattuša, and the gods took it out on the royal family."

§31 (2:50-58) If anyone does evil amongst both (his) brothers and sisters and lays eyes on the king's head,⁵⁴ summon the assembly and, if h[is] testimony is dismissed,⁵⁵ he shall pay with his head. They shall not kill secretly, however, like Zuruwa, Tanuwa, Taḫurwaili and Taruḫšu. They shall not commit evil against his house, his wife (and) his children. So,⁵⁶ if a prince sins, he shall pay with (his) own head, while they shall not commit evil against his house and his children. For⁵⁷ the reason for which princes usually die (does) not (affect) their houses, their fields, their vineyards, their male (and) female servants, their oxen (and) their sheep.

§32 (2:59-65) So now, if some prince sins, he shall pay with (his) own head while you shall not commit evil against his house and his son. Giving (away) even a prince's blade of straw (or) a chip of wood⁵⁸ is not right. Those who commit these evil deeds, the [Chiefs of Staff(?)], (that is,) the Major-Domos, the Chief of the Palace Attendants, the Chief of the Royal Bodyguard and the Chief-of-the-Wine,⁵⁹ [if?] they want to take a prince's houses and [s]ay thus: "I wish that city to be mine," then he commits evil against the city lord.

§33 (2:66-73) But now, from this day onwards in Ḫattuša you, palace attendants, royal bodyguards, golden-chariot fighters, cupbearers, w[aite]rs, cooks, staff bearers, grooms, commanders of a [field] ba[tallion], remember this word. Let Tanuwa, Taḫurwaili and Taruḫšu be a warning to you! [If] someone commits evil again, either the Major Domo, the Chief of the [pala]ce attendants or the Chief of the Royal Bodyguard or the Chief of commanders of a field battallion — whether a lo[w]er (or) higher ranking one — you too, Council, seize (him) and devour him with your teeth!

§34 (Column 3:1-3) Now, in Ḫattuša they must take⁶⁰ the Chiefs of Staff, (that is,) the Major-Domos, the Chief of the Palace Attendants, the Chief-of-the-Wine, the Chief of the Royal Bodygu[ard], the Chief of the Chariot Fighters, the Commander of the Bailiffs, the troop[s], those who are grea[t(?) in [the King's(?) h]ouse, [as well as furthe]rmore

⁵¹ Lit., "you will close yourself in," that is, by killing someone else yourself you will not break the chain of murders in the royal family and you will end up dead yourself, whereas by sparing an opponent's life you will break the chain of murders. Normally, the verb ḫatkišnuši is taken in its literal sense as transitive with the object not expressed (cf. Sturtevant-Bechtel 1935:191 "you pardon nothing) and actually order (his) arrest", Bryce n.d.:137 ("You must press him [i.e., the offender] all the more"), Kümmel TUAT 1/5:469 and Hoffmann 1984:33 "you will really oppress"), but the reflexive particle -za ("yourself"), not normally present with this verb, strongly suggests the above, more metaphorical interpretation.

⁵² Lit., "his."

⁵³ Or "See this matter of bloodshed in the light of the tablet (which says): '...'"

⁵⁴ For the correct reading (ḫar-aš-ša-na-a "to the head") and interpretation (an offender, not identical to the king, plots against the king's life) see Melchert 1977:222-223 (cf. Bryce n.d.:157-158); for other interpretations based on the reading ḫaraškanā see Hoffner 1982 ("look to the person of the king" = have recourse to) and Kümmel TUAT 1/5:469 (the offender either claims immunity because of his close relationship with the king or — if the offender is king himself — points to his responsibilities as king). Some scholars (e.g., Sturtevant-Bechtel 1935:191; Hoffner 1982; Haase 1984:53) have assumed that the king is the implied subject of the first sentence and his victim the subject of the second. This then results in the unique stipulation that the king could be called to account and could be put to death. The unexpressed change of subject between the first two sentences resulting from such an interpretation, however, seems a major, although not unsurmountable, objection to it.

⁵⁵ Lit., "goes." This sentence has been interpreted variously, either referring to the verdict of the assembly ("when its word goes" i.e., when sentence is passed, cf. Haase 1984:53; Hoffmann 1984:35; Kümmel TUAT 1/5:469), to the plan of the offender ("If at that time he goes ahead with his plan?"), cf. Sturtevant-Bechtel 1935:191 and Bryce n.d.:137), to the offender's case ("If his case goes against him," cf. Carruba 1964:421; Hoffner 1982:508) or to the offender's testimony ("If his speech fails him(?)" i.e., the accused stands silent, cf. Melchert 1977:223-224). The translation suggested here elaborates on the last one.

⁵⁶ The enclitic conjunction -ma is here taken as resumptive instead of adversative ("however"), thus avoiding a contrast which does not seem to be there.

⁵⁷ The enclitic conjunction -ma is here taken as marking an explanation.

⁵⁸ For the same phrase, see p. 204 §13 below. For the same phrase in Akk., see CAD s.v. ḫuṣābu.

⁵⁹ This title indicates one of the highest military officials.

⁶⁰ The exact meaning of "to take" here is unclear; Hoffmann 1984:39 n. 2 suggests "to respect."

their subordinates.

Administrative and other reforms

- §35 (3:4-6) Now, [in (the territory of) Ḫat]tuša the fortified cities [must be] protected. Do not leave them! The fortified cities [... w]ater, but divert it 10 (to) 20 times to the grain.
- §36 (3:7-16) (hardly anything is preserved here; line 7 mentions "T[e]lipinu, Great King"⁶¹)
- §37 (3:17-33) (fragmentarily preserved; contains a list of at least "60 [+ x?] cities (and their) storehouses"⁶²)^c
- §38 (3:34-42) (fragmentarily preserved; contains a list of "34 cities (and their) storehouses for (fodder) mix"⁶³)
- §39 (3:43-48) I made the grain abundant again [...] the farmers those very fields ... [...] they must [s]eal. All those the population ... [..., but(?) let] them [not(?) commit fraud! Beyond (their) ration(?) they kept binding either one or two cubits(?),⁶⁴ so they drank out the country's blood. But do not let them do (it) now! Whoever does it, may they give⁶⁵ him an evil death!
- §40 (3:49-54) (You) who in future will bec[om]e king after me, always seal the gra[i]n with your⁶⁶ name. Behold, the administrators of the seal house will leave you and speak to you thus: "[... there (is) n]ot(?).⁶⁷ Do not seal it, however, for yourself(?), always [s]eal [it ...]" And, behold, the[y will] lift you up⁶⁸ ...
- §41-43 (3:55-68) [except for a few traces not preserved]
- §44 (3:69-75) [Who from n]ow on [will become king after] m[e and ...] ... humili[ates and] says thus [to yo]u: "[...]" Do not listen! [...]

c 1 Kgs 9:19;
2 Chr 8:6

d Exod 22:17;
Deut 18:10-14

If you [have] harnesse[d] a deportee, you shall always compensate the equipment. The troops [...], and [...] him to either your wife o[r ...].

§45-47 (Column 4:1-20) [partly lost, partly too fragmentarily preserved to be translated]

§48 (4:21-26) [Wh]en [lat]er on the karpinattiš(?)⁶⁹ of mortals took to div[id]ing ..., and [they were], oh so⁷⁰ disr[espectful] and therefore they⁷¹ were struck by the god(s). But now, from no[w on, ...] if he somehow calls on them, (his) living parents because of (his) share, and whatever he calls on them with (his) mouth to share, they must throw him out of the house, and he must forfeit his own share.

§49 (4:27-29) And the procedure in case of bloodshed (is) as follows: whoever commits bloodshed, only (that) which the "lord of the blood" says (will happen): if he says "He shall die," let him die, but if he says "He shall pay" let him pay. For the king (there will be) nothing, however.

§50 (4:30-34) (The procedure in case) of witchcraft in Ḫattuša (is) as follows: You must clear all matters of (it). Whoever within the family knows witchcraft, you must seize him from the family and bring him to the palace gate. But [wh]oever does not bring him, for that man⁷² a bad end will come.^d Colophon (4:35-36) First tablet of Telipinu. Finished.

⁶¹ Singer 1984:103-104 suspects this paragraph might have contained a list of storehouse towns similar to the two following paragraphs, located in the central Hittite area.

⁶² As far as attested in other texts, the geographical names "point to the northern ranges of the Antitaurus (... and) the region south of the Tuz Gölü," cf. Singer 1984:103. Singer (p. 104) also reminds of the "store cities, chariot cities and cities of the horsemen" in 1 Kgs 9:19; 2 Chr 8:6.

⁶³ None of the geographical names preserved in this list can be located with certainty.

⁶⁴ The meaning of this sentence remains problematic and unclear; cf. Singer 1984:104-105.

⁶⁵ The third person plural imperative was almost completely preserved according to Forrer 1926:45 ("bi[-a]n-du"), although not given in the hand copy by Figulla in KBo III p. 5.

⁶⁶ Although the verb is in the singular, the possessive pronoun is plural, possibly referring to the future kings. Hoffmann 1984:47 takes the possessive as a third person ("their").

⁶⁷ So Singer 1984:105 (NU.G)AL; differently Hoffmann 1984:47 (zi-i]k').

⁶⁸ Singer 1984:105: "They will further lead you (astray)."

⁶⁹ Although a hapax of unknown meaning, may be better so than taken (with Hoffmann 1984:52) as two words (karpina attiš), cf. Starke 1985a:112.

⁷⁰ Cf. Beckman 1985:572.

⁷¹ Text has singular verb form.

⁷² C adds: "in his very own house."

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 19. Translation: TUAT 1/5:464-470; CAH 2/1:235-255; Discussion: Beal 1988; Beckman 1985; Bryce n.d.; Carruba 1964; 1974; Dinçol, Dinçol, Hawkins, and Wilhelm 1993; Forrer 1926; Haase 1984; Helck 1984; Hoffmann 1984; Hoffner 1975b; 1982:507-509; Melchert 1977; Singer 1984; Starke 1985a; Sturtevant and Bechtel 1935:182-200.

APOLOGY OF ḪATTUŠILI III (1.77)

Th. P. J. van den Hout

The so-called "Apology" of Ḫattušili III (1267-ca. 1240 BCE) is one of the major Hittite historical texts that have come down to us. At least eight different manuscripts must have existed among which were one-tablet and two-tablet versions, thus illustrating the relative importance the Hittites must have attached to it. All fragments have been found in the eastern storerooms of the Great Temple (Temple 1) in the Lower City of Ḫattuša/Boğazköy; this corresponds to the repeated mention of the deposition of historical texts "before the deity" (e.g. cf. below Apology §5 end). Since Götze (1925:113 n. 2), scholars have taken the peace treaty with Ramesses II in 1259 BCE as a terminus post quem for the composition of the text, because of §12b ("(Those) who had been enemies in the days of my fathers (and) grandfat[her]s, concluded peace with me"); for a late date towards the end of Ḫattušili's reign see Tadmor (1983:37-38, 54-57), and Houwink ten Cate (1992:265-267 n. 47).

The composition is notoriously difficult to categorize as to its genre, cf. the discussion in Wolf (1967:12-22); see further Archi (1971:186), Hoffner (1975b:49), Cancik (1976:41-44), Otten (1981:3 with n. 8 and 23 with n. ad IV 1f) Güterbock (1983:30). The designation "Apology" was first used by Sturtevant in 1935 in the heading of the relevant chapter, although he spoke of a "Justification" in the introduction (1935:84). The text may be described as a decree instituting the cult of the goddess Ištar, appointing Ḫattušili's son Tuḫaliya and future descendants as her priests, and granting tax freedom to her temple, all this more than amply justified by Ištar's divine providence which Ḫattušili claims to have experienced in his rise to power, so that the composition takes on the character of a eulogy to Ištar, but above all an apology as well as a religious legitimization of his usurpation. The text as a whole has often been compared with the story of David and Samuel in 1 Sam 15 - 2 Sam 8; for details see Wolf 1967. For an historical overview of Ḫattušili's life and times see Ünal 1974 and van den Hout 1995.⁴

The following translation is based on the edition by Otten 1981. The main manuscript is KUB I 1+ (A), restored where necessary by its duplicates. Only twice a reading from KBo III 6+ (B) is preferred: in ii 32 and 40 as indicated in the footnotes. Variants other than merely orthographic have been noted in the footnotes as well. The division into paragraphs also follows A except for the subdivisions in §§10(a-d) and 12(a-b) according to the manuscripts B and F.

Introduction: Genealogy

§1 (Column 1:1-4) Thus Tabarna Ḫattušili, Great King, King of Ḫatti, son of Muršili, Great King, King of Ḫatti, grandson of Šuppiluliuma, Great King, King of Ḫatti, descendant of Ḫattušili, King of Kuššar.¹

a 1 Sam 15 -
2 Sam 8

(Now,) Ištar, My Lady, sent Muwatalli, my brother to Muršili, my father, through a dream (saying): "For Ḫattušili the years (are) short, he is not to live (long). Hand him over to me, and let him be my priest, so he (will) live." My father took me up, (while still) a boy, and handed me (over) to the service of the goddess, and as a priest I brought offerings to the goddess. At the hand of Ištar, My Lady, I experienced prosperity, and Ištar, My Lady, took me by the hand⁵ and provided for me.

Prooemium

§2 (1:5-8) Ištar's divine providence I will proclaim. Let man² hear it! And may in future His Majesty's son, his grandson (and further) offspring of His Majesty be respectful among the gods towards Ištar!

Ḫattušili under Muwatalli; Armatarhunta's first lawsuitḪattušili's early youth; Ištar's first intervention

§3 (1:9-21) My father Muršili begot us four children: Ḫalpašulupi, Muwatalli, Ḫattušili and Maššanauzzi, a daughter. Of all these I was the youngest child.³ As long as I was still a boy, I was a 'one-of-the reins'.⁴

§4 (1:22-60) When my father Muršili became god,⁶ my brother Muwatalli seated himself on the throne of his father, while I became army commander in front of my brother. My brother installed me as Chief of the Royal

¹ I.e., Ḫattušili I, ca. 1650 BCE.

² Var. "everybody."

³ This sentence is omitted in B.

⁴ Literal translation of the logograms Š4 KUŠ.KA.TAB ANŠE, possibly designating a "chariot driver."

⁵ The king being taken by the hand of his personal deity is illustrated on many reliefs and seal impressions. Such representations are known for Muwatalli II, Muršili III/Urḫitešub and Tuḫaliya IV; for Ḫattušili III we only have the description of such a scene on the seal on the silver tablet containing the peace treaty with Ramesses II, cf. Edel TUAT 1/2:152.

⁶ I.e., "died" in 1295 BCE.

Bodyguard⁷ and gave me the Upper Country⁸ to govern. So I was in command of the Upper Country. Prior to me, however, Armatarhunta,⁹ son of Zida, used to govern it. (Now,) since Ištar, My Lady, had shown me her recognition, and my brother Muwatalli had been benevolent towards me — when people saw the recognition of Ištar, My Lady, and my brother's benevolence towards me, they envied me. Armatarhunta, son of Zida, and other people as well began to cause me harm, they were evil to me, and defeat hung over me. My brother, Muw[at]alli summoned me 'to the wheel'.¹⁰ But Ištar, My Lady, appeared to me in a dream, and through the dream she said this to me: "To the deity (of the process)" I will leave you, so do not fear!" and through the deity I was acquitted.¹² Since the goddess, My Lady, held me by the hand, she never exposed me to an evil deity (nor) to an evil lawsuit, never did she let an enemy weapon sway over me: Ištar, My Lady, took me to her in every respect. Whenever illness befell¹³ me, sick as I was, I looked on (it) as the goddess' providence. The goddess, My Lady, held me by the hand in every respect. But, since I was a man divinely provided for, since I walked before the gods in divine providence, I never did an evil thing against man.¹⁴ You goddess, My Lady, always take me to you in every respect, wasn't it? The goddess, My Lady, never passed me over in time of fear, she never let me down before the enemy, nor did she ever let me down before my opponent in court (or) before (my) enviers: whether it (concerned) an enemy's word, or <the word> of an opponent or some word from the palace, it was Ištar, My Lady, who held (her) mantle over me in every respect, took

b 2 Sam 8:6, 14

me to her in every respect. Ištar, My Lady, put my enemies and enviers at my mercy¹⁵ and I finished them off.⁶

Hattušili's early military successes

§5 (1:61-74) Now, when my brother Muwatalli looked into the matter, not one evil thing was left against me. So he took me back and put me in charge of all¹⁶ the troops (and) chariots of Hatti Land, and all the troops (and) chariots of Hatti Land I commanded. My brother Muwatalli kept sending me out, and now that Ištar, My Lady, had shown me (her) recognition, wherever I cast my glance towards enemy country, no enemy cast a glance back at me and each of the enemy countries I conquered: the recognition of Ištar, My Lady, was mine. And whoever was an enemy within the Lands of Hatti, I expelled him right out of the Lands of Hatti. Which enemy countries I conquered one after the other, while still young, these I will describe separately on a tablet and I will lay it down before the goddess.¹⁷

Muwatalli moves the capital to Tarhuntašša; Hattušili suppresses the Kaškaeans

§6 (1:75-76) Now, when my brother Muwatalli at the behest of his own deity went down to the Lower Land,¹⁸ he left (the city of) Hattuša behind.

(Column 2:1-30) He took up [the gods] of Hatti and the Manes¹⁹ and [c]arried them to the land of [Tarhuntašša]. Thereupon, however, (of) all the Kaška Lands Pišhuru (and) Da-ištapašša revolted. The land of Išhup[ita], Marišta and the fortresses they destr[oye]d. The enemy crossed the Maraššanda²⁰ river and began to raid the land of Kaneš,²¹ began to ra[i]d the city of [...]. The cities of Ha[...], Kuruštama and Gazziura turned hostile on the spot. They began to raid the cities²² of Hatti,

⁷ This title, certainly exceeding its literal meaning, designates one of the highest ranking and most influential (military) officials at the Hittite court.

⁸ I.e., the territory (north)-east of the capital Hattuša, bordering the northern Pontic area, home of the Kaška tribes.

⁹ He was a cousin of Hattušili's father Muṣili II.

¹⁰ Whereas the sumerogram for "wheel" is written with the determinative for wooden objects in manuscript A (^{GB}UMBIN), it is written with the divine determinative in B (^{GB}UMBIN). Usually, this is taken to refer to some judicial procedure.

¹¹ It is not exactly clear to what deity is referred to here. Kümmel (TUAT 1/5:483 n.) assumes the deity is a personal, protective deity, although that should be Ištar herself. Some scholars (see Neumann 1985:290) have suggested taking this sentence as a rhetorical question: "Would I leave you to (some other) deity?" The interpretation here follows Götze (1925:69) who thought of a deity handling Hattušili's case in court. The variant writing of the "wheel" with the divine determinative may support this view.

¹² Lit., "I became clean."

¹³ Lit., "befalls."

¹⁴ Or "I never did the evil thing of man," thus Otten 1981:7.

¹⁵ Lit., "in the hand."

¹⁶ This word omitted in B.

¹⁷ For the "laying down" of tablets in the temple see the introductory remarks to this text.

¹⁸ I.e., the area south of the capital Hattuša, in the Konya plain.

¹⁹ Lit., "Dead ones." These are the statues and bones of deceased royal ancestors.

²⁰ Formerly thought to be the classical Halys, nowadays Kızıl Irmak, but this equation has now become problematic, cf. CHD L-N 201.

²¹ Nowadays Kültepe.

²² Lit., "ruin mounds."

while the enemy of the land of Durmitta began to raid [T]uhuppiya. [...] the land of Ipaššana, however, was uninhabited, [so the enemy troops] penetrated as far as the land of Šuwadara. Both the cities of [Hakpiš] and Ištaḫara,²³ however, escaped [but since the land] was cut off, they did not till their fields for ten years. Further, during the years that my brother Muwatalli was in Hatti, all Kaška Lands became hostile and they destroyed the lands of Šaddupa and Dankuwa. So he laid siege to the city of Pittiyariga. And my brother Muwatalli sent me, but gave me troops (and) chariots in small numbers. I took along auxiliary troops in small numbers from the country and went: I oppressed the enemy at the city of Haḫḫa and fought him. The Lady,²⁴ My Lady, marched ahead of me, I defeated him and erected a monument(?).²⁵ What (population of the city of) Hattuša he held, that I took away and resettled it all. The (enemy) commanders, however, I seized and handed them to my brother. This, now, was my first manly deed²⁶ (and) Istar, My Lady, for the first time proclaimed my name^c on this campaign.

Hattušili's further successes against the Kaškaeans

§7 (2:31-47) It so happened, however, that the Pišḫurean enemy invaded (the country), and Karaḫna (and) Marišta [were] within the enemy country. On one side the country of Takkašta was its border,²⁷ on the other the city of Talmaliya was its border. Eight hundred teams of horses were (there) whereas the troops were innumerable. My brother Muwatalli sent me and he gave me one hundred and twenty teams of horses, but not even a single military man was with me. There too Istar, My Lady, marched ahead of me, and there too, I personally conquered the enemy. When I killed the man who was in command,²⁸ the enemy fled. The cities of Hatti Land which had been cut off, they each fought and began to defeat the enemy. A monument(?) in the city of Wištawanda I erected. There, too, the recognition of Istar, My Lady, was mine. The weapon that I held there, I had it inlaid and I deposited²⁹ it in front of the goddess, My Lady.

c 2 Sam 7:9

Hattušili becomes King of Hakpiš

§8 (2:48-68) My brother Muwatalli followed me and fortified the cities Anziliya and Tapiqqa,³⁰ (then) he went right off, did not come near me at all and he let³¹ the troops (and) chariots of Hatti-Land march ahead and led them home. Then he gathered the gods of Hatti and the Manes on the spot, carried them down to the city of Tarḫuntašša and took (up residence in)³² Tarḫuntašša. To Durmitta (and) Kuruštama, however, he did not go. In these countries he left me (behind), and these desolate countries he gave me to govern. The lands³³ of Išḫupitta, Marišta, Hiššašḫapa, Katapa, Hanḫana, Daraḫna, Hattena, Durmitta, Pala, Tumanna, Gaššiya, Šappa, the Hūlana River (and their) chariots and 'golden' chariot fighters I commanded all. The lands of Hakpiš and Ištaḫara he gave me in vassalship and in Hakpiš he made me king. Concerning these desolate countries, which my brother had put me in charge of³⁴ — because Istar, My Lady, held me by the hand, some enemies I defeated,³⁵ while others concluded peace with me.³⁶ Istar, My Lady, sided with me and these desolate lands I resettled on my own and made them Hittite again.

The battle at Kadesh; Armatarḫunta's second attempt to bar Hattušili; Hattušili's marriage to Puduḫepa

§9 (2:69-82) Now, when it happened, that my brother went to Egypt,³⁷ I led for my brother

²³ All lands mentioned here were probably located in or near the "Upper Country," i.e., immediately east of Hattuša.

²⁴ Mistake for Istar?

²⁵ Translation suggested by the context; the sumerogram + phonetic complement, if correctly identified as such, could be interpreted as the word for "hand," although in a special usage restricted to this text, thus matching one of the usages of the Hebrew word, cf. Wolf 1967:52-53.

²⁶ The Hittite word pešnatar (LÚ-natar) translated here by "manly deed" literally means "masculinity, manliness." Thus it matches the Heb. word g'buratō (cf. 1 Kgs 15:23; 16:5 et passim) derived from geber "male, man."

²⁷ Manuscript A (KUB I 1 + ii 32) being corrupt here, the translation follows manuscript B (KBo III 6 + ii 16-17) at this point.

²⁸ Although manuscript A ii 40 is broken at this point, it seems to have had an extra sentence, possibly concerning the enemy commander, which was left out in B ii 23. Manuscript B is followed here. For the parallel with 1 Sam 17, see Hoffner 1968c.

²⁹ Present tense in B: "I (will) deposit;" cf. also the remark in the introduction to this text.

³⁰ B adds "for me."

³¹ B adds "all."

³² Var. "built/fortified." The site of Tarḫuntašša has not yet been located with certainty. The land of Tarḫuntašša must have comprised classical Cilicia Aspera and territory directly north of it.

³³ All the lands mentioned here are located in the northern half of Anatolia encircling Hattuša to its west, north and east.

³⁴ Lit., "had put in (my) hand."

³⁵ B adds "with the weapon."

³⁶ This sentence has mostly been interpreted to refer to the peace treaty between Ramesses II and Hattušili (1259 BCE), thus providing us with an important terminus post quem for the composition of the "Apology"; see the remarks above in the introduction to this text.

³⁷ This refers to the battle of Kadesh in 1275 BCE.

on campaign down to Egypt the troops (and) chariots of those lands which I had resettled, and I commanded the troops (and) chariots of Ḫatti-Land of which I was in charge in front of my brother. But when Armatarḫunta, son of Zida, saw the benevolence of Ištar, My Lady, and of my brother towards me, they (i.e. Armatarḫunta) with his wife (and) his son then began to cast spells over me, because they were not successful in any (other) way. Even Šamuḫa,³⁸ the city of the goddess, he filled with spells. When, however, I returned from Egypt, I marched to the city of Lawazantiya³⁹ to bring offerings to the goddess and worshipped the goddess.

(Column 3:1-13) [A]t the behest of the goddess I took Puduḫepa, the daughter of Pentipšarri, the priest, for my wife: we joined (in matrimony) [and] the goddess gave [u]s the love of husband (and) w[if]e. We made ourselves sons (and) daughters.⁴⁰ Then the goddess, My Lady, appeared to me in a dream (saying): "Become my servant [with] (your) household!" so the goddess' [serv]ant with my household I became.⁴¹ In the house which we made ourselves, the goddess was there with us and our house thrived: that was the recognition of Ištar, My Lady. [Then] I [w]ent and [fo]rtified the cities of Ḫawarkina and Dilmuna. Ḫakpiš, however, turned hostile. I sent Kaškaeans and on my own I set it straight again. I became King of Ḫakpiš while my wife became [Queen of] Ḫakpiš.⁴¹

Armatarḫunta's downfall; Muwatalli succeeded by Urḫitešub; Ḫattušili declares war on Urḫitešub

§10a (3:14-30) Now, when it happened, that the lawsuit⁴² was somehow reopened by the palace, Ištar, My Lady, at that moment too showed (her) divine providence. The process resulted again in the verdict: They found witchcraft on Armatarḫunta, with his wife (and) his sons, and they charged him with it. He had filled Šamuḫa, the city of my goddess, with witch[craf]t, so the goddess, My

d Josh 24:15

e 1 Sam
24:5-15;
26:9

Lady, made him succumb to me. And with his property, his wife (and) his son⁴³ my brother turned him over to me and my brother said to me: "Šippaziti (is) not involved)." So, because my brother had made me triumph over [Arma]tarḫunta through the process, I did not fall back into further evil against him, and [be]cause Armatarḫunta was a blood relative of mine, (and because) moreover, he was an old man,⁴⁴ he provoked (feelings of) pity in me [a]nd I let him go. Šippaziti, to[o], his [son], I let go.⁴⁵ I did not harm them in any way.⁴⁵ Armatarḫunta's [wif]e and his (other) son, however, I sent [t]o Alašiya⁴⁶ (in exile). I took half [(his) estate] and gave it back to Armatarḫunta. §10b (3:31-54) Because my [broth]er Muwatalli had [gi]ven [me the cities of ... -]ta, Durmitta, Zip[lanta, Ḫat]tena, Ḫakpiš (and) Ištar[ahar]ja [in vassalship], I resettled [... the(se) deso]late (territories). [When] my [bro]ther became [go]d — because I [co]mmanded [Ḫatt]uša and (because) he had [...] me in lordship, I di[d] not [do] anything (evil) out of regard for [the love] for [m]y br[other]. T]herefore, sin[ce] my brother did not have a [l]egitimate son, I took up Urḫitešub, son of a concubine. [I put] him into lordship over [Ḫa]tti Land and laid all of [Ḫattuša] in (his) hand,⁴⁷ so that he was Great King over the Ḫatti Lands, while I was king of Ḫakpiš. With the troops (and) chariots [...]. Because the city of Nerik had been destroyed since the days of (king) Ḫantili,⁴⁸ I rebu[il]t it and (of) the countries that surrounded Nerik, [I ma]de the cities of Nera (and) Ḫaštira the border. I [s]ubdued them completely and [made them m]y tributaries. [The mountain of] Ḫaḫarwa and the Maraššanda River [...], whatever they held in oppression towards Nerik (and) Ḫakpiš, I subdued them completely. §10c (3:54-79) However, when Urḫitešub thus saw the benevolence [o]f the goddess towards me, he became envious of me, he [beg]an to harm me:

³⁸ Ca. 200 km east of Ḫattuša.

³⁹ To the south-east of Ḫattuša in the vicinity of the Antitaurus.

⁴⁰ For these children, see van den Hout 1995.

⁴¹ Both Otten 1981:17 and Kümmel TUAT 1/5:487 translate differently: "I became King of Ḫakpiš, you, the woman, however, became [Queen of] Ḫakpiš." For the above translation see Neumann 1985:292.

⁴² I.e., the lawsuit of Armatarḫunta.

⁴³ Var. "sons."

⁴⁴ Armatarḫunta was of the generation of Ḫattušili's father.

⁴⁵ Var. "(And) I left them alone."

⁴⁶ Cyprus.

⁴⁷ Ḫattušili almost certainly gives himself too much credit here. According to the succession rules laid down by Telipinu, Urḫitešub was the sole legitimate heir, whom his father Muwatalli had kept to himself to raise him as his successor. Urḫitešub's brother Kurunta, however, was according to the Bronze Tablet (cf. Otten 1988:11) already as a boy entrusted by Muwatalli to Ḫattušili. A recently found bulla with the double sealing of both Muwatalli and Urḫitešub may point in the same direction.

⁴⁸ I.e., either Ḫantili I, the Old Hittite king and successor to Muršili I, shortly after 1600 BCE or Ḫantili II, the 15th century king.

he took away from me all those in my service,⁴⁹ and (all) the desolate countries which I had resettled, those too he took away from me. He humiliated me, but at the behest of the goddess he did not take away Ḫakpiš from me. Be[cau]se I was priest to the Stormgod of Nerik, he therefore did not take that (city) away from me (either). Out of regard for the love for my brother I did not react at all and during seven years I complied. He, however, sought my destruction at divine and human behest and he took away from me Ḫakpiš and Nerik. Now I no longer complied and I became hostile to him. But when I became hostile to him, I did not commit a moral offence⁵⁰ by revolting against him on the chariot or by revolting against him within (his) house. (No,) in a manly way I declared to him: "You opposed me. You (are) Great King, whereas I (am) king of the single fortress that you left me. So come! Istar of Šamuḫa and the Stormgod of Nerik will judge us."⁵¹ When I wrote thus to Urḫitešub — if someone speaks thus: "Why did you at first install him in kingship, but why do you now declare war on him in writing?" (I will answer:) "If he had in no way opposed me, would they (i.e. the gods) really have made a Great King succumb to a petty king?" Because he has now opposed me, the gods have made him succumb to me by (their) judgement.

§10d (Column 4:1-6) When I declared him these words: "Come!", he, however, hastened away from the city of Maraššantiya and went to the Upper Country, and Šippaziti, son of Armatarḫunta, was with him. He summoned him to the troops of the Upper Country. Since Šippaziti, however, was evil towards me, he did not ... towards me.

Downfall of Urḫitešub

§11 (4:7-40) Because Istar, My Lady, had already early (fore)told kingship for me, Istar, My Lady, appeared at that moment to my wife in a dream (saying): "I will march ahead of your husband and all of Ḫattuša will turn to f1 Sam 24:15;

g 2 Sam 7:8-9

h 1 Sam 26:10

(the side) of your husband. Since I elevated him, I never ever exposed him to an evil trial (or) an evil deity. Now, too, I will lift him and install him in priesthood for the Sungoddess of Arinna, and you must worship me as Istar parašši!"⁵² Istar, My Lady, backed me, and as she promised me, it happened too.⁵³ Istar, My Lady, provided for me there as well in abundance. To the generals whom Urḫitešub had dismissed to some place, Istar⁵⁴ appeared in a dream, *while she strengthened them, the exhausted ones*⁵⁴ (saying): "All Ḫatti Lands I have turned over to⁵⁵ Ḫattušili." There, too, I experienced the divine providence of Istar in abundance. When she had left Urḫitešub no other way whatsoever, she locked him up in Šamuḫa like a pig in a sty. The Kaškaeans, meanwhile, who had been hostile to me, backed me and all Ḫattuša backed me. Out of regard for the love of my brother I did not do anything (evil). I went back down to Urḫitešub⁵⁶ and brought him down like a prisoner. I gave him fortified cities in the country of Nuḫašše and there he lived. When he plotted another plot against me, and wanted to ride to Babylon — when I heard the matter, I seized him and sent him alongside the sea. They made Šippaziti cross the border as well, while I took away his property and gave it to Istar, My Lady. That to Istar, My Lady, I gave, while Istar, My Lady, promoted me step by step.

Ḫattušili's career in retrospect; Kurunta King in Tarḫuntašša; transfer of properties to Istar; Tuthaliya priest of Istar §12a (4:41-48) I was a prince and became Chief of the Royal Bodyguard. As Chief of the Royal Bodyguard I became King of Ḫakpiš. As King of Ḫakpiš I then⁵⁷ became Great King. Finally, Istar, My Lady, had put (my) enemies, enemies (and) my opponents in court at my mercy.⁵⁸ Some died by the sword, others died on (their appointed) day:⁵⁸ all these I finished off. Istar, My Lady, had given me kingship over Ḫatti Land.

⁴⁹ Manuscripts B and E both add: "and he took Šamuḫa away from me."

⁵⁰ The Hittite word used here refers to religious impurity which normally has to be removed by magic ritual.

⁵¹ Epithet of Istar of uncertain provenance and meaning.

⁵² B adds: "likewise exactly."

⁵³ B adds: "My Lady."

⁵⁴ The translation of this crux follows the solution offered by Nowicki (1985:26-35), although not all difficulties seem to be solved (innarawaš as 3rd sing. preterite of a verb innarawae-*; the function of the sentence connective -ma in KUR.KUR^{ME} ^{ES} URU^{URU} Ḫatti-ma-wa-k[an] introducing the direct speech of the goddess). Alternatively, one might suggest the possible analysis innara-uwa-šmaš dariyanteš "You (are) strongly urged (to come), (for I have turned over all Ḫatti Lands to Ḫattušili)" with -šmaš replacing the more usual reflexive -za in nominal sentences of this kind, and innara as the well known adverb.

⁵⁵ Var. "behind."

⁵⁶ B adds: "in Šamuḫa."

⁵⁷ This word is omitted in B.

⁵⁸ Lit., "in (my) hand."

§12b (4:48-80) I had become Great King: She took me as a prince and let me (rise)⁵⁹ to kingship. The kings (who were) my elders (and) who had been on good terms with me, they remained on just those good terms with me, and they began to send envoys to me. They began to send gifts to me, and the gifts they ke[ep] sending me, they never sent to any (of my) fathers and grandfathers.⁶⁰ The king supposed to respect me,⁶¹ respected me, and the (countries) that had been my enemies, I conquered them. For the Hatti Lands I [a]nnexed territory upon territory. (Those) who had been enemies in the days of my fathers (and) grandfat[her]s concluded peace with me. Because the goddess, My Lady, had thus shown me (her) recognition, I did not do anything (evil) out of regard for the love for my brother. I took up my [nephew] Kurunta and installed him into kingship there on the spot⁶² which my brother Muwatalli had built into the city of Tarhuntašša. How often had Ištar, the Lady, taken me! She had installed me on 'the high place,' into kingship over Hatti Land! I, then, gave Ištar, My Lady, the property of Armatarhunta: I withdrew it⁶³ and handed it over. What had been (there) formerly, that I handed over to her, and what I had had, that too I handed over. I withdrew it (all) and handed it over to the goddess.⁶⁴

i 2 Sam 8:10-12

The property of Armatarhunta which I gave to her and whatever settlements were Armatarhunta's, behind every single cult monument they will erect her (statue) and they will pour a vessel. (For) Ištar (is) my goddess and they will worship her as Ištar the High. The mausoleum which I made myself, I handed it over to the goddess, (and) I handed over to you in subservience my son Tuthaliya⁶⁴ as well. Let Tuthaliya, my son, administer the house of Ištar! I (am) the servant of the goddess, let him be servant of the goddess as well! The property which I gave the goddess, let everyone strive and strain(?)⁶⁵ for the goddess.

Vindication clause

§13 (4:81-85) Whoever will take away in future the offspring of Hattušili (and) Puduhepa from the service of Ištar (or) desires (so much as) a blade of straw from the storehouse (or) a chip of wood from the threshing floor of Ištar of Šamuha,⁶⁶ let him be Ištar of Šamuha's court opponent! Let no one take them for levy (and) corvée!⁶⁷

Curse

§14 (4:86-89) Whoever in future stands up against the son, grandson (or) offspring of Hattušili (and) Puduhepa, may he among the gods be fearful of Ištar of Šamuha!

⁵⁹ Var. "recognized me in."

⁶⁰ In a letter to an Assyrian king Hattušili complains that until now he has not yet received any gift from him on the occasion of his enthronement, although this is customary; cf. Goetze 1940:28-29.

⁶¹ Or "The king whom I was supposed to respect, (now) respected me" (see Neumann 1985:293-294).

⁶² Var. "on that spot."

⁶³ The property which Hattušili once had assigned to Armatarhunta, is now withdrawn and passed on to Ištar.

⁶⁴ Hattušili's son and successor, ca. 1240-1210 BCE.

⁶⁵ The Hittite uses two rhyme words karnan marnan, for which see Wegner 1989.

⁶⁶ On this expression here see von Schuler 1983:161-163 and above, p. 197 n. 58.

⁶⁷ This sentence is omitted in B and F.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 81. Translation: TUAT 1/5:481-492. Discussion: Archi 1971; Cancik 1976; Götz 1925; 1940; Hoffner 1968c; 1975b; van den Hout 1995; Houwink ten Cate 1992; Neumann 1985; Nowicki 1985; Otten 1981a; 1988; von Schuler 1982; Sturtevant and Bechtel 1935; Tadmor 1983; Ünal 1974; Wegner 1989; Wolf 1967.

4. ORACLES

EXCERPT FROM AN ORACLE REPORT (1.78)

Gary Beckman

Since the Hittites believed that divine displeasure was the ultimate source of most evils, they developed a science of divination in order to communicate with their gods, ascertain the reasons for their anger, and bargain about required restitution. The Hittite diviners carefully researched the problems referred to them, making sure both to determine the exact aspect of a situation which had caused a deity's anger and to assure that no additional factors lay behind his or her rancor. Although the responses given by the gods to the questions put to them are characterized as "favorable" or "unfavorable," and indeed were probably originally held to portend in themselves good or ill fortune, they have become arbitrary signs in the later binary system documented in texts available to us. That is, in each particular instance the practitioner stipulates whether a "favorable" or an "unfavorable" response will constitute a "yes" answer to the query posed.⁴ For essential bibliography concerning the Hittite practice of divination see REFERENCES below.

The inquiry documented in the text excerpted here was occasioned by the sickness of the Great King. Since the members of the royal family are referred to only by their titles, and most of the other individuals mentioned are not found elsewhere, the precise period to which this text should be assigned is uncertain. However, various linguistic and historical considerations suggest that it was composed early in the reign of Tudhaliya IV (second half of the thirteenth century BCE).

The technical details of the extispicies and bird oracles have been omitted in this translation.

(obv. 1-3) In regard to the fact that His Majesty (Tudhaliya IV?) became ill, [...] have not you, [O deity] of (the town of) Aruṣna, somehow been provoked [in connection with the illness of His Majesty? If you, O deity, are angry about this, let the first extispicy be favorable and the latter] unfavorable. First extispicy: favorable ... unfavorable. Latter [extispicy: ...] Unfavorable.

(obv. 4-5) In regard to the fact that in connection with the illness you, O deity of Aruṣna, were ascertained to be angry — are you, O god, angry in some way in your temple? (If so), let the extispicy be unfavorable ... Unfavorable.

(obv. 6) If you, O god, are angry only (about something) in your temple, but are not in any way angry with His Majesty, let the extispicy be favorable ... Unfavorable.

(obv. 7-10) In regard to the fact that you, O deity of Aruṣna, were ascertained to be angry with His Majesty, is this because the queen (Puduḫepa?) cursed Ammattalla before the deity of Aruṣna? Because Ammattalla began to concern herself with the deity, yet did not go back and forth (in service to the deity)? Because the son of Ammattalla has dressed himself in garments entrusted to his mother and was summoned to the palace? If you, O god, are angry about this, let the extispicy be unfavorable ... Unfavorable.

(obv. 11) If you, O god, are angry only about this, let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 12-27) In regard to the fact that it was once more unfavorable, is this because Mala spoke as follows: "The queen made for herself a crown of gold in the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity. In a dream the deity of Aruṣna demanded it from the queen, but the queen did not give it. She set it aside in the storehouse of the treasurer, and in its place the queen made two other crowns of silver for the deity of Aruṣna. And as long as she had not sent it (the crown of gold) to the deity of Aruṣna, the matter brought trouble for the queen, and she was expelled from the palace. Then it happened that the queen wrote back to His Majesty from (the town of) Utruli: 'The crown of gold which the deity of Aruṣna demanded from me in a dream is now lying in the storehouse of the treasurer. The inlay pieces(?) and the precious stones which were left over (from its manufacture) are now lying in the container for adupli-garments. Send them off to the deity!" They found that crown of gold, and with it lay a falcon of gold, a grape cluster (made up of) precious stones, eight rosettes, ten knobs(?), and eyebrow(s) and eyelid(s) of precious stones. Then they took them to the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity, to the statue of the queen. But they did not find the inlay pieces(?) which (supposedly) lay in the container for adupli-garments. (Of) the two crowns of silver(!) which the queen made for the deity (in fulfillment) of (her) vow, they found (only) one crown of silver(!), and they sent it off to the deity. But they did not find the (other) crown of silver(!). Is it because they spoke as follows: "Whatever is found among the furnishings of the deity will certainly be given to the deity. It will not be exchanged (for something inferior)." Is it because we did not know about the single falcon of gold, the grape cluster (made up of) precious stones, the eight rosettes, the knobs(?), the eyebrow(s) and the eyelid(s), and because they were taken to the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity, to the statue of the queen? (And because) they did not find the inlay pieces? If you, O god, are angry about this, let the extispicy be unfavorable ... Unfavorable.

^a Exod 28:30, etc.

(obv. 28) If you, O god, are angry only about this, but not in regard to anything else, let the extispicy be favorable ... Unfavorable.

(obv. 29-30) In regard to the fact that it was once more unfavorable, (is this) because the great princess (daughter of the king of Babylon and wife of Tudhaliya IV?) secretly [brought] Ammattalla up into the palace? If you, O god, are angry about this, let the extispicy be unfavorable ... Unfavorable.

(obv. 31-32) We have not yet investigated what Ammattalla said — whether the testimony is true, or how (it is to be taken). It has not been included in an oracular inquiry. Now if the omen has occurred because of this, let the extispicy be unfavorable ...

Unfavorable.

(obv. 33) If only this (is the cause of the divine anger), and (there is) nothing else in addition, let the first duck oracle be favorable and the latter unfavorable. The first duck oracle was unfavorable and the latter favorable.

(obv. 34-40) In regard to the fact that it was once more unfavorable, (is this) because the affair of Naru was postponed? Because Naru was brought and spoke of (the affair of the woman) Pattiya? Pattiya was expelled from the palace and will be given to the deity. Concerning the affair of Palla she said: "The queen said: 'May you, O deity, take cognizance of that which I gave to Palla, so that you will keep after Palla (about it).'" We interrogated the associates of Palla, and they said: "We do not know about that affair." And that affair will (therefore) be postponed, (but) we will make inquiries about it. If there is not anything in addition (as the cause of the divine anger), let the first extispicy be favorable and the latter unfavorable. The first extispicy: ... Unfavorable. The latter extispicy: ... Favorable.

(obv. 41-48) In regard to the fact that an omen of the deity of Aruṣna occurred once more, (is this) because the queen saw a dream? In the dream someone repeats: "Why will you give the furnishings which are in the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity to the deity of Aruṣna? Leave something!" If this omen has occurred because of this, let the extispicy be unfavorable. The extispicy was favorable. ... In regard to the fact that it was once more unfavorable, (is this) because Naru [...] said: "Because Pattiya has stayed too long up in the palace, two women shall be included as reparation when she is given to the deity. They shall be clothed in palace garments. And although the queen might die because of that deity, they (still) have not put away (that is, satisfied?) the deity on her account." Because of [that, the reparation was determined upon]. Some [furnishings] will be left behind in the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity. Those of the royal household will be kept separate. If [...] In regard to the fact that] Pattiya has not (yet) been given [to the deity] of Aruṣna — if you, O deity, have given the omen in respect to this, ditto. Let it be kept separate from the [affair of the palace]. Let the extispicy be favorable ...

(obv. 49-50) In regard to the fact that it was once more unfavorable, (is it) because an offense remains in the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity? We will make an oracular inquiry about it. Whatever is ascertained will be given to the deity. If you, O deity, have likewise approved, let the extispicy be favorable ... Favorable.

(obv. 51-52) In regard to the fact that that offense in the mausoleum of the Tutelary Deity was determined to remain, should they proceed to give it (that is, a present) with precious stones to the deity? Ditto (= If you, O deity, have approved), let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 53) Should they give it with gold to the deity? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 54) Should they give it with gold and precious stones to the deity? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 55) Have you, O deity, sought something with a sumptuous garment for yourself? (If so), let the duck oracle be favorable. Favorable.

(obv. 56) Should they proceed to give (a gift) with gold, precious stones, and a sumptuous garment to the deity? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 57) Should they proceed to give (a gift) with a sumptuous garment and a person to the deity? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 58) In regard to the fact that a (gift) with a sumptuous garment was ascertained — should they proceed to give one garment to the deity? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 59) Should they give one garment and one cowl? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Unfavorable.

(obv. 60) Should they give one garment, one cowl, and a woman's kinanta-garment? Ditto. Let the duck oracle be favorable. Favorable.

Thus after 60 lines of text, a preliminary conclusion has been reached about some causes of the deity's anger and the necessary compensatory gifts. The report continues, however, for a further 94 lines in which other matters displeasing to the deity and the means by which they might be put right are discussed.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 566; KUB 22.70 obv. 1-60. Bibliography: Archi 1974; 1975; 1982; Hoffner 1987; Kammenhuber 1976; Laroche 1952; 1958; 1970; Ünal 1978; Ünal and Kammenhuber 1975; Schuol 1994:73-124.

ASSURING THE SAFETY OF THE KING DURING THE WINTER (1.79)
(KUB 5.4 + KUB 18.53 and KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52)¹

Richard H. Beal

The purpose of the texts comprising this selection is to assure the safety of the king while he is cooped up through the cold central Anatolian winter, by discovering ahead of time any problems that the gods foresee arising, and by ascertaining the correct method of correcting these. The selection is made up of two texts containing parallel sets of questions. The translation follows the better preserved tablet until the second tablet goes off on a tangent. Each section of the tablet not being translated at any one time can be followed in the footnotes. The texts date from the later part of the Hittite Empire period.

The texts, like other Hittite oracle texts, asks the gods a series of questions each phrased so that the gods can give a yes or no answer. If the validity of a good or optimistic statement is being ascertained, the deity is asked to give a "favorable" result. Conversely, if the validity of a bad or pessimistic statement is being ascertained, the deity is asked to give an "unfavorable" answer. A favorable answer to a request for a favorable response or an unfavorable answer to a request for an unfavorable confirms the statement. That is the answer is "yes." An unfavorable answer to a favorable request or vice versa indicates that the question is not true, that is, the answer is "no."

The primary method chosen by the questioner in these texts for the deity to indicate the answer is the "symbol"² oracles.³ In this type of oracle the questions are presented to the deity by the female diviner/exorcist.⁴ In this method, native to Anatolia, some symbolically named thing "takes" other symbolically named things and "gives" them to another symbolically named thing. There is no indication how this was performed in practice, but Archi's⁵ idea of an animal running over or past certain marked spots on a large gameboard will fit the known evidence. This is particularly true since a rarer related type of oracle, the snake oracle, is clearly performed by having a symbolically named watersnake swim around past symbolically named places in a basin.⁶

The questioner in the second text also employs on occasion another type of oracle known as "flesh," "exta" or in earlier periods "liver" oracles. These questions are presented and interpreted by the male diviner/exorcist.⁷ In this method, borrowed from the Mesopotamians via the Hurrians, he asks the god to reply via telltale marks to be found in the exta of sheep.⁸

(KUB 5.4 + KUB 18.53 i 1 - ii 42)

(i 1-10) [Thi]s y[ear His Majesty proposes to wi]nter [in Ḫattuša.] [He will celebrate the customa]ry [festivals,] the festival of the ye[ar], the thunder festival in Ḫattuša. [The birds of the neighbor-ho]d(?)⁹ will congregate in Ḫattuša for him. [If] we have nothing to fear¹⁰ for the head of His Majesty up in Ḫattuša and you [O gods] have approved wintering in Ḫattuša for His Majesty, left the symbol oracle be favorabl[e]. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul' and 'blood' and gave them to 'the king.' On the second 'day': 'The gods' arose and took 'well-being,' and gave it to 'the assembly.' One the third 'day': 'The dais' arose and took 'the ye[ar?].' Into 'good.' Favorable.

(11-15) We placed symbols of confirmation as a countercheck. Let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'Ḫannahanna'¹¹ arose and took 'the kindnesses of ¹ The questions asked in KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52 i 1-44 are transliterated and translated by Archi 1982:283-286.

² This is an attempt to fit a translation of the Sumerogram KIN, which is used to describe this method, to what happens in the course of the method. The Hittite for KIN may be aniyatt- which is known to have a translation "ritual gear." Alternatively, perhaps one should understand KIN as aniur "ritual" and call these "performance oracles." Both words use the Sumerogram KIN. The old translation "lot" is clearly wrong. The casting of lots (Hittite pu) was known, but there are no tablets of questions and answers using lots. For translations of passages involving the throwing of lots see the forthcoming articles in the CHD pu n. and pulai- v.

³ See Archi 1974.

⁴ Usually known by the literal translation of the Sumerogram MUNUS.ŠU.GI as "the old woman." However, the Hittite word for this profession, ḫašawa-, does not consist of "old" + "woman." The ḫašawa- performed symbol oracles and various healing/purificatory rituals. This profession is the female equivalent of the ¹⁰HAL/10AZU, who performed exta oracles, HURRI-bird oracles and various healing/purificatory rituals.

⁵ 1974:130f. Cf. Hallo 1996:115 n. 269, 116 n. 278.

⁶ See Laroche 1958.

⁷ ¹⁰HAL/10AZU. Those of this profession performed exta oracles, HURRI-bird oracles and various healing/purificatory rituals. It is the male equivalent of the female ḫašawa/MUNUS.ŠU.GI.

⁸ "flesh" = SU and "exta" = TE. (for Akk. terētū), liver = ¹⁰U/NG.GIG (see KBo 8.55:17). The first two signs are only one wedge apart and practically graphic variants. On this type see in general Laroche 1970, Schulz 1994; and footnotes below to specific words.

⁹ MUŠEN.ḪLA mešanaš. F. Starke, BiOr 46 (1989) 662 "die Vögel des Umkreises bzw. der Umgebung." CHD s.v. meša(n)ni, preferred "birds of the season," "birds of the cycle of the year," that is migratory birds being present only at a particular time of the year. Archi 1975:144 took the word from miyatar and translated "ucelli della prosperità." Archi's reasoning is dismissed by CHD L-N 233a.

¹⁰ The reading ḪUŠ "fear" not LUL "lie" for this sign was established by H. G. Güterbock, FsKraus 83-89. See CHD s.v. naḫ(h)-.

¹¹ The grandmother goddess (ḫanna- "grandmother"), i.e., the Stormgod's mother. She is one of the wisest of the gods, and very important in childbirth and the giving of fates. For a discussion see Beckman 1983:238-248.

the gods.' Into 'long life.'¹² On the second 'day,' 'the deity' took for himself 'hidden(?) anger.'¹³ Into 'emptiness.'¹⁴ On the third 'day': 'The assembly' to[ok] for itself 'rightness' and 'good of the house' and gave them to 'Tarhunt.'¹⁵ Favorable.

(16-25) This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Hattuša. [The bird]s of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Hattuša for him. If high fever will not find His Majesty while he is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The Sungod of Heaven'¹⁶ arose and took 'thick-bread' and gave it to 'the assembly.' On the second 'day': 'The anger of the gods' was taken. To 'the lesser sickness.' On the third 'day': 'Good' took 'the kindlinesses of the Fates.'¹⁷ 'To the Fates' whole soul.' Fourth track: 'The gods' arose and took 'the le[sser sickness(?)]' and gave it to 'the assembly.' Favorable.

(26-32) This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Hattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Hattuša for him. If we have nothing to fear from revolt while His Majesty is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The king' took for himself 'rightness' and 'the word.' 'The revolt which they make' he placed in 'misbehavior' for them.¹⁸ Unfavorable.

(33-34) Since the oracle was unfavorable, will someone inside revolt? Let the symbol-oracle be unfavorable. 'Evil' was taken and given to 'the assembly.' Unfavorable.

(35-36) Will someone outside revolt? Let the symbol-oracle be unfavorable. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul' and 'fire.' They are placed to the right of the 'king.' Unfavorable.

(a blank paragraph follows)

(37-43) This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Hattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate [in Hattuša] [for him.] If we have nothing to fear from birds while [His Majesty] is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable.

'Tarhunt' arose and took [...], 'vigor,' and 'the great misdeed' and [gave] them [to ... Favorable.]

(44-50) This year His Majesty proposes to w[inter] in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the th[under] festival in Hattuša. The birds of the neighborho[od(?)] will congregate in Hattuša [for him]. If we have nothing to fear [from impurity while] His Majesty is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable.[...] took [...] and 'the hand.' To 'the gods.' Unfavorable.

(51-ii 1) They will go and give sworn instructions to the kitchen personnel¹⁹ [...] and they will have them swear. If this will make the e[vil] disappear,²⁰ let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The dais' arose and took 'the king's [...]' To 'the gods.' On the second 'day': 'Hannahanna' arose and took 'the year' and 'the good of the land.' To 'the great sickness.' On the third 'day': 'The assembly' took for itself 'hidden(?) misdeed.'²¹ Into 'emptiness.' Favorable.

(ii 2-7) This year [His Majesty] proposes to winter in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Hattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will co[n]gregate in Hattuša for him. If we have nothing to fear from a downpour while His Majesty is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'Evil' was taken. To 'the gods.' Unfavorable.

(8-13) This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Hattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Hattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Hattuša for him. If we have nothing to fear from fire while His Majesty is up in Hattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The assembly' took 'sinisterness' and 'fire.' Unfavorable.

(14-19) They will go and give sworn instructions concerning fire. If this will make the evil disappear, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The gods' arose and took 'life' and gave it to 'the assembly.' On the second 'day': The 'angers of the gods' were taken. To 'the lesser sickness.' On the third 'day': 'Hannahanna' arose and took 'life' and 'well-[being].' To 'the big sickness.' Favorable.

(20-26)²² This year His Majesty proposes to winter

¹² Lit., "long years."

¹³ appan arḫa karpin. Cf. appan arḫa wašdul below n. 21.

¹⁴ SUD-li₁₂ = šannapili; see Archi 1974:140f., n. 102.

¹⁵ The Stormgod, the chief male deity of the Hittite pantheon.

¹⁶ God of justice, closely associated with the king.

¹⁷ Gušeš, on these deities see H. Otten and J. Siegelová, Afo 23 1970:32-38; Otten RLA 3:698; Beckman 1983:242-247.

¹⁸ Or: in "their misdeed."

¹⁹ EN.MEŠ TU, = paršuraš išheš. For the translation see CHD s.v. paršur 2 a.

²⁰ Lit., "If the evil will disappear on that account."

²¹ appan arḫa wašdul. Cf. appan arḫa karpin above n. 13.

²² This question is parallel to the first question in KUB 5.3 i 1-4.

in Ḫattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Ḫattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Ḫattuša for him. If we have nothing to fear from accident²³ while His Majesty is up in Ḫattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The assembly' took for itself 'rightness.' Into 'evil.' Unfavorable.²⁴

(27-29)²⁵ They will go and give sworn instructions²⁶ concerning accidents. If this will make the evil disappear, let the symbol oracle be favorable.

(No answer is recorded in the blank lines provided.)²⁷

(30-36b)²⁸ This year His Majesty proposes to wi[n-ter] in Ḫattuša. He will celebrate the customary festivals, the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Ḫattuša. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Ḫattuša for him. If we have nothing to fear from road accident²⁹ while His Majesty is up in Ḫattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The king' took for himself 'hidden(?) misdeed.' [...] Unfavorable.³⁰

(37-42) [They will go and give sworn instructions] to the chariot-drivers concerning road accidents. [If] this will [make] the evil [disappear, let the symbol oracle be favorable. ...] took [...] 'life.' To 'the gods.' [...] Intjo 'emptiness.' [...] were tak[en]. To the 'lesser sickness.' [...].³¹

(Another text as far as preserved gives the same series of questions.³² In this second text, after discovering that road accidents will be a problem, it asks:)

(KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.54 i 23-iii)

(i 23-25) Since a road accident was ascertained for His Majesty, is this road accident due to the anger of some deity? Let the flesh oracle be unfavorable. The nipašuri,³³ šintaḫi,³⁴ and keldi.³⁵ The thing(?) took them inside itself.³⁶ The zizaḫi,³⁷ is placed. Twelve turns of the intestines. Favorable.

(26-29) The question by the female diviner/exorcist is the same. Let the symbol (oracle) be unfavorable. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul,' 'the good of the house' and 'the good of the land.' Behind the 'dais.' On the second 'day': 'Theangers of the gods' were taken from 'long life.' To 'the lesser sickness.' On the third 'day': 'The Sungod of Heaven' arose and took 'an evocation ritual' 'fire' and 'the great misdeed.' Into 'emptiness.' F[avorable].

²³ šu-aš wašdul, lit., "misbehavior of the hand." Differently Archi 1982:284f. "Beleidigung" ("insult"). For "the misbehavior of a hand" = "accidental" see Hittite Laws III, where three levels of homicide are mentioned: first degree is in the course of a robbery, second degree is "in a quarrel" and third degree is "(only) his hand misbehaved" (keššar waštai). See similarly in Laws 3, V, VI.

²⁴ In KUB 5.3 an answer is requested from a flesh oracle (i 4), but no answer is inscribed in the space provided. It is followed by the same question to a symbol oracle. The answer: "The assembly' took for itself 'sinisterness' and 'evil.' To 'the whole soul' for 'the deity.' Unfavorable" (i 5-7).

²⁵ This question is paralleled by KUB 5.3 i 8-10.

²⁶ The parallel (i 9) text adds: "to the eunuchs and chariot-drivers."

²⁷ KUB 5.3 i 11-14 gives an answer to this question: "The assembly' took for itself 'sinisterness' and 'evil.' Into 'emptiness.' On the second 'day': 'Hannaḫanna' arose and took 'well-being.' Behind 'the dais.' On the third 'day': 'The deity' took 'hidden(?) anger.' To 'small sickness.' Favorable."

²⁸ This question is paralleled by KUB 5.3 i 15-18.

²⁹ ḫittum anše.kur.ra, lit., "misbehavior of a horse." Differently Otten, HTR 119 "Verlust an Pferden" ("damage to horses"), followed by Archi 1982:284f. Unlikely is Th. van den Hout's (BiOr 51 1994:125) "lack of horses," probably after Friedrich, HW 2. Erg. 33 "Mangel," (presumably thinking of Akk. ḫittu for which CAD does give a meaning "deficit" rather than Akk. ḫtu, for which such a meaning is not given (CAD: ḫtu A: "1. fault, harm, 2. act of negligence, 3. damage (OB only), 4. sin, offense, 5. crime, misdeed, 6. punishment"). Hittite wašdul is clearly synonymous with Akk. ḫtu and is probably the Hittite word underlying the Akkadogram. It seems silly to give such different interpretations to "misbehavior of a horse" and "misbehavior of the hand" (for which see above n. 21). If it were to be "damage to/lack of horses," why not then "damage to/lack of hands" in the latter?

³⁰ In KUB 5.3 a flesh oracle is first asked: "Let the first flesh oracle be favorable and the second unfavorable. The first flesh oracle: The hiriḫi reached the right/the border. Unfavorable. The second flesh oracle: The nipašuri, šintaḫi, the path, ten turns of the intestine. Favorable." Then the same question to the symbol oracles yields: "'the assembly' took for itself 'sinisterness.' To 'the whole soul' for 'the deity.' Unfavorable."

³¹ The next paragraph in this text is parallel to KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52 i 42-49, quoted below.

³² KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52 i 1-22 (see footnotes). A similar series of questions is found in KUB 18.12 i 1-58: "Have we nothing to fear for the head of His Majesty from death or difficult sickness; from [...]; from [...]; from revolt; from [...]; from road accident; from fire; from downpour; from [...]." In KUB 18.12 i the questions are all asked of and answers received from bird oracles.

³³ Laroche 1970:131 equated this with the oracle liver (Akk. amitu), but this is surely incorrect. See CHD s.v. nipašuri.

³⁴ A part of the liver, probably equivalent to the Sum. KI.GUB = Akk. manzazu "emplacement" and/or naplastum "hatch"; see Goetze 1962:28.

³⁵ This Hurrian word seems to mean "well being" and is a translation of Akk. šulmu. Schuol 1994:253-255 takes it to be the pancreas. AHW 1269a s.v. šulmu C 2 takes no stand: "an der Leber unkl."

³⁶ niG-aš-za andan me-aš. The subject could also be read NINDA "bread" or GAR "to be situated." The preverb andan occurs with da- only in this phrase. The -aš could, of course, be the nominative complement (see KBo 16.97 rev. 45 below) of the niG, but then the transitive verb da- would be left without an object. Laroche 1970:130 understands "un/le GAR s'est resserré/enveloppé," with -aš as the nominative complement and -za as reflexive object, but -za da- is a common combination meaning "to take for oneself" not "to take oneself." Outside of this phrase the niG is attested twice in two different phrases: niG-tukul š4 niG-gub-aš "The 'weapon' of the 'thing(?)' is of the left" KUB 22.69:11 and niG-aš-šan ana niG šer "A 'thing(?)' is over (another/the other) 'thing(?)'" KBo 16.97 rev. 45. This last example appears to rule out niG being an abbreviation for niG.GIG "liver," unless an apparently healthy animal could have two livers. The "thing" appears to be an organ or large section thereof and of which there is more than one. Our whole sentence is entirely unclear.

³⁷ This word is translated "Bandwurmfenne" ("undeveloped tapeworm") by Schuol 1994:103, 108 obv 39, 281-284.

(30-31) Will the road accident happen to His Majesty due to the negligence of a person? Let the flesh oracle be unfavorable. The gallbladder was hilipšiman. Unfavorable.

(32-33) The question by the female diviner/exorcist is the same. Let the symbol (oracle) be unfavorable. 'The gods' arose and took 'an evocation ritual' and gave it to 'the assembly.' Unfavorable.

(34-37b) They will go and give sworn instructions to the c[hariot-drivers] concerning road accidents. If this will make the evil disappear, let the f[lesh] oracle be favorable and the latter unfavorable. The first flesh: nipašuri-s [...] on the right and left. A 'bolt' is above them. The šintaḫi, *tanani*³⁸ (and) keldi. The enti of the left. [...] Favorable. The latter flesh: The SAG.ME. Unfavorable.

(38-41) The question by the female diviner/exorcist is the same. Let the symbol (oracle) be favorable. 'Tarḫunt' [arose and took ...] and gave them to 'the king.' On the second 'day': 'The Sungod of Heaven' arose and took 'the king's [...]'. Behind 'the dais.' 'Ḫannaḫanna' arose (and) [took] 'life' [...] To 'the lesser sickness.' Favorable.

(42-49)³⁹ This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Ḫattuša. If, while His Majesty is up in Ḫattuša there will not be an epidemic among the standing army troops (i.e., the šarikuwa and UKU.UŠ)⁴⁰ — we are not concerned here if the day of death arrives this year for 10 or 20 soldiers — if there will not be an epidemic up in Ḫattuša and if a general sudden death does not make us flee down from Ḫattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The deity' [took] 'the whole soul' and gave it to 'the assembly.' Unfavorable.

(50-53) The question by the male diviner/exorcist is the same. Let the first flesh oracle be favorable and let the second be unfavorable. The first flesh oracle: The nipašuri, šintaḫi, keldi and the path. The thing(?) took them inside itself. Ten turns of the intestines. Favorable. The second flesh oracle: It is favorable, but behind it is šuri. Unfavorable.

(54-57) Concerning an epidemic that was ascertained to occur up in Ḫattuša among the standing army troops, is some deity going to cause the plague up in Ḫattuša? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The gods' arose and took 'good.' They(!) placed it in 'anger' for 'the deity.' [Unfavorable.]

(58-63) [I]f the plague up in Ḫattuša within the year [...], let [the symbol oracle be u]nfavorable. 'The gods' arose and to[ok] 'life' and 'well-being.' [...] to 'the whole soul' for 'the deity.' [On the second 'day': ...] took 'evil of [...]' into 'emptiness.' On the third 'day': 'The Sungod] of Heaven' arose and took 'a long life' and p[la]ced [it] [...]. Favorable.

(ii 1-4) Since the anger of a god was ascertained to be the cause of the plague, will some new deity be causing the plague up in Ḫattuša? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The gods' arose and took 'life' and 'the great misdeed.' They gave them to 'the assembly.' Unfavorable.

(5-8) If only a new deity and not also some other deity will be causing the plague up in Ḫattuša, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'Ḫannaḫanna' arose and took 'the kindnesses of the gods' and gave them to 'the deity.' Unfavorable.

(9-12) Will it be some Hittite god also causing the plague up in Ḫattuša? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul' and placed it in 'anger.' Unfavorable.

(13-18) If it will be only a new deity and the Hittite gods who will be causing the plague up in Ḫattuša, and further ditto (= not also some other deity causing it), let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The deity' took 'the whole soul.' Into 'good.' On the second 'day': 'Evil' was taken. Into 'emptiness.' On the third 'day': 'The Sungod of Heaven' arose and took the 'angers of the gods.' Into 'the lesser sickness.' Favorable.

(19-22) Is the new deity who was determined to be causing the plague a new god of kingship? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul.' Into 'good.' Unfavorable.

(23-26) If it will be only a new deity of kingship who will be causing the plague in Ḫattuša and not some further deity, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'Ḫannaḫanna' arose and took 'good' and placed it 'in anger' for 'the deity.' Unfavorable.

(27-29) Is it a new deity (resident) in Ḫattuša who will be causing the plague in Ḫattuša? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The assembly' took for itself 'sinisterness.' To the 'great sickness.' Unfavorable.

(30-34) Is the new deity of kingship who was ascertained a new deity of kingship wh[o lives] in a temple? Is that one somehow angry? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'Ḫannaḫanna' arose and took 'good' and placed it 'in anger' for 'the deity.' Unfavorable.

(35-39) If it is the new deity of kingship who lives in a temple [...] and another new deity is in no way angry, let the [symbol oracle be favorable]. 'The deity' took for himself 'the whole soul' (and) 'good.' To 'the lesser sickness.' Unfavorable.

³⁸ = Akk. danānu "strength."

³⁹ This paragraph is parallel to KUB 5.4 + KUB 18.53 ii 43-48. Apparently no reply was recorded in the space provided on the latter tablet.

⁴⁰ For ERIN.MES UKU.UŠ and ERIN.MES šarikuwa- comprising the standing army see Beal 1992:37-55.

(40-44) Is it a new deity of kingship who [...] among the gods [...] and that one also is somehow angry? Let the symbol oracle be unfavorable. 'The assembly' took for itself 'sinisterness' and 'the great sickness.' To the 'whole soul' for 'the deity.' Unfavorable.

(45-49b) Since concerning the plague, you, O new [de]ity of kingship, have been determined to be in anger, is it because you have not yet been put on the road (i.e., satisfied)? Let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The angers of the gods' were taken from 'long life.' To 'Hannaḥanna.' Unfavorable.

(50-56) (The next section is too broken to translate, but seems to be asking if this is the only problem.) (Column iii preserves little more than traces. Presumably it contained questions on how to soothe the divine anger.)

(The top two-thirds of column iv are uninscribed. We return to the KUB 5.4 for its next question. KUB 5.3 resumes with a question parallel to the second question of KUB 5.4.)

(KUB 5.4 + KUB 18.53 iii)

(iii 1-2) His Majesty proposes to winter beside the Temple of Tarḫunt of Aleppo. Let the symbol oracle be favorable. (No answer is recorded in the space provided.)

(3-12)⁴¹ This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Kātapa.⁴² He will celebrate the customary festivals,⁴³ the festival of the year, the thunder festival in Kātapa. The birds of the neighborhood(?) will congregate in Kātapa for him. If we have nothing to fear for the head of His Majesty up in Kātapa⁴⁴ and if you O gods approved wintering in Kātapa for His Majesty, let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The king' took for himself 'rightness' and 'the city.' To 'the whole soul' for 'the deity.' On the second 'day.' 'The dais' arose and took 'the year' and gave it to 'Hannaḥanna.' On the third 'day': 'Good' took 'the kindlinesses of the gods.' To 'long life.' Favorable.⁴⁵

(uninscribed paragraph)

(13-14)⁴⁶ His Majesty proposes to winter⁴⁷ in Ānku-wa.⁴⁸ Let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'The gods' arose and took 'the city.' To 'the Sungod of Heaven.' Unfavorable.⁴⁹ (KUB 5.4 + KUB 18.53 ends here; KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52 iv continues:)

(iv 13-15) This year His Majesty proposes to winter in Zithara.⁵⁰ Ditto. Let the symbol oracle be favorable. 'Tarḫunt' arose and took 'protection' and 'the great misdeed.' They are given to 'the assembly.' Unfavorable. (End of text).

⁴¹ This question is paralleled by KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.54 iv 1-5, where it is somewhat abbreviated.

⁴² For literature and guesses as to location see RGTC 6:197-201, RGTC 6/2:75f.

⁴³ The parallel question fails to mention the customary festivals.

⁴⁴ The first part of this sentence was omitted in KUB 5.3 + KUB 18.52.

⁴⁵ In the parallel text (iv 6-9) the answer is: "'Good' took 'the future.' To 'the gods.' On the second 'day': 'Hannaḥanna' arose and took 'fire.' Into 'emptiness.' On the third 'day': 'The Sungod of Heaven' arose and took 'well-being' and 'the year.' To 'the whole soul' for 'the deity.' [Favorable].

⁴⁶ This question is paralleled in the second text by iv 10-11.

⁴⁷ The parallel text adds "this year."

⁴⁸ Perhaps modern Alişar, see RGTC 6:19-23, RGTC 6/2:6f.

⁴⁹ The answer in the parallel text (iv 11-12) is: "'The gods' arose and took 'the city.' Into 'evil.' Unfavorable."

⁵⁰ For literature and guesses concerning the location see RGTC 6:513f.

REFERENCES

Archi 1974; 1975; 1982; Beal 1994; Berman 1982; Goetze 1962; Gurney 1981; Hoffner 1993; van den Hout 1991; Kammenhuber 1976; Laroche 1952; 1958; 1970; Lebrun 1994; Schuol 1994:73-124; 247-304; Ünal 1973; 1974; 1978; Ünal and Kammenhuber 1975.

This page intentionally left blank

C. INDIVIDUAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. PROVERBS

HITTITE PROVERBS (1.80)

Gary Beckman

The sayings and generalizing anecdotes by which the Hittites expressed the received wisdom of their civilization were not collected for use in scribal instruction as was the practice in earlier Mesopotamia, but are rather to be found scattered throughout texts of various types. The following is a selection of proverbs and proverbial allusions:

1. [In a prayer, a queen addresses the chief goddess of Hatti, asking her to cure her husband's illness, in return for service which she herself has rendered to the deity's child:] Among humans one often speaks the proverb as follows: "A god is well-disposed to a midwife." I, Puduḥepa, am a midwife, (and since) I have devoted myself to your son (the Storm-god of Nerik), be well-disposed to me, O Sun-goddess of Arinna, my lady! Give to me [what I ask of you]; grant life to [Ḫattušili (III)], your servant.

2. [It is probably the same queen who writes in irritation to a young man who had married into the royal family:] Why does one speak thus: "The son-in-law whose wife has died remains in every sense a son-in-law?" You were my son-in-law, but you do not recognize my relationship(?).

3. [A high Hittite authority in Syria addresses King Ammurapi of Ugarit concerning his impending divorce from the daughter of the Hittite Great King:] A proverb of the Hittites: "A man was held in prison for five years. When they said to him, 'You will be released in the morning,' he was annoyed."

a Jer 31:29;
Ezek 18:2

Now you have acted in this manner. Did the daughter of His Majesty perhaps remove herself from her estate? (Or) [did] you somehow [do (it)]? You removed her!

4. [A Hittite law reads:] If someone elopes with a woman, and a rescuer goes after them — if two or three men die, there is no legal compensation. "You have become a wolf!"

5. The sin of the father devolves upon his son.^a

6. Since humanity is depraved, rumors constantly circulate.

7. The will of the gods is severe! It does not hasten to seize, but when it does seize, it does not let go again!

8. (When) a bird takes refuge in its nest, the nest preserves its life.

9. The tongue is a bridge.

10. This one disappears, but that one's still here!

11. [Something] is on hand, (but) something (else) is not on hand.

REFERENCES

Texts: 1. KUB 21.27 ii 15-21; 2. KUB 23.85:7-9; 3. RS 20.216:5-19; 4. KBo 6.2 + ii 10-12; 5. KUB 14.8 rev. 13; 6. KBo 5.13 iv 8-9; 7. KUB 13.4 ii 22-24; 8. KUB 14.8 rev. 22; 9. KBo 11 iii 17; 10. KUB 13.35 iv 45-46; 11. KUB 40.88 iii 9; Bibliography: Beckman 1986; Nougayrol 1960.

2. OTHER WISDOM LITERATURE

FRAGMENT OF A WISDOM TEXT(?) (1.81)

Gary Beckman

The type of composition to which this small piece of a tablet belongs is uncertain.

[If a city is in ruins(?)], then [the builders] will build [it a second time]. If a rhyton [is cracked(?), then] the artisans [will cast] it a second time, [and] they will renew it a second time.

[If someone damages] a plated horse chariot, then its owner [will repair] it [a second time].

[If] a flood carries off an orchard(!), [then] its [owner will establish] the orchard a second time.

[You] are not a town, nor are you [the wall] of a structure, [so that] the builders will build you a second time.

You are not a rhyton, so that the artisans will cast you a second time. You are not a plated [horse chariot, so that] they will repair you a second time.

You are not an orchard, so that [they will establish] you a second time.

REFERENCES

Text: KUB 57.30: 1'-15'; Bibliography: van den Hout 1990:425-26.

EXCERPT FROM THE HURRO-HITTITE BILINGUAL WISDOM TEXT (1.82)

Gary Beckman

The recent discovery at Bogazköy/Hattuša of a multi-tablet composition in Hurrian with Hittite translation is very important for the study of the former language, which is still poorly understood. This text is also of significance because the genre of wisdom literature was previously only scantily represented at the Hittite capital. This translation is based primarily on the Hittite text.

(ii 1-15) A mountain expelled a deer from its expanse (lit., 'body'), and the deer went to another mountain. He became fat and he sought a confrontation. He began to curse the mountain: "If only fire would burn up the mountain on which I graze! If only the Storm-god would smite it (with lightning) and fire burn it up!" When the mountain heard, it became sick at heart, and in response the mountain cursed the deer: "The deer whom I fattened up now curses me in return. Let the hunters bring down the deer! Let the fowlers capture him! Let the hunters take his meat, and the fowlers take his skin!"

(ii 17-21) It is not a deer, but a human. A certain man who fled from his own town arrived in another land. When he sought confrontation, he began to undertake evil in return for the town (of his refuge), but the gods of the town have cursed him.

(ii 23-25) Leave that story. I will tell you another story. Listen to the message. I will speak wisdom to you.

(ii 26-30) There is a deer. He grazes the pastures which lie beside the streams. He always casts (his) [eyes] upon the pastures which are on the other side, but he does not reach the pastures of (the) other side. He does not catch sight of them.

(ii 31-38) It is not a deer, but a human. A certain man whom his lord made a district governor — although he was made governor of one district, he always cast (his) eyes upon a second district. Then the gods taught him a lesson, and he did not arrive at that (first) district, nor did he (even) catch sight of the second district.

(ii 39-41) Leave that story. I will tell you another story. Listen to the message. I will speak wisdom to you.

(ii 42-51) A smith cast a cup in a praiseworthy fashion. He cast and moulded it. He inlaid it with ornaments and engraved it. He put a shine on it with a woolen cloth. But the foolish piece of copper began to curse the one who had cast it: "If only the hand of the one who cast me were broken! If only his right forearm were palsied!" When the smith heard, he became sick at heart.

(ii 52-60) He began to say to himself: "Why has this piece of copper which I cast cursed me in return?" The smith uttered a curse against the cup: "Let the Storm-god smash the cup and rip off its ornaments! Let the cup fall into an irrigation ditch and the ornaments fall into a river!"

(iii 1-5) It is not a cup, but a human. A certain son who was hostile to his father became an adult and he moved to (a better) circle. He no longer looks after his father. The gods of his father have cursed him.

(iii 6-8) Leave that story. I will tell you another story. Listen to the message. I will speak wisdom to you.

(iii 9-12) A dog absconded with a loaf of bread from an oven. He pulled it out of the oven and dipped it in grease. He dipped it in grease, sat down, and set about eating it.

(iii 13-19) It is not a dog, but a human. <A certain man> whom his lord had made a district administrator later increased the tax payments in that town. He was very confrontational and no longer looked after the town. They managed to denounce him before his lord, and he began to disgorge before his lord the taxes which he had swallowed up.

(iii 20-22) Leave that story. I will tell you another story. Listen to the message. I will speak wisdom to you.

(iii 28-32) A rodent(?) dragged a loaf of bread from an oven. He pulled it out of the oven and dipped [it] in grease. He dipped it in grease, sat down, and set about eating it.

[It is not] a rodent(?), but a human. <A certain man> whom his lord had made a provincial governor later increased the tax payments in that [town]. He was very confrontational and no longer [looked] after the town. They managed to denounce him before his lord, and he began to disgorge before his lord the taxes which he had swallowed up.

(iii 34) Leave that story. I will tell you another story. Listen to the message. I will speak wisdom to you.

(iii 41-47) [A builder] built a tower in a praiseworthy fashion. He [sank] the foundation trenches down to the Sun-goddess of the Earth. He made the battlements(?) reach up nearly to heaven. Then the foolish [tower] began to curse the one who had built it: "If only the hand of the one who built me were broken! If only his [right] forearm were palsied!" The builder heard and he [became sick] at heart. [The builder] said to himself: "Why has the wall which I built cursed me?" Then the builder uttered a curse [against the tower]: "Let the Storm-god smash the tower and pull up the foundation blocks! Let its [...] fall down into an irrigation ditch and the brickwork fall down into a river!"

(iii 52) It is [not] a tower, but a human. A certain son who was an enemy of his father became an adult, and he attained [an honorable position(?)]. He no longer looks after his father. The gods of his father have cursed him.

REFERENCES

Text: KBo 32.14 ii 1-iii 52; Bibliography: Oettinger 1992; Otten 1984:54-60.

3. INSTRUCTIONS

INSTRUCTIONS TO PRIESTS AND TEMPLE OFFICIALS (1.83)

Gregory McMahon

This text is preserved in at least eight copies, several of which have been reconstructed through multiple joins of tablet fragments. The tablets are to be found in both the Istanbul and Ankara tablet collections. The copies date to the Empire period, but the text itself seems to go back to the pre-New Hittite period, before the reign of Šuppiluliuma I. The main text is KUB 13.4, a large well preserved four column tablet with the tops of columns i and ii broken away. Unless otherwise noted, line numbers given are for that tablet.

§1 (1'-13') The first paragraph is too broken to translate meaningfully. An estimated twelve lines are missing completely, and lines x+1 through 12' are only partially preserved. The preserved remnant includes allusions to measures (probably of grain), the palace, and a few prohibitions. Line 13', although mostly preserved, is not intelligible without the context of previous lines.

§2 (i 14'-33') Further: Let those who make the daily bread^a be clean. Let them be washed and trimmed. Let (their) hair(?) and finger[nails] be trimmed.¹ Let them be clothed in clean garments If[f] (they are) [not], let them not prepare (them). Let those who normally [propit]iate the spirit and body of the gods prepare them. The baker's house in which they bake them must be swept and sprinkled down.

^a Num 4:7;
1 Chr 9:31-32

Further, neither pig nor dog may come through the doors into the place where the bread is broken. (Are) the mind of man and god somehow different? No! In this which (is concerned)? No! The mind (is) one and the same. When the servant stands before his master, he (is) washed. He has clothed (himself) in clean (clothes). He gives him (his master) either to eat or to drink. Since the master eats and drinks, (in) his spirit he (is) relaxed. He is favorably inclined toward him (the servant). When he (is) solicitous(?), his master) does not find fault (with him). Is the mind of the god somehow different?² If the servant at some point angers his master, either

¹ Lit., "taken (off)."

² Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:149), reading the text slightly differently, translate "If, however, he (the slave) is ever dilatory(?), and is not observant(?), he has a different disposition toward him." Goetze (ANET 207) translates with a sense similar to Sturtevant and Bechtel's. The passage is unclear because the word for solicitous(?)/dilatory(?) occurs (twice) only here.

they kill him, or they injure his nose, eyes, (and) ears. Or he (the master) [will seize him, (and) his wife, his children, his brother, his sister, his in-laws, (and) his family, whether his (master's) male or female slave. They (may) only call (him) over. They (may) do nothing to him. If ever he dies, he does not die alone. His family (is) also included with him.	b Lev 20:5	no one omit the thick bread or thin bread of the god.⁴ And let no one pour out beer (or) wine off the top of the cup. Render it all to the god. Then speak (this) word for yourselves before the god: "Whoever took from your divine bread (or) libation vessel, may the god my lord pursue him. May he seize his house from bottom to top." If [you are able] to eat (and) drink [everything] on that day, eat and drink it. If, however, you are unable to do so, eat and drink [it within] three days. The piyantalla⁵ bread, however, [you may not give] to your wives, children, (or) female or male servants.⁶ The beer and wine is not to [cross] the threshold of the gods. If a guest comes to anyone, if he (the host) in order to go up to the temple normally crosses the threshold of the god [or the king, that] one (the host) may [take] him up. He may eat and drink. If, however, he (is) a [foreigner], (if) he (is) not a native of Hattuša (and) he approaches the gods, [he will die]. And it (is) a capital offence for whoever takes him (in).
§3 (i 34'-38') If, however, someone angers the mind of a god, does the god seek it (revenge) only from him alone? Does he not seek it from his wife, [his children,] his descendants, his family,^b his male and female servants, his cattle, his sheep and his grain? He utterly destroys him with everything. Be very afraid of a god's word for your own sake.	c Exod 23:14-17; 34:18-24; Lev 23; Deut 16:1-17	§7^d (KUB 13.5 ii 17-33) [If] some [ox or] sheep (is) driven in for the gods to eat, but you take away either the fattened ox or fattened sheep; and you substitute a thin one which you have slaughtered; (and) either you eat up that ox, or you put it into a pen, or you put it under a yoke; or you put the sheep into the fold, or you kill it for yourselves, (or) [you do] as you wish, or [you give] it in exchange to another man and you accept a payment: You are withholding [a morsel] from the mouth of the god. (If) [you give] it [for your own desire],⁷ or you give it to another and you think thus: "Because he (is) a god, he will say nothing. He will do nothing to us:" Look at the man who grabs the morsel you desire from (before your) eyes! Afterwards, when it acts, the will of the gods (is) strong. It is not quick to seize. But once it seizes, it does not let go. Be very fearful of the will of the gods.
§4^c (i 39'-49') Further: The festival of the month, the festival of the year, the festival of the stag, the festival of autumn, the festival of spring, the festival of thunder, the festival of hiyara-, the festival of pudaḥa-, the iṣuwa-festival, the festival of šallašša-, the festival of the rhyton, the festivals of the holy priest, the festivals of the old men, the festivals of the šiwanzanni- priestesses, the festival of dahiya-, the festivals of the upati- men, the festivals of pula-, the festivals of ḥahratar, or whatever festival (there is) up in Hattuša: If you do not perform them with all the cattle, sheep, bread, beer and wine set up, (or if) you officials of the temple make a deal with those who provide them (the offering materials), you will cause them (the offerings) to fall short of the will of the gods.^c	d 1 Sam 2:12-17; Mal 1:6-13 e Lev 2:4 f Num 7; Josh 6:19, 24; 1 Chr 9:28-30; 26:20-22	§8 (ii 25'-51') Further: Whatever silver, gold, clothing, (and) bronze implements of the gods you hold, (you are) their guards (only).^f (You have) no (right) to the silver, gold, clothing (or) bronze implements of the gods. What (is) in the house of the gods (is) not (for you).^g It is for the god. Be very careful. There is to be no silver or gold for the temple official. Let
§5 (i 50'-59') Or if you take them (the offerings) when set up, and do not bring them forth for the pleasure of the gods, (but rather) carry them away to your own houses, and your wives, children, and servants eat them up, or a relative or some important(?) guest comes to you and you give them to him: You are taking them from the pleasure of the god. (If) you do not bring them straight in to him, (or if) you present them (divided) into several portions, that matter of dividing will be upon your head. Do not divide them. And he who does divide them shall die. Let there be no turning back for him.^d
§6 (i 60'-66', KUB 13.5+ ii 6-16) Keep all of the bread, beer, (and) wine up in the temple.³ Let

³ Or with Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:151): "carry everything up into the temple."

⁴ The sense of this is rendered freely by Goetze (ANET 208): "Let no one appropriate for himself a sacrificial loaf of the god (or) a thin loaf."

⁵ Süel (1985:35) translates "bağış ekmeği," "gift bread", deriving piyantalla from pai-, "to give."

⁶ Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:152-153) did not have the duplicate KUB 40.63 and therefore restored the text differently from Süel, whose restoration (p. 34) uses the new duplicate and is therefore more likely.

⁷ Following Süel's restoration, p. 38.

⁸ These two sentences in the original are difficult to translate exactly, although their sense seems clear. I have followed Goetze's sense (ANET 208).

him not carry it on his own body. Let him not make it into an adornment for his wife (or) child. If, however, they give him silver, gold, clothing, (or) implements of bronze as gifts from the palace, let them be listed: "The king gave it to him." As much as its weight (is), let it also be set down. Further, let it be set down as follows: "At this festival they gave it to him." And at the end let the witnesses be set down: "When they gave it to him, this one and this one were standing there." Further, let him not leave it in his house. Let him offer it for sale. When he sells it, he must not sell it in secret. Let the lords of Hatti be present and watch. Let them set down on a wooden tablet whatever he buys, and let them seal it. When the king comes up to Hattuša, let him take it (the tablet) into the palace. Let them seal it for him. If he sells it as he wishes, it (is) a capital offence for him. But whoever is not selling the gift of the king, on which the king's name (is) stamped, but is nevertheless selling silver, gold, clothing, (or) implements of bronze; whoever gets hold of him, and hides him, and does not bring him to the gate of the kings, it (is) a capital crime for both of them. Let them both die. There is no [...] from the god. There is to be no pardon for them.

- §9 (ii 52'-72') Further, you who (are) temple officials: If you do not perform the festivals at the time of the festivals; (if) you do the spring festival in fall, (or) the fall festival in spring, (or) if the right time for doing the festival (has) arrived, and he who is to do it comes to you, the priests, the "anointing priests," the šiwanzanni-priestesses, to you the temple officials, and he seizes your knees, (saying) "The harvests (are) before me," or a marriage or a journey or some other matter. "Let me off."⁹ Let that matter finish for me, and when that matter is finished for me, I will do the festival thus": Do not do according to the wish of (that) man. He must not *persuade*¹⁰ you. Do not conduct business concerning the will of the gods. (If) a man persuades you, and you take payment for yourselves, the gods will demand it of you at a later time. They will stand in evil against your spirit, wives, children, (and) servants. Work only for the g 1 Chr 9:17-27; 26

h Num 3:6-7, 32, 38; 16:9, 18:2-4, 26-28; 2 Kgs 10:24

will of the gods. You may eat bread, you may drink water, you may make a house. But do not do the will of a man. Do not sell death, neither buy it.

- §10 (ii 73'-iii 20) Further: You who are temple officials, be very careful in the matter of the watch.⁸ At nightfall go quickly down and eat and drink. And if anyone has thoughts of a woman, he may sleep with a woman. As soon as the s[un] (is) up], let him [immediately bathe]. Let him come up pr[omp]tly into the temple to sleep. Whoever is a temple official — all [high] priests, lesser priests, anointing priests — whoever regularly crosses the threshold of the gods: let each not neglect to sleep up in the temple. Further, let sentries be posted¹¹ at night, and let them continue to make the rounds all night. Outside, let the guards keep their watch. But inside the temples let the temple officials make the rounds all night. Let there be no sleep for them. Each night one high priest is to be in charge of the sentries. And further, of those who are priests, someone shall be (assigned) to the temple gate and shall guard the temple.¹² No one (with this duty) is to sleep with his wife in his own house. It (is) a capital offence for whoever they find down in his own house. Guard the temples very carefully, and let there be no sleep for you. Further, let the watch be divided among you. In whose watch a sin¹² occurs, he shall die. Let him not be pardoned.
- §11 (iii 21-34) Whatever rite (there is) for someone up in Hattuša: If someone normally admits a priest, an anointing priest, or guards, let him admit them only. If there is a guard for anyone, he also must go into the precinct enclosure.¹³ Let him not speak as follows: "I am protecting the temple of my god, but I will not go in there." If there is some enemy idea that someone will attempt to cause damage, and those on the outer wall do not see him, (but) the temple officials inside see him,¹⁴ the guard must go after him. Let that (guard) not neglect to sleep next to his god. If, however, he does neglect (to do so), and they do not kill him, let them subject him to public humiliation. Naked — let there be no clothing on his body at all — let him carry water three times from the Labarna's spring into the temple of his

⁹ Following the CHD, sub memiya-, p. 273. Lit., the Hittite phrase is "Step back for me." Goetze (ANET 209) translates "Do me a favor." Süel (1985:49) translates "Bana destek olunuz," "be a support to me."

¹⁰ The verb is apparently a medio-passive form of the verb "to see." Thus perhaps lit., "He must not appear/show himself to you." Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:157) translate "let him not be pitied by you." Goetze (ANET 209) translates "let him not take precedence (of the gods)." Süel (1985:51) translates "Size kötülük etmesin," "let him not do evil to you."

¹¹ Lit., "taken."

¹² That is, an oversight or mishap. For the parallel with Num 18:7, see Speiser 1963; Milgrom 1970:50-59.

¹³ Or "he definitely must go on watch."

¹⁴ Text: "them."

- god. Let that be his humiliation.
- §12 (iii 35-43) Furthermore you priests, anointing priests, šiwanzanni- priestesses (or) temple officials: [If some x[]-tuḫmeyanza person becomes drunk in the temple or another sacred building, and if he causes a disturbance or a quarrel in the temple and disrupts¹⁵ a festival, let them beat him. [Furth]er, he must celebrate that festival as established with cattle, sheep, bread, (and) beer. He may not omit (even) the thin loaf. Whoever neglects it and does not celebrate the festival (as) established, let it be a great sin to that one. Let him make up the festival. Be very careful about quarrels.
- §13 (iii 49-54) Further: In the matter of fire be very careful. If (there is) a festival (going on) in the temple, guard the fire well. When night falls, however, extinguish well with water any fire that remains on the hearth. If, however, (there is) in the matter of fire some (burning?)¹⁶ dry wood here and there: Whoever is to extinguish it, even if only the temple in which (this) sin occurs is destroyed, while Ḫattuša and the king's goods are not destroyed, he who commits this sin will perish along with his descendants. Of those in the temple none will be left living. They will perish together with their descendants. Be extremely careful concerning the matter of fire.
- §14 (iii 55-83) Furthermore: You who (are) kitchen attendants of all the gods: Cupbearers, tablemen, cooks, bakers, (or) vintners, be very respectful regarding the will of the gods for you. Maintain great respect for the sacrificial loaves (and) libation vessel(s) of the gods. The place for breaking bread must be swept and sprinkled by you. Neither pig nor dog is ever to cross the threshold. You yourselves are to be bathed. Wear clean clothes. In addition, your hair and fingernails are to be trimmed.¹⁷ Let the will of the gods not find fault with you. If a pig or dog does somehow force its way to the utensils of wood or clay that you have, and the kitchen worker does not throw it out, but gives to the gods to eat from an unclean (vessel), to that one will the gods give excrement and urine to eat and drink. Whoever sleeps with a woman, as he performs a i Num 19:13

J Exod 23:16,
19; 34:19-20,
22; Lev 2:14;
Deut 15:19-21

rite for the gods (and) gives them to eat and drink, let him go to the woman thus (clean). Furthermore, [break of 2-3 words].¹⁸ As soon as the sun (is) up, he must immediately bathe, and arrive promptly at the time of the gods' eating in the morning. If, however, he neglects (this), it is a sin for him. Whoever sleeps with a woman and his superior (or) his supervisor presses (him), let him say so.¹⁹ However, if he does not dare tell (his superior), let him tell a fellow servant. He still must bathe. However, if he intentionally delays, and without bathing he forces his way near the gods' sacrificial loaves (and) libation vessel (while) unclean,¹ and his fellow servant knows about him, and he appears to him(!)²⁰: If he conceals (it), but afterward it becomes known, it (is) a capital offence for them and both must die.

- §15 (iv 1-11) [Further: All you who (are) far]rm[ers of the god,] i[f ...] there is anything... Or a sacrific[ial] loaf of[r...].²¹ The first fruits/ of animals which you, the farmers, present for the pleasure of the gods, present them promptly at the right time. Before anyone has eaten of them, bring them promptly for the pleasure of the gods. Let the gods not be kept waiting for them. If you delay them, it (is) a sin for you. They will consult an oracle about you, and as the gods your lords command, thus will they do to you. And they will fine you an ox and ten sheep and will (thus) calm the mind of the gods.
- §16 (iv 12-24) Further: If you plant grain, and if the priest does not send you someone to sow the seed, (and if) he entrusts²² it to you for sowing, and you sow much, but you declare before the priest that it (was) little, or (if) the god's field (is) productive, but the farmer's field (is) ruined, and you call the god's field yours and your field the god's field, or (if) while you are storing the grain, you declare half (of it), while half (of it) you hide, and you later come and divide it amongst yourselves, (if) it afterward becomes known: You may steal it from a man, but you cannot steal it from a god. It (is) a sin for you. They will take away all your grain and pour it onto the

¹⁵ Lit., "beats."

¹⁶ Süel (1985:65) suggests that the dry wood is wood which has not been completely extinguished.

¹⁷ Lit., "taken."

¹⁸ Süel (1985:71) translates based on her restoration "Sonra kadının yanında yatsın," "Then let him lie next to a woman." This fits the context but does not fit the traces on the tablet very well.

¹⁹ The following lines indicate that the sense of this is that the superior is hurrying the kitchen worker along to his duties unaware that he is unclean.

²⁰ Text: "you."

²¹ Following Süel's restoration (p. 74), which is possible based on my collation of the tablet.

²² Saurtevant and Bechtel (1935:162) and Süel (1985:76) read a second person pl. verb, but see the CHD collation in volume L-N:164 maniyaḫh- 2.

threshing floor of the gods.

§17 (iv 25-33) Further: You who have the plow oxen of the threshing floor²³ (of the temple): If you sell a plow ox, or you kill and eat it, and you (thus) steal it for yourselves from the gods (saying) "It died of emaciation," or "It kept breaking (things)," or "It ran off," or "A steer gored it," but you yourselves eat it up, and it later becomes known, you will replace that ox. If, however, it does not become known, you will go (before) the god. If you are shown to be innocent, it (is due to) your protective deity. If, however, you are impure (guilty), it is a capital sin for you.

§18 (iv 34-55) Further: You who (are) cowherds (and) shepherds of the god. If (there is) a rite for any god at the time of bearing young, and you are to have either a calf, a lamb, a kid, or ŠALLITE HĀGARATE,²⁴ do not delay it. Present it at the appropriate time. Let the gods not be kept waiting for it. Before anyone eats from the first fruits, bring them promptly to the gods. Or if there is a festival of milk²⁵ for a god, while they are scraping (the cream off?) the milk, do not put it (the festival) off. Perform it for him. If you do not bring the first fruits of the gods promptly, but first eat of them yourselves, or you send them to your superiors, and it afterwards becomes known, it (is) a capital sin for you. If, however, it does not become known, whenever you bring them, you will bring them before the god (speaking) as follows: "If we have given these first fruits for our own desire first, or given them to our superiors, or to our wives (and) children, or to some other person, (then) we have offended the will of the gods." Then you will drain the rhyton of the god of life.²⁶ If you (are) innocent, (it is) your protective deity. If, however, you (are) guilty, you will perish together with your wives (and) children.

§19 (iv 56-77) Further: If you ever cut out a selection (of animals) and they drive them to the gods your lords, the cowherd and shepherd must go with the selected group. As it (was) selected from the enclosure (and) the fold, thus let them bring it in to the gods. They may not change it later on the road. If some cowherd or shepherd creates a deception while on the road, and turns aside either a fattened ox or fattened sheep, and receives a price (for it), or they kill it and consume it, and they put an emaciated one in its place: If it becomes known, it is a capital sin for them. They have taken the god's most desired portion. If, however, it does not become known, whenever they arrive, they must take the rhyton of the god of life from the offering stand and declare as follows: "If we have withheld the best portion from the mouth of the gods for ourselves and given it to ourselves for our own desire or (if) we have sold it or exchanged it, or accepted a payment for ourselves, (or) put an emaciated one in its place, you, O god, pursue us together with our wives (and) children for the sake of your special portion.

Colophon (iv 78-81) First tablet of the rules of all the temple officials, of the kitchen attendants of the gods, the farmers of the gods, and of the cowherds of the god and shepherds of the god. Completed.

²³ Süel (1985:78) restores DIN[GIR.MEŠ] instead of KIS[LAH] and translates "tanrı[ların] çift öküzlerini," "plow oxen of the gods."

²⁴ Read by Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:164) as UZUŠA-LI-Ú(?)EŠ HA-AG-G[AJ]-RA-TE-(m)EŠ. Süel (1985:80) reads UZUŠA-LI-T[E]MEŠ HA-AG-[GUR]-RA-TEMEŠ. Both readings are possible; neither provides a recognizable phrase.

²⁵ Sturtevant and Bechtel (1935:164) read EZEN D[U]G, and both Sturtevant and Goetze translate "festival of the cup." Süel (1985:82, 150-151) follows Güterbock (RHA XXV/81:141f.) reading EZEN [G]A. She translates "süt bayramı," "festival of milk," which makes sense given that this passage concerns a festival at the time of bearing young. If the reading GA "milk" is correct, the verb probably means "to churn" (CHD šap-). It may refer to scraping the cream off the milk. Süel translates "sütü ne zaman yayıkta çalkalarsanız," "when you churn the milk in the churn."

²⁶ Apparently an ordeal or sealing of the oath.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 264. Studies: Gurney 1967:94; Hoffner 1973a:220; Hulin 1970; Kühne 1978:179-184; Moyer 1983:35-37; Sturtevant and Bechtel 1935; Süel 1985.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COMMANDERS OF BORDER GARRISONS (BEL MADGALTI) (1.84)

Gregory McMahon

An essential element in Hittite administration of provinces was the auriyaš išhaš, literally "lord of the watch tower/guard post,"¹ often written with the Akkadogram BEL MADGALTI. This was the officer in charge of garrisons and administration in sensitive frontier provinces of the empire. The Hittite term is often translated "border governor";

¹ Hebrew misphāh, "watchtower," is the name recorded in the Hebrew scriptures for a number of different cities in Palestine.

Hoffner has proposed "margrave," which implies the idea of governors assigned to frontier provinces. The very detailed instructions for these officials make it clear that they were responsible not only for military command and reconnaissance, but also for administering the city in which they were stationed. This text is perhaps the most important source we have for understanding the nature of the Hittite treatment of conquered territories.

The text is extant in many copies and fragments; the importance of the margraves and their proper understanding of their duties may be inferred from the great number of copies of their instructions. The critical edition of the text is found in von Schuler (1957), which must be supplemented by Goetze's edition of the first fifteen paragraphs in JCS.² The text is number 261 in Laroche's CTH. The main text is KUB 13.2. The first fifteen paragraphs are best preserved in KUB 13.1. Line numbers, unless otherwise noted, are for KUB 13.2.

§1 (KUB 13.1 i 1-3) Thus speaks His Maje[sty] Arnuwanda the great king [...] Thus let the margra[ves] be [instructed].	a 1 Sam 14:11-12	the workers, cattle, sheep, horse(s) and donkey(s) down out of the city.
§2 (KUB 13.1 i 4-5) Let [tho]se forward [cities] be [well guarded]. Let the enclosure [be] well guarded.	b Jer 49:31	§11 (KUB 13.1 i 33-34) Let the scouts hold (their) posts on the main road and let them keep [...] at a distance. Let the city be guarded.
§3 (KUB 13.1 i 6-8) While the guards have not yet come down from (their) watch, let the scouts [com]e down from the city.		§12 (KUB 13.1 i 35-36) The garrison which holds the posts [must] also [be] protected. The scouts must cover the roads carefully and watch for signs of the enemy.
§4 (KUB 13.1 i 9-11) Let them thoroughly inspect the kuranna - ³ and bring back a report. The watchmen are to come down from (their) watch in the same way.		§13 (KUB 13.1 i 37-38) Furthermore, let the margrave [keep] the garrison [together] at (their) posts. [The garrison] of the post [is to be] gone from the city for two days (maximum). ⁵
§5 (KUB 13.1 i 12-14) The main road scouts must take (their) posts. ⁴ The sc[outs] must drive down from the city to in[spe]ct the kuranna -, and (then) inspect the kuranna -.		§14 (i 5'-6') Since the roads (are) covered, when the scouts see any sign of the enemy, they will send a message immediately.
§6 (KUB 13.1 i 15-16) The scouts who [hold] the p[osts] on the main road, [whatever] they are to find, if [...]		§15 (i 7'-12') Let them (then) close up the cities; they are not to let out the fieldworkers, cattle, sheep, horses (or) donkeys. Let them guard (them). The margrave must have kept account and written record of the posts which are most forward and of the enemy's routes. Further: Three scouts shall hold each road. Over the (whole system) three officers are to be in charge.
§7 (KUB 13.1 i 17) (Then) they may let out the cattle, sheep, and workers from the city.		§16 (i 13'-19') He (the margrave) must keep an account of the troops of the post and put it in writing. He will know the officers of second, third, and fourth rank in (each) place. And wherever the enemy attacks, the troops are to follow the enemy's track for three days. They are to hold the roads for two days. The margrave must arrest and send before His Majesty anyone who does not kill the enemy, (whether) officer of the second, third, (or) fourth rank.
§8 (KUB 13.1 i 18-22) But when night falls let the scouts make [...] and take (their) posts. [...] the roads(?) which the scouts wa[tched] by day, they will [in the same way] watch [by night]. They must get the workers, cattle, sheep, horses, (and) donkeys moving and move [them] up [into the city].		§17 (i 20'-21') If, however, His Majesty (is) nearby, the margrave must appear before His Majesty and bring the offenders (with him).
§9 (KUB 13.1 i 23-28) Then let the scouts who [hold] po[sts] go up into the city. Let them bar the gates (and) posterns and shoot the bolts. ⁶ [Further] they must post troops behind the postern gates; they are to sleep behind the gate. Further, let them relieve the guards from (their) watch. They will keep (their) watch carefully.		§18 (i 22'-29') Let them keep an account of the supplies(?) ⁶ of the fortified cities which (are)
§10 (KUB 13.1 i 29-32) But in the morning, the scouts [come out(?)] from the city. They must inspect the kuranna -s thoroughly [...] and take (their) posts. They may [the]n let ² Goetze 1960:69-73.

³ A duplicate has "kuranna-s." Goetze (1960:73) suggests that the meaning of kuranna- can only be guessed at, as it only appears here. However, it also appears in the Instructions for the Royal Bodyguard (below, text 1.85). Goetze suggests "foreground." Güterbock and van den Hout 1991 do not translate, but on page 45 discuss the attestations of kuranna- and its general semantic range as a "closing device" on the city gates.

⁴ Or "The scouts must take (their) posts on the main road."

⁵ Duplicate has for the entire paragraph: "Further: the margrave, the troops, (and) the scouts are to be gone (from) the post for two days (maximum)."

⁶ See Goetze 1959b:69.

in the province. Those posts (and) cities which (are) forward, into which the enemy can (most) quickly penetrate: When the [mar]grave [...] those cities, as long as [...], let him guard. Within, he [...] [Two lines of cuneiform missing.]	c 2 Sam 5:9	should be twelve¹² fingers in diameter¹³ and $\frac{3}{4}$ meter in length. The diameter of the [x] wood is to be three fingers, with a length of $\frac{1}{2}$ meter. The wood for the ... should also be (stored) in great quantity. [...] (and) hardup-pi-, all are to be (stored) in great quantity.
§19 (i 30'-?) [Too broken to translate: Bottom of column i broken away; uncertain how long §19 was, or how many more paragraphs are lost.]	d Josh 2:15	§26' (ii 11'-15') Let it (the wood(?)) be stored under seal. Every year he (the margrave) is to take account of it and deposit it with the šaramna-. Let them (the troops(?)) scrape the buildings of the king, cattle barns, store-houses and baths which are older. They must replaster them with new stucco and renew them.
§20' (KUB 31.84 ii 1-4) ...the tower of ... should be x gipeššar⁷ at the top, but around the bottom it should be six⁸ gipeššar. Further, it must be encircled with a gutter and a wooden mariyawanna-.⁹ The mariyawanna- is to be six gipeššar around the front, but let it (protrude?) five šekan.	e 1 Kgs 7:10; Ps 118:22	§27' (ii 16'-20') Let them regularly remove from the (interior) walls the plaster which is crumbling. Let them uncover the foundation stones⁶ (for inspection).¹⁴ Furthermore, the threshing floor, the straw barn, the temple, the baths, (the buildings associated) with the orchards, the vegetable gardens, and the vineyards must be built properly.
§21' (KUB 31.86 ii 6'-12') [When] you fortify a [city],^c let hutanu-s [of x] m[eters] be taken/removed. Up on top, let there be x [met]ers. Before you complete the fortifying of the city, the moat is to be three meters deep and two meters across. Before he refills [it] with water, let them pave [it] with stones.		§28' (ii 21'-25') The drains of the bath, the cup-bearers' building, and the portico must flow freely; let (the men) regularly inspect them. Any that is stopped up with water they should clear out. And let the bird ponds which are in your district be well looked after.¹⁵
§22' (KUB 31.86 ii 13'-18') Furthermore, let the gates, posterns, heads of stairways (and) windows of city-walls [b]e furnished with doors (and) bolts. Let nothing (of these) be lost.¹⁰ [Do not neglect] to apply plaster to the city-wall. And let it be smoothed. A thatched roof may become leaky. Let it not (happen).		§29' (ii 26'-31') In a city through which the margrave drives, he shall take account of the elders, priests, anointing priests, (and) šiwanzanni- priestesses. He shall speak to them thus: "A temple which (is) in this city, either that of the Stormgod, or of some other god, is now neglected," or ("It (is) ruined.")
§23' (KUB 31.86 ii 19'-25') In the ... which you build, let the coppersmith make a [...] drain. Let the gates of the city-walls [be equipped with drains(?)] of stone inside and outside in the same way. Furthermore: allow no one to dig in the city wall or burn near it. The owners must not let (their) horses, mules, (or) donkeys near the plaster (of the city-wall).		§30' (ii 32'-35') ("It (is) not attended to with regard to priests, šiwanzanni- priestesses, (and) anointing priests. Now attend to it again.") Let them restore it. As it was built before, let them rebuild it in the same way.
§24' (KUB 31.86 ii 26'-32') No one is to put a torch on a wooden(?) [...] inside or outside. No one may take (part of) the city wall for an inn,¹¹ nor may anyone start a fire near the wall. Allow no one to quarter their horses (or) m[ules there]. The city drains must not become clogged; they must be cleared out every year.		§31' (ii 36'-41') Furthermore: Reverence for the gods must be maintained, and special reverence for the Stormgod is to be established. If some temple (roof) leaks, the margrave and the city commander must repair it. Or (if) some rhyton of the Stormgod or any cultic implement of another god (is) ruined, the priests, anointing priests, and šiwanzanni- priestesses will renew it.
§25' (ii 5'-10') The margrave should organize the firewood for the fortified cities as follows: It

⁷ A linear measurement, probably .5 meter; see Melchert 1980.

⁸ Variant "three."

⁹ This word occurs only in this passage; see CHD L-N 186 for discussion.

¹⁰ Or "destroyed."

¹¹ Cf. Josh 2:15; see Hoffner 1974b.

¹² Variant: "five."

¹³ Lit., "from the front."

¹⁴ Variant adds: "They are not, however, to lift out the foundation stones."

¹⁵ Or: "Let the birds which are on the ponds in your district be well looked after."

- §32' (ii 42'-46') Furthermore: The margrave is to write down the cultic implements of the god and send it (the record) in to His Majesty. Further, they are to worship the gods at the (proper) times. Whatever is the (proper) time for any god, let them worship him at that time. (If) there is no priest, šiwanzanni-priestess, or anointing priest for any god, they must immediately assign one.
- §33' (KUB 40.56+31.88 iii 2, KUB 13.2 iii 1-3) Or whatever old cultic stela (there is), (if) it has not been kept track of, do an accounting of it now. Let them set it up, and furthermore whatever sacrifices (there were) for it formerly, let them provide for them.
- §34' (iii 4-8) Whatever springs (are) in the city, sacrifices are established for (those) springs: Let them celebrate them and attend to them. They must definitely attend (also) to those springs for which there is no sacrifice.¹⁶ Let them not omit them. They must consistently sacrifice to the mountains and rivers for which there are rites.
- §35' (iii 9-16) Further: the margrave, the city commander (and) the elders must consistently judge cases properly, and carry out (their decisions), as the rule for serious crimes (has been) done from of old in the (particular) country: In a city in which they are accustomed to execute, let them continue to execute. In a city, however, in which they are accustomed to exile, let them continue to exile. Furthermore, afterward (the people) of the city must bathe, and further let it be announced: Let no one allow (the exile) back. Whoever does allow him back, they will keep him under observation(?).
- §36' (iii 17-21) And when they worship the gods, let no one cause a disturbance in the presence of the gods, and let no one cause a disturbance in the festival house. Furthermore, let reverence be established toward priests, temple workers, anointing priests, (and) šiwanzanni-priestesses. Let the priests, anointing priests, and šiwanzanni-priestesses be reverent to the gods. If, however, anyone brings a case (in the form of) a sealed wooden (or) clay tablet, the margrave must judge the case properly and make things right. If, however, the case is too great (for him), he is to send it before His Majesty.
- §37' (iii 25-28) Let him not, however, decide for (his) superior (or) for (his) brother, his wife, or his friend. Let no one take a bribe.¹⁷ He is not to make the stronger case the weaker, or the weaker the stronger one. Do what (is) just.¹⁸
- §38' (iii 29-35) In whatever city you enter, call all the people of the city. Judge a case for anyone who has one and make things right. If a man's slave, or a man's female slave or a widow has a case, judge it for them and make things right. People of Kašiya, Himmuwa, Tegara[ma]¹⁹ or Išuwa (may be) there. Supply them with everything.¹⁷
- §39' (iii 36-41) A deportee who (has been) settled on the land you must supply with winter food stores,¹⁸ seed, cattle, (and) sheep. Provide him also with cheese, rennet (and) wool. Sow seed for whoever stays in the place of a deportee who leaves your province, and let him have sufficient fields. Let them promptly assign him a plot.
- [§40' (KUB 13.2 iii 42-44, KUB 31.84 iii 45'-46') and §41' (KUB 31.84 iii 47'-51') are too fragmentary to translate. §40' mentions field, orchard, garden, and the palace. §41' mentions horses and the palace.]
- §42' (KUB 31.84 iii 52'-56') [...] ... [...] Let] him build the walls [of the orchard]s well. In addition, irrigate them with water. Irrigate the meadow also with water. Let the meadow not be grazed.
- §43' (KUB 31.84 iii 57'-59') Furthermore: Let the vine[yards] be well cultivated and constructed and the canals kept clean. Further, the word of the scout(?)¹⁹ must be taken seriously.
- §44' (KUB 31.84 iii 60'-65') When, however, they distribute the seed to the deportees, the margrave must keep an eye on all of them. If someone speaks in this way: "Give me seed. I will plant it in my field, and further I will add (it) to my food supply," then the margrave must keep an eye on (him). When harvest arrives, he (the margrave?) [is to] harvest that field.
- §45' (KUB 31.84 iii 66'-71') All must be written down for you — the abandoned fields of a craftsman who has left, and those which (are) plots. When, however, they give out deportees, let them promptly assign places to them.²⁰ Keep an eye concerning the matter of building on those who (are) assigned(?) to the fields. Let (things) be built well.
- [§§ 46'-51' are too broken for connected translation.]

¹⁶ By establishing sacrifices for them.

¹⁷ Or: "Pay attention to them in all things."

¹⁸ Suggested translation of išhuesšar by Harry A. Hoffner, Jr. (personal communication).

¹⁹ Or "inspector." See CHD L-N 369 sub nakkiyahh-2.c for discussion and a collated reading of the text different from von Schuler.

²⁰ Text: "him."

§51' (iv 13'-20') Investigate thoroughly the palaces (and) dignitaries' houses which (are) in your province, whether someone has damaged anything or taken anything, or (if) someone has sold something, or (if) someone has broken into a granary or killed any of the king's cattle, or eaten (from) the granaries and then falsified the record tablets. Keep careful account of these (things).		winter (and) of harvest. Let the soup-places ²² be well looked after. Let ice be collected, and let an ice storage house be built. ²³
§52' (iv 21'-26') Or (if) someone has taken something away from the servants, the margrave must arrest him and send him into His Majesty's presence. He must keep an eye on the king's cattle in winter. Support ²¹ the work of		§53' (iv 27'-?) Keep account of the plantings of the vegetable garden(s) and fields. Let them be enclosed (with fences). The portion which (is) for the pirešhanna -cattle, let them eat that portion. [The remainder of the paragraph is partially or completely broken away.] §54' [Only one sign remains of this paragraph. Uncertain how many more paragraphs are lost at the end of the tablet.]

²¹ Lit., "stand behind."²² Variant: "and the soup-houses."²³ See Hoffner 1971 for elucidation of this passage and the recognition that it had to do with collecting ice.

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 261. Translation: ANET 210-211; Goetze 1959a; 1959b; 1960; Hoffner 1971; 1973b; Melchert 1980; von Schuler 1957.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE ROYAL GUARD (MEŠEDI PROTOCOL) (1.85)

Gregory McMahon

The royal bodyguard of the Hittite court are denoted by the Akkadogram MEŠEDI. One extant tablet contains instructions for them, primarily detailing their duties as they assume responsibility for the king's safety from the palace staff and as they escort him while he travels. Areas of responsibility are clearly delineated among the officials who see to guarding the palace and the king, primarily certain members of the palace staff, the MEŠEDI guard, the men of the golden spear and the gatekeepers. These last carefully monitor the movements of the guard.

The tablet, which is housed in Istanbul, is an unusual and difficult one, primarily because a number of additions in a smaller script were made to the text after its initial composition. Deciding how to fit these into the text of the instructions is a formidable problem. I have followed Güterbock and van den Hout's transliteration (1991), which included a good deal of reconstruction of the text in placing the additions. The text is full of technical terms for various ranks and offices within the Hittite army and bureaucracy, discussion of which continues among Hittitologists. I have in general followed Güterbock and van den Hout in their translation of these terms. These terms are discussed very thoroughly in Beal 1992. I have also in general followed Güterbock and van den Hout in their understanding of technical terms for various structures within the Hittite palace complex; a section of their work is devoted to commentary on architectural terms.

Column I	a 2 Kgs 11:6
§1 (i 1-8b, 19b-21b) [The first line is broken away, the second partially broken.] [When] the guards [go] up [to the palace], ^a they [parade] before the gatekeepers ^b and courtyard sweepers. They go in and take their place at the courtyard's gates. Their eyes are turned outward, and they cover one courtyard of the palace. ^{1 c} Then (the courtyard sweepers) sweep. (added): In the morning they raise the gate's	b 1 Chr 9:17-27 c 1 Kgs 7:9-12	bolts ² on the outside, but they [...]. The guards [wa]lk in front; they lift them as well as the kuranna -. The bolt of the gatehouse, however, they do not raise. The [guard]s, the gatekeepers, (and) the courtyard sweepers come out. However, if inside, on one side of a building, a bolt (has) not (been) raised, or they are going to open some storehouse and the key (?) ³ is lacking; if a low-ranking member of the palace staff comes out, the man of the golden spear does not give it to him. (However), when an upper level member of the palace staff comes out, either a commander of ten or an army bailiff (or) a [gual]rd comes, they give the key (?) to that one. If [...] comes out, (then) either a guard or a man of the go[ld]en spear [...] comes and [...] [end of addition]	d 2 Kgs 11:18b-19	willingly.

¹ The architectural term ḫalentu- has long been debated as to the structure it denotes. Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:59-60) argue convincingly that the ḫalentu- building is the palace.² Or "bars;" see Goetze 1960:73.³ The word here is GI, the Sumerogram for "reed." Güterbock and van den Hout's translation "key" is based on context (1991:46, with discus-

§2	(i 9-15) The guards take up (their) position in the courtyard of the guards. ^d At the wall which is on the inside, against the palace, twelve guards stand and hold spears. If twelve guards (can) not stand up — either someone (has been) sent on a journey, or someone (has been) given leave (to go) to his home — and there are too many spears, they take away the spears that remain and leave them with the gatekeepers.	e Judg 7:19	§6 (i 33-38) The guard [does not go] to the gate at his own discretion. If he has only to urinate, he walks behind all the guards and says to the guard who is standing in front of him: "I (need to) go to the toilet." (That) guard will speak to the next guard, that one will speak to a man of third rank, and the man of third rank will speak to a man of second rank.
§3	(i 16-19, B-C 1', D-E 1'-5') At the wall, however, which (is) on the gate side, the men of the golden spear are standing. One guard, however, stands near the gates on one side, against the wall of the guard. And one man of the golden spear stands near the gates on the other side, against the wall of the men of the golden spear. They stand the watch in the daytime. ^e [...] But in the courtyard of the guards only a comander of ten of the men of the golden spear is to command. If someone stands (at attention) poorly o[r ...] ... [...] Only the commander of ten of the men of the golden spear com[man]ds them. [...] ... One member [of the palace staff ...] If, however, (it is) a guard, each says [it] to the other. If [...] turns, once again [...] at the wall says the same to [...].	f Deut 25:5-10; Ruth 4:7-8	§7 (i 39-42) The man of second rank, however, will speak to the commander of ten of the guard. If a chief of the guard is in the formation, (that is) he is in the [court]yard of the guard, the commander of [ten of the guar]d brings it (before) the chief of the guard: "He (needs to) go to the toilet." The chief of the guard will say: "He may go."
§4	(i 22-26) When the chief of the guard and the commander of ten of the guards come up: Because the chief of the guard has a staff, when he bows before the Tutelary Deity of the Spear, a guard who is high ranking takes the staff away from him. He places it on the altar. However, the staff which the commander of ten of the guard is holding he gives to a [...] guard, who holds it for him.		§8 (i 43-47) If, however, a bowel movement presses someone, he will tell it one to another, (until) it reaches the chief of the guard: "He (needs to) go relieve himself." The chief of the guard will say, "He may go." However, (if) His Majesty notices the guard who is going to relieve himself, (then) the matter of relieving oneself has reached the palace. But he may not go at his own discretion.
§5	(i 27-32) All the [guard]s, however, w[ho] hav[e] staffs: Whenever they come [u]p, the g[uard]s surrender [the staffs to the g]atekeeper. If, however, the king [does not designate a man], he [does not send] out a palace attendant, guard, or man of the golden spear. [If,] however, the king does designate [him], he sen[ds] him out. If, [however,] it (is) the last man, ⁴ he does not sen[d] him out		§9 (i 48-52) A guard does not step into the portico ⁵ on his own. If, however, he does step (in) on his own, the gatekeeper will become angry at him (and say) "Either go up, or else go down." If, however, a guard goes out through the portico, he carries (his) spear through the portico, but (when) he arrives at the postern, he leaves the spear with the gatekeeper, and he goes on down.
			§10 (i 53-59) If, however, a guard slips away and takes (his) spear down through the postern, the gatekeeper shall seize him in (his) offence, and shall loosen his shoes. ^f If however, the guard fools the gateman and takes (his) spear down, and the gatekeeper does not see him, the guard will seize the gatekeeper in (his) fault, (and say) "Since you did not see the spear, if some man tried to enter, how would you see him?" They will inform the palace about him, and they will question the gatekeeper. That (much) care regards the spears.
			§11 (i 60-63) The guards (and) the palace staff do not go down through the main gate. They are to go down through the postern. One guard who is escorting a defendant, (or) someone whom the commander of messengers sends sion).

^d Or with Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:9) "a [lowly(?)]] man."

^e The Hittite is ^h*hīlammār*, which has been thought to be a gatehouse. Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:60) note that the ^h*hīlammār* itself has a gate, and suggest that it is a pillared hall or portico.

- out, he may go down through the main (gate). Lords and commanders of a thousand also may go down through the main (gate).
- §12 (i 64-69) When, however, the king goes out, one palace attendant comes out of the palace and calls out "Tahaya" in Hattic. Tahaya (is what) they call the barber in Hattic. A guard, a man of the golden spear, and a gatekeeper go to the gatehouse. They lift off the doorbolt from the main gate. They open the doors inward, and the man of the [gold]en spear [...] ... The barber, however, holds a galama- and wipes off the doors.
- §12a (i 69-74) The grooms turn the carriage, but the guards step next to the vestibule⁶ on the right. If, however, in some city setting up on the right (is) not possible, they take their place on the left. What (is) constant (is) their setting up next to the vestibule. The guard who holds the stool [...] for the carriage lets no one in or out. They leave from the court of the guards.
- §13 (i 75-77) Two zinzinuil- men stand (there). They hold maces [and ...] An officer of the army stands with them; he [holds] a staff.⁸ Further, they are clothed in [go]od [clothes], like hīlammi- men. They [...]
- §14 (i 78-89) [After] that (there is) an interval of [one] IKU,⁷ (then) two m[en]... stand]. They hold [...] [Two more illegible lines to the bottom of the column.]
- Column II
- §15 (ii 1-4) After that (there is) again an interval of one IKU [...] Two men of a field army unit are standing. With them stand [a commander of a field unit] and an army bailiff. [They hold ... , and they] (are) walking before [the king].^h
- §16 (ii 5-8) After that again (there is) an interval of one IKU. [...] stand and hold spears. With them stand [a commander of a field unit] and an army bailiff. They hold sticks. They (are) walking before the king.
- §17 (ii 9-14) Two officers of the spear-men, however, sta[nd] on the right opposite the king. They do not hold spears. A man of the golden spear [stands] wi[th] them]. He holds a gold-plated [spe]ar. The palace attendant of the spear, however, holds a [...], a whip, and the *sistrum*⁸ of the carriage. He (is) walking in front of [the king]. He goes and takes his place on the left of the carriage, next to the wheel.
- §18 (ii 15-19) The guard sets up the stool. The king comes forth. The chief of the palace staff
- §19 (ii 20-25) The man of the golden spear who stood with them, however, ... [...]. But the palace attendant of the spear gives the whip to the chief of the palace staff. The chief of the palace staff gives it to the king. The chief groom (is) walking in front of the carriage; he holds a staff. And when the carriage moves out, the chief of the palace staff bows after it, and gives over the king to the chief of the guards.
- §20 (ii 26-31) The guard, however, who holds the stool, marches with the palace attendant of the spear at the wheel of the carriage on the left side. But when it reaches the gatehouse, he steps behind a widuli- . When the guards and palace staff are lined up with him, he gives the stool to the ma[n] of the st[ool]. He takes a spear and marches with the guards.
- §21 (ii 32-38) While the guards march, two guards (are) walking in front. They hold spears, and they (are) in formation. [On] (their) left a palace attendant marches, carrying a lituus. He also (is) in formation with the two g[uard]s, so the three of them together (are) in formation. The guards (and) the [palace] attendants march in three groups: two groups of guards and one of palace attendants. They march one IKU behind the carriage.
- §22 (ii 39-43) One palace attendant, however, goes; the supply officer gives him one strung bow, enclosed in a case, (and) one quiver (added: of a spear-man) filled with arrows.ⁱ He goes behind, and moves along separated from the guards and palace attendants. He goes and takes his place at the left wheel of the carriage.
- §23 (ii 44-46) After that (there is) an interval of one IKU. (Then) a man of the golden spear holds a plated spear, and the physician holds a sistrum(?). They march together, and the physician recites spells.
- §24 (ii 47-50) After that (there is) an interval of one IKU. (Then) two spear-men march. They (are) either high-ranking or low-ranking officers. They are clothed in good ceremonial garments (and) shoes like hīlammi- officials. A chief of the spear-men and an army bailiff march with them. They hold staffs.
- §25 (ii 51-55) After that (there is) again an interval of one IKU. Then two men of a field unit

⁶ The Hittite term arkiu- denotes some kind of structure near the door. See Güterbock and van den Hout's discussion (1991:61-64).

⁷ See Melchert (1980:50-56) for discussion of this procession and his use of it for determining the length of an IKU as fifteen meters.

⁸ Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:50-51) discuss the evidence that a as mukar makes noise and the reasons for positing "sistrum."

march. They hold spears and (are) either high-ranking or low-ranking officers. They are clothed in good ceremonial garments (and) shoes like hīlammi-officials. A field unit commander and an army bailiff march with them. They hold staffs. / 2 Kgs 11:14

§26 (ii 56-59) After that (there is) again an interval of one IKU. Then two men of a field unit march, holding spears. They are clothed in good ceremonial garments (and) shoes like hīlammi-officials. A field unit commander (and) an army bailiff march with them. They hold staffs(?).

§27 (ii 60-63) The soldiers who (are) from a field unit keep the peaceful (crowd) lined up on the side.⁹ The left (group) keep (it) lined up on the left, the right (group) keep (it) lined up on the right. They march three IKU apart. If, however, somewhere ahead of one the road (is) narrow, he moves in tighter.

§28 (ii 64-67) Then if someone of the first (two) allows something in — whether horses or an out of control ox, it (is) the fault of the first one. If, however, some one of the last (two) allows something in, it (is) the fault of the last one.

§29 (ii 68-75) [If], however, they bring in a defendant, ... [...] ... spears. Him ... [...] They set up [...] [Five lines lost at the end of column ii.]

Column III

§30 (iii 1-5) [The guard who [brings in] the defendants [takes his place] behind the man of the golden spear. [But when] the king requests a case, the guard [picks] it [out] and pl[aces] it in the hand of the chief of the guard. He tells the chief of the guard [what] the case (is), but the chief of the guard [tells the king].

§31 (iii 6-11) Then the chief of the guard goes, and two lo[rds stand⁹] behind him; whether chiefs of chariot-fighters or commanders of ten, they stand [behind] the chief of the guard. One (man) holds the outside, whether a gu[ard or] some official. The guard who brings in the defendants runs back. He goes and takes his place (next) to the man of the golden spear. Then they pick out one case.¹⁰

§32 (iii 12-16) The chief of the palace staff, however, stands with the palace staff. Behind him stand two members of the palace staff; they are three. When they release a defendant, however, the chief of the guard stays in

(his) place, but the two lords who stand behind him (added: either lords o[r] gu[ards,]) they go back and rejoin the guards.

§33 (iii 17-22) But when the guard who holds the outside brings in another defendant, the two lords who stand behind the chief of the guard march beside the defendant on the inside. The guard who holds the outside, however, goes behind the defendant when they line up the defendant with the guards. He walks on the outside of the defendant, on (his) right.

§34 (iii 23-26) If, however, a palace attendant brings in a message later, he comes in on the left only, behind the palace attendants. But when he comes back, he comes the same way, but he comes across in front of the guards.

§35 (iii 27-30) The guard who goes behind (him) goes on the right behind the guard. He goes back the same way, on the right. However, he does not go in front of the guards. He goes with the palace attendant.

§36 (iii 31-34) If, however, a defendant is standing (there), but (there is) a case for a guard or for a palace attendant, he does not go in front of the defendant. He goes behind him, and takes his place with the guard who holds the outside.

§37 (iii 35-40) But if the king calls out some foreign soldiers,¹¹ either soldiers of the enemy Kaška, or soldiers of Kummaha or whatever soldiers, all the guards go behind (them). If, however, the spears prove to be too few for them, they take spears away from the spear-men and (then) go behind. They call that "encircling."

§38 (iii 41-46) Armed with staffs, however, they do not go behind, it (is) not proper for them. If someone among the guards who remain has no spear, because they (can) take (only) staffs, they are not to be formed up with the pal[ace] attendant of the lituus. Two different palace attendants step forward into for[ma]-tion with him. The guards however who are holding staffs [wal]k [behind(?)] them.

§39 (iii 47-50) If however a *hazannu*¹² or commander of army bailiffs [is part of the for-]mation, they¹³ form up with them. For them it (is) proper. However, [if] they go behind the carriage, [they] may not go behind (it) armed (thus) with staffs; they take spears.

⁹ Or "walk."

¹⁰ That is, the next one.

¹¹ ERIN.MEŠ, "soldiers," can also mean simply "people." Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:55) note that this may refer to foreign peoples being brought to court.

¹² See Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:55) for commentary on HAZANNU and the difficulties with the translation "mayor."

¹³ The guards who were forced to walk behind because they only had staffs.

- §40 (iii 51-54) When the defendants have been completed, when the last defendant whom they escort out goes in front, the guard who brings the defendants says to the chief of the guard (added: or to ... (or) to the guard who holds the inside): "It (the group of defendants) has been encircled." The chief of the guard, (added: or the commander of ten guards or the army bailiff) tells the king. "It is completed."
- §41 (iii 55-59) If the king requests a chariot, a guard brings the stool and places it. The king grasps the chariot.¹⁴ The guard (responsible) for finishing (the process) holds a staff and takes the right horse by the bit in (his) right hand. With (his) left, however, he holds a *kapur*¹⁵ along with the staff. He holds the chariot down in front (so that) it does not tip.¹⁶
- §42 (iii 60-62) The guards give the spears which they are holding to the groom [...]. When the carriage gets back home the groom gives the spears to the gatekeeper. He takes them up to the portico.
- §42a (iii 63-65) If, however, (the king) returns by carriage, one guard waves with a spear to the guards and to the palace attendants and speaks thus in Hittite: "Over to the side."
- §43 (iii 66-70) The guards and palace attendants run around to the rear, and the grooms [reach(?)] over the left mule and turn the carriage around. The spears, however, of the spear-men and field unit men turn around; (thus) the first becomes the last.
- §44 (iii 71-75) He (the king) goes to the palace by carriage. [As] he draws near the gates, the chanters [and] the [reciter fall in] behind the spears of the spear-men. When the chanters [come] within the gates they cry out "Welcome!" The reciter, however, does not [cry out].
- §45 (iii 76-78) When, however, the carriage[']s mules] reach [the gates,] the chanters [and the reciter] cry out.
- Column IV
- §46 (iv 1-7) [Men of] the city Ḫaḫḫa (are) walking behind. The spear[s] of the spear-men and [of the men] of the golden spear (are) walking in front, but the men of Ḫaḫḫa [ma]rch behind and sing. When however, the chanters come within the [gate]s of the portico, they cry out "Welcome!" although the reciter [sti]ll does not cry out. However,
- when the mules reach the gates, the chanters and the reciter cry out. They they go down through the postern.
- §47 (iv 8-13) When just half [of] the spear-men has gone through the portico, it goes into that (place) where the spear-men (normally) go (after having) put down (their) spears. But a guard takes the stool and detaches himself from the palace attendants on the left. He walks to the wheel on the left side. When they turn the carriage, he sets up the stool.
- §48 (iv 14-17) The men of Ḫaḫḫa (during this) are quiet. They do not come up to the gates [of the palace]. If (there are) two por[ticoes, however,] they come up to the lower gate. They do not, however, come up to the upper gate.
- §49 (iv 18-24d) When the king steps down from the carriage, if a chief of the guard is standing (there), the chief of the guard prostrates himself behind (the king). He hands the king back over to the palace chief of staff. If, however, some other dignitary is lined up there in the front line, he (also) prostrates himself. But if no high dignitary is lined up there, the guard who is standing (there) prostrates himself. (added): Whenever he (the king) goes somewhere via chariot, however: When the king step[s] down from the chariot, [the chief of the guard along with the guards prostrates himself behind the king. The guard (responsible) for finishing up prostrates himself opposite the right wheel of the chariot. The chariot driver, however, prostrates himself opposite the left wheel.
- §50 (iv 25-27) The king goes [into] the palace. A guard, a man of the golden spear, (and) a gatekeeper g[o] in. They [come] up from the main gatehouse. They throw the doorbolt.
- §51 (iv 29-30) The man of the golden spear leaves the plated spear which he holds in the courtyard where the guards normally step into the inner chamber.
- §52 (iv 31-33) However, the guards who [hold] spears go out to the courtyard of the guards and take up (their) [position]. They stand there, hold[ing] spears. They do not put [them down].
- §53 (iv 34-36) The guard, however, whom they [send(?)] goes out, holding a spear. He [comes down from(?)] the palace. But [when] he arrives at the postern, [he leaves] (his) spear with the gatekeeper [at the portico].

¹⁴ Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:29) suggest "mounts," which is certainly the correct sense.

¹⁵ Probably not the tongue of the chariot, for which the Hittite is ḫiṣṣa-. Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:74) suggest "yoke peg(?)."

¹⁶ This paragraph contains a number of unusual or unique words. Güterbock and van den Hout (1991:56) comment on several of these words and give a good overview of evidence for their translation and the overall sense of the passage, much of which is translated on the basis of context.

Ditto (i.e. he goes [out].) §54 (iv 37-39) As soon as [the food] is done¹⁷ the footman [brings] from the ki[tchen ...] (and) one cooked joint. And from the creamery [he brings] one pitcher of [sweet milk]. He gives [it to] the guards, and they eat it. §55 (iv 40-41) They give [...], one cooked joint, (and) one pitcher of sweet milk to the palace attendants also. And [they eat] it. §56 (iv 42-44) But when [...] comes [into the] inn[er chamber]. He calls out as follows to the man [of the golden spear and (?) ... in Hitti]te: "[Let] them bring [it]." §57 (iv 45-46) However, the man of the golden	spear [...] calls out as follows to the spear-men in Luwian: ["..."] §58 (iv 47-49) A spear-man, however, [takes] a spe[ar]. The bronze (blade) [of the spear (is) tu[rned] down. He goes into the kitchen. [The spear-man(?)] speaks as follows: "To the inner chamber [...]." §59 (iv 50-52) Then the spear-man [...]. The bronze (blade) of the spear, however, [is turned] up[ward ...] The [...] man [...] [of(?)] the palace [...] Colophon (iv 53) First tablet of the Rules of the Guard. Not finished.
---	--

¹⁷ Lit., "becomes good."

REFERENCES

Text: CTH 262; IBoT 1.36; Jakob-Rost 1965; Güterbock and van den Hout 1991. Discussion: Alp 1940; Beal 1992; Goetze 1960; Melchert 1980; von Schuler 1957.

HITTITE BIBLIOGRAPHY

- AKURGAL, E. n.d. The Art of the Hittites. New York: Harry N. Abrams.
- ALP, S.
1940 Untersuchungen zu den Beamtennamen im hethitischen Festzeremoniell. Leipzig: Otto Harrassowitz.
- ARCHI, A.
1971 "The Propaganda of Hattusili III." SMEA 14:185-215.
1974 "Il Sistema KIN della Divinazione Itita." OA 13:113-144.
1975 "L'ornitomanzia itita." SMEA 16:119-180.
1977 "I poteri della dea Ištar Hurrita-Itita." OA 16:297-311.
1979 "L'humanité des hittites." in Studies Laroche.
1982 "Hethitische Mantik und ihre Beziehungen zur mesopotamischen Mantik." 25ième RAI (1978) = BBVO 1:279-293.
1987 KUB. Heft 57.
- BADALI, E.
1987 "Eine neue Lesung im Anfang des Anitta-Textes." WO 18:43-44.
- BALKAN, K.
1957 Letter of King Anum-hirbi of Mama to King Warshama of Kanish. Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu Basımevi.
- BEAL, R. H.
1986 The Organization of the Hittite Military. Ph.D. Dissertation. University of Chicago.
1988 "The ⁶¹⁸TUKUL-institution in Second Millennium Hatti." AoF 15:269-305.
1992 The Organisation of the Hittite Military. THeth 20. Heidelberg: Carl Winter Verlag.
1993 "Kurunta of Tarhuntašša and the Imperial Hittite Mausoleum." AnSt 43:29-39.
1994 "Hittite Oracles: Questions and Answers." in Magic and Divination in the Ancient World, Proceedings of a Conference held Feb. 18, 1994 in Berkeley. Ed. by L. Cirio and J. Seidel. Groningen: Styx.
- BECKMAN, G. M.
1982 "The Anatolian Myth of Illuyanka." JANES 14:11-25.
1983 Hittite Birth Rituals. StBoT 29. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
1985 "Review of Hoffmann 1984." JAOS 106:570-572.
1986 "Proverbs and Proverbial Allusions in Hittite." JNES 45:19-30.
- BERMAN, H.
1982 "Some Hittite Oracle Fragments." JCS 34:94-98.
- BERNABÉ, A.
1987 Textos literarios hititas. Madrid: Alianza.
- BÖRKER-KLAHN, J.
1992 "Illustration zum hethitischen Eidritual." Pp. 69-72 in Studies Alp.
- BOSSERT, H. Th.
1946 Asia. Istanbul: Literarische Fakultät der Universität.
- BRYCE, T. R.
1989 "Some Observations on the Chronology of Šuppiluliuma's Reign." AnSt 39:19-30.
n. d. The Major Historical Texts of Early Hittite History. Asian Studies Monograph 1. Brisbane: University of Queensland.
- BURDE, C.
1974 Hethitische medizinische Texte. StBoT 19. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- CANCIK, H.
1976 Grundzüge der hethitischen und alttestamentlichen Geschichtsschreibung. Abhandlungen des Deutschen Palästinavereins. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- CARRUBA, O.
1964 "Hethitisch -(a)sta, -(a)pa und die anderen 'Ortsbezugspartikeln.'" Or 33:405-436.
1968 "Contributo alla storia di Cipro nel II millennio." SCO 17:5-29.
1971 "G₁." RLA 3:355.
1974 "Tahurwaili von Hatti und die heth. Geschichte um 1500 v. Chr. G." Pp. 73-93 in Studies Güterbock.
- COLLINS, B. J.
1989 The Representation of Wild Animals in Hittite Texts. Ph.D. Dissertation Yale University.
1990 "The Puppy in Hittite Ritual." JCS 42:211-226.
- CORNIL, P.
1994 "Guerre et armée hittites." RIDA 41:99-109.
- DEL MONTE, G. F.
1991-92 "Ulmišub re di Tarhuntaša." EVO 14-15:123-148.
- DEL MONTE, G. F., and J. TISCHLER.
1978 Die Orts- und Gewässernamen der hethitischen Texte. Ed. by W. Röllig. RGTC 6. Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag.
- DINÇOL, A. M., B. DINÇOL, J. D. HAWKINS, and G. WILHELM.
1993 "The 'Cruciform Seal' from Boğazköy-Ḫattuša." IM 43:87-106 and Tafel 6.
- EHELOF, H.
1937 "Die Tontafeln." MDOG 75:61-70.
- EITREM, S.
1947 "A Purificatory Rite and Some Allied Rites de Passage." SO 25:36-53.
- FEDERN, W.
1960 "Dahamunzu (KBo V 6 iii 8)." JCS 14:33.

- FORRER, E.
1922, 1926 Die Boghazköi-Texte in Umschrift. Zweiter Band. Geschichtliche Texte. WDOG 42/1-2. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
- FRIEDRICH, J.
1924 "Der hethitische Soldateneid." ZA 35:161-191.
1925 "Aus dem hethitischen Schrifttum." Der Alte Orient 25/2:1-32.
- GOETZE, A.
1925 Hattušiliš. Der Bericht über seine Thronbesteigung nebst den Paralleltexen. MVAG 30. Leipzig: Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
1930 "Die Pestgebete des Muršiliš." KIF 1:161-251.
1933 Die Annalen des Muršiliš. MVAG 38. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs'sche Buchhandlung.
1940 Kizzuwatna and the Problem of Hittite Geography. YOR 22. New Haven: Yale University Press.
1959a "Review of von Schuler 1957." JCS 13:65-70.
1959b "Remarks on the Lists from Alalah IV." JCS 13:63-70.
1960 "The Beginning of the Hittite Instructions for the Commander of the Border Guards." JCS 14:69-73.
1962 "Review of H. G. Güterbock and H. Otten, Keilschrifttexte aus Boghazköi 10." JCS 16:24-30.
- GONNET, H.
1987 "Institution d'un culte chez les hittites." Anatolica 14:89-100.
- GURNEY, O. R.
1967 "VBoT. Nos. 95 and 97." JCS 21:94.
1977 Some Aspects of Hittite Religion. The Schweich Lectures 1976. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
1981 "The Babylonians and Hittites." Pp. 142-173 in Oracles and Divination. Ed. by M. Loewe and C. Blacker. Boulder: Shambhala.
- GÜTERBOCK, H. G.
1936 "Die historische Tradition und ihre literarische Gestaltung bei Babyloniern und Hethitern bis 1200 (2. Teil)." ZA 44:45-149.
1946 Kumarbi: Mythen vom churritischen Kronos. Zürich: Europa Verlag.
1956 "The Deeds of Suppiluliuma I as Told by His Son, Mursili II." JCS 10:41-68, 75-98, 107-130.
1960 "Mursili's Accounts of Suppiluliuma's Dealings with Egypt." RHA XVIII/66:57-63.
1967 "The Hittite Conquest of Cyprus Reconsidered." JNES 26:73-81.
1983 "Hittite Historiography: A Survey." In HHI 21-35.
1995 "Reflections on the Musical Instruments arkammi, galgatturi, and huhupal in Hittite." Pp. 57-77 in Studio Historiae Ardens. Ancient Near Eastern Studies Presented to Philo H. J. Houwink ten Cate on the Occasion of his 65th Birthday. Ed. by Th. P. J. van den Hout and J. de Roos. PIHANS 74. Leiden: Nederlands Historisch-Archaeologisch Instituut te Istanbul.
- GÜTERBOCK, H. G., and Th. P. J. VAN DEN HOUT.
1991 The Hittite Instruction for the Royal Bodyguard. AS 24. Chicago: The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago.
- HAAS, V.
1993 "Ein hurritischer Blutritus und die Deponierung der Ritualrückstände nach hethitischen Quellen." Pp. 67-85 in RGBK.
- HAAS, V., and I. WEGNER.
1979 "Review of Lebrun 1976." OLZ 74:124-128.
- HAASE, R.
1984 Texte zum hethitischen Recht. Eine Auswahl. Wiesbaden: Reichert.
- HALLO, W. W.
1996 Origins. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- HAWKINS, J. D.
1990 "The New Inscription from the Südburg of Boğazköy-Hattuša." AA 1990 305-314.
- HEINHOLD-KRAHMER, S.
1991-92 "Zur Bronzetafel aus Boğazköy und ihrem historischen Inhalt." AfO 38-39:138-158.
- HELCK, W.
1984 "Die Šukzija-Episode im Dekret des Telipinu." WO 15:103-108.
- HOFFMANN, I.
1984 Der Erlaß Telipinus. THeth 11. Heidelberg: Carl Winter Verlag.
- HOFFNER, H. A., Jr.
1965 "The Elkunirsa Myth Reconsidered." RHA XXIII/76:5-16.
1966 "Symbols for Masculinity and Femininity: Their Use in Ancient Near Eastern Sympathetic Magic Rituals." JBL 85:326-334.
1967 "Second Millennium Antecedents to the Hebrew ʾôb." JBL 86:385-401.
1968a "Birth and Namegiving in Hittite Texts." JNES 27:198-203.
1968b "Hittite tarpis and Hebrew terāphim." JNES 27:61-68.
1968c "A Hittite Analogue to the David and Goliath Contest of Champions?" CBQ 30:220-225.
1971a "Hittite ega- and egan-." JCS 24:31-36.
1971b Or 40:327-329.
1973 "The Hittites and Hurrians." In POTT 197-228.
1974a Alimenta Hethaeorum. AOS 55. New Haven: American Oriental Society.
1974b "The Arzana House." Pp. 113-122 in Studies Güterbock.
1975a "Hittite Mythological Texts: A Survey." Pp. 136-145 in Unity and Diversity.
1975b "Propaganda and Political Justification in Hittite Historiography." Pp. 49-62 in Unity and Diversity.
1977a "Hittite Lexicographic Studies, 1." Pp. 105-107 in Studies Finkelstein.
1977b "Review of E. Neu 1974." BASOR 219:78-79.
1979 "The Hittite Word for 'Tribe'." Pp. 261-266 in Studia Mediterranea Piero Meriggi dicata. Ed. by O. Carruba. Pavia: Aurora Edizioni.
1980 "Histories and Historians of the Ancient Near East: The Hittites." Or 49:283-332.
1981 "The Hurrian Story of the Sungod, the Cow and the Fisherman." Pp. 189-194 in Studies on the Civilization and Culture of Nuzi and the Hurrians in Honor of E. R. Lacheman. Ed. by M. Morrison and D. I. Owen. Winona Lake, IN: Eisenbrauns.

- 1982 "The Old Hittite Legal Idiom šwaye- with the Allative." JAOS 102:507-509.
- 1987 "Ancient Views of Prophecy and Fulfillment: Mesopotamia and Asia Minor." JETS 30/3:257-265.
- 1990 Hittite Myths. Writings from the Ancient World 2. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- 1992 "The Last Days of Khattusha." Pp. 46-52 in The Crisis Years: The 12th Century B.C. From Beyond the Danube to the Tigris. Ed. by W. A. Ward. Dubuque, Iowa: Kendall/Hunt Publishing Company.
- 1993 "Akkadian šumma immeru Texts and Their Hurro-Hittite Counterparts." Pp. 116-119 in Studies Hallo.
- 1995 "On Safari in Hittite Anatolia." JIES 23.
- VAN DEN HOUT, Th. P. J.
- 1990 "Review of Archi 1989." BiOr 47:423-432.
- 1991 "Hethitische Thronbesteigungssorakel und die Inauguration Tudhaliyas IV." ZA 81:274-300.
- 1995 "Khattushili III, King of the Hittites." In CANE 2:1107-1120.
- HOUWINK TEN CATE, Ph. H. J.
- 1966 "A New Fragment of the 'Deeds of Suppiluliuma as Told by his Son Mursili II'." JNES 25:27-31.
- 1992 "The Bronze Tablet of Tudhaliyas IV and its Geographical and Historical Relations." ZA 82:233-270.
- HULIN, P.
- 1970 "A New Duplicate Fragment of the Hittite Instructions to Temple Officials." AnSt 20:155-157.
- IMPARATI, F., AND C. SAPORETTI.
- 1965 "L'autobiografia di Hattusili I." SCO 14:40-85.
- JAKOB-ROST, L.
- 1965 "Beiträge zum hethitischen Hofzeremoniell (IBoT I 36)." MIO 11:165-225.
- JANOWSKI, B., and G. WILHELM.
- 1993 "Der Bock, der die Sünden hinausträgt. Zur Religionsgeschichte des Azazel-Ritus Lev 16,10.21f." Pp. 109-169 in RGBK.
- JOSEPHSON, F.
- 1979 "Anatolien tarpa-, etc." Pp. 177-184 in Studies Laroche.
- KAMMENHUBER, A.
- 1976 Orakelpraxis, Träume und Vorzeichenschau bei den Hethitern. THeth 7. Heidelberg: Carl Winter.
- KELLERMAN, G.
- 1986 "The Telepinu Myth Reconsidered." Pp. 115-124 in *Studies Güterbock*³.
- KEMPINSKI, A.
- 1993 "Suppiluliuma I: The Early Years of His Career." Pp. 81-91 in Studies Kutscher.
- KITCHEN, K. A.
- 1962 Suppiluliuma and the Amarna Pharaohs. LMAOS. Liverpool: Liverpool University Press.
- KLENGEL, H.
- 1965 "Die Rolle der 'Ältesten' (LÜ.MEŠ ŠU.GI) im Kleinasien der Hethiterzeit." ZA 57:223-236.
- KOŠAK, S.
- 1993 "Die Staatwerke von Hattuša." Linguistica 33:107-112.
- KRAUSS, R.
- 1978 "Sḫ, König von Ägypten — ein Deutungsvorschlag." MDOG 110:49-54.
- KRONASSER, H.
- 1963 Die Umsiedelung der Schwarzen Gottheit: Das hethitische Ritual KUB XXIX 4 (des Ulippi). SÖAW 241.3. Vienna: Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften.
- KÜHNE, C.
- 1978 "Instructions." Pp. 179-184 in Near Eastern Religious Texts Relating to the Old Testament. Ed. by W. Beyerlin. Philadelphia: Westminster.
- KÜMMEL, H. M.
- 1967 Ersatzrituale für den hethitischen König. StBoT 3. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- LAROCHE, E.
- 1952 "Éléments d'haruspice hittite." RHA XII/54:19-48.
- 1958 "Lécanomancie hittite." RA 52:150-162.
- 1965 "Textes mythologiques hittites en transcription. Première Partie." RHA XXIII/77:63-178.
- 1966 Les Noms des Hittites. Études linguistiques 4. Paris: Klincksieck.
- 1968a "Textes mythologiques hittites en transcription. Deuxième Partie." RHA XXVI/82:7-90.
- 1968b Textes mythologiques hittites en transcription. Paris: Klincksieck.
- 1970 "Sur le vocabulaire de l'haruspice hittite." RA 64:127-139.
- LEBRUN, R.
- 1976 Samuha. Foyer religieux de l'empire hittite. Publications de l'institut orientaliste 11. Louvain: Université Catholique de Louvain.
- 1980 Hymnes et prières hittites. Homo Religiosus 4. Louvain-la-Neuve: Centre d'Histoire des Religions.
- 1994 "Questions oraculaires concernant le nouveau déroulement de fêtes secondaires de printemps et d'automne = CTH 568." Hethitica 12:41-77.
- LEWIS, B.
- 1980 The Sargon Legend: a Study of the Akkadian Text and the Tale of the Hero who was Exposed at Birth. ASORDS 4. Cambridge, MA: American Schools of Oriental Research.
- MALAMAT, A.
- 1955 "Doctrines of Causality in Hittite and Biblical Historiography." VT 5:1-12.
- MASSON, O.
- 1950 "A propos d'un rituel hittite pour la lustration d'une armée: Le rite de purification par le passage entre les deux parties d'une victime." RHR 137:5-25.
- MELCHERT, H. C.
- 1977 Ablative and Instrumental in Hittite. Ph.D. Dissertation. Harvard University. Cambridge, MA.
- 1980 "The Use of IKU in Hittite Texts." JCS 32:50-56.

- MILGROM, J.
1970 Studies in Levitical Terminology. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- MOORE, G. C.
1975 The Disappearing Deity Motif in Hittite Texts: A Study of Religious History. B.A. Thesis. Oxford University.
- MORAN, W. L.
1992 The Amarna Letters. Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press.
- MOYER, J. C.
1983 "Hittite and Israelite Cultic Practices: A Selected Comparison." In SIC 2:19-38.
- NEU, E.
1974 Der Anitta-Text. Ed. by Otten. StBoT 18. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- NEUMANN, G.
1985 "Review of Otten 1981." IF 90:288-295.
- NOUGAYROL, J.
1960 "Une fable hittite." RHA XVIII/67:117-19.
- NOWICKI, H.
1985 "Ein Deutungsvorschlag zum 'Großen Text' des Hattušili III." KZ 98:26-35.
- OETTINGER, N.
1976 Die Militärischen Eide der Hethiter. StBoT 22. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
1992 "Achikars Weisheitssprüche im Lichte älterer Fabeldichtung." Pp. 3-22 in Der Äsop-Roman. Motivgeschichte und Erzählstruktur. Ed. by N. Holzberg. Tübingen: G. Narr.
- OTTEN, H.
1953 "Ein kanaanäischer Mythos aus Boğazköy." MIO 1:125-50.
1955 "Neue Fragmente zu den annalen des Mursili." MIO 3:153-179.
1961a "Eine Beschwörung der Unterirdischen aus Boğazköy." ZA 54:114-157.
1961b "Das Hethiterreich." In Kulturgeschichte des Alten Orient. Ed. by H. Schmökel. Stuttgart: Alfred Kröner Verlag.
1963a "Neue Quellen zum Ausklang des Hethitischen Reiches." MDOG 94:1-23.
1963b "Ätiologische Erzählung von der Überquerung des Taurus." ZA 55:156-168.
1973 Eine althethitische Erzählung um die Stadt Zalpa. StBoT 17. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
1981 Die Apologie Hattušilis III. Das Bild der Überlieferung. StBoT 24. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
1984 "Blick in die altorientalische Geisteswelt. Neufund einer hethitischen Tempelbibliothek." Jahrbuch der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen 50-60.
1988 Die Bronzetafel aus Boğazköy: Ein Staatsvertrag Tuthaltias IV. StBoT Beiheft 1. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- OTTEN, H., and C. RÜSTER.
1978 "Textanschlüsse und Duplikate von Boğazköy-Tafeln (61-70)." ZA 68:270-279.
1981 "Textanschlüsse und Duplikate von Boğazköy-Tafeln (71-80)." ZA 71:122-134.
- OTTEN, H., and W. VON SODEN.
1968 Die akkadisch-hethitische Vokabular KBo I 44 + KBo XIII 1. StBoT 7. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- OWEN, D.
1981 "An Akkadian Letter from Ugarit at Aphek." Tel Aviv 8:1-17.
- PARKER, S. B.
1989 "KTU 1.16 III, the Myth of the Absent God and 1 Kings 18." UF 23:283-296.
- PECCHIOLO DADDI, F., and A. M. POLVANI.
1990 La mitologia itita. Testi del Vicino Oriente antico 4/1. Brescia: Paideia Editrice.
- POPKO, M.
1978 Kultobjekte in der hethitischen Religion. Warsaw: Warsaw University.
- POSTGATE, J. N.
1987 "Notes on Fruit in the Cuneiform Sources." BSAg 3:115-144.
- RÜSTER, C.
1992 "Zu einem neuen Fragment des Telipinu-Mythos." Pp. 475-481 in Studies Alp.
- VON SCHULER, E.
1957 Hethitische Dienstanweisungen für höhere Hof- und Staatsbeamte. Graz: Private. Reprint: Osnabrück: Biblio-Verlag, 1967.
1982 "Die Einleitung der 'Autobiographie' Hattušilis." Pp. 389-400 in Serta Indogermanica. Festschrift für Günter Neumann zum 60. Geburtstag. Ed. by J. Tischler. IBS 40. Innsbruck.
- SCHUOL, M.
1994 "Die Terminologie des hethitischen SU-Orakels. Eine Untersuchung auf der Grundlage des mittelhethitischen Textes KBo XVI 97 unter vergleichender Berücksichtigung akkadischer Orakeltexte und Lebermodelle, I." AoF 21:73-124, 247-304.
- SCHWARTZ, B.
1938 "The Hittite and Luwian Ritual of Zarpiya of Kezzuwatna." JAOS 58:334-355.
- SINGER, I.
1984 "The AGRIG in the Hittite Texts." AnSt 34:97-127.
1995 "'Our God' and 'Their God' in the Anitta Text." Pp. 471-480 in Atti del II congresso internazionale di hittitologia. Ed. by O. Carruba, M. Giorgieri and C. Mora. Studia Mediterranea 9. Pavia: Gianini Iuculano.
- SOMMER, F.
1921 "Ein hethitisches Gebet." ZA 33:85-102.
- SOYSAL, O.
1987 "KUB XXXI 4 + KBo III 41 und 40 (Die Puḫanu-Chronik). Zum Thronstreit Hattušilis I." Hethitica 7:173-253.
1990 "Noch einmal zur Šukziya-Episode im Erlass Telipinus." Or 59:271-279.
- SPEISER, E. A.
1963 "Unrecognized Dedication." IEJ 13:69-73, repr. in Biblical and Oriental Studies.

- STARKE, F.
 1977 Die Funktionen der dimensionalen Kasus und Adverbien im Althethitischen. StBoT 23. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
 1979 "Halmasuit im Anitta-Texte und die hethitische Ideologie vom Königtum." ZA 69:47-120.
 1985a "Der Erlaß Telipinus. Zur Beurteilung der Sprache des Textes anlässlich eines kürzlich erschienenen Buches." WO 16:100-113.
 1985b Die keilschrift-luwischen Texte in Umschrift. StBoT 30. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- STEFANINI, R.
 1992 "On the Tenth Paragraph of the Bronze Tablet (ii 91 - iii 1)." AGI 67:133-152.
- STEINER, G.
 1984 "Struktur und Bedeutung des sogenannten Anitta-Textes." OA 23:53-73.
 1989 "Kültepe-Kaniš und der 'Anitta-Text.'" In Anatolia and the Ancient Near East. Ed. by K. Emre, B. Hrouda, M. Mellink and N. Özgüç. Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu Basımevi.
 1993 "How Was the City of Hattusa Taken by 'Anitta'?" In Uluslararası 1. Hititoloji Kongresi Bildirileri (19-21 Temmuz 1990). Çorum: Uluslararası Çorum Hitit Festivali Komitesi Başkanlığı.
- STERN, P. D.
 1991 The Biblical Herem. BJS 211. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- STURTEVANT, E. H., and G. BECHTEL.
 1935 A Hittite Chrestomathy. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania.
- SÜEL, A.
 1985 Hitit Kaynaklarında Tapınak Görevlileri ile ilgili bir Direktif Metni. AÖtcfy 350. Ankara: Ankara Üniversitesi Dil ve Tarih-Coğrafya Fakültesi Basımevi.
- SÖRENHAGEN, D.
 1992 "Untersuchungen zur Bronzetafel und weiteren Verträgen mit der Sekundogenitur in Tarhuntašša." OLZ 87:341-371.
- TADMOR, H.
 1983 "Autobiographical Apology in the Royal Assyrian Literature." In HHI 36-57.
- TSEVAT, M.
 1983 "Two Old Testament Stories and Their Hittite Analogues." JAOS 103:35-42 = Studies Kramer 321-326.
- ÜNAL, A.
 1973 "Zum Status der 'Augures' bei den Hethitern." RHA XXXI:27-56.
 1974 Hattušili III. Teil I, Hattušili bis zu seiner Thronbesteigung. Band 1: Historischer Abriß. THeth 3. Band 2: Quellen und Indices. THeth 4. Heidelberg: Carl Winter Verlag.
 1978 Ein Orakeltext über die Intrigen am hethitischen Hof. (KUB XXII 70 = Bo 2011). THeth 6. Heidelberg: Carl Winter Verlag.
 1993 "The Nature and Iconographical Traits of 'Goddess of Darkness.'" Pp. 639-644 in Aspects of Art and Iconography: Anatolia and its Neighbors. Studies in Honor of Nimet Özgüç. Ed. by M. J. Mellink, E. Porada and T. Özgüç. Ankara: Türk Tarih Kurumu Basımevi.
- ÜNAL, A. and A. KAMMENHUBER.
 1975 "Das althethitische Losorakel KBo 18.151." KZ 88:157-180.
- WEGNER, I.
 1989 ":-karnan :marnan. Eine hethitische Reduplikation." AoF 16:383-384.
- WOLF, H.
 1967 The Apology of Hattušiliš Compared with Other Political Self-Justifications of the Ancient Near East. Ph.D. Dissertation. Brandeis. Ann Arbor, Michigan: University Microfilms.
- WRIGHT, D. P.
 1987 The Disposal of Impurity. Elimination Rites in the Bible and in Hittite and Mesopotamian Literature. SBLDS 101. Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press.

This page intentionally left blank

WEST SEMITIC CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. DIVINE FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. UGARITIC MYTHS

THE BA^cLU MYTH (1.86)

Dennis Pardee

The Ba^clu myth constitutes, by its length and relative completeness, the most important literary work preserved from those produced by the West Semitic peoples in the second millennium BCE. Before the discovery of this and related lesser works in the third and fourth decades of this century, virtually all our knowledge of West Semitic religious beliefs came from later descriptions emanating from cultures more or less alien to the one in which these myths were recounted, e.g., the Hebrew Bible or Philo of Byblos as preserved by the fourth-century (CE) Christian writer Eusebius. More recent discoveries show that the Ugaritic form of the Ba^clu myth had a long prehistory among the Amorite peoples (Durand 1993; Bordreuil and Pardee 1993). The presence in the Hebrew Bible of motifs similar to those in the Ugaritic myths indicates the existence of a Canaanite mythology very similar to the Amorite one, though determining the degree of similarity awaits the discovery of texts like the Ugaritic ones at a southern site.

The discovery of the Ugaritic mythological texts, in poetic form, has already demonstrated the high degree of similarity between second millennium poetic conventions in the northern part of the Syro-Palestinian area, surely descended from the old Amorite poetic tradition, and those of the Canaanite areas in the first millennium, visible in the poetic sections of the Hebrew Bible. The organization of a poem by parallel lines forming verses of two or three line-segments ("bicola" and "tricola") appears to be characteristic of poetry throughout the old Northwest Semitic area. Though meter in the strict sense of the term appears absent from all these traditions, the parallel lines are everywhere characterized by terseness and roughly comparable length.¹

In spite of formal differences among them, the six tablets translated here are considered by most scholars to have originally belonged to a single work that would have consisted of some 2350 lines, approximately 1500 poetic verses.² At one evidential extreme is the fact that the text is manifestly continuous from the last line of CTA 5 to the first of CTA 6; at the other is the fragmentary nature of CTA 1 and CTA 2, the latter consisting of two fragments that are not even certainly from the same tablet. The principal formal dissimilarity is in the number of columns in which the text is written on the tablets: CTA 1, 3, 5, and 6 are arranged in three columns per side, while CTA 2 apparently was in two columns (judging from the width of the one well-preserved column), and CTA 4 was in four columns per side. On the other hand, a virtually certain point of similarity is the script: CTA 4 and 6 bear a colophon identifying the scribe as ²Ilmilku, a very high priestly official in the court of one of the kings named Niqmaddu,³ and the script of all six texts appears to be identical, making it highly probable that ²Ilmilku inscribed them all. But did he write them and intend them as a sequence, or do some of these tablets belong to another sequence or to none at all? There is simply no empirical answer to that question,⁴ and the approach to the problem is therefore usually a literary one, which can be rephrased as another question: Can the six tablets be organized into a meaningful narrative sequence? To this question most scholars have responded positively, though the form of the response and

¹ See the bibliography in Pardee 1988c, where one Ug. poem and one Heb. poem are analyzed in detail.

² From the epigraphic perspective, everything militates against the various hypotheses proposing that RS 24.245 be attached to CTA 3 (cf. Pardee 1988a: 129, n. 20; Smith 1994: 3-4). Whether, from a textual/literary perspective, RS 24.245 could be an extract from CTA 3, written by a different scribe in a different format, it is difficult to say.

³ In CTA 4 the scribe's name is restored, but the restoration is likely because the end of the colophon corresponds to that of ²Ilmilku. For a recent defense of the traditional dating of ²Ilmilku, the most famous of Ug. scribes, to the time of Niqmaddu II (middle 14th century), see van Soldt 1991: 27-29. As is clear from van Soldt's arguments on these pages in comparison with his analysis of the stratigraphy of and tablets found in the High Priest's house (pp. 213-20), where most of the tablets signed by ²Ilmilku were found, the dating of the scribe who consigned to writing the Ug. myths is contingent on identifying him with another scribe, whose name appears to have been identical, responsible for three Akk. texts (in these texts his name is written logographically as ²AN.LUGAL). Should one wish, however, to dispute the identity of the two scribes, there is certainly nothing in the stratigraphy of the High Priest's house, which was in use until the destruction of the city in ca. 1186 BCE, to preclude that ²Ilmilku may have served under a later Niqmaddu. Such an hypothesis may even be bolstered by the recent discovery in the house of Urtenu of a fragment of a tablet written by ²Ilmilku, for Urtenu was an official in royal service at the end of the thirteenth century (Bordreuil and Pardee, forthcoming; the text, to be edited by A. Caquot and A.-S. Dalix, is RS 1992.2016). For Urtenu see also below, Text 1.100.

⁴ The only obvious negative point is the matter of differences in number of columns per tablet already mentioned. The ²Aqhatu cycle seems to show that that is not a significant criterion, for one of the three tablets preserved of that cycle is in three columns per side (CTA 17), while the other two (CTA 18, 19) are arranged in two columns per side. Because the name ²Aqhatu appears on all three tablets, and in no other Ug. poem, it must be assumed that the three tablets recount, at the very least, episodes from the hero's life, and it is likely that the three tablets constitute a true narrative sequence (see text 1.103). Consistent use of an archival introduction (it would be l b^cl on these tablets, as is shown the related organization of the six tablets have varied.⁵ The order most commonly accepted in recent years is followed here. It assumes that, for reasons not made clear in the text in its present state, ²Ilu, the head of the Ugaritic pantheon, at one time favors Yammu/Naharu, the god of bodies of water, but he allows Ba^clu to challenge Yammu; Ba^clu defeats his rival, then orders the construction of his own royal palace; Môtu, the god of death, challenges Ba^clu and eventually brings about his death; after a time in the underworld, Ba^clu returns to life. There appears to be a substantial qualitative difference between the kingship for which Ba^clu and Yammu vie and that of the other deities in this text who are ascribed kingship: each of these exercises kingship in his own way and in his own sphere (²Ilu, Ba^clu, ^cAttaru, and Môtu are the four others who are described as kings), whereas Yammu and Ba^clu appear to be in competition for the same kingship. We have information from these texts on the domains over which Ba^clu, ^cAttaru, and Môtu rule (see notes 50, 98, 250), but no specific data on Yammu's sphere of kingship. From the projection that Ba^clu gives of his defeat of Yammu (CTA 2 iv, up to line 5), we may plausibly infer that Yammu's kingdom corresponded to his name, i.e., the sea. If so, how is it that he and Ba^clu are vying for the kingship in a sense that is not true of Ba^clu and ^cAttaru or Ba^clu and Môtu? Two considerations for the formulation of a response: (1) Whatever the nature of ^cAttaru's kingship, that deity is negligible as a world power (CTA 6 i 56-67), while Yammu is a powerful foe to be defeated in battle (CTA 2 iv); (2) Yammu has a palace, location unknown, though it is unlikely that it is on the 'heights of Šapānu' where Ba^clu eventually had his palace built (CTA 4). Plausibly, therefore, Yammu's palace was in the sea, while Ba^clu's dwelling was on the heights of Šapānu, and the question was which of these two features of the earth was the appropriate place from which to exercise executive authority over the entire earth.

Because the myth deals with Ba^clu, the principal weather god of the Levantine peoples, and his vicissitudes, most authorities have interpreted the cycle as somehow reflecting the vegetative cycle, though the approaches have varied considerably.⁶ The symbolism apparent in the divine names appears to demand some form of naturalistic approach, though the precise interpretation of each element, as well as the overall interpretation of the myth, may be in doubt. Particularly problematic is the negative rôle, parallel to that of the god of death, of the watery elements, who are presented as enemies of Ba^clu, for in a naturalistic interpretation, such bodies of water might be seen as in cooperation with the god that produces rain, rather than inimical to him. Some scholars avoid the problem of conceptual origins and satisfy themselves with a description of the antiquity and broad spread of the motif; others consider that it is the superficial phenomenon of the effects of a storm on a body of water that is reflected in the mythological motif of animosity. Perhaps an appeal to the destructive aspect of the dual nature of water, beneficent in reasonable quantities, harmful when overly abundant or in turmoil, is in order. The explanation of the enmity of Ba^clu and Yammu/Naharu as reflecting the rôle of water in a cosmological myth (Smith 1994:84-87) deserves further attention, but Smith does not explain why the enemy is Yammu/Naharu rather than one of the entities designated by the root thm (cf. Tiamat in the Mesopotamian version and ṯhōm in the Hebrew one; on forms of thm in Ugaritic, see below, note 45). It, in any case, only pushes the question back a stage: one must still ask why these watery forces were seen as the enemy of the creator deity (probably ²Ilu at Ugarit, though no cosmological myth is yet attested). An explanation by social/agricultural systems, i.e. dry farming vs. irrigation, does not appear plausible, for the salt sea (ym), unsuitable for irrigation, is clearly the principal antagonist of Ba^clu (the opposition of dry farming and irrigation is more appropriately evoked to explain the contrasted rôles of Ba^clu and ^cAttaru [see notes 48, 245, 250]).

by CTA 6 i 1) or of a colophon may be demonstrated by CTA 5 and 6 to be an invalid criterion for deciding whether a tablet belongs to a sequence or not, for CTA 6 has both, while CTA 5 has neither, though it is indubitable that the two tablets bore a single continuous text. The data on the other tablets are: CTA 4, 16, and 17 have a colophon on the left edge that identifies the scribe (none of these colophons is identical to the others); CTA 6 has a scribal colophon at the end of the text; CTA 19 has a sort of colophon at the end of the text, but it is textual in nature ("Here is where to resume the story") rather than scribal; CTA 5, 14, and 18 have no colophon, neither at the end of the text nor on the left edge; no colophon is visible on the extant left edge of CTA 2, 3, tablets from which the end of the tablet has disappeared. The facts that CTA 6 has the longest colophon of this series and that it is placed at the end of the tablet with some space to spare may indicate that this tablet constituted for ²Ilmilku the last one in this cycle. The nature of the notation at the end of CTA 19 seems to indicate that that tablet was not considered to be the last of the ²Aqhatu cycle; the placement of the colophon on the left margin of CTA 16, its brevity, and the content of the text itself indicate that that tablet was not the last in the Kirta cycle. An element often omitted in the discussion of whether these six tablets constitute a literary unity is the indisputable fact that, up to the present, no single instance of a duplicate mythological text is known: there are clear instances of brief "quotations" from known texts (cf. Pardee 1988a:119-164, 257-260, 265) and there are clear instances of formulaic repetition in different texts (e.g., in CTA 7 as compared with CTA 3 ii-iii). But it nonetheless appears beyond the realm of plausibility that the six tablets known today of the Ba^clu cycle would come from "two versions of the Baal Cycle" (Smith 1994:12) and yet show no overlapping text.

⁵ See the chart and detailed discussion in Smith 1994:2-15.

⁶ Smith has provided useful overviews (1986; 1994:58-114). Contrast particularly the approach of de Moor 1971 — very precisely seasonal — as compared with Bordreuil 1991 and Yon 1989, 1990 — more broadly symbolic. See also the critique of the Frazerian approach by Walls 1992.

CTA 1⁷² Ilu Sends Messengers to ʿAnatu (ii ?-13)⁸[Now you shall head off to ʿInbubu,⁹Through a thousand courts, ten thousand¹⁰At the feet of ʿAnatu bow and fall,
do homage and honor her.⁶a Pss 29:1-2;
86:9; 96:8-9;
1 Chr 16:28-29
b 2 Kgs 19:21;
Jer 18:13;
31:4, 21;
Amos 5:2
Lam 2:13
c Deut 25:7,9
d Deut 32:6;
e Gen 30:14;
Cant 7:14Say to Girl ʿAnatu,¹¹ ^brepeat to the sister-in-law^c of Li²mu:¹²Message of the Bull, your father ʿIlu,^d word of the Gracious One, your sire:¹³Present bread offerings in the earth, place love-offerings^e in the dust;Pour well-being out into the earth, calmness¹⁴ into the fields.¹⁵

⁷ CTA = Herdner 1963. See also KTU 1.1 = Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1976 (the other texts in this cycle are in the same order as in CTA). The editio princeps was by Virolleaud 1938:91-102. If this tablet belongs to the Baʿlu cycle, one may surmise that only a bit over a quarter of the original number of lines has been even partially preserved (about 120/400). On the problems of the relationship of this tablet to the others, see remarks above and Smith 1994:14-19. Portions of two columns are preserved in this fragment which the editor (Virolleaud 1938:91) described as coming from the center or lower right corner of the tablet; the first placement would imply a text arranged in two columns per side, the second, three columns per side, of which the first would have been totally lost. Herdner (1963:1) claimed that she could confirm that the text was originally in three columns, but left open the question of the recto/verso orientation. Smith (1994:20) followed Herdner. In fact, however, the recto/verso orientation should be easily verifiable by the curvature of the tablet, for the verso is usually more curved than the recto because the corners of the recto sag and the recto thus becomes flat during the time required to inscribe the verso (see, for example, the photograph of CTA 4 in Herdner 1963:pl. X). Unfortunately, I know of no published photograph of the tablet in side view. Given Virolleaud's unequivocal statement, I prefer to assume that he, a practiced epigrapher, had checked the curvature of the tablet (though this does not explain why he missed what should be the almost equally obvious indications provided by the thickness of the fragment at various points for its original number of columns). To make sense of the discussions of this question, the reader must be aware that multi-columned tablets were inscribed from left to right on the recto, the final column on the right side of the recto continued around the lower edge and onto the verso, then the additional columns on the verso proceeded from right to left. Thus, in a text written in three columns per side, cols. i and vi will be opposite each other on the left side of the tablet, recto and verso respectively, with the lower edge left uninscribed between them; cols. ii and v will be arranged in like manner in the center of the tablet; cols. iii and iv will be on the right side of the tablet, usually with the text inscribed continuously around the lower edge of the tablet, making the division between these two columns somewhat arbitrary.

⁸ The first seven-plus verses have disappeared entirely, but may be plausibly reconstructed on the basis of lines 14-22 (and, more distantly, by comparison with CTA 3 iii 6-15 [lines 9-18 in my numbering]).

⁹ The Liturgy against Venomous Reptiles (text 1.94 below) shows clearly that ʿInbubu is ʿAnatu's principal dwelling, for there (l. 20) the messenger is told to go to ʿAnatu in ʿInbubu, and, as we know from most of the addresses in that text, they represent the deities' principal seat of residence. Though ʿInbubu is known to be a mountain, its geographical location has not been identified. Below, in CTA 3 iv 78 (line 81 in my numbering), ʿinbb is in parallel with ʿugr, surely a further indication of where ʿAnatu's dwelling was located, but also presently unidentified.

¹⁰ The attested formula for expressing the distance of a deity's journey is ʿalp 3d rbt kmn (see note 21). In this case, the first elements are ʿalp hgr (line 14), but the parallel phrase has disappeared.

¹¹ ʿAnatu's title btl has elicited enormous discussion. The English word "virgin" is inappropriate as a translation because it emphasizes lack of sexual experience, while btl refers rather to an age/maturity category and to the social norms and cultural overtones associated with that category. For a compact bibliography, see Pardee 1987:382 and 1989-90:464-466, and for a meaningful discussion, see Walls 1992.

¹² ybm Pimm is a much-discussed title of ʿAnatu. As in the title of the deity Mōtu, bn ʿilm, "son of ʿIlu" (rather than "son of the gods"), the second element of this divine epithet bears the enclitic -m (ybm Pimm). This solution appears preferable to the nonsensical translation "sister-in-law of the peoples/thousand (gods)." Li²mu is an old divinity of the Amorite world, poorly attested at Ugarit except in this title. For bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:459, 464-466.

¹³ The title of "Bull" (tr) is used principally of ʿIlu in Ug. texts and is usually linked explicitly with the concept of fatherhood (tr ʿil ʿab); the child may be either another deity or a semi-divine being such as Kirta (see note 13 to text 1.102). This is ʿIlu's principal title, with the widest attestations in the mythological texts (for some bibliographical elements, see Pardee 1987:456; 1989-90:434-436). ltpn htk is a variant of the formula ltpn ʿil d pʿid (see below, note 28). ltpn denotes a quality of character, htk a familial relationship, usually interpreted as belonging to the realm of fatherhood/sonship or daughtership because htk is replaced in similar formulae by bn (as in htk dgn [CTA 10 iii 35] for the usual bn dgn). Another noun from the same root is used in the Kirta text (CTA 15 i 10 [text 1.102]) for the "family" of Kirta. For bibliography on htk, see Pardee 1987:398. ʿIlu is consistently depicted in these texts as an old man with grey hair and beard. Though he is consulted for the wisdom of his decisions (e.g. CTA 3 v 38-39 [here 29-30]; 4 iv 41-43, v 65-66), his old age also makes him vulnerable to the threats of ʿAnatu (CTA 3 v 9-11, 32-33 [here 1-3, 24-25]).

¹⁴ The precise meaning of all four terms functioning as objects of the verbs has been debated: mlhmt could have to do either with bread (lhm) or with the verb "to fight" (now attested in RIH 78/12:9, 21), while ddym could be related to the Semitic word for "love" or have another etymology; šlm could mean "peace" in the narrow sense of the word (absence of warfare) or have its more common broader meaning of "well-being," while ʿarbdd, here translated "calmness," has been the object of multiple explanations, none of which may be judged certain. The function of antonymic parallelism in such an address would be difficult to explain, for, though the purpose of the plea is to convince ʿAnatu to leave off her war-like ways, the phrases "present war ... place love," can hardly mean "dispense with war and put love in its place." Moreover, in spite of the difficulty of ʿarbdd, most scholars have seen synonymous parallelism in the second verse; if mlhmt denotes warfare, therefore, the macroparallelism would be ABBB. For a detailed discussion, see Smith 1994:202-208 (I find the explanation of ddym by Egyptian ddy dubious because the narrative function of the word is different in the two literatures: in the Egyptian text cited ddy is poured out by other deities with the purpose of tricking the goddess into leaving off warfare, whereas here she is asked to pour it out herself — if it is the same word, someone has misunderstood the function of the substance in the other story).

¹⁵ Lit., "liver of the earth // liver of the fields." It is clear from the text below where ʿAnatu searches for Baʿlu at the borderland between the netherworld and the land of the living (CTA 5 vi 26-30) that the reference is to a particular point on the earth's surface, rather than to a descent into the earth. In that text the terms denote such a borderland and constitute perhaps something like a "navel of the earth" notion. Because the reference in CTA 5 vi is relatively specific when understood in conjunction with previous descriptions of the place of ingress to Mōtu's domain (CTA 5 vi 3-9, with reference back to v 6-23 and to CTA 4 viii 1-14), one cannot help but wonder whether this text does not also refer to that particular location, i.e., whether these offerings are not depicted as being appropriately made at the "navel of the earth." It appears, in any case, difficult to deny the presence of at least a literary link between this message, which is repeated several times in CTA 1 and 3 (each time with appropriate

Hurry, press, hasten,
to me let your feet [run,
to me let] your legs [hasten;
To Mount X¹⁶ ...]
...¹⁷

*The Envoys Go to ʿAnatu and Deliver ʿIlu's
Message* (ii 13-?)

Then [they head off
to] ʿInbubu,
Through a thousand courts,
[ten thousand ...
At the feet] of ʿAnatu [they bow and fall,
do] homage and [honor her.
They raise their voices and say] aloud:
Message of [the Bull, your father ʿIlu,
word of the] Gracious One, your sire:
[Present bread] offerings [in the earth,]
place [love-offerings] in the dust;
[Pour well-being out] into the earth,
[calmness into the] fields.
Hurry, [press, hasten,
to me] let your [feet] run,
[to me let] your [legs hasten];
To Mount [X ...].
...¹⁸

ʿIlu Sends for Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu (iii 1-16)
[Then they head off

f Deut 2:23;
Jer 47:4;
Amos 9:7
g Job 28:13

to Memphis, (to) the god of it all,¹⁹
(To) Crete²⁰ (which is) the throne [on which he sits, (to) Memphis (which is) the land of his own possession²⁰].

Through a thousand yards,
ten [thousand furlongs.²¹
At the feet of Kôtaru] they bow and fall, they [do homage and honor him].
They say to Kôtaru-[wa-Ḥasîsu, repeat to Hayyinu²²] the handicrafter:
[Message of the Bull, your father ʿIlu], word of the Gracious One [...]:
...²³

Hurry, press, hasten,
[to me let your feet run,]
to me let [your] legs hasten;
[To Mount ?], the mountain of KS.²⁴
For [I have something to tell you],
a matter to recount to you:
[Words regarding wood, whisperings regarding stone],²⁵
conversings of heaven with [earth,
of the deep with the stars];
A matter (which) men cannot know, [(which) the hordes of the earth cannot understand].²⁶
Come and I will explain [it (for you) in Mount X ...²⁶].

repetitions in the message-transmission structure), and the spot where Baʿlu's body is eventually found. Note that the word kbd, "liver," is also used in the metaphor for death expressed as entering into the body of Môtu, god of death, where it expresses the end point after entry (CTA 5 ii 3-6).

¹⁶ The word ḥr̄n is actually extant in line 23 and partially so in iii 22, but broken in the other occurrences of the formula (here and iii 11). The immediately following word, on the other hand, has not been preserved in any of the passages. Below in iii 12, ḡr ks, "the mountain KS," functions as parallel to this formula. All the passages are, unfortunately, too broken to permit a decision as to the relationship between ḥr̄n and ḡr, apparently two words for "mountain," and as to the status of the word ks, whether a name or a qualifier. Unless one accept that ḡd also means "mountain" (see below, note 29), these four texts are the only ones in all of Ug. literature that place ʿIlu's dwelling on a mountain. Other texts, including the liturgy against venomous reptiles, organized specifically according to the principal dwellings of the various deities invoked (RS 24.244:2-3 [text 1.94]), emphasize the watery aspect of ʿIlu's abode. See Pope's attempt to locate ʿIlu's home in a place characterized by mountain springs (1955) and Smith's detailed discussion (1994:225-230).

¹⁷ Lines 3b-13 are too broken to translate and there is no parallel text from which to propose a reconstruction. At the end of line 8 appears the verb "to die" (yamm) and at the end of line 9 the expression k ʿil, which is only attested in expressions for the process of dying as provoked by ʿAnatu (see CTA 18 iv 25, 36; 19 ii 88, 93 "like spittle" [text 1.103]).

¹⁸ If each column was 60-65 lines long, as is the case with the other tablets in this cycle, approximately 35-40 lines are missing between cols. ii and iii, though the distribution of these lines between the bottom of col. ii and the top of col. iii cannot be determined until the placement of the fragment within the outline of the original tablet is better defined.

¹⁹ The phrase ʿil kth has been variously explained. Since interpretations based on analyses other than as kt, "all," + pronominal suffix, involve various grammatical, orthographic, or syntactic problems, it appears best to interpret the phrase as alluding to the ideological importance of Memphis during and after its decline from political power and as standing thus in a sense for all Egypt. The sacred name of Memphis, H(w)ḡr-k-ptḥ, "the house of the ka of (the deity) Ptah" (whence Ug. hkpt), became, through Greek, the modern name for Egypt. Because the Greek usage goes back at least to Homer, it does not appear implausible to posit the existence of a similar view at Ugarit. The reference, as is shown clearly by the continuation of this text and by other passages, is to the craftsman deity Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu. The double divine name Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu can appear in full form or just as Kôtaru; in poetic structure it can either be split up in a bicolon or appear as a single unit, which then has as its parallel yet a third name, Hayyinu (as here below, line 4). The double deity can be treated either as a single deity or as a duality (as in CTA 17 v 18-21 [text 1.103]). The home of Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu is fixed either in Egypt (as in CTA 17 v 21-31 [text 1.103]), or in Crete (see RS 24.244:46 [text 1.94]), or in both places (as here and in CTA 3 vi 14-15).

²⁰ Like Heb., nhlt in Ug. denotes real property belonging to an individual, whether received by right of succession from one's father or not.

²¹ The words ḡd, "field" (cf. Akk. ḡddu), and kmn, "(a land measure)," are here translated by terms denoting increasing lengths.

²² This name is explained by Arabic hayyin^m, "easy, light," which, coupled with following phrase d ḥr̄ṣ ydm, lit., "who makes things by hand," denotes facility in craftsmanship.

²³ The beginning of ʿIlu's message, lines 7-9, does not correspond to known formulae and may not, therefore, be reconstructed.

²⁴ See above, note 16.

²⁵ Wood and stone here appear to be Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu's stock in trade as a craftsman deity. When the formulae are repeated by Baʿlu below (CTA 3 iii 20-26), features characteristic of the weather deity are added, in particular, the thunder.

²⁶ Where the passage like this one occurs in CTA 3 iii 26-28, the last invitation is followed by the descriptions of Baʿlu's mountain. One would expect this text to have contained corresponding information for ʿIlu.

Kôtaru-wa-Hasîsu Obeys the Summons (iii 17-end)
Kôtaru-wa-Hasîsu replies:
 [Come, come, attendants of the gods,
 you, you may tarry, but I'm [off
 (From) Crete] for the most distant of gods,
 (from) Memphis [for the most distant of deities]:
 By double stretches below [the springs of the earth,
 triple lengths] (in) the low places.²⁷
 So off he [heads,
 towards the Gracious One], the kindly god,²⁸ to Mount [?, the mountain of KS].
 He penetrates Ilu's abode, [enters the dwelling²⁹ of the King], father of

h Ps 93:3-4

Šunama;³⁰

At [Ilu's feet he bows and falls], does homage [and honors him.

...]

the Bull Ilu [...]

...³¹Ilu's Feast (iv)³²Unknown (v)³³CTA 2³⁴Yammu's Message (i 11-19)³⁵

Yammu sends messengers,

[Ruler Naharu³⁶ sends an embassy].^h

²⁷ The meaning and interpretation of these formulae expressing great distances are uncertain. They are used for distances both across land and, as here, across water, and they are descriptive of the travel of various deities. The terms "below/under the springs (or: furrows) of the earth" (h̄t nt ʾars) and "(in) the low places" (gyrm) seem to indicate that the deities were thought capable of traveling the underground aquifers. One must either adopt this interpretation or else assume that formulae appropriate for travel across land (hence "down amongst the springs/furrows of the earth") were used conventionally for travel between two places separated by water (cf. Pardee 1980:278; Smith 1994:183-184).

²⁸ l̄pn ʾil d pʾid is one of the titles of Ilu. The 1st element is etymologically related to Arabic laṭīf, a title of Allah, while the 2nd has also an Arabic cognate, the root fʿd denoting aspects of the heart as an organ and seat of various abstract concepts (mind, spirit, courage...). Without usages closer to Ug. it is impossible to know whether it there denoted primarily courage or generosity (cf. "big-hearted"), or some other notion.

²⁹ The terms here for Ilu's dwellings are the standard ones, dd and qrš (to which may be added ahl, "tent"). These terms have an archaic flavor about them (not bt, "house," hkl, "palace," h̄zr, "court" — such terms are used elsewhere only rarely of Ilu's dwelling) and apparently designate tent-like structures (see Clifford 1972:51-53, 124-125; bibliography in Pardee 1987:424). Though many believe that dd is simply a form of the word for "mountain" (by-forms td, qd, sd are posited), its general semantic field seems to be indicated by the fact that the same word in the Aqhatu text denotes YTPN's encampment (CTA 19 iv 213, 220 [text 1.103]). Many have pointed out, as well, that qrš is the term used in the Torah for the moveable planks of which the desert sanctuary is constructed. The ideology of Ilu's home appears, therefore, to be related to the semi-nomadic existence: though his home is comfortable, even palatial (see CTA 3 v 27-29 [my lines 19-21]), it may also have been portable.

³⁰ The title ab šnm has been variously interpreted (for bibliography see Pardee 1987:367; 1988b:57-60; 1989-90:458). Because, according to RS 24.258:18-19 (text 1.97), the double deity Tukamuna-wa-Šunama do the duty of the good son by bearing Ilu home when he is drunk (cf. note 9 to the Aqhatu text 1.103), šnm may be taken as the divine name Šunama. Cf. also Text 1.95, passim.

³¹ It is usually assumed that Kôtaru-wa-Hasîsu is next asked to build a palace for Yammu. Unfortunately the entire reconstruction rests on the letter {b}, taken to be the first letter of the second word in the formula h̄š bhm tbnm ..., "hurriedly build a palace" (the text reads {h̄š.b[...]}).

³² Though over thirty lines of this column are partially preserved, not a single line is fully preserved and precious few are even restorable. There are motifs of a feast (sh, "to call, invite"; yib, "to sit"), of blessing (lines 9-10: "he takes [a cup in hand], a goblet in both hands"; cf. in the Kirta text CTA 15 ii 16-18 [text 1.102] and in the Aqhatu text CTA 17 i 35ff. [text 1.103]), and of proclaiming the name (pʿr + šm) of someone, perhaps Yammu (line 15: w pʿr šm ym...; line 20: [... šmk mdd ʾil...]). The first twenty lines may, therefore, have to do with an installation and empowerment of Yammu, though the circumstances are unclear. For scholars who order the tablets as here translated, this section recounts an initial empowerment of Yammu by Ilu, which would constitute the narrative origin of the conflict between Yammu and Baʿlu. After these events, there is mention in lines 22-25 of an intervention by Baʿlu and of someone being driven from a throne, but the object of the verb, the motivation, and the circumstances are all obscure. Ilu's motivations in fostering the rivalry between Yammu and Baʿlu are unknown, the tablet being too poorly preserved to provide such information, if indeed it was ever made explicit in the poem (cf. below, note 98). If Yammu was a son of Ilu, according to the form of address Yammu uses in the next text ("the Bull, his father Ilu"), then one can see a typical rivalry between sons, with the younger son eventually winning out over an arrogant and oppressive older brother. Moreover, Baʿlu's title "Son of Dagan" may indicate that he, Baʿlu, is not Ilu's own son. Data on this problem are not available from Ug. sources, but various explanations based on comparative considerations have been given (see below, notes 163 and 190 and bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:442-445, 446-448).

³³ Col. v is even more fragmentary than col. iv, and no certain theme can be identified among the few sparse words.

³⁴ This tablet currently consists of two fragments that do not join — and the presumption that they belong to a single tablet is, therefore, based on physical and graphic similarities. Because of the width of the lines, it is assumed that the tablet originally bore only two columns per side, of which parts of cols. i and iv have been preserved on the larger fragment, as well as the beginnings of a few lines of col. ii. The smaller fragment was assigned by the editor (Virolleaud 1944-45:1) to col. iii of the original tablet, i.e., the right-hand column on the verso. Only one surface of this fragment has been preserved (not "inscribed," as Herdner claims 1963:5; cf. Virolleaud 1944-45:1). For arguments against considering this fragment as belonging to the same tablet as col. i, ii, iv, see Meier 1986; note that the argument from line length (i.e., the lines of col. iii are longer than those of cols. i and iv) is not convincing because this fragment is from the right side of the tablet and the lines wrap around the edge of the tablet (see the photograph in Smith 1994:pl. 26). Meier also argues that CTA 2 does not belong to the same cycle as CTA 3-6; physical characteristics of the tablets may not, however, play a role in such an argument, and the literary/formulaic arguments are inconclusive — Meier, and others who have had doubts on this score, may be correct, but data are presently insufficient for a clear decision. In any case, this tablet was part of a Baʿlu cycle, almost certainly inscribed by ʾIlmilkū; the real question, for a clear answer to which the data are also insufficient, is the relationship of this portion of the Baʿlu story to the better-preserved portions, i.e., the tablet's relationship to the others in a single cycle, or the cycle's relationship to the other principal cycle known. The editio princeps of this tablet was more piecemeal than is usually the case: Virolleaud published cols. iv and iii in separate articles (1935 and 1944-45, respectively). Col. i appeared for the first time, in transcription only, in Gordon 1947:167-68 (text no. 137). Col. ii appeared for the first time in Herdner 1963, where hand copies of cols. i and ii also were first published.

³⁵ Lines 1-10 are poorly preserved and unrestorable. In line 6 one finds ʾaymr, apparently a reference to the mace named ʾAyyamurru with which Baʿlu defeats Yammu according to col. iv, and in lines 7-8 a curse that makes appeal to the deity Hôrānu, one that is better preserved in CTA 16 vi 54-57, Kirta's curse on his upstart son (text 1.102) — unfortunately, here the crucial part is missing wherein the object of the curse is named, and we thus have no way of knowing who the protagonists are nor of fixing the curse into the narrative structure.

³⁶ One of Yammu's standard titles in these texts is lpt nhr, where the first word is the old West Semitic term lapiu, denoting a tribal/clan ruler,

They rejoice... Go, lads, [don't dally], head for the Great Assembly,³⁷ for [Mount Lalu]. At the feet of ʾIlū do not fall, do not prostrate yourself (to) the Great [Assembly]. Standing, say (your) speech], repeat your information. Say to the Bull, [my] father [ʾIlū, repeat to the Great] Assembly: Message of Yammu, your master, of your lord Ruler [Naharu]: Give (up), O gods, the one whom you obey, the one whom the hordes (of the earth) fear.³⁸ Give (up) Baʿlu [and his attendants], (give up) the Son of Dagan,³⁹ that I might take possession of his gold. At the Sight of the Approaching Messengers, the Gods Panic (i 19-29) The lads head off, don't hesitate; they head for Mount Lalu, for the Great Assembly. The gods have sat down to eat, the sons of the Holy One to dine, Baʿlu attending on ʾIlū. The gods see them, see Yammu's messengers, the embassy of Ruler [Naharu]. The gods lower their heads onto their knees, onto their princely thrones. Baʿlu rebukes them: Why, gods, have your lowered (your) heads even to your knees, even to your princely thrones? As one must the gods answer, the tablet of Yammu's messengers, the embassy of Ruler Naharu! Lift, O gods, your heads! off your knees, off your princely thrones.	i Ps 24:7, 9 j Pss 57:5; 64:4	And let me answer Yammu's messengers, the embassy of Ruler Naharu. The gods then raise their heads off their knees, off their princely thrones. The Messengers Arrive, Deliver Their Lines (i 30-35) Thereafter the messengers of Yammu arrive, the embassy of Ruler Naharu. At the feet of ʾIlū they [do not] fall, they do not prostrate themselves (to) the Great Assembly. Standing, they [say] (their) speech, [repeat] their information. They look like a fire, two fires, their [tongue] like a sharpened sword. They say to the Bull, his father ʾIlū: Message of Yammu, your master, of your [lord], Ruler Naharu: Give (up), O gods, the one whom you obey, the one whom the [hordes (of the earth)] fear. Give (up) Baʿlu and his attendants, (give up) the Son of Dagan, that I might take possession of his gold. ʾIlū Declares That He Accedes to the Demand (i 36-38) The Bull, his father ʾIlū, [replies]: Baʿlu (is) your servant, O Yammu, Baʿlu (is) your servant, [O Naharu], the Son of Dagan (is) your prisoner. He will indeed bring you tribute, like (one) of the gods he will bring [you a gift], like one of the sons of the Holy One (he will bring you) presents. Baʿlu Defends Himself (i 38-end) Then Prince Baʿlu is sick (with rage), [moreover he takes] in his hand a striking weapon, in his right hand a smiting weapon, the lads he [strikes]. [ʿAnatu] grasps [his right hand], ʿAttartu grasps his left hand: How could [you smite Yammu's messengers, the] embassy of Ruler Naharu?
--	---	--

the second the standard Northwest Semitic word for "river." The conjunction of the names "Sea" and "River" seem to indicate that the deity in question does not personify the Mediterranean Sea alone, but all bodies of water — in opposition to Baʿlu, the deity in charge of the rain (see above, introduction).

³⁷ "Great Assembly" is offered as a translation of the double formula phr mʿd, each word of which means "assembly, council." The first word is the standard word for "assembly" in Akk. (puḫru), the second is cognate to Heb. mōʿēd. In this text, the double formula refers to all the gods united, including Baʿlu, whom we know to have had his own assembly (in the ritual texts we meet a composite deity dr ʾil w phr bʿl, "Circle of ʾIlū and Assembly of Baʿlu").

³⁸ Though the forms tqh and tqyn are often derived from the same root, the presence of /h/ in the first seems to indicate different roots, in consonance with the different subjects: the gods "obey" (allow themselves to be directed by) Baʿlu (cf. Arabic waqaha, "obey," Heb. yiqqāh*, "obedience"), while the human hordes (hmlt, taken here as an abbreviation of hmlt ʾarš, attested above p. 244 [CTA 1 iii 15] and elsewhere [e.g., p. 251, CTA 3 iii 25]) "fear" and "reverence" Baʿlu (cf. Arabic waqā, "protect," but also "fear"). Alternatively, one could take the {h} on tqh as suffixal and derive both forms from the same root, interpreting, perhaps, hmlt as referring to the gods, rather than to humans.

³⁹ On this title of Baʿlu, see notes 32 and 190.

...⁴⁰ Then Prince Ba^clu is (again) sick (with rage), (to) the-field-of-a-man⁴¹ Yammu's messengers the embassy of Ruler Naharu. ... I, for my part, hereby say to Yammu your master, (to) [your] lord [Ruler Naharu]: [...] the word of Haddu⁴² the Avenger ... Hostilities Continue (ii)⁴³ Someone Sends Kôtaru-wa-Hasîsu to ʾIlu (iii 2-3)⁴⁴ ... [(From) Crete] to the most distant [of gods, (from) Memphis to the most distant of deities: By double stretches below the springs of the earth, triple lengths (in) the low places]. Off He Goes (iii 4-6) [So] off he heads to ʾIlu at the source of [the double river, midst the upspringings of the deeps.⁴⁵ ^k He enters] ʾIlu's dwelling, goes into the home of the King, [father of Sunama; At ʾIlu's feet he bows] and falls,	k Ezek 47; Joel 4:18; Zech 14:8	does homage and honors [him]. ʾIlu Enjoins the Building of Yammu's Palace (iii 6-11) [Thereafter, the Bull, his father ʾIlu, responds]; Kôtaru-wa-Hasîsu be off: (go) build a house⁴⁶ (for) Yammu, raise a palace (for) Ruler Naharu, ... Be off, Kôtaru-wa[-Hasîsu: you] are to (go) build a house (for) Prince Yammu [you are to raise] a palace (for) [Ruler] Naharu, ... [Hurry!] build the house, Hurry! raise [the palace]: A house [covering a thousand acres, a palace (covering) ten thousand] hectares.⁴⁷ ...⁴⁸ The Solar Deity Addresses ʿAttaru (iii 15-18) Šapšu, luminary of the gods, responds, she raises her voice and [cries aloud]: [Hear now, ʿAttaru]: The Bull, your father ʾIlu, [will take blood] ven- geance⁴⁹
--	--	--

⁴⁰ Beginning with line 41, the text is progressively less well preserved. The goddesses' reproof apparently continues for about two lines, perhaps dealing with the diplomatic inviolability of messengers.

⁴¹ šdm as in CTA 23:10 (see note 17 to text 1.87).

⁴² Haddu (Hadad in the "absolute" form) was the name of the old Amorite weather deity; Ba^clu ("master") was a title of this deity, particularly in the coastal area, that came to function as a divine name.

⁴³ Only the first sign or signs of sixteen lines of col. ii have been preserved to the right of col. i. In line 8, one finds ʾimhs, "I will smite."

⁴⁴ On the placement of the fragment classified as col. iii of CTA 2, see above, note 34. Smith 1994, following various authors, places col. iii before cols. i and iv (see his discussion pp. 21-25, where he does not deal explicitly with the implications of this decision). Such a placement implies, of course, that col. iii comes from a tablet other than that represented by cols. i and iv (which would add some 250 lines to the cycle), for the latter two columns are from the left side of the tablet, hence from the beginning and end of the text, while col. iii is from the right side of the tablet, hence from somewhere in the middle of the text. (Caquot, Sznycer, Herdner 1974:108 do not discuss all the aspects of the problem, referring only to the discrepancy in line length between col. iii and cols. i/iv as an argument against placing the fragment labeled col. iii at the beginning of col. i.) According to the editor (Vroilleaud 1944-45:1) this fragment should be placed near the end of col. iii, i.e., near the end of the right-hand column on the verso of the tablet. Including in the count the few heads of lines of col. ii, there would have been, assuming that col. iii belongs to the same tablet, approximately one hundred lines between the extant end of col. i and the beginning of col. iii as preserved.

⁴⁵ Though the parallel form nhrm is in all likelihood dual, expressing the cosmic river that encircles the earth in its two arms (cf. Caquot, Sznycer, Herdner 1974:109), one may question the common assumption that thmt is also dual. Morphologically it could be either the dual (tahmatâma) or the plural + "enclitic" -m (tahmâtuma). Because we know now that thmt in Ug. denotes the multiple waters of the underlying fresh-water ocean (see note 2 to text 1.94 [RS 24.244]), one might think that ʾIlu dwells at the confluence of this plurality, rather than at the meeting place of two streams of the thmt, which are, in any case, as yet unidentified (an argument quite different from the one in Pardee 1980:270, where the form of thmtm was used as a basis for so interpreting nhrm). On attempts to locate ʾIlu's dwelling place, see above note 16.

⁴⁶ The standard parallel pair in this text used to describe the dwellings of Yammu and Ba^clu is bhtm // hkl, of which the first term is the standard Ug. plural of the word for "house," the second the technical term for the dwelling of a deity, corresponding to Heb. hēkal, Akk. ekallu, Sum. É.GAL. I will everywhere translate bhtm by "house," though it is clear that the plural denotes the multiple constructions that make up a palace. In texts where bhtm is not in parallel with hkl, for example in the divine name b^clt bhtm that appears frequently in the ritual texts, bhtm may simply be translated by "palace" or "mansion."

⁴⁷ The terms designating the surface covered by the palace are šd and kmm, translated as length measures when used in the idiom for great distances (see above, note 21), are here translated as surface measures ("acre," "hectare").

⁴⁸ Lines 11b-15a are too damaged to translate. The deity ʿAttaru, to whom Šapšu's message in lines 15-18 is addressed, first appears in line 12. Judging from what follows, his opposition to Yammu's hegemony may already have been mentioned there. Below, in CTA 6 i 53-67, we find an account of an unsuccessful attempt by ʿAttaru to fill Ba^clu's rôle when the latter is in the underworld; this is taken by those who interpret the name as signifying "irrigation" as meaning that irrigation cannot in the Levant fill the rôle of rain (cf. Caquot, Sznycer, Herdner 1974:233, who do not accept the hypothesis). There are also reasons to see ʿAttaru as an astral deity: in Ug. religion, the morning and evening star may have been designated by masculine and feminine versions of the same name, ʿAttaru functioning as the evening star, ʿAttartu as the morning star (see note 58 to text 1.87). In terms of number of appearances and of dramatic rôles in the mythological texts, ʿAttaru is a relatively unimportant deity. This is equally true of the ritual texts where he appears in the so-called "pantheon" texts and in the sacrificial text dependent directly thereupon (RS 24.643) but otherwise very rarely. For bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:466-70; for a recent overview, see Smith 1994:240-49.

⁴⁹ If the verb is correctly restored on the basis of line 21 as {yj}²*ir*, it denotes some form of reprisal based on consanguinity (ʿar in Ug.).

for Prince Yammu,
for Ruler Naharu.
[Surely] he would not listen to you,
— the Bull, your father ²Ilu —
Surely he would pull up [the foundations of your]
seat,
overturn [the throne of] your kingship,¹ break the staff of your rulership.^{50 m}

^cAttaru's Reply (iii 18-23)⁵¹
[^cAttaru] responds [...]:
[...] in me,
the Bull, my father ²Ilu.
As for me, I [have] no house [as (do)] the (other)
gods,
[nor] court [as (do) the sons of the Holy One].
X will go down my throat,
they will be washed ...⁵²
In the house of [Prince] Yammu, in the palace of Ruler Naharu.
The Bull, his father ²Ilu, may take blood vengeance
for Prince Yammu,
[for] Ruler [Naharu].
But I am king [...] am indeed king,⁵³ whereas you [have] no wife as (do) [the (other)
gods,
nor young bride as (do) the sons of the Holy
One].

Yammu Responds (iii 23-24)
Prince Yammu [speaks up],
Ruler Naharu [replies]:
[...] will send.

^cAttaru's Reply (iii 24-?)
^cAttaru responds [...]

1/2 Sam 7:13;
Hag 2:22

m Ps 45:7

n Ps 68:5

o Ps 92:10

p Ps 145:13

Ba^clu Swears the Destruction of His Enemies, Particularly Yammu (iv 7-5)

[...] I will indeed force them to leave, moreover I will drive out [...].
And in Yammu I will indeed destroy the resting place,
in Yammu, at (his) very heart, (I will destroy) the [...],
[(as for) Ruler] Naharu, (I will destroy) (his) neck.

There with the sword I will lay waste,
I will assault (his) house:
The powerful one will fall to the earth,
the mighty one to the dust.

Yammu's Response (iv 6-7)

Hardly has the word left his mouth,
the utterance his lips,
When his voice is heard, there is a cry
(from) under the throne of Prince Yammu.⁵⁴

Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu Prepares the Weapons Needed to Defeat Yammu (iv 7-27)⁵⁵

Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu speaks up:

I hereby announce to you, Prince Ba^clu, and I repeat, Cloud-Rider:^{56 n}

As for your enemy, O Ba^clu,
as for your enemy, you'll smite (him),
you'll destroy your adversary.^o

You'll take your eternal kingship, your sovereignty (that endures) from generation to generation.^p

The First Mace (iv 11-18)

Kôtaru prepares two maces⁵⁷

see note 7 to the Kirta text [1.102] and the biblical references cited in note e to that text).

⁵⁰ The parallelism of mlk and tpi here is the standard one in Ug. to denote royal status. Because the very same threat is proffered against Môtu when he is on the verge of defeating Ba^clu (CTA 6 vi 27-29), we may assume that this passage dealt with a similar attack by ^cAttaru on Yammu. In the case of Môtu, it is clear that he has his own kingdom, separate from that of Ba^clu (see Bordreuil and Pardee 1993:66-67), with the loss of which Šapšu threatens him if he continues his attack on Ba^clu. As will become clear below (CTA 6 i 56-67; see note 250), ^cAttaru also has his own legitimate kingdom. Though this passage is too damaged to allow a solid decision as to whether the situations are similar, it is certainly plausible to see here a threat: if he continues to attack Yammu, ^cAttaru himself will suffer removal from his legitimate sphere of authority.

⁵¹ ^cAttaru's reply seems first addressed to Šapšu, then directly to Yammu; it is the latter who in turn responds to ^cAttaru (lines 23-24). ^cAttaru's argument may be that he has already been named king (of his own domain — see preceding note) and has a wife, hence that he has a right to a palace.

⁵² A most obscure verse. The "X" is a four-letter word {l¹b-m¹}, where the third sign is {²u,d,b}, giving the words meaning, respectively, "lions," "alone," and "hearts," none of which seems to make much sense. The verb is sometimes read {trd}, and taken as a third-person form, sometimes {²ard}, a first-person form. After the verb "to wash" comes a phrase {ktrm}, which has been variously interpreted. If it is a reference to bulls (k trm), the washing in the second part of the verse makes one think that the reference is to sacrificial acts and "down my throat" to an act of devouring, but the formulae are without parallels in Ug. literature. Others have seen in {ktrm} a reference to Kôtaru or, as in the Kirta text, a reference to good health (CTA 14 i 16 [text 1.102]) or to skillfulness. See Smith's discussion (1994:217, 253-256).

⁵³ The reading in the middle of line 22 is unsure and it is difficult to know whether the formula mlkt ... l mlkt refers only to one or the other of the two deities, i.e., ^cAttaru and Yammu, or whether their status is being contrasted.

⁵⁴ Because the subject of the verb ygr can hardly be Ba^clu, and because no other subject is stated explicitly, one must surmise that the actor is Yammu, who is either diving under his throne (hollow root gr) or crying out there (root ygr) — see del Olmo Lete 1981:608. Why else would he be under his throne than for fear of Ba^clu? Note that, contrary to Môtu when he does battle with Ba^clu (CTA 6 vi 16-22), Yammu's rôle in the following "battle" is apparently entirely passive, i.e., there is no reference to his actions when Ba^clu attacks.

⁵⁵ In this episode, Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu has become the ally of Ba^clu against Yammu. What the connection between this episode and the previous one involving Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu, in which the latter was assigned the task of building Yammu's house (col. iii), cannot be determined because of the state of the text(s).

⁵⁶ rkb ^c*rpt*, lit., "he who mounts upon the clouds," is a direct reference to Ba^clu's function as bringer of rain.

⁵⁷ Dual forms are used in each of the two preparation episodes (šmdm, "two maces," šmhm, "the names of the two of them"), but each weapon and proclaims⁵⁸ their names:

 You, your name is Yagrušu;
 Yagrušu, drive out⁵⁹ Yammu, drive Yammu from his throne,
 Naharu from his seat of sovereignty.
 You'll whirl in Ba^clu's hand,
 like a hawk⁶⁰ in his fingers,
 Strike Prince Yammu on the shoulder,
 Ruler Naharu on the chest.
 (So) the mace whirls in Ba^clu's hand,
 like a hawk in his fingers,
 Strikes Prince Yammu on the shoulder,
 Ruler Naharu on the chest.
 (But) Yammu is strong,⁶¹ he does not collapse, his joints do not go slack,
 his body does not slump.

The Second Mace (iv 18-27)

Kôtaru prepares two maces and proclaims their names:
 You, your name is ²Ayyamurru;
²Ayyamurru, expel⁶¹ Yammu,
 expel Yammu from his throne,
 Naharu from his seat of sovereignty.
 You'll whirl in Ba^clu's hand,
 like a hawk in his fingers,
 Strike Prince Yammu on the head,
 Ruler Naharu on the forehead.⁶²
 Yammu will go groggy
 and will fall to the ground.
 So the mace whirls in Ba^clu's hand,

q Ps 74:13

r Exod 13:9;
 Dan 8:5

[like] a hawk in his fingers,
 Strikes Prince [Yammu] on the head,
 Ruler Naharu on the forehead.
 Yammu goes groggy,
 falls to the ground;
 His joints go slack,
 his body slumps.
 Ba^clu grabs Yammu and sets about dismembering
 (him),
 sets about finishing Ruler Naharu off.

Attartu Intervenes (iv 28-30)⁶²

By name ^cAttartu reprimands (him):⁶³
 Scatter (him), O Mighty [Ba^clu],⁶⁴ scatter (him), O Cloud-Rider,
 For Prince [Yammu] is our captive,
 [for] Ruler Naharu is our captive.

Ba^clu Carries Out the Order (iv 30-31)

...
 Mighty Ba^clu disperses him
 ...

Someone Announces Yammu's Death (iv 32)

Yammu is certainly dead, Ba^clu, Yammu is certainly [...]
 ...⁶⁵

CTA 3⁶⁶

Ba^clu's Feast (i)⁶⁷

...⁶⁸
 He serves Mighty Ba^clu, is addressed in each episode as a singular (šmk ʔat, "your name, you"). For a recent discussion of the weapons used in the various battle scenes in the Ba^clu cycle, see Bordreuil and Pardee 1993; for the antiquity of the motif, see Durand 1993.

⁵⁸ The same verb, p^cr, is used here as in the proclamation of Yammu's (?) name in CTA 1 iv (see above, note 32).

⁵⁹ Nomen omen: the name ygrš means "it will drive out" and Yagrušu is ordered to "drive out, expel" (grš) Yammu.

⁶⁰ From the ²Aqhanu story, nšr clearly denotes a raptor, rather than a bird whose diet consists primarily of carrion ("vulture") — see note 70 to text 1.103.

⁶¹ As in the case of Yagrušu, the name and the command correspond. Here the name includes an exclamatory element, ²*ayya*, before the verbal element, murr-, apparently from a geminate root mrr II (mrr I = "be bitter" or, perhaps, from a root mry, "expel").

⁶² After line 30, the break at the end of each line becomes progressively larger, and the text can no longer be completely restored because there is no parallel text. It is, therefore, uncertain where the speeches begin and end and where the narration takes over.

⁶³ The verb g^cr clearly denotes a reprimand in both Ug. and Heb. Unfortunately, just what Ba^clu is being reprimanded for doing is unclear. Because the verb incorporated in ^cAttartu's speech (bt) differs from the ones used to describe Ba^clu's preceding actions, one may surmise that he should have been doing bt, rather than qt, šr, and kly. It has been pointed out (Caquot, Sznycer, Herdner 1974:139, n. b) that, if bt denotes "scatter, disperse," the net effect is the same as the scattering of Môtu's remains according to CTA 6 ii 30-37 (p. 270). One could surmise that the vocabulary differs in the two episodes because the nature of the deities is different: Yammu/Naharu is a watery entity, whatever Môtu may consist of. Judging from the Arabic verb batṭa, Ba^clu is being commanded to disperse Yammu/Naharu by making the droplets of water fly in all directions. For those who see the origins of the myth in natural phenomena (see the introduction), the actions of a storm (Ba^clu) on bodies of water (Yammu/ Naharu) would appear an apt parallel.

⁶⁴ The second of Ba^clu's principal titles, ²*alif^cyn*, is derived from the root ʔy, "to be strong, powerful" (on rkb^c rpt, "Cloud-Rider," see above, note 56). It is an ²*alif*-preformative noun, plausibly elative in character, used in apposition with b^cl, lit., "the most mighty one, Ba^clu."

⁶⁵ The beginnings of eight more lines are extant, too fragmentary to be translated. Because of the presence of ²*ibh*, "his enemy" in line 39 and of [b]n^c nh, "his forehead" (lit., "between his eyes") in line 40, one must assume either that this story is recounted again, perhaps as part of a proclamation or of a message to another deity, or that Ba^clu takes on another enemy in battle.

⁶⁶ This is the first of the tablets in this cycle that are relatively complete. Approximately the lower two thirds of this tablet are preserved, with the lower left corner missing. A very small fragment of the upper edge is preserved, from the upper right corner, containing remnants of the beginning of col. iii and the end of cols. iv and v. Because the beginning and end of the text have disappeared, there is no way of knowing whether it included the classification formula (l b^cl) and/or a colophon. When ²Išmīlku ruled the columns on the recto, he made his first column considerably narrower than the other two (the three columns measure approximately 36/58/50 mm); this pattern is repeated on the verso, where the middle column is the widest and the one on the left, i.e., col. vi, the narrowest. The editio princeps was by Virolleaud (1938:1-90).

⁶⁷ In addition to the missing upper third of the tablet, which would have contained some twenty lines, the lower corner has disappeared here, removing some fifteen complete lines and the beginnings of three others. Thus traces of only twenty-eight lines are preserved, of a probable total of sixty to sixty-five. For a detailed study of the poetic structure of the text preserved in this column, see Pardee 1988c.

⁶⁸ It is generally assumed that the first five signs of line 2, {pdmn}, provide the name of Ba^clu's head waiter, Pardamenni or Radmānu (if the regales the Prince, master of the earth.

The Food (i 4-8)

He arises, prepares,
and gives him food:
He cuts the breast(-cut) before him, with a salted knife (does he cut) a slice of fatting.

The Drink (i 8-17)

He arises, serves,
and gives him drink:
He puts a cup in his hand,
a goblet in his two hands,
A large vessel, mighty to look upon,
belonging to the furnishings of the heavens,
A holy cup (which) women may not see,
a goblet (which) ²Aṭiratu (herself) may not eye;
One thousand kd-measures he takes from the new
wine,
ten thousand he mixes into his mixture.⁵

The Entertainment (i 18-22)

He arises, chants, and sings, cymbals (being) in the hands of the goodly one;
The good-voiced youth sings
for Ba^clu in the heights of Ṣapānu.

Ba^clu's Offspring (i 22-?)

Ba^clu sees his daughters, eyes Pidray, daughter of ²Aru, even Ṭallay, daughter of Rabbu.⁶⁹
Pidar he recognizes [...]

^cAnatu Does Battle with Men (ii)⁷⁰

... (with) henna (sufficient for) seven girls,
(with) scent of coriander and ²ANHBM.⁷¹
The gate of ^cAnatu's house is closed and she meets the lads at the base of the mountain.⁷²

s Ps 75:9

r Isa 22:18;
cf. 2 Kgs
10:7

n Rev 14:20

v Hab 3:9, 14

w Ps 16:9

The First Battle (ii 5-16)

Thereupon ^cAnatu's begins to smite (her adversaries) in the valley, to attack (them) between the two cities.⁷³
She smites the peoples (dwelling) on the seashore, wreaks destruction on the humans (dwelling) to the east.⁷⁴
Under her are heads like balls,¹ above her are hands like locusts, heaps of fighters' hands are like (heaps of) grasshoppers.⁷⁵
She attaches heads around her neck, ties hands at her waist.⁷⁶
Up to her knees she wades in the blood of soldiers, to her neck^u in the gore of fighters.⁷⁷
With (her) staff^v she drives out the (potential) captors,
with her bowstring the opponents.

^cAnatu Goes Home, but is not Satisfied (ii 17-22)

Then ^cAnatu goes to her house,
the goddess arrives at her palace.
But she is not sated with smiting (her adversaries)
in the valley,
with attacking (them) between the two cities.
She prepares chairs for the fighter(s), prepares tables for the armies,
footstools for the warriors.⁷⁸

The Second Battle (ii 23-30)

Much she smites, then looks, attacks and then gazes (on her handiwork), does ^cAnatu.
Her liver swells with laughter,
her heart is filled with joy,^u
^cAnatu's liver with success,
As to her knees she wades in the blood of soldier(s), p be the conjunction).

⁶⁹ Ba^clu's daughters and their mothers all have names associated with fertility: Pidray = "Fatty"; ²Aru = a type of dew; Ṭallay = the regular Northwest Semitic word for "dew"; Rabbu = "showers" (cf. Heb. r'bbim). One other daughter/mother pair is known from this text (iii 4-5), ²arṣy bt y^cbdr ("Earthy," daughter of Y^cBDR, of which the meaning is disputed — see below, note 84), and another pair may be attested, ²uz^crt bt ²lh (for a possible interpretation, see Pardee 1988a:141-143). There seems to be a male counterpart to Pidray, the Pidar named in the next line (Ribichini, Xella 1984), but the relationship between the two divinities is unknown.

⁷⁰ This is one of the most controversial passages of Ug. literature, in no small part because the motivation for ^cAnatu's slaughter is unclear owing to the state of the text. For a general discussion of ^cAnatu's character, including its violent side, see Walls 1992.

⁷¹ Below, iii 1-2, ²anhb[m], fills the same slot as gtp y[m] in CTA 19 iv 204, of which the meaning is equally uncertain (see note 130 to 1.103).

⁷² ^cAnatu's home is on Mount ²Inbubu (see above, note 9), and one would expect the gr here to refer to that mountain. The identification of the "lads" (gltm), however, is lost in the preceding lacuna: were they messengers or more militarily oriented? It is to be noted that ^cAnatu's adversaries in the following battle scenes are not termed gltm.

⁷³ Without an identification of Mount ²Inbubu, it is impossible to know to what cities reference is made here. The verbal forms in this verse are both infixed-t forms, without expressed objects; their function is plausibly a sort of middle: "she smites for her own benefit."

⁷⁴ The perspective is clearly that of the Levantine coast, with the totality of the region's inhabitants expressed by the merismus of "seashore" (bp ym) and "rising of the sun" (s^cat špš). Strong emphasis is placed on the human nature of her adversaries, who are described as "peoples, tribes, clans" (Pim, probably plural construct in form) and "humankind" (^c*adm*, either singular collective or plural construct).

⁷⁵ This verse contains three distinct images of destruction: (1) severed heads rolling like balls at the goddess' feet, (2) severed hands flying through the air like locusts, then (3) being gathered together in heaps like grasshoppers after a plague.

⁷⁶ Lit., "to her upper back (bmr) at her belt (hbš)"; the image is that of heads being strung together as a necklace and hung around the shoulders (see Pope 1977b:pl. IX, for a modern image of a goddess with heads around her neck and hands at her waist).

⁷⁷ The military terms in this passage (mhr, "fighter, serviceman," qmr, "soldier," lit., "guard"; šb^cu, "army," appears below, as does gzm, "warriors") overlap only partially with the military terminology used in the Kirta text (see notes 22 and 78 to text 1.102).

⁷⁸ Though an invitation is not mentioned, the preparations are appropriate for a feast. Apparently (unidentified) soldiers enter expecting a feast, only to be attacked.

to her neck in the gore of fighters.
Until she is satisfied, she smites (her adversaries)
in the house,
attacks (them) between the tables.

The Peaceful Aftermath (ii 30 - iii 3)

They wipe up the blood of the soldiers in the house,
they pour out oil of peace in a bowl.
Girl ^cAnatu bathes her hands,
the sister-in-law of Li²mu (bathes) her fingers.
She bathes her hands in the blood of the warriors,
her fingers in the gore of the fighters.
She prepares chairs (in addition) to chairs,
tables (in addition) to tables, footstools she prepares (in addition) to footstools.⁷⁹

She gathers water and washes,⁸⁰
dew of heavens, oil of earth,
the showers of Cloud-Rider.

The dew (that) the heavens pour down,
the showers (that) the stars pour down.

She beautifies herself with ²ANHBM, that range [a thousand furlongs] in the sea.
...⁸¹

Someone Sings (iii 4-8)⁸²

[She? will take lyre in hand], pull⁸³ the harp to (her?) breast:
A song for the love of Mighty Ba^clu (she? will sing),
the affection of Pidray, daughter of ²Aru,
the love of Tallay, daughter of Rabbu,
the ardor of ²Arşay, daughter of Ya^cibdaru.⁸⁴

x Cf. Ps 89:13

y Exod 15:17;
Ps 78:54

Ba^clu's Message to ^cAnatu (iii 8-31)

Then, lads, enter,
at ^cAnatu's feet bow and fall,
do homage, honor her.
Say to Girl ^cAnatu, repeat to the sister-in-law⁸⁵ of Li²mu.
Message of Mighty Ba^clu,
word of the mightiest of heroes:
Present bread offerings in the earth,
place love-offerings in the dust;
Pour well-being out into the earth,
calmness into the fields.
Hurry, press, hasten,
to me let your feet run,
to me let your legs hasten;
For I have something to tell you,
a matter to recount to you:
Words regarding wood, whisperings regarding
stone,
conversings of heaven with earth,
of the deep with the stars;
I understand lightning which not even the heavens
know,⁸⁶
a matter (which) men do not know,
(which) the hordes of the earth do not understand.
Come and I will explain it (for you) in my mountain, Divine Şapānu,^x
in the holy place, in the mountain that is my personal possession,^y in the goodly place, the hill of my victory.⁸⁷

⁸⁸

⁷⁹ The formulation ks²at l ks²at, etc., is clearly in contrast with the previous preparation of chairs, tables, and footstools (lines 20-22). There they were prepared for the soldiers; here no group is mentioned.

⁸⁰ The text here plays on two usages of rḥṣ corresponding to "bathe" and "wash": above she bathes her hands in the blood of the slain opponents, here she washes her hands in water to remove the blood of the previous bathing.

⁸¹ Some twenty lines have disappeared between the small fragment containing the beginning of col. iii and the main text. My line numbering of the rest of col. iii differs from that in CTA (it is identical to that in KTU) because Herdner, following the original editor, ascribed the number "1" to the first line on the principal fragment of the tablet rather than to the first line of the column. On the other hand, I follow Herdner (and Vroilleaud) in numbering the lines of cols. iii-iv continuously.

⁸² On the indications that the message contained in lines 8-31 constitute Ba^clu's entrusting of the message to his pages, see note 88. If that ascription be correct, lines 4-8, after which there is no obvious transition to lines 8-31, must constitute part of Ba^clu's speech to his messengers, plausibly, though not certainly, describing what ^cAnatu will be doing when they arrive.

⁸³ Collation of the tablet has confirmed the reading of {mšr} in the following line, and the word here translated as a verb, "pull," may also be spelled with {m} ({mšt}; see Pardee 1988a:150). The explanation of these forms is uncertain, though it may have something to do with the level of narrative embedding (see preceding note).

⁸⁴ There is general agreement that the first part of this name is related to Arabic w^cb, "to be ample," but some analyze the second element as "generation" (ḍr) others as "copious flow" (ḍrr). Either explanation is possible, though the latter appears more likely because more closely related to the other names having to do with various forms of precipitation (see above, note 69).

⁸⁵ The title is here spelled {ymmt}, apparently an error for ybm.

⁸⁶ This line is additional as compared with the first occurrence of these formulae (CTA 1 iii) in a message of ²Ilu addressed to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥašīsu, here appropriately in the mouth of Ba^clu the storm god. It appears probable that šmm here, ascribed powers of cognition, refers to the deity Šamūma, and not simply the sky. The Ug. pantheon texts contain a double-deity arṣ w šmm, "earth and heavens" (see Pardee [forthcoming] on RS 1.017:12). The claim is that, although the lightning and thunder appear in the heavens, their operation is the work of Ba^clu.

⁸⁷ "Victory" here is l²iyt, from the same root as Ba^clu's title a²iyn (see above, note 64).

⁸⁸ The function of the double horizontal line drawn across the width of the column here has been much debated (see Rummel 1978:185-189). A plausible explanation is that it has to do with the omission of some part of the repetition that takes place when a message is sent from one party to another (for the narrative description of sending a message, see Ginsberg 1941:12-14). Such an explanation might imply that the preceding section relates the sending of the messengers, rather than their arrival, and that the journey and arrival of the messengers has been omitted from the narration. That hypothesis faces two problems, however: (1) Ba^clu's speech to the messengers would include a description of ^cAnatu's behavior (above, lines 4-8), not a common feature of the messenger-sending formulae; (2) there is no specific reference in the text to the omission, a feature sometimes present (see particularly the case in CTA 4 v [note 166]). In spite of these difficulties, I have translated as though the narrative

^cAnatu's Response (iii 32 - iv 51)

When ^cAnatu sees the two deities,
 her feet shake,
 behind, her back muscles snap,
 above, her face sweats,
 her vertebrae rattle,
 her spine goes weak.⁸⁹
 She raises her voice and says aloud:
 How is it that Gupanu-wa-²Ugāru have come?⁹⁰
 What enemy has arisen against Ba^clu,
 (what) adversary against Cloud-Rider?
 I have smitten ²Ilu's beloved, Yammu, have finished off the great god Naharu.⁹¹
 I have bound the dragon's² jaws, have destroyed it,⁹²
 have smitten the twisting serpent,⁹³
 the close-coiled one with seven heads.
 I have smitten ²Ilu's beloved ²Arišu (Demander),⁹⁴
 have wreaked destruction on ²Ilu's calf ^cAtiku (Binder).
 I have smitten ²Ilu's bitch ²Išatu (Fire), have finished off ²Ilu's daughter Dabibu (Flame).
 I have smitten for silver, have (re)possessed the gold of him who would have driven Ba^clu from the heights of Šapānu,
 him who would have caused (him) to flee like a bird (from) (the seat of) his power,
 Him who would have banished him from his royal

2 Ps 74:13

aa Isa 27:1

throne,
 from (his) resting-place, from the seat of his dominion.

So, what enemy has arisen against Ba^clu,
 (what) adversary against Cloud-Rider?

The Envoys Deliver Their Message (iv 52-67)

The lads answer up:

No enemy has arisen against Ba^clu,
 (no) adversary against Cloud-Rider.
 (Rather we have a) message (from) Mighty Ba^clu,
 a word (from) the mightiest of warriors:⁹⁴

Present bread offerings in the earth,
 place love-offerings in the dust;
 Pour well-being out into the earth,
 calmness into the fields.

Hurry, press, hasten,
 to me let your feet run,
 to me let your legs hasten;

[For I have something] to tell you,
 a matter [to recount to you]:

[Words regarding] wood, whisperings regarding [stone,
 a matter (which)] men [do not] know,
 [(which) the hordes of the] earth [do not] understand.

[Conversings of heaven with] earth,
 of the deep [with the stars];

[I understand lightning] which not even the heavens
 [know].

[Come and] I will explain [it (for you)]

has jumped from Baal's speech containing the message to ^cAnatu's reaction when she sees the messengers, assuming the omission of the travel formulae (cf. de Moor 1971:4-5; 1987:8-10).

⁸⁹ These lines, which represent a formulaic and stylized reaction to unexpected visitors and bad news, are found in variant forms twice in the Ba^clu epic (here and p. 257 in CTA 4 ii 16-20) and once in the ²Aqhatu text (p. 352, CTA 19 ii 93-96 [text 1.103]). "Back muscles" is a somewhat free translation of ksl, which, with the adverbial phrase b^cdn, should mean, lit., "the sinews (of the back)"; ksl also appears in pnt kslh, "vertebrae," lit., "the points of the sinews (of the back)" (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:406).

⁹⁰ Baal's messenger, another double-deity, is here first identified by name, "Vineyard and Field," the latter term cognate to an Akk. word for field and apparently the root word behind the name of the city of Ugarit, plausibly a feminine form of the same root. As is the case with other double-deities, this one is sometimes referred to in the singular, sometimes in the dual.

⁹¹ Because the cycle as extant does not contain an account of ^cAnatu's defeat of Yammu/Naharu, these references and those that follow are enigmatic. One may surmise that ^cAnatu intervened after Ba^clu's battle with Yammu, and hence that this passage refers to a sequel to the narrative in CTA 2 iv, or that the mention of someone driving someone from a throne in CTA 1 iv (cf. note 32) was related to a defense by ^cAnatu of Ba^clu's rights (as described here below in her speech).

⁹² On the reading behind this translation, see Pardee 1984. The word here translated "dragon" is tnn (cf. Heb. tannin). The identification of the watery enemy with a reptilian one is well attested in Heb., but it is not so common in other sources (cf. Williams-Forte 1983). In Ug. sources, the tnn is once described as being "in the sea" (p. 273, CTA 6 vi 50), but the reptilian foes are not presented anywhere in this cycle as active allies of Yammu. I have, therefore, changed the poetic division (as compared with Pardee 1984:252-53) so as to place the tnn more closely in relation to the following reptilian terms. If tnn is not a sub-set of the watery deities, one wonders if it is possible to identify him with another known deity. Williams-Forte proposed Mōnu, the god of death, a conclusion disputed by Lambert 1985. Perhaps it is best to see the reptilian terms here (to which must be added ltn, from p. 265, CTA 5 i 1) as a set structurally independent of the Yammu/Naharu set and representing a separate but related mythology, of which no lengthy cycle of myths has come down to us. The ubiquity of the snake in iconography (discussed at length by Williams-Forte and Lambert, among many others), the scattered references in Ug. texts, and the importance of the snake in the biblical fall and exodus stories may serve as bases for seeing the reptilian set of enemies as important in its own right and in some sense independent of, even though related to, the watery set.

⁹³ As in the case of Yammu, the following two sets of enemies are described in terms attaching them closely to ²Ilu: two familial terms, mdl ("beloved") and bt ("daughter"), and two animal terms, gl ("calf") and klt ("bitch"), these two sets arranged chiasmatically. The identities of the individuals and the import of their names are unknown. ²ars, apparently the "Demander," is found again in this cycle, associated with the dragon mn (CTA 6 vi 50), and gl²il is attested in one of the "para-mythological" texts, but in a broken passage (cf. Pardee 1988a:106-110). Because these beings are described as offspring of ²Ilu, ^cAnatu's (and Ba^clu's) hostility to them may plausibly be explained by assuming that they have ²Aṭiranu for their mother. Indeed, in this cycle ²Aṭiranu's sons regularly occupy the camp opposed to Ba^clu/^cAnatu (see below, note 190).

⁹⁴ Note the many variants, especially reshuffling of formulae, in this recital of the message as compared with the form entrusted to the messengers in col. iii.

in] my mountain, Divine Šapānu,
in the holy [place, in the mountain that is my personal] possession.

°Anatu Agrees to Ba°lu's Request (iv 68-83)

Girl °Anatu replies,
yet again [the sister-in-law of] Li°mu:
I will indeed present bread offerings [in the earth],
place love-offerings in the dust;
I will pour [well-being] out into the earth,
calmness into the fields.

May Ba°lu place his watering devices in [the heavens],

may [Haddu] bring the [rain of] his X.⁹⁵

(Then) I, for my part, will surely present bread offerings in the earth,
place love-offerings [in] the dust;
I will pour well-being out into the earth,
calmness into the fields.

Moreover, I say this:

Come, come, attendants of the gods,
you, you may tarry, but I'm off
(From) °Ugaru for the most distant of gods,
(from) °Inbubu for the most distant of deities:
By double stretches below the springs of the earth,
triple lengths (in) the low places.

°Anatu Visits Ba°lu (iv 84-?)

So off she heads,
toward Ba°lu in the heights of Šapānu.
(From) a thousand yards off,

ten thousand furlongs,
Ba°lu sees his sister coming,
his father's daughter⁹⁶ striding along.
He shoos the (other) women away, places beef in front of her,
a fatling before her.
She gathers water and washes,
dew of heavens, oil of earth.
The dew (that) the heavens pour down,
the showers (that) the stars pour down.
She beautifies herself with °ANHBM,
that [range a thousand furlongs in the sea.]

...⁹⁷

Ba°lu's Claim to a Palace (iv 94-99)

[For Ba°lu has no house as (do) the (other) gods,
(no) court] as (do) the sons of [°Aṭiratu,
(No) dwelling (as does) °Ilu, (no) shelter (as do)]
his sons,
(no) dwelling (as does) [the Great Lady, °Aṭiratu of the Sea⁹⁸],
(No) dwelling (as does) Pidray, [daughter of °Aru,
(no) shelter] (as does) Ṭallay, daughter of Rabbu,
[(no) dwelling (as does) °Aršay], daughter of Ya°ibdaru,
[(no) dwelling (as do)] the honored [brides].⁹⁹

°Anatu's Reply (iv 99 - v 4)¹⁰⁰

[Girl °Anatu] replies:
The Bull, [my father] °Ilu, will come around to ⁹⁵ Collation has provided the following plausible readings for this verse: {yšt [b š] [mm.] b°l . mdlh . yb°r (line 74) [hd . mš] [r] [-] [mh]}. It is often assumed that mdlh means "his lightning," in no small part because of the parallelism with the last word, which is usually restored as {[q]lmh} and interpreted as meaning "lightning-flash." But there is no etymological basis for the interpretation of mdl as lightning (Pardee 1980:278) and no comparative basis for that of qrm as "lightning-flash." The traces of a sign with two horizontal wedges in the fifth slot in line 74 appears to rule out the usual restoration of °il hd, "the god Haddu" (a formula unattested in this cycle) and prompts the restoration there of mūr, "rain," a word elsewhere attested in parallel with mdl (in Pardee 1980:278, before collating the tablet, I proposed reading {[m]lmh} in place of {[q]lmh}). In such a context, mdl is plausibly explained as from the root dly, "draw water" and, therefore, as a different word from mdl denoting an element in the harnessing apparatus of an equid. On the various suggestions for interpreting mdl, see the bibliography in Pardee 1987:417.

⁹⁶ The meaning of ybn °abh is unclear (cf. Pardee 1980:279). Among proposed emendations are: (1) ybm °abh, "his father's sister-in-law" (i.e., his father's brother's wife); (2) bt °abh, "his father's daughter" (implying perhaps that they had a common father, but not a common mother); (3) ybm °ahh, "his brother's sister-in-law."

⁹⁷ Here approximately 15 lines are lost between the principal fragment of col. iv and the remnants of eight or nine lines preserved on the small fragment (see above, notes 66 and 81).

⁹⁸ The explanation of °Aṭiratu's titles rbt °aṭrt ym has much exercised the minds of Ug. exegetes. Many have taken the name as derived from the title, i.e., "the great lady who treads upon the sea" (partial bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:440-441). None of the evidence for vocalization of the name °Aṭiratu, however, favors the idea that the first vowel was ever long, as would be required of an active participial form. It appears more likely (1) that rbt is a title designating the goddess as queen (i.e., principal wife of °Ilu) or queen mother (cf. Brooke 1979:86), (2) that °Aṭiratu is the basic name of the goddess (this is the only form of the name that appears in the ritual texts), and (3) that ym is added as a supplemental titular element. Some of the factors to be considered in explaining the element ym are: (1) one passage seems to depict °Aṭiratu's sons as waves of the sea (CTA 6 v 1-3); (2) the deity Qudšu(-wa)-°Amruru is called "the fisherman of °Aṭiratu" (dgy °aṭrt) and this deity possesses a net that he apparently throws into the sea (CTA 4 ii 31-35); (3) the title must be taken into consideration in explaining °Ilu's initial preference for Yammu (cf. above, note 32). But the mythological background of the title remains obscure.

⁹⁹ We are never told exactly why Ba°lu's daughters have a house while he does not. The general structure of this passage (restored from similar passages below in v 38-44 and in CTA 4 i 10-19 and iv 50-57) and the specific presence of the term kl, which denotes in the narrow sense a father's son's bride, may indicate that Ba°lu's daughters have married sons of °Ilu by °Aṭiratu and have become part of the sons' households. This hypothesis is supported by the placement of the reference to the "honored brides" at the head of the list of daughters in CTA 4 i 15-19; iv 54-57, rather than at the end as here. The adjective knr by which the kl are described, appears to be related to Akk. kunnū, an epithet of deities, and kanūtu, an adjective used only for goddesses.

¹⁰⁰ Also in col. v (on col. iv, see above, note 81), my line numbering differs from that in CTA (and corresponds to that of KTU), for the same reason, i.e., Herdner, following Virolleaud, numbered the lines continuously beginning with the small fragment of col. iv through col. v. Thus, because the small fragment of col. iv contains eight lines, line 1 in col. v is numbered as the ninth line in CTA. (According to Herdner, the small fragment actually contains nine lines, but she did not include the first in her consecutive numbering, designating it as "1*"; when I collated the tablet, I did not find this line "1*").

me,
he'll come around to me and to him [...].
...¹⁰¹
[I'll] trample him to the ground like a lamb,
[I'll cause] his gray hair [to flow] with blood,^{bb} the gray hairs of his beard [with gore],^{cc}
That is if he does not give a house to Ba'lu like (that of) the (other) gods,
[a court] like (that of) the sons of ʔAṭiratu.
ʕAnatu Is Off to Visit ʔIlu (v 4-9)
[She digs in] (her) feet,
[takes off across] the earth;
She [heads] off
[towards ʔIlu] at the source of the [double] river, midst the [upspringings] of the [deeps].
She penetrates Ilu's abode, enters the dwelling of the King, father of [Šuna-
ma],
She bends over¹⁰² and enters the abode, addresses the lord of the gods.¹⁰³
ʔIlu Responds (v 10-18)¹⁰⁴
The Bull, her father ʔIlu, hears her voice,
[responds] (from) within seven rooms,
[(from) within] eight locked [chambers]:¹⁰⁵
You [must cry] aloud to ʔIlu [your lord]
...¹⁰⁶
Šapšu, luminary of the gods, [glows hot],

bb 1 Kgs 2:9

cc Cf. 2 Sam
20:10

the heavens are powerless under the control of [Môtu, the beloved of ʔIlu].¹⁰⁷

ʕAnatu Gets Tough (v 19-25)

Girl ʕAnatu replies:

[In the grandeur of] your house, O ʔIlu,
in the grandeur of [your] house do not rejoice,
do not rejoice in the height of [your] palace.¹⁰⁸
Will I not seize them in my right hand,
squeeze [them]¹⁰⁹ in my broad grasp?¹¹⁰
I'll [smite the ...] of your head,
I'll make your gray hair flow [with blood],
the gray hairs of your beard with gore.

ʔIlu Reacts Placatingly (v 25-29)

ʔIlu responds (from) within seven rooms,
(from) within eight locked chambers:

[I] know [you], (my) daughter, (I know) that [you] are a manly sort,
and that among goddesses there is none so emotional as you.¹¹¹

What do you request, Girl ʕAnatu?

ʕAnatu Tries Flattery (v 29-34)

Girl ʕAnatu replies:

Your decision(s), ʔIlu, (are) wise,
your wisdom is forever,
your decision(s) (provide) a life of good fortune.
(Now,) our king is Mighty Ba'lu,

¹⁰¹ Several signs have disappeared from the end of the last line of col. iv and about four signs from the beginning of the first line of col. v, enough to make up a full line of text. Because of lack of parallels, it is impossible to determine whether the missing line continued the preceding verse or served as the first utterance in the following threats.

¹⁰² The third sign from the end of line 8 appears to be {t}, rather than {m}, as in previous versions; thus {t}ʔʔr, "she bends over" (cf. the hollow root ʔr in Arabic). On the words typically used to designate ʔIlu's home, see above, note 29.

¹⁰³ Reading in line 9: {t}nʔyʔ [.] ʔaʔdn [.] ʔʔʔmʔ.

¹⁰⁴ The damaged state of lines 13-16 leaves open the possibility that this section is not all one long speech from ʔIlu.

¹⁰⁵ ʔIlu, apparently afraid of ʕAnatu's irascibility, declines to come out to speak with her.

¹⁰⁶ Only a few words are preserved in lines 13-16. It is at least possible that Šapšu, the sun deity, appears or is mentioned, for the adverb ʕIn, "on high," is present at the beginning of line 13 and this word is used elsewhere to describe Šapšu's position. See next note.

¹⁰⁷ This is the first occurrence of these formulae, repeated below (CTA 6 ii 24-25) to describe the ascendancy of Môtu during Ba'lu's demise. The principal terms in the formulae are šhrr, describing the blasting effect of the Šapšu, the sun (cf. Arabic šhr, used to express sunstroke; below in text 1.87 the same verb is used for roasting a bird over a fire), and ʔa, "to be weak," describing the inability of the heavens to produce precipitation (the form is apparently the infinitive, used absolutely, /laʔaʔ/). The state of the text precludes our knowing why reference is made at this point to Môtu's malefic action, but it is plausible that the formula is generally descriptive of Môtu, as here below in CTA 4 viii 21-24. Depending on whether or not Šapšu was mentioned in the previous passage (see preceding note), the reference here may have applied more or less directly to the sun deity's immediate presence. Below, CTA 6 v 4 and n. 268, an entity presented as šhr nt, "Môtu's heat" is attacked right alongside the sons of ʔAṭiratu, enemies of Ba'lu. For a recent naturalistic interpretation of this motif, see Yon 1989. Môtu, "Death," is known both as the "beloved" (mdd/ydd) of ʔIlu and as his "son," the last feature attested also by Philo of Byblos (Attridge and Oden 1981:57).

¹⁰⁸ Three principal lines of interpretation have been proposed for this passage and the parallel in the ʔAqhatu text (CTA 18 i 6-10 [text 1.103]): (1) ʔIlu is not to rejoice in the building (bnt < bny) of his house or (2) in the height (bnt < nty/w) of his house; (3) ʔIlu's sons (read bnt as bnm) are not to rejoice (cf. Dijkstra and de Moor 1975:192-93; Margalit 1983:91-92). The first interpretation does not fit this context, the second is based on a rather shaky Arabic etymology (ntw, "to swell up [said of a limb of the body]"), while the third is based on emendation of an already damaged and uncertain text. More plausible variants of the third would be to restore bnt // bnt, "sons" // "daughters" (the first word is entirely absent in both passages) or bnt // bnt; "daughters" // "daughters." The last possibility is particularly appealing because it would constitute an example of the so-called "staircase" tricolon (Greenstein 1977): "May the daughters of your house, O ʔIlu, /May the daughters of your house not rejoice, /May they not rejoice in the height of your palace." In this analysis, the masculine plural pronoun in the following verse ("seize them") would refer back to these references to the dwelling (bnt, plural in form, "your house, mansion," and hkl, "palace"). Psychologically, however, it appears preferable to see here a direct threat to ʔIlu himself and I tentatively adopt Margalit's proposal, though remaining dubious about the etymology.

¹⁰⁹ Traces of {šš} are visible near the end of line 22, suggesting the restoration {ʔaʔʔššʔ[ghm]}, "I will squeeze them."

¹¹⁰ Lit., "in the greatness of my length," apparently a reference to the length of the goddess' arms (cf. gdl + "arm" in Exod 15:16).

¹¹¹ Multiple interpretations of ʔnš//qlš in this verse have been proposed, for it is difficult to establish the meaning of the terms by Ug. usage and various etymological explanations are possible (for bibliography see Pardee 1987:373, 445). The translation offered here assumes (1) that ʔIlu is not speaking ironically (hence ʔnš does not mean "gentle"), (2) that "sick" (another possible meaning of ʔnš) is not used idiomatically in Ug. for immorality (viz. ʕAnatu's violent behavior), and (3) that the /š/ in qlš is genuine and hence that the root is not identical to Heb. qls

(he is) our ruler and there is none above him.^{dd}
All of us (other gods) bear his vessel,
all of us bear his cup.¹¹²

Again, Ba^clu's Claim to a Palace (v 35-44)
(But) groaning he does cry out to¹¹³ the Bull, his father ²Ilu,
to the king who established him,^{114 ee}
He cries out to ²Aṭiratu and to her sons,
to the goddess and the host of her kin:
Ba^clu has no house as (do) the (other) gods,
(no) court as (do) the sons of ²Aṭiratu,
(No) dwelling (as does) ²Ilu, (no) shelter (as do)
[his sons],
(no) dwelling (as does) the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu
of the Sea,
(No) dwelling (as does) Pidray, daughter of ²Aru, [(no) shelter] (as does) Ṭallay, [daughter of] Rabbu,
(no) dwelling [(as does) ²Arṣay, daughter of Ya^cibdaru],
(no) dwelling [(as do) the honored brides].
...¹¹⁵

The Summons to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu (vi)¹¹⁶
Cross the mountain, cross the height, cross the shores of heavenly Nupu.¹¹⁷
Have (your nets) drawn in,¹¹⁸ O fisherman of ²Aṭiratu, come, O Qudšu-²Amruru.

dd Isa 33:22;
Ps 95:3

ee Deut 32:6

You must head off
to Memphis, (to) the god of it all,
(To) Crete (which is) the throne (on which) he sits,
(to) Memphis (which is) the land of his own possession,
Through a thousand yards,
ten thousand furlongs.
At the feet of Kōtaru bow and fall,
do homage and honor him.
Say to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu,
repeat to Hayyinu the handicrafter:
Message of Mighty [Ba^clu],
word [of the mightiest of warriors:]
...¹¹⁹

CTA 4¹²⁰

...
Yet Again, Ba^clu's Claim to a Palace (i 4-19)
[(But) groaning he does cry] out to the Bull, [his
father ²Ilu],
to ²Ilu, the king [who established him],
[He cries] out to ²Aṭiratu [and to her sons],
to the goddess [and the host of] her [kin]:
[Ba^clu has no house as (do) the (other) gods,
(no) court as (do) the sons of] ²Aṭiratu,
(No) dwelling (as does) ²Ilu, (no) shelter (as do)
his sons,
(no) dwelling (as does) the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu
of the Sea.

"scorn" but cognate to Arabic qlṣ, "shrivel," and is used to express emotional turmoil. According to this interpretation, the verse describes two characteristics of ^cAnatu: (1) that she fights like a man (cf. col. ii), (2) that she gives free vent to her emotions.

¹¹² The phrase "all of us" is in Ug. klnyy, which may be analyzed either as kl + n + y + y, where the -n- is the first person plural suffix and the twice-repeated -y is a so-called "emphatic" particle, or kl + ny + y, where -ny is analyzed as the 1st person dual suffix ("both of us") and the second -y the "emphatic" particle. In the parallel passage, CTA 4 iv 45, 46 (p. 259), where ²Aṭiratu is the speaker, the form is klnyy, with the particle -n at the end instead of -y. The two analyses represent forms that are well attested elsewhere in Ug. According to the first analysis, ^cAnatu (and ²Aṭiratu) would be saying that all the gods serve Ba^clu as cupbearers; in the second that she and ²Ilu should be doing so, i.e., that ²Ilu should join the procession. One might doubt that ²Ilu, who occupies a higher position in the divine hierarchy than Ba^clu (see below, note 114), would join the other gods in servitude to Ba^clu. Because these formulae originate with ^cAnatu, even if they are repeated below by ²Aṭiratu, one may doubt to what extent they constitute a true "shift" of allegiance from Yammu to Ba^clu (cf. Smith 1994:102 on tpf); they seem rather to reflect ^cAnatu's position in the conflict (see below, note 190), adopted only half-heartedly by ²Aṭiratu (see notes 190 and 244).

¹¹³ The expression is taken to be ṣḥ + accusative (l yṣḥ tr ṣil ṣabh). Because the verb ṣḥ is sometimes followed by a l-complement, some interpret the formula here and in the parallel passages below with ²Ilu, etc., as subject. Such an interpretation requires reinterpreting the sequence of speakers and requests — i.e., ²Ilu, ²Aṭiratu, and her sons would all be already in favor of Ba^clu receiving a palace. A factor in favor of the interpretation adopted here is the following phrase, yṣḥ ṣḥtr w bnh: by comparison with CTA 6 i 39-40 (p. 269) ṣḥmḥ ḥt ṣḥtr w bnh, one would expect ṣḥ in this text and it appears likely, therefore, that the subject of the verb yṣḥ is b^cl. Unfortunately, the morphological criterion is not absolutely decisive, because yṣḥ could theoretically be 3m.pl. because of the compound subject of which one element is masculine plural.

¹¹⁴ The relationship between ²Ilu and Ba^clu is well expressed in this verse and in this entire passage: ²Ilu is chief executive king, Ba^clu was appointed king over the earth by ²Ilu. But even to acquire so apparently obvious a perquisite as a palace, Ba^clu must have ²Ilu's approval.

¹¹⁵ Over twenty lines of text have disappeared at the bottom of col. v, of which just the ends of a few lines are visible on the small fragment (numbered as v 44-51, in KTU). The first ten lines of col. vi have also been entirely lost and the slanting break has taken the beginnings of seven more lines.

¹¹⁶ ^cAnatu's pleading has been successful, for ²Aṭiratu's personal attendants, Qudšu(-wa)-²Amruru (written without the w here but with it elsewhere), are sent as messengers to the craftsman deity Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu, and the message is indicated as originating with Ba^clu.

¹¹⁷ Some have seen in np ṣmm "the heights of the heavens" (≈ Heb. nōp in Ps 48:3), others another name for Memphis (Heb. nōp and mōp). The presence of the word "shores" (²ihṣ) and the fact that Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu has an alternate dwelling in Egypt seem to favor the second interpretation (unless ²ihṣ be given the specific sense of "islands," in which case the phrase ṣihṣ np ṣmm could refer to the mountainous islands of the Mediterranean).

¹¹⁸ Various explanations of the form ṣmṣr have been given, but as it appears to be the ṣ-stem from the root mṣr which, by comparative considerations, should mean "to draw, drag," a plausible interpretation would be to see the fisherman having his nets drawn in because he must leave on a trip.

¹¹⁹ Approximately twenty lines have disappeared from the end of col. vi.

¹²⁰ Though made up of several fragments, this tablet as reconstituted contains the longest text of this cycle, inscribed in eight columns of sixty-five or more lines each, and it is the best-preserved of the tablets, cols. iv-v being almost completely extant for a continuous stretch of text of over 125 lines. The beginning and end of the text are lost, and we cannot know, therefore, whether this tablet bore the archival notation l b^cl

(No) dwelling (as do) the honored brides: (no) dwelling (as does) Pidray, daughter of ² Aru, (no) shelter (as does) Tallyay, daughter of Rabbu, (no) dwelling (as does) ² Arşay, daughter of Ya ^c - ibdaru.	ff Gen 4:1	He casts HYM and TBTH: ¹²⁴ A (throne-)stand for ² Ilu ¹²⁵ of twenty thousand (shekels' weight), a (throne-)stand for ² Ilu with silver decorations, interspersed with ¹²⁶ (decorations of) ruddy gold; A chair for ² Ilu, a seat of finest (gold), a footstool for ² Ilu (!) ¹²⁷ covered with the brightest (metal); A bed for ² Ilu of the finest sort, above, he places an engraving; ¹²⁸ A table for ² Ilu filled with creatures, creepy-crawlers ¹²⁹ from the foundations of the earth; ¹³⁰ A bowl for ² Ilu, hammered thin as (they do in) ² Amurru, formed as (they do in) the land of YM ² AN, which has on it bulls by the ten thousands. ¹³¹
---	------------	--

Gifts Suggested and Prepared (i 20-44)¹²¹

I must also say this to you:

You really should prepare a gift for the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea,
a present for the Progenitress^{ff} of the Gods.¹²²

Hayyinu steps up to the bellows,
in the hands of Ḥasīsu are the tongs.

He casts silver, causes gold to flow,¹²³
he casts silver by the thousands (of shekels), he casts gold by the ten thousands (of shekels).

at the beginning. The partially preserved colophon on the left edge of the tablet, apparently in a very brief form, may be taken as an indication that there was not a colophon at the end of the text. Approximately twenty lines are missing from the beginning of col. i; the several badly damaged lines after this lacuna may be restored quite plausibly on the basis of parallel texts. As in the case of CTA 3 (see above, note 66), the first and last columns of this text are narrower than the intervening columns. Vroilleaud did the editio princeps of this text in a single article (1932).

¹²¹ In spite of the fact that ²Ilu has agreed to have Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu summoned, it would appear that ²Aṭiratu and ²Ilu must still be placated (baksheesh) to give their final permission for the palace to be built and for Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu to be signed on as contractor. The depth of ²Aṭiratu's real hostility to Ba^clu and ^cAnatu's recognition of that hostility are both evident in the form of ^cAnatu's announcement of Ba^clu's death to ²Ilu: "So now let ²Aṭiratu and her sons rejoice, (let) the goddess (rejoice) and the host of her kin; for Mighty Ba^clu is dead, perished the Prince, master of the earth" (CTA 6 i 39-43). The reasons for this hostility appear to reside in power struggles within ²Ilu's family (see nn. 32, 163, 190).

¹²² ²Aṭiratu's title as mother goddess is qnyl ʾilm, "she who produces gods," parallel to ²Ilu's title as father god, bnw bwt, "he who builds offspring" (cf. bn, "son").

¹²³ The verb yšq is used in Ug. and Heb. for working with metals, apparently for the artisan's casting work (< "to pour") rather than for the refiner's job. It belongs to the same semantic field as nsk, the standard word for "metal-worker," also related to a root meaning basically "to pour." The verb here translated "cause to flow" is šlh, lit., "to send"; it is not a standard term of metal working and hence has received various interpretations, among them "to beat flat," i.e. "extend."

¹²⁴ This line functions either as introduction to the list that follows or as the first items on the list. Unfortunately both terms are obscure. They are most commonly identified as meaning "tent" (= hmr in CTA 14 ii 65 and parallels [text 1.102]) and "resting place, bed" (= Akk. tapšāhu/tapšūtu; cf., e.g., Dietrich and Loretz 1978b:59-60). The image, however, of "casting" a tent appears strange and the Ug. word tblh, though it could be cognate to the Akk. term, cannot be a loan word (Akk. /b/ would be written {ḡ}) and, in any case, the production of a bed is part of the list below. The other principal explanation is to take both terms as denoting metals and hence as belonging to the previous verse. For lack of other attestations in Ug. and reliable points of comparison, it appears best for the present to leave the words untranslated.

¹²⁵ This and the following occurrences of ʾil are often taken as superlatives (kr ʾil = "a divine stand," etc.). But given that ²Aṭiratu is ²Ilu's consort and that it is ²Ilu who finally grants the sought-for permission, it appears more likely that the items in question are in fact intended in the end for ²Aṭiratu's lord and master. The syntax is precisely the same as above in the statement regarding gifts for ²Aṭiratu, i.e., the construct chain (škn mgn ʾatrt, "prepare the gift of ²Aṭiratu" = "prepare a gift for" = yšq kr ʾil, "cast the stand of ²Ilu" = "cast a stand for"). This section may be taken, therefore, as prefiguring the section below where gifts are promised for ²Ilu (iii 27-36).

¹²⁶ šmrgt appears to be a nominal or adjectival form based on the š-stem of mrg. In Arabic that root can express notions of "mixing." One may surmise that the idea here is that the decorations (nbt, of which the precise meaning is uncertain) of the throne stand were in patterns produced by alternations of gold and silver.

¹²⁷ Written {ʾid}.

¹²⁸ ʾin yblhm ḥrṣ is, in this list of difficult phrases, one of the most difficult. I have chosen, because of the general context, to interpret the verse as a whole to refer to an article of furniture (nʿl = "bed"), rather than to an item of clothing (cf. Heb. naʿalayim, "sandals"). This appears to be supported by the singular form at the end of the first line, qblbl, itself of uncertain meaning, perhaps lit., "very acceptable." yblhm, on the other hand, might be taken as bearing a dual/plural suffix — though no one has found a good explanation of the term as related to sandals. The key to the understanding of the verse may be to see in ḥrṣ not the standard word for "gold," but a form of ḥrṣ II, "cut, engrave," attested in the other West Semitic languages and in Akk. The reference would be, of course, to pictorial representations such as the ivory carvings from bed panels discovered in the palace at Ugarit, which were double-sided and hence intended for viewing from both sides and placed above (ʿln, "above") the bed itself (Schaeffer 1954:51-59, pls. IX-X; Caubet and Poplin 1987:283-289, figs. 16, 17; Gachet 1992:72). yblhm is perhaps to be analyzed, therefore, as a verbal noun of ybl, with pronominal suffix indicating the subject, either singular with enclitic -m (iyabāluhuma) or dual, reflecting the two names Hayyinu and Ḥasīsu (iyabāluhumā).

¹²⁹ The word dbbm is attested in incantation texts with the sense of those who constitute the adversaries of the person for whom the incantation is devised (see note 6 to text 1.100). In those texts it can be explained as cognate to Akk. dabābu, basically "to speak" but with the derived notion of attacking verbally. In this context, the word is more plausibly compared with Arabic dbb, "walk slowly" (of certain animals), "to slither" (of reptiles) (Caquot, Szymer and Herdner 1974:196, note q). I posit two separate words in Ug., with very different etymologies, though it is not impossible that the word in the incantation texts is etymologically identical to this one.

¹³⁰ The carved ivories discovered in the palace at Ras Shamra included elements of a table top, where sphinxes, among other things, were represented (Schaeffer 1954:59-61; Caubet and Poplin 1987:283-289, fig. 20; Gachet 1992:72-73). "Filled" (mlʾa) in this description may refer to the fact that the representational friezes were set inside a plain raised border.

¹³¹ The interpretation of sknt, here translated "formed," is much debated. Because the gender of šʿ, "bowl," in Ug. is unknown, the words dqt

... 132

²*Atiratu at Home* (ii 3-?)

She has taken her spindle [in hand], a spindle befitting her high station in her right hand.

As her flesh has become soiled,
she puts her garments into the sea,
her twice-soiled (body) into the rivers.¹³³

She places a pot on the fire,
a pan on top of the coals,
So as to prepare a (warm) drink for the Bull, the kindly god,¹³⁴
so as to make a present¹³⁵ to the Creator of creatures.¹³⁶

Ba^clu and ^cAnatu Arrive with ²Atiratu's Gifts (ii 12-29)

When she looks up and sees Ba^clu coming, when ²Atiratu (!)¹³⁷ sees Girl ^cAnatu arriving,
the sister-in-law of [Li²mu] striding along,
Her feet [shake],
behind, her back muscles [snap,
above], her face sweats,

her [vertebrae] rattle,
[her] spine goes weak.

She raises her voice and says aloud:

How is it that Mighty Ba^clu has come?

How is it that Girl ^cAnatu has come?

Have those who would smite me smitten my sons, or (have) [those who would finish me off]
(smitten) the host of my kin?

(But) when ²Atiratu spies the [works] of silver, the works of silver and [the objects] of gold,¹³⁸ they bring joy to the Great Lady, ²Atiratu of the Sea.

²*Atiratu Enjoins her Attendant to Complete an Unknown Task* (ii 29-?)

Aloud [she cries] to her lad:

Look at the skillfully wrought thing(s) and [behold!]

O fisherman of the Great Lady, ²Atiratu [of the Sea],

take the net in your hand,
the great [X] upon your two hands.

[...] in Yammu, the beloved of ²Ilu,

... 139

("hammered thin" in my translation) and sknt may be either adjectives (if sc is feminine) or nouns used adverbially (if sc is masculine). The discoveries at Ras Shamra have provided two magnificent examples of such bowls, both with charging bulls as part of the representations (Schaeffer 1949:1-48, pls. I-V, VII-VIII). One might expect that, if indeed the basic notion of dqr here is "thinness," sknt denotes the other principal technique, that of producing the figures in repoussé. Data are lacking to explain why the skill to make metal bowls with representations in relief is attributed to the polities of ²Amurru and YM²AN (the first is well known; the second appears for reasons as yet unknown in the Ug. ritual text RS 1.002:27' — see Pardee forthcoming).

¹³² About fifteen lines are missing from the beginning of col. ii and the first two extant lines are badly damaged. At the end of col. i a double line was drawn about a third of the way across the column width. As such lines are usually not used simply to mark the end of a column, one may surmise that this one again marks an omission of repetitive material (see above, note 88). Because, in the following text, ^cAnatu and Ba^clu arrive together at ²Atiratu's house, they may arrive and have joined forces at some point for this visit to ²Atiratu. Though Kôtaru-wa-Hasisu made the gift for ²Atiratu (and for ²Ilu — see note 125), he is apparently not here in the company of ^cAnatu and Ba^clu, for he is never mentioned and he must apparently be resummoned when the final permission is given to build the palace (p. 260, v 103).

¹³³ Because of the rare vocabulary in this verse, it has been interpreted in a multitude of ways. It appears difficult to explain npynh otherwise than as a derivative from npy, "sieve, winnow, expel," attested with various nuances from Akk. to Arabic (but not elsewhere in Ug., certainly not in RS 1.002 [n. 131]!). Particularly in Arabic, one finds derivatives denoting that which is sieved/winnowed out, i.e., "rubbish." Perhaps the noun here refers to the dusty state of someone who has been working with the spindle all day, lit., "her rubbish covering her flesh, she puts her garments into the sea, her double rubbish into the rivers."

¹³⁴ lr² il d p²id is the title that ²Atiratu uses for ²Ilu (as opposed to lr² il² ab — cf. notes 13 and 28) because their relationship is not that of father and daughter.

¹³⁵ Here also the precise sense of the verse is uncertain because of the rarity of the two verbs, scpp and tgyy. Most take the second verb as related to the noun mgz, "present," in i 23 (p. 256), of which the meaning is determined largely by the parallel with mgn, "gift"; this root is used again as a verb below, iii 24 and 31 (p. 258), in parallel with a verbal form of mgn. Because ²Atiratu has just put a pot on the fire, one may think that she was preparing something comestible for ²Ilu; hence I explain scpp by the Arabic geminate root, which in the D-stem means "feed someone the type of milk called uffatun." The picture is that of ²Atiratu expecting a visit from ²Ilu, whose domicile, as is clear from the continuation of the story, is at a distance from ²Atiratu's; after spinning, she cleanses herself, then prepares something warm to eat/drink. I have considered the option of seeing the entire passage as describing the preparation of cloth (spinning, immersing [the thread or the cloth?] in cold salt water, immersing in hot water, presenting as a gift to ²Ilu), but the few relatively clear terms do not seem to lead in that direction.

¹³⁶ On the title bny bnwt ascribed to ²Ilu, see above, note 122.

¹³⁷ Written {atrt}.

¹³⁸ The words used to describe the gifts are uncertain: the term for the objects of gold has almost entirely disappeared, while the one for the objects made of silver is apparently written {zl}, which normally denotes "shadow, shade," and for that reason is often read instead as {p^cl}, "work" (the difference between the two readings is primarily a matter of spacing of sign elements — the {c} in this text is made somewhat differently from the third wedge of {z}, however, and one should be able to determine at least what the scribe intended; unfortunately none of the published photographs is readable at this point). The general meaning of the verse appears clear, however: ²Atiratu, at first frightened at the appearance of Ba^clu and ^cAnatu and expecting them to bring bad news about her sons (or expecting them to attack her sons), is reassured at the sight of the gifts they are bearing.

¹³⁹ Remnants of fourteen more lines are preserved, insufficient to allow an understanding of what is going on. This is unfortunate, for the presence of the various terms for fishing in the sea indicates that a fully preserved text might have helped us understand better ²Atiratu's title "of the Sea" and her relationship to the deity Yammu. For example, the phrase b mdd² il y[m] in line 34, after the order for the fisherman to take up his net, could indicate that a very naturalistic depiction of the deity Yammu is underway.

Ba^clu Complains of His Treatment By the Other Gods (iii 10-22)¹⁴⁰

Again Mighty Ba^clu (speaks),

Cloud-Rider tells his story:

[...] they stood up and cast scorn upon me,¹⁴¹
they arose and spat upon me in the assembly of the sons of the gods;⁸⁸

[X] was set upon my table, mockery in the cup from which I drink.

Now there are two (kinds of) feasts¹⁴² (that) Ba^clu hates,

three (that) Cloud-Rider (hates):

An improper feast,

a low-quality feast,¹⁴³

and a feast where the female servants
misbehave.¹⁴⁴

There, impropriety was certainly seen, there, misbehavior of the female servants (was certainly seen).

Ba^clu and ^cAnatu Arrive chez ²Aṭiratu, Present their Gifts, and Feast (iii 23-?)

Thereupon Mighty Ba^clu arrives,

Girl ^cAnatu arrives.¹⁴⁵

They offer the gifts⁸⁸ to the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu
of the Sea,

the presents to the Progenitress of the Gods.

The Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea, responds:

How is it that you offer gifts to the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea,

presents to the Progenitress of the Gods?

Have you offered gifts to the Bull, the kindly god, gg Pss 29:1

82:1; Job
1:6; 2:1; 38:7

hh Gen 14:20;
Hos 11:8;
Prov 4:9

ii Gen 49:11;
Deut 32:14

presents to the Creator of creatures?

Girl ^cAnatu replies:

We would (now) offer gifts to the Great Lady,

²Aṭiratu of the Sea,

presents to the Progenitress of the Gods.

[Afterwards] we will also present him with gifts.

[...] Mighty Ba^clu

[...] the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea,

[...] Girl ^cAnatu.

[Thereupon the gods] eat and drink,

[they take] sucklings,¹⁴⁶

[with] a salted [knife] cutlets from [a fatling].

[They drink] wine from goblets

[red] wine¹⁴⁷ [from golden cups].

...

²Aṭiratu Prepares to Visit ²Ilu (iv 1-19)

[The Great Lady], ²Aṭiratu of [the Sea, responds:

Listen, O Qudšu-wa-²Amruru,

[O fisherman of the Great Lady], ²Aṭiratu of the Sea:

[Saddle the donkey], harness the ass,

[put (on it) trappings of] silver,

[decorations] of yellow (gold),

prepare the trappings of [my] jennet.¹⁴⁸

Qudšu-wa-²Amruru listens:

He saddles the donkey, harnesses the ass, puts (on it) trappings of silver,

decorations of yellow (gold),

prepares the trappings of her jennet.

Qudšu-wa-²Amruru grasps (her), puts ²Aṭiratu on the donkey's back,

¹⁴⁰ At least twelve lines have disappeared at the beginning of col. iii, then another ten lines are too damaged to permit translation. Because of this long break, it is uncertain where Ba^clu's monologue takes place and to whom it is addressed. If the two arrivals mentioned in lines 23-24, Ba^clu's and ^cAnatu's, are coterminous (see note 145), then Ba^clu would seem to be speaking to ^cAnatu en route. If not, then Ba^clu would be addressing his complaint to ²Aṭiratu while waiting for ^cAnatu to come.

¹⁴¹ Lit., "shriveled me, treated me as a shriveled thing" (D-stem of qlṣ — see above, note 111). For the morpho-semantics, compare Heb. qillēl, "treat as a light thing, mock, curse" (qlt, "mockery," below in line 15, is from this root).

¹⁴² The Akk. equivalent of Ug. dabhu in one of the polyglot vocabularies is isinnu, "feast, festival (religious or secular)" (Nougayrol 1968 text 137 iii 6). The noun is derived from the verb dbḥ (< qdbḥ), "to slit the throat (of the sacrificial beast)." The divine banquet is depicted in the same terms as are used for sacrificial feasts practiced by humans, though divinities would not, of course, "sacrifice" the beasts in the same sense as humans would (cf. Pardee 1988a:24-26).

¹⁴³ The phrase {w dbḥ} was erroneously written twice here.

¹⁴⁴ The three terms by which dbḥ is qualified in this list are bīt, "shame, impropriety," dnt, "low quality," and tdmm(r), "misbehavior" (there is disagreement about the precise meaning of the last two terms, depending on whether Arabic or Heb. etymologies are preferred). In the last case, if the meaning corresponds to the Arabic etymology ("misbehave"), it is uncertain whether the misbehavior consists of impertinence or debauchery. The three terms appear to cover three criteria for judging the quality of a feast: the appropriateness of the sacrificial victim, its quality, and the service.

¹⁴⁵ Because ²ahr can function either as an adverb ("thereafter, thereupon") or as a subordinating conjunction ("after Ba^clu arrives, ^cAnatu arrives"), and because the text preceding Ba^clu's monologue is lost, we cannot tell whether the two deities arrived together or one after the other.

¹⁴⁶ The phrase mrḡim ṭd, "those who suck upon the breast," is often taken as a parallel to ²ilm, "the gods," and hence as a metaphor for the children of a goddess, in particular of ²Aṭiratu. Because, however, the expression only occurs in dining scenes and because the syntax is difficult with that interpretation, de Moor's interpretation (1971:146) of the phrase as referring to the source of the meat, i.e., "suckling (beasts)," appears preferable.

¹⁴⁷ Seven lines are partially or completely destroyed at the end of col. iii, another dozen at the beginning of col. iv.

¹⁴⁸ Several of the words in this verse are uncertain of meaning. mdl is the standard verb for preparing a mount for travel, whether it refer to the harness or the (rudimentary) saddle (bibliography in Pardee 1987:417). phl, if we assume that the goddess followed the practices of women and because of the parallel terms (^cr, "donkey," and ²atn, "jennet"), designates an Equus asinus, rather than a horse, though the origin of the term seems to relate to the reproductive qualities of the male (bibliography and discussion in Pardee 1988a:205). gpnm, here translated "trappings," looks like the standard Northwest Semitic word for "vine(s)," but it is uncertain whether we have here that word used metaphorically or another word. Finally nqbnm, here translated "decorations," is of uncertain origin.

on the ass's beautiful back.¹⁴⁹
 Qudšu sets off, bright as fire,¹⁵⁰
 ²Amruru like a star in front, behind (came) Girl ²Anatu.
 As for Ba²lu, he went off to the heights of Šapānu.¹⁵¹

The Visit (iv 20 - v 81)

So off she goes to ²Ilu at the source of the double river,
 midst the upspringings of the deeps.
 She penetrates ²Ilu's abode,
 enters the dwelling of the King, father of Šuna-
 ma;
 At ²Ilu's feet she bows and falls,
 does homage and honors him.

²Ilu Expresses His Happiness at the Sight of ²Aṭiratu (iv 27-39)

When ²Ilu sees her,
 his brow unfurrows¹⁵² and he laughs;
 He taps his feet on the footstool and snaps his fingers.
 He raises his voice and says aloud:
 How is it that the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea,
 has come?

How is it that she has entered (here), the Pro-genitress of the Gods?

Are you really hungry (because) you've been wandering?

Are you really thirsty (because) [you've been] traveling all night?¹⁵³

Eat or drink,
 eat some bread at the table,
 drink some wine from a goblet,
 some red wine from golden cups.

Or is it the 'hand'¹⁵⁴ of ²Ilu the king that has excited thoughts in you,
 the love of the Bull that has aroused you?

²Aṭiratu Recites her Message, Including Ba²lu's Claim to a Palace (iv 40-57)

The Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea, replies:
 Your decision(s), ²Ilu, (are) wise,

// Gen 11:3;
 Exod 5:7

(they are) eternal wisdom,
 your decision(s) (provide) a life of good fortune.
 (Now,) our king is Mighty Ba²lu,
 (he is) our ruler and there is none above him.
 All of us (other gods) [bear] his vessel,
 all of us bear his cup.
 (But) groaning he does cry out to the Bull, his
 father ²Ilu,
 to ²Ilu the king who established him,
 He cries out to ²Aṭiratu and to her sons,
 to the goddess and the host of her kin:
 Ba²lu has no house as (do) the (other) gods,
 (no) court as (do) the sons of ²Aṭiratu,
 (No) dwelling (as does) ²Ilu, (no) shelter (as do)
 his sons,
 (no) dwelling (as does) the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu
 of the Sea,
 (No) dwelling (as do) the honored brides:
 (no) dwelling (as does) Pidray, daughter of ²Aru,
 (no) shelter (as does) Ṭallay, daughter of Rabbu,
 (no) dwelling (as does) ²Aršay, daughter of Ya²-ibdarru.

²Ilu Gives the Go-Ahead (iv 58 - v 63)

The Gracious One, the kindly god replies:
 So I am a servant, an attendant on ²Aṭiratu!
 So I am a servant, accustomed to tools!
 And ²Aṭiratu is a servant-girl (who) will make the bricks!¹⁵⁵ //
 Let a house be built for Ba²lu like the (other) gods' (houses),
 a court like (the courts of) the sons of ²Aṭiratu.

²Aṭiratu Congratulates ²Ilu on the Positive Results of his Decision (v 64-73)

The Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea, replies:
 Great indeed, ²Ilu, is (your) wisdom,
 your gray beard surely instructs you,¹⁵⁶
 the respite that is yours alone (surely instructs

¹⁴⁹ The word for "back" (bmt) is the same as was used above for the part of her body around which ²Anatu hung the human necklace (see above, note 76). It is debatable whether the donkey was beautiful in its own right, but it certainly was when its trappings were of gold and silver. The Ug. expression consists of a substantivized adjective preceding the nouns in question: ysmsmt bmt pḥl, lit., "the most beautiful (part[s] of) the thorax of the male equid."

¹⁵⁰ It is uncertain whether šb²r is related to the verb for "burning" or the verb for "leading, taking, bringing" (as in Kirta, CTA 14 ii 101 [text 1.102 (p. 334)]), there translated "entrusting"), i.e., whether the double-deity is being depicted simply as leading the donkey or whether he is also providing light. I choose the latter solution because of the explicit comparison with a star in the next line (k kbkb). Unfortunately, we do not know what it is about Qudšu-wa-²Amruru that links him/them particularly with light.

¹⁵¹ This line illustrates the problems of deducing a narrative line in a badly damaged text: by means of this single line of text, Ba²lu is removed from the next scene and transported to his home. Had the text been damaged at this point, we could only have conjectured his whereabouts.

¹⁵² For the meaning of ṭšb, "forehead" rather than "rows of teeth," see discussion and bibliography in Pardee 1988a:69. For the interpretation of prq, see del Olmo Lete 1981:612.

¹⁵³ The last word in each line is partially damaged and of uncertain interpretation (cf. Gibson 1978:59, 154, 159).

¹⁵⁴ yd is either a euphemism for the male member (see note 48 to text 1.87) or a noun derived from a root ydd (<wdd), "to love."

¹⁵⁵ ²Ilu's reply appears ironic, accusing ²Aṭiratu in jest of proposing that he and she should themselves do the building.

¹⁵⁶ The motif is that of wisdom coming with old age (on ²Ilu as an old man, see above, note 13).

you).¹⁵⁷
 For now¹⁵⁸ Ba^clu (can) send his rain in due season, send the season of driving showers;¹⁵⁹
 (can) Ba^clu shout aloud in the clouds,¹⁶⁰ kk shoot (his) lightning-bolts to the earth;¹⁶¹
 A house of cedar^{mm} he may complete,
 Even a house of bricks he may raise.

ʔAṭiratu Announces That He May Undertake Preparations (v 74-81) ⁿⁿ

Let them announce to Mighty Ba^clu:
 Summon an (entire) caravan to your house,
 wares to your palace;
 Let the mountains bring you massive amounts of
 silver,
 (let) the hills (bring you) the choicest gold,
 let them bring you magnificent gems.¹⁶¹
 Then build a house of silver and gold,
 a mansion of purest lapis-lazuli.

The Message is Borne by ʔAnatu (v 82-97)¹⁶²

(This) brings joy to Girl ʔAnatu.
 She digs in her feet,
 takes off across the earth;
 She heads off
 toward Ba^clu in the heights of ʔapānu.
 (While still) a thousand yards off,
 ten thousand furlongs,
 Girl ʔAnatu laughs,
 raises her voice and shouts aloud:
 You have good news, Ba^clu!
 I bring you good news!¹⁶⁰
 They may build for you a house like (those of)
 your brothers,
 a court like (those of) your kin.¹⁶³

kk Jer 10:13;
 Joel 2:11;
 Pss 18:14;
 46:7

ll Job 37:3

mm 2Sam7:2, 7

nn 1Kgs5:15-32 oo Isa 40:9;

 41:27; 52:7

Summon an (entire) caravan to your house,
 wares to your palace;
 Let the mountains bring you massive amounts of
 silver,
 (let) the hills (bring you) the choicest gold,
 Then build a house of silver and gold,
 a mansion of purest lapis-lazuli.

Ba^clu Makes the Preparations (v 97-102)¹⁶⁴

(This) brings joy to Mighty Ba^clu:
 He summons an (entire) caravan to his house,
 wares to his palace;
 The mountains bring him massive amounts of
 silver,
 the hills (bring him) the choicest gold,
 they bring him magnificent gems.

Then He Sends for Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu (v 103-105)

He sends a message¹⁶⁵ to Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu:

Go back to the recitation: "When the two lads take the message..."
 166

Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu Arrives, Is Feted, and Urged to Work (v 106-119)

Thereafter Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu arrives.
 They place beef in front of him,
 a fatling before him.
 A chair is prepared and they seat (him)
 at the right hand of Mighty Ba^clu, while [the gods] eat and drink.
 Mighty [Ba^clu] speaks up:
 ...¹⁶⁷
 Hurry! (raise) a house, O Kōṭaru,

¹⁵⁷ The text reads {rḥn[.].l.d[.].l.ṭirk} and has been interpreted in various ways. My translation implies that the first word is cognate with Arabic rḥw, which denotes softness and relaxation, that the second is the relative pronoun, and that ṭirk means "(belonging) to your chest, bosom." The "respite" would refer to ʔIlu's old age.

¹⁵⁸ The cause-and-effect relationship between ʔIlu's permission to allow Ba^clu to have his own palace and Ba^clu's exercise of his function as weather god is strongly marked in the Ug. text: the line begins with two particles, the first of which bears an extending morpheme (wn ʔap = /wa-na ʔapa/).

¹⁵⁹ The precise meaning of tk b glt remains uncertain. If the second sign of the first word could be read as {r} rather than {k}, the word could be explained as from trr, "be abundant (of water)" (Driver 1956:97, 151), a root that some believe to be already attested in Ug. (e.g., in text 1.94, line 64 (p. 298), on which see Pardee 1988a:215). The editor's copy (Vroilleaud 1932:pl. xxvii) shows, however, the rather clear outline of {k} (subsequent editors have all indicated a damaged {k}).

¹⁶⁰ A common idiom for "to thunder" in Northwest Semitic is "to give the voice (in the clouds/in the heavens, etc.)." There is a striking parallel in one of the Amarna texts (ša id-din ri-ig-ma-šu i-na sa-me ki-ma "IM, "who gives his voice in the heavens like the weather god" [EA 147:13-14]). The central part of Ps 29 (vss. 3-9), with the seven-fold repetition of qōl, "voice," is, of course, the depiction of YHWH as filling the rôle of the weather god.

¹⁶¹ The word translated "gems," ʔilqsm, is of uncertain meaning. Other words for precious stones are attested in Ug. and in the Akk. of Ugarit which have /ʔ/ as the first phoneme: ʔalgbi/alkabašu and algamišu, to which may be compared Heb. ʔelgabīš (Nougayrol 1968:101, n. 1).

¹⁶² Either ʔAnatu has accompanied ʔAṭiratu to ʔIlu's home or else the formulae for carrying ʔAṭiratu's message to her have been omitted.

¹⁶³ Up to this point the houses to which comparison has been made have always been referred to as being those of "the gods" // "the sons of ʔAṭiratu." The word for "kin" here, ʔary, is the same as that used for ʔAṭiratu's kin in several passages (šbrt ʔaryh, "the host of her kin"), where the parallel phrase is bnh, "her sons." Below p. 262, vi 44-46, "his brothers // his kin" seem to be equated with "the seventy sons of ʔAṭiratu." Has Ba^clu been promoted to equality with the sons of ʔAṭiratu, i.e., the terms are honorific, or has his rightful place simply been recognized? Perhaps a little of both if his parentage is complicated (see above, note 32, and below, note 190).

¹⁶⁴ In this section Ba^clu gathers the materials, but the final verse of the preceding parallel passages is omitted, that concerning the actual construction. For this, he sends for Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu.

¹⁶⁵ The commonly adopted correction of {yʔak} to {y<1>ʔak} appears necessary.

¹⁶⁶ The disposal of the horizontal lines and the sense of the passage all indicate that the announcement of the message by Ba^clu is omitted, as are its repetition by the messengers and all travel formulae.

¹⁶⁷ One line is almost totally destroyed.

hurry! raise a palace,
hurry! you must build a house.
Hurry! you must raise a palace
on the heights of Šapānu,
A house covering a thousand acres,
a palace (covering) ten thousand hectares.

Owner and Contractor Argue About a Window
(v 120 - vi 15)¹⁶⁸

Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu replies:
Listen, O Mighty Ba^clu, understand, O Cloud-Rider:
Must I not put a latticed window in the house,
a window-opening in the palace?
Mighty Ba^clu replies:
You must not put a latticed window in [the house],
[no window-opening] in the palace!¹⁶⁹
Kôtaru[-wa]-Ḥasīsu replies:
You'll come around, Ba^clu, to [my view].¹⁷⁰
Kôtaru[-wa]-Ḥasīsu repeats (his) speech:
Listen, please,¹⁷¹ O Mighty Ba^clu:
Must I not put a latticed window in the house,
a window-opening in the palace?
Mighty Ba^clu replies:
You must not put a latticed window in the house,
no window-opening in the palace!
Lest¹⁷² Pidray, daughter of ʔAru, do [X],
[lest] Ṭallay, daughter of Rabbu, [do Y].
[...] ʔIlu's beloved, Yammu,
[...] cast scorn upon me,
and spit upon me [...].¹⁷³
Kôtaru[-wa]-Ḥasīsu replies:
You'll come around, Ba^clu, to my view.

pp Deut 3:9;
Ps 29:6

The Palace is Built (vi 16-40)

[Hurriedly] they build his house,
[hurriedly] they raise his palace.
(Some workers) [go] to Lebanon and its trees,
to Siryon^{pp} (and) its choicest cedars;
[They X] Lebanon and its trees,
Siryon (and) its choicest cedars.
Fire is placed in the house,
flames in the palace.
For a day, two (days),
the fire consumes (fuel)¹⁷⁴ in the house,
the flames (consume fuel) in the palace;
For a third, a fourth day,
the fire consumes (fuel) in the house,
the flames (consume fuel) in the palace;
For a fifth, a sixth day,
the fire consumes (fuel) in the house,
the flames (consume fuel) in the palace;
Then on the seventh day,¹⁷⁵
the fire is removed from the house,
the flames from the palace.
(Voilà!) the silver has turned into plaques,
the gold is turned into bricks.
(This) brings joy to Mighty Ba^clu:
You have built my house of silver,
my palace of gold.
(Then) Ba^clu completes the furnishing of [his] house,
Haddu completes the furnishing¹⁷⁶ of his palace.

The Inaugural Banquet (vi 40-?)

He slaughters bovids [and] caprovids,¹⁷⁷
he fells bulls [and] fattened goats,

¹⁶⁸ Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu's motivation for wanting to put the disputed window in the palace is not stated: is it the simple fact that palaces had windows or is the contractor somehow in league with Môtu, whose defeat of Ba^clu's follows the eventual opening of the window? Note that there is no parallel, as is often assumed, between the biblical passage according to which death comes in through a window (Jer 9:20) and this myth, according to which the contact between Ba^clu and Môtu takes place at a series of feasts, while Ba^clu's death takes place near Môtu's own domain (CTA 5 v - 6 i). Moreover, when below (vi 8-14) Ba^clu raises specific objections, they are phrased in terms of his daughters and of Yammu (who is no longer a major player, at least in this arrangement of the tablets). The link between the window and Ba^clu's demise appears to lie in the realm of hubris, rather than in means of access: once the window is in place, Ba^clu is so impressed by his own abilities to make thunder and lightning pass through the window to earth that he presumes himself capable of taking on Môtu (vii 25 - CTA 5 ii). This rather clear link between the palace, the window, and Ba^clu's eventual demise — so important to the overall structure of the myth — calls into question, it may appear, the interpretation of the palace motif as primarily cosmological in function (cf. Smith 1994:77, 105).

¹⁶⁹ The very end of col. v is broken away but it is uncertain whether there was any additional text there.

¹⁷⁰ Lit., "to my word," reconstructed on the basis of vi 15.

¹⁷¹ As compared with the previous version of the speech, the particle m^c is added here after the verb šm^c, "listen." On the other hand, the second colon ("understand, O Cloud-Rider") is omitted here.

¹⁷² The formulation here appears to be negative volitive: "Let Pidray not do [X]."

¹⁷³ The passage containing the reasons for Ba^clu's refusal of a window is damaged and without parallels for reconstruction. If Ba^clu's daughters were not described as having houses of their own, one might think that Ba^clu here is worried about them going out through the windows of his house. In the case of Yammu, Ba^clu is most plausibly worried about his enemy gaining entry by the window and treating him as is recounted above in col. iii, lines 10-22. Might the reference to spitting (cf. col. iii, line 13) be a reference to the foam of the sea? Might Ba^clu be worried about his daughters somehow aiding Yammu, whether purposely or inadvertently? Might he be worried about the his daughters' husbands, who would be expected to be in league with Yammu (cf. notes 32, 98, 99, 190)?

¹⁷⁴ The image is probably not that of the fire burning freely throughout the palace, but of a giant casting process, in which the fire must constantly be fed.

¹⁷⁵ The seven-day sequence is a common literary motif in Ug. for expressing extended processes. Compare the use of the motif in connection with travel in the Kirta text (1.102).

¹⁷⁶ The words translated "complete the furnishing" constitute an etymological figure of speech (dbt* ... y^cdb // db* [d*]br), using a root that is probably a developed form of the one that gave the word translated "wares" (dbr*) above, v 76 and 92. Because of this connection and because of the generality of the formulation, it appears likely that the reference is to the general furnishing of the palace rather than to the specific preparations for the up-coming feast.

¹⁷⁷ Apologies for the semi-technical terms, used to express precisely the two Ug. terms: ʔ*alpm*, "(male) bovids" (specifically "male bovids") yearling calves,

 lambs (and) great numbers of kids.
 He invites his brothers into his house,
 his kin into his palace,
 He invites the seventy sons of ²Atiratu:
 He provides the gods with rams (and) wine,¹⁷⁸
 he provides the goddesses with ewes (and)
 [wine];
 He provides the gods with bulls (and) wine,
 he provides the goddesses with cows (and)
 [wine];
 He provides the gods with chairs (and) wine,
 he provides the goddesses with seats (and) [wine];
 He provides the gods with jars of wine,
 he provides the goddesses with barrels of [wine].
 So the gods eat and drink,
 they take sucklings,
 with a salted knife cutlets from [a fatling].
 They drink wine from goblets,
 red [wine from] golden cups.

...¹⁷⁹

Ba^clu Takes Possession of His Cities (vii 7-12)

He goes? from [city] to city, goes again from town to town.¹⁸⁰
 He takes possession of¹⁸¹ sixty-six cities,
 of seventy-seven towns;

Eighty does Ba^clu [X],
 ninety does he [Y].

Ba^clu Decides He Wants a Window After All
 (vii 13-25)

(Then) Ba^clu [returns] to (his) house.
 Mighty Ba^clu speaks up:
 I am going to charge Kôtaru, this very day,
 Kôtaru, this very moment,¹⁸²
 With opening up a window in (my) house,
 a latticed window in (my) palace,
 With opening up a rift¹⁸³ in the clouds, according to the pronouncement of Kôtaruwa-Ḥasîsu.
 Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu breaks out laughing,
 he raises his voice and says:
 Didn't I tell you, O Mighty Ba^clu, (that) you, Ba^clu, would come around to my word?

The Window Is Put to Immediate Use (vii 25-37)

(So) he he opens up a window in the house,
 a latticed window in the palace.
 Ba^clu (himself)¹⁸⁴ opens up the rift in the clouds,
 Ba^clu emits his holy voice,
 Ba^clu makes the thunder roll over and over again.¹⁸⁵
 His [holy] voice [causes] the earth [to tremble], [at his thunder] the mountains shake with fear.¹⁸⁶

below in line 49 and specifically "domesticated bovids" in CTA 6 i 20, in opposition with r²umm, "wild bulls", and š²in (= Heb. šōn), "mixed herd of sheep and goats."

¹⁷⁸ The formulation of lines 47-54 consists of eight verses, in which masculine and feminine entities alternate, i.e., gods + masculine item // goddesses + feminine item. Because of this alternation and because of the ambiguity of the syntax, the formulae have often been understood as denoting simply a list of male and female deities (ram gods // ewe goddesses, etc.; e.g. de Moor 1987:60-61). This is plausible for the animal terms (lines 47-50), for representation of deities as animals is common, but it becomes less plausible in the cases of chairs and wine jars (lines 51-54), for such deified entities are virtually unknown in Ug. Because špq is the causative of the verb pq, attested here below at the end of the list (pq, "they take," in line 56) and in the Kirta text (CTA 14 i 12 [text 1.102, n. 5]) in the meaning "to obtain," hence "cause to obtain, give to, furnish with, provide for," there is no difficulty in interpreting ²*ilm krm*, etc., as "double accusatives" (as in Heb., the Hiphil stem followed by two complements marked by ²*et*, the definite direct object marker). It is somewhat more problematic to see the end of the phrase, krm yn, etc., as an asyndetic accusative construction ("rams (and) wine"; e.g., Gibson 1977:63-64), but that solution appears preferable to denying the existence of yn at the end of every line but 53-54 (reading the form yšql in the other lines: Cassuto 1938:287-89; Caquot, Szymer and Herdner 1974:214; Smith 1994:50), for a glance at the photograph and copy will show that there was no reason to separate the {y} from the rest of the form. Indeed, in line 51 all editors have seen another sign after the {y}, and the traces correspond perfectly to the beginning of {n}.

¹⁷⁹ Of some six or seven lines at the end of col. vi only a few signs are preserved. At the beginning of col. vii, only the ends of the lines are preserved. Mighty Ba^clu is certainly mentioned there and in all probability Yammu as well ({md ²*y[m]*), lines 3-4).

¹⁸⁰ What is preserved as {dr} is usually interpreted as the first verb in this verse, though it is usually emended to {br}, "cross (through), traverse"; the second verb is šb, "return," perhaps used to denote the repetition of the first act. The formulation of the complements is lit., "to city/cities of cities // to town(s) of towns."

¹⁸¹ The verb is ²*ahd*, cognate with Heb. ²*ahaz*. Because the preceding context is so broken, it is uncertain what degree of force is involved and to what extent these cites previously constituted holdings of Yammu.

¹⁸² In the absence of vocalization, the phrases bn ym // bnm ^c*dt* are ambiguous and could also be translated "son of Yammu // son of the confluence (of the deeps)." Such an interpretation might help to explain Kôtaru's willingness to build a house for Yammu (CTA 2 iii), but the difficulties are severe: (1) Kôtaru is nowhere else designated the son of Yammu; (2) ^c*dt* is not used elsewhere alone as the equivalent of ^c*dt thmm* (on which see note 4 to RS 24.244 [text 1.94]).

¹⁸³ Etymologically bdqt should denote "a fissure, break, crack." The metaphorical juxtaposition of "window" and "rift," coupled with the description of what Ba^clu does when the rift is opened up, indicates that the house he had built had become a form of confinement, keeping him from the proper exercise of his rain-making function. He, therefore, sees the rift as a liberation, though it will later be instrumental in his death.

¹⁸⁴ Given the structure of this and the preceding verses, it appears that Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasîsu, as he has proposed, opens the window, but that Ba^clu himself takes over when it comes to opening up the rift in the clouds. Thus, in some sense, the window and the opening in the clouds were seen as separate entities. This distinction (a veritable rift!) between the window as an item of construction and the rift in the clouds as particular to Ba^clu's divine status seems to indicate that the Ugaritians were well aware of the metaphors with which they were dealing (cf. Korpel 1990:375).

¹⁸⁵ Lit., "Ba^clu repeats the utterances of his lips."

¹⁸⁶ The translations indicated as restorations are ad sensum; various restorations of the Ug. text have been proposed. The precise nuance of hš, here translated "shake with fear," is uncertain; my translation assumes the existence of a root hš II (which would, by comparison with Arabic, be derived from h(y)š) alongside hš I, used in ritual texts to describe a characteristic of ²Ilu (on this root, see Pardee forthcoming on RS

... ¹⁸⁷ the high places of the earth totter. Ba ^c lu's enemies grasp hold of (the trees of) the forest, Haddu's adversaries (grasp hold of) the flanks of the mountain(s).	qg Pss 9:8; 29:10 rr Ps 68:17 ss Ps 95:3 n Gen 27:28 uu Pss 103:5; 145:16; Isa 58:11 vv 2Kgs 15:5	(For) Môtu is always proclaiming, The beloved one (of ² Ilu) is always claiming: ¹⁹³ I am the only one who rules over the gods, ^{ss} who fattens ^{ss} gods and men, who satiates ^{uu} the hordes of the earth. Ba^clu Calls his Messengers (vii 52-?) When Ba ^c lu calls to his lads: Look, [Gupanu-]wa- ² Ugāru: The sea [is enveloped] in darkness, in obscurity the [highest] peaks ¹⁹⁴ The Directions (viii 1-32) So head off for Mount Targuziza, for Mount Tarrummagi, to the two ruin-mounds that mark the borders of the earth. ¹⁹⁵ Lift up (one) mountain on (your) hands, (one) wooded hill on (your) palms. Then go down to the place of seclusion ^{vv} (within) the earth,
Ba^clu's Powers Incite Him to Hubris (vii 37 - CTA 5 ii) ¹⁸⁸ Mighty Ba ^c lu speaks up: Enemies of Haddu, ¹⁸⁹ why do you shake with fear? Why do you shake with fear, you who take up arms against Dimārānu? ¹⁹⁰ Ba ^c lu looks ahead of (where) his hand (will strike) when the cedar (shaft) dances in his right hand. ¹⁹¹ Since Ba ^c lu has taken up residence ^{qg} in his house is there or is there not a king (who) can establish himself ^{rr} in the land of (Ba ^c lu's) dominion? Why don't I send a courier to Môtu, son of ² Ilu, a messenger to the beloved warrior of ² Ilu? ¹⁹²

4.474-9).

¹⁸⁷ The readings at the beginning of lines 33 and 34 are disputed.¹⁸⁸ On the relationship between the window and Ba^clu's eventual demise, see above note 168.¹⁸⁹ The divine name is here spelled {hdt} — a mistake for {hdm}, i.e. hd + -m?

¹⁹⁰ Or: "Why do you fear the arm(s) of Dimārānu" (ntq could be either a concrete noun, "arm(s) of," or the participle of the corresponding verb or a nomen professionalis derived therefrom). Dimārānu is vocalized as a form of the root known elsewhere in Ug. under the form dmr (d frequently is {d}). The epithet is usually identified with the theonym Demarous, who was the son of Ouranos though born only after the defeat of the latter at the hand of Kronos (= Elos [²Ilu]) when his mistress, mother of Demarous, was given by Kronos to his brother Dagan (tradition according to Philo of Byblos: see, e.g., Attridge and Oden 1981:48-51). If the Ug. divine genealogy was anything like that transmitted by Philo of Byblos, Ba^clu would have been the half-brother of both Dagan and ²Ilu/Kronos, who both were sons of Ouranos, and also the stepson of Dagan. Though deities corresponding to Ouranos and Ge (principal wife of Ouranos), i.e., ²Aršu-wa-Šamūma, "Earth-and-Heaven," are known in Ug. from the pantheon and ritual texts, and though one pantheon text explicitly places ²Aršu-wa-Šamūma before ²Ilu (see Pardee forthcoming on RS 24.643:23-25), Ug. mythology contains no story dealing with the generations preceding Dagan and ²Ilu. Another perspective, for which the data are closer in time to the Ug. texts, is that of the relationship between Kumarbi (= Dagan) and Tešub (= Ba^clu) in Hurrian mythology (Niehr 1994). The problem with that set of comparisons is the absence of a clear correspondent to the larger group of Ug. divinities. Whatever the genealogical and ideological strata may be in these various relationships (and one would not expect the ideology perfectly to match the genealogy!), a broadly coherent picture emerges from this cycle itself: Ba^clu and ^cAnatu are on one side (below in CTA 6 ii 12 [p. 270] they are represented as siblings), perhaps along with Šapšu, while Yammu/Naharu, Môtu, Lôtan, and ²Aṭiratu and her sons are on the other (cf. notes 32, 93, 163, 254, 264). ²Ilu naturally favors his own son, Yammu, but does not intervene when Ba^clu defeats Yammu and, under pressure, accepts Ba^clu's claims — this is understandable if Ba^clu is closely related to ²Ilu but not his own son. When Ba^clu is temporarily defeated by Môtu, ²Ilu is represented as seeing for himself the negative effects of Môtu's reign (CTA 6 iii). ²Ilu's principal wife ²Aṭiratu is closely associated with the sea/Yammu, but is not said to be his mother. Perhaps this somewhat ambiguous relationship explains why she can be seduced by gifts to plead Ba^clu's case (i 20 - v 81).

¹⁹¹ This is one of the more difficult verses in the well-preserved parts of this myth and it has received multiple interpretations. The one offered here assumes that the motifs are (1) careful aim and (2) the weapon as a living tree (for a representation of such a weapon, see the "Baal aux foudres" stele from Ras Shamra, e.g., Yon 1991:no. 5; Bordreuil 1991). If ktgd in line 41 is indeed a verbal form (for a plausible interpretation as a noun, see Sanmartín 1978), it should be analyzed as a r-preformative form of a III-weak root related to Arabic gdd/gdw/gdy/gdā/gdā, all of which have connotations of speed or hurrying, though whether the reference is to the weapon speeding from the deity's hand or dancing in his hand cannot be said.

¹⁹² The standard form of Môtu's title as son of ²Ilu is bn ²ilm mt. The -m of ²ilm must, of course, be the so-called "enclitic" particle, not the plural morpheme. The second formulaic title in this verse is ydd ²il gẓr, lit., "the beloved one of ²Ilu, the warrior." I am not convinced that the fact that gẓr is an epithet is sufficient evidence for taking the word as modifying ²Ilu rather than Môtu (Vaughn 1993). On the surface level, the structure of this phrase is precisely identical to bn ²ilm mt, the only difference being that mt is a proper name, gẓr a nominal attribute. Mythologically, it is unlikely that gẓr is an epithet of ²Ilu, for gẓr describes relatively young and vigorous men (see note 78 to the Kirta text [1.102]), while ²Ilu is consistently described as an old man (see above, note 13) not at all interested in fighting.

¹⁹³ Lit., "Môtu calls out in his throat, the beloved one keeps saying within himself" (the second verb is ystrm, plausibly cognate with Arabic srr, "tell" — which would thus be historically distinct from srr denoting the umbilicus = Heb. šdr).

¹⁹⁴ There are five partially preserved lines and about seven more totally broken away at the end of col. vii.

¹⁹⁵ The mountain names are unidentified and of uncertain vocalization; if the form of the names is Hurrian/Asiatic as most commentators have thought, one may assume that they were considered to be situated at the northern extremes of the earth (for a summary discussion, see Astour 1980). Whether tlm denotes "ruin-mounds" (as "tell" is used in modern archaeological parlance) here or designates a particular type of hill (// gr, "mountain"), the use of the word, very rare in Ug. (cf. CTA 16 i 52 [text 1.102] "mound"), is surely meant to express a characteristic feature of these "delimiters" (gẓr) between the land of the living and the land of the dead, a feature that is plausibly linked with the notion of ruin. In you must be counted among those who go down into the earth. ¹⁹⁶ ww	ww Pss 88:5; 143:7	Say to Môtu, son of ² Ilu, repeat to the beloved warrior of ² Ilu:

Once (down there) head for his city Hamray, ^{xv} (for) Mukku where his throne is established, ^{yy} (for) Hôhu, the land of his own possession. ¹⁹⁷	xx Ps 140:11	The Message (viii 32-47) Message of Mighty Ba ^c lu word of the mightiest of heroes:
But be careful, couriers of the gods: Don't get near Môtu, son of ² Ilu, Lest he take you as (he would) a lamb in his mouth, lest you be destroyed as (would be) a kid in his crushing jaws. ¹⁹⁸	yy Cf. Eccl 10:18	I have built my house [of silver], my [palace of gold]. ... ²⁰⁰
Šapšu, luminary of the gods, glows hot, the heavens are powerless under the control of Môtu, the beloved of ² Ilu. (From) a thousand yards off, ten thousand furlongs, At the feet of Môtu bow and fall, do homage and honor him. ¹⁹⁹	zz Isa 5:14; Hab 2:5	Môtu's Reply to Ba^clu (viii 48 - CTA 5 i 8) ²⁰¹ [Message of Môtu, son of ² Ilu, word of the beloved warrior of ² Ilu: My throat ^{zz} is the throat of the lion ^{aaa} in the wasteland, ^{bbb} and ²⁰² the gullet ²⁰³ of the 'snorter' ²⁰⁴ in the sea; And it craves the pool (as do) the wild bulls, (craves) springs as (do) the herds of deer; ²⁰⁵ ccc And, indeed, indeed,
	aaa Deut 33:20; Hos 13:8
	bbb Deut 32:10; Ps 107:40; Job 6:18; 12:24
	ccc Ps 42:2

the next verse it is hīb that is used parallel to gr, a better-attested parallelism in Ug., though the precise meaning of that term is also uncertain (in Akk. hālbū means "forest, wood, grove").

¹⁹⁶ The divine messengers' entry into the realm of the dead is described in the same terms as are used for the dying entering that realm.

¹⁹⁷ The three names (the vocalizations of which are hypothetical) denote aspects of the underworld: Hamray, "watery," Mukku, "sinking down, dilapidation," Hôhu, "opening, hole, fault" (cf. Astour 1980:229). The last word is probably a different word from hām in CTA 17 vi 35 (see note 45 to text 1.103). It appears plausible to see in the description of Môtu by Philo of Byblos as "slime ... [or] the putrefaction of a watery mixture" at least a vague memory of the name Hamray ("watery") (Baumgarten 1981:97, 111-13), though the link is not as explicit as some have thought (Held 1973:188-190).

¹⁹⁸ The meaning of qn in b ībrn qnh, sometimes reread as b ībr nt'nh, is uncertain (my translation "jaws" is primarily from context). These terms are repeated below, not for the messengers, but in Môtu's version of what happened to Ba^clu (CTA 6 ii 22-23 and note 256 — the narrator's version of this event has been lost in one of the earlier lacunae).

¹⁹⁹ The previous verse contains the standard formulae for travel over a long distance (see above, notes 10, 21). Because in at least some cases the distance formulae are used to designate separation between the traveler and the goal, it appears plausible, in the context of Ba^clu's warning for the messengers to maintain their distance, to interpret the juxtaposition of the distance formulae with the obeisance formulae here as denoting obeisance at a distance (see the similar formulae in Ug. letters [translated in COS 3]).

²⁰⁰ The meat of Ba^clu's message is lost in the break, where only a few letters have been preserved in lines 38-47. Judging from the remnants of the messenger's name preserved in line 47 ([gpn] w ²ugr), we may surmise that the message and messenger formulae extended to there; the presence of a double line on the tablet at that point indicates that the complete repetition of Ba^clu's message to Môtu was omitted (see note 88) and that the rest of the column, some seventeen lines, contained Môtu's reply (see next note). The {t} at the end of line 48, the last sign visible, is plausibly the last sign of the introductory phrase thm bn ²ilm m (as in CTA 5 i 12-13, p. 265).

²⁰¹ Simply in order to present in a coherent sequence what was at least the gist of Môtu's message as dictated to the messengers — though there are variations in reported messages, the basic content is reported faithfully — I restore here the beginning of the message as preserved below in lines CTA 5 i 12-27. Though quite well preserved in CTA 5, this section constitutes one of the most difficult and disputed passages of the Ba^clu cycle. In the cycle as preserved, the only explicit mention of the defeat of a reptilian adversary up to this point is that to which ^cAnam has laid claim (CTA 3 iii 37-39 [here lines 40-42]). Here Môtu begins by describing his voracious appetite and challenges Ba^clu to invite him and his kinsmen for a meal, apparently in Ba^clu's new palace. At that point is inserted a challenge involving physical prowess, of which an important element is lost ("I can pierce you through..." — see note 208). The logic of the end of the message seems to be that when Ba^clu defeats Lôtan, Môtu dies also as a consequence, dies by being devoured (sp'//mt). It is not stated why he dies. But then the message concludes by stating that Ba^clu must also die. The most logical explanation of this cause-and-effect sequence is to see Lôtan and his reptilian allies as the kinsmen of Môtu to which reference has already been made. If Ba^clu attacks them, Môtu must, as their kinsman, take up their cause. On the other hand, at least judging from the biblical materials, Ba^clu has no alternative to taking on the reptilian forces because they are also allies of Yammu (see above note 92). In spite of the damaged state of tablets 4 and 5, it is clear that, in Môtu's mind and hence for the plot line, the nub of the long exchange of messages between Ba^clu and Môtu is the latter's request for an invitation to take tea at the palace ("So invite me..."), for it is by the repetition of those terms that Môtu greets Ba^clu's eventual acquiescence (CTA 5 ii 21-23), which itself was not stated in anything approaching those terms (CTA 5 ii 12, 19-20: "Your servant am I, and forever (will be)!") (p. 266).

²⁰² "And" here and four more times in lines 15-21 reflects the particle hm that may mark either mutually exclusive alternatives or a list of open possibilities, the latter being the case here. I often do not translate the less strongly marked conjunction w, but do translate hm here each time it appears.

²⁰³ As in CTA 5 i 7, npš is here the inner passage of the throat, the esophagus. The parallel term, brh, is the regular parallel to npš in Ug. poetry, though its precise meaning is debated. Elsewhere in Ug., the two terms can denote not the physical apparatus of eating and breathing, but the vital life force.

²⁰⁴ ^aanhr is plausibly identical to Akk. nāhiru, mentioned by Assyrian kings as the object of sea-hunts (CAD N 137). Because one of these texts mentions the "tusks" (šinnē) of the creature in question, doubt has been expressed as to the identification of the animal with the whale (some bibliography in Pardee 1987:373).

²⁰⁵ Some have interpreted this verse as meaning that the sources of water attract the animals, rather than vice versa. The interpretation offered above appears preferable, however, because it is the animals that do the swallowing, not the sources. That the form r²umm is adverbial is proven

my throat consumes^{ddd} heaps (of things),²⁰⁶
 yes indeed, I eat by double handfuls;
 And my seven portions are in a bowl,
 and they mix (into my) cup a (whole) river.²⁰⁷
 So invite me, Ba^clu, along with my brothers,
 have me over, Haddu, along with my kin,
 And eat bread with my brothers,
 drink wine with my kin!
 Have you forgotten, Ba^clu, that I can pierce you through?
 ...²⁰⁸

Colophon (left edge)

[The scribe: ²Ilmilkū, lā^ci]yū-official of Niqmaddu, king of Ugarit.²⁰⁹

CTA 5²¹⁰

When you smite Lôtan,²¹¹ the fleeing serpent, finish off the twisting serpent,²¹²
 the close-coiling one with seven heads,
 The heavens wither and go slack
 like the folds (?) of your tunic.²¹²
 (Then) I, with groans, am devoured,
 (like) a piece of dung I die.²¹³
 (So) you must (for your part) descend²¹⁴ into the throat of Môtu, son of ²Ilū, into the watery depths²¹⁵ of the beloved warrior of ²Ilū.

ddd Ps 49:15

eee Isa 27:1;
 Ps 74:14

fff Ps 140:11

Môtu's Message is Delivered to Ba^clu (i 9-?)

The gods do not hesitate;
 they head off
 for Ba^clu on the heights of Šapānu.
 Gupanu-wa-²Ugāru report:
 Message of Môtu, son of ²Ilū,
 word of the beloved warrior of ²Ilū:²¹⁶
 My throat is the throat of the lion in the wasteland,
 and the gullet of the 'snorter' in the sea;
 And it craves the pool (as do) the wild bulls,
 (craves) springs as (do) the herds of deer;
 And, indeed, indeed,
 my throat consumes heaps (of things),
 yes indeed, I eat by double handfuls;
 And my seven portions are in a bowl,
 and they mix (into my) cup a (whole) river.
 So invite me, Ba^clu, along with my brothers,
 have me over, Haddu, along with my kin,
 And eat bread with my brothers,
 drink wine with my kin!
 Have you forgotten, Ba^clu, that I can pierce you
 through?
 [...]
 When you smite [Lôtan, the] fleeing [serpent], finish off [the twisting serpent],
 the close-coiling one [with seven heads],
 [The heavens] wither [and go slack
 like the folds (?) of] your [tunic].

by the quotation of this or a similar text in RS 24.293:7, where the word is preceded by the preposition k; that the form is plural seems to be proven by the same text, for marking a noun both prepositionally and with enclitic-m is not particularly common. For a comparison of the two texts, with previous bibliography, see Pardee 1988a:158-60.

²⁰⁶ Most scholars have interpreted hmr as meaning "clay" and as a metaphor for "humankind" (cf. Job 4:19; 33:6, and the creation story in Genesis, where man is made from "dust from the soil," āpār min-hā²dāmāh). It appears somewhat implausible, however, from a rhetorical perspective, that humankind would be introduced here, after a list of animals, under so obscure an image. The interpretation as meaning "heap(s)" finds etymological support in Heb. hōmer (used for heaps of frogs in Exod 8:10) and in Aram. and Arabic where forms of the root are used for heaping stones.

²⁰⁷ Or: "And Naharu (himself) mixes (my) cup."

²⁰⁸ The first part of CTA 5 i 27, from which the message up to this point is restored, has almost entirely disappeared; it is certain that only one line of this verse is missing there. Judging from the repetition of the message in CTA 5 i (lines 14 to the end of the column as preserved), this verse was the last on CTA 4 viii and the text continued immediately on CTA 5. Because of the varieties of semantic parallelism, from synonymous to none at all (for a presentation of the types of parallelism and their distributions in a poem, see Pardee 1988c), there is no way of knowing whether the line that has been lost from this verse restated Môtu's powers or provided a motivation or circumstances for their exercise. Because of this uncertainty, it is also uncertain whether the clause introduced by k in the following verse (CTA 5 i 1) is causal or temporal, and in the latter case whether the clause is dependent on this verse or on the verse following that containing the k clause (as I translate).

²⁰⁹ On the title written l^cy, see discussion and bibliography in Freilich 1992 and in Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.001:1. It is clear that the administrative title was also a religious one, for a l^cy-priest is known from RS 24.266:8 (text 1.88) and from RIH 78/20:2 (text 1.96). On the possibility that the Niqmaddu of this colophon is Niqmaddu (III), who reigned at the end of the thirteenth century, see above, note 3. On the distribution of colophons in these tablets, see note 4.

²¹⁰ This six-column tablet consists of two primary fragments, found in different years (1930, 1931) but published together by Virolleaud 1934b. It is certain that this tablet bore neither introductory notation (l b^cl) nor colophon, for the upper left corner fragment contains the beginning and end of the text and the left edge of the tablet is quite well preserved, with neither of those scribal formulae present. Unfortunately, about a third of the tablet was never found, a large portion of the upper right corner, where a major portion of cols. ii-v has disappeared. Moreover, the right half of cols. iii and iv, situated on the right side of this six-column tablet, has disappeared and the text partially preserved there is without parallels, making continuous translation impossible.

²¹¹ On this divinity, corresponding to Leviathan in the Hebrew Bible, see Caquot 1992.

²¹² {krs ²*ipdk*} has received a great many explanations. I have analyzed the first three signs as the preposition k + a noun (or verbal noun?) rs, but my translation is a simple guess. The word translated "tunic" is ipd, cognate with Heb. ēpōd designating a garment.

²¹³ This interpretation is based primarily on the form antm, analyzed as the first person singular of MT, "to die," plus enclitic-m (cf. note 201). Others see the verse as a threat on Môtu's part to devour Ba^clu, "forearms" (antm, dual of ant, cognate with Heb. ammāh) and all.

²¹⁴ l yrt (< yarad + ta) = precativ l + perfect, 2m.s., expresses the certitude of the event.

²¹⁵ b mhmrt, written across two lines, is here interpreted, as have many scholars before me, as a m-preformative noun from the same root as that from which the name of Môtu's city, Hamray, is derived (see above, note 197).

²¹⁶ The title is here written incorrectly: {ydd . bn . ²il (14) g²zr} (bn is repeated from the previous formula).

[(Then) I, with groans, am devoured,
(like) a piece of dung I die.
(So) you must (for your part) descend the throat of Môtu, son of ʔIlu,
into the watery depths of the beloved warrior of ʔIlu].

...²¹⁷

Baʕlu Reflects on Môtu's Threat (ii 7-7)²¹⁸

[He puts (one) lip to the] earth, (the other) lip to
the heavens,

[he X] (his) tongue to the stars.²¹⁹ ⁸⁸⁸

Baʕlu will enter his insides,²²⁰

(will go down) his mouth like a roasted olive,
(like) the produce of the earth and the fruit of
(its) trees.

Mighty Baʕlu will fear him,

Cloud-Rider will be frightened of him.

*Baʕlu's Message, Very Brief, in Reply to Môtu's
Threats* (ii 8-13)

Go say to Môtu, son of ʔIlu,

Repeat to the beloved warrior of ʔIlu:

Message of Mighty Baʕlu,

word of the mightiest of heroes:

Salutations, Môtu, son of ʔIlu!

Your servant am I, and forever (will be)!²²¹

Be off and do not tarry, O gods.

888 Ps 73:9

huh Ps 116:16

The Message is Delivered (ii 13-20)

So they head off

toward Môtu, son of ʔIlu,

to his city Hamray,

to Mukku where <his> throne is established,

to Hôhu, the land of his own possession.

They raise their voices and say aloud:

Message of Mighty Baʕlu,

word of the mightiest of heroes:

Salutations, Môtu, son of ʔIlu!

Your servant am I, and forever (will be)!

Môtu's Reaction (ii 20-?)

(This) brings joy to Môtu, son of ʔIlu:

[He raises] his voice and cries out:²²¹

[Baʕlu] will indeed invite me [along with my brothers],

Haddu will have me over [along with my kinsmen].

...²²²

Invitation and Preparations for the Feast in Honor of Môtu (iii)²²³

A Banquet (iv)²²⁴

Baʕlu Receives the Final Invitation (v 7-17)

...²²⁵

and I will put him/it down amongst the gods of ²¹⁷ The end of the message, here restored in the form in which Môtu dictated it to Baʕlu's messenger, has disappeared in the lacuna at the end of col. i, which the editor estimated to have caused the loss of some thirty lines (Vroilleaud 1934b:306); the beginning of col. ii is also lost, about twelve lines by comparison with col. i.

²¹⁸ The precise context of these words from Baʕlu is unclear because of the preceding lacuna and because there is no transition from the soliloquy to the messenger formulae introducing his return message to Môtu (line 13 "Be off..."). It is clear from this and the following section that Môtu's words have changed Baʕlu's braggadocio into submission, but the missing text leaves us in the dark as to what it was that brought about the transformation. Note that the lacuna of forty-plus lines may have taken away a complete exchange of messages, either brief ones or longer ones with omission of repetition by the messengers (as has occurred above [see notes 88, 132, 200]).

²¹⁹ One finds a similar idiom in the myth Dawn and Dusk (text 1.87, lines 61-62), where the motif of a deity's mouth stretching from heaven to earth also expresses extreme voracity. The reference to the tongue here (partially restored in line 3: {l}šn) is not present in the other text and may or may not express that Môtu possessed powers unknown to Šaharu-wa-Šalimu.

²²⁰ Lit., "his liver" (see above, note 15).

²²¹ The text reads here: {...}gh w ʔašh, "[...] his voice and I will cry out"; Herdner assures us that there is only room in the lacuna for two wide signs or three narrow ones. Now the restoration {yšʔu}, "he raises," would constitute three wide signs (1963:34, n. 4). Most scholars have adopted a similar restoration, nonetheless, and emended {ʔašh} to {y!šh}, and I see no other solution (something like "I have heard his voice and I will cry out" would take even more space and is not, in any case, an attested idiom).

²²² Other than a few words and signs the rest of col. ii has disappeared. One of these words, šmḥ, seems to occur in RS 24.293:16, the text we have already presented as containing elements quoted from this or a similar text (see note 205), and another word is tantalizingly similar (qzb in CTA 5 ii 24 vs. qbz in RS 24.293:13). Unfortunately, the interpretation of these words is not easy (see Pardee 1988a:160-64).

²²³ As stated in note 210, the right half of cols. iii-iv has disappeared and no single line is completely restorable in col. iii. Moreover, there is a complete gap of thirty to forty lines between cols. ii and iii as preserved. The title ascribed to this column is based on some of the few complete words that have been preserved. In lines 9 and 18 is found the verbal form ʔašh, "I will invite" (lit., "I will cry out to (to).") the same verb as was used in the first line of the two verses expressing Môtu's desire to be invited) and Môtu's name and title "beloved" are present both times. Also present are words for sheep and goats: šgr (cf. Heb. šeger), ʔim (which appears again in RS 24.252:14, but again in a badly broken context [Pardee 1988a:111]), and as a divine name in RS 24.643:31 [see Pardee forthcoming ad loc.], and ʔin (cf. Heb. šōʔn). These may be taken as constituting at least part of the beasts slaughtered for the feast.

²²⁴ Col. iv being the continuation of col. iii, i.e., situated on the right side of the verso of the tablet, it has undergone damage symmetrical to that of col. iii. Also, because the bottom of the tablet is broken away, there is a gap of some forty or more lines between cols. iii and iv as preserved. Lines 12-18 certainly contain the terms characteristic of a banquet (as in CTA 4 iii 40-44 [see note 146]). Unfortunately, no characteristic term has been preserved by which to identify the feasting gods. The presence of the phrases ʔi ʔap bʕi [...] ʔi hd, "Where, then, is Baʕlu [...] where is Haddu?" (lines 6, 7) seems to indicate, however, that a feast is depicted other than the one put on by Baʕlu for Môtu. Because of these features and because in the next column Baʕlu has not yet gone down to Môtu's domain, we may surmise that Baʕlu's banquet for Môtu has already taken place, that at that banquet Môtu may have insisted again on Baʕlu visiting the underworld, and that the banquet in col. iv represents another banquet of the gods from which Baʕlu is absent, for reasons impossible to ascertain but which may have to do with his preparations for his descent (as in col. v).

²²⁵ More than thirty-five lines have disappeared between cols. iv and v as preserved, and the first four lines of col. v are too broken to permit translation. The first partially translatable line is clearly the second segment of a verse.

the underworld. ²²⁶	iii Ps 135:7	² Ilu Learns of Ba ^c lu's Death (vi 2-25)
As for you, take your clouds, your wind,	iii Ps 82:7	[Off they head your watering devices, your rain, ⁱⁱⁱ	kkk Gen 37:3	to ² Ilu at the source of the double river,
With you your seven lads,	iii Ps 141:7	midst the upspringings of the deeps.
your eight officers,		They enter ² Ilu's dwelling],
With you Pidray, daughter of ² Aru,		go into [the home of the King, father of]
with you Tallay, ²²⁷ daughter of Rabbu. ²²⁸		Šunama.
Head off		[They raise their voices and say aloud]:
for the mountains of my covert; ²²⁹	mmmm Isa 47:1;	We have done the rounds of [(some part) of the
Lift up (one) mountain on (your) hands,	Ezek 26:16	earth],
(one) wooded hill on (your) palms.		unto (its) well-watered portions. ²³³
Then go down into the place of seclusion (within)	nnnn Josh 7:6;	We arrived at the best part of the earth, the pasture
the earth,	Ezek 27:30;	land,
you must be counted among those who go down	Lam 2:10	at the most beautiful field on the edge of death's
into the earth,		realm. ²³⁴ iii
And the gods will know that you are dead. ²³⁰ iii		We arrived at where Ba ^c lu was fallen to the earth:
Ba ^c lu Assures Himself a Form of Afterlife (v 17-?)		Dead was Mighty Ba ^c lu,
Hearing (this), Ba ^c lu loves a heifer in the pasture		perished the Prince, master of the earth. ²³⁵
land,		Thereupon the Gracious One, the kindly god,
a cow in a field on the edge of death's realm. ²³¹		descends from the throne, sits on the footstool,
Seventy-seven (times) he lies with her,		(descends) from the footstool, sits on the eighty-eight she bears him up.		earth. ^{mmmm}
She conceives and bears a male,		He pours dirt ²³⁶ of mourning on his head,
Mighty Ba ^c lu clothes him. ^{kkk}		dust of humiliation on his cranium, ⁿⁿⁿ
...

²²⁶ Lit., "I will put him/it in the hole(s) of the gods, (in) the earth." The word for "hole(s)," hrt, is probably from the same root as the Ug. word for nostrils (hr in RS 24.247+ :6 [text 1.90]) and as the Heb. word hōr, used once to describe the holes in the ground from which the Hebrews hid from the Philistines (1 Sam 14:11) and again for the dwelling-place of outcast people (Job 30:6), probably in both passages representing humans as living like animals. These usages indicate that the notion communicated by hrt in the phrase hrt ʔilm is probably not so much that of the grave, i.e., a hole dug in the ground, as that of the "caves, caverns, crevices, (geological) faults" that lead down into the earth, hence down to the dwelling-place of the deities of the underworld. The "gods" in the Ug. expression probably include both the underworld deities, of whom Rašap and Milku were the leaders, and the divinized dead. Judging from the Ug. king list (RS 24.257; see Pardee 1988a:165-78; text 1.104 below), where each of the past king's names is preceded by the word ʔil, "god," the deceased, at least the royal deceased, were thought to be deified at death. Parallelism in other passages indicates that this phrase can be part of an idiom for burial (see here CTA 6 i 17-18 and the ʔAqhatu text CTA 19 iii 112, 126-27, 141 [text 1.103]). It is uncertain to whom reference is made here, for there is an explicit shift to Ba^clu in the next verse. For this reason and because here the line is missing that in the other texts refers explicitly to a tomb, it is not impossible that this verse was formulated differently from the parallel texts and that the phrase refers to descent into the underworld in a non-funerary context.

²²⁷ Mistakenly written {tly}.

²²⁸ This list of Ba^clu's suite shows that all manifestations of his powers are to go with him to the underworld, that drought must be the result of his descent. (The reason for the omission of ʔArašay, daughter of Ya^cibdaru here, as in CTA 3 i 22-25, is unclear [cf. Smith 1994:72, n. 143].)

²²⁹ The -y affixed to knkny indicates that it may well not be a toponym, as some have thought, but a common noun, as others have thought. Because it fills the slot of the two mountain names in CTA 5 viii 2-3, under which Mōtu lives according to both accounts, the word is plausibly explained by Arabic knm, "cover, cover up, hide," and in reflexive stems "hide, find seclusion at home." According to the classical dictionaries, Arabic actually had a reduplicated stem like this one, knkn, that meant "stick around home, not go out (to battle, etc.), etc."

²³⁰ In the text as it has been preserved the word "die" is here pronounced for the first time in the context of Ba^clu's descent into the underworld. Mōtu has previously used the verb only of himself (i 6, restored in i 33), while Baal's demise has been described as descending into Mōtu's realm. In col. vi, Ba^clu is described as "dying" and in CTA 6 his corpse is described as in need of burial. Whether the intervening text, now lost, contained any narrative device functioning to lessen the dissonance of these two views of dying and of corpse disposal, it is impossible to know. It can be said, however, that the two views existed side-by-side in the case of human death: the dead were said to "descend into the earth" and this was accomplished for the corpse by placing it in a grave, along with the "forefathers" in the earth. At least in the case of kings, a special rite existed to ensure that the dead person joined the Rapa^ʔūma, the shades of the dead (see here RS 34.126 [text 1.105] and Pardee forthcoming on RS 34.126).

²³¹ "Death's realm" here is mmt, a m-preformative noun from the same root as that from which Mōtu's name is formed.

²³² Another gap of more than forty lines separates cols. v and vi, more than ten lines here and another thirty or so lines in col. vi.

²³³ This passage is similar, though not identical, to a passage in the Kirta text (1.102), CTA 16 iii 3-4. Unfortunately line 4 in the present text has almost entirely disappeared and there is no way to know precisely how it should be restored.

²³⁴ It is to be noted that this passage, by repetition of the expression šd šhl mmt, explicitly places the discovery of Ba^clu's body in the same place where he had loved the heifer (see v 18-23, and note 231), which in turn seems to be located near the spot where one descends into Mōtu's realm. Therefore, however close the connections may be with death, the place described is earthly, not netherworldly, and there is no reason to interpret the terms "best" and "most beautiful" as euphemisms for the realm of death. Rather, because this place has mountains (CTA 4 viii 2-6; 5 v 12-14) and because "good" (n^cmy) is used to describe Ba^clu's mountain (CTA 3 iii 28 [here line 31]), one may see this use of n^cm and ym as descriptive of mountainous areas associated with divinities.

²³⁵ The title zbl b^cl ʔarš has not been used for Ba^clu, in the text as preserved, since he sat down at his own feast (CTA 3 i 3-4).

²³⁶ It is disputed whether ʔmr here is to be explained by Heb. ʔeper, "soil, ashes," or by ʔomer/ʔāmīr, words used to designate various forms for clothing, he is covered with a girded garment. ²³⁷	ooo 1 Kgs 18:28; Jer 16:6	plows (her) chest like a garden

With a stone he scratches incisions on (his) skin, ^{ooo}		harrows (her) back like a (garden in a) valley.
with a razor he cuts cheeks and chin. ^{ppp}	ppp Isa 15:2; Jer 48:37	Ba ^c lu is dead, what (is to become of) the people,
He harrows his upper arms,		the Son of Dagan (is dead), what (is to become of) the hordes (of the earth)?
plows (his) chest like a garden	qqq Ps 80:6	After Ba ^c lu, we also shall descend into the earth, harrows (his) back like a (garden in a) valley. ²³⁸		with him Šapšu, luminary of the gods, shall descend.
He raises his voice and cries aloud:		She drinks (her) weeping until she is sated,
Ba ^c lu is dead, what (is to become of) the people,		(she drinks her) tears like wine. ^{qqq}
the Son of Dagan (is dead), what (is to become of) the hordes (of the earth)?		(Then) she calls aloud to Šapšu, luminary of the gods:
After Ba ^c lu, I also shall descend into the earth.		Bear for me, please, Mighty Ba ^c lu.
^c Anatu Finds and Buries Ba ^c lu (vi 25 - CTA 6 i 32)		Šapšu, luminary of the gods, agrees:
^c Anatu also goes and searches		She lifts Mighty Ba ^c lu up onto ^c Anatu's shoulder.
every mountain to the heart of the earth,		Once (Šapšu) has placed him (on her shoulder), she takes him up every hill to the heart of the fields. ²³⁹		to the heights of Šapānu.
She arrives at the best part of [the earth], the pasture land,		(There) she weeps for him and buries him, at the most beautiful field on [the edge of] death's realm.		places him down amongst the gods of the underworld.
She [arrives] at where Ba ^c lu was fallen [to the] earth;		She slaughters seventy wild bulls
[for clothing], she is covered with a girded garment. ²⁴⁰		as a GMN (for) Mighty Ba ^c lu; ²⁴²
CTA 6 ²⁴¹		She slaughters seventy domesticated bovids
(Belonging) to (the) Ba ^c lu (cycle).		[as] a GMN (for) Mighty Ba ^c lu;
With a stone she scratches incisions on (her) skin,		[She] slaughters seventy domesticated caprovids
[with a razor] she cuts cheeks and chin.		[as a] GMN (for) Mighty Ba ^c lu;
[She harrows] her upper arms,		[She] slaughters seventy deer
		[as a GMN] (for) Mighty Ba ^c lu;

of "grain," here taken as "straw." Del Olmo Lete (1981:601) observes that the latter meaning is inappropriate with a verb meaning "pour out."

²³⁷ The precise meaning of m²izrt, here interpreted as from the root zr, "to gird," is uncertain. It and an apparently related word u²zr are key terms in the first of the ²Aqhatu texts (see note 3 to text 1.103). A masculine form of the noun may appear in two economic texts in Akk. from Ras Shamra (Nougayrol 1970:99, 100), though that may be a different word.

²³⁸ For the interpretation of this verse, with some previous bibliography, see Dietrich and Loretz 1986c:109. Note that the word here translated "back" is bmt, the same as was used above for the part of the body where ^cAnatu hung the necklace of human heads (see notes 76, 149).

²³⁹ The formulation here, lit., "liver of the earth, liver of the fields," is precisely that of the passages in which ^cAnatu is requested to make peace offerings (see above, note 15). The second of these passages (CTA 3 iii) appears to be in a context of requesting ^cAnatu to abandon her bellicose ways — though the lacuna between cols. ii and iii renders that interpretation uncertain; the first occurrence is in a text too damaged to allow perception of the motivation for this form of address (CTA 1 ii).

²⁴⁰ The bicolon in which ²Ilu was described as pouring dirt and dust on his head (CTA 5 vi 14-16) is here absent; was this by haplography or does it reflect an intentionally different description of ^cAnatu's mourning?

²⁴¹ The left third of this six-column tablet is well preserved, while the upper half of the columns to the right has disappeared. The bottom half of the tablet was discovered during the second campaign at Ras Shamra (1930), the fragment providing the upper part of the left column three years later (editio princeps by Virolleaud 1931, 1934a). As is the case with tablets belonging to the Kirta and ²Aqhatu cycles, this tablet bears as its first line the identification of the story cycle to which it belongs, viz. l b^cl. The preposition l plus the hero's name is so placed on CTA 14, 16, and 19. In the two other cycles the notation is present wherever the upper left corner of the tablet is preserved (the corner of CTA 15, 17, 18 is not preserved). In the Ba^clu cycle, only two tablets have the upper left corner extant, CTA 5 and 6; the archival notation was not inscribed on CTA 5. The use of the preposition l in the archival notation is not to be confused with the lamed auctoris used in the (secondary) headings of several biblical psalms. CTA 6 also has the longest colophon of any tablet of the three cycles mentioned (see below, vi 53-57). On the use of colophons in these texts, see above note 4.

²⁴² The signs {kgmn}, usually taken as the preposition k plus a noun gm, are presently unexplained (for a summary, see Watson 1989b). Because equational phrases are frequently not marked prepositionally in Ug., leaving open the possibility that the four signs denote a single word, and because even gm is open to several etymological explanations, we must await further evidence before we can hope to identify the meaning of the expression with some assurance. The relationship of this phrase to Ba^clu is not marked lexically, probably indicating a construct chain, lit., "(as) the (k)gm of Ba^clu." The animals in the list constitute a mixture of wild and domesticated beasts (on r²um and alp, the first two types mentioned here, see above, note 177). The total list is quite different from the repertory of sacrificial beasts characteristic of the prose ritual texts, and the difference is accentuated by the absence of the term (k)gm in those texts. The terms for domesticated beasts here (alp, "bovid," s²in, "caprovid") are found in the ritual texts whereas the wild animals are absent (r²um, "wild bull," ayl, "deer," y^ci, "wild goat"). If the correct reading in line 28 is {hmrn}, "donkeys" (rather than {y}hmrn, "roebacks," proposed by Ginsberg 1950:158), the word is not the same as that used in the ritual texts for a very particular type of donkey-sacrifice: there the word is r (see Pardee 1991 and forthcoming). Finally, the verb used in this passage is t²bh, rather than db²h, the verb characteristic of the prose ritual texts and which appears in some mythological passages where a divine meal is depicted. (t²bh also appears in descriptions of divine feasts, though more rarely, e.g., CTA 4 vi 40.) This passage varies

[She slaughters] seventy wild goats
[as a GMN] (for) Mighty Ba^clu;
[She slaughters seventy] asses
[as a] GMN (for) Mighty Ba^clu.
...²⁴³
^cAnat Informs ²Ilu of Ba^clu's Death (i 32-43)
Then off she goes to [²Ilu] at the source of the double river,
midst the upspringings of the deeps.
She enters ²Ilu's dwelling, goes into the home of the King, father of Sunama;
At ²Ilu's feet she bows and falls,
does homage and honors him.
She raises her voice and says aloud:
So now let ²Aṭiratu and her sons rejoice,
(let) the goddess (rejoice) and the host of her kin;
For Mighty Ba^clu is dead,
perished the Prince, master of the earth.²⁴⁴
²Ilu and ²Aṭiratu Confer on a Replacement for Ba^clu (i 43-55)
²Ilu cries aloud
to the Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea:
Listen, O Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea:
Give one of your sons that I might make him

III Isa 14:13

king.

The Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea, replies:
Must we not appoint someone as king (who) knows (how) sap flows?²⁴⁵

The Gracious One, the kindly god answers:
One of meager strength cannot run (with Ba^clu), with Ba^clu cannot handle the lance,
(for when he vies) with the son of Dagan, he falls prostrate.²⁴⁶

The Great Lady, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea, replies:
Must we not, then, appoint terrible ^cAṭtaru as king?²⁴⁷
Let terrible ^cAṭtaru be king!

'Terrible' ^cAṭtaru Attempts, Unsuccessfully, to Fill Ba^clu's Role (i 56-?)

Thereupon terrible ^cAṭtaru climbs the heights of Ṣapānu,²⁴⁸
sits on Mighty Ba^clu's seat.²⁴⁸
(But) his feet do not reach the footstool, his head does not reach the top (of the seat).²⁴⁹
(To this) terrible ^cAṭtaru responds:
I will not be king on the heights of Ṣapānu.
Terrible ^cAṭtaru (then) descends,
he descends from the seat of Might Ba^clu,
And rules over the earth, god of it all,²⁵⁰
[...] will draw in jars, considerably, therefore, from the ritual texts, most of which emanate from the royal sacrificial cult as actually practiced at Ugarit in ca. 1200 BCE. Such differences are surely owing to various historical and ideological factors that deserve more extensive treatment than can be given here. Comparing this text with the sacrificial use of game for ²Ilu's table according to RS 24.258 (see n. 4 text 1.97), it appears that the gods were perceived as regularly dining on a combination of wild and domesticated beasts. The use of ṭḥ here may be linked with the funerary nature of these sacrifices, though that can only be an hypothesis based on this passage. (ṭḥ is used in the only certain funerary ritual presently known from Ugarit, RS 34.126 [Bordreuil and Pardee 1991:151-163 and here text 1.105].) It is very unfortunate that the precise meaning of (k)gm escapes us.

²⁴³ Between the list of sacrifices and the following travel formulae there are two damaged lines that have no parallels to permit restoration.

²⁴⁴ ²Aṭiratu's hostility to Ba^clu is here assumed by all protagonists (see above, note 121).

²⁴⁵ Opinions are about evenly divided as to whether ydc ylhn means "he knows, he is intelligent" (ydc + lhn, the latter explained by Arabic lhn, "be intelligent") or "he knows (how) sap flows," or "(how) to make the sap flow, cause moisture" (ydc + lh [geminate root], the latter perhaps attested in a nominal form in the Ug. hippatric texts, text 1.106). The first interpretation assumes that ²Aṭiratu is proposing that the new king be wise, ²Ilu (next verses) that the new king be strong; the second that the new king must be able to provide fertility as does Ba^clu. A reference to intelligence would here be without resonance in the following text (^cAṭtaru is disqualified for physical reasons [lines 59-65], with no mention of intellectual inability), and the second explanation thus appears preferable. If ^cAṭtaru is indeed linked with irrigation (see above, note 48), one might interpret this passage as meaning that in the hilly Levant irrigation is insufficient to make the sap flow everywhere; for that to happen, Ba^clu's lance (mrḥ in ²Ilu's speech that follows) that buds (see note 191) must be properly wielded in order that the rains may fall.

²⁴⁶ There seems to be agreement that the reading at the end line 52 is {ktmsm}, rather than {k . msm}, once proposed by Caquot, Szyner and Herdner 1974:257, note 1. The signs may be divided either as kt msm, "smitten, crushed as to beauty" (he who does not have the requisite beauty of form cannot vie with Ba^clu), or as kms, a form of kms, "fall prostrate" (parallel to npl in CTA 12 ii 54-55). The first solution is problematic lexically (kt is not attested elsewhere in Ug. and is not attested in such a formula in Heb.), the second is problematic both morphologically (in CTA 12 ii 55 the form is tkms, not ktms; the form is here perf., whereas the two previous verbs are in the imperf.) and rhetorically (the two previous verbs denote forms of vying with Ba^clu, this one would denote the result of vying with Ba^clu but the prep. is still ḥm, "with, along with").

²⁴⁷ The interpretation of ^cAṭtaru's title ṣṣ is much debated. Most link the epithet with Heb. ṣṣ (no root ṣṣ is attested in Arabic), which denotes various aspects of inspiring fear, awe, and terror. If this is correct, ²Aṭiratu is agreeing with ²Ilu that the candidate should be someone who shares Ba^clu's physical prowess and is claiming that ^cAṭtaru qualifies. Also, if this interpretation of ṣṣ is correct, it is difficult not to see in the repetition of the epithet in the following section, in which ^cAṭtaru's disqualification is described, an ironic use of the title by the pro-Ba^clu author/scribe.

²⁴⁸ The word used for the throne here is khṭ, which normally appears in second position, parallel to ks'u, "chair, throne."

²⁴⁹ A proper occupant of a throne, with feet on the footstool and tip of the cap touching the back of the throne, is illustrated by a stone statuette of a deity (perhaps ²Ilu) discovered at Ras Shamra in 1988 (Yon 1991:347-348, 351).

²⁵⁰ The phrase here is ḥil khṭ, precisely the same as was used twice above with reference to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu's hegemony in Memphis (see note 19). Because they assume that Ba^clu is king of the earth, some scholars have felt constrained to take ṣṣ here as denoting a particular land (cf. Caquot, Szyner and Herdner 1974:258, n. o). On the other hand, a formal claim to kingship of the earth is not to be found in the various statements regarding Ba^clu's kingship. The closest one comes to the expression of such a concept is in one of his standard titles, zbl b'ṣṣ arṣ, "the Prince, master of the earth," and in the phrase ṣṣ drkt, "the land of (his) domain" [CTA 4 vii 44]. Because of the very specific terminology used in this passage, viz., that ^cAṭtaru climbs (ṣṣ) Mount Ṣapānu to take Ba^clu's throne and descends (yrd) from there when he abandons that throne, it does not appear implausible to interpret ^cAṭtaru's rôle as king of the earth as referring to the earth as flatlands. Such a limited kingship may already have been referred to in CTA 2 iii 17-18 (see above, note 50). This hegemony, though ultimately granted by ²Ilu, may have been

[...] will draw in jugs.

...²⁵¹

^cAnatu Punishes Môtu (ii 4-37)

A day, two days pass

and [Maid²⁵² ^cAnatu] interrogates him.²⁵³

Like the heart of a cow for her calf,

like the heart of a ewe for her lamb,

so is the heart of ^cAnatu after Ba^clu.

She seizes Môtu by the hem of his clothes,

grasps [him] by the extremity of his garment.

She raises her voice and shouts aloud:

You, Môtu, give me my brother!²⁵⁴

Môtu, son of ²Ilu, replies:

(You don't know) what you're asking, Girl
^cAnatu.

I went searching

every mountain to the heart of the earth,

every hill to the heart of the fields.

There were no humans for me to swallow,

no hordes of the earth to swallow.²⁵⁵

I arrived at the best part of the earth, the pasture
land,

at the most beautiful field on the edge of death's realm.

(There) I met up with Mighty Ba^clu,

I took him as (I would) a lamb in my mouth, he was destroyed as a kid (would be) in my crushing jaws.²⁵⁶

(Now) Šapšu, luminary of the gods, glows hot,
the heavens are powerless under the control of Môtu, the son of ²Ilu.

A day, two days pass,

the days become months,

(and) Maid ^cAnatu interrogates him.

Like the heart of a cow for her calf,

like the heart of a ewe for her lamb,

so is the heart of ^cAnatu after Ba^clu.

She seizes Môtu, son of ²Ilu.²⁵⁷

with a knife she splits him, with a winnowing-fork she winnows him,

with fire she burns him,

with grindstones she pulverizes him,

in the field she sows him;

The birds eat his flesh,

the fowl finish off his body parts, flesh(-eaters) grow fat on flesh.²⁵⁸

seen as a vice-regency under Ba^clu's control (in normal times, of course, when Ba^clu is in control). The facts that (1) goddesses have claimed Ba^clu as their king (CTA 3 v 40 [here line 32]; 4 iv 43); (2) Ba^clu's kingship is stated in this and other passages to be "on the heights of Šapānu"; (3) the members of one of the so-called "pantheons," the best known, are described as "the gods of Šapānu" (RS 1.017:1 = CTA 29:1), lead to the conclusion that Ba^clu was somehow seen as the king of the earth in the context of divine contact with the earth at Mount Šapānu. Descriptions of his activities also indicate that the link between mountain tops, storm clouds, and his function as provider of rain were inextricably linked (see particularly the link between the window in his palace and the phenomena of thunder and lightning, above CTA 4 vii 25-37). It appears plausible, therefore, to posit a Ug. conception of Ba^clu as king of mountains and storms and ^cAṭtaru as king of the flat earth, under Ba^clu's control. Whether this concept was linked with the understanding of ^cAṭtaru as god of irrigation (see above nn. 48, 245) or simply with the realities of flatland life, i.e., the need to draw water from wells and springs, cannot be determined from the following broken lines, which seem to contain references to drawing water.

²⁵¹ Approximately thirty-five lines are missing from the beginning of col. ii or too damaged to translate.

²⁵² The title *rh*m, "girl, maid" (< "womb"?) is restored here from line 27; it is used of ^cAnatu only in this passage (cf. note 22 to text 1.87).

²⁵³ In line 27, where the same verbal form, mgth, appears, the antecedent of the suffixed pronoun is not clear from the preceding text; it is clear, however, that Môtu appears immediately before the phrase there. The pronoun is generally considered to refer to Ba^clu, who is named at the end of the following section. One wonders why ^cAnatu would be seeking him out, when she was the one who buried him (below, once Ba^clu has given signs of life, the verb used for seeking him is *bg*l [iv 44]). In CTA 12 i 40 a perfect form of *ng*l appears, modified by the phrase b p^cnh, usually interpreted as "seek on foot" — one wonders, however, why "foot/feet" bears the pronominal suffix. In none of these passages is there a parallel verb to *ng*l, which is often explained by Arabic *ng*l, which can mean "to seek, search, make inquiries." But that verb can also mean "search for information regarding someone," "scrutinize," "accuse," and even "cry out to someone for help." Perhaps we should take the antecedent as Môtu and interpret ^cAnatu's act as somehow related to Môtu's confession in this passage and to her attack on him in the second passage (lines 27-37).

²⁵⁴ For the first time in this text, the relationship between Ba^clu and ^cAnatu is expressed in terms reflecting a sibling relationship (see above, note 190). On the many facets of ^cAnatu's character and on her relationship to Ba^clu, see Pardee 1989-90:464-66 and, more recently, Walls 1992.

²⁵⁵ Lit., "My throat lacked sons of mankind, my throat (lacked) the hordes of the earth."

²⁵⁶ These terms were used by Ba^clu in warning his messengers not to get too close to Môtu (CTA 4 viii 18-20 and note 198). The narrator's version of Ba^clu's death has been lost in one of the lacunae above.

²⁵⁷ See below v 11-19, where Môtu refers to the following treatment by ^cAnat, but with an extended list of acts and significant variations. The problems that have faced the interpreters are: (1) Is the imagery entirely that of grain processing? (2) If so, why is this particular imagery used for Môtu, god of death? Although neither here nor above is a perfectly sequential depiction of how grain is processed, because some of the acts in this list are specifically related to grain processing, it is very likely that the rest of the expressions are so to be interpreted. For a cogent interpretation, esp. of the act of burning, as representing grain processing see Healey 1983b. In that context, "splitting with a knife/sword (bg^c + hrb)" refers to the process of cutting up by threshing, even though one might expect terminology closer to a description of threshing by a sledge that has sharp points fixed on its underside (Heb. hārāṣ). Because ^cAnatu's acts, even with the exaggerated variants claimed by Môtu below in col. v, did not succeed in eradicating her victim, the explanation of the use of grain imagery is plausibly linked, as many scholars have thought, pointing out the similar idea in John 12:24, with the visible signs of death that accompany the planting of seed, followed by the reappearance of life. Because of several parallels, Moses' destruction of the golden calf (Exod 32:20) is often cited as parallel to these acts. The fact, however, that the objects destroyed and the literary presentations are quite different precludes an identical interpretation of the two passages — until the very end of the second account here (Môtu's version in v 11-19 [see n. 271]) the terms used to describe the destruction of a flesh-and-blood Môtu reflect agricultural realities, while the Exod passage describes the destruction of a metal object in terms more or less applicable to food preparation.

²⁵⁸ Because the form ysh, from the hollow root sh, "to cry out," is frequent in Ug., the word ysh here in line 37 has usually been given the same interpretation. "Flesh crying out to flesh" hardly makes sense in this context, however, where we would expect the "flesh" in question to be Môtu's, and it appears likely, therefore, that we are dealing with a homograph. nsh is attested in Syrian Arabic in the meaning "grow fat."

259 In a Dream ʔIlu Understands that Baʕlu has Revived (iii 1-21)²⁶⁰ [... that Mighty Baʕlu is dead,] that the Prince, [master of the earth], has perished. And if Mighty [Baʕlu] is alive, if the Prince, lord of [the earth], exists (again), In a dream of the Gracious One, the kindly god, in a vision of the Creator of creatures, The heavens will rain down oil, the wadis will run with honey.²⁶¹ Then I'll know that Mighty Baʕlu is alive, that the Prince, master of the earth, exists (again). In a dream of the Gracious One, the kindly god, in a vision of the Creator of creatures, The heavens rain down oil, the wadis run with honey. (This) brings joy to the Gracious One, the kindly god, he taps his feet on the footstool his brow unfurrows and he laughs. He raises his voice and cries out: (Now) I can again get some rest, my innermost being can get some rest,²⁶¹ For Mighty Baʕlu is alive, the Prince, master of the earth, exists (again). ʔIlu Seeks Confirmation of the Dream (iii 22 - iv) ʔIlu calls aloud to Girl ʕAnatu:	ss Ezek 32:14; Joel 4:18; Job 20:17 ss Prov 1:9	Listen, Girl ʕAnatu: (Go) say to Šapšu, luminary of the gods: Dried up are the furrows of the fields, O Šapšu, dried up are the furrows of ʔIlu's fields, Baʕlu is neglecting the furrows of the plowland.²⁶² Where is Mighty Baʕlu? Where is the Prince, master of the earth? (So) Girl ʕAnat leaves, she heads off for Šapšu, luminary of the gods.²⁶³ She raises her voice and says aloud: Message of the Bull, your father ʔIlu, word of the Gracious One, your sire.²⁶⁴ Dried up are the furrows of the fields, O Šapšu, dried up are the furrows of ʔIlu's fields, Baʕlu is neglecting the furrows of the plowland. Where is Mighty Baʕlu? Where is the Prince, master of the earth? Šapšu, luminary of the gods, replies: Pour sparkling wine in (your) tent, Put garlands on your kinfolk,²⁶⁵ For I will go looking for Baʕlu.²⁶⁶ Girl ʕAnatu replies: Wherever you go, O Šapšu, wherever you go, ʔIlu will protect [you], [...] will protect you. ...²⁶⁶ Baʕlu Gets Revenge, Resumes His Kingly Estate (v 1-6) Baʕlu seizes the sons of ʔAtiratu,
--	---	---

Perhaps the repetition of šʕir, "flesh," denotes the consumption of flesh and the resultant fattening of the consumers.

²⁵⁹ There is a short double horizontal line at the bottom of col. ii. Because the beginning of col. iii is lost (some forty lines), destroying the data for the sequence of the text from one column to the other, we have no way of determining the function of the double line here.

²⁶⁰ Apparently someone has claimed to ʔIlu (or ʔIlu is soliloquizing) that Baʕlu is alive. He responds that Baʕlu's death has been proven to him and he will only believe that Baʕlu is alive if in a dream he sees the effects of the weather deity's return, which indeed occurs. Though it appears clear that Mōtu's demise has permitted Baʕlu's revival, the precise circumstances are lost in the lacuna at the beginning of col. iii (see preceding note), as are those attendant on the discovery of his whereabouts at the beginning of col. iv.

²⁶¹ Lit., "and my gullet can rest in my chest" (see above, note 203).

²⁶² This verse and the corresponding verse below in Šapšu's reply to this message (lines 42-44) have inspired extremely diverse interpretations. The translation offered here follows somewhat of a consensus; it reflects an interpretation according to which ʔIlu has seen signs of renewed fertility in a dream whereas reality on the ground has not yet changed. Hence his question in the following verse. The passage would be paraphrasable as: I have seen rain in a dream but the fields are still parched; so where is Baʕlu? Another form of interpretation, for which I have not been able to devise a credible philological analysis, is theoretically plausible, one that sees in ʔIlu's message an affirmation of the content of the dream rather than a contrast with the conditions viewed in the dream (paraphrased: I have seen fertility in a dream, something positive is happening in the fields, but Baʕlu hasn't shown up yet. Where is he?). Two negative factors in the consensus interpretation make one seek a better one: (1) The structure of this verse could be tighter — specifically: it starts off in a form appropriate for what has been called "staircase" parallelism (Greenstein 1977) but as here interpreted does not follow that pattern. (2) In Šapšu's reply there are several words that resemble (parts of) words in this verse (šd, ʕn, ʕf) but there is no semantic correspondence — are we missing something or do the correspondences operate solely on the phonetic level?

²⁶³ Note that Šapšu, here and in RS 24.244 (text 1.94), does not have a fixed domicile, like the other gods to whom messages are taken in both texts, not even so broad a one as the heavens (like Šahru-wa-Šalimu in RS 24.244:51-56), plausibly because she constantly circulates in the heavens and through the netherworld. In this context it is also to be noted that the solar deity in Ug. culture does not have a multiplicity of hypostases, each linked with a different place, and is thus unlike other major Ug. deities, such as Baʕlu and Rašap.

²⁶⁴ Previously, ʔIlu has only called himself "your sire" (hikk) when addressing ʕAnatu (see above, note 13). Furthermore, it can be said that if Šapšu is considered in this story cycle to take sides (see above, note 190), it is on the side of Baʕlu and ʕAnatu. The use of hik appears, therefore, to denote a relationship of these goddesses to ʔIlu that is different from his relationship to the sons of ʔAtiratu, who are Baʕlu's enemies.

²⁶⁵ The first verse of Šapšu's reply, a bicolon, clearly corresponds to the first verse of ʔIlu's message, which was a tricolon, while her reply to ʔIlu's double question takes the form of a single utterance. As interpreted here, the reply offers reassurance in two forms, a command to relax and rejoice, motivated by the promise on Šapšu's part to seek (and hence to find) Baʕlu. The word "kinfolk" (ʕumuk), the same as is used for Kirta's family at the beginning of that story (CTA 14 i 6 [text 1.102]), is derived from the basic word ʕum ("mother"), hence "family, immediate kin, kin on the mother's side." The term seems to reflect ʔIlu's use above of the familial term hik (see previous note). On the phonetic correspondences between ʔIlu's message and this reply, see note 262.

²⁶⁶ There are some forty lines at the end of col. iv that have either completely disappeared or are too broken to translate.

numerous (as they are) he smites them with the sword, crushers (as they are) he smites them with the mace;²⁶⁷

Môtu's scorching heat he tramples to the ground.²⁶⁸
Ba^clu [takes his place] on his royal throne,
[on (his) resting-place], on the seat of his dominion.

Môtu Seeks His Own Form of Revenge (v 7-?)

The days turn into months,
the months into years.

In the seventh year,
Môtu, son of ²Ilu, [comes] to Mighty Ba^clu.

He raises his voice and says aloud:

On account of you, Ba^clu, I experienced abase-ment,
on account of you I experienced winnowing with <the winnowing-fork, on account of you I experienced splitting with >²⁶⁹ the knife,
on account of you I experienced burning in fire, on account of you [I experienced] pulverization with grindstones, on account of [you] I experienced [being strained] with a sieve,²⁷⁰
on account of you I experienced [scattering] in the fields,

Deut
33:17

on account of you I experienced sowing in the sea.²⁷¹

(So) give one of your brothers (for) I would devour
(him) and the anger with which I (now) am sick would go away.

If one of your brothers [...] then [...].

Now I eat [men],

I finish off the hordes [of the earth].²⁷²

The Final Battle (vi 10-22)²⁷³

Here now Ba^clu has given (me) my own brothers to devour,
my own siblings to finish off.

He returned to Ba^clu on the heights of Šapānu, raised his voice and said aloud:

You have given (me), Ba^clu, my own brothers to devour,

my own siblings to finish off.

They eye each other like finished (warriors),²⁷⁴

Môtu is strong, Ba^clu is strong;

They butt each other like wild bulls,²⁷⁵

Môtu is strong, Ba^clu is strong;

They bite each other like snakes,

Môtu is strong, Ba^clu is strong;

They trample each other like running (animals),²⁷⁵

Môtu falls, Ba^clu falls.

²⁶⁷ If the explanation of dkym (dākiyāma) by comparison with Heb. dokyām in Ps 93:3 is valid, the sons of ²Aṭiratu are here being explicitly described as the innumerable waves of the sea, an important element in the explanation of ²Aṭiratu's title (see above, note 98).

²⁶⁸ A phenomenon similar to šhr mu, with the first word taken either as singular, "Môtu's heat," or as plural, "the scorching/scorched ones of Môtu," has occurred previously in this cycle as extant only as a feature of the sun (see above, note 107). The state of the text does not allow us to determine whether this expression is a reference to that set of formulae or whether an expression closer to the form of this one occurred in a passage now lost. Because Šapānu, when active, has heretofore been an ally of Ba^clu and ^cAnatu, rather than of Môtu, it would appear more likely that the sun's scorching heat was viewed as involuntary, produced under coercion from Môtu, and to conclude that it is the scorching heat itself or some agents of heat (masculine in gender, while Šapānu is feminine) whom Ba^clu treats here as allies of the sons of ²Aṭiratu. The verb for Ba^clu's treatment of the šhr mu here is mšh, the same as that by which ^cAnatu threatens ²Ilu in CTA 3 v 1, and as the one by which the fourth event of Ba^clu's fight with Môtu is described here below in vi 20. The precise meaning of the verb is uncertain and a meaning associated with feet is based only on the simile "like runners" in vi 21.

²⁶⁹ The picture of "winnowing with a knife/sword" does not make sense (one does indeed cut up the grain before winnowing, but that is a different process) and it appears necessary, therefore, to compare this passage with the description above of ^cAnatu's acts (ii 30-37) and, in spite of the differences between the two passages, see here a case of haplography.

²⁷⁰ Some, minimizing the difference between what a "sieve" (kbrī) does and what winnowing consists of, restore {[dr]y}, "to winnow," here. Because only the last consonant of the verb is extant ([...y]), another verb denoting the process of putting through a sieve, proper to grading flour by coarseness, should be restored.

²⁷¹ In the description of ^cAnatu's acts (ii 34-35), Môtu was "sown" in the field (dr^c + šd). Here the same verb is used, but the complement is b ym, "in the sea." That the root dr^c* can be used metaphorically for acts similar to sowing seed in dirt is proven by Judg 9:45, where salt is sown (zr^c). There are three particularly interesting aspects to this assertion by Môtu: (1) that his claim is so blatantly different from ^cAnatu's act described above; (2) that the act in the form here described would indeed, under normal circumstances, bring about the true death of the seed, which could not germinate in the sea; (3) that the sea (Yammu) has in this cycle consistently been linked with ²Aṭiratu and her sons as an enemy of Ba^clu. Is Môtu claiming here that even if he were chopped up and scattered in the sea, ²Aṭiratu of the Sea would see that he survived?

²⁷² Lines 21-25 are badly damaged. This verse is plausibly restored on the basis of the word hml[š], consistently used in this cycle to describe the human race. See esp. ii 17-19, where Môtu claims to have killed Ba^clu because there were no humans available. The first word, nt, seems best taken as an adverb (cf. Heb. attāh). The previous verse cannot be restored, but seems to provide the link between Ba^clu, one of his brothers, and the human race, the line of thought being that if Ba^clu is willing to give up one of his brothers, Môtu will leave him, Ba^clu, alone and return to his normal prey, human beings. After these lines, there are three more poorly preserved lines, then a lacuna of some twenty-five lines.

²⁷³ The first nine lines of this column are too badly damaged to translate. There is a reference to "his/her seven lads" (šb^ct glnh) and Môtu is mentioned twice. Môtu is apparently addressing a message to someone regarding Ba^clu's refusal to give up one of his brothers, an affront that is compounded by the proposal that Môtu should devour one of his own brothers. In lines 1-2 the two verbs trd and grš are often restored in third person forms ([{yt}rdh] and [{yg}rsh]). One should envisage the possibility of this being part of a direct speech from Môtu and of restoring first person forms here: "I will expel... I will drive out," with Ba^clu as the object.

²⁷⁴ For differences between this battle and that between Ba^clu and Yammu, see Bordreuil and Pardee 1993:66-67 (contrast Smith 1994:94, 101).

²⁷⁵ On the meaning of mšh, see above, note 268. In Akk. the verb lasāmu, "to run," is common and is frequently used for animals. Here the

Šapšu Intervenes (vi 22-29)

On high Šapšu cries out to Mōtu:
 Please listen, O Mōtu, son of ʾIlū:
 How can you fight with Mighty Baʿlu?
 How can the Bull, your father ʾIlū, continue to listen to you (if you do)?
 Surely he would pull up the foundations of your
 seat,
 overturn the throne of your kingship,
 break the staff of your rulership.

Mōtu Capitulates (vi 30-?)

Mōtu, son of ʾIlū, is afraid, frightened, the beloved warrior of ʾIlū.
 Mōtu arises at (the sound of) her voice,
 he [lifts up his voice and says aloud]:²⁷⁶
 Let them place Baʿlu [on] his royal [throne], on [(his) resting-place, on the seat of] his dominion.
 ...²⁷⁷

Praise to Šapšu and her Allies (vi 42-52)

Also, please eat the bread of oblation, drink the wine that is presented (to you).²⁷⁸
 Šapšu, you rule the Rapaʾūma,
 Šapšu, you rule the divine ones;²⁷⁹
 In your entourage are the gods,
 even the (divinized) dead.
 In your entourage is Kōṭaru your companion,
 and Ḥasīsu whom you know well.
 In the sea are ʾArišu (Demander) and the dragon;
 may Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu drive (them) out!
 may Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu drive (them) away!²⁸⁰

Colophon (vi 53-57)²⁸¹

The scribe: ʾIlīmilkū the Šubbanite, disciple of ʾAttānu-purulini,²⁸² (who is) chief of the priests
 (and) chief of the cultic herdsmen; tāʿiyu-official of Niqmaddu, (who is) king of Ugarit, lord (of) YRGB, (and) master (of) TRMN.²⁸³

image is apparently that of an animal such as a horse or bull inflicting damage with its feet.

²⁷⁶ Hypothetical restoration, assuming that Mōtu accedes and proclaims Baʿlu's kingship.

²⁷⁷ Some nine lines are badly preserved. In them is a reference to a corner (pʾit), to womenfolk (ʿinš), and to someone arriving (l tšql).

²⁷⁸ Judging from the following verses, this invitation is addressed to Šapšu. The word here translated "oblation" appears to be from the same root as Heb. ʿrūmā, though the form is different (trmnu), both from that form and from what appears to be the same word in a Ug. ritual text (trmt in RS 1.005:3). The phrase "that is presented (to you)" represents a nominal phrase, tšqyt, a t-preformative noun from the same root as was used above for the gifts offered to ʾAṭiratu (CTA 4 i 23, iii 26, 29, 35) and to ʾIlū (CTA 4 ii 11, iii 31).

²⁷⁹ thk is often taken as the prepositional phrase "under you," but the presence here of the oblique form of the word for the shades of the dead (rpʾim) indicates that the analysis as a verbal form, i.e. hṭk, "exercise (parental) authority over," is preferable. Šapšu is presented here as in constant communication with the denizens of the underworld, into whose realm she enters every night, and with Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu, the craftsman deity, whose principal dwellings were earthly (Crete and Memphis [see above, note 19]) but whose workings with metals take him into the bowels of the earth. Her contact with the deified dead allows her to preside over ceremonies to which they are invited (RS 34.126 [text 1.105]) and, though no text presently known makes this explicit, may have allowed her to funnel blessings from the deified dead to the reigning king (cf. RS 24.252 [Pardee 1988a:75-118], which deals with such blessings, but without mention of Šapšu in its current, rather poor, state).

²⁸⁰ There is no agreement on the interpretation of the two verbs in this verse, yd and ytr, some seeing here verbs denoting travel, others verbs of driving out. The latter interpretation provides a coherent interpretation of the passage, i.e., a motivation for the mention of ʾArišu and the dragon between the two mentions of Kōṭaru-wa-Ḥasīsu, but it presents the narratological problem of introducing a new rôle for the craftsman deity, one that no previous text in this cycle led us to suspect, that of actively expelling the enemies of Baʿlu. Both enemies have been mentioned above, in a speech by ʿAnatu apparently referring to her own activities on behalf of Baʿlu (CTA 3 iii 37, 40 [here lines 40, 43]).

²⁸¹ This is the longest of the colophons on the extant tablets from the three major cycles. One of the ʾAqhatu tablets, CTA 17, bore a colophon limited to the beginning of this one, i.e., through "ʾAttānu-purulini" (see note 53 to text 1.103). The only other colophon preserved on the tablets of the Baʿlu cycle (CTA 4) identifies ʾIlīmilkū in terms of the royal affiliation rather than in these terms relating to his scribal training. The colophon to CTA 16, one of the Kirta tablets, identifies ʾIlīmilkū only as a tāʿiyu-official.

²⁸² ʾIlīmilkū's hometown of Šubbanu has not been localized with certainty (for bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:489). On the interpretation of ʾIlīmilkū's master's name, see van Soldt 1989.

²⁸³ Because there are no explicit indicators of which titles belong to ʾIlīmilkū and which to his superiors, the attribution of the titles "chief of the priests (and) chief of the cultic herdsmen" (rb khnm rb nqdm) to ʾAttānu-purulini, and "lord of YRGB, (and) master of TRMN" (ʿadn yrgb bʿl trmn) to Niqmaddu is deduced from the variant forms of the ʾIlīmilkū colophons. Neither priests nor cultic herdsmen are mentioned in the ritual texts, but the terms are regular components in the lists of occupations, a genre of administrative document well attested at Ugarit. That the basic meaning of khnm was "priest" seems certain from comparative considerations, but the precise status and the functions of the priests at Ugarit cannot be determined without additional textual material. The interpretation "cultic herdsmen" for nqdm is derived from Heb., where nōqēd denotes someone who raises cattle, and from the association with khnm in the Ug. lists of occupations. From this association, it may be assumed that they were in charge of the herds necessary for the royal sacrificial cult. Niqmaddu's titles "lord (of) YRGB, (and) master (of) TRMN" have inspired rather fantastic theories. For lack of data, no interpretation is certain. The most likely interpretations are that these terms are either geographical, with no presumption as to the thirteenth-century realities behind the ideological usage of the terms, or verbal/adjectival epithets, "lord (who) is/does RGB, master (who is) TRMN." The root rgb appears in two divine hypostases that are a part of a longer list of such hypostases, yrgbbʿl and yrgbbʿim (RS 24.246:16, 22 [see Pardee forthcoming ad loc.]), where the verbal element plausibly means "he inspires awe." No such explanation is immediately obvious for trmn (there is a divine name so spelled, but that deity corresponds to the Anatolian deity Šarrumannu).

REFERENCES

Astour 1980; Attridge and Oden 1981; Baumgarten 1981; Bordreuil 1991; Bordreuil and Pardee 1991; 1993; forthcoming; Brooke 1979; Caquot 1992; Caquot, Sznycer, and Herdner 1974; Cassuto 1938; Caubet and Poplin 1987; Clifford 1972; Dietrich and Loretz 1978b; 1986c; Dijkstra and de Moor 1975; Driver 1956; Durand 1993; Freilich 1992; Gachet 1992; Gibson 1978; Ginsberg 1941; 1950; Gordon 1947; Greenstein 1977; Healey 1983b; Held 1973; Herdner 1963; Korpel 1990; Lambert 1985; Margalit 1983; Meier 1986; de Moor 1968; 1971; 1987; Niehr 1994; Nougayrol 1968; 1970; del Olmo Lete 1981; Pardee 1980; 1984; 1987; 1988a; 1988b; 1988c; 1989-90; 1991; forthcoming; Pope 1955; 1977b; Ribichini and Xella 1984; Rummel 1978; Sanmartín 1978; Schaeffer 1949; 1954; Smith 1986; 1994; Van Soldt 1989; 1991; Vaughn 1993; Virolleaud 1931; 1932; 1934a; 1934b; 1935; 1938; 1944-45; Walls 1992; Watson 1980; 1989b; Williams-Forte 1983; Yon 1989; 1990; 1991.

DAWN AND DUSK (1.87)
(The Birth of the Gracious and Beautiful Gods)

Dennis Pardee

The text recounting the birth of the double deity Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu, "Dawn and Dusk," constitutes one of the most important of the texts discovered during the early years of excavations at Ras Shamra and which stand outside the principal cycles of texts (Ba^clu, Kirta, and ²Aqhatu). The text is inscribed on a single tablet, discovered during the second campaign in the building located between the two principal temples and which is known as the "High Priest's Library" (editio princeps by Virolleaud 1933). The tablet is relatively well preserved and the text on it appears to have been complete, for not only are both the upper and lower edges extant, with neither archival notation on the former nor colophon on the latter, but there is space for at least one more line of writing at the bottom of the verso which the scribe has left blank.

The text has two peculiar features: (1) it deals with the origin and characteristics of what must be judged, on the basis of other Ugaritic texts, to be a pair of relatively minor deities; (2) the text itself contains rubric indications which have been interpreted as reflecting a cultic usage of the text.

As regards the first point, there are two indications as to why the birth of Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu may be thought to have occupied a particular position in Ugaritic thought. The first is visible in the mythological narrative of this text, viz., that the mothers of these deities are not described with terms characteristic of divinity, indeed are termed simply ²atm, "two women." We seem to be dealing, therefore, with the motif of divine engenderment well known in classical literature, in this case the impregnation by the god ²Ilu of two human females, who each give birth to one of the deities who make up the pair Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu.¹ Though a text identifiable as a theogony has not appeared yet among the Ugaritic literature, the fact that the goddess ²Atiratu bears the title of qnyt ²ilm, "progenitress of the gods," has led most scholars to see her as the divine mother of ²Ilu's central family, known in the ritual texts as bn ²il, dr bn ²il, and mphrt bn ²il, "the sons of ²Ilu," "the circle of the sons of ²Ilu," and "the assembly of the sons of ²Ilu." In one of these texts ²Ilu bears the title of ab bn ²il, "the father of the sons of ²Ilu," and in the mythological texts he bears the name of bny bnwt, "the producer (lit. builder) of progeny (lit. that which is built)." Into this picture may be introduced the facts that the deity Šalimu is the last deity named in the two "pantheon" texts known at Ugarit up to the present (on RS 1.017 and RS 24.643, see Pardee forthcoming) and that he is the last deity named in a sacrificial sequence repeated in three texts (RS 1.001:8, RS 1.003:17, RS 18.056:18 — see Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.001:8). The identification of this deity with one member of the binomial Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu appears plausible, though not certain, and his place in the pantheon may be interpreted as indicating that he was seen as the deity who most appropriately brought up the rear of the procession of the gods. In the light of the present myth, the rank of the deity is perhaps best interpreted as reflecting his birth, not by ²Atiratu and perhaps, to the extent that time was a factor in divine genealogy, after ²Ilu's children by ²Atiratu. The double deity Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu also appears in a rather enigmatic ritual text of which the central part is a list of divine names (RS 24.271:11, see Virolleaud 1968:583-586). On these matters see the bibliographical data and discussions in Pardee 1989-90:456-458 and forthcoming.

These details concerning Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu may be of use in identifying the "gracious gods" (²ilm n^cmm), mentioned in lines 1, 23, and 67 (in line 60 the text has ²ilmy n^cmm), who are sometimes identified with Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu, sometimes not. The sequence of the presentation requires either that they be seen as born after Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu or that they be identified with Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu whose birth would have been twice reported. The former solution appears narratologically the more plausible, but it requires that the description of the "gracious gods" as having "(one) lip to the earth, (the other) lip to the heavens" (lines 61-62) be applied to an unknown group of divinities, whereas that description and the following lines seem quite graphically to describe the gods of dawn and dusk. If Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu are indeed somehow identifiable with the single deity Šalimu, it is in any case unlikely that the "gracious gods" are to be identified with the rest of the Ugaritic deities or even with the majority of ²Ilu's offspring, as many scholars have thought, for there is simply no reason to believe that the circumstances described by this poem correspond to the circumstances of the birth of the children of ʔAṭiratu. It appears preferable, therefore, to see the double birth narrative simply as a narrative device expressing the birth by two women of two deities. This position is defended below in the note to lines 55-64. According to that interpretation, the text has as its central focus from beginning to end the deities Dawn and Dusk, who are, in this text, ascribed significant powers of blessing.

¹ This motif appears again in Ugaritic but in a text even more difficult than this one, CTA 12 (Herdner 1963, text 12).

The second peculiarity, in comparison with the other mythological texts, is the organization of this text. The first twenty-nine lines are divided by horizontal lines across the tablet into nine sections, some of which seem to contain snippets of mythological texts, bearing motifs both familiar and unfamiliar, while others contain indications of liturgical activity, though the identity of the participants is not clear. Then the rest of the text, lines 30-76, relates, without a break by horizontal lines, the story of the birth of Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu, the "gracious gods" (lines 30-64), their characteristics and banishment to the desert (lines 64-67), and a final section dealing with the discovery by the "gracious gods" of agricultural products (lines 67-76). Beyond the basic problems of interpretation of the first nine sections, the matter of their relationship to the principal myth has exercised the minds of students of this text, with some seeing the short mythological texts as mere incipits, unrelated to the longer story, while others have attempted to discern an overarching story line. The intermingling of liturgical rubrics and mythological elements seems to favor the latter interpretation, for although one could without difficulty picture a tablet inscribed with a series of incipits, it is more difficult to posit the existence of an aleatory liturgical text from the ancient Near East. The motifs of agricultural plenty of the first sections may provide the pattern for the myth, according to which Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu are born voracious devourers of birds and fish who must be put in a situation where they will desire to live, like the other gods, from the produce of the fields (cf. Caquot, Szymer and Herdner 1974:363-64). To the extent that this myth is reflected in the ritual prescriptions written in prose, one may assume the domestication of Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu to have succeeded, for, as mentioned above, Šalimu appears in those texts, and his diet is no different from that of any of the other deities. These facts regarding the divine diet may be interpreted as reflecting general Ugaritic sacrificial practice, where the deities normally receive the products of agricultural activity rather than of fishing and fowling;² this sacrificial practice would in turn reflect alimentary patterns in the ancient Levant (cf. Houston 1993). One could posit a view of the universe in which the alimentary world reflected by the sacrificial system is viewed as an improvement, because of the organized distribution of agricultural products that it implies, over a more primitive system, more dependent on nature's whims, presented here as one in which the voracity of certain spoiled children of ʔIlu could provoke shortages and famine.

Is it possible to identify the ceremony at which this liturgical series would have been played out? There is one specific feature and one of a more general nature that may serve to fix this ceremony in the cultic cycle. The specific feature is the mention of "dwellings of the gods, eight ..." in line 19 (mlbt ʔilm tmm), for that phrase finds its closest parallel in a ritual text (RS 1.003:50-51, see text 1.95 below) where "dwellings (of the gods)" are distributed four by four on a roof, probably that of the temple of ʔIlu, on the first day of an unnamed month that follows the month named Raʔšu Yēni, "the beginning of the wine." Though most scholars have seen the text as referring to only one month and have assumed Raʔšu Yēni to have been the first month of the year, the structure of RS 1.003 and a host of other arguments indicate that Raʔšu Yēni was in all likelihood the last month of the year, the lunar month preceding the fall equinox, during which the grape harvest and vinification would have begun, and that the ceremony indicated in RS 1.003:50-55 is that of the first month of the new year³. As in the Hebrew system, where the feast of "booths" (sukkot) began on the fifteenth day of the first month of the year (according to the calendar beginning in fall), the Ugaritic harvest festival would have taken place after the August-September harvest, though RS 1.003 indicates that at Ugarit it began on the first day of the new month/year, rather than the fifteenth. The more general feature of this text to which reference was made above is the mention of "wine" in lines 6 and 75 and the several allusions to viticultural activities, particularly appropriate for a harvest festival.

Because of the liturgical aspects of this text and the conception of Šaḥru-wa-Šalimu recounted in it, this text has been interpreted as reflecting the sacred marriage rite, the hieros gamos, at Ugarit (e.g., de Moor 1987:117-118). Though this interpretation appears plausible, to the extent that the first sections are interpreted liturgically and linked to the following myth, it must be stressed that this text provides no details whatever regarding the liturgical aspects of the hieros gamos itself, i.e., to what extent the various rôles were acted out and the specifics of the rite. On the hieros gamos in Mesopotamia, for which a greater number of details are known, see Cooper (1993).

² On birds as offerings in the Ug. ritual texts, see note 18 to RS 24.266 (text 1.88); fish appear extremely rarely in those texts (see Pardee forthcoming on RS 19.015:12 and RS 24.250+:22). In this text the products of the hunt occupy an intermediary position (the goddess Raḥmay hunts [line 16] and the "gracious gods" hunt during their stay in the steppe-land [line 68]). Game occupies an important place in the feast depicted in one of the "para-mythological" texts (Pardee 1988a:23-35 [text 1.97]), is mentioned in the Kirta text as a sacrificial item (CTA 14 ii 79 [text 1.102]), but appears rarely, if at all, in the prose ritual texts (Pardee forthcoming "Conclusions").

³ See Pardee (forthcoming) for this interpretation of RS 1.003; for the interpretation of the present text as reflecting the New Year's festival, see de Moor 1987:117-118.

Invitation (lines 1-7)

I would call on⁴ a the gr[acious]⁵ gods[...] and beautiful, sons of⁶ [...],Who have provided a city on high,⁷[...] in the steppe-land, on the barren hilltops⁸ b [...][...] on their⁹ heads, and [...].a Deut 32:3*b* Jer 4:11;
12:12*c* Prov 4:17;
9:5; 23:6*d* Ps 75:9;
Prov 9:5*e* Job 8:6Eat the food, yes do,^cDrink the foaming wine,^d yes do.¹⁰Give well-being^e to the king,¹¹ give well-being to the queen, to those who enter and to those who stand guard.¹²*Mutu-wa-Šarru Joins the Feast* (lines 8-11)Mutu-wa-Šarru takes a seat,¹³

⁴ The use of qr here indicates an invitation, as in RS 34.126 (text 1.105; cf. Saracino 1982:196), rather than a purely lyrical invocation (cf. ʾašr, "I would sing," first word in CTA 24). The entirety of lines 1-7 thus constitute an invitation to the "gracious gods," who are first described (lines 1-5), then explicitly invited (line 6), then urged to bless the main officials of the city (line 7). The "gracious gods" are invited again in line 23, their birth is mentioned in the main mythological section after that of Šahrū-wa-Šalimu (either as identical to Šahrū-wa-Šalimu or as separate entities — see the introduction), and they are then the principal protagonists until the end of the text.

⁵ In English, this has become somewhat of a conventional translation of the phrase ʾilm n^cmm, though in Ug. it means simply "good gods," n^cmm being the primary adjective for expressing goodness, ʾb the secondary one, that is, the distribution is just the opposite of the one in biblical Heb.

⁶ There is simply no way of knowing whether {bn š^[-][...]} is to be restored as bn šrm (cf. šrm in line 22), as bn špm (cf. špm in line 4), or with an entirely different word in second position (cf. Foley 1987 and Hettner 1989-90:82, n. 10).

⁷ Given the state of the tablet, it appears improper to see as the subject of yym at the beginning of line 3 anyone but the ʾilm n^cmm, though the mythological reference is unknown. The last words of this line as preserved, {l^cly[...]}, may be interpreted either as a compound adverbial phrase, complete ("at the high place"), or as an indirect object phrase, of which the last letters have been lost, e.g., l^cly[nm], "for the exalted ones." Because there is no further reference in this text to a city and because the next line mentions the "steppe-land" (mḏbr), itself an important feature in the dénouement of the drama, one may perhaps see here an opposition between the steppe-land, treated rather negatively in this text (see lines 64-76), and civilization, referred to in agricultural terms at the very end of the text. In such an interpretation, the "city" mentioned here would be a paragon of cultured civilization, hence, perhaps, Ugarit itself, and "on high" would refer to the imposing height of an earthly city on its mound, rather than to a heavenly city (the latter concept is, in any case, absent from Ug. literature).

⁸ mḏbr špm is plausibly a construct phrase, "in the steppe-land (consisting) of barren hill-tops." The translation "dunes" for špm, which one encounters too frequently, is entirely inappropriate, for mḏbr does not denote a Sahara-like desert, generally absent in Syria-Palestine, but the scrub that lies beyond the arable land, which is usually suitable as pasture for the mixed herds of sheep and goats so typical of the area (Heb. šōṭn, Ug. š²tn), and which may vary considerably in the amount of moisture received and hence in vegetation. špm will denote, therefore, the hilltops in the scrub land, which can themselves be either bare or covered with lower scrub than the valleys. On the other hand, because the damaged state of the tablet means that our division of the text into poetic lines is uncertain, špm could be a term further describing the "gracious gods," like yym a participle, though of what verb would be uncertain (cf. Gibson 1978:123). The "steppe-land" (mḏbr), in any case, reappears below, both as the area to which the women and their offspring are temporarily banished (lines 64-67) and as marking the outer fringe of the arable land (šdl/p² at mḏbr, "field // edges of the steppe-land," line 68).

⁹ The antecedent of the pronoun is probably the "gracious gods," still being referred to in the third person (cf. note 4).

¹⁰ By etymology the word hmr may include a notion of bubbling and foaming, which de Moor (1987:119, n. 11) has interpreted as denoting wine still close to the process of fermentation. If the semantics of the word had not already moved beyond this sense (cf. Aram., where hmr is the standard word for "wine"), de Moor's appeal to it as proof that this text reflects a New Year's ceremony would be a valid one, for at the time of the autumn equinox in the third week of September the new wine would still be bubbling.

¹¹ In the phrases šlm mlk, etc., šlm may be parsed as imperative (D-stem), addressed to the "gracious gods," and thus parallel to lhm, "eat," and šty, "drink," in the preceding verse. From the standard epistolary formula ʾilm tgrk tšlmk, "may the gods guard you and keep you well," it is clear that the effecting of šlm was considered to be a standard function of the deities. The syntax here is different from that of RS 34.126:31-34 (šlm mḥr²i ...), where šlm is a noun in construct with the following word (see Bordreuil and Pardee 1982:123, 128; Bordreuil and Pardee 1991:154-55, 162; Pardee 1993:209-210; Pardee forthcoming), though the active agents in both cases would be the deities invited to the ceremony (see the introduction and note 4). The usual translation of šlm here as a simple wish ("peace be with...") or greeting ("hail to ..."), besides the syntactic problem posed by the absence of a preposition in this context, leaves partially unmotivated the invitation tendered to the "gracious gods" in line 1. In this interpretation, the gods are not invited simply to feast but subsequently to bless the rulers of the city (the situation is thus very similar, though it is expressed differently, to that of RS 34.126).

¹² The "enterers" (ʿrbm) appear three times here below (lines 12, 18, 26) but not in other texts. The verb ʿrb is the standard verb denoting "to enter" in Ug. and is used in a variety of situations. The only common cultic use of the verb is with a deity as subject, entering the palace (bt mlk). Because there is no indication here that the ʿrbm are anything but human, there seems to be no basis on which to equate the two usages. Because the second category in this line is clearly military (on tnm), see note 18 to the Ug. birth omen texts [1.90] and note 22 to the Kirta text [1.102]), one may surmise that this line refers to two principal categories of personnel, those qualified to enter the sanctuary (or palace), comparable to the Akk. ʾrib bti, "the one entering the house (of the deity)" (CAD E 290-92; cf. Caquot, Szymer and Herdner 1974:370, n. e), and the guards, whose work would have ended at the gates. Because of our general ignorance regarding the details of societal structure at Ugarit, it must be left open whether the function of both categories concerns the sanctuaries or the palace or both (i.e., the privilege of entering the deity's presence or the king's presence and the exclusion therefrom).

¹³ Because this is the only mention of mu w šr in Ug. (or any other literature), a good many explanations have been given of the name, of the nature of the double-deity, and of what he represents (see Pardee 1989-90:461-462; Wyatt 1992b). The presence here of the verb yṭb, "to sit," seems best explained as reflecting the context of the feast to which the gods have been invited, and mu w šr, as is to be expected from the double name, is to be seen as divine, rather than human, either, therefore, one of the "gracious gods" or a divine intruder in the feast (cf. haššāṭan in the prologue to the Book of Job). The name has received two basic types of interpretation, reflecting whether the first element is interpreted as the word for "death" (mōtu) or the word meaning "man, warrior" (mutu; a similar problem arises in the interpretation of the Ug. lung model inscription: see note 25 to texts 1.92). The second element has been generally seen as the Semitic word šarr-šarr, "king, prince, ruler," either with the positive connotation it has in the older languages or in the Arabic sense of "evil." Because this deity is presented formally as a single in his hand the staff¹⁴ of bereavement,¹⁵ in his hand the staff of widowhood.^f

The pruners of the vine prune it,¹⁶ g

f Isa 47:8-9;
Jer 15:7-8
g Lev 25:3, 4;
Isa 5:6; Cant
2:12 (√zmr)
h Deut 32:32; 2 Kgs 23:4; Isa 16:8; 37:27; Jer 31:40 (Qere); Hab 3:17

the binders of the vine bind it, they cause (it) to fall to the-field-of-a-man¹⁷ h like a vine.

deity with a double name, as is indicated by the singular suffix on the noun "hand(s)" in the following lines, it appears legitimate to interpret the two names as denoting two aspects of a single character. Thus the deity may be "Death-and-Ruler" (= "Death the Ruler"), "Death-and-Evil" (= "Evil Death"), "Warrior-and-Ruler" (= "The Ruler who is a Warrior," "The Warrior-Prince"), or "Warrior-and-Evil" (= "The Evil Warrior"). Because he holds in his hands the staffs of bereavement and widowhood, most interpreters have chosen to see the deity as malevolent. In this view "Death-and-Ruler" or "Death-and-Evil" (de Moor 1987:120, n. 15) would be the ultimate kill-joy at the feast, who is eliminated by means appropriate for a harvest festival, by being cut into pieces like a vine. Wyatt has recently proposed (1992b), as a new form of the interpretation of the deity as a positive entity, that the pruning image be taken as representing circumcision, necessary for reproduction, though he did not explain the motifs of bereavement and widowhood in that interpretation. This is indeed a problem, for those two motifs are normally associated with the slaying of children and husbands, not with male infertility. If Wyatt is correct, one might think that the two motifs are meant simply to express the absence of male fertility, the result of which is women without children and husbands. One might also doubt that šdm, "shoots" in Wyatt's interpretation, i.e., a plural (1992a), would have been used to describe the singular foreskin (on this word, see note 17). I believe, moreover, even if Wyatt's interpretation be accepted, that he is going too far in formally identifying mu w šr with ²Ilu; rather the double deity would be one of the "gracious gods" who exemplifies in this text the young male ready to enter the reproductive stage of his life. He would by his presence at the feast constitute, rather than a picture of ²Ilu himself, a picture of what ²Ilu would have been in his youth. Note, if this interpretation be correct, that circumcision is depicted here as taking place at maturity (mutu wa šarru!) rather than in infancy, a social situation that must have also existed in pre-Biblical Israel, judging from the words hōtēn and hātān, "father-in-law," "son-in-law," derived from a root meaning "to cut," i.e., "to circumcise."

Faced with the difficulties and ambiguities of any interpretation, I resort to a common-sense approach: (1) the two elements of double divine names are usually synonymous and such should be the prima facie interpretation of this one; (2) the common Northwest-Semitic meaning of šr is "king, prince, ruler," with a positive connotation, not "evil"; (3) because it prefigures ²Ilu, who below is called mu by the two women, the first element is mutu rather than mōtu; ergo (4) the name is best interpreted as Mutu-wa-Šarru, "Warrior-Prince"; ergo (5) the "staff of bereavement/widowhood" is so named because warriors slay sons and husbands in battle (cf. RS 24.277, Side 3, Inscription VIII [text 1.92]); (6) the pruning of the deity's staff represents, in imagery appropriate to a harvest festival, the pacification of the warrior and, very plausibly, his preparation for marriage by circumcision. The identification of this double deity remains, in any case, a problem: if the name is a title for another deity, single or double, which is it? If not, why does this deity enter and take a seat? On the narrative level, one can say that the appearance of Mutu-wa-Šarru here is comparable to that of the goddess Rahmay in line 16 (cf. ²Atiratu and Rahm <ay> in line 13) and one can add that the identification of Mutu-wa-Šarru with a known god is just as difficult as is that of Rahmay with a known goddess. It appears best at the moment to see in this deity a new figure who attends the feast and plays his role, perhaps depicting agricultural fertility through viticultural imagery. His rôle as a "man" prefigures that of ²Ilu in the principal myth and the name/figure may represent a previously unknown hypostasis of ²Ilu, elsewhere the picture of bearded old age, as a youth.

¹⁴ There is certainly a literary connection between this staff (hr) and ²Ilu's staff, designated by the same word in lines 43-44, though the literary function of the word need not be the same in each case. (The literary link in the "para-mythological" texts may be provided either by a pun [e.g., dmr in RS 24.252] or by a peculiar usage of a word [e.g., Yarihu the dog, kib, in RS 24.258 (text 1.97)]; these literary devices are described briefly in Pardee 1988a:265). In Wyatt's interpretation of this text (1992b:426-427), the staff is the "penis," as in the Ug. incantation against male sexual dysfunction (RIH 78/20 [text 1.96]; Pardee 1993:211-213). As intimated in the previous note, however, an explanation of why the uncircumcised penis would have been described as the staff/penis of "bereavement/widowhood" would be in order, for though it may have been considered inept for procreation, it would not have itself directly slain children and husbands.

¹⁵ The Ug. word is tkl. Given the viticultural imagery that follows, one must wonder if there is not here a play on words, with tkl (perhaps vocalized tuklu) recalling uṭkl, "bunch of grapes" (probably vocalized uṭkalu or uṭkālū). If a similar explanation were available for the parallel word, ulmn, "widowhood," one would be tempted to revamp the interpretation of this verse entirely, replacing the negative images with positive ones of vine-keeping.

¹⁶ The antecedent of the pronominal suffix in the sentence yžbrn zbrm gpn could theoretically be the deity or his staff, or even, proleptically, the vine (gpn). If the deity is a negative entity, the pruning might be effected on him, as most scholars have thought. Whatever interpretation is given to the deity and his staff, however, surely the staff, of vegetal origin, is more appropriate for pruning than is the deity himself. The motif of the living wood in a staff or weapon handle is known, for example, from "Aaron's rod that budded" (Num 17) and from the "Baal au foudre" stela from Ugarit (Yon 1991:294-299). In addition to the difficulty presented by the rarity of the syntactic construction, the third analysis of the pronominal suffix mentioned above seems ruled out by the form of the third line of the verse, where gpn, preceded by the preposition of comparison, cannot be the direct object of the verb yšql, "they cause to fall." The "pruners" and "binders" are unidentified here and the terms are taken as designations of the workers who would normally carry out these tasks in the vineyards, i.e., cutting the vines and binding them into bunches for easier removal. The third act, literally "causing to fall (to the ground)," is not depicted so specifically as typical of vineyard activity, i.e., by means of the participle of the verb denoting the activity (yžbrn zbrm, yšmdn šmdm, but only yšql). Note finally that the "pruning" in question could be either the winter pruning, which promotes spring growth, or the summer pruning, which opens up the vine for better aeration and more direct access to the solar rays. The latter interpretation might be preferred here, because it would take place closer in time to the fall harvest festival and because the green leaves felled to the ground would provide a form of ground cover, not so necessarily removed as the dry cuttings of winter. On the other hand, the summer green pruning would not so plausibly be linked with circumcision (cf. Wyatt's interpretation cited in notes 13, 14).

¹⁷ The word šdm has usually been compared with biblical Heb. šēmōt, though interpretations of both terms have varied, in recent years crystalizing around two principal views, one in which šdm is explained as parallel to gpn in a very narrow sense, denoting a form of growth (see, for discussion and bibliography, Wyatt 1992a), and one according to which the parallelism is broader, i.e., the "terrace(s)" on which the vine may grow, i.e., the agricultural terraces necessary for making hilly country productive (Stager 1982). A third principal interpretation is to see the word in both Heb. and Ug. as a compound noun, made up of the elements "field" and "death" (though the word is spelled with {š} in Heb., while the word for "field" is spelled with {š}). In the interpretation of the present passage according to the first understanding of the word, the suffixed -h is explained as pronominal (e.g., "his/its shoots"), in the second (and third) as adverbial ("to the terraces/to the field of Mōtu/death"). Whatever the implications may be for Heb., literary considerations surely indicate that the third interpretation must be given serious consideration

Recitation Rubric (line 12)

Seven times¹⁸ they are to pronounce (these verses)¹⁸ next to the "D-room"¹⁹ and those who enter respond.²⁰ /

/ Gen 33:3;
Lev 4:6, etc.
/ Deut 27:14
/ Judg 5:30
/ Exod 3:8,
etc.

The Field of the Gods and its Produce (lines 13-15)

The field is the field of the gods,²¹
the field of "Aṭiratu and Raḥm <ay>".^{22 k}
Over the fire,²³ seven times the sweet-voiced youths (chant):²⁴
Coriander²⁵ in milk,²⁶ /

in the present context, for a word mt appears at the beginning of this section (in the divine name) and in the principal myth (lines 40, 46), while the word šd, "field," appears at the beginning of the next mythological section (The Field of the Gods, lines 13-15) and again in the last section dealing explicitly with the "gracious gods" (line 68). The reference to a field in line 13 is an entirely new motif if it is not carrying forward a notion introduced in the word šdmu. As regards the matters of etymology and meaning, three remarks are necessary: (1) the word is certainly a single word in Ug., whether it be from a single root or a compound, for it is written without a word divider and the suffix -h comes at the end ("to the field of Mōtu/death/a warrior," as separate words, would be written šdh mt; the translation of šd mth as "the field of his death/warrior" does not fit the context). (2) No plausible etymology has been proposed for the interpretation as a simple noun denoting "terraces," i.e., there is no root šdm susceptible of furnishing such an etymology. (3) If the Ug. and Heb. words are identical, as the similarity of the contexts in which they are used appears to indicate, and if the Ug. word contains the word for "field," then the Heb. word must be a loanword, not an inner-Heb. development, because of the writing with {š}. One anomaly indicates a foreign origin, i.e., the construct form šadmōt, in place of the expected šidmōt if the proto-Heb. form were šadimāt. The Heb. form favors neither of the two possible etymologies of the element -mt, for both /mawt/ and /mut/ could become /mōt/ in Heb., though the invariable ending -mōt favors the second derivation because the element /mawt/ when accented should become /māwet/, as in the Heb. common noun meaning "death." (This vocalization may be taken, of course, if one favors the first derivation, simply as another feature indicating the foreign origin of the word). Finally, it must be noted that the absence of an accusative suffix on the verb yšql in this line cannot be considered a serious argument against taking šdmu as a locative formula, as Wyatt avers (1992a:150), for the accusative suffix is often omitted in Ug., as in Heb., if apparent from context. Its absence here may indeed be explained as reflecting the ambiguity of the antecedent, the staff itself, singular, and the multiple cuttings removed from it.

¹⁸ As no object of the verb yrgm is expressed, and as this recitation rubric is set off by horizontal lines, it appears plausible to see the required recitations as being either of the preceding section or of the following section, as set off on the tablet, i.e., either the Mutu-wa-Šarru section or the Field of the Gods section. Because of the apparent lexical link between the two mythological sections (see preceding note), it appears preferable to see the reference in the recitation rubric to be to the preceding section.

¹⁹ From its appearances in both ritual texts and mythological texts, the word "d" appears to denote a sort of inner sanctum, the king's throne room, which would correspond to the principal seat of the divine effigy in a sanctuary (see note 96 to the Kirta text [1.102] and note 10 to RS 24.266 [text 1.88]). Here the recitation is to take place "d," "next to" or even, if the architecture permitted it, "above" the "D-room."

²⁰ The content of the response is no more indicated than was that of the recitation and may be thought to consist of the antiphonal recitation of the same verses.

²¹ The word "ilm" may be analyzed either as dual/plural, as I have done, or as the singular with enclitic -m, in which case the field would either be ascribed to Mutu-wa-Šarru, the only deity mentioned in the previous section, or to "Il. Because the "gracious gods" visit a field in the last part of this text (lines 67-68) it appears plausible to see here a reference to that field, which would belong to "the gods" in general (the "gracious gods" come to the field from outside). The literary function of the field(s) mentioned in this section is open to dispute. If the text as a whole is interpreted as related to questions of agricultural and sexual fertility, the reference in this section to field(s) of male and female deities may connote sexual fertility. If such is the case, Wyatt's interpretation of the pruning episode in lines 8-11 as related to circumcision (see above, notes 13, 14) gains in plausibility. If the "field" here is somehow related to the šdmu in line 10, as well as to the field which the "gracious gods" visit (lines 67-76), it appears that the term denotes a field used for growing both grapes and grain, for lines 71-74 refer both to ilm, "bread," and to wine. The description of a vineyard as part of a field is explicit in one of the Akk. documents describing marzihu property (RS 18.001 [PRU iv 230] A.ŠA.MEŠ GIŠ.GEŠTIN), while the sowing of a grain crop between vines was (and still is to a certain extent) common practice.

²² The writing {rhm} has caused no end of trouble: does it designate (1) a masculine deity named "Mercy" (the corresponding Heb. form is the pseudo-plural rah'mīm), (2) a feminine deity named "Womb" (expressed in Heb. by rehem/rahām), or (3) the same feminine deity as is named rhm in line 16? The presence of the phrase šd aṭrt w rhm in line 28 indicates the likelihood of a simple graphic error here. If the reading {rhm} be accepted, the masculine deity would plausibly be "Il, first because of the association with "Aṭiratu, second because of the semantic similarity to "Ilu's title of lpm il d p'id, "the Gracious One, the god of kindness." The second and third options are usually taken as reflecting a title of one of the well-known goddesses of the Ug. pantheon, though there has been no consensus on the identity of that deity. The simple fact that "Anatu is once ascribed rhm (CTA 6 ii 27; reconstructed in line 5) does not necessarily mean that she bore the same title. A brief bibliography on the various interpretations may be found in Pardee (1989-90:473) and in the various commentaries on this text. For a trenchant criticism of all identifications with known deities, see Day 1986:390. These two goddesses are sometimes identified with the two "women," the mothers of Šahrū-wa-Šalimu in the major mythological section of this text. Without denying the possibility, one must ask why the two goddesses are so completely camouflaged as "women" in the myth.

²³ The nature of the preposition "l, translatable as either "above, over" or "beside," according to context, is well illustrated in this verse, where the singers are probably not literally over the fire (smoke would get in their eyes), while the milk and butter would be.

²⁴ The motif of the young singer with a nice voice is also attested in CTA 3 i 20-21 gṣr ṭb ql, "the youth (who is) sweet of voice." The present text employs the other Ug. word for "voice" (g) in another syntax (the adjective modifies the word "voice" rather than the youths: gṣrm g ṭb, "youth(s) (with) a sweet voice"). No verb of speech is present here but the reference to the "sweet voice" and the comparison with the text just cited from the Ba'lu cycle, where the sweet-voiced youth is said to sing (yšr), are taken as indicators of a speech act of some kind, as most commentators have thought since the reading of the text including g, "voice," was first proposed in Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1976:67. Because the word for "youth" appears in the singular in line 17, the word here has been interpreted also as the singular, with enclitic -m (cf. Watson 1994:5, 7). The state of the text in the next paragraph precludes any decision as to the identity of the gṣr(m) in each passage. Here, one may surmise, after comparison with the text from the Ba'lu cycle cited above, that the singing youth(s) would correspond in the divine context to the musicians at an earthly feast.

²⁵ The Ug. word is gd, long interpreted as "kid" (see following note) which, however, is attested in Ug. with the spelling gdy. As long ago as 1971 Caquot proposed translating here "coriander" or "safran" (cf. Heb. gad).

²⁶ The rereading of this line by Herdner (1963:98), with further improvement by Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín (1976:67), has eliminated the interpretation of this passage, long a cornerstone of Ug.-Biblical parallels, by comparison with the biblical prohibition against cooking a kid in mini ²⁷ in butter. ^m	m 2 Sam 17:29;	scarlet; ^o singers ^p [...]. ³⁴

And over the jar ²⁸ seven times again (they chant):	Isa 7:15, 22;	Second Invitation (lines 23-27)
The dg[t-sacrifices have been sacri]ficed. ²⁹	Job 20:17	I would call on the gracious gods,
The Hunt (lines 16-18)	n Lev 23:34ff	[who delimit ^q the day, sons of] a (single) day, ³⁵
Off goes Rahmay and hunts,	o Exod 25:4ff	who suck the nipples of the breasts of ² Atiratu. ³⁶
[...] she/they gird; ³⁰	p 2Sam 19:36;	[...] Šapšu, who cares for their feebleness ³⁷
The goodly youth [...]	1 Kgs 10:12	[(with) X] and (with) grapes. ³⁸
And those who enter pro[nounce] the name [...]. ³¹	q Cf 1 Kgs 3:25;	Give well-being to those who enter and to those
Huts for the Gods (lines 19-20)	Ps 136:13	who stand guard,
Dwellings ⁿ of the gods: eight [...]. ³²		to those who form a procession with sacrifices of
Seven times [...]. ³³		prosperity. ³⁹
Holy Array (lines 21-22)		The Field of the Gods Repeated (lines 28-29)
Purple, carnelian(-colored) [...]		The field of the gods, the field of ² Atiratu and Rahm <ay> , its mother's milk (Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21). The comparison was always difficult because the verb would here have been ṭbh, "to slaughter," while in Heb. the verb is bṣl, "boil, cook in a liquid" (cf. Pardee 1976:234; Ratner and Zuckerman 1986). The word for "milk" here is hīb, which could in theory be cognate either with Heb. hālāb, "milk," or with hēleb, "fat" (covering certain internal organs); the first meaning seems clear here from the parallelism with ḥm²at, for in Heb. ḥem²dh, "curdled milk, curds, butter, ghee," appears in association with hālāb.

²⁷ The word ṭannḥ seems certainly to be related to words appearing in various Semitic languages, with and without prosthetic ṭaleph (e.g., Akk. ananiḫu, naniḫu, nanaḫu), identified as a form of mint or of ammi. Though the precise identification is uncertain, the existence of the cognates designating a plant for this word in parallel with gd provide an additional piece of evidence against translating the latter word as "kid."

²⁸ The archaeological and epigraphic data seem to indicate that the ṭagn-vessel was of the crater type, i.e., a large, rather squat vessel with a large mouth (Amadasi Guzzo 1990:21-23). Others have seen here a word cognate to the Indo-European word for "fire" or a word for "coals" related to the Arabic root gwn that can denote the color "red." The word provides, in any case, one of the many literary links between the opening sections and the principal myth, for it plays an important part in the scene below in which ²Ilu meets the two women who become his wives (lines 31-36).

²⁹ The reading here of dgṭ, a type of offering more clearly attested in the ²Aqhatu text (see note 124 to text 1.103), was proposed with the {t} entirely restored by Caquot, Sznycer and Herdner (1974:371, note s), then as an actual reading but with a question mark on the {t}, by Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín (1976:67).

³⁰ Many restore the divine name ²Atiratu after the verb "to hunt" in line 16, in imitation of line 13, where one finds {ṭaṭrt w rḥm} (see above, note 22).

³¹ The damaged state of the text here makes any interpretation dubious. Because the word šm, "name," does not reappear in this text as preserved, it appears impossible to identify with any certainty the name to which this line refers.

³² In the ritual text RS 1.003 there is mention of dwellings made of cut branches, set up on the roof (apparently of the temple of ²Ilu), and arranged in two groups of four: b gg ṭaṭrt [b^c] ṭarb^c mṭbt ṭazmr bh, "... (the king shall sacrifice) on the roof, four (and) four dwellings of cut (branches) on it" (lines 51-52). In an even more damaged and enigmatic passage in a ritual text (RS 24.248:21-23) there may again be a reference to dwellings set up for deities in groups of eight. The significance of the number eight is uncertain. However that may be, it appears legitimate to posit a connection between the mṭbt ṭazmr in RS 1.003 and the sukkūt erected for the Israelite "feast of booths" (see above, introduction).

³³ Whereas above the formula for a sevenfold repetition of a speech act was the multiplicative form šb^c d(m), here a separate word for "times" is used (p²amt šb^c), a formula common in the prose ritual texts. The term p²amt can, in theory, be used with any number (up to thirty repetitions are attested), expressing the repetition of various cultic acts, primarily sacrifices and processions.

³⁴ The word ṭiqn²u denotes the color blue and is attested in two primary usages in Ug., viz., lapis lazuli stone, and blue-dyed textile (royal purple of the blue shade, as opposed to phm, which designates the redder shade). The word šm is usually explained as denoting the stone "carnelian," but may designate a third shade of "purple" (Sanmartín 1992:102-103). Finally, the word ṭn could either be the number "two" or another noun denoting a color, corresponding to Heb. šānī, and designating a dye made from an insect as opposed to the "royal" purple dye, made from various sea mollusks. Because the damaged state of the text has left us without a context here, it is not possible to know for sure whether we are dealing with two types of stones and "two singers" or with three colors of textiles, hence, probably, of garments.

³⁵ The restoration [{ṭagzrym.bn] ym} is generally accepted, based on the same expression in a similar context in line 61. As is usual in this text, interpretations have varied widely, depending on whether ym is taken as meaning "day" or "sea," on whether the fifth and sixth letters constitute this word or are suffixal to {ṭagzr}, and on the meaning of gzr. If one accepts that the "gracious gods" are Šahru-wa-Šalimu, then an interpretation reflecting their character appears most plausible, i.e., gzr, "to cut," denotes the separation of night from day (Gray 1965:98), i.e., cutting the day into two parts, while bn ym, literally "sons of a day," indicates that the two gods exercise their function within a single day.

³⁶ As in the case of Yašsubu, son of Kirta (CTA 15 ii 26-28 [text 1.102]), the suckling of an infant by a goddess here indicates divine adoption rather than biological motherhood. So the Ug. king is represented on the ivory panels from his bed as a youth suckled by the goddess (Schaeffer 1954: pl. 8).

³⁷ On this interpretation, see del Olmo Lete 1981:442, 615; Hettrema 1989-90:83. One might appeal to Arabic dfr, "help," for this interpretation of msprt. Because of the break at the end of line 24, it is uncertain precisely what Šapšu's role is here, though one would expect it somehow to be in relation with the fact that the dawn and dusk are directly related to the rising and setting of the celestial orb. According to the narrative of the birth of Šahru-wa-Šalimu (line 54), gifts are made to Šapšu and to the astral deities immediately after the birth of the "boys."

³⁸ Here the word is gnbm, cognate with Heb. ḡnābī^c/nābīm, the word used for grapes as a fruit or as berries, rather than the bunch of grapes, which is ṣēkōl (Ug. ṭuṭkl).

³⁹ "Those who form a procession" are literally the "goers" (hlkm). The verb is used in RS 1.005 for a ritual procession in which the king participates (see Pardee forthcoming). "Sacrifices of prosperity" translates dbḥ n^cmt. Note particularly that the second word is from the same root, n^cm, as that by which the "gracious gods" are described (see above, note 5): the sacrifices are literally those of "goodness" or of "good things." Though the sacrifices would certainly consist of "good things," the phrase would appear to function primarily as an "objective genitive," i.e., the sacrifices, by placating the "goodly gods" will result in "goodness" for the offerer.

[...] s[i]ts/do[es] ag[ain].⁴⁰

The Myth (lines 30-31)

[²Ilu goes]⁴¹ to the seashore, strides along the shores of the Great Deep.⁴²

²Ilu Handpicks Two Women (lines 31-36)

²Ilu [spies]⁴³ two females presenting (him with) an offering,⁴⁴ presenting (him with) an offering from the jar.⁴⁵

One gets down low,⁴⁶

the other up high.⁴⁶

One cries out: "Father, father,"

the other cries out: "Mother, mother."⁴⁷

"May ²Ilu's hand stretch out as long as the sea,"⁴⁸

r Cf. Ezek
17:6, 24

s Num 11:23;
Deut 4:34;
Isa 9:11, 16,
20; 10:4; cf.
Isa 57:8

t Gen 12:15;
20:2; cf.
26:10

u Cf. Exod
19:13ff

(may) ²Ilu's hand (stretch out as long) as the flowing waters;⁴⁹

Stretch out, (O) hand of ²Ilu, as long as the sea, (stretch out, O) hand of ²Ilu, (as long) as the flowing waters."

²Ilu takes the two females presenting an offering, presenting an offering from the jar;
he takes (them), estab<lish>es⁵⁰ (them) in his house.¹

²Ilu Tries His Hand at Shooting Birds (lines 37-39)

²Ilu (first) lowers his staff,

(then) ²Ilu grasps his rod in his right hand.⁵¹

He raises (it), casts (it)^u into the sky,

⁴⁰ The verb yīb, second sign uncertain, could be either from yīb, "to sit," or from īb, "to return" or "to do again" when used with another verb. Because of the broken context we cannot know if the reference is to the sitting of gods or officials (as might be surmised from the form of the preceding formulae, i.e., not explicitly equational as the corresponding formulae were in line 13) or to the repetition of an act or of speech.

⁴¹ Any restoration here is entirely hypothetical, though it appears quite likely, as several scholars have seen, that the principal protagonist, ²Ilu, would have been introduced here along with a verb parallel to šgd, "to stride, walk," in the parallel line (cf. Wyatt 1987:381).

⁴² There are three principal water words in this section. ym/ihm in this verse and ym/mbd in lines 33-35. ym denotes primarily the salt sea, ihm the fresh-water sea thought to lie under the earth. Though mbd is much more rarely attested, it appears to function as the rough equivalent of ihm (see Pardee 1988a:132-134). These water words reflect the concerns of this story and do their part to present ²Ilu as away from home when the encounter occurs, for though ²Ilu's dwelling place is presented in watery terms, only one of the terms overlaps and that one is in a different form (²Ilu dwells at "the headwaters of the two rivers [nhrm], at the fountains/confluence of the deeps [thmtm]" — see on CTA 2 iii 4 [text 1.86, notes 145, 182], RS 24.244:2-7 [text 1.94, notes 2, 4]; cf. CTA 17 vi 48 [text 1.103]). In this story he is not, therefore, in a mountainous area where rivers begin, but at the seashore where rivers end.

⁴³ Most scholars reconstruct the verb lqh here on the basis of line 35, but one might rather expect here a verb describing ²Ilu meeting the women (Hettema 1989-90:83).

⁴⁴ "Two females presenting ... an offering" is an attempt at reflecting each element of the form mšl'lm, i.e., Št-participle, feminine, dual (perhaps /mušta'itāma). After years in which various interpretations of this word were proffered (often based on the interpretation of ²agn as meaning "fire" rather than "jar"), a certain consensus seems to have formed in recent years that we are dealing with a form of the verb šly, "to ascend, go up, mount." Even within that analysis, however, different interpretations exist. Seeking an interpretation based on Ug. usage, one sees that the simple Š-stem has three primary values: (1) the "literal" meaning, "cause to go up"; (2) a sexual meaning, "to be mounted," said of a cow mating with a bull (Ba¹lu); and (3) "to present (as a gift/offering)," said of stelae and a vase in ritual texts. The infixed-t form may be thought to reflect one of these usages (Troppe 1990:51-53, 77-78), but which usage, and whether the function of the -t is that of the reflexive or is closer to a middle (i.e., for one's own benefit) is uncertain. Because the form is participial, and ²Ilu does not "mount" these females until later in the story, it appears that the sexual sense is not at the surface level here, though it is plausibly an underlying one. Because these entities are below described as "two women" (²atim) and because šly is used in the ritual texts for presenting a gift to a deity (not a burnt offering!), it appears plausible to interpret mšl'lm here as designating two women (i.e., human beings) either offering themselves as a gift to the divinity or as offering something else to the divinity for their own benefit. Because the phrase l r'is' 2agn is very difficult to interpret with the simple reflexive meaning of the participle (see next note), it does not appear that they are offering themselves to the divinity, and the interpretation as a middle becomes the more likely.

⁴⁵ The "jar" can only be the jar already introduced in line 15. There we saw youths chanting about spiced milk being prepared "over a fire," "over a jar" (l' 2agn), apparently as a dgt-offering. Here the "two women presenting a gift" are, literally, "at the head of the jar" (l r'is' 2agn). It is uncertain what this phrase means, for "jars" do not have heads and elsewhere l r'is' does not seem to function as a complex preposition (Pardee 1976:309). Because the attested usages of šly in Ug. show it not to be the simple equivalent of Heb. he'elāh, "to offer up (esp. as a burnt offering)," one doubts that the reference here is to a burnt offering of any kind, but rather to something presented to the divinity, presumably the spiced dairy products mentioned in line 14. In this interpretation, the phrase l r'is' would denote the fact that the offering would have to be ladled out of the jar.

⁴⁶ The verbs špl and trm apparently describe the women themselves, for the second form can only be intransitive. It is uncertain what the acts imply, perhaps nothing less banal than antics to get the god's attention (see next note).

⁴⁷ I remain dubious that ²Ilu is here being addressed directly and wittingly as a mother (e.g., de Moor 1987:123, n. 37). Indeed below, lines 42-49, the possibility of the two women even addressing ²Ilu as "father" is considered and dropped. Because the encounter ends up with the women being taken to ²Ilu's house in view of marriage (the verb trh is actually used in line 64), we may surmise that the women were engaging in the activity with the express purpose of catching a male, indeed a divine one (the preparations seem to be described in line 15 as a type of offering to a deity, a dgt). If such be the case, the cries in lines 32-33 are addressed to their own parents, as in "Daddy, mommy, what do we do now?"

⁴⁸ There is a general consensus that yd, "hand," here is a euphemism for "penis." There is not agreement, however, on whether (1) both verses are descriptive of ²Ilu's excitement at the sight of the women, (2) the first verse is a volitive formulation, the second descriptive, or (3) both verses are formulated volitively (r'irkm = jussive, ark = imperative). I choose the last solution for morphological and literary reasons. The form ark in line 34 cannot be a perfect verb, for yd is a feminine noun and ark is not marked for feminine gender. The verb could, of course, always be parsed as an infinitive, used absolutely, as occurs rather frequently in Ug. poetry. But because the rhetoric of this poem seems usually to be allusive rather than direct in sexual matters, one may surmise that the sexual meaning here is at the level of paronomasia, and that the women are requesting, superficially, only that ²Ilu extend his hand to "take" them, as indeed he does in the following verse.

⁴⁹ On mbd, see above, note 42.

⁵⁰ There is general agreement to emend {yš} to {yš<t>}, i.e., the hollow verb šr, "to put, place, establish."

⁵¹ Lit., "he grasps in his right hand the rod of his hand." Ymn is taken, in agreement with many scholars, as the L-stem (the verbal stem casts (it at) a bird in the sky.

 He plucks (the bird), puts (it) on the coals,
 (then) ²Ilu sets about enticing⁵² the women.
²Ilu Comes Up With a Handy Test of the Women's Maturity (lines 39-49)⁵³
 "If," (says he,) "the two women cry out:
 'O man, man,
 you who prepare your staff,
 who grasp your rod in your right hand,
 you roast a bird⁵⁴ on the fire,
 roast (it) on the coals,'
 (then) the two women (will become) the wives of ²Ilu,⁵⁵
²Ilu's wives forever.
 But if the two women cry out:
 'O father, father,
 you who prepare your staff,
 who grasp your rod in your right hand,
 you roast a bird on the fire,
 roast (it) on the coals,' (then) the two daughters (will become)⁵⁶ the daughters of ²Ilu, ²Ilu's daughters forever."

vExod 22:15;
 Judg 14:15;
 16:5;
 Hos 2:16

wProv 16:21;
 cf. Cant
 4:11; 7:10

x Ps 8:4

The two women do (in fact) cry out:
 "O man, man,
 you who prepare your staff,
 who grasp your rod in your right hand,
 you roast a bird on the fire,
 roast (it) on the coals."
 (Then) the two women (become) the wives [of ²Ilu],
²Ilu's wives forever.
The Birth of Šahru-wa-Šalimu (lines 49-54)
 He bends down, kisses their lips,
 their lips are sweet,
 sweet as pomegranates.
 When he kisses, there is conception,
 when he embraces, there is pregnancy.⁵⁷
 The two (women) squat and give birth to Šahru-wa-Šalimu.
 Word is brought to ²Ilu:
 "The two wives of ²Ilu have given birth."
 "What have they born?"
 "The two boys Šahru-wa-Šalimu."⁵⁸
 "Take up, prepare (a gift) for great Šapšu and for the immut[able] stars."^x characterized by a reduplicated final radical and having a factitive connotation similar to the D-stem) of a verb that is denominative from ymn, "right hand" (/yāmanana/ [pf.] or /yēmānin-/ [impf.] here, /mēmāninuma/ [participle plus enclitic -m] in lines 40 and 44). Because of the absence in this passage of a term for "bow" or "arrow" it may be doubted that the verbs denote the stringing of the bow (i.e., setting one end on the ground, bending it, and attaching the string with the right hand). Rather the image is that of killing a bird with a thrown stick (the verb ry in the following verse, though it can mean "shoot an arrow," means basically only "throw, cast") and the mention of preparing the staff (hrt) and taking the rod (mt) in the right hand either refers to putting down the walking stick and picking up a throwing stick or, according to common usage in parallelistic poetry, simply to transferring a single stick from the left hand to the right. Though attempts have been made to see the sexual imagery carried forward consistently here (see especially Pope 1979), they appear strained. In particular, the attempt to see in the lowering of the staff (nh "descend") an image of impotency is closely linked with the preconception of ²Ilu as a deus otiosus, and the "story line" here does not allow us to consider that aspect of the imagery a major one: the bird to which reference is made in the next line (the flesh of which is plausibly taken as a restorative, especially of male potency; cf. Caquot, Sznycer and Herdner 1974:374, note d) is shot down with the rod that has already been raised up. On the other hand, the conjunction of words elsewhere used as euphemisms for the male member with verbs of raising, lowering and shooting, and with the resultant use of bird flesh, roasted on hot coals, seems to indicate the presence of sexual allusions in keeping with the following explicitly indicated sexual activity. If the images were meant to express a consistent line of development, one is constrained to see in the bird flesh as much an aphrodisiac as a restorative, and meant as much to entice the women as to keep ²Ilu's shooting apparatus in working order.

⁵² The use of pr(y) here, if correctly analyzed as cognate with Heb. pth, denotes the act of a male convincing a woman to engage in sexual activity, whether lawful ("attract, entice") or unlawful ("seduce"), or, more broadly, of enticing anyone into a path of action. The verb not being necessarily polarized negatively, and ²Ilu's relationship being described below as that of marriage (line 64), this passage should be taken as introducing the following passage.

⁵³ The function of this test seems to be to determine whether the women are mature enough to discern the sexual function of the roasting birds (see note 51) or whether they will simply see in ²Ilu a father figure providing them with food.

⁵⁴ On the place of the bird in the sequence of images here, see notes 51 and 53. It is important to point out the presence here, as in several cases already discussed, of a literary link between earlier and later parts of the text, in this case between this bird (šr), instrumental in ²Ilu's procurement of the two women as wives, and the recurrence of the word below (line 62) in the description of the voracious behavior of the offspring of this union.

⁵⁵ The Ug. phrase is attm att il, lit., "the two women (will become) ²Ilu's two women." The parallel passage indicates that the equational formulation is intended as a social classification: "the two girls (lit., daughters) (will become) ²Ilu's two daughters" (btm bt il, line 45).

⁵⁶ The formulation btm bt il is strictly parallel to attm att il in line 42, though the indication of change of status is less clear here: are the two "girls" to become his daughters (i.e., they will be adopted), or are they classified as belonging among his daughters (i.e., their status is recognized, rather than changed)? In either case, the term used to describe the two women who would have shown themselves by their address to be girls rather than women to be married is btm, "girls, daughters."

⁵⁷ Judging from the parallel in the ²Aqhatu story (CTA 17 i 41-42 [text 1.103]), this is the standard poetic idiom for intercourse and conception, with no variation in this formulation reflecting the divine status of the male partner. If there is a variation reflecting divine participation, it is expressed with regard to the women not the deity, i.e., in the description in the preceding verse of the women's lips being sweet, for the kissing motif is absent in the ²Aqhatu version, where both partners are human. Compare Gen 6:2 where the "sons of the gods" are depicted as seeking after human wives because they were "good" (tōbōt).

⁵⁸ There is general agreement that the two elements making up this double deity mean "Dawn" and "Dusk" (see bibliographical elements in the various studies of this text and in Pardee 1989-90:456-457). There is no apparent reason, however, for the subsequent identification with the morning and evening star, assumed by various scholars. The name Šahru, at least, is clearly linked with the concept of "dawn," not with a celestial body, and there is every reason to believe that the morning and evening manifestations of Venus were linked in Ug. thought with the deities Attaru and Atartu (bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:466-470; discussion in Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.009:4 and RS 1.017:18, 25).

The Second Birth Narrative (lines 55-64)⁵⁹

He bends down, kisses their lips,
 their lips are sweet.
 When he kisses, there is conception,
 [when] he embraces, there is pregnancy.
 He sits down, he counts,
 to five for the [bulge to appear],
 [to] then, the completed double.⁶⁰
 The two (women) squat and give birth,
 they give birth to the gracious [gods],
 who delimit the day, sons of a (single) day,
 who suck the nipples of the breasts.
 Word is brought to ³Ilu:
 "The two wives of ³Ilu have given birth."
 "What have they born?"
 "The gracious gods,
 who delimit the day, sons of a (single) day,
 who suck the nipples of the breasts of the lady.⁶¹
 (One) lip to the earth,
 (the other) lip to the heavens,

y Zeph 1:3

z Isa 9:19

aa Ps 29:8

bb Gen 29:18

Into their mouths enter the birds of the heavens and the fish in the sea.⁷
 When they stand, delimitation to <deli>mitation,⁶²
 they prepare (food for themselves) on right and left,
 into their mouth (it goes) but never are they satisfied."^{63 2}
³Ilu Temporarily Banishes Mothers and Sons (lines 64-67)
 "O women whom I have wedded,
 O sons whom I have begot,⁶⁴ Take up (your belongings), prepare (yourselves a place)
 in the holy steppe-land;^{65 aa}
 There you must dwell as aliens⁶⁶
 among the stones and trees,
 For seven full years,^{bb} eight revolutions of time."

⁵⁹ This second narrative can be interpreted either as recounting the birth of additional children to ³Ilu by the two women (so, e.g., Caquot, Sznycer and Herdner 1974:358-360) or as a second account of the birth of Šahru-wa-Šalimu. Two considerations lead me to adopt the latter hypothesis. (1) On the level of macrostructure and overall meaning of the text, one asks oneself why the "gracious gods" would appear early and late but Šahru-wa-Šalimu would occupy a mere five and a half lines, and those at the very center of the myth. Why speak at all of the birth of this double deity if the real concern of the text is with younger brothers? At the very least, one must assume a very close structural relationship between Šahru-wa-Šalimu and the "gracious gods" (e.g., the former "Dawn-and-Dusk," the latter the morning and evening star — rôles we have every reason to believe were already filled at Ugarit, see preceding note). (2) On the metaphorical level, the images of the "gracious gods" delimiting the day and standing with one lip in the heavens and the other on the earth, devouring birds and fish (see below), are perfectly appropriate for dawn and dusk, much less so for the morning and evening star. A possible indication that the two narratives refer to the birth of a single double deity may be found in the terms chosen to describe the offspring, i.e., ylāy, "two boys," in line 53 (the explanation of the terminal -y is uncertain), as opposed to [ilm] n^cmm, "two good gods," in line 58. Given the assured divine status of Šahru-wa-Šalimu, it is striking that in their particular birth narrative they are described merely as "boys," while a following narrative describes the birth of two gods by the very same mothers. Was the second narrative understood as signifying a replacement of the "boys" by "gracious gods" or as a strong image for a process of maturation?

⁶⁰ Ginsberg (1945:4, n. 7; cf. Tsumura (1978; Hentema 1989-90:85, n. 29) was almost certainly right in seeing here a reference to the counting of the months of gestation. Compare the case of Dānī³īlu, who also "sits down," explicitly to count the months of his wife's pregnancy (CTA 17 ii 43 [text 1.103]). Unfortunately the tablet is damaged here and the precise formulation is unclear. One can doubt, in any case, that kl²at in line 57 denotes "fullness" or that it is cognate to Akk. kullatu, as Tsumura proposed. The root kl² in Ug. regularly denotes doubleness, used for two hands and double gates. One would, therefore, expect it here to denote either the conception of two children or the simple fact that ten is five doubled. The presence of phr before kl²at seems to favor the latter interpretation, for the literal translation of the phrase, "the assembly of two (entities)," in which phr explicitly denotes the concept of bringing entities together, seems more fitting for expressing the notion of bringing two fives together than that of twins, who would always have been together. If Tsumura's reading {s¹b¹[²i]} is correct at the beginning of the lacuna, the verb would be šb², which elsewhere in Ug. expresses various notions of "going forth," here the protrusion of the pregnant belly. Such an interpretation appears legitimate, for šb² is not a simple semantic equivalent to yš², "exit," i.e., "pass from an enclosed space to the outside," which one would expect to be used to express the birth itself.

⁶¹ Šr, a general honorific term, apparently designates ³Aṭirani here, for this goddess was actually named in this formula above, line 24. On the use of the word in the ³Aqhatu text, part of a title of the goddess ^cAnatu's henchman yphn, see note 64 to text 1.103. Unfortunately, the word šr here is at the juncture between the two verses and the word may represent the verb šr, "to put," of which the "lips" in the following verse would be the direct object (rather than standing as subjects in two nominal sentences as I have translated).

⁶² The text reads {ndd gsr l zr}, usually emended to {ndd gsr l <g> zr}. With or without the emendation, there is certainly a reference here to the title of the "gracious gods" as ³*agzr ym*. The use of ndd, "stand (up)" (N-stem of the hollow root dd), with the preposition l preceding the second word following the verb, seems to favor the interpretation of gsr as denoting the delimitation, rather than the "cut up pieces" upon which they would be feeding ("when they stand up piece to piece" is a rather odd formulation for "standing up to produce pieces" or "standing up to feed on pieces"). The image is that of "Dawn" and "Dusk," when they stand, filling the horizon, one in the east, the other in the west.

⁶³ The imagery in lines 61-64 seems particularly appropriate for dawn and dusk, which, on the horizontal axis, fill the horizon and, on the vertical axis, open and close like a mouth. The "fish in the sea" can in the Levantine context refer only to sunset; whether the "birds of the heaven" refers symmetrically to the realm of sunrise is less certain. Though the noisy activity of birds at sunrise would not be concentrated in the east to the same extent that the fish are concentrated in the west, perhaps the link of birdsong with sunrise was sufficient to engender the image.

⁶⁴ Unless the two women and the two sons have for reasons unknown become single, the forms ³*att* and bn are in construct with the following finite verbal forms.

⁶⁵ The interpretation of the phrase mdbr qdš is no easier here than in Ps 29:8, where the second element is vocalized as the geographical name Qadesh. Is this a generic statement about the divine characteristics of the mdbr or a reference to a specific mdbr in the vicinity of one of the several towns of which the names are derived from the root qdš? See also below, p. 304, n. 18.

⁶⁶ Though the motivation for the apparent reduplicated form (igrgr) is not clear (should the signs be divided as igr gr, in the familiar "infinitive absolute" construction?), the idea of banishment appears clear, and gr seems to have the notion of displacement from one's own ethnic group

The Gracious Gods Learn of Agriculture (lines 67-76) ⁶⁷	cc cf. Isa 27:3; Prov 27:18; Job 27:18	"If [there is X-]bread, then give (it to us) ⁶⁸ that we might eat; If there is [X-wine, then] give (it to us) that we might drink." The guardian of the sown land answers them: ["There is bread that has ...] There is wine that has arrived in/from ⁶⁹ [...]." [...] he approaches, he serves a luggu -measure ⁷⁰ of his wine [...] And his companion fills with wine [...] ⁷⁰
The gracious gods arrive at the field, (while) hunting along the fringes of the steppe- land.	dd Isa 5:5; Pss 80:13; 89:41; Ecc 10:8; cf. Isa 58:12; Amos 9:11
The guardian of the sown land ^{cc} meets them and they call out to the guardian of the sown land:	ee 1 Sam 21:4
"O guard, guard, open up!" and he opens up.	ff Cf. Lev 14:10, etc.
He makes an opening (in the fence) ⁶⁸ dd for them and they enter.

so familiar in Heb. and present in a Ug. ritual text (cf. Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.002:18').

⁶⁷ Assuming that the gods have obeyed their father's order and have completed the banishment period, it is at the end of that period that, one day while hunting along the desert's edges, they meet the one in charge of protecting the sown land, request entry and become acquainted with the relative bounty of agricultural life. A classic case of the encounter of the Desert and the Sown, with the latter presented as the desirable state.

⁶⁸ The verb is prj which, though there is no expressed object, implies making a "breach" in some kind of protective construction, here plausibly a barrier of thornbush or a rough stone wall.

⁶⁹ The text reads {d "rb b [k[...]]. There being no good parallel from which to deduce a restoration, it is uncertain whether the phrase beginning with b denotes the origin of the wine, the container in which it arrived, or some quality of the wine.

⁷⁰ The damaged state of the tablet precludes our knowing exactly how the text ended. It does not appear, however, that it indicated explicitly the effects of the bread and wine on the "gracious gods," and it is not impossible, therefore, that the text continued on another tablet, in spite of the arguments to the contrary. On these arguments, none of which is decisive, see the introduction.

REFERENCES

Amadasi Guzzo 1990:15-25; Bordreuil and Pardee 1982:121-128; 1991:139-172; Caquot 1971:168-170; 1979:Cols. 1367-1371; Cooper 1993:81-96; Cunchillos 1976; Cutler and Macdonald 1982:33-50; Day 1986:385-408; Dietrich and Loretz 1988; Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1976; Driver 1956; Foley 1987:61-74; Gaster 1946:49-76; Gibson 1978; Ginsberg 1935:45-72; 1945:3-10; Gordon 1977:5-133; Gray 1965; Herdner 1963; Hettema 1989-90:77-94; Houston 1993; del Olmo Lete 1981; de Moor 1987; Pardee 1976:215-322; 1987:366-471; 1988a; 1989-90:390-513; 1993a:207-218; forthcoming; Pope 1979:701-708; Ratner and Zuckerman 1986:15-60; Sanmartín 1992:95-103; Saracino 1982:191-199; Schaeffer 1954:14-67; Stager 1982:111-121; Tropper 1990; Tsumura 1978:387-395; Vroilleaud 1933:128-151; 1968: 545-595; Watson 1994:3-8; Wyatt 1987:375-389; 1992a:149-153; 1992b:425-427; Xella 1973; Yon 1991: 273-344.

2. PRAYERS

UGARITIC PRAYER FOR A CITY UNDER SIEGE (1.88) (RS 24.266)

Dennis Pardee

The sole clear example of a cultic prayer in the Ugaritic language is embedded in a ritual text, discovered in 1961 among a large quantity of ritually oriented texts (see the omen texts 1.90 and 1.92 below). The complete text is translated here to enable the reader to perceive the cultic context. The principal point of interest as regards the document as a whole is the degree to which the rituals prescribed here are accomplished in honor of various manifestations of Ba^clu, to whom the prayer also is addressed. From a literary perspective, it is to be noted that the text of the ritual itself is in prose, as are most Ugaritic ritual texts, while that of the prayer is in poetic form.

The Ritual of the Month of ²Iba^clatu (lines 1-?)¹
In the month of ²Iba^clatu,² on the seventh day:^a a sheep^b for Ba^clu-R^cKT³ [...] and (in) the temple of a Gen 2:3 etc.

b Gen 22:7, 8;
Exod 13:13; Lev 5:7; 12:8; Num 15:11; Deut 18:3; Isa 43:23; 66:3; Ezek 45:15

¹ The break at the bottom of the tablet prevents determining the temporal relationship between the texts on the recto and verso (see note 17).

² ²Iba^clatu corresponds perhaps to the month of December-January, during which, therefore, the winter solstice would have occurred. For this placement in the year, see Pardee (forthcoming) commentary on RS 1.003; for the placement of ²Iba^clatu in January-February, see de Jong and van Soldt 1987-88:69-71. This ritual may deal with events of two months; in this case the second month would have been ḥiyyāru. The Ug. word yrh designates the celestial orb, the lunar deity, and the concept of month, the latter being determined by the phases of the moon. The "week" as one of a continuous sequence of seven-day weeks almost certainly did not exist at Ugarit, but the importance of the new-moon festival and of the full-moon festival, of which the primary celebration seems to have fallen on the fifteenth day of the month (see below, note 17), leads to the plausible conclusion that the lunar cycle was already divided into seven-day units, though the Ug. view of the last unit is unknown (a seven-day unit plus a variable number of days until the next new moon or a unit which was itself seen as being of variable length?).

³ Ba^clu-r^ckt is apparently a hypostasis of Ba^clu, but the second part of the theonym has not been satisfactorily explained. The principal deity

Ba^clu-²Ugārīta [...].⁴ At sunset^c the king is clear (of further cultic obligations).⁵ ^d On the seventeenth,^c the king washes himself^f clean.⁶ ^g A cow^h (in) the sanctuary of ²Ilu, a cow for the Ba^clu-(deities), a cow for GLM, two ewes and a cow for GLMTM;⁷ at the house of the td^ciyu-priest⁸ does one sacrifice (the preceding beasts). Next you⁹ shall illumineⁱ the ^cD-room¹⁰ of the temple of Ba^clu-²Ugārīta: a lamb and a city-dove;^j (these belong) to (the category) of the td^cu-sacrifice. On the eighteenth of ²Iba^clatu, a bull^k for the MDGL¹¹ of Ba^clu-²Ugārīta. A flame-sacrifice¹² and a presentation-sacrifice¹³ the king must offer (at) the temple of ²Ilu: a "neck"¹⁴ for ²I[...] a "neck" for Ba^clu[...] and a donkey¹⁵ for [...].¹⁶

c Lev 23:32
d Deut 20:6;
28:30; Jer
31:5
e Gen 7:11;
8:4
f Job 9:30
g Zeph 3:9;
Job 33:3
h Cf. Num
19:2
i Cf. Exod
25:37; 1 Sam
3:3; 1 Kgs
7:49 etc.
j Lev 1:14 etc.
k Cf. Exod
24:5ff
l Exod 29:26
etc.
m Gen 1:19 etc.
n Lev 14:4 et passim in this chapter o Gen 1:23 etc. p Cf. Exod 29:13 etc. q Gen 28:18; 35:14 r Amos 6:6 s Isa 19:4

t Ps 140:3 u 1 Sam 17:52; Isa 28:6; Ezek 21:20, 27; Mic 1:9, 12 v Amos 1:7, 10, 14 w Ps 123:1; cf.
2 Kgs 19:22; Isa 51:6; Ps 121:1 x Cf. Exod 23:29 etc.

Another Festival, Perhaps of the Month of *Hiyyāru*¹⁷ (lines 18'-25')

[...] On the fourth:^m birds.¹⁸ ⁿ On the fifth:^o birds and a liver^p and a sheep (as) a burnt-offering for Ba^clu-²Ugārīta in the temple. On the seventh: you shall bring the purifiers near. At sundown, the king is clear (of further cultic obligations). Behold the oil^q of well-being of Ba^clu, libation-offering (for the benefit) of the kings, of the first quality.¹⁹ ^r

The prayer (lines 26'-36')

When a strong (foe)^s attacks^t your gate,^u

a warrior your walls,²⁰ ^v

You shall lift your eyes to Ba^clu^w (and say):

O Ba^clu, if you drive the strong one from^x our in the ritual sections of this text is Ba^clu-²Ugārīta, the hypostasis of the weather god associated principally with the city itself. In the prayer and in the last cultic act leading up to the prayer (the oil libation in lines 24'-25'), the deity is simply Ba^clu.

⁴ In the first lacuna a term designating a further offering may have disappeared while in the second lacuna a specific offering to be made in the temple of Ba^clu-²Ugārīta was probably indicated.

⁵ The term denoting the passage from the state appropriate for cultic activity to that appropriate for secular activity is hl, which has received multiple explanations (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:396 and forthcoming, commentary on RS 1.003:47). The passage was apparently effected by a rite entrusted to mhlīm, lit., "purifiers," attested here below in line 23'.

⁶ The royal rite of lustration normally took place on the day before a major festival, sometimes on the first day of the festival. The ritual sequence outlined in this text is abnormal in that it includes neither the day of the new moon nor that of the full moon.

⁷ The identification of the deities corresponding to the names glm, "the lad," and glmtm, "the two lasses," is unknown. On the use of glm/glmt in the Kirta text, see note 10 to that text (text 1.102).

⁸ See note 103 to the Kirta text (1.102). The scribe of that text, ²Iīmīlku, was a td^ciyu-priest.

⁹ Ritual commands either are expressed impersonally ("one shall do ...") or are addressed directly to the officiant, as here.

¹⁰ In the Kirta text, the ^cd-room is where the hero's throne is located (see note 96 to that text).

¹¹ This word is usually emended to {mgdl}, "tower" (or mgdl is given the same meaning). Because, however, the word mgdl is attested in Ug. meaning "tower," and because the reading {mgdl} here is quite clear, it is preferable to await further textual evidence before adopting one or the other of these solutions — Ug. may prove to have a word mgdl with a meaning distinct from mgdl.

¹² According to RS 1.001:8-9 (CTA 34) the heart of various beasts sacrificed according to one rite is roasted (rms) in the flames (²urm).

¹³ The Ug. šnpt corresponds etymologically to the Heb. šnāpāh, but does not seem to function so narrowly as a subdivision of the šlm-sacrifice as does the šnāpāh with respect to the šlāmūm (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:411 and forthcoming, commentary on RS 1.001:10).

¹⁴ The word is npš, apparently denoting the portion of the body containing the breathing apparatus, i.e., the neck, as opposed to the inner throat/esophagus, the basis for most usages in poetry (see note 95 to the Kirta text [text 1.102] and notes 13 and 127 to the ²Aqhatu text [text 1.103]). It is uncertain, however, exactly which part of the neck was offered, and the origin of the neck, i.e., from what particular animal, is usually not stated in the ritual texts.

¹⁵ The sacrifice of the ^cr, "donkey," is extremely rare in these texts, attested elsewhere only in the very peculiar ritual recorded in RS 1.002 (CTA 32). In the latter text a historical link with the old Amorite sacrifice of a donkey in association with various types of agreements and treaties appears plausible (for bibliography see Pardee forthcoming, commentary on RS 1.002).

¹⁶ The bottom of the tablet is broken away, and approximately eight to twelve lines have been lost.

¹⁷ It is uncertain whether the fourth day mentioned in the first completely preserved line on the verso is that of a festival beginning on a day named above (such a festival may have begun either on the eighteenth, named in line 11, or, more likely, another day named in the text lost in the lacuna) or the fourth day of a second month. Both interpretations have precedents in RS 1.003 (CTA 35) ≈ RS 18.056 (CTA Appendix II): the sequence "five" through "seven" in RS 1.003: 38-47 refers to the fifth through seventh days of the festival associated with the full moon, while lines 48-55 refer to events on the first day of the following month. Because festivals tended to begin on a day corresponding to a phase of the moon, particularly the new moon and the full moon, and because the days of the full-moon festival can be computed separately ("day one" = the first day of the festival = the fifteenth day of the month, etc.) one can postulate that the reference here is to the fourth and following days of the full-moon festival of the month of Hiyyāru (see above, note 2).

¹⁸ The explanation of the anomalous form ^csrmm here, and probably at the end of the line and into line 21', is uncertain. It appears to be a dual or plural form of ^csr, "bird," with enclitic mem. Because the form ^csrmm is usually a dual in these texts, ^csrmm may be an emphatic form of the plural (^cusšurāmama). ^csr seems to function in the ritual texts as a generic word for "bird" (like spr in the Punic sacrificial tariff [text 1.98]), while ymt (qrt), "(city)-dove," is the most common specifically designated species. ²uz, "goose," appears rarely as do some other terms of which the meaning is less clear (see Pardee forthcoming).

¹⁹ The genitival phrase šmn šlm b^cl in lines 24'-25' apparently denotes an offering of oil meant to induce well-being from Ba^clu, while the mtk mlkm, "libation of the kings," is offered either by living kings (and the plural would be generic, since Ugarit apparently had one living king at a time) or for the benefit of dead kings, i.e., the kings named in RS 24.257 reverse (the Ug. king list; see Pardee 1988a:165-178) and those named in RS 34.126 (a connection with dead kings is favored by most scholars). See texts 1.104-105 below.

²⁰ The words designating the enemy here are ^cz, an adjective used substantively, "the strong (one)," and qrd, the old Semitic word for "warrior" (cf. Akk. qarrādu, "hero, warrior").

gate,
the warrior from our walls,
A bull,²¹ γ O Ba^clu, we shall sanctify,^z
a vow, (O) Ba^clu,²² we shall fulfill;^{aa} a firstborn,²³ $\delta\delta$ (O) Ba^clu, we shall sanctify, a hup-offering,²⁴ (O) Ba^clu, we shall fulfill,
a šrt-feast, (O) Ba^clu, we shall offer;

γ Isa 10:13
z Exod 28:38
etc.
aa 1 Kgs 2:27;
Jer 44:25;
2 Chr 36:21
Cf. 1 Kgs
8:15, 24;
Ps 20:5, 6; 2 Chr 6:4, 15 $\delta\delta$ Lev 27:26; Num 18:17; Deut 15:19; 33:17 cc Exod 34:24 etc.
dd Prov 3:17ff ee Gen 21:17ff

To the sanctuary, (O) Ba^clu, we shall ascend,^{cc}
th(at) path,²⁵ $\delta\delta$ (O) Ba^clu, we shall take.
And Ba^clu will hear [your] prayer:^{ee}
He will drive the strong (foe) from your gate,
[the warrior] from your walls.²⁶

²¹ A poetic word is used here for "bull," γ ibr ("the powerful one"), instead of the usual word for "male bovine" in this and other ritual texts, γ alp.

²² Though the vocative marker γ (probably $\gamma\delta$, as in Arabic) appears on the first and second occurrences of the divine name (lines 28', 29'), it is not used again. I have interpreted all the repetitions of $b^c l$ as having a vocative function and the restoration of the end of line 33' without bt, "house," makes the analysis of all occurrences of $b^c l$ as vocatives easier (see below, note 25).

²³ The first letter of the second word in line 31' has disappeared and the word has been restored by some as $\{[d]kr\}$, "male," by others as $\{[b]kr\}$, "firstborn." Space considerations actually favor the second restoration, but there is no reason to favor the interpretation of the term as denoting a human sacrifice as some have thought (e.g., Margalit 1986) over that of an animal firstborn.

²⁴ For bibliography on the interpretation of this word, see Pardee 1993:216, n. 33, and Pardee forthcoming, on this passage.

²⁵ Some restore here $\{nbt b^c l b^c l\}$, "the path of Ba^clu's house," which would indicate a shift from the vocative formulation in line 28' to a third-person formulation. The lacuna appears, however, a bit narrow for that restoration and I have restored simply $\{nbt b^c l\}$.

²⁶ This is certainly the last line of the text, but the corner of the tablet is broken away here and there could conceivably have been a very short conclusion of some kind.

REFERENCES

De Jong and van Soldt 1987-88; Herdner 1972:693-697; 1978; Margalit 1981; 1986; Miller 1988; de Moor 1983; 1987; del Olmo Lete 1989:27-35; 1992; Pardee 1987:366-471; 1988a; 1993a:207-218; forthcoming; Saracino 1983a:304-306; 1983b:263-269; Tarragon 1989:125-238; Xella 1978:127-136; 1981.

THE PRAYER OF NABONIDUS (4QPrNab) (1.89)

Baruch A. Levine, Anne Robertson

This Aramaic text from Qumran, Cave 4, which speaks of Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon, was first published by J. T. Milik (1956), who assembled it from separate fragments of a single manuscript. These fragments were later realigned by F. M. Cross (1984), who dated the inscription paleographically to ca. 75-50 BCE. Many large gaps remain, some of which can be restored on the basis of parallel statements occurring elsewhere in the inscription, itself. Other restorations can only be conjectured, mostly on the basis of thematic links with the Book of Daniel. Interpretations of 4QPrNab have, as a consequence, varied greatly, although its overall thrust is quite clear.

While in Tema, a major oasis in northern Arabia, Nabonidus was stricken for seven years with an ailment inflicted on him by God, so that he became comparable with the beasts. When he prayed to God, his sin was forgiven. By way of recapitulation, the inscription explains in greater detail how Nabonidus was cured. It was a Jewish diviner of the exilic community who revealed to Nabonidus the cause of his ailment. He is quoted as saying that it was because the Babylonian king had continued to worship false gods, of silver and gold, thinking that they were true gods. The diviner instructed Nabonidus to give honor and praise to the true God, at which point his suffering ended.

In the biblical Book of Daniel, experiences similar to those associated with Nabonidus in this inscription are attributed to Nebuchadnezzar II, and in lesser degree to Belshazzar, Nabonidus' son, who ruled as co-regent for three years while his father was in Arabia. Quite possibly, the traditions of the Book of Daniel originated as tales about Nabonidus, whose fame was celebrated in Babylonian sources. His sojourn in Tema is recorded in the so-called Nabonidus Chronicle (ANET 305-307), and the Harran Inscriptions of Nabonidus (ANET 562-563) state that he had recourse to diviners, there identified as spokesmen of Sin, the chief god worshipped at Harran.

Biblical writers understandably focused on Nebuchadnezzar because he was, after all, the one who had destroyed Jerusalem and exiled masses of Judaeans to Babylonia. It is noteworthy, however, that at Qumran, other Jewish authors identified Nabonidus as the subject of legend, and credited him with ultimately acknowledging the God of Israel. See Meyer 1962; Sack 1992; and Garcia Martinez 1992:116-136.

Superscription: The Afflictions of Nabonidus (1-2a) (Concerning) words of p[ra]yer¹ of Nabonidus², king of [Ba]bylon, [the Great] King³, [when he was stricken] with a pernicious inflammation³ by the de-cree⁴ of G[o]d⁵, in [the municipality of] Teman.⁶ b

A First-Person Account of Nabonidus' Affliction and Healing (2b-4a)

I was stricken for seven years⁷, and ever since [that time] I became comparable [with the beasts].⁸ c Then I prayed before God]^d, and (as for) my offense - he forgave it⁹.

a Dan 2:10;
Ezra 5:11
b Isa 21:14;
Jer 25:21;
Job 6:19
c Dan 4:21-
22; 5:21
d Dan 6:11;
Ezra 6:10
e Dan 2:27;
4:4; 5:7,11
f Dan 2:25;
5:13; 6:14
g Dan 2:4ff;
5:12ff
h Dan 5:4,23

*Recapitulation: It was a Jewish Diviner who Revealed to Nabonidus How He Could Be Healed
(4b-8)*

A diviner,¹⁰ e who was himself a Jew fro[m among the exilic community of Judea],¹¹ f provided an interpretation,¹² s and wrote (instructions) to render honor and greatness to the name of G[od]. And so did he write]: "You were stricken with a pernicious inflammation [by the decree of God in the municipality of Teman, but] you continued for seven years to pray [before] gods of silver and gold, [bronze and iron], wood and stone (and) clay,^h because [you were of the opin]ion that [they were] (true) divinities."¹³

¹ Since the inscription nowhere presents the actual text of Nabonidus' prayer, but only reports that he prayed to God in his affliction, we should understand "words of prayer" (mly šlt) as referring more generally to the subject of the inscription.

² The Aram. name, written nby, is to be read Nabônâi, a shortened form of Nabônâ'îdâ, namely, Nabonidus, the last king of Babylon (556-539 BCE).

³ The Aram. passive participle ketš "stricken" is restored here from line 3 of the inscription, where it is clearly legible. The literal sense of ktš is "to crush, pound." Nabonidus was "stricken" with "a pernicious (=evil) inflammation" (šhn b'yš). Aram. šhn is a cognate of Heb. šḥn "boils, inflammation" (Exod 9:10), and cf. the Akk. verb šahḫnu "to become warm; to warm" (CAD Š 1:278). Sokoloff 1990:544.

⁴ Aram. pīgām (Old Persian patgam) "word, report" has the meaning of "decree, edict." It is attested in Biblical Aram. (Dan 4:14), where it is parallel with mēmar "word, command" and enters into late BH (Esth 1:20; Josh 8:11; and cf. Sir 5:11; 8:9). It occurs regularly in most Aram. dialects, including Syriac. KB¹ 1114; Sokoloff 1990:454; Levy 1963 4:154; Brockelmann 1966:616.

⁵ Following Cross we read simply lh "God" because of limitations of space, whereas Milik reads lh hy "the most high God" after Dan 3:26,32; 5:18,21.

⁶ Reading btymn [mdym] "in the municipality of Teman" with Milik 1956:415, Addendum, who discovered this reading in an additional fragment belonging with the dream inscription. It accords with the conventional way of registering the names of cities and provinces in Aram. documents. Aram. Tymn, read Tēmdn, is to be identified with the oasis of Tema, in Arabia, where Nabonidus spent a considerable period of time between 553-543 BCE, during his prolonged absence from Babylon (Sack 1992; Collins 1992). This site, and its environs, are referred to in several biblical passages by the correct name, Tēma (Isa 21:14; Jer 25:21; Job 6:19), whereas in this inscription that toponym is confused with Tēmdn, a more general name for "southern" areas.

⁷ The duration of the ailment for seven years correlates with what is told of the seven seasons of Nebuchadnezzar's withdrawal from human habitation in Dan 4:21-22, and it is there that we read about his madness and habitation with the beasts of the field. Here, the translation follows the restoration suggested by Cross.

⁸ Following Cross, it is best to read wmn [dy] šwy lh hyw wšyt qdm lh.

⁹ Cross cites the Targum on Job from Qumran, cave 11 (11*QgJob* 38:2-3) which reads: "And God harkened to Job's voice and forgave them their sins on his account" (wšbq lhw n h'yhm bdyh), referring to the sins of Job's friends. The sense of the verb šbq, frequent in most Aram. dialects, is "to release, abandon"; hence: "to forego punishment, forgive." DNWSI 1104-1105.

¹⁰ Aram. gṣr appears in the plural, gāzerin, determined form: gāzerayya "the diviners" in Dan 2:27; 4:4; 5:7,11 within a standard list of magical practitioners present at the Babylonian court. These included wise men, exorcists, and magicians, none of whom was able to interpret the royal dreams. With a degree of irony, this inscription has a Jewish diviner of the exilic community show concern for Nabonidus' plight and explain its cause to him, thereby allowing him to be cured.

¹¹ Since it is probable that the text goes on to identify the diviner's origin, both Milik and Cross fill in the gap with words to the effect that he was one of the Jewish exiles. Therefore, we read: m[n bny glw dy yhw] after Dan 2:25; 5:13; 6:14. One could also read: dy yhwdy "of the Judeans," with the text of Daniel from Qumran, 4*Q112*.113.115 to Dan 2:25. Beyer 1994:150.

¹² Following Milik, we take the unclear reading hwy as a 3rd masculine perfect form heḥewē "he explained, interpreted." This verb is prominent in the biblical Daniel narratives, occurring no less than 10 times in the second chapter of Daniel (Dan 2:4ff) and 4 times in Dan 5. In every case it refers to the interpretation of dreams and signs.

¹³ In line 8 of the inscription, Cross ingeniously restores mn dy [hwy šb], which he takes to mean: "Because I was of the opinion," but which more likely means: "Since you were of the opinion." The Aram. form hwy can represent either the 1st person masculine perfect, "I was," or the 2nd person masculine perfect, "You were," and the latter makes better sense here. The verb sbr "to think, intend" is attested in Dan 7:25.

REFERENCES

- Beaulieu 1989; Beyer 1994; Brockelmann 1966; Collins 1992; Cross 1984; Garcia Martinez 1992; Levy 1963; R. Meyer 1962; Milik 1956; Sack 1992; Sokoloff 1990.

3. DIVINATION

UGARITIC BIRTH OMENS (1.90)
(RS 24.247 + RS 24.302)

Dennis Pardee

Recorded observations of the natural world in the Levantine and Mesopotamian areas of the ancient Near East had two primary foci, medical and divinatory. The two areas were probably thought to be equally empirical. In the case of a symptom, one applied a given remedy or remedies and the complaint was supposed to go away. Other natural phenomena were thought to be followed by events in man's world. Various forms of divination are well attested in the classical world and a lengthy introduction is therefore not necessary here. Many of these types of divination are known to have already been practiced in Mesopotamia, for which documentation exists from the beginning of the second millennium BCE on. A much less extensive documentation exists for the west, though forms of classical Mesopotamian divinatory texts have been discovered there, particularly at Emar (Tell Meskene on the Euphrates) and, in Hittite versions, at Boğazköy. Ugaritic texts exist for divination by misformed animal births (RS 24.247+), by misformed human births (RS 24.302), by lunar phenomena (RIH 78/14 [text 1.91]), by extispicy (RS 24.312 ... [texts 1.92]), and, perhaps, by dreams (RS 18.041 [text 1.93]). In the medical category, only hippiatric texts are attested to date (text 1.106). Though one suspects that these texts had a Mesopotamian origin, there is remarkably little evidence of direct Mesopotamian influence. For example, there are very few loanwords from Akkadian in the Ugaritic of these texts, and there is no instance of a Ugaritic text having been translated directly from a known Akkadian original. It appears, therefore, that there was a long native tradition of this type of text and that it may be necessary to rethink the role of the "Amorites" in the elaboration and spread of "science" in the Fertile Crescent. Both birth-omen texts were discovered in the same archive, that of "le prêtre aux modèles de poumon et de foies," in the trench dubbed "ville sud," as were the lung and liver models translated in 1.92.

Because the omens are brief, consisting of one or two sentences per observation, the lines inscribed on the tablet by the scribe to set one omen off from another are indicated here and subheadings are omitted in the translation. RS 24.247+ was badly damaged in antiquity and has been incompletely pieced together from many fragments (editio princeps by Herdner 1978:44-60).¹ There is no set order of procedure from one anomaly to another and it is therefore usually impossible to reconstruct the beginning of the line when it is damaged. The interpretation of a given anomaly is not uniform in the various traditions, and it is usually difficult to reconstruct a missing prognostication. One can, however, observe one generality: the left side is negatively polarized, the right side positively. So a missing right organ or limb will generally be interpreted negatively, while the same abnormality on the left will have a positive interpretation. This is clearest in lines 35'-38', mirror-image omens involving missing right and left ears. For parallels with the Mesopotamian tradition, termed šumma izbu after the first words of a typical entry ("if [there is] a misformed birth ..."), see particularly Xella and Capomacchia 1979, Pardee 1986, and Dietrich and Loretz 1990a.

A Text for Divining by Misformed Births of Sheep and Goats (RS 24.247+)

1) As for the ewes of the flock,² [when³ t]hey give birth,⁴ a (if it is a) stone,⁵ many⁶ will fall^b

a Gen 30:39;
31:8
b 2 Sam 1:4

in the land.⁷

2) (If it is a piece of) wood, behold [...] in place of the offspring/birth, its cattle will [...] ⁸.

¹ Concerning the history of the fragment constituting the upper left corner of the tablet, all-important for the identification of the genre of the text, see Pardee 1986:117; Pardee forthcoming, on RS 24.247+.

² Ug. š'in corresponds to Heb. šōn, and both designate a mixed herd of sheep and goats (the traditional translation "small cattle" is in opposition to bovines, "large cattle"). The word for "ewes" is l'at, which has clear cognates in Aram. and Akk. The second [t] of the form l'at either is a mistake or represents the plural morpheme added onto the singular -t (see Pardee 1986:126; 1989:80).

³ The normal structure of a divinatory text is protasis, containing the observation, followed by apodosis, containing the interpretation. In the oldest Mesopotamian tradition, it was normal for protasis to have its complete form, i.e., with expressed hypothetical particle "if" (cf. Pardee 1986:127, n. 59). This seems also to have been the form in the Ug. texts for divining by misformed human births and by lunar observations (RS 24.302 here below and 1.91, respectively). In this text, however, the particle is absent below wherever the beginning of the line is preserved, though it is plausibly restored here in the lacuna, before the verb for birthing, not before the term designating the anomaly. (The hypothetical particle appears to be entirely absent in the text for divining by dreams, though that text is even more badly damaged than is this one).

⁴ The form {td'at}, for which no satisfactory explanation has been found, is corrected to {tdn'}, which, in the Ug. script, is only a matter of spacing between wedges.

⁵ Lit., "[when t]hey bear a stone."

⁶ The final letter of m'adn, and frequently below, has been shown to be a particle attached to the first word of an apodosis, if that word is a singular noun in the absolute state (Hoftijzer 1982; Pardee 1986:126). As an apodosis marker, it is not translated. Note that some have translated it, incorrectly, as a first common plural pronominal suffix ("our").

⁷ The use of "fall" (Ug. qf) in such a context normally implies warfare. "The land" in this text, unqualified, denotes the homeland, while "that land" designates the enemy's land. The Ug. term for the large political entity "land" (as opposed to the geological entity) is hwt, plausibly derived

3) (If the foetus) is smooth, ⁹ (without) h[air?], ^c there will be [...] in the land.	c Gen 27:11 d Jer 9:11 e Gen 12:10 etc.	20) [...] will become strong/strengthen him.
4) And (if) th[ere is no ...], the land will perish. ^d	f Cf. Pss 79:8; 116:6; 142:7(G- stem); Judg 6:6; Isa 17:4 (N-stem) g Lev 21:20 h Gen 47:19, 23; Lev 26:16; 27:16; Num 24:7; Deut 28:38; Isa 5:10; 55:10 i Exod 12:9; Lev 1:9, 13; 8:21; 9:14; 11:21; Amos 3:12 j 1 Sam 17:37; Ps 22:21; cf. Gen 9:5 k Exod 9:1-6, 18-25 l Zeph 1:15; Pss 25:17; 107:6, 13, 19, 28; Job 15:24; cf. Deut 28:53, 55, 57; 1 Sam 22:2; Isa 8:22, 23; 30:6; Jer 19:9; Ps 119:143; Prov 1:27; Job 36:16 37:10; m Pss 89:46; 102:24 n Jer 51:55 etc.	21) [...]
5) [...], there will be famine in the land. ^e		22) [...]
6) [...] and (= nor) nostrils, ¹⁰ the land [...]; ditto. ¹¹		23) [...]
7) [And] (if) there is no [...], the king will seize the lan[d of his enemy and] the weapon of the king ¹² will lay it (the land) low. ^f		24*) [...] [...]
8) [...] [...] cattle [...]		25*) [...] [...]
9) And (if) it has no [left] thigh, the king will [...] his enemy.		26*) And (if) it has no right thigh [...]
10) And (if) there is no lower left leg, ¹³ the king [will ...] his enemy.		27*) And (if) there is no tendon ²⁰ in [its?] K[...]
11) And (if there is) a horn of flesh [in] its left [te]mple, [...].		28*) And (if) it has no middle part of the [right] foreleg [...]
12) (If) it has no spleen ¹⁴ [...] [...]; di[itto];		29*) will not obtain offspring.
13) the king will not obtain ¹⁵ offspring. ¹⁶		30*) And (if) [it has] no nostrils [...]
14) [And] (if) it has no testicles, ⁸ the (seed-)gra[in] ^h [...] [...] ¹⁷		31*) And (if) it has no tongue [...]
15) And (if) the middle part ⁱ of its [left?] foreleg ^j is missing, [...] will destroy the cattle ^k of [...].		32*) (If) its lower lip (is) like [...]
16) [...], the enemy will destroy the cattle of the land.		33*) (If) its face (is) that of a ²¹ IRN, ²¹ [...] will shorten
17) [...], the mighty archers ¹⁸ will seize the enemy of the king.		34*) the days ^m of the (= our) lord; behold, the cat- tle ⁿ [...]
18) [...]perish/destroy; ditto.		35*) And (if) [it] has no right ear, [the enemy will] devastate ⁿ the land
19) [...]famine, hard times ^l will disappear.		36*) [...] and will] consume it.
		37*) And (if) [it] has no left ear, the king [will] devastate the land of [his] enemy 38*) and will consume it.
		39*) And (if) its (rear?) legs (are) short, the (= our) lord will confront the hurādu -troops ²² and from hwy, "to live," and cognate to Heb. ḥawwāh, which designates a much smaller political entity, a "village." A paraphrase of this omen would thus be: the birth of a stone by a ewe or a nanny means that battle will occur in the homeland in the course of which many casualties will occur among the home troops.

⁸ The word bhm, translated here conventionally as "cattle," probably designates livestock in general, i.e., is neither so narrow as to designate only bovines nor so wide as to designate, as does b'hemāh in some biblical texts, all creatures larger than the "creepers" (remeš, šereš). The restoration of br at the end of this line proposed in Pardee 1986:129 must be abandoned; see Pardee forthcoming.

⁹ The text is [gmš š[...]], hypothetically restored as gmš š[...] and explained by Arabic gmš, "shave," as meaning "smooth, devoid of hair" (Pardee 1986:129).

¹⁰ The foetus is missing another organ in addition to the nostrils.

¹¹ The word mtn, from tny, "do twice, repeat," denotes repetition of an element from the preceding entry.

¹² The phrase "weapon of the king" has excellent parallels in the Mesopotamian omen texts (GIŠ.TUKUL LUGAL = kak šarri), while the Ug. word here designating the weapon, viz. mrhy, appears to be cognate to Arabic marḥay and, with metathesis, to Heb. rōmah, "spear, lance." For the details of this interpretation, see Pardee 1986:130-131.

¹³ The body part is the qsr, denoting perhaps the part of the animal's leg between the hoof and the "ankle" (Pardee 1986:132). This term appears also in the Punic sacrificial tariff text (1.98).

¹⁴ Though not attested in Biblical Heb., ṭhl, "spleen," has good cognates in the other Semitic languages.

¹⁵ This passage has helped to explain the form ypq in the Kirta text (CTA 14 i 12; see note 5 to text 1.102) as from the hollow root pq, used several times in the Hiphil in Biblical Heb. as a parallel term to māṣā, "to find" (cf. Pardee 1989:84).

¹⁶ The word for "offspring" in the omen texts is šph, "offspring (undifferentiated as to sex)" (see note 11 to the Kirta text [1.102]).

¹⁷ Though the rest of the apodosis is missing, there appears to be a play on qr, "seed(-grain)" and "semen," here and in line 55' (see Pardee 1989:87-88).

¹⁸ It is clear from the Kirta text that tnn (here) and hpt (line 57') denote types of soldiers (see note 22 to text 1.102).

¹⁹ Approximately one fourth to one third of the tablet has disappeared, and as few as fifteen and as many as thirty lines have been lost.

²⁰ The word hrsp may denote a tendon or a ligament if the explanation by Heb. ḥarsubbōt, "bonds" (Isa 58:6), is correct (for bibliography, see Pardee 1986:134).

²¹ The term seems to denote either some reptile, perhaps a form of lizard, or a dog, particularly a puppy (for discussion with bibliography, see Pardee 1986:135-136).

²² Like tnn (line 17) and hpt (line 57'), hrd denotes a military category (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:387).

40') Rašap will finish off ²³ the posterity. ²³	o Josh 24:20ff	that land will be consumed. ²⁴
41') And (if) its nose (is) like the "nose" of a bird, the gods will destroy ²⁴ the land	p Jer 4:4; Ezek 21:4; cf. Deut 13:6ff	56') And (if) [...], the gods will destroy that land.
42') [...] and will fly (away?). ²⁵		57') And (if) its eyes are [in] (its) forehead, the king will become more powerful ²⁵ than his huptu -troops.
43') [...] to/on its head, the (seed-)grain of that king	q Josh 8:20ff
44') [...]	r Ezek 32:2; 34:18; Ps 68:31	58') And (if) it has HR and [-]R, the king will destroy his enemy.
45') [...] its [-]DR protrudes, ²⁶ the Sun will abase ²⁷ that land.	s Cf. Gen 24:25, 32; 42:27; 43:24; Judg 19:19	59') And (if) it has no left (fore?)leg, the land of the enemy will perish.
46') [...], the king will lay low ²⁸ the hand (= power) ²⁹ of the hurādu -troops.	t Est 9:1	A Text for Divining by Misformed Human Births (RS 24.302) ³¹
47') [...] its penis, ²⁹ the weapon of the king will be raised	u Ezek 17:21	1') If [a woman] g[ives birth ...]
48') [...] his hand.	v Josh 11:19; Job 5:23	2') the l[and ...]
49') [...] in place of its eyes and its eyes (are) in its forehead, ³⁰	w Deut 28:38	3') If [a woman] gives birth[...]
50') [the enemy will] tread the land under. ³¹	x Judg 3:10; 6:2; Ps 89:14	4') will become more powerful than[...]
51') [And (if)] its [-]B protrudes from its mouth, the enemy will devour ³² the land.		=====
52') And (if) it has [no] feet, the hurādu -troops will turn ³³ against the king.		5') If a wo[man] gives birth[...]
53') And if its tongue is [...], the land will be scattered. ³⁴		6') the land of the enemy will [be destroyed.]
54') (If) its [...]HR (is/are) in its temples, the king will make peace with ³⁵ his enemy.		7') If a wo[man] gives birth[...]
55') And (if) it has n[o] [-]KB, the (seed-)grain of		8') help ³² will be [...]
		9') If a wo[man] gives birth[...]
		10') the weapon of[...]
		11') will not ob[tain offspring? ...]
		12') BH[...]
		13') will? [...]
		14') If a woman gives birth ...]

²³ "Posterity" is a hypothetical interpretation of uḫry, "what comes after." A word with identical spelling is interpreted as an adverb, "thereafter," in the ḫaḫatu text (see note 119 [text 1.103]), and a feminine form, uḫryt, means "afterlife" in the same text (CTA 17 vi 35). The verb here is kly, D-stem, "bring to a state of depletion, bring to an end, finish off" (the same verb is used in the G-stem in the Kirta text [CTA 16 iii 13-15; text 1.102] to describe the disappearance of foodstuffs in time of famine), while the active agent here, the deity Rašap, is responsible for the disappearance of Kirta's fifth wife (CTA 14 i 18-19; the verb there is ḫsp, "gather in").

²⁴ On this meaning of b^cr, see Dion 1980.

²⁵ The damaged state of the tablet prevents us from perceiving the precise form of the apparent play on "bird" and "fly" in this omen. On the verb d^cy, see note 71 to the ḫaḫatu text (1.103).

²⁶ By comparison with line 51', this anomaly probably consisted of a body part protruding improperly from a bodily orifice.

²⁷ The form tpšlt is anomalous, but seems clearly to derive from a root pšl, hitherto unattested in Ug., explained as meaning "to be low, base, vile" by comparison with Arabic and Akk. It is uncertain whether špš, "the sun," denotes the celestial orb or one of the great kings of the time. In favor of the latter interpretation is the fact that the kings of both Hatti and Egypt were addressed as "the Sun" by Ug. kings in their correspondence; against it is the absence of mention elsewhere in this text of specific political figures on the international scene.

²⁸ Again, the verbal form is anomalous, written ydll, but seems clearly to derive from dll, "to be poor, humble, of low standing."

²⁹ The Ug. word is uḫr, cognate to Akk. iṣaru (uṣaru/muṣaru in late Babylonian). Because of the missing head of the line, it is impossible to say what the anatomical anomaly was.

³⁰ Though the beginning of the phrase designating the physical anomaly is lost, it appears to have consisted of some organ appearing in the place of (ḫat) the eyes, while the eyes are to be found in the forehead. It is this text that clinched the meaning of "forehead" for the word lṣb (see note 18 to the ḫaḫatu text [1.103]), for there are good parallels in the mantic literature for eyes in the forehead but none for eyes in the teeth (the previously most widely accepted interpretation of lṣb).

³¹ This text consists of a small fragment from the lower left corner of the tablet. Though small, the fragment is precious, for it confirms the existence in Ug. of the genre corresponding to the Akk. ṣumma sinniṣtu ("If a woman [gives birth] ..."), a subcategory of the texts dealing with divination by misformed births. Though it must be pieced together from the poorly-preserved beginnings of several lines, the all-important introductory phrase is indubitably present in the Ug. text: k ("if") tlḫ ("gives birth") ḫat ("woman"). Note the repetition of the hypothetical particle k at the beginning of each entry except the one beginning at line 12', too damaged to permit an explanation of the omission. See note 3 above.

³² The word drt, "help," is the only word present in the apodosis of this text that is not attested in the extant portions of RS 24.247+.

REFERENCES

- Dietrich and Loretz 1986a; 1990a; 1990b:89-109; Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1975a; Dion 1980; Herdner 1978; Hoftijzer 1982; del Olmo Lete 1992; Pardee 1986; 1987; 1989; forthcoming; Xella 1981; Xella and Capomacchia 1979.

UGARITIC LUNAR OMENS (1.91)

(RIH 78/14)

Dennis Pardee

Like the texts for divination by misformed births, the Ugaritic collection of lunar omens corresponds directly to a Mesopotamian series, in this case Sin, the name of the Mesopotamian lunar deity. This text, which was discovered in 1978 at the site of Ras Ibn Hani, only a few kilometers from Ras Shamra, is badly damaged, only the upper portion having been preserved and that incompletely (editio princeps by Bordreuil and Caquot 1980:352-353). Like the tiny fragment attesting to the existence of the divinatory genre dealing with misformed human births, this incomplete text is precious, attesting to the transmission in Ugaritic of omens based on lunar phenomena. The text is too poorly preserved to permit a structural analysis, the only certain feature being that it begins with reference to the new moon and ends with a reference to the thirtieth day, that is, a full month as defined by consecutive sightings of the new moon. There seems, however, to be another reference to the new moon towards the end of the text (line 9'), and in line 11' some have seen the Mesopotamian month name Kislimu. It appears unlikely, therefore, that the overall organization of the text consisted of a simple progression through the phases of the lunar month. As with the divination texts in the preceding section, no text from the Mesopotamian tradition can be identified as the original from which this one would have been translated, not even one of those from Emar (in eastern Syria) dating roughly to the same period as this one.

1) If ¹ at the time of the new moon ² ^a [...], there will be poverty. ³ ^b	a Isa 47:13 b Prov 6:11ff c Jer 8:2; Job 31:26	6) [If the moon, when it rises, is red,
2) If the moon, ^c when it rises, ^d is red, ⁵ ^d	d Isa 54:16; Ps 11:6 (?)	7) [] assembly.
3) there will be prosperity ⁶ ^e [during] (that month).	e Ps 90:17 f Ps 68:14	8') [] will] perish.
4) [If] the moon, when it rises, is yellow-green ⁷ ^f	g Exod 9:1-6, 18-25	9') [] newness of the moon, ⁹ the personnel ¹⁰
5) [], the cattle will perish. ⁸		10') [] and will be put down. ¹¹
		11') [] YM YH YRH KSLM, ¹² the kings will keep an eye on each other. ¹³

¹ The hypothetical particle in this text is hm, corresponding closely to Heb. um, rather than k as in the text dealing with misformed human births (and in the hippiatric text 1.106, below).

² This text uses two words for moon: hdt, literally "newness," designates the new moon, almost certainly the appearance of the new moon established by sighting, whereas yrh designates the celestial orb and the month (the month being determined by the phases of the moon at Ugarit — see on RS 24.266 [text 1.88], note 2). The first phrase here is b hdt, lit., "in the newness." It is unfortunately uncertain whether the next word is yrh, as in line 11', the word ym, "day," or another.

³ The phrase ršn ykn shows clearly that the standard expression of "to be" was by the hollow root kn, as in Phoenician and Arabic, rather than h(w)yh, as in Aram. and Heb. The word ršn probably consists of rš + -n of apodosis (see note 6 to RS 24.247 +, RS 24.302 [texts 1.90]); it may derive either from the hollow root rš denoting poverty (so translated here, as the better antonym to n^cm(n) in line 3), or from ršš, "crush" (the state of Kirta's household at the beginning of that text was described by a form of this root [CTA 14 i 10, 22; text 1.102]).

⁴ The structure is a familiar one in Semitic: the preposition meaning "in" (b) + the infinitive of the verb (ly, "to ascend"). It is of interest that the term for the rising of the moon is different from that of the sun, which, when it rises, is said "to come forth (i.e., from its chamber and/or the netherworld)" (yš) or to "shine forth, become visible" (zrh — though translated "to rise," this verb is not used to express the act of ascending for entities other than the sun). As a general parallel for this use of ly, one can cite Neh 4:15 me^clôt haššahar, "from the rising of the dawn...."

⁵ The word phm denotes a shade of red, never black, as its use here and for one of the shades of royal "purple" indicates (see note 130 to the ²Aqhatu text [1.103]). (In Heb. peham denotes in all cases the "glowing coal," never the black lump of "coal"; only in later periods did the extension from "glowing coal" to "dead coal" to "black" occur.)

⁶ As this omen is almost completely preserved, its structure is clear and n^cm can be said to consist, in all likelihood, of n^cm, "goodness" + -n of apodosis (see note 3).

⁷ Though the reading is not absolutely clear, the same word (yrg) was probably used here as was used in the Kirta text (1.102) to describe the color of gold (CTA 14 i 53 and parallels). The word yrg apparently covered a broad spectrum of colors, from leaf-green to golden yellow (see bibliography in Pardee 1987:402). The particularity here would be the relative darkness of the moon, with a greenish-gold cast, instead of its usual bright, clear color, normally perceived as white (lbn in Heb.).

⁸ If the shape of this tablet was typical, approximately half again as high as it is wide, as many as twenty-five to thirty lines have disappeared.

⁹ Because the beginning of the line is missing, it is uncertain what the collocation of hdt with yrh here means (see above, note 2).

¹⁰ Bnš, here in the plural (or singular with enclitic -m), is the standard Ug. word for free members of Ug. society (corresponding to awilum in Akk.), often in one form or another of service to ranking members of the royal administration.

¹¹ The verb is hbz, probably the equivalent in other texts of hbt. The writing of etymological /y/ by means of {z} here and in the word for "rain" (line 13') finds its best parallels in CTA 24. The precise meaning of hbt is difficult to determine in each of its occurrences, all others in epistolary texts, though it is usually explained by Arabic hbt, "to abase, to make low."

¹² The damaged state of the tablet means that we cannot be certain whether we have here a Ug. word (ksl normally denotes a tendon or a part of the back, as in the ²Aqhatu text [1.103], CTA 19 ii 95) or the Mesopotamian month name Kislimu.

¹³ See note 73 to the ²Aqhatu text (1.103).

12') [If] three times the moon is seen in the moon/month ¹⁴ (and) thereafter	h Deut 32:2; Ps 72:6; Job 29:23	14') [If] a star falls ¹ on the thirtieth day, ¹⁶ the king [...].
13') [...]LT, there will be rain. ¹⁵ ⁴	i Isa 14:12

¹⁴ It is uncertain, for lack of clear parallels in the other collections of lunar omens, whether yrh b yrh refers to the apparent visibility of a second moon on the surface of the moon or to the reappearance of the moon three times during the month (because of apparent meteorological conditions or because the moon was thought actually to disappear during the month?).

¹⁵ mzrn ylk is apparently the entire apodosis, for the first word bears the -n of apodosis. The idiom consisting of the verb "to go" with a noun for "rain" as its subject is, to my knowledge, hitherto attested only in Akk. (alaku + a noun derived from zandnu). It is uncertain, however, whether the Ug. phrase is a calque on the Akk.

¹⁶ The lunar cycle corresponds to approximately twenty-nine and a half solar days. Because of the difference between the lunar and solar cycles, the number of days between first visibility of the new lunar crescent can be either twenty-nine or thirty.

REFERENCES

Bordreuil and Caquot 1980; Dietrich and Loretz 1986a; 1990a; 1990b; Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1976; del Olmo Lete 1992; Pardee 1987; 1993b; forthcoming.

UGARITIC EXTISPICY (1.92)

(RS 24.312, RS 24.323, RS 24.326, RS 24.327, RS 24.654, RS 24.277)

Dennis Pardee

The practice of extispicy (the examination of the organs of a sacrificed animal for purposes of divination) is attested in the ancient Near East by collections of omens of the types encountered above ("if such-and-such a feature is present, such-and-such an event will occur") and by inscribed models of the organs themselves. Only the latter category is presently attested at Ugarit. There are several liver models and one lung model. The inscriptions can be either simple marks on the clay intended to replicate features present on the observed organ, or they can be such marks accompanied by actual texts describing the circumstances of the consultation. The leading authority on these objects, J.-W. Meyer, has deciphered the marks so as to be able to determine whether the response to the inquiry was positive or negative (Meyer 1987, 1990). The Ugaritic texts constitute a peculiarity in that other known inscriptions on organ models deal with the science of examination and interpretation, rather than with the circumstances of a particular consultation.

All the Ugaritic organ models come from a single archive, that found in the so-called "Maison du prêtre aux modèles de poumon et de foies," located to the south of the acropolis at Ras Shamra in the area dubbed "ville sud" by the excavator (Schaeffer 1978). The priest's name is unknown.

The texts on the liver models are set down on the flat surface of the model, arranged either as a single line winding around the curve of the model (RS 24.312) or as a series of lines beginning from one side (all others). The lung model has three large flat sides, each having roughly the shape of a flatiron, and the inscriptions are arranged in sections delimited by lines inscribed in the clay, either curved, forming small rough circles, or straight, running from one end to the other of the model. The delimiting lines sometimes cross each other, permitting a decision regarding the order of writing the inscriptions, but this is not always the case and, moreover, there is no way of determining the order in which the three sides were inscribed. The order in which the inscriptions are presented is, therefore, somewhat arbitrary, decided by what appears to the modern reader to be a logical sequence; I have for the most part followed the order proposed in the editio princeps (Dietrich and Loretz 1969).

A Consultation on the Buying of a Servant (RS 24.312) (This liver model is) for ¹ ḡAgaptarri ² when he was	^a Exod 21:2	to buy ³ ^a the boy ⁴ of the Alashian. ⁵
---	------------------------	---

¹ The text begins simply with l, "to, for," with the item ascribed to ḡAgaptarri unstated. It appears legitimate to conclude that the item in question was the liver model itself (see below, RS 24.326 and RS 24.654, which begin with the word kbd, "liver") and the consultation recorded on it. According to Meyer 1987:220; 1990:269, the response was positive.

² The name ḡAgaptarri, linguistically Hurrian, is also attested in a brief inscription on a vase in the form of lion's head found in the house adjacent to the one where the organ models were found: "Binu ḡAgaptarri — Lion's head that Nārānu offered to Rašap Guni." Cf. Dietrich and Loretz 1978.

³ yqny, imperfect of the verb qny, "buy, obtain, produce" (word used by Eve when recognizing Yahweh's part in the birth of Cain, Gen 4:1).

⁴ The word is ḡzr, on which see note 78 to the Kirta text (1.102).

⁵ ḡalyy, a person from ḡalyy, believed by most authorities to be Cyprus.

A Consultation at the Time of Sacrifice (RS 24.323)
Sacrificial (consultation)⁶ of BSY, so[n]/daught[er]⁷ of TRY, for the ^cAttaru who is in ^cAttartu.⁸

A Consultation at the Beginning of a Month
(RS 24.326)
(This is) the liver^b (pertaining to the consultation on behalf) of YPT, son of YKN^c, when this month was about to begin.⁹

A Consultation Regarding Military Service (?)
(RS 24.327)
[...] of Yabnimilku with regard to hpt.¹⁰

A Consultation in Uncertain Circumstances
(RS 24.654)
(This is) the liver (model)¹¹ for H[...] when [...] (on) a/the day of [...].

A Lung Model Bearing a Series of Inscriptions
(RS 24.277)
(Side 1, Inscription I) Sacrifices¹² of the entire month.³ (First) a(n object) vow(ed)^c and a sacrifice.

b Ezek 21:26
c Jer 44:25
d Exod 12:8-10
e Lev 4:10;
9:4, 18;
22:23, 27;
Num 15:11;
Deut 17:1;
18:3;
Judg 6:25;
2 Sam 6:13;
Hos 12:12;
Ps 69:32

(Side 1, Inscription II)
Those (= the sacrifices) of (= offered by)¹⁴ N²AT and gifts of (= for) Tarrummanni¹⁵ and a sacrifice of (= offered by) all; all (will eat this) sacrifice (until) it is gone,^d in accordance with the writings.¹⁶
(Side 1, Inscription III)
Those (= the sacrifices) of (= offered by) N²AT and Qurwanu; (these will be done) like the (preceding) sacrifice.
(Side 1, Inscription IV)
[...] personnel.¹⁷
(Side 2, Inscription V)
A ram [...]¹⁸
(Side 2, Inscription VI)
YPY[...]¹⁹
(Side 2, Inscription VII)
A bull²⁰ ^e of (= for) Dagan [...] in the house,²¹ according to the wr[itings], and to/surely²² the sacrifice [...].
(Side 3, Inscription VIII)²³
If²⁴ the city is about to be seized,

⁶ The first word of this text is dbht. Now, the normal word for "sacrifice" is the masculine form dbh. Perhaps the feminine form dbht was used particularly for the sacrificial act linked with extispicy. Because the end of the word for "son" is damaged leaving open the possibility of reading "daughter" (see next note), it is possible that the person in question is feminine and that dbht is a feminine verbal form.

⁷ The last sign of this word is broken and could be either {n} (bn, "son") or {t} (bt, "daughter").

⁸ ^cAttartu is here a place name (rather than the divine name) of which two are known from the Ug. texts, a gt ^ctrt within the kingdom, and ^ctrt, known as the home of the deity Milku and located plausibly to the northeast of the Sea of Galilee (^cAštrōt Qarnayim in the Hebrew Bible; for discussion and bibliography, see Pardee 1988:94-97). Male and female forms of the deity ^ctr were known at Ugarit, corresponding probably to the evening and morning star, respectively (for bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:466-470).

⁹ k yph yrh hnd, lit., "when this month was about to open" (taking yph as N-stem).

¹⁰ We have encountered hpt in two texts (Kirta [1.102, see note 22] and the Birth Omen text RS 24.247 + [1.90: see note 18]) where it clearly denotes a category of soldier. The state of this text does not allow a certain interpretation.

¹¹ Although fragmentary, this text is important for it and RS 24.326 are the only ones that bear inscriptions that include the word kbd, "liver."

¹² The genitive pronoun beginning "inscription II" is plural, an indication that dbh in "inscription I" is in fact a plural, in the construct state.

¹³ Because Ug. does not have a definite article, it is difficult to determine if a phrase with kl means "every" or "all of." The phrase kl yrh in this text has been interpreted both ways. Given, though, the circumstantial nature of these organ-model inscriptions, the interpretation as sacrifices having to do with a particular month appears preferable to one that sees here a broader description. One can surmise, comparing the liver inscription RS 24.326 (see above), that the inscription reports a series of sacrifices carried out at the beginning of a month, one of which served divinatory purposes. The significance of the fact that the object on which the inscriptions were recorded is a lung model cannot be determined, nor can one know whether all the following inscriptions have to do with the condition indicated here. That all the inscriptions on sides 1 and 2 should be linked appears plausible, but the conditional formulation of inscriptions VIII-X does not lend itself to so circumstantial a consultation.

¹⁴ "Inscription II" begins with the relative/genitive pronoun dr, indicating that the sense of this inscription depends directly on that of the previous one. This syntactic indicator is corroborated by the delimiting lines, for the one around "inscription II" seems to have been inscribed after the one around "inscription I."

¹⁵ Tarrummanni is known from other texts as a divine name (for bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:478) while n²at appears to be the name of one of the persons presenting the sacrifices, Qurwanu ("inscription III") being the other.

¹⁶ The verb for participating in the sacrificial meal is kly, lit., "devour, consume," apparently implying that the entire sacrifice is to be eaten at the sacrificial meal. Only one other ritual text states explicitly that all may eat of a sacrifice and there the verb is lhm (RS 24.260:10 [KTU 1.115]) and the entire ritual context seems to be quite different. We do not know, therefore, what "the writings" were to which this text refers.

¹⁷ The word is bnš (on which see note 10 to RS 78/14 [text 1.91]); the same word appears below in the inscriptions on "side 3."

¹⁸ Only one sign is preserved in line 15' after the letter {š}. I hypothesize that the structure of this inscription and that of "inscription VII" were similar and that the š denotes the animal sacrificed, while the next word would have qualified š, perhaps a divine name as in "inscription VII."

¹⁹ This inscription is too poorly preserved to permit analysis of {yp[...]}, either as to division of the letters or as to meaning.

²⁰ The word for "bull" here is gr, not the standard word in the sacrificial texts (usually alp).

²¹ Again, the state of the inscription precludes a decision regarding whether bt here denotes the temple of Dagan or another house.

²² t could be either the preposition or the "emphatic" particle.

²³ The inscriptions on "side 3" seem to form a single text, though the relationship between the three inscriptions is uncertain for three principal reasons: (1) the damage to the left side of this surface of the object has caused the loss of the beginnings of the lines in "inscription IX"; (2) though this surface is divided into four sections by straight lines in the clay, only three of the sections seem to have been inscribed (the traces of writing noted by the editors in one of the sections, their section "i," are in fact absent); (3) the scribe turned the model around and wrote "inscription X" in the opposite direction as compared with the two previous inscribed fields.

²⁴ The hypothetical particle hm is used twice in this line, though the state of the text means that we are uncertain as to where the second protasis ends and the apodosis begins. Note that the content of the protases has nothing to do with an observation of exta, and that this conditional formulation seems, therefore, to be dealing, not with the technique of extispicy, but with a hypothetical circumstance in which sacrifice (and extispicy?)

if the man (= warrior) attacks,²⁵ / the (male) personnel²⁶ (of the city)
(Side 3, Inscription IX)
[...] the women, they will take a goat [...]²⁷

f Num 13:31; Judg 1:1; 1 Sam 7:7; 1 Kgs 14:25; Isa 36:10 etc. g Lev 12:8; 1 Kgs 19:21 h Exod 12:5; Lev 1:10; 3:12; 4:23; Num 7:16; 18:17; Ezek 43:22; 45:23 etc. i Ps 27:4; Job 36:25 j Isa 17:13; Jer 31:10	(Side 3, Inscription X) (in) (or: with regard to) the house, the (male) personnel will take ^a a goat ^b and see ^c afar. ²⁸ j
--	---

should be used.

²⁵ There are two verbs for the hostile act here, ²*hd*, "to seize," and ²*hy*, "to ascend (i.e., to go up against)." The word for "man" here is mt, which some have taken as the word for "death." Comparison with the prayer in RS 24.266 (text 1.88) leads rather to the conclusion that the word is mutu, "man," as a strong, fighting entity (cf. the same word in Akk.).

²⁶ The term here is bnš, denoting the free male citizen (see note 10 to RIH 78/14 [text 1.91]). We know from a letter (RS 1.018 [CTA 55]) that bnš could be appointed to transport statues of deities. It appears, therefore, that priests had at their disposal men to carry out the physical tasks involved in the cult and that these tasks extended to touching the holy and effecting divinatory sacrifices.

²⁷ The word ²*atf* seems to set up an opposition between the males (bnš) in the city and the females; the same opposition is set up by the same two terms in RS 18.041:30'-31' (text 1.93). The verb "to take" here is not marked for feminine gender, so the status of the women with regard to the actions of the men is unknown. The offering of a goat (²*z*) is not common, but the use of the verb lqh + ²*z* here and of lqh + gdy, "kid" in a sacrificial context in RS 13.006 (PRU II 154; KTU 1.79) may be taken as an indication that we are dealing here with some form of sacrifice, though the precise term has disappeared in the lacuna. It is commonly believed that these lines deal with the offering of a goat in view of divination by extispicy, though it may be a matter of simple sacrifice. Any connection with the rite of atonement in Lev 16 and with the male goat used in that rite is dubious; the vocabulary and circumstances are too dissimilar to permit a close comparison.

²⁸ The expression yhdy mrhqm has inspired various interpretations. In this sacrificial context, perhaps one of extispicy, the interpretation of hdy as the verb meaning "to see" (which appears repeatedly in the section of the ²*Aqhatu* [text 1.103] where Dānī²ilu is looking for the birds in the heavens [CTA 19 ii 105 - iii 145]) appears plausible. Mrhqm, probably an adverbial form of the noun mrhq, "what is far off," will then denote either separation in time (the future) or in space (something located afar off). Because a m-preformative noun will usually denote a spatial relationship, rather than a temporal one, it appears plausible to see this phrase as denoting the retreat of the enemy. In line with this spatial interpretation of mrhqm, others have interpreted the verb here by Arabic hdw, which means "to drive camels," and have proposed a comparison with Lev 16, where the scapegoat is driven out into the wilderness (hammidbārāh). For bibliography, see Pardee (forthcoming).

REFERENCES

Dietrich and Loretz 1969; 1978a; 1986a; 1990a; Loretz 1985; Meyer 1987; 1990; del Olmo Lete 1992; Pardee 1988a; 1989-90; forthcoming; Schaeffer 1978; Xella 1981.

UGARITIC DREAM OMENS (1.93) (RS 18.041)

Dennis Pardee

This text, discovered in 1954 in the palace, is in a very poor state of preservation and its interpretation is uncertain (editio princeps by Virolleaud 1965, text 158). The presence of the word "dreams" in the first line and the variety of terms that have been preserved in the following lines make it at least plausible that we have here a rough catalogue of items that may be seen in dreams along with an interpretation by item or by category. The interpretation of dreams as a category of divination is well known from Mesopotamia (Oppenheim 1956). As with previous divinatory texts translated here, there is no Akkadian text that corresponds directly to this one, nor is there a single text that makes the attempt, as this one seems to do, to furnish a brief catalogue of the world as seen in dreams.

- | | | |
|---|--|---|
| 1) Document ^a of dreams. ¹ ^b A year-old ^c bull ² ^d and [...] | a Exod 17:14
etc.
b Gen 31:10-
12; 41:17-24;
Dan 7-8 | 3) The bull ^f the young bull of Ba ^c lu [...]
4) the heifer ^g (that?) will be slaughtered [...]
5) one year. |
| 2) two years; the mature ^e bull; ³ the word (= interpretation?) ⁴ [...] | c Exod 12:5 etc. d Deut 7:13; 28:4, 18, 51 e Lev 1:3-10 etc. f Gen 32:16 g Gen 41:2, 3 | |

¹ The various categories covered in this text seem to preclude the interpretation of hlmm as denoting "fattened animals" (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:396). See also below, note 19 to "In a dream" (b hlmm), line 28'.

² The term in this paragraph and at the beginning of the next is ²*alp*, denoting the "bull" of various ages, while the "young bull" in line 3 is the pr ("heifer" is prt), apparently, as in Mari Akk., the immature bull, under a year in age. In Heb. par seems to fill the semantic slot of Ug. ²*alp*, denoting the bull of various ages, for the age of the par can be defined, just as the age of the ²*alp* is variously defined here.

³ The Ug. phrase is ²*alp dkr*, lit., "a male bovine." The point of the the qualifier dkr seems to be to indicate that the ²*alp* has reached breeding age.

⁴ The word rgm appears here near the end of the line. Because of the state of the text, it cannot be determined whether rgm here indicates that the interpretation follows. Because the ends of most lines have disappeared, it is also impossible to determine with what frequency rgm recurs. Its presence again in line 7, however, can be taken as an indication that it has a structural function in this text.

6) The horse ⁵ of ʿAttartu and the horse of Š[...] ⁵	h 2 Kgs 23:11	20') The n ² it-tool ¹⁴ [...]
7) and if the horse falls over: ⁶ i the word (= interpretation?) [...]	i Judg 7:13; Jonah 3:4	21') then the n ² it-tool [...]
8) that arrives (where) the man ⁷ (is) [...]	j Gen 31:10	22') spe[ak], ¹⁵ your servant [...]
9) And the donkey [...] donkey [...]	k Dan 8:5	23') The worker (or: the work) ¹⁶ (with) the h ² mtt-tool ¹⁷ [...] [...]
10) and ditto ⁸ [...]	l Deut 16:9; 23:26	24') And the cups (of) ŠQYM/T ¹⁸ [...]
11) and BN [...]	m Gen 40:1 etc.	25') the sons of the cup-bearers ^m [...]
12) to the man, the donkey [...]		26') KBDT the personnel [...]
13) and that to the harness ⁹ [...]		27') The sandals [...]
14) And the flock ¹ the goat ^k [...]		28') In a dream ¹⁹ [...]
15) the kid, offspring of [...]		29') face of [...]
16) the lamb [...] ¹⁰		30') The men (personnel) (and) the women [...] ²⁰
17) son(s) of Ba ^c lu ¹¹ [...]		31') barley [...]
... ¹²		32'-34') [...]
18') [...] the servant-girl ¹³ [...]
19') [...]

⁵ It is now clear that the deities here are not ʿAttartu and ʿAnatu, as the original editor thought; unfortunately, all that can be said about the second phrase with šfw, "horse," is that it begins with the letter {š}. From an administrative text discovered in 1986 at Ras Shamra, we know that other deities at Ugarit had horses, living flesh-and-blood horses, for which rations of grain were issued (see Pardee 1988b; Bordreuil 1990). This omen seems, therefore, to deal with the appearance in a dream of a horse belonging to the goddess ʿAttartu and, plausibly, another deity whose name begins with {š}, such as šapšu. The sources are not of a kind to tell us whether particular types of horses went under the heading of "horses of X-deity" or whether the horse was identified simply by the presence of the deity in the dream. The association of ʿAttartu and the horse is particularly well attested in ancient Near Eastern iconography (Leclant 1960; for further bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:468-70).

⁶ One may surmise that the fall of the horse was a negatively polarized omen.

⁷ The word for "man" here and in lines 12 and 26' is bnš, which also appears in line 30', along with ʿatt, "women," to designate one of the principal categories of entities covered by this text. On the usage of bnš in these divinatory texts, see note 10 to RIH 78/14 (text 1.91).

⁸ As in RS 24.247:6, 12, 18, mtn may mark the repetition of the entity whence the prognosis is drawn. See text 1.90 above.

⁹ The same word for "harness," mdl, is used here as in the mythological texts (e.g., in the ʿAqhatu text, CTA 19 ii 52, 57 [text 1.103]), though the word for "donkey" here, hmr, is not the usual one (Dānīʿilu mounts a ʿr). The word hmr appears in the mythological texts only in the passage of the Kirta story where noisy animals keep the king of the besieged city from sleeping (CTA 14 iii 121, v 225 [text 1.102]).

¹⁰ This paragraph opens with the generic term, šʿin, and three specific terms are extant, ʿz, "goat," hʿu, "kid," and ʿimr, "lamb."

¹¹ It is uncertain what the function of this phrase is in the text. It could mean "sons of the owner," but the presence of Ba^clu in line 3, where the presence of the deity is plausible because of the presence of deities in the following paragraph, leads me to prefer the same interpretation here.

¹² Some fifteen to twenty lines may have disappeared in the lacuna.

¹³ Because of the state of the text, it is impossible to determine whether ʿamt constitutes the principal category of this paragraph, i.e., servants seen in dreams, or whether the appearance is incidental (like bnš in lines 8, 12, 26', and, apparently ʿbd, "(male) servant," in line 22'). In any case the following paragraph initiates a sequence dealing with tools, not, primarily at least, persons.

¹⁴ The word n²it is attested in both Ug. and Akk. writing and denotes a type of tool that the sources do not allow us to define precisely (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:425).

¹⁵ The text reads {trg[-]}, perhaps to be restored as a form of the verb rgm, "to speak," though the subject cannot be determined.

¹⁶ m^cbd could be either a m-preformative noun or a D-stem participle.

¹⁷ Heb. hermēš seems to designate a type of sickle, but the Ug. term may denote a tool of similar shape but different function (Healey 1983a:50; Huehnergard 1987:130).

¹⁸ The tablet is broken in such a fashion as to preclude determining whether the word here is the same as in the following line (šqym, "those who give drinks") or a feminine form from the same root.

¹⁹ The phrase b hlm seems to support the interpretation of the text as dealing with dreams, and the repetition of the term here seems to indicate a shift in structure. The state of the text does not allow us to know, however, whether that shift was from the catalogue of entities to more general statements or, as some of the following vocabulary seems to indicate, from non-human to human entities.

²⁰ A similar expression of what appears to be the merismus "men – women" is found in RS 24.277: 23-26 (see notes 26, 27 to that text [1.92]).

REFERENCES

Bordreuil 1990; Healey 1983a; Huehnergard 1987; Leclant 1960; Oppenheim 1956:179-373; Pardee 1987; 1988b; 1989-90; forthcoming; Virolleaud 1965.

4. INCANTATIONS AND RITUALS

UGARITIC LITURGY AGAINST VENOMOUS REPTILES (1.94)

(RS 24.244)

Dennis Pardee

Three Ugaritic texts dealing specifically with the problem of venomous serpents have been discovered: this one, a very fragmentary text found along with this one (RS 24.251+), and RS 1992.2014 (translated below as text 1.100). The first two texts (editio princeps by Virolleaud 1968:564-580) were found in the archive of the "prêtre aux modèles de poumon et de foies" (on this building, see introduction to 1.92) and by their liturgical form reflect that person's interest in ritual (see on RS 24.266 [1.88]), whereas the third is an incantation in the narrower sense of the word.

This text consists of three major sections, of which the first is divided into twelve subsections. In these subsections the equine heroine, seeking a vanquisher of venomous serpents, sends a message to twelve deities. The first eleven, all important members of the Ugaritic pantheon, react with typical snake-charming gestures but go no further. Only the twelfth, Hôrānu, responds effectively and, in the second (or thirteenth) section, performs a ritual that renders the serpent venom powerless. The final section presents the negotiations between Hôrānu and the mare in view of marriage.

The text itself does not constitute a pure incantation, and in that respect is unlike RS 1992.2014 (text 1.100). Each of the pleas by the mare to a deity does contain, however, the recitation (mut) of a brief incantation expressed in terms proper to a snake charmer (mlḥš). The quasi-narrative form of the text, its mythological features, and the dialogical form of the last paragraphs have led to the proposal that this text may constitute one of the few relatively clear examples in Ugaritic literature of a ritual in mythological form, that is, a ritual against venomous reptiles of which this text provides the libretto (Pardee 1978a:108; 1988a:225).

The Mare Seeks an Ally Capable of Vanquishing Venomous Serpents (lines 1-60)

The mother of the stallion, the mare,¹ the daughter of the spring, the daughter of the stone,²
the daughter of the heavens and the abyss,^{2 b}
Calls to her mother, Šapšu:^{3 c}

Message to ʾIlu (lines 2-7)

Mother Šapšu, take a message to ʾIlu at the headwaters of the two rivers,⁴ at the confluence of the deeps:^{4 e}

a Jer 2:27
b Gen 7:11;
8:2; 49:25;
Deut 33:13;
Ps 107:26;
Prov 8:27-28
c 2 Kgs 23:11
d Cf. Gen
2:10-13;
Ezek 47:1-12
e Cf. Deut
8:7
f Isa 3:3;
Jer 8:17;
Ps 58:6;
Qoh 10:11 g Deut 32:33; Pss 58:5; 140:4; Job 6:4

My incantation⁵ for serpent bite, for the scaly serpent's⁶ poison:⁷
From it, O charmer,⁷ destroy, from it cast out the venom.⁸
Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly <serpent>,
draws up a chair and sits.⁸

Message to Baʿlu (lines 8-13)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message

¹ The Ug. phrase is ʾum pḥl pḥlt, the last two words being masculine and feminine nominal forms from the root pḥl. In the various Semitic languages, the root expresses primarily the reproductive capacities of males, be they human, animal, or vegetal. The terms used here do not necessarily denote a particular species. In Ug. pḥl seems, nonetheless, to be used primarily for equids (Pardee 1979:405-406; Dietrich and Loretz 1986b).

² Though the entities named here are certainly projected into the divine realm, the ad hoc nature of the list becomes evident by comparison with the mythological texts, on the one hand, and the rituals, on the other, for the entities named here are not attested as divinities in these other sources. Both "heavens" and "abyss" appear in these sources, but in combination with other entities: ʾars w šmm, "earth and heavens," and grm w thmt, "mountains and waters (of the abyss)," appear as double deities in the Ug. "pantheon" texts and rituals dependent thereupon (see Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.017 and RS 24.643). Note finally that vocalized forms of šmm and thmt (i.e., a feminine form of thm) appear in adjacent entries in one of the polyglot vocabularies (Nougayrol 1968 text 137 iii 33' 34'). The root thm appears in three forms in Ug., thm, singular, designating the body of fresh waters lying under the earth, thmt, and thmtm, representing either the plural and the dual or the plural without and with "enclitic" -m (see below note 4). A fourth form, a singular form bearing the feminine morpheme -at, is also attested in syllabic script in the polyglot vocabulary just mentioned (cf. Huehnergard 1987:184-185).

³ Šapšu, the sun deity, is feminine in Ugarit. On the link between the horse and the sun, see Delcor 1981:101-102.

⁴ The address of each of the twelve deities is indicated in each commission. Some are well known from other texts, whereas some of the information provided by this text is new. Though similar to descriptions elsewhere of ʾIlu's abode (see note on CTA 2 iii 4 [text 1.86]; cf. CTA 17 vi 48 [text 1.103]), this one is unique in using the phrase ʾdt thmtm, "the meeting-place of the deeps," in place of ʾapq thmtm, "the fountains of the deeps."

⁵ mut, from muty, "to count," appears to have a semantic range similar to Akk. minūtu, "recitation," which can be used for the recitation of an incantation. If that is the correct interpretation of the word here (for discussion and bibliography see Pardee 1988a:206-208), the problem arises as to why the mare is sending a message containing the recitation of an incantation. I have explained the literary structure as consisting of a test sent by the mare to a series of deities, her real goal being marriage with the one who reacts most capably (1979:407-408).

⁶ On the particular importance of the word qšr, lit., "the one that sloughs its skin," see Bordreuil 1983.

⁷ The word for "poison" here is šmrr, "that which produces bitterness" (on mrr, "bitter," see Pardee 1978b:249-288). The word for "venom" in the next verse is hmt, cognate to Heb. ḥēmāh, apparently from the root yhm, a by-form of hmm, "be hot."

⁸ For the interpretation of this verse as reflecting snake-charming devices, see Astour 1968:17-19, and for the interpretation of these devices to Ba^clu on the heights of Šapānu.⁹

 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.
 Then he binds the serpent,
 feeds the scaly serpent,
 draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Dagan (lines 14-18)
 She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
 Mother Šapšu, take a message
 to Dagan in Tuttul.¹⁰
 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.
 Then he binds the serpent,
 feeds the scaly serpent,
 draws up a chair and sits.

Message to ^cAnatu-wa-^cAttartu (lines 19-24)
 She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
 Mother Šapšu, take a message
 to ^cAnatu-wa-^cAttartu in ²Inbubu.¹¹
 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.
 Then he¹² binds the serpent,
 feeds the scaly serpent,
 draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Yarihu (lines 25-29)
 She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
 Mother Šapšu, take a message
 to Yarihu in Larugatu.¹³
 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.
 Then he binds the serpent,
 feeds the scaly serpent,
 draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Rašap (lines 30-34)
 She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
 Mother Šapšu, take a message
 to Rašap in Bibitta.¹⁴
 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.
 Then he binds the serpent,
 feeds the scaly serpent,
 draws up a chair and sits.

Message to ^cAttartu (lines 34a-e)¹⁵
 <She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
 Mother Šapšu, take a message
 to ^cAttartu in Mari.¹⁶
 My incantation for serpent bite,
 for the scaly serpent's poison:
 From it, O charmer, destroy,
 from it cast out the venom.

as falling short of the mare's expectations, Pardee 1978a:105-106. According to the latter interpretation, each of the first eleven deities is depicted as a simple snake charmer, capable of dealing with only a limited number of serpents, while Hōrānu acts on a grand scale, dissipating the venom in its entirety.

⁹ Ba^clu's home is consistently described as in the mrym (or, in other texts, the šrrr) špn, terms denoting the heights and the recesses of Mount Šapānu. This was the West Semitic name for Mount Casius, modern Jabal al-Aqra^c, located on what is today the frontier between Syria and Turkey, some forty-five kilometers north of Ras Shamra as the crow flies. For bibliography, see Pardee 1987:442-443; 1988a:134-135; 1989-90:437, 445, 472, 494.

¹⁰ Ancient Tuttul on the Balīḫ, modern Tell Bi'a, was particularly associated with Dagan in the high Amorite period. Dagan is a deity of fertility, particularly that of the grain (for bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:446-448).

¹¹ In the Ba^clu texts, ²*inbb* is attested as the home of ^cAnatu (CTA 1 ii 14; 3 iv 78 [text 1.86]). Here we meet most acutely the problem of the relationship between ^cAnatu and ^cAttartu, for they appear in this section as a double deity, while ^cAttartu appears again as an independent deity in line 34a (on the textual problem there, see note 15 below). For discussion and bibliography, see Pardee 1988a:48-50; 1989-90:464-466, 468-470.

¹² The verbal form does not reflect the gender of the deity addressed, indicating that the encapsulated incantation formula is presented as directed to a (male) serpent charmer, as is indicated in the preceding verse ("O charmer"). For this interpretation, see Pardee 1988a:209-210.

¹³ The interpretation of lrgt was mysterious until the existence of a town named Larugatu was discovered in the texts from Ebla (bibliography in Pardee 1988a:211; 1989-90:490). The data are still too sparse to allow an explanation for the presence there of the principal West Semitic moon deity.

¹⁴ The link between Rašap and the Anatolian town of Bibitta was established by Barré (1978) and this explanation supersedes all attempts at explanations of bbt based on Semitic etymology (bibliography in Pardee 1988a:211; 1989-90:473-475, 483).

¹⁵ The paragraph dealing with ^cAttartu of Mari was accidentally omitted by the scribe, who noted his mistake on the left margin of the tablet as follows: ²*atṛ ršp ^ctṛt ^cm ^ctṛt mṛh mut nṭk nḫš*, "After Rašap, ^cAttartu: '... to ^cAttartu in Mari: My incantation for serpent bite'" (in other words: "Insert after the paragraph on Rašap the one on ^cAttartu, whose address is at Mari"). The neat abbreviation of an entire paragraph in a few words shows that the scribe was not only well aware of the repetitious nature of the text he was inscribing (how could he not be?), but had grasped perfectly well the distinctive features of each paragraph, i.e., the proper sequence in a list, the divine name, and the address. In the second serpent incantation text (see introduction), where essentially the same deities are mentioned according to different structural principals (i.e., by pairs, usually without address) but in essentially the same order, ^cAttartu is replaced by a related double-deity, ^cAttaru-wa-^cAttapir (RS 24.251:41', cf. Pardee 1988a:242, 252-253). On this and other "haplographic marginalia" see Hallo 1977.

¹⁶ Mari, modern Tell Hariri on the middle Euphrates, is one of the principal sources of information on life in upper Mesopotamia in ca. 1750 BCE, the heyday of the Amorites. On the identification of a temple of ^cAttartu discovered there, see discussion and bibliography in Pardee 1988a:211; 1989-90:468-470.

Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly serpent,
draws up a chair and sits. >

Message to Zizzu-wa-Kamātu (lines 35-39)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message
to Zizzu-wa-Kamātu in Hurriyatu:¹⁷
My incantation for serpent bite,
for the scaly serpent's poison:
From it, O charmer, destroy,
from it cast out the venom.
Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly serpent,
draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Milku (lines 40-44)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message
to Milku in ʿAttartu.¹⁸ ʰ
My incantation for serpent bite,
for the scaly serpent's poison:
From it, O charmer, destroy,
from it cast out the venom.
Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly serpent,
draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu (lines 45-50)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message to Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu in Crete.¹⁹
My incantation for serpent bite,

ʰ Deut 1:4;
Josh 12:4;
13:12, 31
1 Gen 27:45;
Isa 49:20

for the scaly serpent's poison:
From it, O charmer, destroy,
from it cast out the venom.
Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly serpent,
draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Šahru-wa-Šalimu (lines 51-56)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message to Šahru-wa-Šalimu in the heavens:²⁰
My incantation for serpent bite,
for the scaly serpent's poison:
From it, O charmer, destroy,
from it cast out the venom.
Then he binds the serpent,
feeds the scaly serpent,
draws up a chair and sits.

Message to Hōrānu (lines 57-60)

She again calls to her mother Šapšu:
Mother Šapšu, take a message
to Hōrānu in Mašūdu.²¹
My incantation for serpent bite,
for the scaly serpent's poison:
From it, O charmer, destroy,
from it cast out the venom.²²

Hōrānu Takes Care of the Problem (lines 61-69)

She (the mare)²³ turns (her) face to Hōrānu, for she is to be bereaved of her offspring.
He (Hōrānu) returns to the city of the east,
he heads

¹⁷ Of the three proper names in this entry, only Kamātu, generally identified with the deity Kemōš known from the Hebrew Bible (bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:453), is known. The divine name's formation is that of the double divine name, but here the first element is unidentified, though one can say that its common explanation by Semitic ḫ, "mud," is prima facie unlikely because of the name's writing with {z} in Ug., in texts where {t} and {z} are not confused (Pardee 1988a:212, n. 64). The city where Zizzu-wa-Kamātu dwelt has not been identified (Astour 1968:20).

¹⁸ The geographical name is written like, and was plausibly identical with, the divine name ʿAttartu, and the proper explanation of this entry and of the parallel entry in the second serpent incantation text (RS 24.251+) was first given by Astour 1968:19, 30. The importance of this datum for the interpretation of RS 24.252:2 was first understood by Margulis (1970:344; history of discussion in Pardee 1988a:94-97, 212, 252). Milku is poorly attested in the Ug. literature but is plausibly related to the deity Milkem, identified with the Ammonites in the Hebrew Bible. A connection with the Punic molek-sacrifice is disputed (Heider 1985) and unlikely. The home of Milku is situated in ʿAttartu, the town located northeast of the Sea of Galilee (ʿAštārōt-Qarnayim in Heb.). This identification is rendered extremely likely by the parallelism of ʿttr and hdrʿy in RS 24.252:2-3, essentially identical to ʿAštārōt and ʿEdreʿt in Deut 1:4 and Josh 12:4; 13:12, 31, the two principal towns ruled by ʿOg, king of Bashan. Among recent discoveries at Ras Shamra is a text mentioning for the first time the deity and his home as a construct phrase, mlk ʿttr, providing evidence for the origin of the Phoenician deity mlk ʿaštart (the text is RS 1986.2235:17; see Pardee 1988b; Bordreuil 1990).

¹⁹ In the case of the double-deity Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu, the first element corresponds to a deity well known from other ancient Near Eastern sources, while the second is basically an adjectival form meaning "wise," not known from other sources as an independent deity. Kōtaru(wa-Ḥasīsu) is the craftsman god at Ugarit, involved in building, manufacturing, and music-making. Here his home is fixed in Crete, while in the ʿAqhatu text (CTA 17 v 21, 31 [1.103]) it is in Egypt (Memphis). In the Baʿlu cycle he is said to be domiciled both in Egypt and in Crete (CTA 1 iii 1-2, 18-19; 3 vi 14-15 [text 1.86]). This craftsman deity thus had shops in two of the principal centers of civilization and artisanship in the ancient Mediterranean world. In the syllabic versions of the "pantheon" texts from Ugarit, Kōtaru is explicitly identified with Mesopotamian Ea; by inference from his home in Egypt, he is also identified with Egyptian Ptah (see note 30 to the ʿAqhatu text [1.103]); and by inference from his other home further west in the Mediterranean world, with Hephaistos. For an overview with bibliography, see Pardee 1995.

²⁰ CTA 23 (1.87) deals primarily with the birth of this double-deity, the meaning of whose name is "Dawn-and-Dusk." It is debated whether these deities also represented the morning star and the evening star (Cauquot, Sznycer and Herdner 1974:358, 361-363); one can doubt that such is the case because these rôles seem to fall specifically to ʿAštartu and ʿAštartu (see Pardee forthcoming on RS 1.009:4 and RS 1.017:18, 25).

²¹ Hōrānu is closely associated with magic at Ugarit: he is invoked in the curse that Kirta calls down on his son's head (CTA 16 vi 55 [1.102]); here he is the only deity willing to vanquish venomous snakes; in the second serpent incantation (RS 24.251+ [see above, introduction]) he is ranked right alongside ʿIlū; and in RIH 78/20 [1.96] he works against sorcerers. For bibliography on this deity, see Pardee 1989-90:450-451. His domicile of mašd is unidentified, except by etymological explanations. Theoretically, it could be either a proper noun designating a terrestrial cult place (such as Tuttul or Mari) or a common noun serving to designate his dwelling (such as "the heavens" in the case of Šahru-wa-Šalimu).

²² The last tricolon of the previous sections is here omitted, the one in which the other deities were depicted as a snake-charmer. In its place is a long section depicting the mare appealing directly to Hōrānu and the latter carrying out a comprehensive program against serpent venom.

²³ That the subject here is phlt rather than špš seems to be indicated by the second clause, where ḫtl seems to indicate the worry of the equid, for Great Araššihu, for well-watered²⁴ Araššihu.²⁴

He casts a tamarisk²⁵ ^k (from) among the trees, the "tree of death"²⁶ (from) among the bushes.^m
With the tamarisk he expels it (the venom),ⁿ with the fruit stalk of a date palm he banishes it, with the succulent part of a reed he makes it pass on,
with the "carrier" he carries it away.²⁶
Then Hôrānu goes to his house,
arrives at his court.
The venom is weak as though (in) a stream, is dispersed as though (in) a canal.²⁷ ^o

Hôrānu Weds the Mare (lines 70-76)
Behind her the house of incantation,²⁸

j 2 Sam 12:27
k Jer 48:6
l Cf. Gen 2:9
m Gen 2:5
n Exod 14:27
o Prov 5:16
p Gen 34:12;
Exod 22:15,
16;
1 Sam 18:25
q Deut 23:19;
Isa 23:17, 18;
Ezek 16:31,
34, 41;
Hos 9:1;
Mic 1:7

behind her the house she has shut, behind her she has set the bronze (bolt).

Hôrānu's Plea for Entry (lines 71-72)

Open the house of incantation, open the house that I may enter,
the palace that I may come in.

The Mare's Requirements (lines 73-74)

Give as <my bride-price>²⁹ serpents, give poisonous lizards as my bride-price,^p
adders as my wife-price.³⁰ ^q

Hôrānu Assents (lines 75-76)

I hereby give serpents as your bride-price, adders as your wife-price.

rather than of the celestial orb.

²⁴ This name apparently reflects the Hurrian name for the Tigris (Astour 1968:23), though a city so named is unknown from presently available sources.

²⁵ The verb "to cast" here, i.e., ydy, is the same as that in the request to cast out the venom in the mare's message to the twelve deities. Though the verb is not used in this passage to express explicitly the requested casting out of the venom, its presence here at the beginning of the description of Hôrānu's acts may be interpreted as meaning that the following acts are intended to have the effect of carrying out the request. That is, by the act of casting pieces of wood in a particular fashion (see note 27) Hôrānu effectively casts out the venom. Just as this verse provides the explicit link with the mare's request by the repetition of the verb ydy, it also provides an explicit link with the ritual itself that Hôrānu performs in the following quadricolon, where the tamarisk (^c*r*^c*r*) is the first of the plants mentioned. The identification of the "tree of death" (^c*s* mu) in the next line is unknown, however, and its function is thus unclear. Because the tamarisk is a desert tree, it appears plausible to see in "tree of death" an epithet of the tamarisk rather than the designation of a second type of plant. If such is the case, this verse mentions only the first of the four plants that appear in the following description of the ritual.

²⁶ As is appropriate in a magical rite, each of the acts is expressed by a punning formula (^c*r*^c*r* + yn^c*rm*¹, ssn + ysyn, ^c*dm* + y^c*dyn*, and ybl + ybln). For the identification of the plants in question, see Astour 1968:24-26. The last formula constitutes a figura etymologica based on the root ybl, "to bear, carry," but the plant designated as ybl has not been identified botanically (cf. Astour 1968:25).

²⁷ The entire preceding passage appears to reflect imitative magic: as the various types of wood float away, so the venom is dispersed, as though in water (Pardee 1978a:91-98, 105-106). Astour (1968:23-26) cited parallels in Mesopotamian magical literature for the use of various types of wood and plants in prophylactic rituals. The new Ug. incantation against serpents (RS 1992:2014 [text 1.100]) refers globally to wood so used as ^c*s* qdš, "holy (pieces of) wood."

²⁸ Taking a clue from the fact that the only incantation mentioned in this text is the mare's (in each of the first twelve paragraphs — see above, note 5), I have interpreted this verse as marking a change of scene as compared with the preceding verses, i.e., a return to the mare's home (Pardee 1988a:219-220). She has, according to this view, shut herself up in her own house and will only open the door to a serious offer of marriage. Alternatively, one could consider the house in question to be Hôrānu's, the last mentioned in the text. That the following lines constitute a dialogue is clear from the change in persons (third to first); that one is female is indicated by the verbal forms in lines 70-71 ("she shut/set"). Because the content of the dialogue includes references to exchanges associated with marriage, it appears to be necessary to view the protagonists as male and female. Thus, though the subjects are not explicitly stated, it appears necessary to identify them as the primary male and female protagonists of this text, the mare and Hôrānu.

²⁹ The presence of the preposition km followed by nšm "serpents," whereas in the following line the same preposition is followed by mhyr, "bride-price," has led many scholars to believe that the text here is faulty. Whether the word that fell out was also mhyr or a synonym thereof cannot, of course, be known. I have surmised that the request for serpents as a bride-price, to make sense in context, should be interpreted as referring to the serpents with which Hôrānu has just dealt, i.e., de venomized serpents (Pardee 1978a:106). The terms for the reptiles in this passage are nšm, the generic word for "serpent" used up to this point in the text, yhr, explained by Arabic wahrat as a type of poisonous lizard (Caquot 1969:252), and bn b'n, "sons of the b'n-serpent," where b'n denotes some kind of asp or adder.

³⁰ The second word used to designate Hôrānu's contribution is ²*itn*, meaning "gift" (derived from ytn/ntn). From context it may be interpreted as meaning "a gift (in view of marriage)." Given the rather transparent etymology of the noun, the biblical parallels for the word being used to designate a gift to a prostitute are not sufficient to prove that the mare in this Ug. text was of easy virtue (cf. Pardee 1978a:101).

REFERENCES

- Astour 1968; Barré 1978; Bordreuil 1983; 1990; Caquot 1969; 1989; Caquot, Szyner and Herdner 1974; Delcor 1981; Dietrich and Loretz 1980; 1986b; 1988; Gaster 1975; Heider 1985; Huehnergard 1987; Levine and Tarragon 1988; Margulis 1970; de Moor 1987; Nougayrol 1968; del Olmo Lete 1992; Pardee 1978a; 1978b; 1979; 1987; 1988a; 1988b; 1989-90; 1995; forthcoming; Tsevat 1979; Virolleaud 1961; 1962a; 1962b; 1968; Xella 1981.

UGARITIC RITES FOR THE VINTAGE (KTU 1.41//1.87) (1.95)

Baruch A. Levine, Jean-Michel de Tarragon, Anne Robertson

This is the most extensive Ugaritic temple ritual on record.¹ It describes the annual celebrations of the grape harvest at the Temple of Baal in Ugarit over the period of one month, in the autumn of the year. It highlights the New Moon, and other key days, especially the thirteenth and fourteenth of the month.

Two copies have been found, a fact which, in itself, indicates the canonical status of the ritual. In preparing the translation, KTU 1.41 :1-49 has been used as the base text, allowing for restorations from KTU 1.87: 1-53, a copy apparently made from KTU 1.41. KTU 1.41:50-55, which is appended to the principal ritual of KTU 1.41, will also be translated since it probably relates to the vintage festival.

KTU 1.41 was discovered during the campaign of 1929 in the residence of the High Priest, located not far from the Baal Temple, whereas KTU 1.87 was discovered during the campaign of 1954 in the Royal Palace of Ugarit. It was undoubtedly stored there for use by the king of Ugarit, who presided over the celebrations (Bordreuil and Pardee 1989:6, fig. 2.)

In listing sacrificial animals, the following abbreviations will be used: s.m. = small, male; s.f. = small, female; l.m. = large, male; l.f. = large, female.

Introduction: The Annual Time of the Vintage Rites

(1a)

In the month of Rišyn.²*Dates of the Month for Celebration and Purification*

(1b-3)

On the New Moon^a — cutting of the grape cluster.^{3 b}To Il^{4 c} — 4 šlmm offerings.^{5 d}

On the thirteenth — The pure king bathes himself.

The Main Event: The "First of the Tribute" Celebration (4-6a)On the fourteenth: First of the tribute.⁶And 2 s.m.⁷ for the Lady of the temples,⁸

Birds for the staff of gods,

And 1 s.m. Elš,⁹ the favored,

1 s.m., the gods.

The King Proclaims the Day (6b-12a)

The king is seated, the pure one.

a Exod 40:2

b Judg 9:27

c Isa 14:13

d Lev 3;

7:11-18;

Deut 27:7;

1 Kgs 3:15

e Isa 55:12;

Ezek 25:6;

Ps 98:8

f Lam 1:21

g Judg 3:31;

5:6

h Lev 1; 6:1-

6; Jer 34:5

i Judg 6:25-

32; 1 Kgs

16:31; 18:21-

40; 2 Kgs

10:23-27

j 1 Kgs 15:13;

2 Kgs 23:4-7

And he clapped [his hands],^{10 e}And proclaimed the day.^f

Then [the king] enters [the temple]

[with] a present¹¹ of [a cu]p and a chal[ice].2 s.f. and a domestic pigeon¹² he prepares for Anat,^g and 1 l.m., 1 s.m. for Il.

And at the aperture:¹³ [a libation] he pours.Accompanying Burnt Offerings and šlmm (12b-17a)

1 l.f. — the gods,

TKMN-w-šNM — 1 s.f.

Rashap — 1 s.f. — [all] as the burnt offering.^hAnd as šlmm offerings:

2 s.f. — the god,

1 l.m. and 1 s.m. — the gods,

1 l.f. — the gods.

Baalⁱ — 1 s.m.Athirat^j — 1 s.m.

TKMN-w-šNM — 1 s.m.,

¹ For the most recent treatment, see Levine and de Tarragon 1993.² Ug. Rišyn means "the first of the wine," and also "the best of the wine." This month fell in the autumn of the year: de Tarragon 1980:26.³ Ug. šmr is taken as a Šaf-el form of the root šmr "to cut," known in Arabic.⁴ Following is a list of gods and goddesses with their Heb. or other cognates for identification: Il = El, Akk. ilu; Anat = Anat; TKMN-w-šNM (identity unknown); Rashap = Resheph; Baal = Baal; Athirat = Asherah; Shalim = Shalem(?); [Baal] Šaphan = [Baal] Zaphon (see m below); Yarih, the moon god = Heb. yarēah "moon"; Nikkal = Sum. NIN.GAL, the moon goddess; Shapash = Akk. šamaš, the sun god; Yamm = Heb. yam "sea"; Ilib = "god of the father," or "Il is the father." (Cf. Gen 49:25, Heb. ʾel ʾab); Athart = Ashtoreth. Cf. 304, nn. 10 and 13.⁵ Ug. šlmm is taken as a cognate of Heb. šelāmim, and both are seen as cognates of Akkadian šulmānu "gift of greeting" (see d above and Levine 1989:14-15). In the present ritual, šlmm contrasts with šrp "burnt offering," Heb. mišrepôt* (see h above), suggesting that, like its biblical counterpart, the šlmm at Ugarit was mostly cooked, with some parts of the sacrificial animal burnt on the altar. A third kind of offering, "sacred meal" (Ug. dbh, cf. Heb. zebah) was also prepared in this way. See k below.⁶ Ug. argmn, Heb. ʾargaman (also written ʾargewān in 2 Chr 2:6), may be an Anatolian-Hittite, or possibly a Hurrian word. In biblical usage it consistently designates royal purple but at Boğazköy it has the meaning "tribute," as it does here. It is unclear which connotation is primary. See CAD A 2:253.⁷ Most Ug. ritual texts distinguish between small and large sacrificial animals, and register their sex. Thus, male sheep and goats are listed as s (Heb. šeh, Akk. šu), and male cattle as alp (Heb. ʾelep, Akk. alpu). In a parallel fashion, small female animals are listed as dqt "small," and female cattle as gdlt "large" (Levine 1963).⁸ Ug. b^clt bhm is one of several titles borne by goddesses who were in charge of temples. Cf. at Emar the title NIN.É.GAL-li "Lady of the Temple" (Arnaud 1985-86:372, no. 378, line 13).⁹ Elš (written ilš) is apparently a Hurrian divine name for the herald of the gods (Caquot 1978:573).¹⁰ The word for "his hands" is restored, producing wmh [ydh] "He clapped his hands." The same idiom occurs again in line 54.¹¹ The reading of the word translated "present," Ug. igml, is uncertain.¹² The sense of "domestic pigeon" for Ug. ynt qrt assumes qrt to mean "town, city" as in Heb. and Phoen.¹³ The word translated "aperture," Ug. urbt, is taken as a cognate of Heb. ʾarubbāh "aperture, window, chimney" (Gen 7:11; 8:2; Hos 13:3).

Anat — 1 s.m.,
 Rashap^k — 1 s.m.
 Circle of Il and Council of Baal — 1 l.f.
 Shalim — 1 l.f.

The King Performs Rites at Midday (17b-24a)

And at midday,¹⁴ inside the convening room¹⁵ of the gods and the lords — goblets¹⁶ and cups, thirty, fill[ed].

And the entrance offering¹⁷ that he brings to the royal chapel — a sacred meal¹ of myrrh oil, of blended oil; a gift of bee-honey, a domestic pigeon and two cages.¹⁸

And at the ledge(?)¹⁹ — fourteen jugs of wine, ½ measure of flour.

At the steps of the altars of the chapel of the goddess — birds.

Two Series of Accompanying Burnt Offerings and Šlmm (24b-36a)

For Šaphan - 1 s.m.,
 For "the Young Woman" — 1 s.m.,
 and for [x] — [y],
 [x] for Yarih,
 1 l.f. for Nikkal,
 1 l.f. for the Lady of the Temples,
 birds for the staff of the gods,
 1 l.f. — the gods,²⁰
 1 s.f. — Shapash,
 1 l.f. — Rashap, [all] as the burnt offering.
 And as šlmm offerings — same (as listed).

2 s.f. — the gods,
 1 l.f. — the gods,
 1 s.f. — TKMN-w-ŠNM,
 1 s.f. — the Lady of the Temples,
 2 s.f. — at the spring,²¹ [all] as burnt offerings.
 And as šlmm offerings — same (as listed).

k Exod 12:27;
 Judg 16:23;
 1 Sam 9:12

m Exod 14:2, 9; Num 33:7

n Ps 113:3

The Regular Public Sacrifice: the Tamid of Ugarit (33b-38a)

1 l.f. for Baal Šaphan,^m
 1 s.f. for Šaphan,
 1 l.f. for Baal of Ugarit,
 1 s.m. for Ilib,
 [x] [for Athi]rat,
 And birds for [the staff of the gods].

Thirty times, and at the chapel of the Lady of the Exalted Temples, and atop the altars.

Special Rites for the First Quarter of the Month (38b-48a)

On the fifth, chapel of Il:

A shekel of silver, the *kubādu*²² ceremony, and a sacred meal.

[x] for Athirat,
 birds for the staff of the gods.
 At the [pedestal] of the Baal altar:

1 l.f. for Baal,
 1 s.f. for Šaphan,
 And 1 s.f. for Baal of Ugarit, twenty-two times.
 Elš, the favored — 1 s.m.
 ŠMN, the favored, — 1 l.f.

And the pure king responds with a recitation.

On the sixth:

2 [s.m.] — ŠMN, the favored.

In addition to it: 1 l.f.

With a recitation he responds, the pure king.

On the seventh:

- a) At the descent of the sun, the day is profane.²³
 At the setting of the sun, the king is profane.
 b) The rising of Shapash, and the circuit of Yamm;
 The setting of Shapash, and the circuit of 'the King.' "

¹⁴ For the sense of "at midday; in the light of day" for Ug. burm see Levine 1983; de Tarragon 1989:137. This time-indicator contrasts with will "and at night," and lpn ll "before night" in other ritual texts (KTU 1.39, line 12; 1.49, line 9; 1.50, line 7).

¹⁵ The sense of "inside the convening room" for Ug. lbrmst assumes the phonetic shift of beth to mēm, so that original lbrbst became lbrmst. If correct, rbst*, like Ug. trbs "corral, sitting place" in the Kirtu epic (KTU 1.14, ii, 3; text 1.102) would refer to a meeting room, most likely for priests and others: Levine and de Tarragon 1993:86, 96, Fig. 1.

¹⁶ Ug. dlr is rendered "goblets" from context, and based on Egypto-Semitic daši "cup," in the Amarna vocabulary (CAD D 119).

¹⁷ The word translated "entrance offering" is Ug. m^crb, lit., what is brought in. It is cognate with Heb. ma^carūb "exchange" (Ezek 27:9), and Akk. irbu "offering (presented at the gate when entering a temple)" (CAD I 173, 175).

¹⁸ Ug. h^ctm is rendered "cages" from context, and based on Akk. h^ctsu "basket, nest" (CAD H 206).

¹⁹ The translation "ledge" for Ug. gr is uncertain: Levine and de Tarragon 1993:96-97. Others have taken it to mean "cave," cognate with Heb. me^cārāh (Blau and Greenfield 1970).

²⁰ On the tablet, this entry is written again, in error.

²¹ Ug. nkk connotes a natural spring, but as used here it likely designates a metallic or stone basin, or reservoir, similar to Akkadian apsū "the deep" and Heb. yām "sea" (1 Kgs 6:23-26), both of which designate reservoirs located in temple courtyards. See Levine and Hallo 1967:51.

²² The kubādu ceremony is known at Emar. As its name suggests, it served to "honor" the gods by offering them gifts. It was often part of larger, annual celebrations including processions. Fleming 1992:167-169; Huehnergard 1987:135; Sivan 1984:237-238; Levine and de Tarragon 1993:98-102. Others have taken Ug. kbd merely to signify "honor, gift" and some have even translated it as "liver" (Heb. kābēd), a word attested in Ug. On that basis, it would merely designate part of a sacrificial animal. See text 1.122, n. 10 and text 1.124, n. 18, below (pp. 428, 437).

²³ Two alternative translations are provided for the record of the seventh day because there is genuine ambiguity about some of the terms of reference employed in this couplet. In Ug. it reads:

šbu špš whl ym
^crb špš whl mlk

De Tarragon (translation a) takes the verb šbu to be synonymous with ^crb in describing the setting of the sun, and ym to mean "day." He further explains h^c as cognate with Heb. hōl "profane." On this basis, the text is recording that at the end of the sacred day the king (mlk) became profane once again.

An Addendum for the New Moon (48b-49)

On the New Moon:

2 s.m. for Athtart.

Rites Performed by the King on the Roof of the Baal Temple (50-55)When the king offers sacrifice^o to PRGL.ŠQRN²⁴ on the roof,^pthere are [four] and four stands bearing *azmr*²⁵ fruit [placed] on it.

1 s.m., as the burnt offering,

1 l.m., 1 s.m., as the šlmm offering.

o Lev 3;
7:11-18;
Deut 27:7;
1 Kgs 3:15
p 2 Kgs 23:12;
Jer 19:13;
32:29, 48:38;
Zeph 1:5
q Exod 9:29;
1 Kgs 8:22;
Ps 63:5;
Lam 3:41;
Ezra 9:5

Seven times, each, on it (=the roof).

The king offers a reci[tation].

a) At the setting of the sun, the king is profane.

b) The setting of Shapash, and the circuit of 'the King.'

[He wears] beautiful garments;²⁶

He claps [his hands].

They are brought back²⁷ into the temple,And when he is there,²⁸ he raises his ha[nds] to heaven.^q

Levine (translation b) understands the couplet to represent the actual words recited by the officiant, the opening lines of a liturgy. On this basis, it expresses a cosmic perception, from East to West, affirming that Il and his successor, Baal, ruled the entire universe, and had defeated Yam, the sea god of the western horizon.

²⁴ The identity of PRGL.ŠQRN, a non-Semitic, probably Hurrian divine name is unknown.

²⁵ Ug. azmr is taken as a cognate of Neo-Assyrian zamru "a tree or shrub and its edible fruit" (CAD Z 40-41).

²⁶ The translation "[He wears] beautiful garments" is based on a restoration: wl[bs] ypm.

²⁷ The translation "They are brought back" reflects the partial restoration: il[il]bn = tutalibāna, a Šafel passive. Segert 1984:68, no. 54.46.

²⁸ "And when he is there" translates Ug. wkm il. Existential il (Heb. yēš, Aramaic ʾilāi) may convey the notion of presence. Gordon 1965:368-369, Glossary, no. 418.

REFERENCES

Text: KTU² 1.47; 1.87; Levine and de Tarragon 1993; de Moor 1987; del Olmo Lete 1987; 1989b:132; 1992:50-51, 73-87; de Tarragon 1980; 1989; Studies: Arnaud 1985-86; Blau and Greenfield 1970; Bordreuil and Pardee 1989; Caquot 1978; Fleming 1992; Huehnergard 1987; Levine 1963; 1989; Levine and Hallo 1967; Segert 1984; Sivan 1984.

UGARITIC INCANTATION AGAINST SORCERY (1.96)

(RIH 78/20)

Daniel Fleming

This Ugaritic magical text was found in 1978 not at Ras Shamra but at nearby Ras Ibn Hani, though it should be the same age.¹ The extant tablet is neatly inscribed but broken from the 16th line at the left edge across to the 22nd at the right. In spite of the good condition of the first 15 lines, interpretation is hindered by previously unknown terms. Clear references to sorcery and expulsion indicate an incantation, but the text lacks immediate literary counterparts at Ugarit or elsewhere to illuminate its focus or perspective. The two sections of the legible contents are introduced by repeated injunctions to drive off attack (lines 1, 9).²

Part I (lines 1-8)

(Baal) shall drive off the young man's accuser

— the affliction(?) of your staff, Rāpi³u(?),Baal, the affliction(?) of your staff.^{3 a}So, you shall depart before the voice of the incantation priest,⁴like^b smoke through a chimney,^c like a snake up a pillar,

like goats to a rock.^d

a Exod 7:12;
8:1, 12;
Num 17:23
b Deut 32:2;
Hos 13:7-8;
Ps 83:14-15
c Hos 13:3
d 1 Sam 29:3
e Jer 25:38;
Ps 10:9
f Isa 30:20

like lions to a lair.^{5 e}

Staff, attention!

Draw near, staff!

May it harm your back and waste your figure.

May you eat the bread of fasting(?),^f

may you drink without a cup(?), squeezing(?) (the water-skin),

¹ The first publication appears in Caquot 1978-79.

² See for recent discussion of the whole text, and the interpretation offered here, Fleming 1991:141-154.

³ The awkward syntax that introduces each section is clarified by comparison of lines 1-2 with 9-10. Each leads with the pronouncement of expulsion and then elaborates on the divine actor, first Baal, then Horon. Horon is identified also as Galmu, "Youth," and Baal by a broken title, perhaps Rāpi³u as "Healer." The same parallel suggests that the attack comes from the human sorcerer (line 9), not some demons, contra the earlier studies by de Moor 1980b, Avishur 1981, Loretz and Xella 1982, and Caquot 1984. The malady is referred to as "the affliction(?) of your staff," with address to the magician who attacks by means of his staff (hf). A young man is the victim, though evidence is insufficient to diagnose impotence; so, Loretz and Xella 1982.

⁴ The incantation priest (ḫy) evidently pronounces the entire incantation, whose voice carries the power of the spell.

⁵ Avishur (1981:18-20) discusses biblical comparisons for the assembled similes. For comparison of the Mesopotamian tradition with biblical use of simile, see Hillers 1983.

in the high country, in the lowlands, in the darkness, in the sanctuary. ⁶	g Deut 18:10-11	you shall find your tongue stammering, you shall be tightly bound(?). ⁸
Part II (lines 9-15) Then (Horon) shall expel the sorcerer-accuser — Horon, the magician, ⁸ and Ġalmu, the familiar. ⁷ Go, you shall founder ...,	A Gen 3:21; Isa 33:19 i Num 23:19; Jer 51:43; Job 25:6; 35:8	The god clothed you, ⁸ the god has stripped you. O man, the one with the staff(s) is indeed gone to the underworld; O human, ⁹ in weakness he is removed. [Part III, lines 16 and following, increasingly damaged]

⁶ The staff appears to be called on to turn against its holder. Shortage of drink is defined by obscure terms, here translated according to the suggestions of Watson 1992. Repetition reinforces the verbal force of the incantation, and the four points of reference eliminate all potential refuge from this curse.

⁷ The root meanings "to unite" and "to know" for "magician" and "familiar" can produce nouns for either magic or friendship (see Smith 1984:377-380). As magician himself, Horon both empowers sorcery and can withdraw that power.

⁸ All three curses have uncertain interpretation. The participle that introduces them allows either negative ("you shall not ...") or emphasis, and the command to "go" echoes "depart" of line 2, so likely addressed to the same attacker.

⁹ This line shifts to the ailing man, now called "man"/"son of man" (human), with assurance of deliverance. The attacker is subjected to death, the very fate which threatened the young man.

REFERENCES

Avishur 1981; Caquot 1978-79; 1984; Fleming 1991; Hillers 1983; Loretz and Kella 1982; de Moor 1980b; Smith 1984; Watson 1992.

𐤒𐤋𐤏 ON A TOOT (1.97)
(RS 24.258)

Dennis Pardee

Another text from the archive of the "prêtre aux modèles de poumon et de foies" presents the great god 𐤒𐤋𐤏 as getting himself gloriously drunk and in need of a pick-me-up. This text provides one of the clearest examples of what I have termed a "para-mythological text," that is, one with mythological form or overtones but with a practical function (Pardee 1988a:265-266). The functional value of this text is evident not only from its content, that is, the passage from story to recipe, but also from its literary form, the myth being in poetic form while the recipe is in prose.

The structure of the first part of the myth follows 𐤒𐤋𐤏's progress from a feast to a drinking club to his private chambers. The drinking hall is the mrzh (Heb. marzēh), a term used to describe a place, the group that meets there, and the socio-religious institution. Comparing the layout of the Baalshamin sanctuary at Palmyra, where there was a banqueting hall (indicated by the word *smk*², literally "bench [for reclining while eating]"), dedicated by the members of a mrzh, located apart from the main sanctuary, I have suggested that the principal stages of 𐤒𐤋𐤏's progress correspond to the principal sections of his palace. (1) The feast would have taken place in a part of the palace (b bth, b qrb hklh, "in his house, within his palace," according to lines 1-2) corresponding to the position of the altar in a sanctuary and to a large room, relatively accessible to the public, in a palace such as the one at Ras Shamra; (2) the drinking club would have been located in a separate room or structure (b mrzh, "in his mrzh," according to line 15) corresponding to the banqueting area in the Baalshamin sanctuary and to a more intimate banqueting hall in a royal palace (a particular such room has not yet been identified in the palace at Ras Shamra);¹ (3) when 𐤒𐤋𐤏 went home (l bth, lhzrh, "to his house, to his courts," according to lines 17-18) he would have gone to the private quarters of his palace, corresponding to the "holy of holies" in a sanctuary and to the living quarters of an earthly palace.

Once home 𐤒𐤋𐤏 meets a "pink elephant," an apparition that has not yet been identified to everyone's satisfaction (see below, note 14). Whatever the form and nature of this mysterious being, 𐤒𐤋𐤏 reacts by soiling himself and falling down in his refuse, a consequence of shock and inebriation. The goddesses 𐤀𐤎𐤕𐤏 and 𐤀𐤕𐤕𐤏, who had already had a rôle to play at the feast, then go off, apparently to find the elements of a remedy for 𐤒𐤋𐤏, though the text breaks off here. When the text resumes, on the verso of the tablet, the goddesses are again mentioned, apparently bringing relief to the father of the gods.

¹ Research on the mrzh in later sources (summed up in O'Connor 1986:71-72) has indicated that membership normally did not exceed a dozen plus one, the head of the group (the latter was designated rb in both Ug. and the later dialects).

The last part of the text is marked off from what precedes by a horizontal line on the tablet and provides the prosaic cure for alcoholic collapse and hangover. In it is found the first known reference to "the hair of the dog" in the context of relief from the effects of alcohol.

Though some have seen in this text an example of ancient humor (bibliography in Pardee 1988a:41), it appears just as plausible to see here a serious attempt, even a scientific one, according to the science of the time, at dealing with the aftereffects of an evening spent on the benches of the mrzh. No single English term renders perfectly Northwest Semitic mrzh, but "drinking club" is chosen below because it expresses the common denominator of the textual sources, viz., the consumption of wine, as well as the social but non-cultic form and function of the institution. The written sources span at least two millennia, from Ugarit² to early Rabbinic texts, and nearly always refer to wine, its production, its provision by one party for others, or its effects. In spite of the widely held view that the mrzh was a theater for the cult of the dead, not a single text known to date explicitly links the two phenomena and I doubt, therefore, that such a connection was ever more than incidental (see Pardee 1996 for a more detailed argument along these lines, with some recent bibliography). Though each mrzh seems to have had a deity as patron, there is no evidence that sacrifice, the sine qua non of old Northwest Semitic cultic activity, took place in the mrzh. Indeed, the silence regarding sacrifice in the textual sources is corroborated by the meagre archaeological data, which appear to show that the sacrificial cult and the mrzh were very different institutions. Regarding the temple of Baalshamin at Palmyra, see above, and for a description of the building at Ras Shamra for which the best claim as a mrzh may be made, the so-called "Temple aux Rhytons," see Mallet 1987; Pardee 1996:280.

²*Ilu Throws a Banquet for the Gods* (lines 1-13)

²Ilu slaughters³ a game^b in his house, prey⁴ c within his palace,
(and) invites^d the gods to partake.
The gods eat and drink,
they drink wi <ne> to satiety,^e
new wine^f to drunkenness.^g

Yarihu Plays the Dog (lines 4-13)

Yarihu prepares his cup,
(then) like a dog he drags it under the tables.^h

a Deut 12:15,
21; 1 Sam
28:24; 1 Kgs
19:21; Ezek
34:3;
2 Chr 18:2
b Ezek 13:21
c Gen 25:28;
27:3; Lev
17:13
d Isa 42:11
e Isa 23:18;
55:2; Ezek
39:19

Any god who knows himⁱ
gives him food;^j

But one who does not know him strikes him with a stick under the table.

He goes up to ^cAttartu-wa-^cAnatu;⁸

^cAttartu gives him a nšb-cut (of meat),

^cAnatu a shoulder-cut.⁹

The doorman^k of ²Ilu's house yells at them,^l

f Judg 9:13; Mic 6:15; Prov 3:10 g Gen 9:21; 1 Sam 1:14 h Judg 1:7 i 2 Sam 7:20; Hos 5:3;
Job 11:11 j Ezek 24:4 k 2 Sam 4:6 (LXX); 2 Kgs 7:10, 11; 1 Chr 9:17 etc. l Gen 37:10; Jer 29:27;
Zech 3:2; Ruth 2:16

² The institution may already be attested a millennium earlier at Ebla (Archi 1988:103-104, n. 2).

³ The verb is dbh, "to slaughter, cut the throat, sacrifice, make a (sacrificial) feast." When a deity performs the act, it is depicted as an act of food procurement. In another sense, the deity is depicted as a priest/king, for in the Ug. ritual texts the king is usually the subject of the verb dbh.

⁴ The Ug. words mšd and šd, both from the root šd, "to hunt," are here translated by "game" and "prey," i.e., the fruits of the hunt. The same root appears below as the verb expressing what ^cAnatu-wa-^cAttartu do in reaction to ²Ilu's collapse (see note 17 below). Some have taken mšd and šd as meaning "provisions, food," rather than game. Related words in other Semitic languages designate specifically, however, "travel provisions," and such provisions are "prepared," not "slaughtered/sacrificed" (the verb here is dbh < dbh = Heb. zbh), and one concludes that ²Ilu is being depicted here as presenting a feast including non-domesticated animals.

⁵ The standard parallelism of yn and trf assure that {y} in line 3 is a mistake for {yn}. The second term is cognate to Heb. trōš and, less directly, to the Mesopotamian beer-goddess Sirish. The precise meaning of trf is uncertain, but certain Heb. passages suggest "new wine."

⁶ Yarihu's role is mysterious in this text, as is the key word in this line, written gb, for which the most diverse explanations have been given (see Pardee 1988a:35-39). I have accepted the meaning "cup" because of the general context of drinking; the literary problem with that interpretation is the image of a dog dragging a cup, filled with wine, under the table (note, however, that the formula is km klb, i.e., Yarihu is not a dog, he behaves like one). In the next section, when the hunting goddesses ^cAttartu and ^cAnatu give good cuts of meat to Yarihu, they are rebuked for wasting them on a dog (lines 9-13). It appears plausible, therefore, for Yarihu's meal, like that of the gods seated at the table, to consist of both meat and drink (presented in reverse order). It remains mysterious why the moon deity is depicted in this text as acting like and being treated like a dog. Though there is plausibly a connection between the fondness of hunting deities (e.g., Artemis [see below note 17]) for dogs and ^cAttartu-wa-^cAnatu's treatment of Yarihu in this text, that does not explain why Yarihu was chosen to play the rôle of the dog in this vignette. Perhaps the choice was owing to nothing more than the link between hunting goddesses and the moon, i.e., two of the associations of a goddess such as Artemis (hunting dog and moon) would have been fused in the person of Yarihu (cf. Pardee 1988a:39-40). See further below, note 24, on the literary function of the word klb, "dog," in this text.

⁷ There are what appear to be explanatory additions between lines 7-8 and 8-9 (see copy in Pardee 1988a:15). The first, d mšd, "of the game," seems to offer an explanation of the word lhm, "food," in line 7, but the other additions are less well preserved and their interpretation is uncertain. In my edition of the text (Pardee 1988a:45-46) I gave my reasons, epigraphic in nature, for believing that these signs do not represent remains of an earlier text; the latter idea has been put forward again by Dietrich and Loretz 1993, without explicit refutation of the epigraphic arguments.

⁸ One may surmise, on the basis of the switches back and forth between the forms ^cAttartu-wa-^cAnatu (here and in line 26') and ^cAnatu-wa-^cAttartu (lines 22-23) that these two deities had not fused into a double-deity to the same extent as in RS 24.244:20 (text 1.94), where ^cAnatu-wa-^cAttartu appears as a deity entirely separate from ^cAttartu (lines "34a-e"). This vacillation seems to be owing to a perception of this double-deity as consisting more clearly of two separate deities, as not having become an indissoluble unity to the extent that some other double-deities had so done.

⁹ The word klp, "shoulder," is well known in Ug., but the precise meaning of nšb remains unknown. From PRU II 128 it appears certain that nšb, like klp, designates a particular anatomical part, for in that text nšb appears alongside other terms designating cuts of meat from a bull.

so they don't give a nšb -cut to a dog, ^m (so) they (don't) give a shoulder-cut to a hound.	m Cf. Deut 23:19 n 2 Kgs 6:23 o Jer 16:5; Amos 6:7 p Gen 24:38; 2 Sam 13:7; 8; Ps 122:1 q Isa 46:1, 3 r 1 Sam 9:18; 30:21 s Isa 36:12 t 1 Sam 28:20 u Ps 143:3 v Ezek 26:20 w Gen 27:3; 5; Lev 17:13; Job 38:39; cf. Ezek 13:18 x Job 14:12	urine. ^s ² Ilu falls ¹⁵ ' as though dead, ^u ² Ilu himself (falls) like those who descend into the earth. ¹⁶ ^v ^c Anatu-wa- ^c Attartu Seek a Remedy (lines 22-?) ^c Anatu-wa- ^c Attartu go off on the hunt, ¹⁷ ^w [...] ^{QDŠ} ¹⁸ [...] ¹⁹ ^c Attartu-wa- ^c Anatu Bring Back and Apply the Remedy (lines 26'-28') [...] ^c Attartu-wa- ^c Anatu [...] ²⁰ And in them ²⁰ she ²¹ brings back [...]. When she heals (him), he awakes. ²² ^x The Recipe (lines 29'-31') What is to be put on his forehead: ²³ hairs of a dog. ²⁴ And the head of the PQQ ²⁵ and its shoot
--	---	--

¹⁰ Though the function of the rebuke (g^cr) of the goddesses is clear from context, neither the specific identity of the "doorman" nor his motive for rebuking ² Ilu are made explicit. It is generally assumed that ² Ilu is rebuked for keeping a disorderly house, but the position of the line at the transition from the dbh to the mrzh may indicate that the rebuke is also for dawdling. As to the problem of identity, none of ² Ilu's sons is elsewhere identified as a tgr, "doorman." Judging from this text alone, the doorman may be either the double-deity Tukamuna-wa-Šunama or one of the two (on the filial status of Tukamuna-wa-Šunama, see below, note 13). However that may be, one may surmise that the right to rebuke the patriarch ² Ilu was linked with the sonship of the doorman rather than with the job itself.

¹¹ Though the first sign of this word is clear, the next two are damaged, while the end of the word has totally disappeared. I have suggested restoring {²a[šk]¹[rh]} and have explained the word as a ²-preformative noun from škr, "drink, get drunk" (the noun škr, "drunkenness," occurs above, line 4, and below, line 16).

¹² For this translation of mrzh, see the introduction.

¹³ The double-deity Tukamuna-wa-Šunama here do the duty of the good son (ms, "to bear up," as in the ² Aqhatu text, CTA 17 i 31, etc. [1.103]). The title of ² Ilu, ² ab šnm, seems, therefore, to mean "father of Šunama" (see note 52 to the ² Aqhatu text).

¹⁴ The origin of the name hby remains in dispute. I have preferred an identification with the Egyptian bull Apis, hpy in Egyptian (Liverani 1969:339), because a bull-figure appears more appropriate to the times than the devil-figure proposed by some and because Apis' role as psychopomp, bearing mummies to the underworld, appears in keeping with ² Ilu's reaction which is in imitation of someone dying (discussion and bibliography in Pardee 1988a:60-62).

¹⁵ The verb is ql, the same as that which designates war casualties in the birth omens text RS 24.247+ (text 1.90).

¹⁶ ² Ilu is depicted as "dead" drunk, a rather striking image for an immortal. It is to be carefully noted, as regards the structure and meaning of the text, that ² Ilu is depicted as collapsing only on sight of the apparition and under the immediate effect of it — unfortunately the precise meaning of yšn, here translated "bows him over," is uncertain, in particular whether hby actually knocks ² Ilu down or performs some other act that brings about ² Ilu's collapse. In any case, there can be little doubt that ² Ilu's drunkenness is depicted as instrumental in his abasement, though not the primary cause of the fall itself.

¹⁷ Because of the following lacuna and the difficulty of the vocabulary in the text on the verso, it is impossible to say whether šd here denotes literal pursuit of game or a broader sense of "go in search of (items for the remedy)." The links between ^c Anatu and the classical hunting goddess Artemis (bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:464-466) make a literal hunt plausible.

¹⁸ Though the signs are reasonably clear (the first sign can be read only as {q}, the second only as {d}, {l}, or {u}, the third only as {š}), the broken context precludes an analysis of the form, whether verbal or nominal, in the latter case whether it be a common noun or a proper noun, and in this latter case whether it be a geographical name or divine name. The restoration here of {[mδbr] qdš}, as in CTA 23:65, may be considered plausible because of the similarity of circumstances in the two texts (deities hunting). It would, however, be entirely hypothetical and not particularly enlightening because of the uncertainty regarding the meaning of the expression mδbr qdš (see note 65 to text 1.87).

¹⁹ A dozen or so lines may have disappeared in the break at the bottom of the tablet (Pardee 1988a:13, 66, corroborating Virolleaud 1962a:52).

²⁰ The antecedent of this pronoun was a masculine plural noun, now lost in the lacuna.

²¹ The verbal forms here do not bear the -n of the feminine dual forms in lines 12-13 and 23; it is uncertain, therefore, whether the subject is one or the other of the two goddesses just mentioned (as here translated) or whether the verb is dual without -n (for a discussion and a proposed partial reconstruction, see Pardee 1988a:66-67).

²² The explicit subject of the verb n^cr (N-stem of c^r, "awaken") is uncertain, because of the state of the text. If there has not been a significant shift in the narrative focus since the text on the recto broke off, one can surmise that it is ² Ilu here who is waking up from the swoon into which he fell just before the departure of ^c Anatu-wa-^c Attartu.

²³ The word here is šb, on which see note 30 to RS 24.247+ (text 1.90). Again, the antecedent of the pronoun is not clear: is it ² Ilu or has the shift from poetry to prose entailed a shift from the hero of the myth to the person suffering from alcoholic collapse?

²⁴ The use of dog hair, as well as of various other body parts and by-products of the dog, was wide-spread in antiquity (for some bibliographical elements, see Pardee 1988a:69-70). The literary motivation for the appearance of the dog at the feast in the first part of the text is indicated by the presence of the dog here, for these "para-mythological" texts are characterized by various types of puns and recall words between the two or more principal parts of the text (summary in Pardee 1988a:265). This literary fact does not explain, however, why it is that the moon deity was chosen to play the rôle of the dog (see above, note 6).

²⁵ Several have identified pqq as designating a plant of some kind, though the botanical identification remains uncertain (perhaps a type of colocynth, widely used as a cathartic, though with that identification the reason for the use of the word r²iš, "head," to describe a part of a member of the gourd family is not clear).

he is to drink (mixed) together²⁶ with fresh olive oil.²⁷ y

y Gen 49:11; Exod 27:20; 30:24; Lev 24:2; Deut 32:14

²⁶ The adverbial form ṣāḥḥ, lit., "as one," is a technical term in the only type of medical text that has reached us from ancient Ugarit, viz., the hippiatric type (I.106), where it denotes "together" in the process of mixing the ingredients of a medicine (bibliography in Pardee 1988a:72).

²⁷ Lit., "blood of the olive of autumn," i.e., freshly squeezed. The formulation indicates that the olive oil functions as a vehicle for the pqq. Given that the chosen vehicle is an oil, it is apparently also intended to amplify the effect of the pqq and to have its own soothing effect on the stomach lining.

REFERENCES

Archi 1988; Caquot 1989; Cathcart and Watson 1980; Dietrich and Loretz 1981; 1988; 1993; Dietrich, Loretz and Sanmartín 1975b; Liverani 1969; Loewenstamm 1969; 1980; Loretz 1988; Mallet 1987; de Moor 1969; 1987; O'Connor 1986; del Olmo Lete 1992; Pardee 1987; 1988a; 1989-90; 1996; Pope 1972; Virolleaud 1962a:51-52; 1962b; 1968; Watson 1990b; Xella 1977.

A PUNIC SACRIFICIAL TARIFF (1.98)

Dennis Pardee

The "Marseilles Tariff" was discovered in 1844 in the city after which it is named, where it was brought from Carthage, though at what date is unknown. Other examples of tariff inscriptions, even more fragmentary than this one, have since been found at Carthage. The heading of the inscription seems to indicate that it was originally affixed to the temple of Baʿl-Šaphon in Carthage. It may be dated palaeographically to the late fourth or early third century BCE. Its purpose was to regulate distributions among priests and offerers of the items presented to the sanctuary as well as to set the fees that were attached to certain offerings.

The text was inscribed on a large block of stone, broken in two pieces when discovered (40 x 33 cm and 25 x 22.5 cm). In addition to various small lacunae, the left side of the stone has entirely disappeared, at an angle from left to right, and thus no single line is intact, while the preserved portion of each line becomes progressively shorter as one reads from top to bottom.

The text is tightly structured, with the body of the document organized according to size/age categories of animals offered, the supplementary fees and portions accorded to the priests decreasing proportionately as the size of the animals listed decreases.

Comparison with the Book of Leviticus is interesting, but the differences turn out to be greater than the similarities. As regards the Carthaginian cult itself, this text is entirely devoted to its economic aspects, with no explicit statements regarding the theory, ideology, or motivations of these offerings. Comparison with the Ugaritic ritual texts also reveals great differences. Though some of the vocabulary and many of the animals offered as sacrifices are the same, the Ugaritic ritual texts deal primarily with the cultic calendar and with the allocation of sacrifices to various deities, passing over almost entirely the matter of distribution of offerings among the cultic officials and the offerers. Moreover, the concept of fee associated with certain offerings in the Punic text is absent from the Ugaritic texts, either because the texts are not primarily economic in nature and therefore do not mention such fees or because the practice of attaching monetary fees to sacrificial beasts had not yet arisen.

Prologue (lines 1-2)

Temple of Baʿl-Šaphon.¹ (This) tariff² of (priestly)

¹ The divinity Baʿl-Šaphon is first attested in Ug. ritual texts. The Sumero-Akkadian versions of the so-called "pantheon" texts from Ugarit provide explicit evidence for the meaning of the compound divine name, for in them bʿl špn is translated as "the weather deity (lord/god) of the mountain Ḥazi" ("IM be-el ḤUR.SAG ḥa-zi [RS 20.024:4]; "X DINGIR ḤUR.SAG ḥa-zi [RS 26.142:19]; "X ḤUR.SAG ḥa-zi [RS 1992.2004:7]). Ḥazi is attested in Hittite and Akk. texts as the name of the mountain north of Ugarit, modern Jabal al-Aqra, known to the Ugaritians as Šapānu. These same "pantheon" texts also prove that bʿl špn is not identical with špn, for the latter occurs elsewhere in the very same texts, rendered in the Sumero-Akkadian versions as ḤUR.SAG ḥa-zi, "the divine mountain Ḥazi." In later periods, Baʿl-Šaphon was particularly venerated in Egypt and was invoked in the treaty between Esarhaddon and Baal of Tyre (7th century) as a punisher of rebels. For an overview of the sources and bibliography, see Bonnet 1992. It is of interest that a temple of Baʿl-Šaphon existed at Carthage, for he was not the principal manifestation of the weather god in the Punic world, that honor belonging to Baʿl Ḥammon.

² The final letter of the word bʿt, "tariff," is lost in the lacuna, but the restoration is assured by other attestations of the word (cf. in particular CIS i 167:1 bʿt hmsʿr ʿš ʿmʿ ... "Tariff of (priestly) revenues set up by ..."). The etymology of bʿt is uncertain (Cooke 1903:115 suggested either the hollow root bʿ, which in Arabic denotes various contractual notions in the economic sphere, or the III-Y root bʿh, "to seek," well known in Arabic and in Aram., hence "demand, requirement"). For a summary treatment of the tariff texts discovered in North Africa, see Lipiński 1992c.

revenues³ (has been) set up (by)⁴ [the thirty men⁵ who are in charge of the revenues], in the time when Hillešba^cl the mayor⁶ b was [head],⁷ c (he being) the son of Bodtinnit the son of Bod^cešmun, and (by)⁸ Hillešba^cl the mayor, (he being) the son of Bod^cešmun the son of Hillešba^cl, and (by) [their] colleagues.^d a Ezek 20:40;

2 Chr 24:6, 9
b Judg 2:16-19; Ruth 1:1
etc.
c Jer 39:9;
Jon 1:6;
Dan 1:3
d Isa 44:11
e Deut 7:13; 28:4, 18, 51 f Lev 6:15, 16; Deut 33:10; Ps 51:21; cf. 1 Sam 7:9 g Amos 5:22 etc.

The Offering of a Mature Bovine (lines 3-4)

In (the case of)⁹ a mature bovine:¹⁰ e (whether it be) a whole offering,¹¹ f or a presentation-offering,¹² or a whole well-being offering,¹³ g the priests receive

³ mš^ctt, the plural of mš^ct, lit., "what is lifted, brought," could in theory mean simply "gifts, offerings." Below in this text, however, it sometimes designates explicitly the monetary fee accompanying a sacrifice (lines 3, 6, 10), while here and elsewhere in this text (lines 17, 18, 20, 21), as well as in CIS i 167:1 (and probably in CIS i 170:1, also, badly damaged), it designates both the portion of an offering that goes to the priest and the fee that accompanies certain offerings. The real function of the term, therefore, is to denote the revenue to the priests in the case of each offering, whether it be a part of the offering itself or a payment in cash. One may infer that any offering could have three possible destinations: (1) part or all of the sacrifice could be burned on the altar of the deity; (2) part could go to the priest, who was also entitled to a monetary fee in some cases; (3) part could go to the offerer. The word is attested three times in the plural, always with the double feminine ending -tt (here; CIS i 167:1; 170:1). The Heb. equivalent is maš^cot (< maššē^cot < manšē^cot), pl. maš^cot (< maššē^cot < manšē^cot), i.e., without the double feminine ending in the plural.

⁴ The formulation in Punic is active (ʔš t^c šlšm h^cʔš), "which the thirty men set up") and is only rendered by the passive here because of the long subject phrase. The verb t^c is the standard Phoenician/Punic verb for "erecting" a statue or other object offered to a deity and is also used for "establishing" a person in a position.

⁵ The restoration of this number is derived from CIS i 3917:1 šlšm h^cʔš ʔš^c l hms^c [tt], "the thirty men who are over [= in charge of] the (priestly) revenues."

⁶ The term šp^ct designated an elective function, that of "mayor" of a city. From Latin transcriptions it is known to have been pronounced sufet (cf. Heb. šōpēṭ). The office was shared by two (or three) persons and lasted for one year only, though the title could be kept for life; the year being named eponymically after its suphetes (Sznycer 1977:567-576; Lipiński 1992b). The usage of šp^ct to designate a "leader" goes back to the earliest Semitic sources, where it denotes a clan or tribal leader. Among the functions of such a leader was that of deciding differences between members of the group, but the position included much beyond the strictly forensic and the usual translation "judge" is therefore inadequate. Because the title of "mayor" could be kept for life at Carthage, the mention here of two "mayors" does not necessarily mean that they were holding the office when the inscription was made, simply that out of the thirty, two were serving or had at one time served as chief executive officers of the city.

⁷ The meaning of the term rb is clear when used in compound phrases, such as rb sprm, "head of the scribes," but when used alone, in the absolute state, it is unknown just what socio-political function it designates (Sznycer 1977:585; Lipiński 1992a). In a context such as this one, rb may simply indicate that Hillešba^cl son of Bodtinnit was head of the governing body of the Temple of Ba^cl-Šaphon, the group of thirty who set the tariffs. In the text from which the restoration here is taken, CIS i 170:1, as well as in CIS i 132:4 and 3919:4, one finds only {r}, which may be the abbreviation of an abstract form of rb, "leadership, headship" (ʔr r hšb^cl, "at the time of the headship of Hillešba^cl").

⁸ The syntax of the last part of this prologue is not straightforward. The two final phrases introduced by the conjunction w do not seem to depend logically on the phrase ʔt, "at the time of," a technical term designating the position of Hillešba^cl son of Bodtinnit vis-à-vis the group for, at least in the case of "and their colleagues," the phrase cannot be linked either with the function of head or with that of mayor. It would seem, therefore, that Hillešba^cl son of Bodtinnit was named particularly because he was head of the group, that Hillešba^cl son of Bod^cešmun then had to be named because he also had been, or was currently, mayor, and that "their colleagues" was tacked on at the end by courtesy.

⁹ The prepositional formula b ʔlp ... l khnm ksp seems to be based on the so-called beth of price (beth pretii), though it is clear that the ten shekels do not constitute a price per se. The idiom is repeated at the end of the first clause l khnm ksp ʔrt 10 b ʔhd, "to the priests (go) ten (shekels) of silver for each."

¹⁰ This text is structured primarily according to the category of size/age of sacrificial beasts. Thus the young bovine and the mature deer are together in the next paragraph because they are approximately equal in size. ʔlp denotes here, therefore, any mature bovine, whether bull or cow.

¹¹ The three types of sacrifice in this text are designated by the terms kll, šw^ct, and šlm kll. The first is usually compared to Heb. kālil and is identified as a "whole (burnt) offering" because in the Hebrew Bible the kālil and the ʔōlāh may be identical. This identification appears correct and the fact that the priest gets a portion of the meat does not constitute a particular problem: the offerer does not receive any part of the animal, which is divided up between the deity and his employees, the priests (the deity's portion was burnt on the altar while the priests lived from theirs). On the correct syntactic analysis of ʔm, "whether, or," and the related correct analysis of kll as an offering type rather than a word meaning "general rule," see Creason 1992.

¹² The šw^ct is usually identified by process of elimination with one or the other of the Heb. sacrificial types (if kll = ʔlh and šlm kll = šlmym, šw^ct can be neither of these and must be one of the other types of sacrifice), with the choice usually falling on the hš^ct, "sin-offering" (Ginsberg 1930-31). An etymology has been proposed, however, which points in the direction of the Heb. "wave-offering," Arabic ḡw^c, "wave, agitate" (van den Branden 1965:116-117). This type of offering is well attested in Ug. and Heb., where it is designated by forms of the root nwp "raise, lift" (šnpt and ʔnnpāh). It functions as a "presentation" offering (i.e., the emphasis is on the act of presenting to the deity, not on waving it in the air) and has good parallels in other sacrificial systems (Milgrom 1972; 1991:461-473). As in Ug., this offering was an independent one, rather than a portion of the well-being offering as could be the case in the Heb. system. If the etymological explanation is correct, the motion of "waving or moving back and forth in the air" of the offering may not have been as foreign to the act of presentation as Milgrom would have it.

¹³ Because of the presence of šlm, the šlm kll is usually identified with the Ug./Heb. šlm, "sacrifice of well-being," i.e., the communal sacrifice and meal which was believed to produce a state of well-being between the offerer and the deity. The lexico-syntactic basis for the interpretation of kll as linked with šlm, rather than as a term denoting "general rule," has been set forth clearly by Creason 1992. Though the use of kll in two sacrificial terms of precisely opposite destination, the one for the deity the other for the offerer, may appear to border on the ironic, if one keeps in mind that kll denotes only "entirety" one sees that the term itself has nothing to do with the direction in which the entirety is expedited. Because šlm is only used in conjunction with another term in Punic, one cannot know whether the relationship is adjectival, in which case šlm would be singular (e.g., šelem kālil) or nominal, in which case šlm could be plural (e.g., šalmē + a nominal form of kll) as in Heb. and Ug. That the former analysis is plausible is shown by the use of the singular form šelem in Amos 5:22 and perhaps by a singular form of the same word in the Ug. royal funerary ritual (RS 34.126:31 [1.105]). This type of offering bears the least number of modifications in this text, i.e.,

ten (shekels)¹⁴ of silver¹⁵ for each (animal offered); in (the case of) the whole offering they receive in addition to this fee¹⁶ [three-hundred (shekels)-weight of] meat;¹⁶ in (the case of) the presentation-offering (they receive) the lower part of the legs¹⁷ and the (leg-)joints,¹⁸ whereas the hide,¹⁹ the ribs,²⁰ the feet and the rest of the flesh go to²¹ the one who brought the sacrifice.²²

The Offering of an Immature Bovine or of a Mature Deer (lines 5-6)

In (the case of) the calf¹⁴ whose horns are naturally missing²³ or in (the case of) the mature deer:²⁴ (whether it be) a whole offering, or a presentation-offering, or a whole well-being offering, the priests receive five (shekels) of silver [for each (animal offered)]; in (the case of) the whole offering they receive in addition] to this fee one hundred and fifty (shekels)-weight of meat; in (the case of) the presentation-offering (they receive) the lower part of the legs and the (leg-)joints, whereas the hide, the ribs, the feet [and the rest of the flesh go to the

h Lev 5:15;
27:5, 7
i Lev 7:31-32
j Lev 7:15-19; 19:5-6
k Lev 9:2, 3, 8; Jer 34:18, 19; Mic 6:6;
cf. Gen 15:9;
Deut 21:3, 4, 6; 1 Sam 16:2
l Cf. Deut 12:15, 22; 15:22
m Exod 29:1; Lev 5:15; Num 7:15; 23:1; 1 Sam 15:22; Mic 6:7 etc.
n Exod 12:5; Lev 1:10 etc.
o Ezra 6:9, 17; 7:17; cf. Exod 29:38; Lev 4:32; Num 7:15; Isa 1:11; Ezra 8:35 etc.
p Judg 6:19;

one who brought the sacrifice].

The Offering of a Mature Sheep or Goat (lines 7-8)

In (the case of) a ram^m or a goat:²⁵ (whether it be) a whole offering, or a presentation-offering, or a whole well-being offering, the priests receive one shekel of silver (and) two *zr*²⁶ for each (animal offered); in (the case of) the presentation-offering [they] receive [in addition to this fee the lower part of the legs] and the (leg-)joints, whereas the hide, the ribs, the feet and the rest of the flesh go to the one who brought the sacrifice.

The Offering of an Immature Sheep, Goat, or Deer (lines 9-10)

In (the case of) a lamb,^o or a kid,^p or a young deer:²⁷ (whether it be) a whole offering, or a presentation-offering, or a whole well-being offering, the priests receive three-quarters (of a shekel) of silver (and) [two] zr [for each (animal offered)]; in (the case of) the presentation-offering they receive in addition] to this fee the lower part of the legs

13:15, 19; 1 Sam 10:3; cf. Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21

a monetary fee is attached to it when that is the case of all three sacrificial types, but beyond this fee no other stipulations are attached to the šim kil.

¹⁴ ksp ^{šrt} 10: the unit of silver is not indicated, while the number is given both as a word and as a symbol. The unit of measure is certainly the shekel, for below when the amount is a single shekel the formula is šql 1 (line 7).

¹⁵ This is the singular form, mš²t, of the word discussed above, note 3, translated "(priestly) revenues" in its plural form in line 1.

¹⁶ If the standard Carthaginian shekel weight of ca. 9.4 grams (Alexandropoulos 1992:323) applied here, the priests would have gotten a bit less than three kilograms of meat.

¹⁷ The word is qšrt, which was used in the Ug. birth omen texts RS 24.247+ :10, apparently to denote a part of the leg (see note 13 to 1.90).

¹⁸ Most authorities accept a link between the Punic yslt and biblical Heb. ʔaššl, attested only in the dual/plural and as part of the phrase ʔaššlē/ʔaššlōt + yādāyīm, meaning "elbows." Thus it either means "joint(s)" or, perhaps, the part of the leg above the "elbow," i.e., the thigh; if the latter is true, it would be the equivalent of Ug./Heb. šq, not attested in this text.

¹⁹ According to biblical law, the hide was either burned (Exod 29:14; Lev 4:11-12; 8:17; Num 19:5) or else went to the priest (Lev 7:8).

²⁰ The meaning of šlm, though apparently cognate to Heb. šlabbīm, is uncertain, for the Heb. word is attested only as an architectural term: in 1 Kgs 7:28, 29, the word is used to designate parts of the framework in which the layers of Solomon's temple were set.

²¹ The forms of the verb "to be" in the idiom "go to," i.e., "be to, belong to" in this text obey the rule of "waw-consecutive:" in line 3 the formula was w b kil ykn lm, "and in (the case of) the whole offering will be to them ...," whereas here the formula is w kn h^crt ... l b^c l hzbh, "the hide ... will go to the one who brought the sacrifice."

²² Lit., "the owner of the sacrifice" (b^c l hzbh). The Heb. functional equivalent is hammaqrīb, lit., "the one who brings (the sacrifice) near" (Lev 7:18, 29, 33).

²³ ʔš gny l m b mšr b ʔwmt², lit., "which, its horns (are) for lack in ʔwmt²". The last word does not have a plausible Semitic etymology and has been explained as Greek. Either a form of automatos, "natural," or an alpha-privative form of the verb temnō, "to cut" (the regular form being atmētos), seem most likely. In the latter case, the syntax of the phrase indicates that the reference would be to uncut horns, not to the calf being uncastrated. The point of the phrase in either case seems to be that the calf's horns have not grown yet — one cannot present an older calf whose horns have been polled and expect to pay a fee of only five shekels.

²⁴ If the Punic vocabulary was similar to the Heb. here, the writing with /yl/ (ʔyl) < /ʔayal/ indicates the meaning "deer," for "ram" would be written {ʔl} (/ʔayl/ > /ʔʔl/) in Phoenician-Punic. This conclusion is borne out in the paragraph after next, where the three categories are "lamb," "kid" (i.e. young ram), and šrb ʔyl, apparently "young deer" (see below, note 27). According to Israelite law, the deer was not allowed as a sacrificial animal, though it could be eaten. In practice, however, at least at some sanctuaries, the offering of a deer seems to have been acceptable (Houston 1993:124-180).

²⁵ The two terms are ybl and ʔz, the first denoting primarily the mature male ovid, the second the mature female of the caprids, with both apparently here including both sexes, as in the case of ʔmr and gd² in the next paragraph. The ʔz is a common victim in biblical texts, for various types of sacrifice, whereas biblical yōbēl denotes only the "ram's horn," and the functional equivalent of the Punic ram-sacrifice is the ʔayil.

²⁶ If zr is the name of a small coin, as is commonly believed, it should have weighed less than a quarter of a shekel, for in the next two paragraphs this word follows quarter divisions of the shekel, and more than the ʔgRT (see below, note 34).

²⁷ The meaning of šrb in the phrase šrb ʔyl is unknown. Judging from the structure of the text, the expression should denote either the young of a deer or a small species of deer (if ʔyl was used generically for various species of Cervidae). Here, as above, the offering of a deer is in contrast with biblical legislation, whereas the offering of the young caprovids is unexceptional from the biblical perspective. The term for "lamb" here, ʔmr, has cognates that are common in Aram. and Akk. In biblical Heb. the term for "lamb" is kebeš/kibšāh, common in biblical legislation. The facts that (1) the offering of a kid (Heb. gd², Punic gd²) is not prescribed in biblical legislation (though the kid does feature as a sacrifice in biblical narratives) and that (2) kebeš/kibšāh is used not only for "lamb" but also to designate a "sheep" as opposed to a "goat" (as is shown by expressions such as šeh bakk²baššim ʔō ba^cizzīm, "a caprovid, either a sheep or a goat" [Num 15:11; cf. Deut 14:4]), seem to indicate that the preferred caprovid sacrifice in the eyes of the biblical legislators was that of an adult.

and the (leg-)joints, whereas the hide, the ribs, the feet and the rest of the flesh go to the one who brought [the sacrifice].

The Offering of a Bird (line 11)

[In (the case of) a] bird,²⁸ (whether it be) a fowl or a free-flying bird:²⁹ (whether it be) a whole well-being offering or an extispicy offering or a divinatory offering,²⁹ the priests receive three-quarters (of a shekel) of silver (and) two zr for each (bird offered) and the flesh goes [to the one who brought the sacrifice].

Other Bird Offerings (line 12)

[(In the case of) every (other)]³⁰ bird (offering), (whether it be) holy first-born' (birds),³¹ game-(bird) sacrifices,³² or (bird-)fat³³ sacrifices, the priests receive ten ²*grt*³⁴ ^u for each [...].

q Lev 14:4 et passim in this chapter;
cf. Gen 15:9;
Lev 1:14;
12:6, 8
r Cf. Jer 48:9
s Cf. Isa 28:15, 18
t Cf. Lev 2:12-13; Num 18:12; Deut 18:4 etc.
u Cf. 1 Sam 2:36
v Cf. Exod 23:19; 34:26; Deut 14:21
w Exod 23:18; 29:13;
Lev 3:3;
1 Sam 2:15 etc.
x Gen 4:3 etc.

General Statement Regarding Presentation-Offerings (line 13)

[In] all (cases of) presentation offerings which (anyone) brings before the god, the priests shall receive the lower part of the legs and the (leg-)joints. And [in (the case of)] presentation-offerings [...]

The Gift-Offering (line 14)

In [addition] to any (flour-oil) mixture,³⁵ and in addition to milk,³⁶ and in addition to fat,³⁷ and in addition to any (other) sacrifice which a man may make as a gift-offering,³⁸ [the priests] shall [receive ...].

Offerings Made by a Poor Person (line 15)

In (the case of) any sacrifice made by a man who ²⁸ The Punic terms are spr for the generic designation (also used below, lines 12 and 15, as the generic term) and ²*gmn* and ss for the two sub-categories. The first of the sub-categories is often explained by gmn, "to protect, surround," hence "bird of the poultry-yard," the second by various attestations in Northwest Semitic of a word šš or šš designating a type of bird or meaning "wing." Delcor (1990:89-91) suggests that this pair of terms reflects the distinction between the non-flying birds of the poultry-yard (cf. Dussaud 1921:141) and free-flying pigeons/doves (witness the fortune of the columbarium from classical times to the recent past). The distinction could also be between domesticated and wild birds. In Heb., šp is the generic term for a bird offered for sacrifice (Lev 1:14), while šippōr is used only in the purification sacrifice for "leprosy" (Lev. 14). Pigeons and doves (yōnāh and tōr) are designated specifically. In Ug. ritual texts, the two primary designations of bird offerings are ynt (qrr), "(city) doves," and šr(m), "bird(s)" (see note 18 to RS 24.266 [text 1.88]).

²⁹ Here we encounter the first change in sacrificial terminology, with šlm kl placed in the first slot and two new terms, šsp and hzt, filling the second and third slots. It has been suggested that šsp be explained by the Aram. verb šsp, "cut," as denoting extispicy (van den Branden 1965:121) and that hzt be explained by the common Northwest Semitic verb hzh, "to see," as also denoting divination (Cooke 1903:120). Because the most common form of ornithomancy in the ancient world was by the observation of the flight of birds, these two terms could be directly related to the terms ²*gmn* and ss, that is, the form of divination using poultry (²*gmn*) would be extispicy, while the free-flying birds (ss) would provide a source of divination by observation (hzt) of flight patterns (though the latter would involve a two-step process, first the observation, then the sacrifice).

³⁰ The first letter of this line has disappeared and it is uncertain whether {k} is to be restored, giving the word kl, as in line 13 ([b] kl), or {ʿ}, giving the word ʿl, as in line 14. I have chosen the first solution for the principal reason that ʿl should denote supplementary offerings and the three types named seem inappropriate for supplements to a bird sacrifice. It seems, then, that this line is outlining specific types of bird offerings, other than the general ones named in the preceding line.

³¹ Lit., "holy early ones" (qdm qdš). The form of the adjectives shows that spr is, as in Ug. (šr) and Heb., a feminine noun. The use of qdš, absent elsewhere in this text, seems to indicate a pre-existing state of holiness, i.e., a divine requirement to offer such birds. It is generally assumed that qdm here denotes a status equivalent to that indicated by bikkārm or rēšān, i.e., "first-born, first-fruits," in Heb.

³² "Sacrifices of travel provisions" makes little sense as a translation of zbh šd, whereas, with the reconstruction suggested for the beginning of the line, "sacrifices of wild game-birds" is unexceptionable. On the use of zbh + šd, see above, note 4 to RS 24.258 (text 1.97).

³³ If this line does detail additional forms of bird offerings, then zbh šmn should designate a form of šmn coming from birds, rather than general "oil offerings" (as could be the case if this were a list of supplementary offerings). Because hzb appears below (line 14) to denote animal fat, one may surmise that šmn was used for the fat from poultry (the place of goose and duck fat in Mediterranean cuisine is well known, while the use of the goose as a sacrifice is attested, though rarely, at Ugarit).

³⁴ ²*grt* is not well known as a fraction of a shekel and is usually explained as equivalent to Heb. gerāh, the smallest division of the shekel, i.e., one twentieth (about half a gram in the Carthaginian system).

³⁵ Forms of bll are used in Heb. for "mixing" (and secondarily for the "rubbing on" of a mixture), particularly in cultic contexts for a flour-oil mixture presented as a minḥāh in the form of cakes. The Punic term may, of course, have been used for another sort of mixture.

³⁶ Though the promised land was typified by an abundance of milk products and sources of syrup (ʿeres zābat ḥalāb ūd-bāš, "a land flowing with milk and honey" [Exod 3:8ff]), neither of these types of products was considered appropriate sacrificial material: ḥalāb was ignored (except in the prohibition against eating a kid boiled in its mother's milk), while d-bāš was formally excluded, at least from the burnt offering (Lev 2:11). This discrepancy led Delcor (1990:93) to see here an influence of the Greco-Roman world on Carthaginian cult practice. In a warm climate with only primitive means of cooling, milk would, of course, either be drunk immediately or transformed into various secondary products (yogurt, butter, curds, ghee, cheese, etc.).

³⁷ In contrast with ḥalāb, "milk" (see preceding note), fat (ḥēleb) was an extremely important part of the Israelite sacrificial system, normally being removed from certain internal organs and offered as a burnt offering to the divinity. Though this Punic text is dealing with the economic side of the cult rather than with sacrificial practice per se, the organization of the text, where fat is mentioned only in association with birds (line 12) and with the gift-offering (see next note), seems to indicate that the proper disposal of the fat did not have the same ideological significance as in the Israelite cult.

³⁸ This offering, the mnḥt, is often described in Heb. terms as a "meal-offering" (e.g., Cooke 1903:114), but in point of fact only one of the terms used in the preceding list may designate an entity including flour (bll), two of the other three being animal-derived (milk and fat), and the fourth potentially so (zbh need not designate a bloody sacrifice, but usually does). It seems better, therefore, to translate mnḥt here as designating a particular type of offering, which can range in content from a small cake to a sacrificial animal (kl zbh). One may judge from the preceding rather exhaustive list of sacrificial animals that kl zbh refers to a part of a sacrificial animal which the offerer had the right to keep but desired to offer to the deity or, perhaps, to types of domesticated animals or game not covered in the preceding normative list that may have been offerable in certain situations. We know nothing, for example, about the cultic status in the Punic world of beasts that in Heb. terms would be "unclean," is poor⁹ as regards beasts³⁹ or birds, the priests shall not receive anything [at all].

Offerings Made by a Group (lines 16-17)

Any citizens' association,⁴⁰ any clan,⁴¹ z any drinking club⁴⁰ (devoted to) a god,⁴² or any (other group of) men who sacrifice [...], these men [must pay] a fee in addition to each sacrifice in accordance with what is set down in the writs⁴³ [...].

Cases Not Covered in this Document (lines 18-19)

Any fee that is not set down in (the text on) this plaque shall be tendered according to the writs⁴³ that [were written (by) the thirty men who are in

y Lev 5:7,
11; 12:8;
14:21
z Exod 12:21;
1 Sam 20:6, 29
aa Jer 16:5;
Amos 6:7
bb Dan 10:21;
1 Chr 28:19
cc 1 Sam 2:16
dd Exod
21:22;
Deut 22:19

charge of the revenues, in the time when Hillešba⁴¹ was head, (he being) the son of Bodtinnit, and (by) Hillešba⁴¹ the son of Bod²ešmun, and (by) their colleagues.⁴⁴

The Oppressive Priest (line 20)

Any priest who requires⁴⁵ a fee deviating from what is set down in (the text on) this plaque shall be fined⁴⁴ [...].

The Recalcitrant Offerer (line 21)

Any offerer who does not tender with [whatever he brings]⁴⁵ the fee that [is set down in (the text on) this plaque ...].

e.g., the donkey (offered in very particular circumstances among the Amorites and at Ugarit), the camel, the pig, or the dog.

³⁹ The term used here as generic for sacrificial animals as opposed to birds is mqn, cognate with Heb. mīqneh, also a generic term for "livestock."

⁴⁰ Punic mrzh is usually compared to Heb. ezrah, "native," and explained as a council of common citizens.

⁴¹ The Punic term is šph, cognate to Ug. šph, "offspring" (see note 11 on the Kirta text [text 1.102] and note 16 on RS 24.247 + [text 1.90]), and to Heb. mišpāhah, "clan, tribe, lineage."

⁴² On the mrzh institution in general, see introduction to RS 24.258 (text 1.97). As regards the expression mrzh ²*lm* here, it is a commonplace of the mrzh to have a patron deity (note that ²*lm* functions in Phoenician-Punic as a singular, not a plural). The mrzh of Šatrana is known from Ugarit (and there is indirect evidence for others devoted to ʿAttartu Ḫurri and ʿAnatu), Šamaš is attested as patron of a mrzh in a Phoenician inscription, and Obodat and Dušara are known as patrons from Nabataean sources. When the meeting place of the mrzh was located next to the sanctuary of a deity (as in the case of the sanctuary of Baalshamin at Palmyra), or when the priests of a given deity formed a mrzh (as in the case of the priests of Bol at Palmyra), it appears likely that in these cases also the mrzh in question was devoted to the deity mentioned, even if the relationship is not stated explicitly. And when there is a myth regarding a deity who has "his" mrzh (as in the case of ʿIlū in RS 24.258), it is not illegitimate to posit the existence of a mrzh devoted to that deity in the real world, in this case twelfth-century Ugarit. One may find documentation on and discussion of these data in Pardee 1988a:55-56.

⁴³ The word used here for the present inscription is ps, a "tablet or plaque" (Cooke 1903:122), while the word for "writs" is kbt.

⁴⁴ Because of the lacuna and because of the repetitive nature of Punic onomastics, it is not possible to know whether the reference here is to a more extensive documentation prepared by the same men who set up this inscription or to a document prepared by an earlier group. The first solution seems the more likely, for the extant name is identical to the second sufet named in the introduction while the two words described in the preceding note clearly refer to different forms of documentation. If the two persons mentioned correspond to the two named in the introduction, the grandfather was not named here in either case (the {t} at the beginning of line 19 would be the last letter of Bodtinnit) and working backwards from the second name, the title of sufet would not have been given either time. This gives a restoration of 35 to 38 letters, about right to fit the lacuna at the end of line 18 ({ʔš [kṭb šlšm hʔš(m) ʔš ʿl hmsʔt ʿt r(bt) ḫlšbʿl bn bdm]}. Kbt would in this hypothesis designate a more complete document than the ps, of which this inscription represents only a digest.

⁴⁵ Because the definite direct object marker is ²*yt* in Phoenician and usually so in Punic (as opposed to Neo-Punic), it appears best to take ²*t* here before the lacuna as the preposition meaning "with." The reconstruction of the phrase as {ʔt k[l yb]}], lit., "with everything he brings," then appears plausible.

REFERENCES

Alexandropoulos 1992; Baker 1987; Bonnet 1992; van den Branden 1965; Cooke 1903; Creason 1992; Delcor 1983; 1990; KAI 69; Dussaud 1921; Ginsberg 1930-31; Houston 1993; Lipiński 1992a; 1992b; 1992c; Milgrom 1972; 1991; Pardee 1988a; Szyner 1977.

THE ARAMAIC TEXT IN DEMOTIC SCRIPT (1.99)

Richard C. Steiner

The Aramaic Text in Demotic Script¹ is a text written on both sides of a twelve-foot-long papyrus in the Pierpont Morgan Library (Amherst Egyptian 63), originally joined by a few fragments which are now at the University of Michigan (Michigan-Amherst 43b). It was acquired by Lord Amherst of Hackney at the end of the nineteenth century.

The decipherment of the text has been a long and painful process of trial and error, which began in the early decades of this century and will no doubt continue well into the next millennium. The translation given here should be viewed as an interim progress report, building on the work of many scholars but with many uncertain and controversial elements. Steiner and Moshavi (1995) can be used as a guide to what the author considers reasonably reliable in the translation; however, considerable progress has been made since that selective glossary was completed, and it will need to be expanded.

¹ I would like to thank the Texts Program of the National Endowment for the Humanities (an independent federal agency of the United States Government), the Littauer Foundation, and Yeshiva University for their generous support of my work on this text.

This largely poetic text is the liturgy of the New Year's festival of an Aramaic-speaking community in Upper Egypt, perhaps in Syene. It seems to have been dictated by a priest of the community, possibly at the beginning of the third century BCE, to an Egyptian scribe trained in the fourth century BCE.

The original homeland of these people, called rš and ʔrš in the papyrus, is the subject of controversy. The present writer has suggested that it is the land between Babylonia and Elam which the Assyrians called Rashu and Arashu and that Assurbanipal, who captured Rashu in his campaign against Elam, deported its inhabitants to the Assyrian province of Samaria, like the Elamites from Susa mentioned in Ezra 4:9-10. There is reason to believe that most or all of them wound up in Bethel, joining the foreign colonists settled there by earlier Assyrian kings. Their subsequent migration to Egypt may be recorded in the text's account of the arrival of soldiers from Judah and Samaria (XVI.1-6).

The text shows how the groups deported by the Assyrians to Samaria "would venerate the Lord but serve their own gods according to the practices of the nations from which they had been exiled" (2 Kgs 17:33).

Veneration of the Lord is represented by prayers in cols. XI-XII that contain Hebrew words and Israelite divine names (Adonai, 7 times, Yaho, once). Among these prayers is one which parallels Ps 20 (XI.11-19). Phrases like "Yaho, our bull" (XI.17; cf. "let them kiss [your] bull[s], 'let them de'sire your calves" in V.12), "lord of Bethel" (XI.18, cf. VIII.13), and "a city full of ivory houses" (XI.9, immediately before the prayer), if correctly deciphered, suggest that this prayer is a descendant of one used in Jeroboam's temple in Bethel. There may even be echoes of this prayer (XI.17) in Abijah's battlefield condemnation of Jeroboam and his calf-cult (2 Chr 13:8, 10, 12).

Service of other gods is the main thrust of the text, which allows us to follow the progress of a pagan New Year's festival from morning until night. The rituals have counterparts at Babylon, Emar, and Sumer. The wait in the courtyard (III.9-11) and the declaration of innocence (VI.3, 9) followed by a Heilsorakel (VI.12-18) are paralleled in the ritual for the fifth day of the New Year's festival at Babylon. The selection by the god of a maiden from among the "daughters of Arash" to be "elevated" to the status of priestess (VIII.13-16) resembles the rite in which "the daughter of any son of Emar" was chosen by the god and "elevated" to the status of entu-priestess (text 1.122 below). The laying of the priestess on a bed of perfumed rushes (V.9, XVI.7) covered with an embroidered bedspread (XVI.13-14) made of flax (XV.15-16) has parallels in Sumerian sacred marriage rites.

The chief gods of the community are referred to as mr "lord" (a back-formation from mry < mrʔy "my lord" attested already in Old Aramaic) and mrh "lady." These epithets are rendered below as Mar and Marah, because their usage in the text (e.g., IVB.3 lmrty mrh "to my lady, Marah") suggests that they have taken on the status of names, much like their Canaanite counterpart bʕl "lord," the epithet of Hadad.

Marah appears to be identified with Nanai in the text (except in VII.2, 6, where they are listed separately). She is depicted as a cow (II.19; XIII.5, 7, 18, 19; XVI.16) that suckles (exceptional) human infants (I.19; II.7-8, 16-17; III.5, 16; IVA.5). Each year, after feasting, she falls asleep in the pit, in the waters of fertility (bšwḥh bmy pryh), where she brings forth sweet fruit for Mar, her consort (II.8-11).

Nanai's consort, Nebo, appears frequently in the text, as does the god Bethel. The latter is called Resident of Hamath in VIII.6, 10 and Ashi(m)-Bethel in XV.1, 14, 15. This takes us back once again to the Assyrian province of Samaria, where "the men of Hamath made Ashima" (2 Kgs 17:30).

The text concludes with a story about Assurbanipal, the king who destroyed Rashu, and his brother, Shamash-shum-ukin (XVII.5-XXII.9). This story is, in all likelihood, an ancestor of the Sardanapalus legend known from Greek and Latin sources. The original kernel of the story is a piece of pro-Assurbanipal propaganda, similar to the editions of Assurbanipal's Annals which postdate the civil war, intended presumably to win the hearts and minds of the defeated Babylonians (648-c.620 BCE) or to counter claims by the resurgent Babylonians that the Assyrians had committed aggression against them and deserved to be punished (627-612 BCE). However, there are indications that it was revised at a later date and reused, possibly as a weapon in the propaganda war waged against Nabonidus by Cyrus' priestly backers (third quarter of the sixth century BCE).

Introduction (I.1-15)

Mar dwells

... mighty

... your 'in' timates

... on papyrus

... 'in' the gate

... you shall wri'te'

... the king, Mar, with

... [h]arp and lyre

... Rash

... 'let us' ex'al'[t]

...

all the go^ld[s] ...
is 'exa^l[ted];
exalted is Mar[ah],
...
Marah.

A Plea to Marah to Accept the Morning Sacrifice
(I.16-17)

Your 'nour^lishment
[we have] sac^rif^l[iced],
[Ma]rah,
and may [your] e^rye^l[s] [glance at] our sacrifice

Marah's Contemptuous Rebuff (I.17-19)

[M]an!
... outside,
[and hear me!]
[I am exa]lted.
I rea^red you,
you [sucked my breast],
[the sap of Marah]
[nourished you,]
[she strengthens,]
[she empowers]
with [her] [po]wer.

A Prayer to Marah Who Sustains Mankind from her Grave (II.1-11)

Come out and make [your] g^rav^l[e] ...
we will make your grave ...
My wis[e] 'one^l carries you / for you;^a
'she^l carries your burden and your l[oa]d,^b creating
at your decr[ee].
She builds
and upro^ris;
'her^l breast
[su]ck^lles 'y^lou.
My Princess ea[t]s [and is s]ated 'and^l sleeps.^c
And she 'lies^l
'in^l the pit,
in the waters of fertility, [bringi]ng forth 'fr^luit
for Mar,
and it is sweet
like you.

Another Plea to Accept the Offering (II.11-13)

Marah,
[in] heaven
[you] [re]side;
you dwell on hi^rgh^l,
'Mar^l(ah).
Your [nour]ishment
we have [sac]ri^lficed,
Marah,
and may [your] eye[s]
g[lan]ce

a Isa 46:7

b Ps 55:23

c 1 Kgs 18:27;
Ps 121:3-4

d Dan 10:11;
Neh 9:3;
2 Chr 34:31;
35:10

at our sacrifice.

More Rebuffs (II.14-III.6)

Man!
... outside
'and^l [hea]r me!
I am exalted.
[I] reared [you],
you sucked my [bre]ast,
the sap of Marah
nourished [you].
[She streng]thens,
she empowers
with her power.
To ... you call
Hear ...
I am the Co[w]
... outside
... out[side]

Col. III

[M]an!
... outside,
and hear me!
I am exalted.
I reared you,
you sucked my breast,
the sap of Marah
nourished you.
'She^l strengthens,
she empowers
with her power.

The King Denied Entrance (III.6-12)

Our judge comes/came to the ga^rte^l and stands/stood still.
"Mar 'is^l blessed
seven times
all 'that which^l
my mouth 's^lays."
And he (=Mar) [c]ries/[c]ried out:
"You may cert^rain^lly not enter,
king.
[Wa]it outside.
Stay at your station."^d
He washes/washed his hands
inside the courtyard.
"Mar,
[bri]ng our 'lord^l near to you;
Nebo
...."

More Rebuffs (III.14-IVA.6)

[Man!]
... outside,
[and] hear me!

I am exa^lted^l.
 I [reared you]
 You sucked my ^lbre^last,
 the sap of Marah
 [nourished you.]
 [She strengthens,]
 [she empowers]
 with her power.

Col. IVA

Man!

... [outside,]
 and hear me!
 I am exalted.
 [I] reared you,
 you sucked my breast,
 the sap of Marah
 nourished you.
 She strengthens,
 she empowers
 with her power.

The Enthronement of Marah-Nanai (IVA.6-21)

Kings saw yo[u]
 and they were afraid,
 Nanai;
 you frighten them
 in front of their officials

...
 exalted.
 But we saw/see
 the [queen],
 the queen of Ra[sh]
 brought in,
 Marah, among the [go]^ld^ls.
 And they rise
^lfrom^l their thro^lne^ls:
 "Let Marah be enthroned
 among the gods;
 let her [th]rone
 be glo^lri^lous;
 in Rash
 let [her] footstool
 [be] glor^lious^l."

...
 that Mar[ah] was enthroned / of the enthronement of Mar[ah]

...
 allow our king to come up,
 Mar[ah]

... may he bless
 ... Marah, ^lb^lle^lss^l
 ... may he bless you
 ... [b]less(,) Shamash
 ... ble[ss]

...

Col. IVB

New Year's Delights (IVB.1-9)

to Marah ... ^lca^lll
 ... to my lady, Marah

the he^laven^ls

...

...

on the earth.

...

come, walk before ^lme^l on every

... those who call upon you,
^lmi^lg^lhty one

...

mighty one,

we pu^lt^l

in your cou^lrt^ly^lard fr^luit^l

from the vin^leya^lrd^ls

[we brin]g out on New Years

...

which delight my heart and your heart,
 my Fire

...

in El's heart

Col. V

The Destruction of Rash (V.1-11)

You, Mar, ^lp^lut
 te[rror in the land];

Terror [fi]lled
 the country

...

They [de]stroyed for you
 all your cit^lies^l;
 in the land
 trembling dwells.

...

belittles you,
 your entire assembly
 of princes.

He ^lre^lviled

your sons and your mothers;
 with shackles

he clothed their hands.

He hunted the chiefs;

he treated them all with contempt.

He stoned your baker who used to present b < re > ad and make

all your loaves;

your ^lbu^ltcher

who used to present a ram —

he would ^lstr^like the neck,

he would strike the windpipe,

he would make all

the c < o > ws of your ...;

your priest{s}

who used to pr^les^lent

the devotee — / meal offering —

he would lay down for you fragrances and rushes;

'your' 'mus' [ici]an{s} who used to present joyous music —
 he would carry the harp,
 he would carry the lyre.
 ...
 they pour
 the 'd'ri'nk' of his belly.
Kissing the Calves of Bethel (V.12-22)
 ...
 let them kiss [your] bull[s],^e
 'let them de'sire your calves,^e
 Exalted One,
 the 'c' [alves]
 of your ...s
 my m'outh'
 ... and shake
 ...
 ...
 'he will' find
 ...
 ...
 Resident of Rash
 ...
 ...
 'B' [e] 'th' el
Col. VI
A Lament to Mar (VI.1-12)
 ...
 ...
 ...
 ...
 'Mar'.
 Mar, good god —
 my god, what should I do/have you done?
 let me know ... my god.
 No evil is in my hands,^f
 my god;
 no duplicity/slander in my mouth.^g
 (But) you have made me
 a lamb in their flocks,
 a ram in their folds.
 They constantly feel me (saying) "Let us kill him that we may become fat and corpulent."^h
 Let us eat his fleshⁱ
 and become fat;
 let us drink his blood^j
 and become inebriated.
 Lord, god of Rash, Mar —
 Make my body^j
 ...
 in their mouths,
 bitters
 under their tongues.^k
 Mar, good god —
 my god, what

e Hos 13:2 should I do / have you done?
 Let me know ... my god.
f 1 Sam 24:12 No evil is in my hands,
 (11); Job our god;
 16:17 no duplicity/slander in my mouth.
 (But) you have made me
g Isa 53:9 a date in their mouths, sweets
h Deut 32:15 under their tongues.^k
 Lord, god of Rash, Mar —
i Ezek 39:17; Make my body
 Ps 50:13 ve'nom' in their mouths, poison under their tongues.^l
j Isa 51:23
A Reassuring Reply (VI.12-18)
 Mar speaks up
 and says to me:
 "[Be] 'stro'ng,
 my 'se'rvant, fear not. I will 'save' m' your
 To Marah,
 if you will ...,
 to Mar
 from your shrine and Rash,
 [I shall destroy]
 [your] 'en' [emy in] your days and during your year's'
 [your] advers[ary]
 will be smitten.
 [Your foes]
 I shall destroy
 in front of you;
 your foot on their necks [you will place].ⁿ
 [I shall suppo]rt' your 'r'ight (hand)^o
 I shall 'cro'wn 'you'
 with prosperity;
 your house
 ...
 ...
 'u'p'o'n you
 your cup ...
 ...
 ...
Col. VII
The Blessings of the Gods (VII.1-7) your blessings
 ...
 may they bless you.
 May Mar from Rash
 bl'ess you';
 Marah from Shur —
 [she] should bless you.
 May Baal from Zephon bless you;^p
 Pidra[i]/ from Raphia —
 she should bless you.
 May Bel from Babylon
 bless you;
 Belit from Esangila —
 she should bless you.

May Nebo from Borsippa
bless you;
Nanai from Ayakku —
she should bless you.
May the Throne of Horus
and Osiris from the Negeb
bless you.

Offerings to the Gods (VII.7-19)

Give the fire-offerings and offer (them) up
in fire.

Pick up, send
a lamb, a young sheep;
send a lamb.

Make abundant holocaust-aroma
for Mar;
may he bless you abundantly.

Bow down to Anat
and Mami;
to Nebo
send

the consecrated animals.
Let there be remembered
as a remembrance,
Mar,
sixty singers.

Let them lift
their voices, Mar;
Mar, let them bless you.
Let there be remembered
as a remembrance,

Mar,
six^{ty} temple ser^{vit}ors — their (lit., his) handfuls of myrrh (and) frankincense for the nostril[s] of Bethel.

Let there be remembered
as a remembrance,
Mar,
sixty sheep.

Favor your loved ones,
Mar,
favor your loved ones
and Rash.

Favor your loved ones
(and) Rash.

The blood of the dead sheep
is a sea.

The sheep floats
to you,
lord of heaven;
wheat

q 2Kgs 17:30

{of} barley comes near to you.

...
the dust
... lord,
may you se^t a hand,
snatch them.

A Hymn to Mar (VII.20-VIII.3)

Your going out, Mar

...
your coming in

...
on ...
on the path ...
the ^wall
[your] window^s ...
[your] pal^{ace},
Mar

...
Col. VIII
[Al]l the blessings

...
until eternity.
your sons,
and with your daughters
he dealt kindly ...
[was brought low]
and the god of Rash
was victorious over all of them.

An Enticing Invitation (VIII.3-8)

I have taken out your box, my god —
open (it),
and your mouth

...
Your table will be covered with the fat of stags.
Butchers will wait
on it.

All of them,
with skillful hands,
will tremble.

Every bull
you will snatch,
Resident of Hamath.⁹

Your krater
you will pour out
and it will be filled;
and butlers will wait
on it,
each of them standing
and speaking up:
"You are at a banquet.
Look, see!
Drink it!"

A Hymn to Mar (VIII.8-10)

Mar, from your snorts
all the <ea> rth perishes;
like smoke, lord,
from your breaths.^r
You fly
to your followers;
you spread the wing
like an eagle,
and they arise.
The beams of your house,
Bethel,
are from Lebanon;
from Lebanon,
{and} your garden,
are they.
And Resident of Hamath
...

The Selection of Mar's Bride (VIII.10-11)

Elevate a lass.
Who is the lass?
All of your manifestations
are concealed.

A Hymn to Mar (VIII.11-13)

Mar is/se<t>s like the sun and rises like the moon,
like the moon
along the length of his heavens.
Oh, let them build,
in heaven,
your house,
concealed, with stars;
let your bed
be brought down in Epiph.
In your temples
let them build,
lord of Bethel,
a thousand new altars.

The Selection of Mar's Bride (VIII.13-16)

A beautiful priestess elevate,
and the burnt offer^ring^s of the city
let her offer;
in Rash
...

"This one here
is ^rbeauti^rful;
in the shape of her face
she is love^rly^r."
Elevate a lass.
Who is the lass?
All of your manifestations
are concealed.

The Diadem of Prosperity for Mar's Bride
(VIII.16-22)

Our Prince has ^rbeen good^r to ^r Ps 18:16;

Job 4:9

^s Esth 1:22

the daughters of Arash:
Mar has ^rgi^rven
the diadem of prosperity;
the god of <Ra>sh
has crowned her
in his hou[se],
and he makes her rule in his palaces.^s
He rai^rse^rs her up like the sea
in his hou[se],
in ...
^rhis^r hor^rns^r
...
like the river.
^rAnd^r our Prince,
the god of <Ra>[sh],
has done good with his water;
the god of <Ra>sh,
with the sea.

...
^rYour^r shrine, Mar,
is perfect;
...
who has improved?
All of it, Mar, my god

...
a diadem of prosperity

...
...
...
...
our yearly harv[est] (lit., ingathering), because your peo^rple^r

...
He
... Glean wheat and glean ...
Glean

Col. IX*A Prayer for Rain* (IX.1-13)

^rAnswer me^r

...
from Rash;
^rto^r my ...

...
The river is disappearing,
it is worn out.
and my lord —
the river
is not rising.
Your mind
is sealed, Mar.
Send to me
your cloud.
Exalted One,
awake for me, awake.
Marah,

lift up the bucket for me;
inspect the canals for me,
Marah.
Inspect,
my g<o>d, my queen,
the pool;
lift up,
the bucket.
In every generation
you rule {in her palaces} in your palaces,^s {and} and you/come
...
...
...
and my wife.
I shall bring a ram
to my lord;
...
...
Oh, Bethel,
nourishing god / god of the world, who causes the sea to rise generation after generation — all the clouds of moisture^t offspring of the primeval mist^u are hidden away for you Make it rain, Mar;
baths of rain
send down.
Our silver is yours and our gold;^v
our possessions are yours,
our mature cattle are yours,
like our heifers
(and) yearling calves.
Chorus (IX.13-17)
He will help us.
We shall be raised up in safety.
He will guard our rear.
The god of Rash will help us.
Let us ponder his mysteries.
Mar is my father
and my bull/shepherd.
He will raise me up.
Let me vaunt
his mighty deeds.
...
...
...
...
let the throng say
Amen, Amen.

A hymn to Mar (IX.17-20)
Mar, my god —
father of the orphan, champion of the widow.^w
She who has lifted up her h^ands
to you,

s Esth 1:22 you calm
in her sobbing.
t Job 37:11 She has lifted up her hands — [you] ca[im]
u Job 36:27 her sob^{bin}g.
v Hag 2:8 Mar humbles the haughty.
May you exalt him
with the ...
of your ...;
w Ps 68:6 [your] catt^{le}
[and] [all] your bounty.
x Isa 40:22
Chorus (IX.20-23)
[And he will] [help me]^l.
y Exod 7:19, I shall be raised up [in safety]^l.
8:1 He will guard [our] r[ear].
z Jer 23:29 The god of R^{ash} will hel^p us.
Mar is [my] father
and my bull/shepherd.
He will ra[ise me up].
Let me [va]unt
his migh^{ty} deeds
...
...
...
...
let the throng say
Amen, Amen.

Col. X
A Prayer for the Rising of the Nile (X.1-6)
Ret^{urn}, our father,
Mar of [A]rash;
...
You stretched out the heavens,^x
Mar,
[you] s^{et} the stars in place,
you dwell throughout
the land of Rash,
our god.
Let canal (and) pool^y
rise through its waves.
Let canal (and) pool
rise through its waves.
The river is poor in floodwater.
The river will die
and it will be bitter.
They will become thin again, Mar;
as thin, god of Rash,
as splinters of flint.^z
Chorus (X.6-8)
Mar is my father
and my bull/shepherd.
He will raise me/us up.
Let us vaunt
his mighty deeds.
...

...
...
...
let the throng say
Amen, Amen.

A Dream about Rash (X.8-13)

In my dream,
I was in my youth;
I was in the land of Rash.
I was building a city,
in Rash
I was erecting it;
its name was
Ellipi Pait.
Rash was supported;
my lord
watched over Ellipi Pait:
He would beat
her troublemakers
in her stocks;
he would break (them)
in corporal punishment.
The righteous man
he would help,
escorting him
in the face of his troubles, him whom the oppression of the creditor
has filled/embittered.

Chorus (X.13-16)

And he will h<el>p me;
I shall be raised up in safety.
He will guard our rear.
The god of Rash will help me.
Let us ponder his mysteries.
Mar is my father
and my bull/shepherd.
He will raise us up.
Let me vaunt
his mighty deeds.

...
...
...
...
let the throng say
Amen, Amen.

A Prayer for the Destruction of Rash's Enemies (X.16-20)

Mar who goes 'out'
from Rash,
who is like you,
who is more for 'bea'ring than you?
'Ta'ke away, destroy the enemy.
Arise, Mar,
take away, destroy our enemy

aa 1 Kgs
14:23;
2 Kgs 17:10;
Jer 2:20;
Ezek 6:13;
20:28

bb Ps 23:5

cc Amos
3:14-15

...
[that] the Kassites and
Ela[m]ites not destroy us.
May [you] heal,
[O] Mar,
your int[imate]s,
[that] they not per[ish],
and sate
their [en]emi[es]
with all that with [which]
your oppressed ones
[were sated.]

Col. XI

The Bridal Chamber for the Sacred Marriage (XI.1-3)

A ...
in ...
erect;
on a height ^{aa}
construct it.
Er[ect] [i]t
under lofty ced[ar]s; ^{aa} there, my powe[rful] one,
may you construct [it],
may you ... it.

Father not Old, Brothers not Frail (XI.3-6)

Satu[rate], invigorate (lit., oil) ^{bb}
your father.
Your father
is a disabled old man,
your brothers
are frail.
My father
is not a disabled old man,
my brothers
are not frail,
for my father
is like a stable (full) of steeds;
my brothers,
like eagles
and <wi>ld asses.

Drought in Bethel (XI.6-11)

"You are poor,
my brother.
Why has the flow of the spring dis[app]eared?"
"It flowed
and was lost,
and its flow disappeared.
The well flowed,
its water was lost;
our faces
wasted away / dried out.
Stricken is a city
full of ivory houses^{cc}
[and] with linen and lapis lazuli

on her windows;
her insides/windows
a mountain of ma^{rb}le,
her walls iron and bron^{ze}." dd

A Psalm from Bethel (XI.11-19)

May Horus answer us in our troubles;
may Adonai answer us in our troubles.^{ee}
O crescent (lit., bow) / bowman
in heaven,
Sahar / shine forth;
send your emissary from the temple of Arash,^{ff}
and from Zephon may Horus help us.^{ff}
May Horus grant us what is in our hearts;
may Mar grant us what is in our hearts.^{gg}
All <our> plans may Horus fulfill.^{gg}
May Horus fulfill — hh may Adonai not fall short in satisfying — every request of our hearts.^{hh}
Some with the bow, some with the spear;ⁱⁱ
but (lit., behold) as for us — Mar is our god;ⁱⁱ
Horus-Yaho, our bull, is with us.^{kk}
May the lord of Bethel answer us^{ll} on the morrow.
May Baal of Heaven Mar
grant a blessing / bless you;
to your pious ones, your blessings.^{mm}

Col. XII

Lambs for Adonai (XII.1-3)

‘H^{ear} me,
my ‘go^l[d], my king.
Choice ‘lamb^s,ⁿⁿ
sh[ee]p,
we sacrifice
to you (alone)
among the gods;
our banquet
is for you (alone)
out of all the supreme beings /
from the shepherds/chiefs
of the people,
Adonai, for you (alone)
out of all the supreme beings /
from the shepherds/chiefs
of the ‘peo^lple.

Wine and music for Adonai (XII.4-10)

Adonai,
the people bless you;
accept your yearly liturgy.
From the pitcher
saturate yourself,
my god;
I will fill (it) with the juice of the winepress.
Tower,

dd Jer 1:18

ee Ps 20:2

ff Ps 20:3

gg Ps 20:5

hh Ps 20:6

ii Pss 20:8;
46:10

jj Ps 20:8;
2 Chr 13:10

kk Ps 46:12;
2 Chr 13:8, 12 ll Ps 20:10

mm Ps 3:9

nn Gen 49:21

oo Exod 15:11

pp Prov 1:23

qq Ps 6:8

mercif^{ul} father,

Horus

benefactor of the lowly — they have mixed wine
in goblets,
in goblets
at our wedding.
Drink, Horus,
from the bounty
of a thousand basins;
saturate yourself, Adonai,
from the bounty of men.
Musicians stand
in attendance upon Mar:
a player of the harp,
a player of the lyre.
Here is the music
of the har,
the music of a Sidonian lyre and sweet things
in his ear
at the banquets of men.

A prayer to Adonai (XII.11-17)

Who among gods,
among men, Horus?
Who among gods,
among royalty,
(among)/among non-royalty.
Who is like you, Horus, among gods?^{oo}
Come from Shur, take vengeance
for those who call upon you,
a peo^lple dwelling
among the crooked.
And make us strong again,
beneath you, Horus;
beneath you,
Adonai,
Resident of Heaven;
like the phoenix,
Horus,
Resident of Heaven.
Call out to us your words
among the crooked;
and make ‘us^l strong again,
Baal from Ze^{ph}on.
May Horus grant a blessing.
Arise, Horus,
to our aid / help us.
May Adonai
give heed to my prayer.^{pp}
Mar, ari^{se}!
Horus, may you grant protection,
just as you protect your ey^e from degeneration.^{qq}

Col. XIII

A Hymn to Marah-Nanai (XIII.1-9)

ʾB¹[le]ssed are you,
O Marah,
more than all
blessed ones.
You are my commander

...
You are my queen
and you are a hawk;
Marah from Rash
are you,
queen over all.
Raise the crowns

...
You had mercy on him who did not finish
the crowns
of your house.
Merciful one, / Beloved,
the summit of your sanctuary
who can build?

Who can build,
merciful one, / beloved,
the tower
by its side?

Nana, Cow,
the niche for your statue
may you build;
may you ʾcarve¹,
my goddess,
the pedestal
of your testimony.

The sun of blinding light shines through your windows,
your windows, divine Cow,
over the gate of men.

The men, Dove,
I shall watch for you,
the watch of the portal for you so that I may satiate myself from your abundance,
saturate myself,
my si<s>ter,
from your baths
in the sea.

Nanai's Statue Trampled in the Sack of Rash
(XIII.9-17)

The one who rebels (lit., raises a hand) against Mar/Mar<ah> — on Nana's hands
he trampled
and went (away).

He stretc<hed> forth his hand
against the merciful one / beloved,
against the one who nourishes.

rr Isa 40:19;
44:10

He threw down
the one who proclaimed to us
and taught.

He threw down, trampled
the proclaimer
who proclaimed
(and) taught.

He came,
threw down, trampled.

He threw down
the Dove,
threw down my treasure.

For Na¹nai¹
take up the harp,
(for) Baalat

loosen the tongue.

Your metal is shattered;
on my floor
you lie.

Quickly we entered.

We shake it.

Get up

...
that we may exalt you.
Our <str>ength has fallen,
our holy one has fallen,
the teacher of wisdom.
I ran to you.

...
Get up,
watch over the orphan;
over me,
Foster-mother!

The merciful one / beloved was cast;"
it was from metal plates.

...
Its feet he smashed,
its hand he smashed.
Against the merciful one / beloved
he came;
its feet he smashed.
Appoint an idol-maker
from Tyre.

A Prayer to Nanai (XIII.17-XIV.4)

Who are you?

You are my powerful goddess.
From our desolation
grant me rest.

....
Over the king's ʾs¹eat, ʾC¹ow-head —
appoint lookouts
over the throne;
over the throne,
Cow of Babylon(ia),
guards.

Col. XIV

Who are you?
 You are
 our mighty goddess.
 Your mer[cy]
 for my people —
 for my people,
 like the gods,
 establish, Naⁿai.
 Let them become intoxi^{cated} with casks of wine;
 may you intox^{icate}
 with its intoxication,
 Nanai.
 Who are you?
 You are my power^{ful} godd^{ess}.
 From our desolation
 grant me rest.

....

The Trampers Stricken by Nanai's Venom (XIV.4-6)

On my back horses have walked; ^{ss}

I am the viper at their heel. ^a

Horses have walked

^{on} my belly;

from my poison they grew old,

they were sickened

by my venom,

their hide rotted

from my venomous bite.

Drink an antidote,

...

pick up a remedy,

fill the vessels

with drugs,

load the ^{anti}dote

with balm.

...

...

...

...

fashion it.

...

Nebo

...

...

...

Col. XV

Blessings and Prayers (XV.1-9)

...

...

Ashim-Bethel

^{Nebo}

...

...

^{you} entered;

^{with goats}

you came before

your ...

man,

ss Ps 129:3

ff Gen 49:17

uu Ps 78:69

vv Obad 4

who grants

pea^{ce} everlasting.

In the month of ^{Epi}phⁱ,

may Nebo remember you;

may he put you in mind

on earth and on high.^{uu}

Blessed are you, Hadad;

Had, with a blessing

fit for El.

Blessed are you,

Baal of Heaven.

The holder of your fort is the Bull,

Nebo is your ^{gu}ard,

^{Pid}rai is your sturdy beam.

Great Baal!

Tip a pitcher of must

and drink with me.

Spend the night in my house;

come to the threshold,

en^{ter}.

I have placed on your tray/crown

...

Bull,

in your memory

whom do you leave?

(Whom) do you regard

in <you>r mind,

Nebo?

A nest among golden stars he sets (for) you.^{vv}

Into gold,

divine Sheep,

^{let} the goldbeaters

^beat lapis lazuli.

My god, much plunder

I have carried off:

I shall give you

the silver;

the gold will be added to yours.

...

with the foster-fathers

of the orphan,

speak (saying):

"Exalt Mar El,

may you ascribe to him

supremacy."

They exal<t> me (saying):

"To whom would you liken El,

among foster-fathers

of the orphan?"

Spoon-Stuffed Ducks Brought to the Table (XV.9-12)

I/you/she spoke (saying):

"Come up to me.

Bring near to me

and my dovecote(s)

a dovelet grain.
 Bring near to me
 and my doveote(s)
 a vessel 'of cha¹rm,
 a vessel of beauty.
 'On¹ an ivory 'tray¹
 bring to the table of Bel, the king / of the King's son (= Nebo son of Bel)
 the ducks,
 the ducks
 placed on ivory.
 Stuff the ducks
 with a spoon;
 make the wine abundant,
 increase the fat tenfold."

Jackal and Hare (XV.12-13)

Jackal, jackal!
 Here, in front of you
 is a hare!
Moon-howler,
 jackal!
 Rove,
 go out and look!
 Rove
 away from my wilds!
 Hare!
 Here, a hunter is hunting you
 assiduously,
 with skillful hands.

A Prayer to Ashim-Bethel (XV.13-17)

The force of the divine bull
 is your force,
Horus.
 Ashim-Bethel,
 the force of the divine bulls
 is your force;
 your 'venom¹ is like that of 'se¹rpents."^{ww}
 Your bow in heaven
 you, Mar, 'sho¹ot;
 draw it, Ashim-Bethel,
 at your enemies.
 My mighty one,
 may your hammer be good;
 my 'bro¹ther, for me
 against Elam
 may 'you¹ raise it.
 My mighty one,
 may my linen be good,
 my linen
 which will touch your couch.
 Why does your enemy carry off
 ...
 ...
 ...

ww Deut
 32:33;
 Ps 58:5

He fills his hand
 with ... and vessel
 taking out
 from your shrine and Rash

...
 that I/you did not see.

Jackal and Hare (XV.17-19)

Jackal, jackal!
 'Here¹, 'in¹ front of you
 is a hare!
Moon-howler,
 jackal!
 'R¹ove,
 go out and look!
 Rove
 away from my wilds!
 Hare!
 Here, a hunter is hunting you
 assiduously,
 with skillful hands.

Col. XVI

Soldiers from Judah and Samaria (XVI.1-6)

[With] my (own) two eyes
 I watched a tr¹oo¹[p]

...
 a b[and] of Samari¹tan¹s sounded out
 my lord, the king.
 "Who / From where
 are y¹ou¹, lad?
 Who / From where is your...?"
 "I come from 'J¹udah,
 my brother
 has been br¹ought¹ from Samaria and now
 a man 'is¹ bring¹ing¹ up
 my sister
 from J¹er¹usalem."
 "Enter, lad;
 we will give you lodging.
 A kab of 'wh¹eat
 pick up on your sho¹ul¹der,
 boy;

...
 ...
 ...
 On your table
 will be placed lap¹is la¹zuli — from every dovelet grain,
 lapis lazuli;
 and from every mina
 a vessel of beauty."

The Sacred Marriage Ceremony (XVI.7-19)

Nana, y^ou are my wife.

The bed of rushes

they have ^{laid} down,

perfumed fragrances

for ^{you}r nostril <s>.

Our goddess,

may you be carried,

escorted ^to your dear one;

let them bear you

to the dear one.

In your bridal chamber

a priest sings.

Nanai,

bring near to me

your lips.

We dwelled (here)

in the morning;

we shall dwell (here)

in the evening.

I have stayed with you until evening.

The chosen lad too

has come.

A sound keeps you awake in the ^{evening};

into our ^{sh}rine,

my ...,

who is coming?

<A sound of> harps keeps you awake in the evening;

in the grave

of my ancestor,

a dirge.

A sound of lyres from the grave keep^s you awake in the evening.^{xx}

My beloved,

enter the doo^r

into our house.

With my mouth,

consort of our lord,

let me kiss you.

^{And} I go

and enter.

In my nostrils

it is sweet;

Come, enter the perfumed hideaway.

Horus-Bethel will lay you on a bedspread;

El, on embroidered covers.

In his heavens,

Mar from Rash blesses;

Mar, a bless^{ing}

before Bethel

everlasting:

"My sister, Marah —

blessed are you,

O Cow, our lady."

"Blessed are you,

xx Isa 65:4

yy Isa 1:29;
65:3; 66:17

zz Nah 2:9

O Had,

with a blessing

fit for El.

Blessed are you,

Baal of Heaven."

"Rebuild, man, Ellipi.

A cursed land rebuild,

a city of ruins rebui^{ld};

by the side of the Hambanites.

a great land.

Keep alive the pauper;

...

the poor [m]an.

Col. XVII

A Lament for Nineveh After the Wedding (XVII.1-5)

O ^{my} godd^{ess} / "Woe," ^I lamented

... the king

...

you/I have come here;

indeed

you were / I was brou^{ght} up to my garden.^{yy}

You/I have perfumed

my scent

amo^{ng} cedars;

you/I have played music

on a l^yre;

you/I have put down

perfume.

Baal of Heaven

has come up,

ascended to my/your bower.

O ^{my} goddess, / "Woe," I lamented,

...

O my goddess, / "Woe," I lamented,

I wailed.

Ni <ne> veh is (nothing but) swamps; /

There are swamps in Ni <ne> veh;^{zz}

it [has tur]^{ned} into mud.

T <o> (lit., dow <n to>) the ground

it has been razed (lit., thrown down).

A Tale of Two Brothers in Two Cities (XVII.5-XXII.9)

Omens When the Princes Were Born (XVII.5-XVII.13)

The year in which was born

our lord, King Sar^{ba}nabal,

the land was prosperous

the thin, the split

grew thick.

A man would find its gatekeepers

in good health

(and be told):

"You, my brother,

enter this gate.

From our house

let us fetch (lit., take) for you a morsel (of bread)^{aaa} and let me roast a goat on ... onions."
(Then came) days
which had not been,
years which had not
passed / been spent / been turned.
The year in which was born
our lord, our brother,
Sarmuge,
the earth was bronze, the heavens, of iron,^{bbb}
the soil,
in a bad/ rid state,
the heavens,
in poor/droughty condition,
A ma <n> would find its gatekeepers very greatly in distress / in need of food
(and be told): "Get away <from> this gate."
They (lit., he) would be wary of him as of spies.

Sarmuge Sent to Babylonia as Governor to Collect Tribute (XVII.14-18)

(Then came) 'da¹ys
which had not been,
years which had not
passed / been spent / been turned.
The king
spoke up and said,
addressing
Sar[mu]lge:
"Go
to (!) the land
of Babylonia.
Eat 'its' bread
(as good) 'as la¹mb
Dri¹nk' its wine
(as good) as the finest imported wine.
Devo<te> yourself
to its payment of tribute to [A]'ssy¹ria."
Sarmuge went
'to' the land
of Ba¹by¹lonia.
He (!) 'a' te its bread
(as good) as [lamb].
He [d]'ra¹nk its wine
(as good) as the finest import¹ed wine¹.
He devoted himself to 'its' p[ay]me¹nt¹
of tribu¹te¹
[to] [A]'ssy[ria].

aaa Gen 18:5;
1 Kgs 17:10-11 bbb Lev

26:19; Deut
28:23; Jer
20:14

ccc 2 Sam
8:2, 6

ddd 2 Sam
10:4; 1 Kgs
22:27

eee Jer 37:20;
Dan 2:47

fff Dan 5:11;
Ezra 9:7

ggg Gen
41:14;
Ezek 16:10

hhh Gen
27:13;
2 Sam 14:9

iii Ps 104:34

Col. XVIII

A Defiant Message Instead of Tribute from Sarmuge's Emissaries (XVIII.1-4)

(Then came) days
which had not [b]¹e¹en,
years which had not
passed / been spent / been turned.

The emissaries went out
from <Ba>bylon
until they were ushered into Nineveh.

They longed to (lit., for) rest and to satiate themselves, (lit., and satiation)
dressed in their tunics.

"From Sarmuge
to Sarbanabal.

I am the king
of (!) / in (!) Babylon, and you are the/a governor of/in Ni <ne>veh.

Pay tribute to me! ^{ccc}

Why should I show you respect?"

The Emissaries Imprisoned and Released (XVIII.5-15)

The king became angry
at the emissaries.

"Let them be brought down from the dining hall, / to (!) the dungeon, allotted bread and water." ^{ddd}

The sun shone (and) rose.

The general sent up 'ser¹vants to (!) the palace / from his palace.

"The word of our lord
to the king:

'O lord of kings, hear! ^{eee}

From the days of your father, ^{fff} from the days of your father's fathers, emissaries

have not been imprisoned, allotted bread and water.

Take out the emissaries
from the dungeon.

Let them be brought to the bathhouse.

Dress them in embroidered garments. ^{ggg}

Go to the prince;

be gracious to him.

Count their sin against me. ^{hhh}

The advice was pleasing to the king. ⁱⁱⁱ

The king

spoke up and said:

"I will take out the emissaries

from the dungeon.
 Let them be ¹brought¹
 to the ba¹th house.
 I will dress them
 in embroi¹dered¹ garments.
 I shall go to the prince;
I shall be gracious to him.
 Go out, emissaries, <from> the dungeon.ⁱⁱⁱ Be brought to the ¹ba¹th house.
 Pu¹ on
 embroidered garments.
 I shall go ¹to¹ [the prince];
 [I sha]¹ll be grac¹ious to ¹hi¹m.”

Saritrah Sent to Reason With an Ungrateful Brother
 (XVIII.15-XIX.8)
 The king
¹spo¹[ke up] and [sai]d:
 “Let them call
 [S]aritrah,
 my sister.
¹Let¹ Saritrah ¹be¹ ¹br¹[ought].^{kkk} ¹Let her (!)¹ be caused to [st]and
 in the ga[te]
 of the [p]ala¹ce¹
 of the king”
 The ¹ki¹[ng]
 [spoke up and said,]
Col. XIX
 add[re]¹ss¹ing
 Saritrah:
 You ...
 The rotten fellow
 who has sinned against me —
 I made him the/a governor ⁱⁱⁱ
 of (!) / in (!) Babylon, while I am king
 in/of Nineveh.
 A mighty horse from (!) Media — it was brought to Sarmuge.
 {Mighty} linen from (!) Egypt ^{mmmm} — we brought (it)
 to our brother.
 Daggers / Purple (wool)
 from .../Ty<re>
 we brought <to> Sarmuge.
 A mighty bow from Elam ^{mm}
 we brought to our brother.
 Go to the rotten fellow.
 Speak,
 say (it) to him.
 Let him know,
 listening to your words ^{ooo} and giving heed
 to your remarks.”

ⁱⁱⁱ Isa 49:9

^{kkk} Ps 45:15

^{lll} Ezra 5:14

^{mmmm} Ezek
27:7

ⁿⁿⁿ Jer 49:35

^{ooo} Job 33:1

^{ppp} Gen
41:43

^{qqq} Gen
31:21

^{rrr} 2 Sam
18:24

^{sss} 2 Kgs
13:7;
Isa 41:2;
Ps 83:14

^{tt} Prov
1:23

^{uuu} Gen 29:1

Saritrah's Journey to Babylon (XIX.8-12)

Sarit(ah) went out
 from the palace.
 They seated her in the chariot. ^{ppp}
 She set her fac¹e¹ toward Babylon. ^{qqq}
 The lookouts went up on the wall ^{rrr} of Babylon.
 The lookouts
 spoke up (and) said:
 “The troop which is coming / has come is too large
 to consist of emissaries,
 too small
 to consist of warriors.”
Saritrah beckoned
from the city gate.
 “Who here is this / are you?”
 “I am Saritrah, sister of the twins / the equal brothers.”

An Attempt to Persuade Sarmuge to Return to Nineveh (XIX.12-XX.2)

Sarmuge
 spoke up and said:
 “Nikkal is now
 between me and Sarit(ah):
 She (=Nikkal) will not let her (! = Saritrah)
 see my face.”
 Saritrah
 spoke up (and) said:
 “Who made us/me
 like ¹stub¹ble
 <for> her feet? ^{sss}
 Sarmuge, my brother!
 Fortune has con<fou>nded you and smiled upon (lit., been good to)
 your brother.
 Do listen to my words,
 and may you give heed ¹to¹ my remarks. ^{ttt}
 Act like (lit., make yourself) a governor /
 Put your hands / (in) fetters.
 Lift up ¹your¹ feet from here. ^{uuu}
 Come to the king,
 your bro¹ther¹.
 He is fo¹rbea¹ring.
¹He¹ will not del<ay>
 in <re>¹ce¹iving you.”
Col. XX
 Sarmuge
 spoke up and said:
 “Have [you] rubbed down
¹and rested¹
 your hor¹se¹?
 Why so swift
 your riding?”

A Second Unsuccessful Attempt at Persuasion
(XX.2-6)

Sarit[rah]

spoke up (and) said:

"Listen / hear me, lord,

listen / hear me!

Truly, truly —

two kings

are being overturned

on account of

one of (!) them;

a man (lit., a brother)

and 'his' brother

are quarreling

on account of

one of (!) them.

If my advice may be heard — /

If my king will listen to me —

disregard the tribute

<which> they did not pay you.

Act like (lit., make yourself) a governor/

Put your hands (in) fetters.

Lift up your feet from here.

Come to the king,

your brother."

Sarmuge

did not listen to her,

and did not give <heed>

to her remarks.

Saritrah's Parting Advice (XX.6-11)

Sarit(ah) spoke up (and) said:

"If you will not listen to my words,

and if you will not give heed

to my remarks,

go from the house of Bel,

away from the house of Marduk."^{vv}

Let there be built for you

a bower (lit., a house of boughs);

a booth (lit., a house of sticks)

do constr<uct>.

Throw down tar and pitch ^{www}

and sweet-smelling/Arabian perfumes.^{xxx}

Bring in your sons

and your daughters

and your doctors

who have made you act brashly.

When you see

how (low) they have sunk

on you (= to your detriment),

let fire burn you

together with your sons

and your daughters

and your doctors

who have made you act 'bra'shly."

Saritrah's Return and Report to the King (XX.11-15)

Sarit(ah) went out

from Babylon.

^{vvv} Jer 50:2

^{www} Isa 34:9

^{xxx} 2 Chr
16:14

^{yyy} 1 Kgs
22:34

^{zzz} Jer 42:9

^{aaaa} Dan 3:6

^{bbbb} Jer
51:27; 52:25

^{cccc} Jer 46:4

She set her face (toward) Nineveh.

She turned 'her' ha'nd' (and) her foot ^{yyy} to go out from Babylon

until she(!) was ushered into Nineveh.

The king

spoke up (and) said,

addressing Saritrah:

"What said to you

the rotten fellow

to 'who'm I sent you?' ^{zzz}

"The mee'ti'ng was

stormy (lit., like a blazing fur'nace').^{aaaa}

He contemned me."

The General Sent to Bring Sarmuge Back Alive
(XX.15-18)

The king

spoke up and said,

addressing the general:

"I shall call up

the <t>roops

in(to) the rank<s> of the Ninevites.

You appoint a scribe ^{bbbb}

for 'ba'u<le>,'/ Ca'ti' up a war-scribe,

and polish all of your 'swo'rds and your spea'rs'.^{cccc}

Furthermore,/Afterwards,

to Babylon you shall go,

general,

at the head of a det'achment'."

The 'k'in'g'

spoke up and said,

addre'ssing

the general:

"Furthermore,/Afterwards,

let them smite Babylon

(but) let them keep my brother alive."

An Appeal and a Warning from the General (XX.18-XXI.7)

The ge'ne'ral went 'out'

from (!) the pala'ce'.

They seated him

in the cha'ri'ot.

He [se]'t' h'is' face

[toward] [Ba]bylon.

Col. XXI

The loo'kouts' went up to the wall of Babylon.

The look[out]'s'

spoke up (and) said:

"The troop [which]

'is coming / has come' is too large

to consist of emissaries,

too small

to be the army of the king."
 The general
 spoke up and said,
 addressing Sarmuge:
 "Listen / hear me, lord,
 listen / hear me!
 Truly — two kings
 are being overturned
on account of (!)
one of them.
 If my advice may be heard — /
 If my king will listen to me —
 disregard the tribute
 which they did not pay you
 Act like (lit., make yourself) a governor/
 Put your hand (in) fetters.
 Lift up your feet from here.
 Come to the king, your brother.
 He is forbearing.
 He will not del <ay>
 in receiving you."
 Sarmuge
 spoke up and said:
 "So he (= the king) decreed upon his governor,
your servant,
 and so it is decreed."
 "Then if so,
 listen to your words
 and may you give <heed>
 to your remarks.
 Begone,
 for the wall of Babylon
 in three days / after a day
 we shall capture;
 for the wall
I shall breach af<t>er a day."

Sarmuge's Suicidal Response (XXI.7-11)

Sarmuge went from the house of Bel,
 away from the house of Marduk.
 He {will have} built for himself
 a bower (lit., a house of boughs);
 a boot^h (lit., house of stic^{ks})
 he did con^{stru}ct.
 He threw down tar and pitch
 [and] sweet-smel^{ling} / Ara^{bian}
 [pe]rfumes.
 He brou^{ght} in
 his sons
 and ^{his} daughters
 [and] [hi]^s doc^{tors}
 [who] had made him act brashly.
 Wh^{en} he [s]aw
 [how] (low) they had sunk on h^{im} (= to his detriment),
 ... ^{burned} h^{im} ... ^{dddd}

^{dddd} 1 Kgs
 16:18

^{eeee} Ps 41:4

^{fff} 2 Sam
 1:24;
 Ezek 32:16

with hi[s] sons
 [and his daughters]
 and his doc^{tor}s
 who had made h^{im} act brashly.

A Desperate Attempt to Bring Sarmuge Back Alive
 (XXI.11-15)

The g^{en}[er]al
 keeps al^{ive} ...
 y[ou]ng <and> old.
 He ^{we}[nt] ^{out}
 [from the palace].
 They seated him
 in the chari^{ot}.
 He (!) ^{se}t
^{hi}[s] fa^c[e] toward <Ba>bylon^l. (sic?)
 Sarmuge
 [he took] ^{with} [him].
 Away they hu^{rr}ied,
 and they [ca]me

...
 ...
 men

...
 The doctor pounds
 balm [and] [cas]sia;
 (with) fran^{kinc}[ense]
 and lau^{da}[num].
 He bandages

...
 He supports ... on ... a be^d. ^{eeee}
 [He ga]ve

...
 and [he hurried]
 ... ^{up} to the wall

Reactions to Sarmuge's Death (XXI.16-XXII.9)

...
 The daughters of As^{sy}[ria] ... ^{mou}[rned] ^{and} ^{wa}[iled]. ^{fff}

...
 ...
 ...
 [to] <Ba>bylon

...
 [to perish]
 ... ^{and on}

...
Col. XXII
 [my] [ha]nds
 in/with his blood."

...
 to ...
 to which of (lit., to whom out of all of)
 ...
 one ... bring near.
 [To] my ^{sist}er
 let him be sent

'and let him' say: ... the ...s who overturned him I shall bani'sh'. They rebelled against me (lit., their hand they lifted up against me), ^{gggg} the one who nourished him ... Saritrah urged the king. She sent (and) urged the king to 'wr'ite his wo[r]'d' "Let them 'take away' ... haughtiness from my presence. ^{hhhh} I shall break ... 'r'lope ... To the 'he'[ig]ht's' of his temple [I shall] ascend, [I shall] go."	^{gggg} 2 Sam 18:28; 20:21; 1 Kgs 11:26, 27 ^{hhhh} Dan 5:20 ⁱⁱⁱⁱ 2 Sam 18:5, 12	Remember how he perished (lit., his perishing), (and) you shall bea'r' your yo[ke], refraining from 'go'ing up to the hou[se] of the one who holds 'h'[eav]'en' and earth. The king 'spo'[ke up] and said 'ad'[dress]ing the gener'al': "[Leave] the 'pa'lace, get out. Your sentence I [pronounce] on behalf of my god ... Your 'fa'ce he will not let [me] 'see', [for] 'I' said [to you]: 'Let them smite Babylon (but) let them keep my brother al'ive'." ^{uu}
---	---	---

REFERENCES

Bowman 1944; Kottsieper 1988; 1992; Nims and Steiner 1983; Segert 1986; Smelik 1983; Steiner and Nims 1984; 1985; Steiner 1991; 1995; Steiner and Moshavi 1995; Vleeming and Wesselius 1982; 1983-84; 1985; 1990; Weinfeld 1985a; 1985b; Zevit 1990.

A UGARITIC INCANTATION AGAINST SERPENTS AND SORCERERS (1.100) (1992:2014)

Dennis Pardee

A new Ugaritic incantation text, similar in many respects to RIH 78/20 (text 1.96), was discovered in 1992 in the archive that has since been identified as belonging to Urtenu (Bordreuil and Pardee 1995), a high official in the city shortly before its demise (Arnaud 1982:106). The incantation was prepared especially for Urtenu (see lines 14-15) and shows a concern for venomous reptiles reminiscent of that visible in the "para-mythological" text RS 24.244 (text 1.94). We learn from this text that especially to be feared was the joining of forces between sorcerers and serpents. The text is expressed in the first person, the incantation priest speaking to the individual who fears attack.

Incantation Against Serpents (lines 1-8) (When) the unknown one¹ ^a calls you and begins foaming,²	^a Deut 11:28; 13:3, 7, 14; 28:64; 29:25; 32:17; Jer 7:9; 9:15; 14:18; 16:13; 17:4; 19:4; 22:28; 44:3	I, for my part, will call you. I will shake³ bits of sacred wood, So that the serpent⁴ not come up
--	---	---

¹ The Ug. formula is dy l yd^c, "the one not known." Because neither this text nor RIH 78/20, where the term d^cim designates a category of sorcerer, deals with necromancy, one may conclude that the "knowledge" in question was not linked in any particular way with necromancy. The same conclusion is probably applicable to the yidd^c onim of the Hebrew Bible. Necromancy would, therefore, have been one form of divination among others practiced by sorcerers. The formulation of this text, in spite of the fact that the d^cim are not mentioned in it, may indicate that the name of this group arose from their ability to deal with the unknown.

² The vocabulary of line 1 is non-problematic except for the last phrase, ʔu zb, taken here as cognate to Arabic zabba, which can mean "to foam." If this analysis is correct, it seems to indicate that the "unknown one" earlier in the line is the serpent, for the motif of serpent venom as foam or spittle is well known from Mesopotamian literature (see CAD I-J 139-141), while the ability of the serpent to speak is known from biblical sources (Gen 3) and its general cunning from various Mesopotamian sources (Lipiński 1983:40-43).

³ The form is ʔamrmrn, a reduplicated verbal form either from the root meaning "pass on" (i.e., "make pass back and forth") or from the one meaning "to bless" (Pardee 1978b). Though either solution is plausible, the former is chosen here because moving the bits of wood back and forth shows more similarity to the acts described in more detail in RS 24.244:64-67 (text 1.94).

⁴ The word for "serpent" here is bṭn, which appears only near the end of the Ug. liturgy against serpent venom, RS 24.244 (see note 28 to

against you,^b

So that the scorpion^c not stand up under you.⁵

The serpent will indeed not come up against you,

The scorpion will indeed not stand up under you!

Incantation Against Sorcerers (lines 8-13)

In like manner, may the tormenters, the sorcerers^d not give ear^e ^d

^b Cf. Prov

30:19

^c Deut 8:15;

Ezek 2:6

^d Deut 1:45;

Ps 135:17

^e Ps 1:1;

55:4; 119:1-

10; Prov

11:18; 12:5;

6; 19:28;

Job 10:3; 21:16; 22:18

To the word of the evil man,^e

To the word of any man:⁸

When it sounds forth⁹ in their mouth, on their lips,

May the sorcerers, the tormenters, then¹⁰ pour it to
the earth.

Dedication to Urtenu (lines 14-15)

For Urtenu,¹¹ for his body, for his members.¹² text 1.94).

⁵ The verb used for the movement of the serpent is the common ^cly, "to ascend, go/come up, attack," while the scorpion is described by a verb previously unattested in Ug. (root qnn), perhaps best explained as germinate and compared with Arabic qanna, one meaning of which is "to stand on top of something," for the latter meaning is reminiscent of the stance taken by a scorpion when threatened.

⁶ The two words used in this text to designate the enemies of ²Urtenu are dbbm and kšpm. Both occur in RIH 78/20 (text 1.96), where they also designate the adversaries of the person in need of the incantation (Pardee 1993a; forthcoming). The first is derived from a root meaning basically "to speak," secondarily "to attack verbally," while the second is cognate with Akk. kaššāpu, "sorcerer."

⁷ Because the verbal form ^tudn is followed by hwt, "word," it appears best to analyze it as denominative from ²udn, "ear," meaning "give ear to, listen to" (cf. Heb. he'zōn).

⁸ The terms designating the enemies of Urtenu who hire the sorcerers are ršc, "the evil man" (cf. Heb. rāšāc) and bn nšm, previously unattested in Ug., apparently similar in formation to Heb. ben 'ādām/²īš and to Aram. bar 'nōš, "son of man." Nšm in Ug. is masculine, not feminine as in Heb.

⁹ The root ghr is previously unattested in Ug. In Syriac it denotes weakness, especially of the eyes, while in Arabic, it denotes strength, especially of the voice and of the sun's rays. Because of the context of speaking here, the semantic field of the Ug. verb seems to be closer to that of Arabic.

¹⁰ kmm is here taken as correlative with km, "in like manner," in line 8. It may also be analyzed, in proximity with the verb špk, "to pour," as consisting of the preposition k + a rare form of the word myl/mym, "water."

¹¹ See the introduction to this text.

¹² "Body" and "members" represent another pair of words that occur also in RIH 78/20, gb and tmnt, designating the trunk and the extremities, i.e., the entirety of the body. In the text from Ras Ibn Hani, they also designate the body of the person in whose favor the incantation is made (there nameless), but in the context of that person potentially committing evil deeds against his own body, probably of a sexual nature (Pardee 1993a; forthcoming). Here the terms designate what Urtenu wants to be protected from serpent bite.

REFERENCES

Arnaud 1982; Bordreuil and Pardee 1996; Lipiński 1983; Pardee 1978b; 1993a; forthcoming.

THE LONDON MEDICAL PAPYRUS (1.101)

Richard C. Steiner

The London Medical Papyrus, usually dated to the late 18th dynasty (fourteenth century BCE), contains a number of short Semitic magical texts transcribed into hieratic syllabic script (Wreszinski 1912:150-152). Like magical texts of later periods, they are written in a Mischsprache, reflecting their transmission from one group to another. As befits a period when Canaanite vassals wrote to their Egyptian suzerain in Akkadian colored by their own dialects, we appear to be dealing with a mixture of Northwest Semitic dialects (Canaanite and Aramaic), with Egyptian phrases (rendered below in bold letters) and a few Akkadian terms thrown in for good measure. The determinatives used by the scribe show that he understood the texts and provide invaluable guidance to the decipherer. It appears that in these texts, Egyptian k renders Semitic k, and Egyptian s renders Semitic š and s (as well as ś and t), against the norm for this period. The notes given below are meant to supplement those of Steiner (1992);¹ they are fullest for those phrases which were not yet deciphered in that article.

(Number 27) [Another] incantation against ḥ-m-k-tu-sickness in the language of those who dwell beyond the desert edge (= foreigners):

[Hea]l(er), hidden one (= Amun), honor your spirit ...

... spittle of our lord,² spittle ...

... spittle of our father.³ Ishtar, mother⁴ ...

¹ That article was written under the guidance of two outstanding Egyptologists: S. G. J. Quirke and R. K. Ritner.

² So Helck (1971:528). For the use of divine spittle as a remedy, see Ritner (1993:78-82).

³ Bu-n = bānā < ²*abānā* "our father" by aphoresis. Cf. bā < ²*abbā* "father" in Targum Onkelos and the Galilean Aram. name Bān, derived from the word for "our father" (Dalman 1905:97). No. 28 has the full form, ²-bu-[n].

⁴ So, approximately, Helck (1971:528). According to one interpretation of Amarna letter 23, Ishtar was a goddess of healing for the Egyptians

(Number 28) ... ʿE]shmun,⁵ [our] father Ishtar and ... (Number 29) ... physician healing (Number 30) An incantation against the fnt-snake/-worm: "L]leave us," I say, "l<ea>ve us." (Twice.) We have said our incantation.	(Number 31) It is not so-and-so but I, the daughter of Spr.tw-n.s,⁶ the daughter of my lord,⁷ the governess.⁸ (Number 33) An incantation against s-mu-n-sickness.⁹ And [through] the vomiting up of the drunken demon,¹⁰ let h-m-k-tu¹¹ go out, (O) my healer, great one, mother.¹²
---	---

(Helck 1971:459), but this interpretation has been disputed by Moran (1992:62).

⁵ So Bossert (1946:114), noting that the Phoenician god Eshmun is equated with Asklepios, the Greek god of healing, in a trilingual inscription from Sardinia commemorating the healing of a certain Kleon.

⁶ A scorpion goddess, the wife of Horus and daughter of Re. A daughter of this goddess would be a scorpion, for which the Eg. words (wh^c.t, ḡ^r.t) are feminine. The patient proclaims, "It is not so-and-so but I, the daughter of Spr.tw-n.s," by which he/she means that he/she is no longer so-and-so but rather a scorpion. The declaration is designed to establish kinship with the scorpion whose venom is attacking him/her. I am indebted to R. K. Ritner for this entire interpretation and to S. G. J. Quirke for correcting Helck's reading of this spell.

⁷ This Semitic phrase describes Spr.tw-n.s as the daughter of Re (personal communication from R. K. Ritner).

⁸ This epithet of Spr.tw-n.s seems to be the feminine of rābiṣu "governor," an Akk. word common in the Amarna letters, which can be used of officials in the world of the demons.

⁹ For this disease, see Massart (1954:50-52). For the Mesopotamian samana/sāmānu disease, which Massart believes may be identical, see now Kinnier Wilson (1994). I am indebted to R. D. Biggs for this reference.

¹⁰ W^h.t-ḡi st s-bu⁻² = wa-ḡba¹-ḡḡ² šēdi sabū³i. The word for "vomiting" is followed, appropriately, by the dirt-sickness determinative. For the widespread use of beer (Akk. šibu) as an emetic, see Ritner (1993:81). The pathogenic demon is intoxicated and then regurgitated.

¹¹ The word h-m-k-tu, written with the disease determinative in the introduction to no. 27, is written here with the seated-person determinative, suggesting that the disease is personified as a demon. In Steiner (1992:198), I compared it with the two strangling goddesses (ʿiltm hnkṯm) of Ug. and the strangling-demon (hnt) of the first Arslan Tash incantation. I subsequently learned from Hoch (1994:227-228) that Ebbell (1924:149) had equated it with Arabic ḥumḍq "smallpox." Ritner informs me that "papular eruptions" indicative of smallpox have been found in the mummy of Ramses V (Smith and Dawson 1924:105-106; Harris and Weeks 1973:166). Ebbell's theory is phonetically simpler than mine, but is based on far later sources.

¹² The Aram. ending of ʿ-m⁻² = ʿimma² "(the) mother," in a text which is otherwise Canaanite, and its position following an Eg. phrase at the end mark it as a later addition. This is further evidence for the theory that these texts are Phoen. spells which were borrowed and adapted by Arameans (Steiner 1992:199-200).

REFERENCES

Bossert 1946:114; von Deines, Grapow, and Westendorf 1958:254-259; Ebbell 1924:149; Helck 1971:528-529; Massart 1954:50-52; Steiner 1992; Wreszinski 1912.

This page intentionally left blank

B. ROYAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. EPIC

THE KIRTA EPIC (1.102)

Dennis Pardee

The Kirta story was recorded on three tablets that were discovered during the second and third campaigns at Ras Shamra (1930-1931). Lacunae prevent a complete understanding of the story, which must have been longer, recorded on tablets never discovered. On the other hand, the high degree of poetic narrative repetition permit the comparatively certain restoration of some important lacunae. The story turns around the difficulties encountered by Kirta, king of a city designated only as Bêtu-Hubur, in obtaining an heir to his throne and in maintaining his hold on life after the birth of the son. The absence of reference to Ugarit may indicate that the story had its origin elsewhere, though that origin is uncertain, both in time and in place. The reference to Tyre and Sidon indicates an origin not far from Phoenicia and the mention of horses indicates a version dating after the introduction of the horse into the area (early second millennium). The story may have served a didactic role at Ugarit, teaching proper relationships between kings and deities, between people and king, and between royal offspring and their parents.

CTA 14¹

Classification of Tablet (i 1)

[Belonging to² (the)] Kirta³ (text).

...

The Loss of Kirta's Brothers and Wives (i 7-25)

The house of the king perished,^a who had seven brothers,

eight siblings.^{4 b}

Kirta—(his) family was crushed,^c

Kirta—(his) home was destroyed.

His rightful wife he never obtained,⁵ even his legitimate spouse.^{6 d}

A(nother) woman he married and she disappeared,

even the kinswoman^e who had become his.⁷

A third spouse⁸ died in good health,^f

a fourth in illness;⁹

a 2 Kgs 9:8

b Judg 8:19;
Ps 69:9

c Mal 1:4

d Prov 18:22

e Lev 18:6,
etc.

f Job 21:23

g Job 5:7

h Joel 2:8

i 1 Sam 18:9

j Job 33:15

A fifth Rašap⁸ gathered in, a sixth the lad(s) of Yammu,¹⁰

the seventh of them fell by the sword.^h

Kirta sawⁱ his family,

he saw his family crushed,

his dwelling utterly destroyed.

Completely did the family perish,

in their entirety the heirs.¹¹

Kirta Mourns, Sleeps, Has a Dream (i 26 - iii 153)

He entered his room, he wept

as he spoke (his) grief, he shed tears.

His tears poured forth like shekel(-weights) to the earth,

like five(-shekel-weights) to the bed.

As he wept, he fell asleep,

as he shed tears, he slumbered.^j

¹ See also KTU 1.14.

² The archival classification is indicated by the preposition l, also known from tablets belonging to the Ba^clu (see notes 4 and 241 to text 1.86) and ²Aqhatu cycles; not to be confused with the lamed auctoris used in the (secondary) headings of several biblical psalms.

³ Several other vocalizations of the name are possible, e.g., Karrate, Kuriti, Kurti, Karta. Since there is no evidence of Ug. having a vowel corresponding to Heb. seghol, the traditional vocalization "Keret" is the least likely.

⁴ Lit., "sons of a mother" (bn 'um).

⁵ The meaning of ypq (from the hollow root pq), is established by the omen apodosis mlkn l ypq šph, "the king will not obtain offspring" (RS 24.247+ :13; text 1.90).

⁶ The meaning of mrht is established by usages of the verb mrh, "to marry," D-stem "to marry off," in Ug., by terḥatu, "bride-price," in Akk., and by mrh, a priestly title, "spouse," in Punic.

⁷ l'ar 'um, probably his first cousin on his mother's side, less desirable than the first cousin on the father's side, the first projected bride.

⁸ mlt (and similar forms for the numbers "four" through "seven") are D-stem passive participles ("she who is made three/third," etc.), formed in imitation of mrht, line 13, "she who is married off," i.e., "she who was the third (to be espoused to Kirta)." Lines 12-21 thus refer to seven wives that Kirta married or should have married, none of whom bore him a son.

⁹ See: Held 1968.

¹⁰ Rašap is the lord of the underworld, Yammu the sea-god. The reference to the "lad(s) of Yammu" is obscure; perhaps a metaphor for waves and hence a reference to death by drowning? The word glm is used below as an epithet of Kirta with respect to ²Ilu (n^cmn glm 'il, "the goodly lad of ²Ilu") and as an epithet of Kirta's son Yašsubu (see below, note 47). The feminine form glmt is used of Kirta's nubile bride, whereas pšt, "girl," is used to designate his female daughters (see below, note 51).

¹¹ It is uncertain whether yrš refers to Kirta's brothers mentioned above, to children who died at birth, or is simply the abstract notion, used in parallel with šph, "family, offspring" (from the same root as mišpāhah in Heb.), referring to the children the wives should have born him. The word šph reappears again only at the very end of Kirta's dream to designate his offspring (lines 152, 298). In CTA 16 it is used as a title of Kirta himself, identifying him as šph ḥpn w qdš, "offspring of the Gracious and Holy One." Judging from the usage here and in lines 152,

Sleep overcame him and he lay down, slumber and he curled up. ¹²	k Ps 68:14	Climb to the summit of the tower,
In a dream ² Ilu descended, in a vision, the father of mankind.	l Job 28:1	yes, climb to the summit of the tower, ¹⁶ mount the top ¹⁷ of the wall.
He came near, asking Kirta: Who is Kirta that he should weep? should shed tears, the goodly lad of ² Ilu?	m Deut 15:17; Job 40:28	Raise your hands heavenward, sacrifice to the Bull, your father ² Ilu.
Would he request the kingship of the Bull, ¹³ his father, or dominion like (that of) the father of mankind?	n Ps 86:16	Bring down Ba ^c lu with your sacrifice, the Son of Dagan ¹⁸ with your game.
Kirta Claims No Desire for Wealth, Preferring Children (i 52 - ii 58) ¹⁴	o Gen 4:1	Preparation for the Campaign (ii 79-84)
[What need have I of silver and of yellow gold] ^k along with its place; ^l	p 2 Sam 6:17	Then Kirta must descend from the rooftops, ^r must prepare food for the city, grain for Bêtu-Hubur. ¹⁹
Of a perpetual [servant], ^m of three [horses], of a chariot in a courtyard, of the son of a handmaid? ⁿ	q 1 Sam 16:2	He must bake bread for the fifth (month), fine foods for the sixth month. ²⁰
[Permit] me to acquire sons, ^o [Permit] me to multiply [children].	r 2 Kgs 23:12; Jer 19:13; Zeph 1:5	Description of the Army (ii 85-103)
² Ilu's Reply: How to Obtain the Child-Bearing Wife (ii 59 - iii 153)	s Ps 73:4	A throng will be provisioned and march forth, a mighty throng will be provisioned, a throng will indeed go forth.
The Bull, his father ² Ilu, [answered] [(with) goodly (words)] ¹⁵ as Kirta wept, as the goodly lad of ² Ilu shed tears:	t Exod 21:2; 1 Sam 17:25	Your army will be a numerous host, ^s three hundred myriads, ²¹ soldiers' without number, archers without count. ²²
Sacrifice (ii 62-79)	u Jer 4:13; Zech 10:1; Job 28:26; 38:25	They will go by thousands like storm-clouds, ^t by myriads like rain.
Wash and rouge yourself, wash your hands to the elbow, your fingers to the shoulder.	v Deut 20:7; 24:5	After two, two go, after three, all of them.
Enter [the shade of (your) tent], ^p take a lamb [in your hand], ^q a sacrificial lamb [in] (your) right hand, a kid in both hands, all your best food.	w Judg 6:5; 7:12; Nah 3:15-17	Even Those Normally Excused from Military Service Will Go (ii 96-103)
Take a fowl, a sacrificial bird, pour wine into a silver cup honey into a golden bowl.		The only son must shut up his house, the widow hire someone (to go). The invalid must take up his bed, the blind man grope his way along. ²³ The newly-wed must go forth, ^r entrusting his wife to someone else, his beloved to someone unrelated.
		The Campaign (ii 103 - iii 123)
		Like grasshoppers you will invade the field, like locusts the edges of the steppe-land. ^w

298, and from the formula l ypq šph in the birth-omen texts (e.g., RS 24.247+ : 13 [text 1.90]), one can surmise that the word šph denoted offspring undifferentiated as to sex. For the latest of many interpretations of i 15-20, see Sasson 1988.

¹² See: Greenfield 1969:61-62.

¹³ ²Ilu is referred to below as tr 2abk/h 2il, "the Bull, your/his father ²Ilu."

¹⁴ The text containing the end of ²Ilu's speech and the beginning of Kirta's reply is lost in the lacuna of about eight lines at the end of column i. The complete list that follows is restorable because it serves as a Leitmotif in this story, being offered also below by the father of the bride Kirta seeks, in place of the girl.

¹⁵ {d[mqlt]} hypothetically restored.

¹⁶ This repetition may be a scribal error.

¹⁷ Lit., "mount the shoulders of the wall."

¹⁸ bn dgn, "Son of Dagan," is a standard title of Ba^clu (see note 32 to the Ba^clu text 1.86).

¹⁹ The origin of this name is uncertain: perhaps an unknown place name or a circumstantial title for Kirta's city, "the house of union."

²⁰ Lit., "for the fifth ... for the sixth of months." Though the chronological indications in the following text do not indicate a campaign lasting six months, it appears unlikely that the reference here is to the fifth and sixth months of the year, for these would fall in winter (roughly January 21 to March 21). One may surmise that the formulation is hyperbolic for a long campaign.

²¹ The significance of "three" here and in line 95 ("after three, all of them") is unclear, though in the second case, the term after "two" is expected to be "three" in standard parallelistic usage. Perhaps in both instances "three" is meant to underscore the vast number by virtue of its status as the first of the plural numbers (Ug. has a productive dual for expression of two entities, so plural expression begins with "three").

²² The terms hpt and tnn denote two categories of military forces in Ug. (for bibliography, see Pardee 1987:385, 387, 454). Both these types, as well as the hrd-troops, are mentioned in one of the birth-omen texts (RS 24.247+ [text 1.90]).

²³ The meaning of mzl ymzl is disputed. Some see it as parallel to the second line of the preceding verse, i.e., the blind man does not go with the army (e.g., he puts out a sum of money, understood as meant to hire an able-bodied person to go in his place). Others see it as parallel to the preceding verse segment, i.e., the blind man, like the invalid, does go (as translated here above).

Go a day, a second,
 a third, a fourth day,
 a fifth, a sixth day.
 Then at sunset on the seventh (day)
 you will arrive at ²Udmu²⁴ the great (city),
 at ²Udmu the well-watered (city).
 Occupy the cities,
 invest the towns.²⁵
 The women gathering wood²⁶ will flee from the fields,
 from the threshing-floors the women gathering
 straw;
 The women drawing water will flee from the spring,
 from the fountain the women filling (jugs).^x
 Then for a day, a second,
 a third, a fourth day,
 a fifth, a sixth day,
 Do not shoot your arrows at the city,
 your sling-stones^y at the towers.²⁷
 Then at sunset on the seventh (day of the siege) Pabil the king (of that city) will not (be able to) sleep
 For the sound of the roaring of his bulls, for the noise of the braying of his donkeys,^z for the lowing of his plough-oxen,^{aa}
 the howling of his hunting dogs.

Reaction of the King of ²Udmu to the Siege (iii 123-136)

He will send messengers to you,
 to Kirta at his camp:
 Message of Pabil the king:
 Take silver
 and yellow gold
 along with its place;
 A perpetual servant,
 three horses,
 a chariot in a courtyard,
 the son of a handmaid.
 Take, Kirta, many gifts of peace,²⁸
 leave, king, my house,
 go away, Kirta, from my court.
 Do not besiege ²Udmu the great (city),
²Udmu the well-watered (city).
²Udmu was given of ²Ilu,
 (it is) a present of the father of mankind.²⁹

x Gen 24:11;
 1 Sam 9:11

y Num 35:17

z Job 6:5

aa Job 6:5;
 1 Sam 6:12

bb Deut 32:8;
 Eccl 3:13

cc Cant 7:5

dd Ps 11:4

Kirta's Reply (iii 136-53)

Send the messengers back to him (with the message):
 What need have I of silver
 and of yellow gold
 along with its place;
 Of a perpetual servant,
 of three horses,
 of a chariot in a courtyard,
 of the son of a handmaid?
 Rather, you must give what my house lacks:
 give me maid Hurraya,
 the best girl of your firstborn offspring;
 Whose goodness is like that of ^cAnatu,
 whose beauty is like that of ²Atiratu;
 The pupils (of whose eyes) are of pure lapislazuli,^{cc}
 whose eyes^{dd} are like alabaster bowls, who is girded with ruby;
 That I might repose in the gaze of her eyes,
 whom ²Ilu gave in my dream,
 even in my vision, the father of mankind;
 That she might bear a scion for Kirta,
 a lad for the servant of ²Ilu.

Kirta Awakes, Carries Out the Instructions (iii 154
 - end of tablet)²⁹

Kirta looked about and it had been a dream,
 the servant of ²Ilu, and it had been a vision.
 He washed and rouged himself,
 washed his hands to the elbow,
 his fingers to the shoulder.
 He entered the shade of (his) tent, took a sacrificial lamb in his hand,
 a kid in both hands,
 all his best food.
 He took a fowl, a sacrificial bird, poured wine into a silver cup
 honey into a golden bowl.
 He climbed to the summit of the tower,
 mounted the top of the wall.
 He raised his hands heavenward, sacrificed to the Bull, his father ²Ilu.
 He brought down [Ba^clu] with his sacrifice,
 the Son of Dagan with his game.
 Kirta descended from the [rooftops],
 he prepared food for the city,

²⁴ As with Kirta's city, so the object of his campaign is unidentified, though the root letters are the same as those of Edom.

²⁵ The forms and meanings of the verbs are disputed. It appears possible to interpret this passage, in comparison with the passage below where Pabil is not attacked, as referring to the occupation of the towns surrounding Pabil's capital.

²⁶ The word for "female gatherers of wood" is problematic in each occurrence, here written hḫb (corrected to hḫt in KTU) in col. iv, line 214, hḫb, the verbal form being each time feminine (s^ct).

²⁷ The passage is interpreted as prescribing a passive siege. The negative particle ²al sometimes appears in contexts where a positive meaning is expected, perhaps as a negative interrogative, i.e., a rhetorical question. If that were the case here, the reference would be to an active siege. In either case, those persons who normally provide provisions for the animals kept in the city (to which have been plausibly added those of persons fleeing the surrounding towns) are kept from their duties and the animals suffer (see the following lines).

²⁸ The text has here šlmm šlmm, a plural noun repeated. Without vocalization, it is impossible to know whether the form of this noun is precisely the same as the sacrificial term šlmm, "offering of well-being" (cf. Heb. š'lamim), or only etymologically related to it.

²⁹ There is much narrative repetition in this account, but with variants and additions.

grain for Bêtu-Ḥubur.
 He baked bread for the fifth (month),
 [fine foods] for the sixth month.
 A throng was provisioned and [marched forth],
 [a mighty] throng was provisioned,
 [a throng did] indeed [go forth].
 His army was a [numerous] host,
 three hundred myriads.
 They went by thousands like storm-clouds,
 by myriads like rain.
 After two, two went,
 after three, all of them.
 The only (son)³⁰ shut up his house,
 the widow hired someone (to go).
 The invalid took up his bed,
 the blind man groped his way along.
 The newly-wed conducted (his bride),³¹ entrusted his wife to someone else,
 his beloved to someone unrelated.
 Like grasshoppers they invaded the field,
 like locusts the edges of the steppe-land.
Kirta Takes a Vow (iv 194-206)³²
 They went a day, a second;
 at sundown on the third (day)
 He arrived at the sanctuary of ²Atiratu of Tyre, at (the sanctuary of) the goddess of Sidon.³³
 There noble³⁴ Kirta took a vow:
 The gift of ²Atiratu of Tyre,³⁴
 the goddess of Sidon (is this):
 If I (successfully) take Ḥurra to my house,³⁵
 Bring the girl³⁶ into my courts,
 Double her (weight) in silver I will give,
 triple her (weight) in gold.
 (Then) he went a day, a second,
 a third, a fourth day.
 At sundown on the fourth (day)
 he arrived at ²Udmu the great (city),
 at ²Udmu the well-watered (city).
 He occupied the cities,
 invested the towns.
 The women³⁵ gathering wood fled from the fields,

ee Isa 32:5;
 Job 34:19

ff Gen 24:67;
 Ruth 4:11, 13

gg Isa 7:14

from the threshing-floors the women gathering
 straw;
 The women drawing water fled from the spring,
 from the fountain the women filling (jugs).
 Then for a day, a second,
 a third, a fourth day,
 a fifth, a sixth day,
 <They did not shoot their arrows at the city, their sling-stones at the towers.>³⁶
 Then at sundown on the seventh (day)
 Pabil the king (of that city could) not sleep
 [For the sound of] the roaring of his bulls,
 for the noise of the braying of his donkeys,
 [for the lowing] of his plough-oxen,
 the howling of his hunting dogs.
 Thereupon Pabil [the king]
 cried aloud to his wife:
 Hear ...³⁷
 Now [head] off towards [Kirta in (his)] camp
 and say to noble [Kirta]:
 Message [of Pabil the king]:
 Take [silver
 and yellow] gold
 [along with its place];
 A [perpetual] servant,
 [three] horses,
 [a chariot] in [a courtyard],
 the son of a handmaid.
 Take, Kirta, many gifts of peace,
 do not besiege ²Udmu the great (city),
²Udmu the well-watered (city).
²Udmu was given of ²Ilū,
 (it is) a present of the father of mankind.
 Leave, king, my house,
 go away, Kirta,] from my courts.³⁸
 ...³⁹
 [Then the messengers left without hesitation,
 They headed off
 Towards Kirta in his camp].
 They raised [their voices and said aloud]:

³⁰ ²ahd, "one," here in place of yhd, "the solitary one," col. ii, line 96.

³¹ ybl, "to bear, to carry," here in place of y²i, "he must go forth," col. ii, line 100.

³² This section breaks quite obviously into the sequence of seven days that was unbroken in the section of instructions (col. iii, lines 106-108). As there is no record in the text as preserved of Kirta's having carried out his vow, many believe that the woes he suffered after the birth of his children arose from his failure to carry out this duty.

³³ The form šdynm, which I take as the city name, is apparently archaic, preserving the original third radical. The form may be singular with enclitic -m, dual (šdyānāma), or plural (šdyānūma). In favor of the interpretation as a dual or a plural, note the references to different quarters of the city in the Eshmunazar inscription (KAI 14).

³⁴ The meaning of the phrase ²i ²itt is in doubt. Two principal explanations have been given: (1) a form of the particle of existence ²it, meaning "by the life of" or "as she lives;" (2) a noun meaning "gift" (from the hollow root ²y) and referring to the silver and gold promised in lines 205-206.

³⁵ The form of the word meaning "gather" is not marked for feminine gender, though the verb "to flee" is (see above, note 26).

³⁶ This bicolon is absent here, apparently a true omission rather than a simple variant, for the preceding section is marked off by a particle (dm ym w ln), making it difficult to see the sequence of days as a description of the absence of the women workers, while the following section is not only introduced by a particle (mk špšm b šb^c), making a syntactic link between the two difficult, but the timing (špšm) and the logic of the story seems to go against the link (i.e., Pabil is not at an end of his resources from the first day on).

³⁷ Col. v lines 230-243 are damaged and not repetitive of a previous section and thus cannot be restored. Because the next restorable section contains Pabil's words to his messengers, there has clearly been a change of address somewhere in the unrestorable portion.

³⁸ Space considerations seem to indicate the presence of this bicolon here rather than after "gifts of peace" as above, lines 131-133.

³⁹ The five-line lacuna at the beginning of col. vi is only partially filled by the restoration of the initial messenger formulae.

Message [of Pabil the king]:
 Take [silver
 and yellow] gold
 [along with its place];
 A [perpetual] servant,
 [three] horses,
 [a chariot] in a courtyard,
 [the son of a handmaid.]
 Take, Kirta, many [gifts of peace],
 do not besiege ²Udmu the great (city),
 ²Udmu the well-watered (city).
²Udmu was given of ²Ilu,
 (it is) a present of the father of mankind.
 Go away, king, from my house,
 Leave, Kirta, my courts.
 Noble Kirta replied:
 What need have I of silver
 and of yellow [gold]
 along with its place;
 Of a perpetual servant,
 of three horses,
 of a chariot in a courtyard,
 of the son of a handmaid?
 Rather, you must give what my house lacks,
 give me maid Hurraya,
 the best girl of your firstborn offspring;
 Whose goodness is like that of ^cAnatu,
 whose beauty is like that of ²Aṭiratu;
 The pupils (of whose eyes) are of pure lapis-lazuli,
 whose eyes are like alabaster bowls;
 Whom ²Ilu gave in my dream,
 even in my vision, the father of mankind;
 That she might bear a scion for Kirta,
 a lad for the servant of ²Ilu.
 The messengers left without hesitation,
 They headed off
 Towards Pabil the king.
 They raised their voices and said aloud:
 Message of noble Kirta, word of the goodly [lad of ²Ilu...]

hh Ps 82:1

CTA 15⁴⁰

Praise of Hurraya (i 1-7)

With her hand [she raises the hungry one,] with her hand she raises the thirsty one.

[...]⁴¹

to Kirta in his camp,
 (As) the cow lows for her calf,
 the young nurslings⁴² for their mother,
 so the ²Udmites will lament for her.⁴³

Kirta's Reply (i 8 - ii broken section)⁴⁴

Noble Kirta replied:

...

Banquet for the Gods (ii 1-11)⁴⁵

...

Noble Kirta prepared [a banquet] in his house

...

[Thereafter] the assembly of the gods⁴⁶ arrived.Blessing of ²Ilu (ii 12 - iii 19)Mighty Ba^clu spoke:

Must you not depart, Gracious One, kindly [god],⁴⁶
 must you not (go to) bless noble [Kirta], must you not pronounce a benediction upon the goodly [lad] of ²Ilu?

[²Ilu] took a cup [in] (his) hand,
 a goblet in [(his) right hand].

He did indeed bless [his servant,]

²Ilu blessed [noble] Kirta, [pronounced a benediction] upon the goodly lad of ²Ilu:

The woman you take, Kirta,
 the woman you take into your house,
 the girl who enters your courts,
 She shall bear you seven sons,
 even eight shall she produce for you.

She shall bear the lad Yaṣṣubu,⁴⁷ who will drink the milk of ²Aṭiratu, shall suckle at the breasts of Girl [^cAnatu].
 Suckling...

⁴⁰ This tablet is less well preserved than the preceding one; some forty lines are missing from the beginning of col. i. Judging from col. i, line 8, indicating a response from Kirta, the first part of the missing text contained portions of three speeches: (1) Kirta's refusal of wealth as recounted by the messengers to Pabil, (2) Pabil's entrusting of a new message for Kirta to his messengers, and (3) in the preserved portion of the column, the end of this message as recounted by the messengers to Kirta.

⁴¹ Partially broken and uncertain; from context the passage should mean: "If Hurraya goes to Kirta, the following will be the situation."

⁴² The meaning of bn ḥpḥ is uncertain; translated from context.

⁴³ mḥn may be derived from the hollow root mḥ, "to lament," or from mḥy, "to lead." In the former case, the structure is comparative and similar to CTA 6 ii 6-9 (if that text be interpreted like this one). In the second case, the final clause is temporal: "... when the ²Udmites lead her off."

⁴⁴ The formula of reply is preserved as the last line of column i. After the lacuna, Kirta is already offering what is apparently a feast for the gods in his house. One must assume rather typical narrative brevity, therefore, i.e., that Kirta has made his speech, obtained Hurraya, and returned home in the some twenty lines missing at the beginning of column ii.

⁴⁵ This is a badly damaged section, containing several divine names and a term for the gods viewed as a group, i.e., ḥt, "assembly." The crucial words for what it is that Kirta prepared for the gods having disappeared from lines 8-10, the assumption of a type of banquet or feast is based on the fact that in the following section drinking vessels are mentioned.

⁴⁶ On these titles of ²Ilu, see note 46 to the Ba^clu text (1.86).

⁴⁷ On the name Yaṣṣubu, see the bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:407. His epithet gṯm is the same as that applied to Kirta with respect to ²Ilu (see above, note 10).

...⁴⁸
 [Greatly uplifted] is Kirta,
 [amongst the Shades] of the earth,
 [in the gathering of] the assembly of Ditānu.⁴⁹
 Her time will come⁵⁰ and she will bear daughters
 for you:
 she shall bear girl [...]⁵¹
 she shall bear girl [...]
 she shall bear girl [...]
 she shall bear girl [...]
 she shall bear girl [...]
 she shall bear girl [...]
 Greatly uplifted is [Kirta],
 amongst the Shades of the earth,
 in the gathering of the assembly of Ditānu.
 The youngest of these girls, I shall treat as the firstborn.⁵²
 The gods bless, then depart,
 the gods depart to their tents,
 the circle of gods to their dwellings.
Birth of Kirta's Children (iii 20-25)
 Her time came and she bore a son for him, her time came and she bore (two) sons for him.⁵²
 In seven years' time
 Kirta's sons were as they had been vowed (by ʔIlu),
 and so also were Hurraya's daughters.

ii Deut 21:16;
 Ps 89:28;
 I Sam 16:11

jj Ps 89:34

kk Jer 50:27

ll Isa 23:9

⁵³ ʔAtiratu Claims the Vow (iii 25-?)
 Then ʔAtiratu thinks of his vow,
 the goddess [...].
 She raises her voice and [cries out]:
 O Kirta [...]
 Or has repeated⁵³ the vow [...]?
 I'll annul⁵⁴ [...]⁵⁴

...
Kirta Sets a Feast (iv 1-13)⁵⁵
 Aloud to [his wife he cries out]:
 Listen, [lady Hurraya]:
 Slaughter the best [of your fatlings],
 open jars of wine;
 Invite my seventy bulls,^{kk}
 my eighty gazelles,^{56 ll}
 the bulls of Hūbur the great,
 of Hūbur [the well-watered].

...
Hurraya Obeys (iv 14 - vi)
 Lady Hurraya listened:
 She slaughtered the best of her fatlings,
 she opened jars of wine.
 She brings in to him his bulls,
 she brings in to him his gazelles,
 the bulls of Hūbur the great,
 of Hūbur the well-watered.

⁴⁸ Some fifteen lines are missing at the beginning of col. iii. Judging from col. iii, lines 7-12 where the daughters' names were set, part of this section may have been devoted to prescribing the younger sons' names.

⁴⁹ Standard formulae describing the ancestors of Kirta as well as of the Ug. dynasty (see RS 34.126, text 1.105). Ditānu, etymologically denoting a large ruminant of some kind ("bison"?), is probably the eponymous ancestor of an Amorite clan (see bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:448, to which should be added Lipiński 1978). We know from RS 24.252 (Pardee 1988a:75-118) that the Rapa'ūma (Heb. r'pā'ūm, "the shades of the dead") served as conduits for divine blessing. Kirta's high status among them is not meant, therefore, to imply that he is dead, but that he is highly regarded and blessed by them.

⁵⁰ Here and in lines 20-21, the inception of the birth process is indicated by a form of the root qrb, "to be near, to approach," of which the precise explanation is uncertain, referring either to conception itself or to the end of gestation, as in our translation. The feminine form of the verb indicates that the wife is the subject, and the translation with "her time" is purely for ease of expression.

⁵¹ It appears that lines 7-12 contained an enumeration of the names to be given to the daughters, though these may have been descriptive, rather than representing genuine proper names (the first and last signs of the first name are preserved, in both cases t, perhaps an adjectival form). Though six girls are named here, one of Kirta's daughters is below called Titmanatu ("Octavia" < tmn "eight"). The word for the infant female daughters here is pgr, not the same as the word gltm used above to designate Kirta's nubile bride. Pgr is the name of ʔAqhatu's sister (see text 1.103) and, in its proper Heb. form, that of one of the Heb. midwives in the Exodus story (Exod 1:15 Pū'āh). For bibliography, see Pardee 1987:440-41.

⁵² For reasons of logic, some emend "son" and "sons" to "sons" and "daughters," but the perceived importance of male offspring seems adequate explanation for the text dwelling here on the sons. The form bnm in line 21 could be either dual, referring to the second son or to twins, or plural, referring to the sum of sons born.

⁵³ The root tny does not denote active "change," as most translators have thought, for it is not cognate with the root šnh known from later WS languages, but is the verb derived from the number "two" and thus means "do twice," with various semantic developments. Kirta is not, therefore, being accused here of having altered his vow. Perhaps the sentence once contained a question regarding either his initial statement of the vow (tny can refer to a simple speech) or a later repetition of the verbal vow at a time corresponding to when he should have carried it out. The subject is uncertain as well, the form being ʔ*utn*, though it appears likely that ʔ*u* is the conjunction and tn therefore not an imperfect.

⁵⁴ It is tempting to follow most of the commentators in taking ʔ*apr* as cognate with Heb. pr, which means "annul" in the Hiphil, in spite of the weakening of the semantic link with the preceding line produced by a correct analysis of tn. The following lacuna, a total of some twelve lines, leaves unknown, however, just what the goddess may have been annulling. It is also necessary to note that the Ug. form does not correspond to the Heb. Hiphil, for the causative stem in Ug. is marked by š.

⁵⁵ Because Hurraya, in one of her speeches to the invitees, refers to Kirta's demise (col. v, lines 18-21), it appears that the divine punishment of Kirta must have been announced before that moment. It is unclear, however, where that was described in the text, whether in the text that has disappeared between columns iii and iv or in the lacuna between columns iv and v (or in both places, once as the initial announcement by the goddess, once as a repetition). In favor of the second placement, one might think that Kirta's behavior as depicted in column iv is hardly that of someone who has just been condemned by a goddess. In favor of the first, one can interpret the entirety of the banquet scene as some sort of a measure to deal with the problem of the condemnation.

⁵⁶ The two primary hypotheses for explaining the reference to bulls and gazelles are: (1) metaphors for magnates of the kingdom; (2) priestly and/or divinatory officiants who may have been wearing masks of the animals named.

The house of Kirta they enter, to the dwelling [...] to the tent of myrrh⁵⁷ they proceed. She puts forth (her) hand to the bowl,^{mm} puts the knife to the meat. Lady Hurraya announces: To eat, to drink have I invited you, [...]⁵⁸ Kirta your master. ...⁵⁹ She puts forth (her) hand to the bowl, puts [the knife to] the meat. Lady Hurraya [announces]: To eat, to drink have I invited you, ... [For] Kirta you will weep, ...⁶⁰ Kirta will go to where the sun sets, our master to where the sun rises.⁶¹ Then Yaššubu will reign over us, ...⁶² Listen [...]: Again eat and drink Lady Hurraya announces: To eat, to drink have I invited you, (to) the sacrificial feast [of Kirta] your lord. They weep over⁶³ Kirta, Like the voice of bulls is their voice. In a dream [...] Kirta ...⁶⁴ CTA 16 [Belonging to] (the) Kirta (text). ²Iluha²u Deals with the Prospect of His Father's Death (i 2-23)⁶⁵ Like a dog we grow old in⁶⁶ your house,	mm Judg 5:26; Job 28:9 mm Num 16:29; Ps 82:6-7 oo Gen 45:2 pp Ezek 17:3; 7 qq 2 Sam 7:14; Pss 2:7; 89:27-28 rr Gen 3:22; Ps 82:6-7 ss Isa 23:2; Ezek 24:17; Lam 2:10 tt Jer 8:23	like a hound in your court; Must you also, father, die like mortal men,^{mm} must your court pass to mourning,^{oo} to the control of women,⁶⁷ beloved father? Will the mountain of Ba^clu weep for you, father, Šapānu, the holy citadel, Nannaya the mighty citadel, the broad-spread^{pp} citadel? For Kirta is the son of ²Ilu,^{qq} the offspring of the Gracious and Holy One. Unto his father he entered, he wept, gnashed his teeth, raised his voice in weeping. In your life, father, we^r rejoice,⁶⁸ In your not dying do we find happiness. Like a dog we grow old in your house, like a hound in your court; Must you also, father, die like mortal men, must your court pass to mourning, to the control of women, beloved father? How can (that be when) they say: Kirta is the son of ²Ilu, the offspring of the Gracious and Holy One. Do gods die,^{rr} Does the offspring of the Gracious One not live? Kirta Replies, Requesting That Titmanatu Be Sum- moned (i 24-45) Noble Kirta replied; Do not weep, my son, do not lament^{ss} for me. Do not empty out, my son, the fountain of your eyes, the water^{ss} from your head, your tears.^{tt} Summon your sister Titmanatu,
---	--	--

⁵⁷ In spite of some damage, there is general agreement to read the signs here as {wlgmmr}, the best division of which seems to be w l gmmr, explained as an idiom for a banquet hall, where myrrh-scented oil was used copiously.

⁵⁸ Restoration is not possible here, for the parallel versions in col. v, lines 10-11, and col. vi, lines 4-5, seem to show variation in the second colon of the verse.

⁵⁹ About fifteen lines are lost from the end of col. iv and the first six partially preserved lines of col. v are too damaged to restore. It is thus uncertain whether we are dealing with multiple references to a single feast or to multiple feasts.

⁶⁰ After the order to "weep," i.e., to mourn for Kirta, there are five lines too damaged to translate. Line 13 (and col. vi, line 7) may contain a reference to "the voice of bulls" (in the second passage the expression takes the form of a comparison, for there, apparently, the family is weeping as loudly as bulls). Lines 14 and 16 may contain a reference to "the dead" (mtm), though the -m could be enclitic and mt could mean "man."

⁶¹ The interpretation of these lines has been much discussed, the essential problem lying in the word šb²i²a (root šb²). The parallel terms rb and šb²i²a have been best explained as a merismus, expressing the extent of the underworld to which Kirta must go (Garbini 1983:56). The order "west-east" reflects the progression of the sun through the underworld.

⁶² Some eight lines are too damaged to translate at the end of column v. The shift from b^ci, "master," in col. iv, line 28, and col. v, line 20, to adn, "lord," here in col. vi, line 5, may indicate that the family is being addressed here. In Ug. letters, adn is used for one's natural father, while b^ci is used with reference to someone who is socially/politically superior (the only exception to this usage of which I am aware is in PRU v 60, where both adn and b^ci are used of a political superior, perhaps implying the existence of a family relationship, whether real or fictional). See Ug. letters translated in COS 3.

⁶³ According to Caquot, Szymer, Herdner (1974:548, n. p) the tablet is in bad enough shape here to allow for the reading tbkn, "they weep," though Herdner first read tb²un (1963:71).

⁶⁴ Most of the end of col. vi is lost, for the few preserved lines are from the beginning. The bottom of the tablet having disappeared across the width of the tablet, it is impossible to calculate the exact number of missing lines, but one can estimate the loss at between forty and fifty lines. There is, therefore, no reason to be surprised that text 16 opens on what is apparently an entirely different scene.

⁶⁵ The first part of this passage contains someone's speech to ²Iluha²u (or a self-address), then ²Iluha²u repeats the gist of the speech.

⁶⁶ Or: "pass from," in the sense of "die."

⁶⁷ Mourning women.

⁶⁸ Written {ašmh}, rather than the expected {nšmh}.

⁶⁹ Correcting mš, "brain," to my, "water" (Gevirtz 1961), as is indicated by mmh in line 34.

the daughter whose ...⁷⁰ is strong,
 that she may weep, may lament for me.
 (My) boy, no need⁷¹ to tell your sister (right away),
 no need to tell your sister to mourn.
 I know that she is compassionate;
 so let's not have her pour forth her tears⁷² in the fields,
 her utterances on the heights.
 [...] the rising of the great one, the sun,
 the shining⁷³ of the great light.
 Say to your sister Titmanatu:
 Kirta has prepared a sacrificial feast,
 the king has set a banquet.
 Take your tambourine in (your) hand,
 your [...] in (your) right hand.
 Go stay on the heights⁷⁴ (where) your lord⁷⁵ (lives);
 take [silver] as your gift,
 gold for all.⁷⁶

⁷*Iluha*²*u* Complies (i 46 - ii ?)⁷⁷
 Thereupon, valiant⁷⁸ ²*Iluha*²*u*,⁷⁹
 took his spear in hand,
 his ...⁸⁰ in (his) right hand.
 He approached (the place called) TRZZ;
 when he arrived it was getting dark.
 His sister had come out to draw water;
 he planted his spear in a mound.
 Her face came out the door,
 then she saw her brother.
 Her [...] broke on the ground,
 [...] her brother, she wept.
 [Is he] sick, the king,
 [...] Kirta your lord?
 Valiant ²*Iluha*²*u* [replied]:

Amos 1:3;
Prov 30:15

[Not⁷] sick is the king,
 [...] Kirta your lord.
 [...] has prepared a sacrificial feast,
 [...] has set a banquet.
 ...

Titmanatu Learns the Truth (ii 79-?)⁸¹
 She approached her brother [and said]:
 Why are you leading me [to ...]?
 How many months has he [been sick],
 how long has Kirta been ill?
 Valiant [²*Iluha*²*u*] replied:
 Three months has he [been sick],
 Even four has Kirta been ill.⁸²
 Perhaps Kirta has already departed.
 A tomb you will ...

Titmanatu Mourns the Prospect of Losing Her Father (ii 97-111)
 She wept, gnashed her teeth, raised her voice in weeping.
 In your life, father, we rejoice,
 In your not dying do we find happiness.
 Like a dog we grow old in your house,
 like a hound in your court;
 Must you also, father, die like mortal men,
 must your court pass to weeping,
 to the control of women, beloved father?
 Do gods die,
 Does the offspring of the Gracious One not live?
 Will the mountain of Ba^clu weep for you, father,
 Šapānu, the holy citadel,
 Nannaya the mighty citadel,
 the broad-spread citadel?
 For Kirta is the son of [²*Ilu*],

⁷⁰ The meaning of hmh is unknown.

⁷¹ The verbs in this section are preceded by ²*al* or l. Because there is an emphatic l and because ²*al* appears in phrases that must be interpreted positively (whether as a separate particle or in negative rhetorical questions is uncertain), some interpret negatively, some positively. Overall it appears best to interpret the forms as orders not to inform Titmanatu of her father's illness, but to leave that news for later.

⁷² Lit., "her water."

⁷³ The form igh does not, unfortunately, provide a certain solution for the interpretation of *šb*², with which it is in parallel here (see note 61), for it could be derived either from a root ghy, "depart" (and refer to the setting of the sun) or from a root ngh, "shine" (and refer to the rising of the sun). For bibliography on *šb*², see Pardee 1987:441. Nyr rbt is, in any case, an epithet of the sun, not of the moon as some have thought, as is proven by RS 34.126:18-19 (text 1.105).

⁷⁴ If šrrt is the same word as is used in the description of Ba^clu's dwelling, the reference is to mountain recesses.

⁷⁵ The word here is ²*adn* (see above, note 62).

⁷⁶ The restoration at the end of line 44 and the interpretation of the two lines are uncertain.

⁷⁷ The beginning of col. ii is so damaged as to preclude a precise delineation of the speech(es) recorded there.

⁷⁸ The word gẓr is difficult to translate into English (for bibliography see Pardee 1987:457-458). In this text it is used as an epithet of ²*Iluha*²*u*, but not of Kirta, and some have for that reason translated "boy, lad." In the ²*Aqhatu* text (1.103), however, it is used for both father (Dānī²ilu) and son (²*Aqhatu*). In the Ba^clu cycle the god Môtu is called a gẓr. In administrative texts it appears to designate a son still living with his parents (lpgt, "girl"). Finally, it appears in one of the Ba^clu texts (CTA 3 ii 22) in parallel with other terms designating military personnel. The etymology usually cited, Arabic gẓr, denotes abundance and generosity. From the Ug. usages, the term appears to designate a young man in full possession of his forces, able to do battle and to father sons. Because of the usage to designate both father and son, an English term denoting "youth" appears improper, while "hero" is too general and stilted. To translate the word gẓr when used as an appositional title, the most frequent usage in these texts, the English adjective "valiant" seems to sum up reasonably well the connotations of the Ug. noun. When gẓr appears alone, I have preferred "warrior."

⁷⁹ From this text, ²*Iluha*²*u* is the son of Kirta and the brother of Titmanatu. Since this story makes a point of all Kirta's children being from a single wife, one must assume that ²*Iluha*²*u* was full brother to Yašsubu, though this is not stated in the text as preserved. The form and "meaning" of the name remain obscure (the vocalization is a guess).

⁸⁰ The word at the beginning of line 48 is usually restored as {g|}r{g|h}, though that word is elsewhere unattested in Ug. and of uncertain etymology (cf. Sanmartín 1980:336).

⁸¹ After the word qbr in line 87, the text is broken and obscure for nine lines.

the offspring of the Gracious [and Holy] One.

Titmanatu Visits Her Father (ii 112-?)⁸²

Weeping she entered [unto her father],

She entered the ...

The Earth Does Not Produce (iii)⁸³

Oil was poured [from a bowl].

(Someone) saw⁸⁴ the quaking of earth and heaven, did the rounds to the extremities of the earth,^{iv}
of (its) well-watered portions.

A spring for the earth is the rain of Ba^clu, even for the field(s) the rain^{vv} of the High One;^{xx}

Good^{yy} for the earth is the rain of Ba^clu, even for the field(s) the rain of the High One.

Good is it for the wheat in the garden(s), in the tilled land (for) the emmer,
upon the mounds (for) the ...⁸⁵

The ploughmen lifted (their) heads,
on high those who work the grain,

(For) the bread was depleted [from] their bins,
the wine was depleted from their skins,
the oil was depleted from [their jars].⁸⁶ ^{zz}

...

The Divine Machinery is Set in Motion for Healing Kirta (iv)⁸⁷

...

Like ²Ilu are you wise,

like the Bull, the Gracious One.

Summon the herald of ²Ilu, ²Ilšu,

²Ilšu, <the herald of the house of Ba^clu>,⁸⁸
and his wife, the herald of the goddesses.

...

He summoned the herald of ²Ilu, ²Ilšu,

²Ilšu, the herald of the house of Ba^clu,

and his wife, the herald of the goddesses.

vv Ps 48:11;
65:6

www Ps 147:8;
Job 5:10

xx 1 Sam 2:10;
Ps 7:11;
68:35

yy Gen 49:15

zz 1 Kgs
17:14;
Hab 3:17;
Ps 104:15

aaa Exod
15:11

bbb 1 Kgs
18:29;
Job 5:1

ccc Job 33:6

The Gracious One, the kindly god, responds:

Listen, herald of ²Ilu, ²Ilšu,

²Ilšu, herald of the house of Ba^clu,

and your wife, the herald of the goddesses:

Climb to the summit of the edifice,
to the high terrace...

²Ilu Seeks a Healer Among the Gods (v 10-22)

...

The Gracious One, [the kindly god, asked]:

[Who] among the gods^{aaa} [will expel the sickness],
banish the illness?

[None of the gods] responded to him.^{bbb}

A [second time, a third time] he spoke:⁹⁰

Who among [the gods will expel] the sickness,
banish [the illness]?

None of the gods responded [to him].

[A fourth], a fifth time he spoke.

[Who among the gods] will expel the sickness,
banish [the illness]?

None of the gods responded [to him].

A sixth, a seventh time he spoke:

[Who] among the gods will expel the sickness,
banish the illness?

None of the gods responded to him.

Finding No Takers, ²Ilu Fashions a Healer (v 23-?)

So the Gracious One, the kindly god, said in response:

Go sit down, my sons, on your seats,
on your princely thrones.

I will personally fashion and establish,
will establish a female expeller of the sickness,
a female banisher of the illness.

He filled [his hand] with clay,

[his right hand] with the very best clay.

He pinched off ...⁹¹ ccc

⁸² The state of the tablet prevents us from knowing whether Titmanatu's trip home took place earlier or is dispensed with in the narrative. Col. iii contains a very different set of motifs and, unless they are part of a speech made by Titmanatu in her father's presence, these indicate a major narrative shift. There are about eleven lines partially or totally destroyed at the end of col. ii and another thirty from the beginning of col. iii.

⁸³ Though it is isolated from its context by breaks, one can judge from general parallels in other texts that this passage presents agricultural fertility as having waned because of Kirta's illness. If this interpretation is correct, the divine aspect of Kirta's nature is thereby emphasized.

⁸⁴ Space does not appear sufficient to read the divine name ^cAnatu here, as some have proposed on the basis of parallels in the Ba^clu cycle.

⁸⁵ The signs ^ctrm, apparently parallel to ^cht, "wheat," and ^csmm, "emmer-wheat," in the preceding lines, are enigmatic. If divided as ^ctr m the words may reflect a vision of rows (^ctrm) of grain constituting a crown (^ctr) upon the tells (Caquot, Szymer, Herdner 1974:561, n. n). Or the signs may represent a single word, showing partial reduplication of the root ^ctr, which in Arabic denotes various notions of "fragrance," though it is unclear what crop would be designated as the "fragrant ones."

⁸⁶ The precise meaning of the word here translated from context as "bins" (^cdn) is uncertain, the word denoting "skin (for wine)" (^chmt) is attested in Biblical Heb. only as a container for water, while only the first sign is preserved of the word for the oil containers, i.e., {q}, which does not permit restoration, for no word for oil containers is attested with {q} as its first letter (^cdd and ^ckd are the two best-attested words).

⁸⁷ The remains of this column also are separated from the context by major breaks, with more than thirty lines missing between this text and the preceding and nearly thirty between this text and the following.

⁸⁸ Emended after lines 8 and 12.

⁸⁹ The first nine lines are too broken to translate. In lines 8, 9 one finds the words ^ctnth and ^clth, the second certainly a form of the number "three," the first perhaps derived from ^ctny, the root whence the number "two" is derived. The similarities between these forms and those used by Kirta in his vow (CTA 14 col. iv, lines 205, 206, ^ctnh, ^clth) indicate the possibility of a literary connection between the two passages, though this one is too damaged to allow meaningful comparison.

⁹⁰ All the numerically designated repetitions are expressed verbally: "He duplicated, he triplicated the word," etc.

⁹¹ ^cqrš denotes the potter's act of taking from a large piece of prepared clay the amount needed to fashion the specific object he has in mind. Some thirty lines are damaged or missing at the end of col. v. The act of creation of a healer seems to be completed quickly, for in lines 40-41 one finds ^cks and ^ckrpn, the usual terms for drinking vessels used at feasts and in blessings, followed by an apparent address to the healer (^cat ^cl[^cqr] in line 42), and in lines 50-51 a reference to the illness she is to dispel (^cmr[^cl], ^czb[^cln]). It is tempting to see in the word ^ctnn appearing after lacunae in lines 31 and 32 (plausibly cognate with Heb. ^ctanin, "dragon") a parallel to the Mesopotamian creation story which refers to the blood of another creature used in the creation of man (De Moor 1980a:181-82; cf. del Olmo Lete 1981:318).

End of ʿIlu's Address to Šaʿtiqatu ʿthe Healer
(vi 1-2)

O death, be shattered,
O Šaʿtiqatu, be powerful.

Šaʿtiqatu Does Her Job (vi 2-14)

Off went Šaʿtiqatu:
she entered Kirta's house,
amongst weeping did she arrive and enter, amongst distress did she go on in.

She overflow cities...
overflow towns...⁹²

...
the sickness (from ?) upon his head.⁹⁴
She comes back (or: sits down), washes him of his perspiration, opens up his throat so he can eat,
his gullet so he can dine.⁹⁵

Death is shattered,
Šaʿtiqatu is powerful.

Kirta Recovers (vi 14-24)

Noble Kirta gave orders,
he raised his voice and said aloud:

Listen, lady Ḥurraya:
Slaughter a lamb that I might eat,
a fatling that I might dine.

Lady Ḥurraya listened:
She slaughtered a lamb and he ate,
a fatling and he dined.

Then for a day, even two,
Kirta returned to his (throne-)room,⁹⁶
he sat on the royal throne,
on the dais, on the seat of dominion.

Yašsubu, Impatient, Wishes to Rule (vi 25-end)

Yašsubu also returned to the palace, where his inner self instructed^{ddd} him:⁹⁷

Go to your father, Yašsubu, go to your father and speak,

ddd Ps 16:7

eee Deut
10:18;
Isa 1:17;
Job 29:12-13

fff Ps 41:4;
Job 17:14

ggg Amos 5:11

hhh Isa 10:2;
Ps 82:2-4;
Job 22:9;
31:16-17

say to Kirta [your lord]:

Listen closely and tend [(your) ear]:
When raiders] lead [raids],
and creditors [detain (debtors)],⁹⁸

You let your hands fall slack:
you do not judge the widow's case,^{eee}
you do not make a decision regarding the oppressed.⁹⁹

Illness has become as it were (your) bedfellow,^{fff} sickness (your) constant companion in bed.
So descend from your kingship, I will reign,
from your dominion, I, yes I, will sit (on your throne).

Yašsubu the lad went off,
entered his father's presence.

He raised his voice and said aloud:
Listen, noble Kirta,
listen closely and tend (your) ear:

When raiders lead raids,
and creditors detain (debtors),
You let your hands fall slack:
you do not judge the widow's case,
you do not make a decision regarding the oppressed
you do not cast out those who prey upon the poor.^{ggg}

Before you, you do not feed the orphan, behind your back the widow.^{hhh}

Illness has become at it were (your) bedfellow,
sickness (your) constant companion in bed.
So descend from your kingship, I will reign,
from your dominion, I, yes I, will sit (on your throne).

Kirta, Not Liking That Idea at All, Curses Yašsubu
(vi 54-58)

Noble Kirta responded:
May Ḥōrānu¹⁰⁰ break, my son,

⁹² The name means "She who causes to pass on," a feminine nominal formation of the causative stem of the root ʿtq, "pass on." This is the root that designated old age and/or death in the opening lines of the text on this tablet.

⁹³ Because of the uncertainty of the following units, it is difficult to determine whether the reference to Šaʿtiqatu's aerial travels describes a departure from Kirta's house or, retrospectively, her arrival there. Unfortunately, the verbal form ʾtḥ in line 10 does not help, for it can be derived either from the hollow root ṭḥ, "return," or from yṭḥ, "sit down."

⁹⁴ The obscurity of line 8 leaves uncertain the function of the reference to the illness.

⁹⁵ On npš and brt, see note 203 to the Baʿlu text (1.86 above). The use of the verb pḥ, "open," makes it clear that the words in question denote the body part(s), not an abstract notion such as "appetite." The means by which the throat is opened, physical, chemical, or magical, being uncertain, it is equally uncertain how the fact of opening is related to the illness.

⁹⁶ The word d seems also to be attested as designating a room in the temple of Baʿlu ʿUgārīta (RS 24.266:9 [text 1.88]).

⁹⁷ ggn, apparently another word for "throat" (< "tube") is here the active agent of the verb "instruct." The translation is literal, though the modern equivalent would seem to be "he said to himself."

⁹⁸ Lines 30-31 have inspired the most divergent interpretations: a description of Kirta's illness, a rhetorical question regarding his ability to lead, an accusation of duplicity, etc. The translation proposed here is no surer than several of those already made, but it takes into account the one reasonably sure thing that can be stated, though that only negatively: ṭwy does not mean "be like," as some have thought, for it cannot be cognate with Heb. and Aram. ṭwh. As the G-stem of the root takes a mono-consonantal form in Ug. (ṭḥ lḥmy "she furnishes my food" [RS 17.117:6]), ṭwy in line 31 (restored on the basis of line 44) is probably a D-stem form, which means "detain" in Arabic. The retention of the final root consonant may indicate a following long vowel, indicating a plural form. Thus the subject of this (and the preceding) verb is not Kirta, but the perpetrators of the violence and oppression that he is accused of being unable to quell.

⁹⁹ See: Haak 1982.

¹⁰⁰ Ḥōrānu is a chthonic deity best known from Ug. sources for his power over serpents and sorcerers (see here RS 24.244 [text 1.94] and RIH 78/20 [text 1.96]).

may Hôrānu break your head,
Attartu "name" of Ba^clu¹⁰¹ your skull.
You will surely fall...

...¹⁰² and be humbled.

Colophon

The scribe: ²Ilmilku the td^ciyu-official.¹⁰³

¹⁰¹ Though the title šm b^cl appears once again some seven centuries later as a title of Astarte in Sidon (in the Eshmunazar inscription, KAI 14:18, the two occurrences do not provide sufficient data for an explanation.

¹⁰² The parallel phrases b gbl šntk and b hpnk have not been satisfactorily explained.

¹⁰³ The td^ciyu-official exercised what was basically a cultic function, as is shown by various nominal forms of the root td^cy used in the ritual texts to denote a type of sacrifice and the priest in charge of that sacrifice, while the verb is used to denote the offering of that sacrifice.

REFERENCES

Text: CTA 14-16; KTU 1.14. Translations and studies: Caquot, Sznycer and Herdner 1974; Driver 1956; Garbini 1983; Gevirtz 1961; Gibson 1978; Ginsberg 1946; Gordon 1977; Greenfield 1969; Haak 1982; Held 1968; Herdner 1963; Lipiński 1978; de Moor 1980a; 1987; del Olmo Lete 1981; Pardee 1987; 1988a; 1989-90; Parker 1989; Sanmartín 1980; Virolleaud 1936a; 1941a; 1941b; 1942-43a; 1942-43b.

THE ²AQHATU LEGEND (1.103)

Dennis Pardee

The ²Aqhatu story was recorded on three tablets that were discovered during the second and third campaigns at Ras Shamra (1930-1931). Lacunae prevent a complete understanding of the story, which must have been longer, recorded on tablets never discovered. Like the story of Kirta, this one tells how a father obtained a son, here Dānī²ilu and his son ²Aqhatu, but from that point the two stories diverge: Here the son assumes the primary role instead of the father. The kernel of the story is ²Aqhatu's confrontation with a deity, the goddess ^cAnatu, whose overtures to obtain his favorite bow he repels, with the result that the goddess has him put to death. After his death, his sister Pūgatu comes to the center of the stage, a heroine who attempts to avenge her brother's death. She is apparently on the point of doing so when the text breaks off.

CTA 17

Dānī²ilu Seeks a Son (i 1-34)

[Thereupon, as for Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u], thereupon, as for the valiant [Harnamite man],¹

Girded, he gave the gods food,
[girded, he gave] the Holy Ones [drink].²

He cast down [his cloak, went up],^a and lay down, cast down [his girded garment³] so as to pass the night (there).^b

A day, [even two,

a Gen 49:4;
2 Kgs 1:4, 16

b I Sam 3;
Ps 17:3, 15

girded,] Dānī²ilu (gave) the gods (food),
[girded,] he gave [the gods] food,
girded, [he gave] the Holy Ones [drink].

A third, even a fourth day,

[girded,] Dānī²ilu (gave) the gods (food),
girded, he gave [the gods] food,
girded, he gave the [Holy] Ones drink.

A fifth, even a sixth day,

girded, Dānī²ilu (gave) [the gods] (food),
girded, he gave the gods food,

¹ Dānī²ilu's two titles have elicited a great deal of discussion. Judging from the writing of the first, it is a genitive expression, as translated above, not a gentilic (i.e. not "the Rapa²ite man," as some have translated), and it appears to be related to the term Rephaim, well known in the Bible, in Phoenician inscriptions, and in Ug., perhaps even to the eponymous ancestor of the Rephaim, known in the Bible as harāpā². The second title, hnm, bears the gentilic suffix and has often been explained as geographical in origin (Albright 1953). Dānī²ilu's name is derived from the hollow root dn "to judge" (in the forensic sense, rather than the sense of a tribal leader, the latter being tpf), which is the only social occupation ascribed to him in the story (col. v, lines 5-8). His wife's name, Dānatay, seems to be built off the same root.

² There is no consensus regarding the interpretation of this verse, of which the restoration is supplied by repetitions below. It presents two primary difficulties, (1) the meaning of ²uzr and (2) the proper analysis of the verbs lhm and šqy, whether simply transitive ("he ate/drank") or factitive/causative ("he gave food/drink"). The verbs are here analyzed as factitive ("give to eat/drink"). Though such a usage cannot be shown to exist elsewhere for lhm, Tropper (1989) has demonstrated that šqy is used factitively (he does not, however, adopt that interpretation in this passage), and it appears plausible on that basis to posit such a usage of lhm. This conclusion is based primarily on the fact that the interpretation of the verbs as simple transitives entails the acceptance of an aberrant syntactic structure, i.e., the breaking up of the construct chain "²uzr of the Holy Ones," for the verb is placed between ²uzr and bn qdš. Though the meaning of ²uzr is unknown, it appears more plausible to see the word as modifying the subject (as translated here) or as an adverbial ("with X did he ...") than to take it as a noun denoting what is eaten and drunk (why would the same word be used for both the food and the drink?). Tied up with the interpretation of the terms is that of the passage as a whole: does it describe an incubation scene? That interpretation appears more likely if Dānī²ilu is feeding the gods than if he is himself eating high-class food.

³ The precise meaning of m²izrt, here taken from the same root as ²uzr, is uncertain. A masculine form of the noun may appear in two economic texts in Akk. from Ras Shamra (Nougayrol 1970:99-100), though that may be a different word. The basic question here is whether the garment is only a loin-cloth, which would imply that he served the gods half naked (as some have argued) and that he lay down naked, or whether it implies a full garment held in place by a belt.

[girded,] he gave the Holy Ones drink.
Dānī²ilu cast down his cloak, went up, and lay
down,
[cast down] his girded garment so as to pass the night (there).

Ba^clu Appears, Intercedes on Dānī²ilu's Behalf
(i 16-27)

Then on the seventh day,
Ba^clu approached, having had mercy on
The lamenting of Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u,
the groaning of the valiant Harnamite [man],
Who had no son like his brothers,
no scion^c like his kinsmen.^d
May he, like his brothers, have a son, like his kinsmen, a scion.
For, girded, he has given the gods food,
girded, he has given the Holy Ones drink.
O Bull ²Ilu, my father, please bless him please pronounce a benediction upon him, O creator of creatures,
So that he may have a son in his house,^e
a scion within his palace:

The Duties of a Son (i 27-34)^f

Someone to raise up the stela of his father's god,^g in the sanctuary the votive emblem of his clan;^h
To send up from the earth his incense,
from the dust the song of his place;ⁱ
To shut up the jaws of his detractors,^j to drive out anyone who would do him in;
To take his hand^k when (he is) drunk,
to bear him up [when] (he is) full of wine;^l
To eat his grain(-offering) in the temple of Ba^clu,

c Isa 11:1, 10;
Amos 2:9;
Dan 11:7

d Num 27:4;
2 Sam 11:10

e Ps 63:12

f Isa 51:18

g 1 Sam 1:4

his portion in the temple of ²Ilu;^g
To re-surface his roof when rain softens it up,^h to wash his outfitⁱ on a muddy day.

²Ilu Blesses Dānī²ilu (i 35-?)^j

[A cup] ²Ilu took <in his hand,
a goblet in his right hand,
He did indeed bless > his servant,
blessed Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u, pronounced a benediction upon the valiant Har-
namite [man]:

May Dānī²ilu, [the man] of Rapa²u, live indeed, may the valiant Harnamite man live to the fullest.^k

[...] may he be successful:^l

to his bed he shall mount [and lie down];
As he kisses his wife [there will be conception],
as he embraces her there will be pregnancy;

[...] she who was about to bear, pregnancy [for the man of] Rapa²u.

He will have a son [in his house,
a scion] within his palace:

[Someone to raise up the stela of] his father's god,
in the sanctuary [the votive emblem of his clan];

To send up from the earth [his incense,
from the dust the] song of his place;

[To shut up the jaws of his detractors],
to drive out anyone who would do [him] in;
...^m

²Ilu's Promise is Recounted to Dānī²ilu (ii 1-8)

...
[Someone to raise up the stela of your father's god, in the sanctuary the] votive [emblem of your

^d Lit., "so that his son may be in the house."

^e This unit constitutes a set piece within the larger drama, being repeated three times below. As is shown by the verbal forms from derived stems, each attribute is expressed as a participle, "the one who does such-and-such," here translated as "someone to"

^f At the head of the Ug. "pantheon" lists stands ²Ilu²ibī, "the god of the father," apparently the generic designation of the special deity of a clan, tribe, or other ethnic group. The ²il²ib in this text is the same formulation in the form of a common noun, probably a true compound noun, with the same shift of /a/ to /i/ in the first syllable of the second element under the influence of the long case vowel (nominative /²abū/, genitive /²abī/ > /²ibī/). It must be noted carefully that this deity, like the directly related common noun, does not, according to this explanation, represent the "deified ancestor," but the "deity of the ancestor." The veneration of the deity ²Ilu²ibī in the sacrificial cult betrays no particular characteristics of a cult of dead and deified ancestors. In this text that type of cult is referred to, if at all, in the next verse.

^g ²ir ≈ Hittite sitar- "votive (sun) disk" (Tsevat 1971:351-352).

^h A much discussed verse, as regards both individual words and over-all interpretation, here taken as referring to the cult of the ancestors at the family vault, which was at Ugarit located under the house. Though recent archaeological work has shown the unlikelihood of frequent incursions into the vault itself (Pitard 1994a), one may expect there to have been some regular, formal recognition of the presence of the dearly departed, as well as a funerary cult in the narrow sense of the term whenever a new inhumation occurred. The outline of the funeral service for a dead king of Ugarit, Niqmaddu (III), has been recorded in RS 34.126 (here text 1.105).

ⁱ RS 24.258:18-19 (here text 1.97) depicts the double deity Tukamuna-wa-Šunama doing this for their father ²Ilu.

^j Lit., "... on a day of mud." Every house at Ugarit had its roof-roller (Elliott 1991:85) to reconsolidate the clay surface of the roofs and terraces after moisture had loosened the surface bonding.

^k npš is a generic term, apparently denoting a combination of garments and equipment.

^l Col. i breaks off in the middle of ²Ilu's speech. On the restored and emended text at the beginning of this section, see Pardee 1977, with previous bibliography.

^m The Ug. formulation is difficult to render in English: "As to (his) throat, may Dānī²ilu, the man of Rapa²u, live, as to (his) gullet, the valiant Harnamite man." The words npš and brlt, already encountered in the Kirta text (text 1.102; see note 95 to that text and here below, note 127), here denote metonymically the life forces.

ⁿ The beginnings of lines 39-43 are broken and unreconstructable with certainty because the formulae seem to vary as compared with other examples of the conception/pregnancy/birth motif. The reconstruction and explanation of the first line in part follow Dijkstra, De Moor 1975:178.

^o Col. i breaks off here; ²Ilu certainly included in his blessing the remainder of the ideal son's duties. The text missing between the remains of cols. i and ii contained the narrative framework for transmitting the message of ²Ilu's blessing to Dānī²ilu, for the end of that message is found at the beginning of col. ii, as preserved. Note that in the recounted form, Dānī²ilu is addressed directly, whereas in ²Ilu's blessing he was referred to in the third person.

clan;
 To send up from the earth your incense,
 from the dust the song [of your place;
 To shut up] the jaws of your detractors,
 to drive out [anyone who would do you in;]¹⁶
 To eat your grain(-offering) in the temple of [Ba^clu,
 your portion] in the temple of ²Ilu;
 To take your hand when [(you are) drunk],
 to bear you up when (you are) full of wine;
 To roll your roof when rain softens it up,
 to wash your outfit on a muddy day.
Dānī²ilu Rejoices in the Prospect of a Son (ii 8-23)
 Dānī²ilu's face lit up with joy,
 His countenance^b glowed.¹⁷
 Signs of worry disappeared from his forehead¹⁸ as he laughed,
 he (relaxed as he) put his feet on the footstool.
 He cried aloud:
 I can sit and be at rest,
 my innermost being¹⁹ can rest,
 For a son will be born to me,ⁱ as (to) my brothers,
 a scion, as (to) my kinsmen:
 Someone to raise up the stela of my father's god,
 in the sanctuary the votive emblem of my clan;
 <To send up from the earth my incense>,
 from the dust the song of [my] place;
 To shut up the jaws of my detractors,
 to drive out anyone who would do me in;
 To take my hand when (I am) drunk,
 to bear me up when (I am) full of wine;
 To eat my grain(-offering) in the temple of Ba^clu,
 my portion in the temple of ²Ilu;
 To roll my roof when rain softens it up,
 to wash my outfit on a muddy day.

h Ps 104:15

i Isa 9:5

Dānī²ilu Does His Part (ii 24-?)

Dānī²ilu arrived at his house,
 Dānī²ilu entered his palace.
 The Kōtarātu²⁰ entered his house,
 the daughters of brightness,²¹ the pure ones.
 Thereupon, as for Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u,
 thereafter, as for the valiant Harnamite man,
 A bull he slaughtered for the Kōtarātu,
 he fed the Kōtarātu,
 provided the daughters of brightness, the pure
 ones, with drink.
 A day, even two,
 he fed the Kōtarātu,
 provided the daughters of brightness, the pure
 ones, with drink.
 A third, even a fourth day,
 he fed the Kōtarātu,
 provided the daughters of brightness, the pure
 ones, with drink.
 A fifth, even a sixth day,
 he fed the Kōtarātu,
 provided the daughters of brightness, the pure
 ones, with drink.
 Then, on the seventh day,
 the Kōtarātu left his house,
 (as did) the daughters of brightness, the pure ones.
 ... the lovely bed ...²²
 ... the beautiful bed ...
 Dānī²ilu sat down to count the months ...²³
 ...
The Bow is Promised (v 2-3)
 I will bring the bow there,
 I'll bring arrows in multiples of four.²⁴

¹⁶ This and the following verse are inverted as compared with the first and fourth recitals of the list (this section has disappeared from the second recital, end col. i).

¹⁷ Lit., "In Dānī²ilu, (his) face rejoices, above, he shines in (his) temples."

¹⁸ For the meaning of lsh, "forehead" rather than "rows of teeth," see discussion and bibliography in Pardee 1988a:69. For the interpretation of prq, see del Olmo Lete 1981:612.

¹⁹ Another usage of npš, lit., "my throat (npš) within my chest (ṣirt)."

²⁰ The Kōtarātu are known from the Ug. texts primarily as goddesses of conception (see Pardee 1995). If the damaged passage at the end of this column has been correctly interpreted, the Kōtarātu are present at conception, then leave. If the goddesses also functioned as midwives, as many scholars believe, one may surmise that their return at the time of birth was recounted in the text of columns iii-iv, now lost.

²¹ hl is either an abstract term denoting brightness and purity or the name of a goddess Hulel, known from Emar (see references in Pardee 1995).

²² Lines 41-42 are damaged and it is uncertain exactly what the phrases n^cmy ṣrš and ysmsm ṣrš denote. The words denoting "beauty" being placed before the word for "bed," they can either modify another entity or, as translated here, they can be taken as modifying ṣrš genitively.

²³ The word for "months" bears a third person pronominal suffix (yršh), but the antecedent is uncertain, whether referring to Dānī²ilu, his wife, or even, least likely in my estimation, to the child who, according to this hypothesis, has already been born. In line 45 one finds the numbers "three" and "four," indicating that the count progresses, but the surrounding text is too damaged to allow us to perceive the context of the counting. Most scholars believe that the months of gestation are being counted (cf. Job 39:2). According to this interpretation, the birth and infancy of ²Aqhatu would have been recounted in the missing columns iii and iv, which originally ran to over one hundred lines.

²⁴ The identity of the speaker is lost in the preceding lacuna. Below, it is the double deity Kōtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu who brings the bow (lines 10-13). The formulae in this verse are partially repeated below, but several terms are dubious: is ṣmn the noun meaning "eight" (referring perhaps to the multiple elements of which the composite bow is made) or the adverb meaning "there"? What is the precise meaning of ṣārb^c, "I shall quadruplicate," applied to arrows; is the derivation from rb^c, "four," even correct? (Square-shafted darts [a possible interpretation of rb^c], such as were used in pre-modern Europe, have not been discovered, to my knowledge, in the ancient Near East.) Does the word qš^ct, of unclear etymology, denote the bow or the arrow? If one accepts the derivation of ṣārb^c from the root denoting "four," it is unlikely that ṣmn is here the word for "eight" because decreasing number parallelism is not common. Also against the numerical interpretation of ṣmn is its absence in the parallel passage (line 12). In its favor, perhaps, is the use of ṣmn, "eight," plausibly referring to arrows, in CTA 19 i 5 (below, p. 350).

Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu Arrives and Presents the Bow to Dānī²⁵ilu (v 3-33)
 Then, on the seventh day,
 Dānī²⁵ilu the man of Rapa²⁶u,
 the valiant Harnamite man,
 Arose and sat at the entrance to the (city-)gate,²⁷ among the leaders (sitting) at the threshing floor.²⁸
 He judged the widow's case, made decisions regarding the orphan.²⁹
 Looking up he perceived
 a thousand yards off,
 ten thousand furlongs off,²⁵
 He saw Kôtaru coming, saw Ḥasīsu striding along.²⁶
 He was bringing the bow,
 bringing the arrows in multiples of four.
 Then Dānī²⁵ilu the man of Rapa²⁶u, then the valiant Harnamite man,
 Aloud to his wife did call:
 Listen, Lady Dānatay:²⁷
 prepare a lamb from the flock
 For the throat of Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu,
 for the gullet²⁸ of Hayyinu²⁹ the handicrafter.
 Give the gods something to eat, something to drink,
 serve, honor them,²⁹
 the lords of Memphis, the gods of all of it.³⁰ Lady Dānatay listened,
 she prepared a lamb from the flock
 For the throat of Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu,

J Deut 21:19;
 Amos 5:10,
 12, 15

2 Kgs 22:10

Exod 22:21;
 Deut 10:18;
 Isa 1:17;
 Ps 68:6;
 Job 29:12-13

m Gen 18:5-8

for the gullet of Hayyinu the handicrafter.
 When Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu arrive, they place in Dānī²⁵ilu's hand the bow,
 set upon his knees the arrows.
 Then Lady Dānatay
 gave the gods something to eat, something to drink,
 served, honored them,
 the lords of Memphis, the gods of all of it.
 Kôtaru left for his tent,
 Hayyinu left for his dwelling place.
Dānī²⁵ilu Presents the Bow to Aqhatu (v 33-end)
 Thereupon, Dānī²⁵ilu the man of Rapa²⁶u, thereupon, the valiant Harnamite man,
 The bow he ...³¹
 [...] upon/unto Aqhatu³² he ...³³
 The best³⁴ of your game, O [my] son [...]
 [...] the best of your game [...]
 [...] game in his temple/palace [...]
 Anatu Demands of Aqhatu His Bow (vi 16-19)³⁵
 [She raised her voice] and shouted:
 Listen, [valiant Aqhatu]:
 Ask for silver and I'll give (it to) you,
 [for gold and I'll] present (it to) you.
 Just give your bow [to Anatu], let the sister-in-law of Li²⁶mu³⁶ [take] your arrows.
Aqhatu Isn't Interested (vi 20-25)
 Valiant Aqhatu replied:
 I'll vow³⁷ ash wood from Lebanon,

²⁵ On šd // knn, see note 21 to the Ba²lu text (1.86).

²⁶ The double divine name Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu can either be split up in a bicolon as here, or appear as a single unit, which then has as its parallel yet a third name, Hayyinu (line 18). This complex of names can be treated as plural (so in lines 18-21). The home of Kôtaru-wa-Ḥasīsu is fixed either in Egypt, or in Crete (see RS 24.244:46 [text 1.94]), or in both places (CTA 1 III 1, 18; 3 VI 14 [text 1.86]).

²⁷ Dānī²⁵ilu's wife seems to bear a name derived from the same root as her husband's (see above, note 1).

²⁸ On nšl/brlt, see note 13.

²⁹ This name is explained by Arabic hayyīn "easy, light," see note 22 to the Ba²lu text (1.86).

³⁰ On b²l ḥkpr il kll, see note 19 to the Ba²lu text (1.86).

³¹ The verb yqb is uncertain both as to reading (some take the following vertical wedge not as a word divider but as the first wedge of {l} or {š}) and as to interpretation. One wonders if it could not be cognate to Heb. qbb, "to curse," but without the negative connotation of that verb, meaning rather "to pronounce a spell upon." In the present case, the spell pronounced by a second party (Dānī²⁵ilu) would be equivalent to a vow pronounced by a first party (Aqhatu), and its purpose/content would be that Aqhatu must offer to the gods the first-fruits of the game killed with the bow. Perhaps, therefore, this text also contained a motif similar to the vow-to-a-god motif in the Kirta text.

³² In the story as preserved, this is the first occurrence of the name Aqhatu, the explanation of which is uncertain, though it appears to be related to the Heb. name Q'hāt.

³³ This verb begins {yq} and is thus plausibly, though not certainly, the same as in the preceding line.

³⁴ The word is pr²m (the root pr² expresses "firstness" and "topness," as in "the top of the head"), apparently semantically similar to r²š and r²šyt, "best (part)" (< r²š "head"), both corresponding to the Biblical notion of offering first-fruits and first-born to God. In Heb., forms of the root bkr are more common in this usage (bikkūrtm, "first-fruits").

³⁵ The first fifteen lines of this column are too badly damaged for even an approximate translation, though certain words and phrases are well enough preserved to allow a general interpretation. Judging from some of the standard words and phrases for eating and drinking, Anatu is at a feast where she first spies Aqhatu's bow. The text is too damaged, however, for us to learn the circumstances under which Aqhatu would be present at such a feast.

³⁶ On ybm l²imm, see note 12 to the Ba²lu text (1.86).

³⁷ This interpretation of adr is based on the assumption that Aqhatu is offering to the goddess personally to provide her with the materials necessary to have a bow made for herself just like his; adr is thus appropriate, expressing the human-divine relationship. Others take adr as the adjective "mighty, powerful," in which case the entire list functions as the direct object of m, "give," in line 24; here the goddess is expected to find the materials herself. The basic study of this passage is Albright and Mendenhall 1942.

I'll vow sinews from wild bulls,
I'll vow horns from rams,
tendons from the hocks of a bull,
I'll vow reeds from ĠL²IL.³⁸
Give (these) to Kôîaru-wa-Ĥasîsu, and he'll make a bow for ^cAnatu,
arrows for the sister-in-law of Li³mu.

^cAnatu Ups the Ante (vi 25-33)

Girl³⁹ ^cAnatu replied:

Ask for life, O valiant ²Aqhatu, ask for life and I'll give (it to) you,⁴⁰
for immortality⁴⁰ and I'll make it yours;
I'll make you count years with Ba^clu,
with the son of ²Ilu will you count months;
(You will be) like Ba^clu (who), when he comes (back) to life, feasts:
they give a feast⁴¹ to the living one, give him
drink,
the goodly one⁴² chants and sings in his honor.
So I, for my part, will answer (the request),⁴³
I will give life⁴ to valiant ²Aqhatu.⁴⁴

n Ps 21:5

o 2 Kgs 5:7

p Num 23:10;
Eccl 6:12

q Num 16:29;
Ps 82:7

Aqhatu, Still Not Interested, Shows Little Tact
(vi 33-40)

Valiant ²Aqhatu replied:

Don't lie to me, girl,
your lies are despicable⁴⁵ to a real man;
What after(life)⁴ can one obtain?
what can a man obtain hereafter?
(For) they will pour glaze [on] (my) head,
white stuff over my cranium.⁴⁶
[And] I'll die the death of every man,⁴
I also must surely die.
[Moreover], I've something else to say:
The bow is a fighting man's [weapon];⁴⁷
Shall womankind now go hunting?

^cAnatu Takes Umbrage, Threatens ²Aqhatu
(vi 41-45)

[Outwardly] ^cAnatu laughs.

But within she hatches [a plot].

Reconsider,⁴⁸ valiant ²Aqhatu, reconsider for your own sake [...].

(Otherwise) I'll meet you on the path of rebellion,

³⁸ From context ġPîl is a geographical term, but it is uncertain whether it is a proper or a common noun.

³⁹ ^cAnatu's title blt refers to an age/maturity category and to the social norms and cultural overtones associated with that category. See note 11 to the Ba^clu text (1.86).

⁴⁰ Ug. bl mt, "not dying."

⁴¹ The repetition of ^csr has been seen as a problem. It appears plausible to see in the first form a usage for receiving a feast (perhaps intransitive, or even passive), the second as denoting the presenting of a feast. This interpretation sees the passage as reflecting a feast in honor of Ba^clu's seasonal return to life. Others interpret the verbal forms in line 30 as active/transitive and see here a feast offered by Ba^clu to the one receiving life from him. The first interpretation appears preferable because it fits better into Ug. mythology as we know it.

⁴² Whatever the correct restoration of line 32 may be (see following note), it appears difficult to avoid interpreting this passage in light of CTA 3 i 18-21 (text 1.86), where someone designated n^cm sings in honor of Ba^clu.

⁴³ {nynn} is clearly from the root ^cny, "to answer, respond, speak up," apparently with accusative pronominal suffix (-nn). Unfortunately, the absence of the preformative element means that the subject is uncertain. Some restore t and see a narrative indicator of the following conclusion of ^cAnatu's speech ("she responded to him"), others a continued reference to the singing (note that this should not be a reference to the singing designated in Heb. by ^cny, of which the Arabic cognate is ġny), others to another aspect of the feast. Examination of the original hand copy and of the photograph leads me to believe that the generally accepted restoration of three signs in the lacuna is too generous and that two signs (Dijkstra and De Moor 1975:187) correspond better to the available space. Read perhaps {n^cm w ²a^cnynn}. The verb ^cny is not usually used with an accusative complement in Ug., and it is difficult to know if the suffix here refers to ²Aqhatu or to the thing requested, i.e., immortality. Given the rarity of the accusative usage, the suffix could even refer to Ba^clu: "I ^cAnatu will answer him (=act correspondingly to him, i.e., Ba^clu)."

⁴⁴ The nature of the proffered immortality has been much discussed: maintenance of human life, repeated restoration to life after dying, or joining with divine immortals after death? The present formulation seems to indicate the second option, i.e., the Ba^clu model, but ²Aqhatu in any case refuses the offer of any form of immortality as being fraudulent, in keeping with general thinking in the ancient Near East on the possibility of human immortality (cf. Gilgamesh, Adapa ...).

⁴⁵ The precise meaning of h^him is disputed, some comparing with Heb. hō^hh, "briar, thorn, hook," others with Akk. hahhu, "slime, spittle."

⁴⁶ A much-debated passage: spsg is also attested in an administrative text (PRU II 106:8) alongside terms designating semi-precious stones and has been identified with a Hurrian word that may denote a type of glaze (also attested in a Sumero-Akkadian lexical text: CAD Z 10). See bibliography in Pardee 1987:432. Many scholars have accepted the specificity of the term spsg and have endeavored to explain the second word, h^hrs, on the basis of the first, but with less obvious success, for no Semitic language provides an etymology clearly in the same semantic field as spsg (cf. the tour de force in Albright 1945:24-25, with its jump from alkali to "(molten) glass"). Watson (1990:423) proposed a new Akk. etymology, "hurizu or urizu," which designates "a stone or mineral of as yet undetermined meaning." The proposal to see in this passage a reference to the Neolithic practice of plastering the skulls of the deceased encounters severe difficulties (Rainey 1971:154). From a literary perspective, one must note that this bicolon is placed before the explicit statement of death and could constitute a metaphor for the white hair of old age rather than for a procedure practiced on the dead.

⁴⁷ The restorations at the beginnings of lines 40-44 are uncertain.

⁴⁸ The precise meaning of the idiom ib l is uncertain, though something like the above translation appears preferable to "go away," which does not work in all contexts and which might, in any case, be expressed by a verb other than "return."

[...] on the path of pride,
I'll personally bring you down and [trample] you,⁴⁹
(however) good and strong (you may be) among men.

°Anatu Departs, Seeks Permission from °Ilu to Attack °Aqhatu (vi 46-end)⁵⁰

[She dug in] her feet, took off across the earth;
She [headed off]
towards °Ilu at the source of the two rivers, [amidst the fountains] of the deeps.
She penetrated Ilu's abode,
[entered the] dwelling⁵¹ of the king, father of Šunama.⁵²
[At °Ilu's feet] she bowed and fell,
she did homage [and honored] him.
She heaped slander on valiant °Aqhatu,
[... the child of] Dānī°ilu the man of Rapa°u.
[Girl °Anatu] spoke,
[she raised] her [voice]
and cried out the word [...]

Colophon (left edge)

[The scribe: °Ilīmīlku the Šubbanite, disciple of °Attānu-]purulini.⁵³

CTA 18

°Anatu Threatens °Ilu (i 1-14)⁵⁴

...
[Girl °Anatu] replied:
[In the grandeur of] your [house], O °Ilu,
[in the grandeur of your house do not rejoice],
do not rejoice [in the height of your palace].

r Prov 30:10

s 2 Sam 7:3

r Job 37:4

Cant 4:9, 10

Will I [not] seize them [in my right hand],
[... in my] broad grasp?⁵⁵
[I'll smite the ...] of your head,
I'll make [your gray hair] flow [with blood],
your [gray] beard with gore.
(If) [you (appeal to)⁵⁶] °Aqhatu, will he (be able to) save you?
will the son of [Dānī°ilu] (be able to) help you (when you're) in the grasp of Girl [°Anatu]?
°Ilu Caves In (i 15-19)
The Gracious One, the kindly god, replied:
I know you, (my) daughter, (I know) that you are a manly sort,
and that [among goddesses] there is none so emotional as you.⁵⁷
(So) let anger (against me) depart (from) [your] heart, (my) daughter;
[(so then) go ahead and] lay hold of what you desire,⁵⁸
carry out what you wish:⁵⁸
The one who gets in your way⁵⁹ may be struck down.

°Anatu Leaves, Addresses °Aqhatu (i 19-end)⁵⁹

Girl °Anatu [left], headed [off
towards] valiant °Aqhatu,
A thousand yards away,
[ten thousand] furlongs.
Girl [°Anatu] laughed,
[raised] her voice and cried out:
Hear, valiant [°Aqhatu],
You are (my) brother and I am [your] sister,⁶⁰

⁴⁹ Lit., "I'll cause you to fall under [my feet]."

⁵⁰ The beginning of this passage contains a series of formulae, attested elsewhere in variant forms, for divine travel and arrival at °Ilu's abode.

⁵¹ The two terms for °Ilu's dwelling place, dd and qrš, apparently designate a tent-like structure. See note 29 to the Ba°lu text (p. 245, 1.86).

⁵² On the title °ab šnm, see note 30 to the Ba°lu text (1.86).

⁵³ Considerations of space make the restoration of this form of °Ilīmīlku's titulary plausible. °Ilīmīlku's hometown of Šubbanu has not been localized with certainty (for bibliography, see Pardee 1989-90:489). On the interpretation of °Ilīmīlku's master's name, see van Soldt 1989.

⁵⁴ The proper restoration of lines 1-9 is uncertain; these lines show close parallels with CTA 3 V 27-33 (p. 254), also damaged though less so than here. See note 108 to the Ba°lu text (p. 254, 1.86).

⁵⁵ Lit., "in the greatness of my length," apparently a reference to the length of the goddess' arms (cf. gdl + "arm" in Exod 15:16). The restoration of ymn, "right hand," appears plausible from the parallel text in CTA 3 V 30 ({b y[-]y}). It is uncertain whether another word for "hand" or a verb parallel to "seize" should be restored in the intervening lacuna.

⁵⁶ The proper restoration here is unknown, though something along the lines of this translation is suggested by the following reference to helping and rescuing. The concept of °Ilu, father of the gods, appealing to a mortal for help is nonetheless a striking one.

⁵⁷ Various interpretations of °nšllqlš in this verse have been proposed (for bibliography see Pardee 1987:373, 445). On °Ilu's description of °Anatu here, see note 111 to the Ba°lu text (1.86).

⁵⁸ Lit., "you may seize what is in your heart, you may place/put/establish what is in your breast." The damaged state of the passage and the fact that hnp is only attested here have made the meaning obscure. As translated, the "anger" in the first line is °Anatu's anger directed against °Ilu, not against °Aqhatu. °Ilu is apparently telling °Anatu that she can do whatever she wishes to °Aqhatu, as long as she leaves him, °Ilu, alone.

⁵⁹ After the stereotyped formulae in lines 19-23, the text becomes so damaged as to be uninterpretable. From the first line of °Anatu's speech, it would appear that the goddess has chosen to approach °Aqhatu in a friendly fashion. Because, in addition to the loss of the end of this column and the beginning of col. iv, all of columns ii and iii have disappeared, we have no idea as to how the duel between °Aqhatu and °Anatu continued. According to col. iv, line 5, °Anatu goes off to put her plan of attack into motion, but the previous lines are too damaged for us to know with whom she was talking before her departure.

[...] seven of your kin⁶⁰ [...]

[...] of my father [...]

[...] you'll go hunting [...]

[...] I'll teach you [...]

[...] the city of ²Abilūma,

²Abilūma [the city of Prince] Yariḫū,⁶¹

Of which the tower [...]

...

^cAnatu and YTPN Devise a Plan of Attack (iv 5-27)⁶²

Girl ^cAnatu left,

[headed off]

towards YTPN,⁶³ the soldier of the Lady.⁶⁴

Girl ^cAnatu cried [aloud]:

YTP sit/return⁶⁵ [...]

(to) the city of ²Abilūma,

²Abilūma [the city of Prince Yariḫū].

How can Yariḫū not be renewed?⁶⁶

[...] on his right horn,⁶⁷

on the ?⁶⁸ [...] of his head?

Y Isa 46:11

W Gen 1:2;

Deut 32:11

YTPN, [the soldier of the Lady], replied:

Listen Girl ^cAnatu:

You are the one who will strike him [for his bow]

(for) his arrows, you will not [let] him [live].

The goodly warrior has prepared a meal,

and [...] he has stayed on in tents,

and he has settled [...].⁶⁹

Girl ^cAnatu replied:

Sit down, YTP, and [I'll tell] you (what we'll do):

I'll put you like a hawk⁷⁰ under [my] belt,⁷¹

like a bird⁷¹ in my bag.⁷²

[When] ²Aqhatu [sits down] to eat,

the son of Dānī²ilu for a meal,

[Above him] the hawks will soar,⁷³

[the flock of] birds will survey the scene.⁷³

I myself will soar amongst the hawks, above ²Aqhatu (I'll) position you.

Strike him twice on the head,

⁶⁰ Given the presence of the word for "father" in the following line, one can surmise that ²irk is related to ²ar, the word designating a relation of kinship in the Kirta text (CTA 14 I 15, here text 1.102), instead of guessing a meaning on the basis of Arabic usage.

⁶¹ This is the common formula in the following text for the spot where ²Aqhatu was struck down. To the extent that the name of the city reflects onomastic reality, it seems to be based on ²abil-, a common formative element in Northwest Semitic place names. In this text, however, the name could correspond less to geographical reality than to a topos of the story, that of mourning (²bl). In the latter interpretation, the literary function of the link between the city of mourners and the moon deity Yariḫū would not be clear.

⁶² The few words extant in the first four lines seem to indicate acts of violence (yibr, "he will break," and uim dr[qm], a phrase of uncertain meaning appearing only here and in CTA 5 i 5-6, a passage dealing with Mōtu, god of death).

⁶³ No etymology and, hence, vocalization have been generally accepted for this name. In two passages the shorter form ytp appears (here following line and line 16), generally taken as a variant of the name, but the context is each time broken and the form in question could be verbal (cf. Watson 1976:373; further bibliography in Pardee 1989-90:406).

⁶⁴ The second term in the formulaic title of ytpn, mhr št, has given rise to various interpretations, the most commonly accepted of which are (1) "lady," cognate with Arabic sirr, an apparent reference to ^cAnatu herself, and (2) "Sutaeen" (for which meaning one might expect a gentilic form, since sutū is identified as a geographical entity in the cuneiform sources). For bibliography, see Pardee 1987:413; 1989-90:490.

⁶⁵ ytp may be the subject, or the word lost in the following lacuna may supply the subject. Hence we do not know whether ytp refers to sitting (root ytp) or to returning (hollow root tb).

⁶⁶ In Ug. Yariḫū designates the "moon" as celestial orb and as lunar deity and also means "month." The verb "renew," hdt, is from the same root as the commonly attested word for "new moon." The meaning of the entire passage is, however, unclear, especially as regards YTPN's appointed task. Since his answer shows him to be already aware of the task, we may surmise that in the broken text of columns ii and iii ^cAnatu was presented as engaging YTPN and, consequently, that in the present passage she and YTPN devise the details of the attack.

⁶⁷ If the referent is still Yariḫū, the words qm ymn may be thought to refer to the right point of the crescent moon.

⁶⁸ Similar questions arise here as for the use of ²nš by ²ilu in reference to ^cAnatu (see above, note 57 and note 111 to the Ba^clu text [1.86]). Here, however, the context is too damaged to attempt an explanation.

⁶⁹ Lines 14-15 are obscure and lacunary (at least three signs are missing at the end of each line) and have been interpreted variously. I take irm as from the root irm, denoting an act of eating, as here below lines 19 and 30 (rather than as the plural of tr, "bull"), ddm as the same word used above for ²ilu's abode (see note 51 and note 29 to the Ba^clu text [1.86]), and n^crs as cognate with Arabic rs, which denotes "binding" and hence various forms of "settling down" (the form is thus more plausibly N-stem, with ²Aqhatu as subject, than G-stem, 1st plural, "we will rs," though, because of the following lacuna, the latter interpretation cannot be ruled out). The precise nuance of ²ist²ir, normally "remain behind/after," is not clear.

⁷⁰ As one can see from this passage, nšr denotes in Ug., as in Heb., a raptor rather than a carrion bird ("hawk" is here intended as generic).

⁷¹ The root d^cy means "to fly" in Ug.; the precise type of bird denoted by d^ciy is uncertain, though it seems to belong to the raptor class (for bibliography, see Pardee 1988:104-105). The form here may be simply that of the G-stem participle, dā^ciyāma, "flyers"; below, in CTA 19 iii 115, etc., d^ciy denotes the "pinions" of the hawks.

⁷² The precise meaning of the terms hbš and r^crt is unclear. r^crt is elsewhere attested in the meaning "scabbard" (CTA 19 iv 207), and is used here either metaphorically (i.e., the hawk is to function as a sword) or as a designation of any kind of hunting bag, holding weapons, knives, game, etc. hbš can only, for the present, be explained etymologically, i.e., by the Semitic verb hbš, "to bind" (the noun hbš is also attested in CTA 3 ii 13, where a meaning similar to "belt" also appears plausible). In any case, the general meaning of the terms indicates that the motivation is concealment, and this general context and the absence of any motifs characteristic of falconry (i.e., the use by humans of trained falcons as hunters) rule out the latter interpretation here.

⁷³ The meaning "look at, keep an eye on" for bšr is now confirmed by RIH 78/14:11' (text 1.91), a lunar omen of which the prognosis is mlkm tšym, "the kings (of the various lands) will keep an eye on each other," paralleled in the Sin omens from Emar by the verb innatqālū, with the same meaning (Arnaud 1985-86 text 651:37).

three times above the ear,
 Pour out (his) blood like one emptying (a bucket),⁷⁴
 (pour it out) on his knees like one slaughtering
 (an animal),
 So that his life force rushes out like wind,^x
 like spittle his vitality,
 like smoke from his nostrils.
 Thus I'll not let the soldier live on!⁷⁵

The Plan is Carried Out (iv 27-37)

She took YTPN, the soldier of the Lady, put him like a hawk under her belt,
 like a bird in her bag.
 When ²Aqhatu sat down to eat,
 the son of Dānī²ilu for a meal,
 The hawks soared above him,
 the flock of birds surveyed the scene.
^cAnatu soared [amongst] the hawks,
 above [²Aqhatu] she positioned him.
 He struck him twice [on the head],
 three times above the ear,
 Poured out his blood [like] one emptying (a bucket),
 (poured it out) [on his knees] like one slaughtering (an animal),

x Ps 146:4

[His] life force rushed out like wind,
 [like spittle] his vitality,
 like smoke [from his nostrils].

^cAnatu Expresses Sorrow (iv 37-end)

[Moreover,] ^cAnatu, as she smote the soldier,⁷⁶ [...] ²Aqhatu,
 She wept [...]
 I would have made⁷⁷ [...]
 But on account of [your bow ...], [on account of] your arrows you have ceased [to live].⁷⁸

...

... perished ...

CTA 19

Classification of Tablet (i 1)

[Belonging to⁷⁹ (the)] ²Aqhatu (text).

Something Happens to the Coveted Bow (i 2-5)

...

... the bow was broken ...

... the eight [...] were broken ...⁸⁰

Another Account of ²Aqhatu's Death (i 5-19)⁸¹

Girl ^cAnatu returned [...]
 [...] took⁸² weapons⁸³ as (does) [...] in] his hand,

⁷⁴ The meaning of ³y is uncertain. One of the possible corresponding roots in Arabic means "to draw up mud from the bottom of a well/spring (in the process of cleaning it out)." Perhaps the verb denoted in Ug. the accompanying act of pouring out the sludge. The writing with {²i} shows the form plausibly to be a participle (³ā²iyu).

⁷⁵ The conclusion to ^cAnatu's speech is a monocolon, hence without parallelism to help elucidate its meaning. The first sign seems from the photograph to be a cross between {b} and {²u} (one does not see three clear vertical wedges). The word written {mhrh} is, on the basis of line 38, to be corrected to {mhrh}. The most likely form of this concluding line thus appears to be, in vocalized form: ²ā²apa muhrahū lā²ahawwīyu, literally "And moreover I'll not allow his soldiery (i.e., the abstract expression of the qualities making him a soldier) to continue living."

⁷⁶ The structure is similar to that of lines 26-27 (see preceding note), lit., "as she smote his soldiery."

⁷⁷ Lit., "built," though there is not unanimous agreement on this identification, the context being broken. Moreover, it is impossible to ascertain the object of this verb, though the phrase plausibly has to do with rewards ²Aqhatu would have received if he had been more receptive of ^cAnatu's offers. The verb "to build" could refer, for example, to quasi-creative maintenance of life or to building for ²Aqhatu a house or dynasty.

⁷⁸ The letters {h[...] } may be restored as {h[wt]}, lit., "you did not live."

⁷⁹ See note 2 to the Kirta text above (text 1.102).

⁸⁰ Because of the state of the text here, it is impossible to determine whether qšr, "bow" is subject or object of the verb (tl[br]) in lines 3-4. In line 4 the verb is apparently repeated again, this time differently marked for gender (y[br]). On that basis alone, I assume that qšr is the subject in the first case and that the partially destroyed phrase {lmn [...] } is the subject in the second. Given the standard parallelism of qšr and qš^ct, both above and below (lines 14, 15), and given the use of the verb "quadruplicate" above for the arrows (see above, note 24), it appears likely, as many commentators have believed, that lmn here in line 5 is the number "eight" and that it modifies a word with similar meaning to qš^ct. Though opinion varies widely as to the meaning of the passage, it is generally thought that it refers somehow to a loss suffered by ^cAnatu (or by YTPN) of the weapon that the goddess has killed to obtain.

⁸¹ Lines 5-19 constitute one of the most difficult texts of the ²Aqhatu story: several lines have undergone various degrees of damage and even in the well-preserved sections the vocabulary is so difficult that multiple, wildly varying, interpretations have been proposed. (If the scientific credibility of Ugaritology depended on a consensus in the interpretation of this passage, the discipline would be in deep trouble!) The translation here proposed can only be considered, therefore, as a new attempt at understanding. The principal problem in determining the structure and overall interpretation of the passage lies in determining the actor(s). Indeed, in the present state of conservation of the text, this is not easily done, neither from explicitly indicated subjects nor from grammatical markers of gender and number. Judging from the phrase ^cl qš^cth hwt l²ahw, "on account of his arrows I did not let him live" (lines 15-16) the speaker at that point is ²Aqhatu's killer, either ^cAnatu/YTPN or a party who is here presented as having committed the act. The name ^cAnatu, with her normal title, "girl," is extant in line 5. Is the goddess the speaker/actor in the intervening lines? The fact that the verbal forms are not all clearly marked as 3rd feminine singular seems to indicate that, if ^cAnatu's involvement continues to the end of the passage, she is the speaker rather than the actor. In such a hypothesis, she is explaining to someone how ²Aqhatu died as well as the fact that the bow has disappeared. Judging from the new vocabulary in this passage, if ^cAnatu is the speaker (as I surmise), she is presenting a fanciful account of ²Aqhatu's death, one in which the death occurred in a different fashion from that indicated above in the narrative. In the present state of the text, there is no way to know whether YTPN here bears the blame, being represented by ^cAnatu as a fierce being who acted on his own, or whether the blame is entirely shifted to another party.

⁸² According to CTA, the lacuna in line 6 is long enough to have contained six signs, perhaps one word designating the complement of the verb "return," another the subject of the verb nš².

⁸³ The meaning of tlm is very uncertain; here taken as cognate to Heb. t'li with a broader meaning than that of "quiver" usually ascribed to the Heb. word in its one occurrence in Gen. 27:3.

as (does) a singer the lyre (in) his fingers.⁸⁴
 The "stones of his mouth"⁸⁵ tore,
 his teeth seized,
 they put food in his devouring (maw).⁸⁶
 He tore according to the wishes of the gods,⁸⁷
 then he told the exploits,
 the prince recounted his exploits:⁸⁸
 ḌAqhatu has been put down like a veritable fugitive,
 like a vicious viper in a wall,
 (like) a dog on its stake did I smite him.
 For on account of his bow I smote him,
 on account of his arrows I did not let him live.
 His bow, however, was not given to me,
 and in death [...].⁸⁹
 The first growth of summer has/will [...],
 the ear in the stalk.⁹⁰

The Father Learns of ḌAqhatu's Death (i 19 - ii 93)
 Thereupon, Dānīḏilu the man of Rapaḏu,
 thereupon, the valiant Harnamite [man],
 Arose [and sat at the entrance] to the (city-)gate,
 among [the leaders (sitting) at the threshing
 floor].
 He judged [the widow's case],
 made decisions [regarding the orphan].

y Job 8:12
 z Hos 8:1;
 Jer 12:9;
 Job 39:26-30
 aa Lam 2:11
 bb Gen 37:34;
 Judg 11:35;
 1 Kgs 11:30
 cc Gen 41:26;
 2 Kgs 8:1
 dd Ps 68:5
 ee 1 Kgs 17:1
 ff Gen 7:11;
 2 Sam 1:21;
 Prov 3:20

...⁹¹
 ... the coming of ...
 Looking up, she sees ...⁹²
 On the threshing floor [...] is dried up bends over, droops, do the young ears⁹³ [...].
 Above her father's house hawks were soaring,
 a flock of birds were surveying the scene.⁹⁴
 Pūgatu⁹⁵ began to weep inwardly, to shed tears silently.⁹⁶
 She tore the garment⁹⁷ of Dānīḏilu the man of Rapaḏu,⁹⁸
 the cloak of the valiant Harnamite man.

Dānīḏilu Seeks to Counter the Effects of the Drought (i 38-46)
 Thereupon, Dānīḏilu the man of Rapaḏu, uttered a spell⁹⁹ upon clouds in the heat of the season,¹⁰⁰
 upon the rain that the clouds pour down on the summer fruits,
 upon the dew that falls on the grapes.
 Seven years¹⁰¹ has Baḏlu failed, eight (years) he who rides upon the clouds.¹⁰²
 No dew, no showers,¹⁰³
 no upsurging (of water) from the deeps,¹⁰⁴
 no goodly voice of Baḏlu.¹⁰⁵

⁸⁴ Because of the breaks in the middle of lines 6 and 7, it is uncertain whether ḌAnam is the actor here and precisely what the form of the comparison is in lines 6-7. The suffixes of the third person singular being undifferentiated for gender in the writing system ({h} = either -hu or -ha), it is also uncertain whether the suffix on "hand//fingers" refers to the subject of the sentence or to the elements in the comparative phrases.

⁸⁵ Apparently an idiom for "teeth, fangs."

⁸⁶ In Arabic, the root qmm denotes various verbal notions of devouring, particularly like a ravenous beast.

⁸⁷ The signs {klb ḏilm} can be interpreted either as "the hound of (klb) the gods" or "according to the wishes of (klb) the gods." Were there, in the absence of an explicit statement, clear parallels for a divine canine bearing the blame for ḌAqhatu's death, the former interpretation could be embraced.

⁸⁸ The forms gpr and gprh have received multiple explanations. No convincing etymology having presented itself other than the comparison with gbr, denoting various forms of "might" and "greatness," I interpret the words in question as containing the subject's self-description (as represented by ḌAnam!) of the killer's deed.

⁸⁹ The end of line 17 is damaged and of uncertain interpretation.

⁹⁰ Below, consequences of drought on plant life function as signs of broader misfortune. Because of the lacuna in line 18, the link between this verse and the subsequent text cannot be ascertained. In CTA the lacuna is said to have contained two signs, an assessment that observation of the published photograph seems to uphold; in a note the restoration of y[bl], "it will bear," accepted by several scholars, is preferred. In KTU a single sign is read and presented as partially visible (the reading is yh*, "may it live"). Whatever the correct reading, it appears plausible to interpret the statement, following as it does upon the fallacious account of ḌAqhatu's death, either, as a fallacious assurance that this death will not perturb the patterns of life elsewhere, or as an observation that the process of drying up has already begun.

⁹¹ Approximately two and a half lines are missing, wherein were contained plausibly a reference to the arrival of Dānīḏilu's daughter.

⁹² The verb "to see" here has the form tphn, precluding that the subject be Dānīḏilu. The subject may be (1) "eyes," (2) a plurality of human beings (Dānīḏilu and the judges, Dānīḏilu and whoever has arrived in lines 25-28?), or (3) ḌAqhatu's sister Pūgatu, who plays an increasingly important rôle in the story. The same problem arises below, col. ii, line 76, where a group is not present (apparently ruling out the second possibility here).

⁹³ Judging from the use of pgr as a common noun in Ug., the name should mean simply "Girl." See note 51 to the Kirta text (text 1.102).

⁹⁴ The obvious subject of the verb tmz is Pūgatu, though others take kst, "garment," as subject of the verb in a passive formulation. In the context, as preserved, Dānīḏilu is unaware of ḌAqhatu's death and the tearing of the garment should, therefore, be seen as a reaction to the effects of drought.

⁹⁵ The meaning of the following speech depends largely on the interpretation of the verb yšly, variously taken to mean "to pray" or "to curse." If a strong connotation of "cursing" is intended, then Dānīḏilu is apparently in the following lines calling down seven years of drought, whereas if the meaning is "pray" then he is praying for relief from drought. The previous text, as preserved, has made no reference to seven years of drought already having occurred. On the other hand, no motivation for Dānīḏilu cursing the land with a drought is immediately ascertainable, if one assumes, as the following sections seem to say, that he is unaware of ḌAqhatu's death. The interpretation of the text as referring to the effects of a multiple-year drought assumes some sort of telescoping of time, for though years of drought have occurred, ḌAqhatu's remains are still to be found inside the birds of prey who devoured him. Could the drought have been proleptic, beginning before ḌAqhatu's death and becoming life-threatening only after this death?

⁹⁶ The elements of the phrase hm ḏun are interpreted as from hmm, "be hot," and from ḏny, "meet, be opportune," which gives nouns meaning "occasion, appropriate time."

⁹⁷ The voice of the weather god functions as a metaphor for thunder and hence, by metonymy, for rain.

Dānī²ilu Inspects the Effects of the Drought

(i 46 - ii 74)

When she had torn the garment of Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u,

the cloak of the valiant Harnamite man,

Aloud [Dānī²ilu called] to [his] daughter:

Listen Pūgatu, you who bear [water] on (your)

shoulders,

who gather dew for barley,

who know the paths of the stars:⁹⁸

Saddle the donkey, harness the ass,

put (on it) trappings of silver,

decorations of yellow (gold).

Pūgatu listened, she who bore water on (her)

shoulders,

who gathered dew for barley,

who knew the paths of the stars:

Weeping she saddled the donkey,

weeping she harnessed the ass,

Weeping she lifted her father, placed him on the back of the donkey,

on the beautiful back of the ass.

Dānī²ilu approached,⁹⁹ circulated through his cracked fields,¹⁰⁰

he spied something green⁹⁸ (growing) in the
cracked field,

he spied something green (growing) among the weak (sprouts).

He hugged the green growth (to himself), he kissed
(it and said):

Oh that the green growth would grow tall in the
cracked field,

(Oh that) the green growth would grow tall
among the weak (sprouts).

O plant,¹⁰¹ may the hand of valiant ²Aqhatu gather
you,

put you in the storehouse.¹⁰¹

He approached thereunto, circulated through his desolate fields,

he spied an ear of grain¹⁰² (growing) in the deso-gg 2Kgs 4:42

hh 2Kgs 4:39

ii Gen 41:5-
7; Isa 17:5;
Ruth 2:2

jj Ps 139:4

kk Ezek
21:11

late field,

he spied an ear of grain (growing) among the dried-up (sprouts).

He hugged the ear of grain (to himself), he kissed
(it and said):

Oh that the ear of grain would grow tall in the desolate field,

(Oh that) the ear of grain would grow tall
[among] the dried-up (sprouts).

O plant, may the hand of valiant ²Aqhatu gather
you,

put you in the storehouse.

The Message of Death (ii 75-93)

Hardly had the words left his mouth,

[the utterance] his lips,¹⁰³

When, raising her eyes, she (Pūgatu) sees

(and) there is no [... in] the arrival of two pages,
...¹⁰²

He/they struck [twice] on the head,

three times above the ear.¹⁰³

...¹⁰⁴

They arrive [and say] aloud:

Listen, Dānī²ilu, [man of Rapa²u]:

Valiant ²Aqhatu is dead.

Girl ²Anatu [caused his life force to go out] like [wind]

like spittle his vitality.

Dānī²ilu's Reaction (ii 93 - iv 189)

[His (Dānī²ilu's) feet] totter,

above, [his face perspires, behind], his back muscles [snap,¹⁰⁵ his vertebrae rattle,

his spine] goes weak.¹⁰⁵

[Aloud] he cries [...]

has smitten ...

[...]¹⁰⁶

Dānī²ilu's Rather Unorthodox, Though Empirically Sound, Search for ²Aqhatu's Remains (ii 105 - iii 145)

When he raised [his eyes and looked, he saw

⁹⁸ Pūgatu's standard epithets make of her a specialist in agricultural matters.

⁹⁹ Reading, with many scholars, {ydn <dn>²il}.

¹⁰⁰ Of the terms in the following lines that designate the areas inspected by Dānī²ilu, ²p²alt and ²aklt, only the second is reasonably clear and the first is translated from context. It is assumed that the passage describes the effects of the drought to which Dānī²ilu has just referred and ²aklt is explained, therefore, by the root ²kl, "eat, devour" (the common comparison with Akk. akkullātu is of dubious value, as it denotes something like clods in a field). The words yglm and hmdrt, used to describe the two types of fields (lines 63/65 and 70/72), also pose problems, though the identification of the second with Akk. hamdirātu, "desiccated," is generally accepted (Greenfield 1967:89-90). Yglm is usually compared with Arabic wgl, and legitimately so, but the range of meanings available from the Arabic dictionary is too broad (from "thick green growth" to "parasite") to be of much real help.

¹⁰¹ This passage is one that indicates that Dānī²ilu is unaware of ²Aqhatu's death. (The text as preserved provides no warrant for seeing in Dānī²ilu's reference to ²Aqhatu an expression of hope in the deceased son's resurrection.)

¹⁰² The root yṣ appears twice in line 78 and is plausibly restored at the end of line 77, but the subject is each time uncertain.

¹⁰³ Most interpret this as an explicit reference to ²Aqhatu's death, but it may be an imitative gesture on the part of the messengers (Margalit 1989:383). In any case, their actual arrival and the transmission of the message is not stated explicitly until lines 89-93.

¹⁰⁴ Lines 80-88 are damaged and obscure. The only relatively clear line of verse contains a reference to weeping that is similar to the account of Kirta's weeping (lines 82-83: "he/they pour(s) out tears like quarter-shekel pieces"). If this section is still preparatory to the actual transmission of the message, it is the messengers themselves who weep.

¹⁰⁵ These lines, which represent a formulaic and stylized reaction to bad news, are found in variant forms twice in the Ba²lu epic (CTA 3 iii (D) 29-32; 4 II 16-20 [text 1.86]).

¹⁰⁶ Six-line lacuna.

[hawks] in the clouds.
He cried out [aloud]:
May Ba^clu break [the wings of the hawks],
may Ba^clu break [their pinions],
So that they fall down at my feet,¹⁰⁷
so that I may open up [their innards],¹⁰⁷
[And] see whether there be (there) any fat,
whether there be (there) any bone,
So that I may weep,¹⁰⁸ so that I may bury him, so that I may put (him) in a grave (with) the gods of the earth.¹⁰⁹

Ba^clu Responds (iii 113-120)

Hardly had the words left his mouth,
the utterance his lips,
When Ba^clu broke the wings of the hawks,
Ba^clu broke their pinions.
They fell down at his feet;
he opened up their innards and [looked]:
no fat, no bone.
He cried out aloud:
May <Ba^clu> rebuild^{mm} the wings of the hawks,
may Ba^clu rebuild their pinions.
May the hawks escape and fly away!

Another Try (iii 120-134)

When he raised his eyes and looked, he saw
Hirgabū,¹¹⁰ father of the hawks.
He cried out aloud:
May Ba^clu break Hirgabū's wings,
may Ba^clu break his pinions,
So that he fall down at my feet,
so that I may open up [his] innards,
And see whether there be (there) any fat,
whether there be (there) any [bone],
So that I may weep, so that I may bury him,
so that I may put (him) in a grave (with) the gods [of the earth].

Again Ba^clu Responds (iii 127-134)

[Hardly had the words left his mouth],
the utterance his lips,
When Ba^clu broke Hirgabū's wings,
Ba^clu broke his pinions.

#2 Sam 22:39

mm Josh 6:26;
cf. Gen 2:22;
Jer 24:6

He fell down at his feet;
he opened up his innards and looked:
no fat, no bone.
He cried out aloud:
May Ba^clu rebuild Hirgabū's wings,
may Ba^clu rebuild his pinions,
May Hirgabū escape and fly away!

The Third Time's the Charm (iii 134-145)

When he raised his eyes [and] looked, he saw
Šamlu,¹¹¹ mother of the hawks.
He cried out aloud:
May Ba^clu break Šamlu's wings,
may Ba^clu break her pinions,
So that she fall down at my feet,
so that I may open up her innards,
And see whether there be (there) any fat,
(whether) there be (there) any [bone],
So that I may weep, so that I may bury him,
so that I may put him in a grave (with) the gods
[of the earth].

Yet Again Ba^clu Responds (iii 141-144)

Hardly had the words left his mouth,
the utterance his lips,
When Ba^clu <broke> Šamlu's wings,
Ba^clu broke her pinions,
She fell down [at] his feet.

Dan^cilu Finds ²Aqhatu's Remains and Buries Them
(iii 144-147)

He opened up her innards and looked:
there was fat, there was bone.
He took from them ²Aqhatu;
he wailed,¹¹² slept not a wink,¹¹³
He wept and buried (him), buried him in a dark place, in KNKT/KNRT.¹¹⁴

Dan^cilu Warns Off the Hawks (iii 148-151)

He cried out aloud:
May Ba^clu break the wings of the hawks,
may Ba^clu break their pinions,
If they fly over the grave of my son,
if they do him harm as he sleeps.

¹⁰⁷ Lit., "split their liver."

¹⁰⁸ In this context, and given the regular Ug. strategy of omitting object pronouns, the verb here and below may be in the D-stem, which would be translated "beweep (him)."

¹⁰⁹ Lit., "in the hole of the gods of the earth." Judging from the Ug. king list (RS 24.257; see Pardee 1988:165-178), where each of the past king's names is preceded by the word ²il, "god," the deceased, at least the royal deceased, were thought to be deified at death.

¹¹⁰ It can hardly be a coincidence that Arabic hirgab means "tall" when said of a man and "rapid" when said of a camel.

¹¹¹ Again, it can hardly be a coincidence that šml in Arabic denotes both "hit (with a stick)" and "be hard, solid." Because the name is not marked for feminine gender, it is not purely descriptive in form, consisting plausibly of a verbal noun, though the form is uncertain.

¹¹² The text has {yb}; either emend to {yb <ky>} or interpret as from the root ybb, that denotes a loud cry or wail in several Semitic languages. Alternatively, instead of taking the l before the following word, yqz, as "emphatic," one could consider taking the word divider after yb as misplaced and read ybl, "he bore (him)."

¹¹³ The reading here is disputed. Rather than CTA's {lqz}, the authors of KTU suggest {yqz}, best explained in context as from yqz (Heb. yqz), "awake, be awake, stay awake," i.e., "observe a wake."

¹¹⁴ The reading of this word, which constitutes the principal point of attachment in the text for the "Kinneret" interpretation of the ²Aqhatu text (Margalit 1989), remains in dispute. For a recent epigraphic study, where the reading {knrt} is accepted, see Pitard 1994b.

Dānī²ilu Curses the Environs of ²Aqhatu's Murder
(iii 151 - iv 168)

Spring of [water], may what pertains to you¹¹⁵ be destroyed,

Woe to you, spring of water,
for you must bear the responsibility for¹¹⁶ valiant ²Aqhatu's murder:

(May you) constantly (be) an alien residing (as a refugee)^{aa} in a temple,¹¹⁷ now, for a long time,¹¹⁸ and forever more,
now and for all generations.^{oo}

He took thereafter¹¹⁹ (his) staff (in) his hand,^{pp} traveled to MRRT TĠLL BNR.¹²⁰

(There) he cried out aloud:

Woe to you, MRRT TĠLL BNR,
for you must bear the responsibility for valiant ²Aqhatu's murder:

May your root not grow in the earth,
may (your) top be lowered into the hand of him who would pull you up;¹²¹
now, for a long time, and forever more,
now and for all generations.

He took thereafter (his) staff (in) his hand,
traveled to the city of ²Abilūma, ²Abilūma, city of Prince Yarihu.

(There) he cried out aloud:

Woe to you, city of ²Abilūma,
for you must bear the responsibility for valiant ²Aqhatu's murder:

May Ba^clu make you blind,^{qq} at this very moment and forever more,
now and for all generations.

nn Ps 61:5;
cf. Exod
21:13-14

oo Exod 3:15;
Ps 33:11

pp Gen 38:18;
Exod 12:11

qq Deut
28:28

rr Jer 9:16-17 ss 1 Kgs 18:28;

cf. Deut 14:1;
Jer 16:6

Dānī²ilu Goes Home and Mourns His Son
(iv 169-179)

He took thereafter (his) staff (in) his hand,
Dānī²ilu traveled to his house,
Dānī²ilu arrived at his palace.

The wailing women entered <his house>,¹²²
the mourning women his palace,^{rr}
those who rend their^{ss} skin his court.¹²³

They (all) wept for valiant ²Aqhatu, shed tears for the child of Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa^u.

For days, for months,
for months, for years,
even for seven years

Did they (all) weep for valiant ²Aqhatu, shed tears for the child of Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa^u.

Dānī²ilu Halts the Mourning and Sacrifices
(iv 179-189)

[Then] after seven years

[Dānī²ilu the man of] Rapa^u spoke up,
The valiant [Harnamite] man responded.

He cried aloud:

Leave [my house], wailing women,
my palace, mourning women,
my court, you who rend your skin.

Then he offered the sacrifice of the gods, caused his DĠT-sacrifice¹²⁴ to ascend (as smoke)
to the heavens,
the Harnamite DĠT-sacrifice [of] the stars.

...¹²⁵

¹¹⁵ Since Dānī²ilu is not elsewhere designated as a king, it is unlikely that mlk here has that meaning. In comparison with mhy in the phrase mhy rġmt, "What did she say" (RS [Varia] 4:9 = KTU 2.14), mlk is interpreted as meaning "what is yours" (Renfroe 1986:70), i.e., a compound relative phrase rather than an interrogative one. As the following verse indicates, the reference here is to the humans who depend on the spring. Cp. Deut 21:1-9.

¹¹⁶ d^clk, lit., "who upon you." The same formula recurs below in reference to the city, showing that c need not denote "upon, above" in this formula. It can be interpreted either spatially ("near, next to") or causally ("on your account").

¹¹⁷ Others have seen in the signs {grbt'il} a reference to "leprosy" (see Watson 1989:47-48).

¹¹⁸ The phrase brh is usually identified as a single word, meaning either "fleeing" or "evil" (bibliography in Pardee 1987:381). The first of these meanings would be parallel to gr, "resident alien," in the preceding line, and may well be correct. The phrase in the slot of nt brh in col. iv, line 167, however, is lht, a prepositional phrase meaning "for now." {brh} may be analyzed, therefore, as b rh, with the second word interpreted as from the hollow root rh, "be wide, spacious" (used for a spatial interval in Gen 32:17).

¹¹⁹ The word uħry has received multiple translations (cf. Renfro 1986:71). A word written like this one means "posterity" in the birth omens text RS 24.247 + :39'-40' (text 1.90)—without vowels we cannot know whether they were pronounced alike. Seeing no interpretation of this passage that admits such a meaning here, I translate as an adverb. One could also translate "he prepared the extremity of the staff in his hand," but one wonders why this word was used for so banal a statement if it refers to simple "taking" and what a more complicated "preparing" would involve.

¹²⁰ From context, this long name is that of the nearest settlement, perhaps, judging from the following metaphor for loss of progeny within a lineage (see next note), a tribal center. The name is unknown in administrative texts and etymological interpretations vary. Assuming that the function of the name is literary rather than geographical, one can interpret the first word as a form of the root mrr "be bitter," for "the bitterness of death" is a known idiom.

¹²¹ That the use of tree imagery does not require that mr̄rt tġll bnr be interpreted as the name of a tree is shown by the use of similar imagery in the Bible and in the Eshmunazar inscription (KAI 14) to denote descendants.

¹²² b bth, "in his house," is restored on the basis of the plausible restoration of line 183.

¹²³ This verse refers to tribal or professional wailing women who put on a proper public show of grief, weeping and wailing (bky) and mourning aloud (spd), while the men cut their skin (pgg ġr), like the prophets of Baal in 1 Kgs 18:28 (wayyūgōd dū).

¹²⁴ Dġt is plausibly one of very few Indo-European loanwords in Ug. (Hoffner 1964:66-68; some subsequent bibliography in Pardee 1987:391).

¹²⁵ Lines 187-189 are damaged and, though they deal certainly with music (the words [ms]lm, "cymbals," and mrqdm d š[n], "ivory clappers," are present), it is uncertain who the musicians are and how close the formulae are to those attested later in RS 24.252:3-5 (see Pardee 1988:97-101).

Pūgatu Sets out to Avenge her Brother (iv 190-end)
Pūgatu, she who bore water on (her) shoulders, responded:

My father has offered sacrifice to the gods, has caused his DGT-sacrifice to ascend (as smoke) to the heavens,
the Harnamite DGT-sacrifice of the stars.

Pūgatu Seeks and Receives her Father's Blessing
(iv 194-202)

Now bless me so that I may go in a state of blessedness,¹²⁶ pronounce a benediction upon me so that I may go beatified,

So that I may strike down him who struck down my brother, so that I may finish off him who finished off the (most important) child of my family.¹²⁶

Dānī²ilu the man of Rapa²u responded:

May [Pūgatu] live (long and prosper),¹²⁷ she who bears water on (her) shoulders, who gathers dew for barley,
who knows the paths of the stars.

[...] she will be successful:¹²⁸

She will strike down the one who struck down [her brother],

she will finish off him who finished off the (most important) child of [her] family.

Gen 24:60

Under the Disguise of a Woman, Pūgatu Dresses as a Warrior (iv 202-208)

[...] that falls in the sea,

she washed herself, [hand] and shoulder;¹²⁹

She rouged herself with 'husk of the sea',¹³⁰ which ranges a thousand furlongs in the sea.¹³¹

She [...], she puts on the outfit¹³² of a warrior,

she put [a knife in] her NŠG,¹³³

a sword she put in [her] sheath;

Then over (these) she put on women's garb.

Pūgatu Meets her Brother's Assassin (iv 208-224)

[At] the going forth of the Divine Light, the Sun,

Pūgatu [...] the M²INŠ of the fields;

At the setting-place of the Divine Light, the Sun,

Pūgatu arrived at the tents.¹³⁴

Word is brought to YTPN:

Our hireling¹³⁵ has come to your dwelling,

[the girl] has come to the tents.

YTPN, [the soldier of] the Lady, responded:¹³⁶

Take, give me wine to drink,

take (this) cup in my hand,

(this) goblet in my right hand.

So Pūgatu took, gave him wine to drink,

took [the cup] from his hand,

the goblet from his right hand.

YTPN, the soldier of the Lady, responded:

From (this very) wine does ²IL²A¹³⁷ drink, the god

¹²⁶ In the phrase ²l²umty, the second word may be either a by-form of ²um, "mother," or, as one would expect, the word for "tribe, clan" (< "mother's lineage"). In the latter case, ²l, which strictu sensu means "suckling," would denote "child."

¹²⁷ The idiom here is the same as above addressed to Dānī²ilu (see note 13), "as to (her) throat, may she live."

¹²⁸ The reading and interpretation of this line are uncertain; this version is based on a comparison with CTA 17 i 39 (hw there and hy here seem to mark the gender distinction).

¹²⁹ KTU read, hesitantly, w tkm at the beginning of line 204, a formula different from that found in the Kirta text (²d tkm), which makes reconstruction difficult at the end of line 203. The restoration of yd at the end of line 203 produces a formula similar to that attested in the Kirta text, while translating trthš reflexively makes the explanation of the singular form tkm easier (cf. Margalit 1989:165).

¹³⁰ It has been commonly accepted since De Moor 1968 that the reference is to purple dye, produced from several species of sea mollusk. It is uncertain, however, (1) whether the mollusk would be designated as "husk/envelope of the sea" (the ancients knew well that the actual color came from the organism living inside the shell); (2) whether an idiom used elsewhere for great distances (²alp šd—see above, note 25 and note 21 to the Ba²lu text [1.86]) would be used for the range (see following note) of the mollusk; (3) whether Pūgatu would be depicted as putting royal purple dye on her skin, and (4) whether that act would be expressed by the root ²dm, "red" (various aspects of dying and the two principal shades of "purple" are designated by ²iqn²u and ²phm in Ug.).

¹³¹ Lit., "which a thousand šd is its exiting (²z²uh) in the sea." It is possible, as others have proposed, that a noun parallel to šlp is to be reconstructed at the end of line 204; the antecedent of the relative pronoun would have in that case been this noun.

¹³² The word here and for women's garb below is npš, the same as designated the father's outfit needing washing in the list of the duties of the good son (see above, note 11).

¹³³ Because nšg denotes a specific accoutrement, it is impossible to do more than guess at this meaning. Arabic nsg, "to weave," may indicate that the item in question was woven, but that generality could apply to a type of garment or to a type of carrier (cf. the parallel term t²rt, "sheath").

¹³⁴ The structure of the formula šb²//²rb is that of the merismus, rather than of parallelism (for bibliography see Pardee 1987:441). Unfortunately the obscurity of the second line of these two verses makes it difficult to determine how the merismus is set up. Judging from m²rb, the basic type of reference should be spatial ("east ... west") rather than temporal ("morning ... evening"). This is corroborated by the parallelism of "fields" and "tents." The meaning of m²inš is, however, uncertain and the verb in that line has disappeared. From the other indicators, one can posit that Pūgatu was traveling from east to west, through fields towards a settlement or encampment. The solar imagery may imply a day's journey as well.

¹³⁵ For lack of vowels it is uncertain whether Pūgatu is being described as the one who does the hiring or as the one who is hired. The distinction is important, for in the following line some restore nt, assuming on the basis of the interpretation of ²agrm as "she who hired us," that Pūgatu has been mistaken for the goddess, while others restore pgr, interpreting ²agrm as "she whom we have hired," perhaps a reference to the girl as a camp follower. The verse, in the latter interpretation, may have contained a double reversal of expectations: ²gr used passively rather than actively, pgr meaning "girl" rather than "Pūgatu" (i.e., the common noun rather than the name of ²Aqhatu's sister).

¹³⁶ Because of the ambiguities inherent in the Ug. writing system, it is uncertain whether the following speech is addressed to the ones who announced Pūgatu's coming or to the girl herself (the translation proposed).

¹³⁷ Most authorities emend to {²iln}, a divine name attested elsewhere.

of the [lady],
 the god who created tent-dwellings.
 The hand that struck down valiant ²Aqhatu shall strike down by the thousands the enemies
 of the lady.
 [He who] assigned workmen (to make) tents¹³⁸
 [...]

[...] his/her heart like a serpent [...] ¹³⁹
 A second time she served the mixture, served him drink [...]

Colophon

Here is where to resume the story.¹⁴⁰

¹³⁸ The resemblance between hršm l ʿahlm (line 222) and yqny ddm (line 220) is too great to be ignored.

¹³⁹ Perhaps a reference to Pūgatu taking a crafty line of behavior.

¹⁴⁰ The form of the colophon here is not that in which the scribe identifies himself, but an indication of how the story is to be taken up on the next tablet (Margalit 1984:178-179).

REFERENCES

Text: CTA 17-19; KTU 1.17-19. Translations and studies: Aitken 1990; Albright 1945; 1953; Albright and Mendenhall 1942; Arnaud 1985-86; Caquot 1985; Caquot, Sznycer, and Herdner 1974; Clifford 1972; Dijkstra and de Moor 1975; Dressler 1984; Driver 1956; Elliott 1991; Gibson 1977; Gordon 1977; Greenfield 1967; Herdner 1963; Hillers 1973; Hoffner 1964; Margalit 1983; 1984; 1989; de Moor 1968; 1987; Nougayrol 1970; del Olmo Lete 1981; Pardee 1977:53-56; 1987; 1988a; 1989-90; 1995; Parker 1989; Pitard 1994a; 1994b; Rainey 1971; Renfroe 1986; van Soldt 1989; Tropper 1989; Tsevat 1971; Virolleaud 1936b; Walls 1992; Watson 1976; 1989a; 1990a; Xella 1976:61-91.

2. HISTORIOGRAPHY

UGARITIC KING LIST (1.104)

K. Lawson Younger, Jr.

This poorly preserved, enigmatic tablet (RS 24.257 = Ugaritica 5.5 = KTU 1.113) contains a retrograde¹ list of the kings of Ugarit in two columns on its verso. The very broken recto seems to preserve some sort of ritual, consistently alternating between two musical instruments (tp "a tambourine/drum" and tlb "a flute) and the word ln^cm "for the Pleasant One."

What the exact relationship is (if any) between the recto and the verso has fueled debate over the tablet's genre. Moreover, the use of the divine determinative ilu before each royal name in the verso has also caused some scholars to see affiliations with a cult of the royal ancestors at Ugarit. For the most recent discussions see Lewis 1989:47-52; del Olmo Lete 1986; Pardee 1988a:165-178; 1996:276; and Schmidt 1994:67-71.

RECTO

- | | |
|----|---|
| 1 | [...] and his tambourine is high
[...] the peoples, for the Pleasant One |
| | [...] and the flutes are high
[...] for the Pleasant One. |
| 5 | [...] and his tambourine is high
[...] for the Pleasant One.
[...] arrive |
| | [...] the flutes are high
[...] for the Pleasant One. |
| 10 | [...] the Pleasant One. |
| | []x[] |
| | ... |

¹ Kitchen (1977) cites Assyrian and Egyptian evidence of retrograde king lists. Also see most recently Schmidt 1994:67-71.

	VERSO
Left		Right
(12') [		] []
(13') [		the divine ³ ^c Ammittamru ⁴
(14') [		the divine Ni]qmepa ^c
(15') [		the divine ^c Ammu <rā>pi ²
(16') [²	]]	the divine ² Ibirānu
(17') [	]]	the divine Ya ^c duraddu
(18') [	]]	the divine Niqmepa ^c
(19') [	]] ^p	the divine ² Ibirānu
(20') [	]d[	the divine ^c Ammurāpi ²
(21') [the divine Niq]mepa ^c		[the divine] Niqmepa ^c
(22') [the divine ^c Ammi]ttamru		the divine ² Ibirā[nu]
(23') [	]]	the divine Niqmepa ^c
(24') [	]]	the divine ² Ibirānu
(25') [	]]	the divine Niqmaddu
(26') [	]] ^q	the divine Yaqaru

² From line 16 to line 19 there is a double vertical line between the columns.

³ Lewis suggests that "it is safe to say that, upon death, a ruler was not deified in the full sense of becoming one of the gods who made up the Ug. pantheon ... upon death a ruler was grouped with his deceased ancestors and was referred to as an ilu. These ilu's were not worshipped in the same way that El or Baal were and we find no elaborate cult attempting to make them into high gods ... former rulers are singled out and 'honored' much in the same way as they were in life (compare the proper burial accorded to Jezebel in 2 Kings 9:34 'because she was a king's daughter')" (1989:49-51).

⁴ For a recent discussion of the identification of each king in the list see Aboud 1994:11-26, 40.

REFERENCES

*KTU*²:128-129; TUAT 1985 1:496-497; Aboud 1994:3-4; Kitchen 1977; Lewis 1989:47-52; del Olmo Lete 1986a; Pardee 1988a:165-178; 1996; Schmidt 1994:67-71; de Tarragon 1980; Virolleaud 1968; Wilson 1977; Xella 1981.

3. REPHA²IM TEXTS

THE PATRONS OF THE UGARITIC DYNASTY (KTU 1.161) (1.105)

Baruch A. Levine, Jean-Michel de Tarragon, Anne Robertson

KTU 1.161 is a canonical liturgy, commemorating the accession of the last king of Ugarit, Ammurapi (III), and his queen, Tharyelli. It was first published by Caquot (1975), working only from a cast of the uncleaned tablet. Subsequently, six photographs appeared in Ugaritica 7, plates VII-IX. Bordeuil and Pardee (1982) prepared a new edition of KTU 1.161 based, for the first time, on a careful examination of the tablet in Aleppo. It is this version that serves as the basis for the translation presented here.

INTRODUCTION: The Title (line 1)

The written record of the sacred celebration¹ [in honor] of the Patrons:^{a 2}

a Num 14:9;
Jer 48:45;
Ps 121:5-6;
Lam 4:20

The Invitation to the Rephaim (lines 2-10)

You have summoned³ the Rephaim^b of the netherworld;⁴

b Isa 14:9; 26:14; Ps 88:11

¹ Ug. dbh, like Heb. zebah, may designate a sacred celebration of many parts. Cf. KTU 1.148:1: dbh spn "the sacred celebration in honor of Saphan." See Exod 12:27; 1 Sam 9:12; 20:29; 2 Kgs 10:19.

² Ug. zlm, written with the variant -z-, instead of the usual šade. Pitard 1978 was the first to translate zlm "protectors," an interpretation that yielded "Patrons." Thus, the Israelites are told that the Canaanites can be defeated, because "their protector (šillam) has departed from them, but YHWH remains with us" (Num 14:9b). Similar meanings occur in Akk. (CAD § 189, s.v. šillu, meaning 5). In Aram., the cognate šl "shadow," also connotes "protection" (Greenfield-Porten 1982:30, 61, Word List, s.v. šl). Thus, "shade" from the scorching sun became a metaphor for the shelter and protection provided by gods and kings. On the same basis, the long departed ancestors of the Ug. kings were their "Patrons," the guarantors of kingship and succession.

³ The given translation follows Caquot 1975, and Pope 1977:177 in taking the form qrīm as a perfect, second person plural "You have summoned," whereas Pitard 1978 takes it as a perfect, first person singular "I have summoned," with enclitic mem. The same of uncertainty remains as to the precise form represented by qbitm "You have commanded." The verb qba is cognate with Akk. qabû "to speak, command" (CAD Q, 34, s.v. qabû, meaning 4).

⁴ The translation "the Rephaim of the netherworld" for Ug. rpi arš, takes the singular, oblique form, rpi, as a collective. The nominative

You have commanded the the Council of the Didanites!⁵

Summon ULKN, Raph[a]

Summon TRMN, Raph[a]

Summon SDN-w-RDN, [Rapha!]⁶

Summon TR-LLMN, [Rapha!]

[All] summon the most ancient Rephaim!

You have summoned the Rephaim of the netherworld!

You have commanded the Council of the Didanites!

The Invitation to Departed Kings (lines 11-12)

Summon Ammishtamru, the King!

Summon, as well, Niqmaddu, the King!⁷

The Lamentation (lines 13-17)

O, throne of Niqmaddu — weep!

Let his footstool shed tears!

It front of it⁸ — let the royal table weep;

Let it swallow its tears.

Tears, and [more] tears; many tears!⁹

Shapash is Sent to Locate the Departed Kings in the Netherworld (lines 18-26), Shine bright,¹⁰ O Shapash!

Shine bright, O great luminary!

On high Shapash cries out:

After your lord, from the throne;¹¹

c Gen 37:35

d 1 Sam 25:6;

1 Kgs 2:33;

Isa 57:19;

1 Chr 12:19

After your lord, to the netherworld descend!¹²

To the netherworld descend;

And go down low into the earth.

Below is SDN-w-RDN;¹²

Below is TR-KLLMN;

Below are the the most ancient Rephaim.

Below is Ammishtamru, the King;

Below is Niqmaddu, the King, as well.

Sacrifices in Honor of the New King (lines 27-30)

Once — offer a benefaction.¹³

A second time — offer a benefaction.

A third time — offer a benefaction.

A fourth time — offer a benefaction.

A fifth time — offer a benefaction.

A sixth time — offer a benefaction.

A seventh time — offer a benefaction.

You shall present a bird.

Blessings (lines 31-34)

Hail!¹⁴

Hail, Ammurapi!

And hail to his household!¹⁴

Hail, [Tha]ryelli!¹⁵

Hail to her household!

Hail, Ugarit!

Hail to her gates!

singular form is rpū, here taken to be in the accusative, rp[a]. Kings and heroes buried in the earth were eventually beatified. For a discussion of this theme at Ugarit and in biblical literature see de Moor 1976; Pope 1977; Levine and de Tarragon 1984.

⁵ Ug. qbs ddn "the council of the Didanites" parallels phr qbs dtn "the assembled council of the Ditanites" in the Keret epic (KTU 1.15, iii 4,15). Both entities are associated with the Rephaim. The word Didānu, also written Ditānu and Tidānu(m), refers to a tribe, or large group, perhaps composed of Amorites or neighbors of the Amorites, who inhabited Northeastern Syria in earlier times. To judge from our text and from the Keret epic, the Ugaritians traced their origins to the Didanu people, and thus desired the presence of the Council of Didanites at the accession of their kings. Levine-de Tarragon 1984:654-656; Buccellati 1966:243ff; and Astour 1973.

⁶ The identities of the divine, dead kings, ULKN, TRMN, SDN-w-RDN, and TR-LLMN are unknown, except that they are numbered among the Rephaim.

⁷ Reference is to Niqmaddu III, the father of Ammurapi III, the last king of Ugarit. In the Ug. king list, Niqmaddu III was immediately preceded by a certain Ibiranu, not by Ammistamru II, the king named in the present text. It is likely that our text is summoning only the major kings of the Ug. dynasty to the coronation of Ammurapi III. Another possibility is that Ibiranu and Niqmaddu III were brothers, or co-regents. Kitchen 1977; Healey 1978.

⁸ Ug. lphn could alternatively be taken to mean "in front of him," namely, in front of Niqmaddu, himself.

⁹ Ug. dmu may represent a metathesis of dm^ct "tears," resonating the prothetic form udm^ct "tears" in the previous line. Others have derived it from a cognate of Arabic adima "to be lacking, without vegetation," hence: "desolation" Lane 1874 Book 1/5:1975-1976.

¹⁰ Ug. išhn is to be read iššahnt "be warming, bright", an N-stem imperative, fem. sing., addressed to the goddess Shapash. Akk. attests a cognate šahānu "to become warm, to warm — the earth" (CAD Š 1:78, s.v. šahānu).

¹¹ The Ug. text reads l ksh, a scribal error, to be corrected to l ksi "from the throne."

¹² Ug. tht is taken as a cognate of Heb. tahat "below, underneath."

¹³ Ug. l^cy "offer a benefaction" is a verbal form, denominative of l^c a type of sacrificial offering, listed in KTU 1.39, line 1. The sense of "benefaction" derives from the epithet l^c "noble, gracious" as in krt l^c "Keret, the noble" in KTU 1.14, IV, 37, a cognate of Heb. šō^ca "a generous, noble person" (Job 30:24). A noble person offers a benefaction, just as, in Heb. usage, the nāḏib "generous, noble person," offers a sacrifice called nedābāh "free-will offering" (Isa 32:5). In form, l^cy may be read as a D-stem, plural imperative, la^ccāyū, or as an infinitive absolute, la^ccāyū, with essentially the same meaning.

¹⁴ The text actually reads ba(!)h, corrected with considerable certainty to bth "his household."

¹⁵ The name Tharyelli, Ug. [t]ryl, is partially restored, but fairly certain. It is clearly written and complete in KTU 2.14, line 8, an official letter. One would expect it to be the name of Ammurapi's queen. It occurs as the name of a donor of a stele to Dagan in KTU 6.13, restored [t]ryl, as here, and this name has been equated with Akk. Šarelli, a queen of Ugarit named in an Akk. business document from Ugarit, Ugaritica 5:159. The same identification is probable in Ugaritica 5:161. Laroche 1976.

REFERENCES

Text: KTU 1.161; Ugaritica 5 vii; Studies: Astour 1973; Bordreuil and Pardee 1982; Buccellati 1966; Caquot 1975; Greenfield and Porten 1982; Healey 1978; Kitchen 1977; Lane 1874; Laroche 1976-77; Levine and de Tarragon 1984; de Moor 1976; Pitard 1978; Pope 1977a.

C. INDIVIDUAL FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. INSTRUCTIONS

HIPPIATRIC TEXTS (1.106)

Chaim Cohen

The Ugaritic hippiatric texts, dating from the fourteenth to the twelfth centuries BCE, have been known to the scholarly world since 1934, when the first two fragmentary copies (here referred to as B,C) were published by C. Virolleaud. Only in 1968, however, when the best preserved copy (here referred to as A) was first published in Ugaritica V, did it become clear that all three texts were in fact copies of the same veterinary procedural (or professional instruction) text, dealing with the therapeutic treatment of sick horses and consisting of a title and ten (copies B and C: nine) structurally parallel sections, demarcated by the underscoring of the last line of each division.¹ Since then, a fourth fragmentary text (here referred to as D) was published in *KTU*¹ in 1976 and this has been followed by two modern critical editions of all four texts by Cohen and Sivan (1983) and Pardee (1985).² Methodologically, these texts are among the most difficult of the Ugaritic texts to interpret since the language is highly technical and many of the terms are nowhere else extant in Ugaritic.³ On the other hand, the very clear tripartite structure of each of the ten sections (Symptoms, Remedy-Components and Their Preparation, The Administering of the Remedy [constant for all ten sections]) as well as the existence of four copies of the same text, provide much more textual and structural evidence than is usually available. A major comparative tool is provided by the occurrence of many of these technical terms (both symptoms and remedy-components) in Akkadian medical texts and plant and drug lists. The few extant Akkadian hippiatric passages and the classical Greek and Latin hippiatric texts have also been consulted.

The following translation refers to the "new revised composite text of UHT" established by C. Cohen which will appear in UF 28 together with extensive commentary (Cohen 1997).

Commas have been used in this translation only to separate the three parts of each section according to the formal tripartite structure of this text (see Cohen and Sivan 1983:10, 48-51).

Title (1)

Treatise^a concerning the well-being^b (health) of horses:

^a Exod 24:7;
Num 21:14;
Josh 10:13;
2 Sam 1:18;

Section One (2-4)

If^c a horse roars,^d a št-measure of the scorpion-like

1 Kgs 8:13 (LXX); 11:41; 14:19,29; Nah 1:1; Esth 2:23; 6:1; 10:2; Neh 7:5; 1 Chr 9:1;
2 Chr 16:11; 25:26 b e.g., Prov 3:17 (contrast 2:18); 24:25; Job 36:11 c) e.g., Exod 21:2,7;
Lev 2:1,4 d 2 Sam 22:14-16 = Ps 18:14-16; 104:5-9; Job 26:11

¹ For the importance of Copy A (= RS 17.120; KTU 1.85; Cohen and Sivan 1983:Text A; Pardee 1985:Tablette 1) in restoring the other three texts and in demonstrating that all four are copies of the same hippiatric text, see already CTA 1:245 and esp. Fronzaroli 1975:38; Cohen and Sivan 1983:1; Pardee 1985:14-16. For the typology, see especially Cohen and Sivan 1983:1-2; Pardee 1985:13-14; Mack-Fisher 1990. Here it should be emphasized that seven Akk. hippiatric sections and related references have also been found, in some cases embedded in between the "regular human" sections of various Akk. medical texts (see Pardee 1985:appendix III; Stol 1986:174). For a full edition and translation of the two most important Akk. hippiatric sections (BAM 159:V:33-36,37-47) see Cohen 1983. See also Köcher BAM xiv-xvi; Fronzaroli 1975:44 and n. 40; Stol 1986:174; and most recently Biggs 1990:629b. Regarding the underscored lines see Fronzaroli 1975:41 and nn. 22-27; Cohen and Sivan 1983:8, 11; Pardee 1985:15, 26, n.39. Section eight was omitted from copies B and C and contains somewhat different symptom formulations in A and D (Pardee 1985:15, 27, n. 41). Thus, the four copies reflect divergent traditions only concerning section eight in this otherwise canonical Ug. hippiatric text. See in general Hallo 1991.

² Besides the many different interpretations of individual technical terms, the two main differences in these two critical editions are as follows: a) In Cohen and Sivan, the readings of *KTU*¹ were used (in almost all cases) as the basis for establishing a composite text of paragraphs 1-7 and 10, with an apparatus listing all significant variants in the four copies and with a provisional translation of that text. The Pardee edition contains what appear to be far superior readings of paragraphs 8-9 together with collations undertaken by Prof. Pardee of all four copies. The readings of all four texts are presented individually with RS 17.120 being considered the main standard text, which is also the only one translated. See Pardee 1985:12-13, 20-37. b) In Cohen and Sivan, much more emphasis was placed on utilizing the formal structure of the composite text as crucial evidence for determining the approximate usage and meaning of individual terms. See Cohen and Sivan 1983:48-51. Neither of these two critical editions took the other into consideration. The present translation is of an unpublished "new revised composite text of UHT" incorporating virtually all of Pardee's new readings and most of his restorations in accordance with the formal structure of the composite text as established in the Cohen-Sivan edition. See now Cohen 1997.

³ See Fronzaroli 1975:40, 45-46; Cohen and Sivan 1983:1-3; Pardee 1985:13-14.

plant should be pulverized^e and liquified^f either in a solution^g of dalīqātu-groats or of mundū-groats, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Two (5-6)

If a horse discharges/d a putrid liquid, the mēmētu-plant and a bšql-measure ^h of the rgz-tree/plant should be pulverized together, ⁱ and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Three (7-8)

Or if a horse discharges/d a putrid liquid, grain and bitter almond should be pulverized together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Four (9-11)

If a horse does not defecate or urinate,^j the sap of a št-measure of the qulqullānu-tree/plant and a št-measure of the rgz-tree/plant should be pulverized together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Five (12-14)

If a horse is seized^k with "pain," a št-measure of average quality mkšr and a št-measure of the šakirū-plant and the "fruit" of the lettuce plant should be pulverized together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Six (15-17)

Or if a horse is seized with "pain," the nīnū-plant and a št-measure of average quality mkšr and a št-measure of the urānu-plant of hmr-quality should

^e Num 11:7-8

^f Exod 16:21

^g Isa 5:22;
Ps 102:10;
Prov 9:2,5

^h 2 Kgs 4:42

ⁱ Deut 22:11;
Isa 41:19;
60:13

^j 1 Sam 25:22, 34; 1 Kgs 14:10; 16:11; 21:21; 2 Kgs 9:8; 18:27 = Isa 36:12

^k Exod 15:14, 15; 2 Sam 1:9; Isa 21:3; 33:14; Jer 13:21; 49:24; Ps 48:7; 119:53; Job 21:6; 30:16

^l Exod 16:31; Num 11:7

^m Ezek 47:12

ⁿ 1 Sam 30:12; 2 Kgs 20:7; Isa 38:21

^o 1 Sam 30:12

be pulverized together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Seven (18-19)

If a horse yr²aš, a št-measure of the pillū/billū-plant of qt-quality should be pulverized, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

{Section Eight (20-22)}

Or if a horse [discharges/d a putrid liquid and is/was leth]argic(?), coriander^l from the hills {and a št-measure of ... and} the leaves^m of [...] should be pulverized [together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured [into his nose.]]

Section Nine (23-29)

Or if a horse roars, [...] of the juniper-tree [and] the "fruit" of the trb-tree/plant <and> the seed ⁱ of the [bitter al]mond similar to ⁱ coriander [and(?) similar to fennel(?) [and] the mēmētu-plant and a št-measure of the nīnū-plant and the "fruit" of the abukkātu-plant and a št-measure of the sc[orpi[on-like plant] <<(and) the mēmētu plant >> (?) and the "fruit" of the lettuce-plant and a bšql-measure of the urānu-plant of hmr-quality should be pulverized togeth[er], and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

Section Ten (30-32)

<Or> if  yr²aš and ykh^p incessantly, old fig-cakesⁿ and old raisins^o and flour of groats should be pulverized together, and it (the remedy) should (then) be poured into his nose.

REFERENCES

Text: CTA 160-161 (B,C including copies and photos); UT 55-56 (B,C); Ugaritica 5:625-627 - figures 16, 16A, 16B (Photo of A); KTU¹ 1.85; 1.71; 1.72; 1.97 (A,B,C,D); Cohen and Sivan 1983 - composite edition of lines 1-19, 30-32; Pardee 1985 - latest readings, copies and photos (A,B,C,D). Studies: Biggs 1990; Cohen 1983; 1997; Cohen and Sivan 1983; Fronzaroli 1975; Hallo 1991; Köcher BAM xiv-xvi; Mack-Fisher 1990; Pardee 1985; Stol 1979.

2. SCHOOL TEXTS

ABECEDARIES (1.107)

Aaron Demsky

The alphabet was invented in Canaan ca. 1700 BCE, during the Middle Bronze IIB period, a time of increased urbanization and cross cultural fertilization. This invention was probably the result of reflective thought of a local Canaanite scribe familiar with the scripts of the major powers, i.e., Akkadian cuneiform and most likely Egyptian hieroglyphic and hieratic writing. These latter scripts were logo-syllabic in nature, so that each sign represented a word/idea and/or a syllable thus creating a writing system of hundreds of signs. The alphabetic revolution was the radical reduction of graphemes to less than thirty in number. Once the consonantal signs could be memorized in a standard order this revolution in visual communication would have resounding effects on all aspects of society, religion and education in the ancient world. It would not be far-fetched to say that the abecedar, i.e., the conventional order of the letters, is the fundamental building block of western literacy.

There is a difference of opinion among scholars regarding the nature of the Semitic alphabet prior to its adoption by the Greeks who gave letter form to the vowels. There are those who argue the novelty of a true alphabet having reduced writing to a pure consonantal system (e.g., A. H. Gardiner, W. F. Albright, F. M. Cross, J. Naveh,

A. R. Millard, A. Demsky). On the other hand, others maintain that the Semitic alphabet is actually a syllabic system of consonant plus any vowel (I. J. Gelb, G. R. Driver, S. Yeivin, W. W. Hallo). Whatever the case, the basic letter order is documented from Ugarit of the 14th century BCE, which probably indicates also the antiquity of the letter names and method of instruction.

1. The Order of the Letters

There are two basic systems for ordering the letters of the alphabet. The first and most familiar is generally called the Northwest Semitic order. It is found already in Ugaritic cuneiform and in the linear scripts used for Canaanite and Aramaic from which were derived the Greek, Latin and Etruscan forms in the west and classical Arabic in the south. It is this basic sequence which has given us the terms aleph-bet in Hebrew, alpha beta in Greek, abecedarium in Latin and abgedhawa in Arabic.

The second system is the so-called South Semitic order known from South Arabic inscriptions (5th century BCE) and from medieval Ethiopic (Geez) manuscripts. However, recent research has shown that this too was an alternate sequence known and practiced in the scribal schools of ancient Canaan. A. G. Lundin (1987b) deciphered this order on a 13th century BCE alphabetic cuneiform tablet discovered in the 1930's at Tel Beth Shelesh. With the stabilization of the alphabet at the beginning of the Iron Age, the ABC order dominated and caused the second HLHM sequence to be displaced to the periphery of the Semitic world, though there might have been some later contact between the two (Knauf 1985:204-206).

The Ugaritic abecedar with twenty-seven individual signs represents the full phonetic range of that language, which may have been also the original Proto-Canaanite alphabet (Lundin 1987a). Local scribes probably added three more signs at the end for greater clarity in writing other languages in use at Ugarit. Many complete and incomplete abecedaria have been found in Israel from the Iron Age down to the Roman period; they were written by professional writers as well as by semi-literates. Sometimes they were engraved on stone, even in the negative by seal cutters practicing their trade, sometimes they were written in ink on shards. For some it was a learning exercise and for others it was a way to pass time.

The Izbet Sartah ostrakon (ca. 1200) is worth special attention for it is the oldest reduced twenty-two letter alphabet inscribed in the Proto-Canaanite script (Demsky 1977; 1986). This beginner's exercise tablet, written from left to right, is also peculiar in that some of the letters are transposed: the heth precedes the zayin and the pe comes before the ain. While one might assume this to be a child's sloppiness, the pe-ain sequence is found in the alphabetic acrostics of Lamentations 2, 3 and 4, as well as in the triple abecedar in the Hebrew script found at Kuntillet Ajrud (early 8th century BCE) indicating a contemporary secondary Israelite scribal tradition of ordering the letters.

The Greek alphabet reflects the conservative nature of a literate education in that it preserves the basic order of the Canaanite alphabet as well as the traditional (and the unintelligible) Semitic names. At the same time, it also demonstrates the ability of a recipient culture, especially a geographically distant, non-dependent one, to deviate from the norm in adapting the alphabet to its own phonetic stock, which in this case probably led to the innovative visualization of the vowels. As in the Ugaritic alphabet, the Greeks added additional letters at the end of the list.

The classical Arabic alphabet, derived from the twenty-two letter Aramaic through the Nabataean script (Healey 1990-91), was six letters short of its phonemic range. This difficulty was resolved by adding diacritical points to the available forms, similar to the shin/sin distinction in Hebrew. The Arabic alphabet was then reordered according to the external shape of the letters. Still one can discern the underlying influence of the traditional Aramaic abecedar when new forms appear, e.g., alf, ba, gim, dal ... yn, fa ... kaf, lam, mim, nun ... he, waw, ya and the use of the abgedhawa sequence to represent numerals.

The North Semitic abecedar and its derivatives

Ugaritic: ²a b g h d h w z h t y k l m n z s ^cp q r t g t + ²i ²u s

Standard Canaanite: ²b g d h w z h t y k l m n s ^cp q r s t

Izbet Sartah: ²b g d h w h z t y k l m n s p ^cs q r s t

Greek: Α Β Γ Δ Ε Ζ Η Θ Ι Κ Λ Μ Ν Ξ Ο Π Ρ Σ Τ + Υ Φ Χ Ψ Ω

Arabic: ²b t t g h h d d r z s s s d t z ^cg f q k l m n h w y

The South Semitic abecedaries

South Arabic: h l h m q w s r g/b t s k n h s f ^cd g d b/g t z d y t s/z

Ethiopic: h l h m s r s q b t h n ²k w ^cz y d g t p s d f p s

2. The Letter Names

The names of the letters seem to be an integral part of the abecedar, preserving through a mnemonic ditty the traditional order. The letter sequence was not determined in antiquity by either similarity of shape or phonetic origins. In his decipherment of the Proto-Sinaitic script, A. H. Gardiner (1916) proposed the acrophonic principle where the pictographic form of the letter was chosen because it represented an object whose name began with the desired consonant, e.g., "house," in Canaanite bet, represents the phoneme b. This would mean that the names go back to the very invention of the alphabet. Cross and Lambdin (1960) published an exercise tablet from Ugarit which gives the initial syllable in Akkadian cuneiform for the names of the alphabet. As they have shown these initial syllables correspond to the Canaanite letter names.

This observation has been challenged by W. W. Hallo (1958), who has argued on the basis of Isa 28:9-13 that the names were actually the consonant plus a helping sound like aw, e.g., waw, šaw, qaw, taw (cf. Greek mu, nu). Following this possibility, we might suggest that in certain scribal schools some of the names were composed by adding a t to the initial consonant, e.g., bet, het, tet and Greek zeta or by seeking words that begin and end in the same consonant, e.g., waw, mem, nun and possibly gag*, iit* šiš* (cf. in rabbinic literature the late names hehin, pepin, b. Šabb. 103b). It seems therefore that letter names were somewhat fluid, especially as the form of the signs became simplified and chronologically removed from the original pictograph.

The letter names of the Hebrew alphabet are first recorded in the Greek Septuagint of the alphabetic acrostic Psalm 119, reflecting the nomenclature of the third century BCE at the latest. An examination of the names will show two linguistic sources that probably reflect the adoption of the Aramaic script by the Jews no later than this century. We can determine the late non-Canaanite names either by the pronunciation of the diphthong (ain, zain) or by the choice of an Aramaic word instead of the Canaanite form preserved in the Greek alphabet, e.g., zain instead of zet or resh instead of ro(sh) and nun instead of nahash as in Ethiopic.

3. Exercises

Since learning the alphabet was a function of a formal curriculum, we can assume that there were different exercises for memorizing the order of the letters already at an early period. An exercise that is already documented in the sixth century BCE is the ATBaSh exercise which is based on the equal division of the twenty-two letters of the alphabet, correlating the first and last letter, the second and 21st letter and so on. Jeremiah (25:25,26; 51:1,41) uses this elementary school exercise to create audience participation in comprehending the intent of his prophesy by substituting the corresponding letters: ššk ↔ bbl; lškmy ↔ kšdym; zmry for zmky ↔ ylm (i.e., Elam).

For variety, the teachers devised the ALBaM exercise, where the first and twelfth letters, etc. were matched, e.g., bg ↔ lmn. In the Latin primary school one could therefore learn his abecedarium or the elementum, which gave rise to the term elementary (school) (Coogan 1974). Further variations and combinations were devised and are noted in the classical period for Hebrew (b. Šabb. 104), Greek (Jerome) and Latin (Quintilian).

4. Application of the Abecedarium

In antiquity, the fixed abecedarium created new opportunities for literary expression and memory aids especially in three areas:

a) the organization of information and the placing of objects in their proper order according to the alphabet. E. Puech (1980) has published a second century CE document that contains an abecedarium in addition to an incomplete alphabetized list of personal names. It seems from Zech 6:10, 14 that the prophet and his audience also were using the alphabet to order and remember pertinent data already in the late 6th century BCE (Demskey 1981). Occasional inscriptions of letters of the alphabet found on the back of ivory pieces from Samaria or on stone gutters or pillars show that the alphabet had become knowledge of joiners and masons and their tool for facilitating their work.

b) aesthetics as expressed in writing alphabetic acrostic poetry. This literary technique allows the biblical poet to strive for completeness and totality (cf. me^aalef ve^aad taw, b. Šabb 55a; b. Abod. Zar.), as well as challenging the poet's ability to express himself within the structural demands of the alphabet, which would be similar to composing a haiku or a sonnet. There is variation in the limited number of acrostic poems, for instance some are complete or partially incomplete and others are fragmentary (Nah 1:1-11; Pss 9-10). Furthermore, Lam 3 is a triple acrostic while Ps 119 is eightfold. It is possible that this literary form influenced the length of other compositions, limiting them to twenty-two verses, the number of the letters in the alphabet, as in Lam 5 (Brug 1990:290). The alphabetic acrostic might have been popular among learned members of the Wisdom School not only as a didactic method but also as a literary device to conclude their works as in Prov 31:10-31 and Sir 51 or to express the comprehensive nature of Torah (Ps 119). In this context, note Ceresko's observations (1985) that the additional pe at the end of Pss 25 and 34 creates a subtle acrostic pattern alp, with the first and middle letters of these psalms, which spells not only the name of the first letter but also the verb "to teach" (see Job 33:33), or perhaps "to alphabetize." Garsiel (1994) has shown another literary development in the biblical poets' predilection to play on the conventional letter names.

c) express the mysterious and the magical or a reference to the divine, e.g., Alpha-Omega (Rev 1:8; 22:13) or the rabbinic statement (y. Sanh. 18a) that God's personal seal reads Emet, i.e., "truth," which is composed of the first, last and (almost) middle letters of the alphabet (see Dornseiff 1925).

In a very perceptive proverb found at the end of the Syriac version of Ahiqar (Conybeare 1913:127), the author juxtaposed the school lesson in learning the alphabet with its potential for popular literacy. An unlikely but intuitively intelligent student — the wolf — is brought into the formal educational system including the teacher/master (rab), the school house (bet sfr²a) and elementary curriculum ²*alf bet*. The result of this meeting is that the wolf quickly recognizes the potential of the alphabet as a means of achieving his own goals, in this case in having a good meal of kid. While the teacher is still on the opening lesson of the first two letters, the wolf anticipates the next lesson by providing a word which includes the following two letters and one that indicates his personal aim in life.

"They brought him (the wolf) into the school house. His master said to him, '²*Aleph-Beth*.' The wolf said, 'Gady²a'" ("the kid," here used for the name of the third letter).

REFERENCES

- Brug 1990; Ceresko 1985; Coogan 1974; Cross and Lambdin 1960; Demsky 1977; 1981; 1986; Dornseiff 1925; Gardiner 1916; Garsiel 1994; Hallo 1958; Healey 1990-91; Knauf 1985; Lundin 1987a; 1987b; Puech 1980.
-

This page intentionally left blank

WEST SEMITIC BIBLIOGRAPHY

- ABOUD, J.
1994 Die Rolle des Königs und seiner Familie nach den Texten von Ugarit. Forschungen zur Anthropologie und Religionsgeschichte = FARG 27. Münster: Ugarit-Verlag.
- AITKEN, K. T.
1990 The Aqhat Narrative. A Study in the Narrative Structure and Composition of an Ugaritic Tale. JSS Monograph 13. Manchester: University of Manchester.
- ALBRIGHT, W. F.
1945 "A New Hebrew Word for 'Glaze' in Proverbs 26:23." BASOR 98:24-25.
1953 "The Traditional Home of the Syrian Daniel." BASOR 130:26-27.
- ALBRIGHT, W. F., and G. E. MENDENHALL.
1942 "The Creation of the Composite Bow in Canaanite Mythology." JNES 1:227-229.
- ALEXANDROPOULOS, J.
1992 "Numismatique." In DCPP, 320-327.
- AMADASI GUZZO, M. G.
1990 "Noms de vases en phénicien." Semítica 38:15-25.
- ARCHI, A.
1988 "The Cult of the Ancestors and the Tutelary God at Ebla." Pp. 103-112 in Studies Ehrman.
- ARNAUD, D.
1982 "Une lettre du roi de Tyr au roi d'Ougarit: milieux d'affaires et de culture en Syrie à la fin de l'Âge du Bronze récent." Syria 59:101-107.
1985-86 Recherches au pays d'Aštata. Textes sumériens et accadiens. Emar VI/1-3. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
- ASTOUR, M. C.
1968 "Two Ugaritic Serpent Charms." JNES 27:13-36.
1973 "A North Mesopotamian Locale of the Keret Epic?" UF 5:29-39.
1980 "The Nether World and its Denizens at Ugarit." Pp. 227-238 in RAI 26.
- ATTRIDGE, H. W., and R. A. ODEN, Jr.
1981 Philo of Byblos, The Phoenician History. Introduction, Critical Text, Translation, Notes. CBQMS 9. Washington, DC: The Catholic Biblical Association of America.
- AVISHUR, Y.
1981 "The Ghost-Expelling Incantation from Ugarit." UF 13:13-25.
- BAKER, D. W.
1987 "Leviticus 1-7 and the Punic Tariffs: A Form Critical Comparison." ZAW 99:188-197.
- BARRÉ, M. L.
1978 "LAMMA and Rešep at Ugarit: The Hittite Connection." JAOS 98:465-467.
- BAUMGARTEN, A. I.
1981 The Phoenician History of Philo of Byblos. EPRO 89. Leiden: Brill.
- BEAULIEU, P.-A.
1989 The Reign of Nabonidus, King of Babylon 556-539 BC. YNER 10. New Haven and London: Yale University Press.
- BEYER, K.
1984 Die Aramäischen Texte vom Toten Meer. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, Ergänzungsband.
- BIGGS, R. D.
1990 "Medizin. A. In Mesopotamien." RIA 7/7-8:623-629.
- BLAU, J., and J. C. GREENFIELD.
1970 "Ugaritic Glosses." BASOR 200:11-17.
- BONNET, C.
1992 "Baal Saphon." In DCPP, 60-61.
- BORDREUIL, P.
1983 "'Venin de printemps, venin foudroyant.' À propos de RS 24.244 I.5." UF 15:299-300.
1990 "À propos de Milkou, Mūqart et Milk-ashtart." Maarav 5-6:11-21.
1991 "Recherches ougaritiques. I. Où Baal a-t-il remporté la victoire contre Yam?" Semítica 40:17-27.
- BORDREUIL, P., and A. CAQUOT.
1980 "Les textes en cunéiformes alphabétiques découverts en 1978 à Ibn Hani." Syria 57:343-373.
- BORDREUIL, P., and D. PARDEE.
1982 "Le rituel funéraire ougaritique RS 34.126." Syria 59:121-128.
1989 La trouvaille épigraphique de l'Ougarit. I. Concordance. RSOu 5/1.
1991 "Les textes ougaritiques." Pp. 139-172 in RSOu 7.
1993 "Le combat de Ba^clu avec Yammu d'après les textes ougaritiques." MARI 7:63-70.
1995 "L'épigraphie ougaritique: 1973-1993." Pp. 27-32 in RSOu 11.
- BOSSERT, H. T.
1946 Asia. Istanbul: Universität Istanbul.
- BOWMAN, R. A.
1944 "An Aramaic Religious Text in Demotic Script." JNES 3:219-231.
- VAN DEN BRANDEN, A.
1965 "Lévitique 1-7 et le tarif de Marseille, CIS I. 165." RSO 40:107-130.
- BROCKELMANN, K.
1966 Lexicon Syriacum. Hildesheim: Georg Olms.

- BROOKE, G. J.
1979 "The Textual, Formal and Historical Significance of Ugaritic Letter RS 34.124 (=KTU 2.72)." UF 11:69-87.
- BRUG, J. F.
1990 "Biblical Acrostics and Their Relationship to Other Ancient Near Eastern Acrostics." Pp. 283-304 in SIC 3.
- BUCCELLATI, G.
1966 The Amorites of the Ur III Period. Naples.
- CAQUOT, A.
1969 "Nouveaux documents ougaritiques." Syria 46:241-265.
1971 Review. RHR 180:168-170.
1975 "Hébreu et Araméen." ACF 75:423-432.
1978 "Textes ougaritiques de Ras Ibn Hani." ACF 78:570-577.
1978-79 "Ras Ibn Hani 78/20." ACF 79:188-190.
1979 "La naissance des dieux (SS = CTA 23 = UT 52)." Cols. 1367-1371 in SDB 9. Paris: Letouzey & Ané.
1984 "Une nouvelle interprétation de la tablette ougaritique de Ras Ibn Hani 78/20." Or 53:163-176.
1985 "Une nouvelle interprétation de KTU 1.19 I 1-19." SEL 2:93-114.
1989 "Textes religieux." Pp. 7-123 in Textes ougaritiques. Tome II: Textes religieux, rituels, correspondance. LAPO 14. Paris: Cerf.
1992 "Le Léviathan de Job 40,25 - 41,26." RB 99:40-69.
- CAQUOT, A., M. SZNYCER, and A. HERDNER.
1974 Textes ougaritiques. Tome I: Mythes et légendes. LAPO 7. Paris: Cerf.
- CASSUTO, U.
1938 "Il palazzo di Ba'al nella tavola II AB di Ras Shamra." Or 7:265-290.
- CATHCART, K. J., and W. G. E. WATSON.
1980 "Weathering a Wake: A Cure for a Carousal. A Revised Translation of Ugaritica 5. Text 1." PIBA 4:35-58.
- CAUBET, A., and F. POPLIN.
1987 "Les objets de matière dure animale. Étude du matériel." Pp. 273-306 in RSOu 3.
- CERESKO, A. R.
1985 "The ABCs of Wisdom in Psalm XXXIV." VT 35:99-104.
- CLIFFORD, R. J.
1972 The Cosmic Mountain in Canaan and the Old Testament. HSM 4. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- COHEN, C.
1983 "The Ugaritic Hippiatric Texts and BAM 159." JANES [appeared 1986] 15:1-12.
1997 "The Ugaritic Hippiatric Texts: Revised Composite Text, Translation and Commentary." UF 28 (forthcoming).
- COHEN, C., and D. SIVAN.
1983 The Ugaritic Hippiatric Texts: A Critical Edition. AOS 9. New Haven: AOS.
- COLLINS, J. J.
1992 "Nabonidus, Prayer of." In ABD 4:976-978.
- CONYBEARE, F. C., J. R. HARRIS and A. SMITH LEWIS 1913 The Story of Ahikar. 2nd Edition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- COOGAN, M. D.
1974 "Alphabets and Elements." BASOR 216:61-63.
- COOKE, G. A.
1903 A Text-Book of North-Semitic Inscriptions: Moabite, Hebrew, Phoenician, Aramaic: Nabataean, Palmyrene, Jewish. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- COOPER, J. S.
1993 "Sacred Marriage and Popular Cult in Early Mesopotamia." Pp. 81-96 in OCPR.
- CREASON, S.
1992 "The syntax of $\square$ N and the structure of the Marseille Tariff." RSF 20:143-159.
- CROSS, F. M.
1984 "Fragments of the Prayer of Nabonidus." IEJ 34:260-264.
- CROSS, F. M., and T. O. LAMBDIN.
1960 "A Ugaritic Abecedary and the Origins of the Proto-Canaanite Alphabet." BASOR 160:21-26.
- CUNCHILLOS, J.-L.
1976 Cuando los angeles eran dioses. Bibliotheca Salmanticensis 14, Estudios 12. Salamanca: Universidad Pontificia.
- CUTLER, B., and J. MACDONALD.
1982 "On the Origin of the Ugaritic Text KTU 1.23." UF 14:33-50.
- DALMAN, G.
1905 Grammatik des jüdisch-palästinischen Aramäisch. 2nd Edition. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.
- DAY, J.
1986 "Asherah in the Hebrew Bible and Northwest Semitic Literature." JBL 105:385-408.
- VON DEINES, H., H. GRAPOW, and W. WESTENDORF.
1958 Übersetzung der Medizinischen Texte. Grundriss der Medizin der Alten Ägypter. Vol. 4, Part 1. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- DELCOR, M.
1981 "Les cultes étrangers en Israël au moment de la réforme de Josias d'après 2R 23. Étude de religions sémitiques comparées." Pp. 91-123 in Mélanges Cazelles.
1983 "A propos du sens de spr dans le tarif sacrificiel de Marseille (CIS I, 165. 12): parfum d'origine végétale ou parfum d'origine animale?" Semitica 33:33-39.
1990 "Le tarif dit de Marseille (CIS I, 165). Aspects du système sacrificiel punique." Semitica 38:87-93, pl. XVI.
- DEMSKY, A.
1977 "A Proto-Canaanite Abecedary Dating from the Period of the Judges and its Implications for the History of the Alphabet." Tel Aviv 4:14-27.

- 1981 "The Temple Steward Josiah ben Zephaniah." IEJ 31:100-102.
- 1986 "The 'Izbet Sartah Ostrakon — Ten Years Later." Pp. 186-197 in Izbet Sartah. An Early Iron Age Site Near Rosh Ha'ayin, Israel. Ed. by I. Finkelstein. Oxford: Oxford University Press.
- DIETRICH, M., and O. LORETZ.
- 1969 "Beschriftete Lungen- und Lebermodelle aus Ugarit." Pp. 165-179 in Ugaritica 6.
- 1978a "Die keilalphabetische Krugaufschrift RS 25.318." Pp. 147-148 in Ugaritica 7.
- 1978b "Die sieben Kunstwerke des Schmiedegottes in KTU 1.4 I 23-43." UF 10: 57-63.
- 1980 "Die Bannung von Schlangengift (KTU 1.100 und KTU 1.107: 7b-13a 19b-20)." UF 12:153-170.
- 1981 "Neue Studien zu den Ritualtexten aus Ugarit (I)." UF 13:63-100.
- 1986a "Ugaritische Omentexte." TUAT 2/1:94-101.
- 1986b "Die akkadischen Tierbezeichnungen immeru, puḥādu und puḥālu im Ugaritischen und Hebräischen." UF 17:99-103.
- 1986c "Die Trauer Els und Anats (KTU 1.5 VI 11-22. 31 - 1.6 I 5)." UF 18:101-10.
- 1988 "Ugaritische Rituale und Beschwörungen." TUAT 2/3:299-357.
- 1990a ALASP 3.
- 1990b "The Syntax of Omens in Ugaritic." Maarav 5-6:89-109.
- 1993 "KTU 1.114, ein 'Palimpsest'." UF 25:133-136.
- DIETRICH, M., O. LORETZ, AND J. SANMARTÍN.
- 1975a "Der keilalphabetische šumma izbu-Text RS 24.247+265+268+328." UF 7:133-140.
- 1975b "Der stichometrische Aufbau von RS 24.258 (= Ug. 5, S. 545 Nr. 1)." UF 7:109-114.
- 1976 KTU.
- 1995 KTU.²
- DIJKSTRA, M., AND J. C. DE MOOR.
- 1975 "Problematical Passages in the Legend of Aqhātu." UF 7:171-215.
- DION, P.-E.
- 1980 "Tu feras disparaître le mal du milieu de toi." RB 87:321-349.
- DORNSEIFF, F.
- 1925 Das Alphabet in Mystik und Magie. Berlin: Teubner.
- DRESSLER, H. H. P.
- 1984 "Reading and Interpreting the Aqht Text." VT 34:78-82.
- DRIVER, G. R.
- 1956 Canaanite Myths and Legends. OTS 3. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.
- DURAND, J.-M.
- 1993 "Le mythe du combat entre le dieu de l'orage et la mer en Mésopotamie." MARI 7:41-61.
- DUSSAUD, R.
- 1921 Les origines cananéennes du sacrifice israélite. Paris: Ernest Leroux.
- EBBELL, B.
- 1924 "Die ägyptischen Krankheitsnamen." ZÄS 59:144-149.
- ELLIOTT, C.
- 1991 "The Ground Stone Industry." Pp. 9-99 in RSOu 6.
- FLEMING, D. E.
- 1991 "The Voice of the Incantation Priest (RIH 78/20)." UF 23:141-154.
- 1992 The Installation of Baal's High Priestess at Emar. HSS 42. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- FOLEY, C. M.
- 1987 "Are the 'Gracious Gods' bn šrm? A Suggested Restoration for KTU 1.23:1-2." UF 19:61-74.
- FREILICH, D.
- 1992 "Ili-malku the f'y." SEL 9:21-26.
- FRONZAROLI, P.
- 1975 "La lingua dei testi ippiatrici di Ugarit." AGI 60:34-46.
- GACHET, J.
- 1992 "Ugarit Ivories: Typology and Distribution." Pp. 67-89 in Ivory in Greece and the Eastern Mediterranean from the Bronze Age to the Hellenistic Period. Ed. by J. L. Fitton. BMOP 85. London.
- GARBINI, G.
- 1983 "Note sui testi rituali ugaritici." OA 22:53-60.
- GARCIA MARTINEZ, F.
- 1992 Qumran and Apocalyptic: Studies on the Aramaic Texts from Qumran. Leiden: E. J. Brill.
- GARDINER, A. H.
- 1916 "The Egyptian Origin of the Semitic Alphabet." JEA 3:1-16.
- GARSIEL, M.
- 1994 "Playing on the Names of the Letters of the Alphabet in Acrostic Literary Compositions in the Bible." Beth Miqra 139:313-334 (Hebrew).
- GASTER, T. H.
- 1946 "A Canaanite Ritual Drama. The Spring Festival at Ugarit." JAOS 66:49-76.
- 1975 "Sharper Than a Serpent's Tooth: A Canaanite Charm Against Snakebite." JANES 7:33-51.
- GEVIRTZ, S.
- 1961 "The Ugaritic Parallel to Jeremiah 8:23." JNES 20:41-46.
- GIBSON, J. C. L.
- 1978 Canaanite Myths and Legends. Second edition. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.
- GINSBERG, H. L.
- 1930-31 "A Punic Note: נַחֲשִׁי." AJS 47:52-53.
- 1935 "Notes on 'The Birth of the Gracious and Beautiful Gods'." JRAS 1935:45-72.

- 1941 "Did Anath Fight the Dragon?" BASOR 84:12-14.
 1945 "The North-Canaanite Myth of Anath and Aqhat." BASOR 97:3-10.
 1946 The Legend of King Keret: A Canaanite Epic of the Bronze Age. BASORSup 2-3. New Haven: ASOR.
 1950 "Interpreting Ugaritic Texts." JAOS 70:156-160.
- GORDON, C. H.
 1947 Ugaritic Handbook. AnOr 25. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
 1965 Ugaritic Textbook. AcOr 38. Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute.
 1977 "Poetic Legends and Myths from Ugarit." Berytus 25:5-133.
- GRAY, J.
 1965 The Legacy of Canaan. The Ras Shamra Texts and Their Relevance to the Old Testament. VTSup 5. 2nd Rev. Edition. Leiden: Brill.
- GREENFIELD, J. C.
 1967 "Ugaritic Lexicographical Notes." JCS 21:89-93.
 1969 "Some Glosses on the Keret Epic." EI 9:60-65.
- GREENFIELD, J. C., and B. PORTEN.
 1982 The Bisitun Inscription of Darius the Great, Aramaic Version. London: Lund Humphries.
- GREENSTEIN, E. L.
 1977 "One More Step on the Staircase." UF 9:77-86.
- HAAK, R. D.
 1982 "A Study and New Interpretation of QSR NPŠ." JBL 101:161-167.
- HALLO, W. W.
 1958 "Isaiah 28:9-13 and the Ugaritic Abecedaries." JBL 77:324-338.
 1977 "Haplographic Marginalia." Pp. 101-103 in Studies Finkelstein.
 1991 "The Concept of Canonicity in Cuneiform and Biblical Literature: A Comparative Appraisal." SIC 4:1-19.
- HARRIS, J. E., and K. R. WEEKS.
 1973 X-Raying the Pharaohs. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.
- HEALEY, J. F.
 1978 "Ritual Text KTU 1.161 — Translation and Notes." UF 10:83-88.
 1983a "Swords and Ploughshares: Some Ugaritic Terminology." UF 15:47-52.
 1983b "Burning the Corn: New Light on the Killing of Mōtu." Or 52:248-251.
 1990-91 "Nabatean to Arabic: Calligraphy and Script Development among the Pre-Islamic Arabs." Manuscripts of the Middle East 5:41-52.
- HEIDER, G. C.
 1985 The Cult of Molek: A Reassessment. JSOTSup 43. Sheffield: JSOT Press.
- HELCK, W.
 1971 Die Beziehungen Ägyptens zu Vorderasien im 3. und 2. Jahrtausend v. Chr. 2nd Edition. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz.
- HELD, M.
 1968 "The Root ZBL/SBL in Akkadian, Ugaritic and Biblical Hebrew." JAOS 88:90-96.
 1973 "Pits and Pitfalls in Akkadian and Biblical Hebrew." JANES 5:173-190.
- HERDNER, A.
 1963 CTA.
 1972 "Une prière à Baal des ugaritains en danger." CRAIBL 1972:693-697.
 1978 "Nouveaux textes alphabétiques de Ras Shamra - XXIVe campagne, 1961." Pp. 1-74 in Ugaritica 7.
- HETTEMER, T. L.
 1989-90 "'That it be Repeated'. A Narrative Analysis of KTU 1.23." JEOL 31:77-94.
- HILLERS, D. R.
 1973 "The Bow of Aqhat: The Meaning of a Mythological Theme." Pp. 71-80 in Studies Gordon.
 1983 "The Effective Simile in Biblical Literature." JAOS 103:181-185.
- HOCH, J. E.
 1994 Semitic Words in Egyptian Texts of the New Kingdom and Third Intermediate Period. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- HOFFNER, H. A., Jr.
 1964 "An Anatolian Cult Term in Ugaritic." JNES 23:66-68.
- HOFTUZER, J.
 1982 "Quodlibet Ugariticum." Pp. 121-127 in Studies Kraus.
- HOUSTON, W.
 1993 Purity and Monotheism. Clean and Unclean Animals in Biblical Law. JSOTSup 140. Sheffield: JSOT Press.
- HUEHNERGARD, J.
 1987 Ugaritic Vocabulary in Syllabic Transcription. HSS 32. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- DE JONG, T., and W. H. VAN SOLDT.
 1987-88 "Redating an Early Solar Eclipse Record (KTU 1.78). Implications for the Ugaritic Calendar and for the Secular Accelerations of the Earth and Moon." JEOL 30:65-77.
- KINNIER WILSON, J. V.
 1994 "The Sāmānu Disease in Babylonian Medicine." JNES 53:111-115.
- KITCHEN, K. A.
 1977 "The King List of Ugarit." UF 9:131-142.
- KNAUF, E. A.
 1985 "A South Safaitic Alphabet from Khirbet Es-Samrā'." Levant 17:204-206.
- KÖCHER, F.
 1963 BAM. Vol. 1. Berlin.
- KORPEL, M. C. A.
 1990 A Rift in the Clouds. Ugaritic and Hebrew Descriptions of the Divine. UBL 8. Münster: Ugarit-Verlag.

- KOTTSIEPER, I.
 1988 "Anmerkungen zu Pap. Amherst 63." ZAW 100:217-244.
 1992 "Die literarische Aufnahme assyrischer Begebenheiten in frühen aramäischen Texten." Pp. 283-289 in RAI 38.
- LAMBERT, W. G.
 1985 "Trees, Snakes and Gods in Ancient Syria and Anatolia." BSOAS 48:435-451.
- LANE, E. W.
 1863-93 An Arabic-English Lexicon. London.
- LAROCHE, E.
 1976-77 "Glossaire de la Langue Hourite." RHA 34-35.
- LECLANT, J.
 1960 "Astarté à cheval d'après les représentations égyptiennes." Syria 37:1-67.
- LEVINE, B. A.
 1963 "Ugaritic Descriptive Rituals." JCS 17:105-111.
 1989 Leviticus. JPS Torah Commentary. Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society.
- LEVINE, B. A., and W. W. HALLO.
 1967 "Offerings to the Temple Gates at Ur." HUCA 38:17-58.
- LEVINE, B. A., and J.-M. DE TARRAGON.
 1984 "Dead Kings and Rephaim: The Patrons of the Ugaritic Dynasty." JAOS 104:649-659.
 1988 "'Shapshu Cries out in Heaven': Dealing with Snake-Bites at Ugarit (KTU 1.100, 1.107)." RB 95:481-518.
 1993 "The King Proclaims the Day: Ugaritic Rites for the Vintage (KTU 1.41//1.87)" RB 100:76-115.
- LEVY, J.
 1963 Wörterbuch über die Talmudim und Midraschim. 4 Vols. Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft.
- LEWIS, T.
 1989 Cults of the Dead in Ancient Israel and Ugarit. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- LIPINSKI, E.
 1978 "Ditani." Pp. 91-110 in Studies Loewenstamm.
 1983 "Ancient Types of Wisdom Literature in Biblical Narrative." Pp. 39-55 in Studies Seeligmann.
 1992a "Rab." In DCPP, 369.
 1992b "Suffète." In DCPP, 429.
 1992c "Tarifs sacrificiels." In DCPP, 439-440.
- LIVERANI, M.
 1969 "Recensione." OA 8:338-340.
- LOEWENSTAMM, S. E.
 1969 "Eine lehrhafte ugaritische Trinkburleske." UF 1:71-77.
 1980 "A Didactic Ugaritic Drinkers' Burlesque." Pp. 369-381 in Comparative Studies in Biblical and Ancient Oriental Literatures. AOAT 204. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- LORETZ, O.
 1985 Leberschau, Sündenbock, Asasel in Ugarit und Israel. UBL 3. Soest: CIS-Verlag.
 1988 "The Ancient Syro-Palestinian Institution of the Marzihu 'Thiasos, Symposium' According to the Ugaritic Text KTU 1.114." Pp. 171-174 in Studies in the History and Archaeology of Palestine (Proceedings of the First International Symposium on Palestine Antiquities) III. Aleppo: Aleppo University Press.
- LORETZ, O., and P. XELLA.
 1982 "Beschwörung und Krankenheilung in RIH 78/20." MLE 1:37-46.
- LUNDIN (LOUNDINE), A. G.
 1987a "Ugaritic Writing and the Origin of the Semitic Consonantal Alphabet." AO 5:91-99.
 1987b "L'abecedaire de Beth Shemesh." Le Muséon 100:243-250.
- MACK-FISHER, L.
 1990 "From Ugarit to Gades: Mediterranean Veterinary Medicine." Maarav 5-6:207-220 [= Studies Segert].
- MALLET, J.
 1987 "Le temple aux rhytons." Pp. 213-248 in RSOu 3.
- MARGALIT, B.
 1981 "(RS 24.266) תפילה אוריתית לעת מצור." WCJS 7/2:63-83.
 1983 "Lexicographical Notes on the Aqht Epic (Part I: KTU 1.17-18)." UF 15:65-103.
 1984 "Lexicographical Notes on the Aqht Epic (Part II: KTU 1.19)." UF 16:119-179.
 1986 "Why King Mesha of Moab Sacrificed His Oldest Son." BAR 12/6:62-63, 76.
 1989 The Ugaritic Poem of AQHT. BZAW 182. Berlin: Walter de Gruyter.
- MARGULIS, B.
 1970 "The Canaanite Origin of Psalm 29 Reconsidered." Biblica 51:332-348.
- MASSART, A.
 1954 The Leiden Magical Papyrus I 343 + I 345. Oudheidkunde Mededelingen. New Series, Supplement 34. Leiden: Brill.
- MEIER, S.
 1986 "Baal's Fight With Yam (KTU 1.2.I, IV). A Part of the Baal Myth as Known in KTU 1.1, 3-6?" UF 18:241-254.
- MEYER, R.
 1962 Das Gebet des Nabonid. Berlin: Akademie Verlag.
- MEYER, J.-W.
 1987 Untersuchungen zu den Tonlebermodellen aus dem Alten Orient. AOAT 39. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
 1990 "Zur Interpretation der Leber- und Lungenmodelle aus Ugarit." In Dietrich and Loretz 1990a:241-280.

- MILGROM, J.
 1972 "The Alleged Wave-Offering in Israel and in the Ancient Near East." IEJ 22:33-38.
 1991 Leviticus 1-16. A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary. AB 3. Garden City, NY: Doubleday.
- MILIK, J. T.
 1956 "Prière de Nabonide' et autres écrits d'un cycle de Daniel: fragments araméens de Qumran 4." RB 63:407-415.
- MILLER, P. D., Jr.
 1988 "Prayer and Sacrifice in Ugarit and Israel." Pp. 139-155 in Studies Fensham.
- DE MOOR, J. C.
 1968 "Murices in Ugaritic Mythology." Or 37:212-215.
 1969 "Studies in the New Alphabetic Texts from Ras Shamra I." UF 1:167-188.
 1971 The Seasonal Pattern in the Ugaritic Myth of Ba'al According to the Version of Ilmilku. AOAT 16. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
 1976 "Rāpī' ūma — Rephaim." ZAW 88:323-345.
 1980a "El, the Creator." Pp. 171-187 in Studies Gordon.²
 1980b "An Incantation Against Evil Spirits (Ras Ibn Hani 78/20)." UF 12:429-432.
 1983 "Enkele liturgische teksten uit Ugarit." Pp. 247-252 in Schrijvend Verleden. Documenten uit het oude nabije oosten vertaald en toegelicht. Ed. by K. R. Veenhof. Mededelingen en Verhandelingen van het vooraziatisch-egyptisch Genootschap "Ex Oriente Lux" 24. Leiden: Zutphen.
 1987 An Anthology of Religious Texts from Ugarit. Nisaba: Religious Texts Translation Series 16. Leiden: Brill.
- MORAN, W. L.
 1992 The Amarna Letters. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press.
- NIEHR, H.
 1994 "Zur Frage der Filiation des Gottes Ba'al in Ugarit." JNSL 20/2:165-177.
- NIMS, C. F., and R. C. STEINER.
 1983 "A Paganized Version of Ps 20:2-6 from the Aramaic Text in Demotic Script." JAOS 103:261-274.
- NOUGAYROL, J.
 1968 "Textes suméro-accadiens des archives et bibliothèques privées d'Ugarit." Pp. 1-446 in Ugaritica 5.
 1970 PRU VI. MRS 12.
- O'CONNOR, M.
 1986 "Northwest Semitic Designations for Elective Social Affinities." JANES 18:67-80.
- DEL OLMO LETE, G.
 1981 Mitos y leyendas de Canaan segun la tradicion de Ugarit. Madrid: Ediciones Cristiandad.
 1986 "The 'Divine' Names of the Ugaritic Kings." UF 18:83-95.
 1987 "Liturgia ugarítica del primer mes (KTU 1.41/1.87)." AO 5:257-270.
 1989a "Liturgia sacrificial y salmodia en Ugarit (KTU 1.119)." AO 7:27-35.
 1989b "Addenda." AO 7:132.
 1992 La religión cananea según la liturgia de Ugarit. Estudio textual. AOSup 3. Barcelona: Editorial AUSA.
- OPPENHEIM, A. L.
 1956 Dreams.
- PARDEE, D.
 1976 "The Preposition in Ugaritic." UF 8:215-322.
 1977 "An Emendation in the Ugaritic Aqht Text." JNES 36:53-56.
 1978a "A Philological and Prosodic Analysis of the Ugaritic Serpent Incantation UT 607." JANES 10:73-108.
 1978b "The Semitic Root mrr and the Etymology of Ugaritic mr(r) // brk." UF 10:249-288.
 1979 "m'rōrūt-p'tanīm 'Venom' in Job 20:14." ZAW 91:401-416.
 1980 "The New Canaanite Myths and Legends." BiOr 37:269-291.
 1984 "Will the Dragon Never Be Muzzled?" UF 16:251-255.
 1985 Les Textes Hippiatriques. Editions Recherche sur les Civilisations, Mémoire n° 53. Paris.
 1986 "Ugaritic: The Ugaritic šumma izbu Text." Afo 33:117-147.
 1987 "Ugaritic Bibliography." Afo 34:366-471.
 1988a RSOu 4.
 1988b "A New Datum for the Meaning of the Divine Name Milkashtart." Pp. 55-68 in Studies Craigie.
 1988c Ugaritic and Hebrew Poetic Parallelism. A Trial Cut ('nt I and Proverbs 2). VTSup 39. Leiden: Brill.
 1989 "(Rather Dim but Nevertheless Appreciable) Light from (a Very Obscure) Ugaritic (Text) on (the) Hebrew (Bible)." Pp. 79-89 in Studies Fitzmyer.
 1989-90 "Ugaritic Proper Nouns." Afo 36-37:390-513.
 1991 "The Structure of RS 1.002." Pp. 1181-1196 in Studies Leslau.
 1993a "Poetry in Ugaritic Ritual Texts." Pp. 207-218 in Verse in Ancient Near Eastern Prose. Ed. by J. C. de Moor and W. G. E. Watson. AOAT 42. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
 1993b "Review of Dietrich and Loretz (1990a)." JAOS 113:614-617.
 1995 "Koshar, Kosharot." Pp. 913-917 in DDD.
 1996 "Marzihu, Kispu, and the Ugaritic Funerary Cult: A Minimalist View." Pp. 273-287 in Studies Gibson.
 Forthcoming Les Textes Rituels. Paris: Éditions Recherche sur les Civilisations.
- PARKER, S. B.
 1989 The Pre-Biblical Narrative Tradition. SBLRBS 24. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- PITARD, W. T.
 1978 "The Ugaritic Funerary Text RS 34.126." BASOR 232:65-75.
 1994a "The 'Libation Installations' of the Tombs at Ugarit." BA 57/1:20-37.
 1994b "The Reading of KTU 1.19:III:41: The Burial of Aqhat." BASOR 293:31-38.

- POPE, M. H.
 1955 El in the Ugaritic Texts. VTSup 2. Leiden: Brill.
 1972 "A Divine Banquet at Ugarit." Pp. 170-203 in Studies Stinespring.
 1977a "Notes on the Rephaim Texts from Ugarit." Pp. 163-182 in Studies Finkelstein.
 1977b Song of Songs: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary. AB 7C. Garden City, NY: Doubleday.
 1979 "Ups and Downs in El's Amours." UF 11:701-708.
- PUECH, E.
 1980 "Abécédaire et liste alphabétique de noms hébreux du début du II^e s. A.D." RB 87:118-126.
- RAINEY, A. F.
 1971 "Observations on Ugaritic Grammar." UF 3:151-172.
- RATNER, R., and B. ZUCKERMAN.
 1986 "'A Kid in Milk?': New Photographs of KTU 1.23, Line 14." HUCA 57:15-60.
- RENFROE, F.
 1986 "Methodological Considerations Regarding the Use of Arabic in Ugaritic Philology." UF 18:33-74.
- RIBICHINI, S., and P. XELLA.
 1984 "Il dio pdr." UF 16:267-272.
- RITNER, R. K.
 1993 The Mechanics of Ancient Egyptian Medical Practice. SAOC 54. Chicago: Oriental Institute.
- RUMMEL, T. S.
 1978 The 'NT Text: A Critical Translation. Dissertation, Claremont Graduate School. Ann Arbor: University Microfilms.
- SACK, R. H.
 1992 "Nabonidus." In ABD 4:973-976.
- SANMARTÍN, J.
 1978 "Die Lanze (ktgd) des B^{el}." UF 10:447-448.
 1980 "Glossen zum ugaritischen Lexikon (IV)." UF 12:335-339.
 1992 "Tejidos y ropas en ugarítico: apuntes lexicográficos." AO 10:95-103.
- SARACINO, F.
 1982 "Il letto di Pidray." UF 14:191-199.
 1983a "Un parallelo elegiaco a KTU 1.119:26-36." UF 15:304-306.
 1983b "A State of Siege: Mi 5 4-5 and an Ugaritic Prayer." ZAW 95:263-269.
- SASSON, J. M.
 1988 "The Numeric Progression in Keret 1:15-20. Yet Another Suggestion." SEL 5:181-188.
- SCHAEFFER, C. F. A.
 1949 Ugaritica 2. Nouvelles études relatives aux découvertes de Ras Shamra. MRS 5. Paris: Geuthner.
 1954 "Les fouilles de Ras Shamra-Ugarit. Quinzième, seizième et dix-septième campagnes (1951, 1952 et 1953)." Syria 31:14-67.
 1978 "Contexte archéologique et date du rhyton léontocéphale de la maison d'Agaptarri (RS 25.318)." Pp. 149-154 in Ugaritica 7.
- SCHMIDT, B.
 1994 Israel's Beneficent Dead. Ancestor Cult and Necromancy in Ancient Israelite Religion and Tradition. FAT 11. Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr.
- SEGERT, S.
 1984 A Basic Grammar of the Ugaritic Language. Berkeley: University of California.
 1986 "Preliminary Notes on the Structure of the Aramaic Poems in the Papyrus Amherst 63." UF 18:271-299.
- SIVAN, D.
 1984 Grammatical Analysis and Glossary of the North-west Semitic Vocables in Akkadian Texts of the 15th-13th Centuries B.C. from Canaan and Syria. AOAT 214. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag.
- SMELIK, K. A. D.
 1983 "Een Aramese parallel voor psalm 20." Nederlands Theologisch Tijdschrift 37:89-103.
- SMITH, G. E., and W. R. DAWSON.
 1924 Egyptian Mummies. New York: The Dial Press.
- SMITH, M. S.
 1984 "The Magic of Kothar, the Ugaritic Craftsman God, in KTU 1.6 VI 49-50." RB 91:377-380.
 1986 "Interpreting the Baal Cycle." UF 18:313-339.
 1994 The Ugaritic Baal Cycle. Volume 1: Introduction with Text, Translation & Commentary of KTU 1.1-1.2. VTSup 55. Leiden: Brill.
- SOKOLOFF, M.
 1990 A Dictionary of Jewish Palestinian Aramaic of the Byzantine Period. Ramat Gan: Bar Ilan University.
- VAN SOLDT, W. H.
 1989 "'Am prln, 'Attā/ēnu the Diviner.'" UF 21:365-368.
 1991 Studies in the Akkadian of Ugarit: Dating and Grammar. AOAT 40. Kevelaer: Butzon & Bercker; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener.
- STAGER, L. E.
 1982 "The Archaeology of the East Slope of Jerusalem and the Terraces of the Kidron." JNES 41:111-121.
- STEINER, R. C.
 1991 "The Aramaic Text in Demotic Script: The Liturgy of a New Year's Festival Imported from Bethel to Syene by Exiles from Rash." JAOS 111:362-363.
 1992 "Northwest Semitic Incantations in an Egyptian Medical Papyrus of the Fourteenth Century B.C.E." JNES 51:191-200.
 1995 "Papyrus Amherst 63: A New Source for the Language, Literature, Religion, and History of the Arameans." Pp. 199-207 in Studia Aramaica.
- STEINER, R. C., and A. MOSAK MOSHAVI.
 1995 "A Selective Glossary of Northwest Semitic Texts in Egyptian Script." Pp. 1249-1266 in DNWSI.

- STEINER, R. C., and C. F. NIMS.
 1984 "You Can't Offer Your Sacrifice and Eat It Too: A Polemical Poem from the Aramaic Text in Demotic Script." JNES 43:89-114.
 1985 "Ashurbanipal and Shamash-shum-ukin: A Tale of Two Brothers from the Aramaic Text in Demotic Script." RB 92:60-81.
- STOL, M.
 1986 "Review of Cohen and Sivan 1983." BiOr 43:172-174.
- SZNYCER, M.
 1977 "Carthage et la civilisation punique." Pp. 473-483, 545-593 in Rome et la conquête du monde méditerranéen 264-27 avant J.-C. Tome II. Genèse d'un empire. Ed. by Claude Nicolet. Nouvelle Cléo 8bis. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.
- DE TARRGON, J.-M.
 1980 Le culte à Ougarit: d'après les textes de la pratique en cunéiformes alphabétiques. Cahiers de la Revue Biblique 19. Paris: Gabalda.
 1989 "Les rituels." Pp. 125-238 in Textes ougaritiques. Tome II: Textes religieux, rituels, correspondance. LAPO 14. Paris: Cerf.
- TROPPER, J.
 1989 "Ugaritisch šgy: 'trinken' oder 'tränken'?" Or 58:233-242.
 1990 ALASP 2.
- TSEVAT, M.
 1971 "Traces of Hittite at the Beginning of the Ugaritic Epic of AQHT." UF 3:351-352.
 1979 "Der Schlangentext von Ugarit. UT 607 — KTU 1.100 — Ug V, 564ff. — RS 24.244." UF 11:759-778.
- TSUMURA, D. T.
 1978 "A Problem of Myth and Ritual Relationship — CTA 23 (UT 52):56-57 Reconsidered —." UF 10:387-395.
- VAUGHN, A. G.
 1993 "Il g̃r — An Explicit Epithet of El as a Hero/Warrior." UF 25:423-430.
- VIROLLEAUD, Ch.
 1931 "Un poème phénicien de Ras-Shamra-La lutte de Môt, fils des dieux, et d'Alein, fils de Baal." Syria 12:193-224.
 1932 "Un nouveau chant du poème d'Alein-Baal." Syria 13:113-163.
 1933 "La naissance des dieux gracieux et beaux. Poème phénicien de Ras-Shamra." Syria 14:128-151.
 1934a "Fragment nouveau du poème de Môt et Alein-Baal." Syria 15:226-243.
 1934b "La mort de Baal. Poème de Ras-Shamra (I* AB)." Syria 15:305-336.
 1935 "La révolte de Košer contre Baal. Poème de Ras-Shamra (III AB,A)." Syria 16:29-45.
 1936a La légende de Keret roi des Sidoniens publiée d'après une tablette de Ras-Shamra. MRS 2. Paris: Geuthner.
 1936b La légende phénicienne de Danel. MRS 1. Paris: Geuthner.
 1938 La déesse Anat. MRS 4. Paris: Geuthner.
 1941a "Le roi Kéret et son fils (II K), 1^{re} partie. Poème de Ras-Shamra." Syria 22:105-136.
 1941b "Le roi Kéret et son fils (II K) (Deuxième partie)." Syria 22:197-217.
 1942-43a "Le roi Kéret et son fils (II K) (Troisième partie)." Syria 23:1-20.
 1942-43b "Le mariage du roi Kéret (III K). Poème de Ras-Shamra." Syria 23:137-172.
 1944-45 "Fragments mythologiques de Ras-Shamra." Syria 24:1-23.
 1961 "Les nouveaux textes alphabétiques découverts à Ras-Shamra." Groupe linguistique des études chamito-sémitiques, comptes rendus 9:41-42.
 1962a "Les assesseurs de la déesse-soleil à Ras-Shamra." Groupe linguistique des études chamito-sémitiques, comptes rendus 9:50-52.
 1962b "Les nouveaux textes mythologiques de Ras-Shamra." CRAIBL 105-113.
 1965 PRU V. MRS 11. Paris: Imprimerie Nationale; Klincksieck.
 1968 "Les nouveaux textes mythologiques et liturgiques de Ras Shamra (XXIV^e Campagne, 1961)." Pp. 545-595. In Ugaritica 5.
- VLEEMING, S. P., and J. W. WESSELIUS.
 1982 "An Aramaic Hymn from the Fourth Century B.C." BiOr 39:501-509.
 1983-84 "Betel the Saviour." JEOL 28:110-140.
 1985 Studies in Papyrus Amherst 63. vol. 1. Amsterdam.
 1990 Studies in Papyrus Amherst 63. vol. 2. Amsterdam.
- WALLS, N. H.
 1992 The Goddess Anat in Ugaritic Myth. SBLDS 135. Atlanta: Scholars Press.
- WATSON, W. G. E.
 1976 "Puzzling Passages in the Tale of Aqhat." UF 8:371-378.
 1980 "An Example of Multiple Wordplay in Ugaritic." UF 12:443-444.
 1989a "Notes on Some Ugaritic Words." SEL 6:47-52.
 1989b "What Does Ugaritic gmn Mean?" AO 7:129-131.
 1990a "Sundry Ugaritic Notes." UF 22:421-423.
 1990b "Comments on KTU 1.114: 29'-31'." AO 8:265-267.
 1992 "Imagery in a Ugaritic Incantation." UF 24:367-368.
 1994 "Aspects of Style in KTU 1.23." SEL 11:3-8.
- WEINFELD, M.
 1985a "The Pagan Version of Psalm 20:2-6—Vicissitudes of a Psalmic Creation in Israel and its Neighbors." EI 18:130-140.
 1985b "The Aramaic Text (in Demotic Script) from Egypt on Sacrifice and Morality and its Relationship to Biblical Texts." Shnaton 9:179-189. (Hebrew).
- WILLIAMS-FORTE, E.
 1983 "The Snake and the Tree in the Iconography and Texts of Syria During the Bronze Age." Pp. 18-43 in Ancient Seals and the Bible. Ed. by L. Gorelick and E. Williams-Forte. Malibu: Undena.
- WILSON, R. R.
 1977 Genealogy and History in the Biblical World. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- WRESZINSKI, W.
 1912 Der Londoner Medizinische Papyrus (Brit. Museum Nr. 10059) und der Papyrus Hearst. Die Medizin der Alten Ägypter 2. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs.

- WYATT, N.
 1987 "Sea and Desert: Symbolic Geography in West Semitic Religious Thought." UF 19:375-389.
 1992a "A New Look at Ugaritic šdmr." JSS 37:149-153.
 1992b "The Pruning of the Vine in KTU 1.23." UF 24:425-427.
- XELLA, P.
 1973 Il mito di ŠHR e ŠLM. Saggio sulla mitologia ugaritica. Studi Semitici 44. Rome: Istituto di Studi del Vicino Oriente.
 1976 Problemi del mito nel Vicino Oriente Antico. AIONSup 7. Naples: Istituto Orientale di Napoli.
 1977 "Studi sulla religione della Siria antica. I. El e il vino (RS 24.258)." Studi Storico-Religiosi 1:229-261.
 1978 "Un testo ugaritico recente (RS 24.266, Verso, 9-19) e il 'sacrificio dei primi nati'." RSF 6:127-136.
 1981 I testi rituali di Ugarit. I. Testi. Studi Semitici 54. Rome: Consiglio Nazionale delle Ricerche.
- XELLA, P., and A.-M. G. CAPOMACCHIA.
 1979 "Tre testi ugaritici relativi a presagi di nascite." OA 18:41-58.
- YON, M.
 1989 "Šhr mr, la chaleur de Mot." UF 21:461-466.
 1990 "Ougarit et ses dieux (travaux 1978-1988)." Pp. 325-343 in Studies Bounni.
 1991 "Stèles de Pierre" and "Note sur la sculpture de pierre." Pp. 273-344, 345-353 in RSOu 6.
- ZEVIT, Z.
 1990 "The Common Origin of the Aramaicized Prayer to Horus and of Psalm 20." JAOS 110:213-228.
-

This page intentionally left blank

AKKADIAN CANONICAL COMPOSITIONS

This page intentionally left blank

A. DIVINE FOCUS

This page intentionally left blank

1. MYTHS

THE DESCENT OF ISHTAR TO THE UNDERWORLD (1.108)

Stephanie Dalley

The Akkadian story is first attested in Late Bronze Age texts, in both Babylonia and Assyria, and later from the palace library at Nineveh. It is a short composition of some 140 lines, and seems to end with ritual instructions for the taklimtu, an annual ritual known from Assyrian texts, which took place in the month of Dumuzi (Tammuz = June/July) and featured the bathing, anointing, and lying-in-state of a statue of Dumuzi in Nineveh, Arbela, Assur and Kalah.¹ Weeping for Tammuz was observed in Jerusalem in the 6th century BCE according to Ezek 8:14.

The Sumerian version, The Descent of Inanna, is attested earlier, and is much longer, consisting of some 410 lines. It is a fuller, more detailed account, and shows clearly that Dumuzi periodically died and rose, causing seasonal fertility, a fact which had been doubted until 1963, when a newly published fragment disclosed the crucial evidence. This version contains no ritual or incantation. However, like the Akkadian story, it seems to represent the goddess as a cult statue, and it has been suggested that the goddess's statue makes a ritual journey from Uruk, her home town, to Kutha, seat of Underworld deities.

There is an obvious similarity in basic theme to the Greek myth of Persephone, who was abducted by Hades. He periodically released her to her mother Demeter, thus causing fertility on earth to be seasonal, but of course there are many major differences between the Greek and the Akkadian myths.

Certain lines of text in The Descent of Ishtar are also found in Nergal and Ereshkigal and in Gilgamesh.

To Kurnugi, land of [no return],² Ishtar daughter of Sin was [determined] to go;³ The daughter of Sin was determined to go To the dark house, dwelling of Erkalla's god, To the house which those who enter cannot leave, On the road where travelling is one-way only, To the house where those who enter are deprived of light, Where dust is their food, clay their bread. They see no light, they dwell in darkness, (10) They are clothed like birds, with feathers.⁴ Over the door and the bolt, dust has settled. Ishtar, when she arrived at the gate of Kurnugi, Addressed here words to the keeper of the gate, "Here gatekeeper, open your gate for me, Open your gate for me to come in! If you do not open the gate for me to come in, I shall smash the door and shatter the bolt, I shall smash the doorpost and overturn the	doors,⁵ I shall raise up the dead and they shall eat the living: (20) The dead shall outnumber the living!"⁶ The gatekeeper made his voice heard and spoke, He said to great Ishtar, "Stop, lady, do not break it down! Let me go and report your words to queen Ereshkigal." The gatekeeper went in and spoke to [Ereshkigal], "Here she is, your sister Ishtar [...] Who holds the great keppū-toy,⁷ Stirs up the Apsu in Ea's presence [...]" When Ereshkigal heard this, Her face grew livid as cut tamarisk, (30) Her lips grew dark as the rim of a kuntnu- vessel.⁸ "What brings her to me? What has incited her against me?"
--	---

¹ Farber 1977:122-123; Stol 1988:127-128.

² This passage occurs almost verbatim in Nergal and Ereshkigal (see text 1.109 below).

³ Ishtar is named as daughter of Sin rather than daughter of Anu, as she is in Gilgamesh. This may imply that the story is not closely associated with the literary traditions of Uruk.

⁴ Underworld creatures are often represented with feathers in Mesopotamian iconography.

⁵ The tablet from Assur adds an extra line: "I shall break the hinges(?) and tear out the knob(?)."

⁶ The same threat is made by Ereshkigal in Nergal and Ereshkigal if the sky gods do not send Nergal back down to the Underworld, and by Ishtar in Gilgamesh.

⁷ keppū-toy: perhaps a whipping top. The old interpretation of keppū as a skipping rope was based on a misinterpretation of a glyptic scene, and should be abandoned. It may be a whipping-top (a spinning top lashed into faster gyrations with a cord) which is shown in action at Carchemish on a mural sculpture in relief, dating to the early first millennium BCE.

⁸ Namtar's reactions in Nergal and Ereshkigal, when he saw Nergal at the gate, are expressed in identical similes. The kuntnu was a particular kind of vessel often made of reeds, of which the rim was coated with bitumen, thus black-lipped.

Surely not because I drink water with the Anunnaki,
 I eat clay for bread, I drink muddy water for beer?
 I have to weep for young men forced to abandon sweethearts.⁹
 I have to weep for girls wrenched from their lovers' laps.⁹
 For the infant child I have to weep, expelled before its time.⁹
 Go, gatekeeper, open your gate to her.
 Treat her according to the ancient rites."
 The gatekeeper went. He opened the gate to her.
 (40) "Enter, my lady: may Kutha give you joy,¹⁰
 May the palace of Kurnugi be glad to see you."
 He let her in through the first door, but stripped off (and) took away the great crown on her head.
 "Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the great crown on my head?"
 "Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."
 He let her in through the second door, but stripped off (and) took away the rings in her ears.
 "Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the rings in my ears?"
 (50) "Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."
 He let her in through the third door, but stripped off (and) took away the beads around her neck.
 "Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the beads around my neck?"
 "Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."
 He let her in through the fourth door, but stripped off (and) took away the toggle-pins at her breast.¹¹
 "Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the toggle-pins at my breast?"
 "Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."
 He let her in through the fifth door, but stripped off (and) took away the girdle of birth-stones¹² around her waist.
 "Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the girdle of birthstones¹² around my waist?"
 "Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."
 He let her in through the sixth door, but stripped off (and) took away the bangles on her wrists and ankles.

"Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the bangles on my wrists and ankles?"

"Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."

(60) He let her in through the seventh door, but stripped off (and) took away the proud garment of her body.

"Gatekeeper, why have you taken away the proud garment of my body?"

"Go in, my lady. Such are the rites of the Mistress of Earth."

As soon as Ishtar went down to Kurnugi,¹³
 Ereshkigal looked at her and trembled before her.
 Ishtar did not deliberate (?), but threatened her.
 Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke,
 Addressed her words to Namtar her vizier,

"Go, Namtar [] of my []
 Send out against her sixty diseases []
 Ishtar;

(70) Disease of the eyes to her [eyes],
 Disease of the arms to her [arms],
 Disease of the feet to her [feet],
 Disease of the heart to her [heart],
 Disease of the head [to her head],
 To every part of her and to []."

After Ishtar the mistress of (?) [] had gone down to Kurnugi],

No bull mounted a cow, [no donkey impregnated a jenny],

No young man impregnated a girl [in the street (?)],

The young man slept in his private room,

(80) The girl slept in the company of her friends.
 Then Papsukkal, vizier of the great gods, hung his head, his face [became gloomy];

He wore mourning clothes, his hair was unkempt.
 Dejected (?), he went and wept before Sin his father,

His tears flowed freely before king Ea.

"Ishtar has gone down to the Earth and has not come up again.

As soon as Ishtar went down to Kurnugi
 No bull mounted a cow, no donkey impregnated a jenny,

No young man impregnated a girl in the street,
 The young man slept in his private room,

(90) The girl slept in the company of her friends."
 Ea, in his wise heart, created a person.¹⁴

⁹ Alternatively these lines may be interpreted as rhetorical questions.

¹⁰ Buccellati suggested that the Sum. Descent of Inanna is based on the ritual journey made by a statue of the goddess from Uruk to Kutha (Buccellati 1982), and George remarked that the goddess is described as if she were a statue in this version. The reference to Kutha here may be a relic of the journey theme in the Sum. version; or since Kutha had Nergal as patron god, the city name may be used as a name for the Underworld as Nergal's dwelling (George 1985:109-113).

¹¹ The identification of nuditu as "toggle-pin" rather than "pectoral" was made by Klein 1983.

¹² Or: "the girdle with the birthstone."

¹³ Note that Ishtar does not cross the river in order to reach the Underworld, nor does Nergal in Nergal and Ereshkigal.

¹⁴ Pun on zikru, "word, name" and zikaru/zikru, "man, male," as also in Gilgamesh, II.

He created Good-looks the playboy.¹⁵

"Come, Good-looks, set your face towards the gate of Kurnugi.

The seven gates of Kurnugi shall be opened before you.

Ereshkigal shall look at you and be glad to see you.

When she is relaxed, her mood will lighten.

Get her to swear the oath by the great gods.

Raise your head, pay attention to the waterskin,¹⁶

Saying, 'Hey, my lady, let them give me the waterskin, that I may drink water from it.'

(And so it happened. But)

(100) When Ereshkigal heard this,
She struck her thigh and bit her finger.

"You have made a request of me that should not have been made!

Come, Good-looks, I shall curse you with a great curse.¹⁷

I shall decree for you a fate that shall never be forgotten.

Bread (gleaned [?]) from the city's ploughs shall be your food,¹⁸

The city drains shall be your only drinking place,

The shade of a city wall your only standing place,

Threshold steps your only sitting place,

The drunkard and the thirsty shall slap your cheek."

Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke;

(110) She addressed her words to Namtar her vizier,

"Go, Namtar, knock (?) at Egalgina,

Decorate the threshold steps with coral,¹⁹

Bring the Anunnaki out and seat (them) on golden thrones,²⁰

Sprinkle Ishtar with the waters of life²¹ and conduct her into my presence."

Namtar went, knocked at Egalgina,

Decorated the threshold steps with coral,

Brought out the Anunnaki, seated (them) on golden thrones,

Sprinkled Ishtar with the waters of life and brought her to her (sister).

He let her out through the first door, and gave back to her the proud garment of her body.²²

(120) He let her out through the second door, and gave back to her the bangles for her wrists and ankles.

He let her out through the third door, and gave back to her the girdle of birth stones¹² around her waist.

He let her out through the fourth door, and gave back to her the toggle pins at her breast.

He let her out through the fifth door, and gave back to her the beads around her neck.

He let her out through the sixth door, and gave back to her the rings for her ears.

He let her out through the seventh door, and gave back to her the great crown for her head.

"Swear that (?) she has paid you her ransom, and give her back (in exchange) for him."²³

For Dumuzi, the lover of her youth.

Wash (him) with pure water, anoint him with sweet oil,

Clothe him in a red robe, let the lapis lazuli pipe play (?).²⁴

(130) Let party-girls raise a loud lament (?).²⁵

Then Belili tore off (?) her jewelry,

Her lap was filled with eyestones.

Belili heard the lament for her brother, she struck the jewelry [from her body],

The eyestones with which the front of the wild cow was filled.²⁶

"You shall not rob me (forever) of my only brother!

On the day when Dumuzi comes back up, (and) the lapis lazuli pipe and the carnelian ring

¹⁵ Lit., "His appearance is bright." he may have been a boy castrated as an act of devotion. Such a practice is described by Lucian, The Syrian Goddess (see Attridge and Oden 1976). The name may be an intentional play on a name of the moon-god, who like the boy could travel to and from the Underworld without being harmed. In the Sum. version of the story, two impotent creatures are sent down to the Underworld and they take a plant of life and water of life with them.

¹⁶ Kilmer suggests this is a cryptic reference to Ishtar's corpse. halziqqu is a very rare word for a waterskin, and a pun may be intended on the two words ali, "ghost" and ziqqu, "gust" (1971:229-311); I suggest this to support her idea.

¹⁷ The same line is used in Gilgamesh, VII.i.

¹⁸ Similar formulation of the curse, and two identical lines, are found in Enkidu's curse of Shamhat in Gilgamesh, VII.i. The Sum. version does not include any cursing. "City's ploughs": the variant, "city's bakers," may be due to mis-hearing by oral tradition, since "bakers" and "plough" are both Akk. words beginning epi.

¹⁹ "Coral" or "cowries"; the meaning of the noun is not quite certain.

²⁰ Possibly a reference to a ritual against seizure by ghosts. See Introduction to Nergal and Ereshkigal. Akk. kussu is both a chair and a throne. In the Sum. story the Anunnaki seize the goddess, demand a substitute for her, and send her out of the Underworld with demons who are to bring her back if their demand is not met.

²¹ Waters of life also feature in the myth of Adapa; and in John 4:10.

²² Either Namtar or the doorkeeper is the subject.

²³ Equivalent instructions are given to the demons in the Sum. story. A variant Akk. text gives the information that Ereshkigal is speaking to Namtar.

²⁴ Corpses were wrapped in red cloth for burial; traces have occasionally been recovered by excavations.

²⁵ "Party girls": attached to the staff of Ishtar's temples.

²⁶ Probably beads of banded agate and similar stones, which were often inscribed with the name of the donor; see Lambert 1969b:65-71.

come up with him,²⁷
(When) male and female mourners come up
with him,

The dead shall come up and smell the incense offering."
(3 lines missing)

²⁷ In the Sum. story Dumuzi's sister Geshtin-anna pleads for his periodic release. Also in the Sum. story, Inanna took the "rod and ring," emblems of kingship, down to the Underworld; this may be a reference to those emblems.

REFERENCES

Text: Borger *BAL*² 1:95-104, 2:340-343. Studies: Buccellati 1982; Dalley 1989:154-162; Ebeling 1949; George 1985; Klein 1983; Attridge and Oden 1976; Kilmer 1971; Lambert 1969b.

NERGAL AND ERESHKIGAL
(Standard Babylonian Version) (1.109)

Stephanie Dalley

Two very different versions of this story are extant. The earlier one was found at Tell el-Amarna in Egypt, dating from the fifteenth or fourteenth centuries BCE, and is told in a highly abbreviated manner in about ninety lines. Nergal visits the Underworld accompanied by demons, seizes the throne of Ereshkigal, queen of the Underworld, by force, and remains thereafter as king.

The version known from Sultantepe of the seventh century BCE and from Uruk in the Late Babylonian period is much longer, consisting of perhaps 750 lines. In this story Nergal makes two visits to the Underworld, and takes down with him not demons but a special chair or throne. The meaning of the chair may be explained by reference to a particular piece of furniture called a "ghost's chair" in lexical texts; its purpose is explained in a ritual text as preventing seizure by ghosts:

If a man is chosen for death, and a ghost has seized him, you must purify everything. ... place a bread ration before Shamash, Ea, and Marduk, threefold; scatter dates, flour, set up three adagurru-vessels; set up three censers with aromatics, scatter all kinds of cereals. You must put down a chair to the left of the offerings for the ghost of his kin, ...

Thus, Nergal takes the chair down in an attempt to ensure that he can escape from the Underworld and elude death.

Both myths share the same basic theme: that the gods hold a banquet and, since Ereshkigal as queen of the Underworld cannot come up to join them, she sends her vizier to fetch a portion for her. Nergal behaves disrespectfully to the vizier, and for the insult to Ereshkigal he must be punished by her. He ends up as her husband.

It might appear that this myth records the transition of rule in the Underworld from a solitary female deity to a pair. However, Nergal is called "the Ellil of the Netherworld" in a composition from the late third or early second millennium, so it may be preferable to ascribe to the myth a different purpose, such as harmonizing two separate traditions. No Sumerian version of the story is known.

Nergal's ability to travel between heaven and the Underworld may be related to a major event in Phoenician religion. The name of Melqart, chief god of Tyre, is a Phoenician translation of the Sumerian name Nergal, and they are thus very closely assimilated. There is now evidence that Melqart was a dying and rising god, although the precise timing of events during the ritual of his death and resurrection has still to be established. Possible Phoenician influence upon Nergal and Ereshkigal is found in the use of the "plural of majesty," in referring to Nergal as "gods."

(SBV i) [About 4 lines missing?]¹

[Anu made his voice heard and spoke, he addressed his words to Kakka], ["Kakka, I shall send you to Kurnugi].
You must speak thus to Ereshkigal [...],
Saying 'It is impossible for you to come up].
(10') [In your year you cannot come up to see us]
[And it is impossible for us to go down].
[In our month(s) we cannot go down to see
you].
[Let your messenger come]

[And take from the table, let him accept a present for you].

[I shall give something to him to present to
you]."

[Kakka went down the long stairway of heaven].
[When he reached the gate of Ereshkigal (he said)],
["Gatekeeper, open] the gate to me!"
["Kakka, come] in, and may the gate bless
you."

(20') He let the god Kakka in through the first gate,
He let the god Kakka in through the second gate,

¹ The opening of the myth as suggested by Gurney 1960 was wrongly assigned to this composition, and is now joined to a different tablet.

He let the god Kakka in through the third gate,
 He let the god Kakka in through the fourth gate,
 He let the god Kakka in through the fifth gate,
 He let the god Kakka in through the sixth gate,
 He let the god Kakka in through the seventh gate.
 He entered into her spacious courtyard,
 He knelt down and kissed the ground in front of her.

He straightened up, stood and addressed her,
 (30') "Anu your father sent me
 To say, 'It is impossible for you to go up;
 In your year you cannot go up to see us,
 And it is impossible for us to go down;
 In our month we cannot go down to see you.
 Let your messenger come
 And take from the table, let him accept a
 present for you.
 I shall give something to him to present to
 you.'"

Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke, she addressed her words to Kakka,
 "O messenger of Anu our father, you who have come to us,
 (40') May peace be with Anu, Ellil, and Ea,
 the great gods.
 May peace be with Nammu and Nash, the pure god(desse)s.²
 May peace be with the husband of the Lady of Heaven.³
 May peace be with Ninurta, [champion] in the
 land."

Kakka made his voice heard and spoke, he addressed his words to Ereshkigal
 "Peace is indeed with Anu, Ellil, and Ea, the great gods.
 Peace is indeed with Nammu and Nash the pure.
 Peace is indeed with the husband of the Lady of Heaven.
 Peace is indeed with Ninurta, champion in the
 land."

Kakka made his voice heard and spoke, he addressed his words to Ereshkigal,⁴ (50') "[] may be well with you."

Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke, she addressed her words to her vizier Namtar,
 "O Namtar my vizier, I shall send you to the heaven of our father Anu.
 Namtar, go up the long stairway of heaven.

Take from the table and accept a present (for
 me).
 Whatever Anu gives to you, you must present to me."

[about 16 lines missing]

(ii) [about 10 lines missing]

Ea addresses Nergal

[...]

"[When he arrived [...]

[...] path [...]

The gods are kneeling together before him.

The great gods, the lords of destiny.

For it is he who controls the rites, controls the rites of [...]

The gods who dwell within Erkalla.

Why do you not kneel down before him?

I keep winking at you,

(10') But you pretend not to realize,

And ...

[6 lines missing]

(Nergal addresses Ea)

[...] I will rise to my feet⁵

[...] you said.

(20') [...] will double it."

When Ea heard this he said to himself,

"....."

(Then) Ea made his voice heard and spoke, he addressed his words to Nergal.

"My son, you shall go on the journey you want (to make), ... grasp (?) a sword in your hand.

Go down to the forest of mēsu-trees.

Cut down mēsu-trees, tiāru-trees, and juniper!

Break off kanaktu-trees and simberru-trees."⁶

When [Nergal] heard this, he took an axe up in his hand,

Drew the sword from his belt,

Went down to the forest of mēsu-trees,

Cut down mēsu-trees, tiāru-trees, and juniper,

(30') Broke off kanaktu-trees and simberru-trees,

[] and Ningišzida.⁷

He painted it with gypsum [... as a substitute for silver],⁸

Painted it with yellow paste and red paste as a substitute for gold,

Painted it with blue glaze as a substitute for lapis lazuli.

² Nash is an abbreviated and assimilated form of the name Nanshe. Nammu and Nanshe are the mother and daughter of Ea.

³ Possibly a reference to Dumuzi.

⁴ This line appears to be an unnecessary addition.

⁵ Or, "Should I rise to my feet?"

⁶ mēsu-wood: a dark wood used in making divine statues, probably a form of rosewood (Dalbergia). tiāru: described as "white pine" in explanatory texts. kanaktu: an aromatic timber, not identified. simberru: an aromatic fruit tree; maybe Umbrella pine/pine-nuts, Arabic ṣnobar; the Uruk text established this reading, replacing Gurney's restoration of the Sultantepe text, which was damaged at that point, as "staff."

⁷ Uruk version has "[...] he made a throne for far-sighted Ea."

⁸ The Sultantepe version has "lapis lazuli" here, perhaps as a scribal confusion because it is a school exercise tablet; so the Uruk version is preferred here.

The work was finished, the chair complete.

Then he (Ea) called out and laid down instructions for him,

"My son, (about) the journey which you want to make: from the moment you arrive, [Follow whatever instructions [I give you]. From the moment they bring a chair to you, Do not go to it, do not sit upon it.

(40') (When) the baker brings you bread, do not go to it, do not eat the bread.

(When) the butcher brings you meat, do not go to it, do not eat the meat.

(When) the brewer brings you beer, do not go to it, do not drink the beer.

(When they) bring you a foot bath, do not go to it, do not wash your feet.

(When) she (Ereshkigal) has been to the bath And dressed herself in a fine dress,⁹ Allowing you to glimpse her body ...

You must not [do that which] men and women [do]"

Nergal [...]

[about 12 lines missing]

Nergal set his face towards Kurnugi,

To the dark house, dwelling of Erkalla's god,

To the house which those who enter cannot leave,

(iii) On the road where travelling is one way only, To the house where those who enter are deprived of light,

Where dust is their food, clay their bread.

They are clothed, like birds, with feathers.

They see no light, they dwell in darkness.

[...]

[... they moan(?) like doves.

[...]

[The gatekeeper opened his mouth and addressed his words to Nergal,

(10') "I must take back a report about the [god(?) standing] at the door."

The gatekeeper entered and addressed his words to Ereshkigal,

"My lady, a [...] has come to see us.

[...] who will identify him."

[a few lines missing]

Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke to Namtar.

[3 lines missing, comprising Ereshkigal's speech]

[Namtar replies:]

"Let me identify him [...]"

Let me ... him at the outer gate.

Let me bring back to my lord [a description of him."

(20') Namtar went and looked at Erra in the shadow of the door.

Namtar's face went as livid as cut tamarisk.

His lips grew dark as the rim of a kuntnu-vessel.¹⁰

Namtar went and addressed his lady,

"My lady, when you sent me to your father,

When I entered the courtyard of Anu

All the gods were kneeling, humbled [before him(?)]

All the gods of the land were kneeling [humbled before him.]

"The gods' rose to their feet in my presence."¹¹

Now 'they' have gone down to Kurnugi."

(30') Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke, she addressed her words to Namtar,

"My dear Namtar, you should not seek Ellil-power

Nor should you desire to do heroic deeds.

(What,) come up and sit on the throne of the royal dais?

You, perform the judgments of the broad Earth?

Should I go up to the heaven of Anu my father?¹²

Should I eat the bread of the Anunnaki?

Should I drink the water of the Anunnaki?

Go and bring the god [into my presence!]"

Namtar went and let in 'the gods,' Erra.

He let Nergal in through the first, the gate of Nedu.¹³

He let Nergal in through the second, the gate of Kishar.

He let Nergal in through the third, the gate of Endashurimma.

(40') He let Nergal in through the fourth, the gate of Enuralla.

He let Nergal in through the fifth, the gate of Endukuga.

He let Nergal in through the sixth, the gate of Endushuba.

He let Nergal in through the seventh, the gate of Ennugigi.

He came into the broad courtyard,

And he knelt down, kissed the ground in front of her.

He straightened up, stood and addressed her,

"Anu your father sent me [to see you],

Saying, 'Sit down on [that] throne,

Judge the cases [of the great gods],

⁹ "Fine robe": restoring the broken signs to give lamahuššu.

¹⁰ kuntnu-vessel: see to the Descent of Ishtar above (text 1.108, note 8).

¹¹ "The gods" is used to refer to Nergal. This is a Phoenician and Punic usage, also found in the Old Testament when Yahweh is called Elohim "gods," and in Amarna letters from Phoenician cities where Pharaoh is addressed as "my gods" (RIA, s.v. Elohim).

¹² These three questions should probably be taken as sarcastic and rhetorical, emphasizing that each deity has a separate and appropriate sphere.

¹³ The Uruk version names the gates as: Nedu, Enkishar, Endashurimma, Nerulla, Nerubanda, Endukuga, and Ennugigi, which are all Sumerian names or epithets. The cuneiform text uses ditto signs for the main areas of repetition here.

(50') The great gods who live within Erkalla!"
As soon as they brought him a throne
(He said to himself) "Don't go to it!" and did not sit on it.¹⁴

(When) the baker brought him bread, "Don't go to it!" and did not eat the bread.

(When) the butcher brought him meat, "Don't go to it!" and did not eat his meat.

(When) the brewer brought him beer, "Don't go to it!" and did not drink his beer.¹⁵

(When) they brought him a footbath, "Don't go to it!" and did not wash his feet.¹⁶

(When) she went to the bath
And dressed herself in a fine dress
And allowed him to catch a glimpse of her body, (60') He [resisted] his heart's [desire to do what] men and women [do].

[about 10 lines missing]

(iv) [3 lines fragmentary]

Nergal [...]

She went to the bath

And dressed herself in a fine dress

And allowed him to catch a glimpse of her body.

He [gave in to] his heart's [desire to do what men and women do].

The two embraced each other¹⁷

(10') And went passionately to bed.

They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a
first day and a second day.

They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a third day and a fourth day.¹⁸

They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a fifth day and a sixth day.

When the seventh day arrived,

Nergal, without [...]

Took away after him [...]

"Let me go, and my sister [...]"

Do not make tremble [...]"

Let me go now, and I will return to Kurnugi [(later)]."

(20') Her mouth turned dark (?) (with rage) [...]"

Nergal went [...]"¹⁹

[...] addressed his speech to the gatekeeper,

"Ereshkigal your lady sent me,

Saying, 'I am sending you to the heaven of Anu our father,'

So let me be allowed out! The message [...]"

Nergal came up the long stairway of heaven.

When he arrived at the gate of Anu, Ellil, and Ea,

Anu, Ellil, and Ea saw him and (said),

"The son of Ishtar has come back to us,"²⁰

(30') She (Ereshkigal) will search for him and [...].

Ea his father must sprinkle him with spring
water, and bareheaded,

Blinking and cringing let him sit in the assembly of all gods."²¹

Ereshkigal [...]

To the bath [...]

[...]

Her body [...]

[...]

She called out [...]

"The chair [...]"

Sprinkle the room with the water [of]

(40') Sprinkle the room with the water [of]

Sprinkle the room with the water [of]

The [...] of the two daughters of Lamaštu (?)
and Enmešarra,

Sprinkle with the waters of [...]"

The messenger of Anu our father who came to see us

Shall eat our bread and drink our water."

Namtar made his voice heard and spoke,

Addressed his words to Ereshkigal his lady,

"The messenger of Anu our father who came to see us —

Before daylight he disappeared!"

Ereshkigal cried out aloud, grievously,

(50') Fell from the throne to the ground,

Then straightened up from the ground.

Her tears flowed down her cheeks.

"Erra, the lover of my delight —

I did not have enough delight with him before
he left!

Erra, the lover of my delight —

I did not have enough delight with him before
he left."

Namtar made his voice heard and spoke, addressed
his words to Ereshkigal,

"Send me to Anu your father, and let me arrest that god!

[Let me take him to you,] that he may kiss you again!"

(v) Ereshkigal made her voice heard and spoke,

Addressed her words to Namtar her vizier,

"Go, Namtar, [you must speak to Anu, Ellil,
and Ea!]

Set your face towards the gate of Anu, Ellil,
and Ea,

¹⁴ Uruk version has: "He did not go to it" instead of "Don't go to it."

¹⁵ Uruk version has: "cupbearer" instead of "brewer."

¹⁶ Uruk version has: "The foot-washer brought him water."

¹⁷ Reading aḥa-meš, "together" rather than logographically "brothers."

¹⁸ Ditto are again used.

¹⁹ Later in this column the story implies that he departed without her realizing.

²⁰ "son of Ishtar" implies that he is a lover with the capacity for fertility.

²¹ Either Nergal exhibits apparent congenital deformities through Ea's magic, or (as translated) the disguise is momentary.

To say, ever since I was a child and a daughter,
 I have not known the playing of other girls,
 I have not known the romping of children.
 That god whom you sent to me and who has impregnated me — let him sleep with me again!
 Send that god to us, and let him spend the night with me as my lover!
 I am unclean, and I am not pure enough to perform the judging of the great gods,
 The great gods who dwell within Erkalla.
 If you do not send that god to me
 (10) According to the rites of Erkalla and the great Earth
 I shall raise up the dead, and they will eat the living.
 I shall make the dead outnumber the living!"²²
 Namtar came up the long stairway of heaven.
 When he arrived at the gate of Anu, Ellil, and Ea, Anu, Ellil, and Ea saw him, and (said),
 "What have you come for, Namtar?"
 "Your daughter sent me,
 To say, 'Ever since I was a child and a daughter,
 I have not known the playing of other girls,
 (20) I have not known the romping of children.
 That god whom you sent to me and who has impregnated me — let him sleep with me again!
 Send that god to us, and let him spend the night with me as my lover!
 I am unclean, and I am not pure enough to perform the judging of the great gods,
 The great gods who dwell within Erkalla.
 If you do not send that god to me,
 I shall raise up the dead, and they will eat the living!
 I shall make the dead outnumber the living!'"
 Ea made his voice heard and spoke, addressed his words to Namtar,
 "Enter, Namtar, the court of Anu,
 (30) [Search out your wrongdoer and bring him!]." ²³
 When he entered the court of Anu,
 All the gods were kneeling humbled [before him],
 [All] the gods of the land were kneeling [humbled before him].
 He went straight up to one, but did not recognize that god,
 Went straight up to a second and a third, but did not recognize that god either.
 Namtar went (away), and addressed his words to his lady,

"My lady, about your sending me up to the heaven of Anu your father:
 My lady, there was only one god who sat bareheaded, blinking and cringing at the assembly of all the gods."
 "Go, seize that god and bring him to me!
 (40) (I expect) Ea his father sprinkled him with spring water,
 And he is sitting in the assembly of all the gods bareheaded, blinking and cringing."
 Namtar came up the long stairway of heaven.
 When he reached the gate of Anu, Ellil, and Ea, Anu, Ellil, and Ea saw him and (said),
 "What have you come for, Namtar?"
 "Your daughter sent me,
 To say, 'Seize that god and bring him to me.'
 "Then enter, Namtar, the courtyard of Anu, and Search out your wrongdoer and take him."
 He went straight up to one god, but did not recognize him,
 (50) Went straight up to a second and third, but did not recognize him either.
 [Then X] made his voice heard and spoke, [addressed his words] to Ea,
 "Let Namtar, the messenger who has come to us, Drink our water, wash, and anoint himself."
 [break of about 15 lines]
 (vi) "He is not to strip off [...]
 Erra, [...]
 I shall [...]."
 Namtar [made his voice heard and addressed his words to Erra],
 "Erra, [...]
 All the rites of the great Underworld [...]
 When you go from [...]
 You shall carry the chair [...]
 You shall carry [...]
 (10) You shall carry [...]
 You shall carry [...]
 You shall carry [...]
 You shall carry [...]
 You shall carry [...]"²⁴
 [...]
 [Do not grapple with him (?) lest] he bind (?) your chest."
 [Erra to]ok to heart [the speech of Namtar].
 He [...] oiled his strap and slung his bow.
 Nergal went down the long stairway of heaven.
 When he arrived at the gate of Ereshkigal (he said (?)),
 (20) "Gatekeeper, open [the gate for me (?)]!"
 He struck down Nedu, the doorman [of the first] gate, and did not let him grapple with him (?).²⁵

²² This is identical to Ishtar's threat in the Descent of Ishtar.

²³ Line restored from a presumed repeat eighteen lines later.

²⁴ Several entirely different refrains are possible.

²⁵ Read "atú ša KÁ [ina l-en] KÁ i-nar-šu-ma ana ti-[iṣ-bu-ti?] ul i-din.

He struck down the second [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He struck down the third [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He struck down the fourth [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He struck down the fifth [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He struck down the sixth [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He struck down the seventh [doorman] (and did not let him grapple with him).
 He entered her wide courtyard,
 (30) And went up to her and laughed.
 He seized her by her hairdo,
 And [pull]ed (?) her from [the throne].
 He seized her by her tresses
 [...]
 The two embraced each other
 And went passionately to bed.
 They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a

first day and a second day.
 They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra for a third day.²⁶
 They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a fourth day.
 (40) They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a fifth day.
 They lay there, queen Ereshkigal and Erra, for a sixth day
 When the seventh day arrived,
 Anu made his voice heard and spoke,
 Addressed his words to Kakka, his vizier,
 "Kakka, I shall send you to Kurnugi,
 To the home of Ereshkigal who dwells within Erkalla,
 To say, 'That god, whom I sent to you,
 Forever [...]
 Those above [...]
 (50) Those below [...]
 [break, about 20-25 lines missing to end]

²⁶ The text has dittos again.

REFERENCES

Gurney 1960; Hunger 1976: no. 1; Dalley 1989:163-177.

NERGAL AND ERESHKIGAL
 (Amarna Version) (1.110)

Stephanie Dalley

When the gods organized a banquet,¹
 They sent a messenger
 To their sister Ereshkigal.
 "We cannot come down to you,
 And you cannot come up to us.
 So send someone to fetch a share of the food
 for you!"
 Ereshkigal sent Namtar her vizier,
 "Go up, Namtar, to high heaven!"
 He went into [where] the gods were [sitting],
 (10) And they [bowed (?)] and greeted Namtar,
 The messenger of their eldest sister.
 They bowed respectfully (?) when they saw him
 and ...
 The high gods [...]
 [...] food for the goddess his mistress.
 [...] wept and was overcome.
 [...] the journey (?)
 [about 6 lines missing]

Ea [...]
 Went [to Namtar and] sent (him) back.
 "Go and [tell] my words to [our] sister.
 She will say, 'Where (?) is the one who did not rise to his feet in the presence of my messenger?
 Bring him to me for his death (?), that I may kill him!'"²
 [And so it happened]
 Namtar came (back) and spoke to the gods,
 The gods summoned him and discussed the death
 with him.
 (30) "Look for the god who did not rise to his feet in your presence,
 And take him before your mistress!"
 Namtar counted them. The last god was crouching down.
 "That god who did not rise to his feet in your presence — he is not here!"

¹ Some confusion is caused in this text by the arrangement of lines. Probably a tablet with very short lines was badly copied on to one with longer lines so that ends of lines do not always correspond to ends of sentences as would be normal.

² Pun: mutu, "husband" and mātu, "death."

Then Namtar went and gave his report, (saying):
 "[My mistress, I went and counted] them.
 The last god [was crouching down].
 [The god who did not rise to his feet in my presence] was not there."
 [Ereshkigal made her voice heard],
 [And addressed Namtar] her messenger,
 (40) "[...] month."
 [...] Ea, honored lord.
 "Identify the one," [...] to the hand of [Ea].³
 "Take (him) to Ereshkigal!" He was weep[ing]
 Before his father Ea: "He will see me!
 "He will not let me stay alive!" "Don't be afraid [...]
 I shall give to you seven and seven [demons]
 To go with you: ..., ..., ..., Flashes-of-Light ning,
 Bailiff, Croucher, Expulsion, Wind,
 Fits, Staggers, Stroke, Lord-of-the-Roof,
 Feverhot, Scab [...]
 With you [...] door
 (50) Ereshkigal will call out: 'Doorkeeper, [...] your door.'
 [You must say]
 'Loosen the thong, that I may enter into the presence of your mistress, Ereshkigal. I have been sent!'" The doorkeeper went
 And said to Namtar: "One god is standing at the entrance of the door,
 Come, inspect him and let him enter." Namtar came out
 And saw him and gladly: "[Wait (?)] here!" He said To his mistress: "My lady, here is the god who in previous Months had vanished (?), and who did not rise to his feet in my presence!"⁴ (60) "Bring him in. As soon as he comes, I shall kill him!"

 Namtar came out and [...], "Come in, my lord,
 To your sister's house and"
 Nergal [said], "You should be glad to see me.
 [...] Nergal [...]
 [2 lines missing]
 ... at the third, Flashes-of-Lightning at the fourth.⁵
 Bailiff at the fifth, Croucher at the sixth, Expulsion
 (70) At the seventh, Wind at the eighth, Fits
 At the ninth, Staggers at the tenth, Stroke
 At the eleventh, Lord-of-the-Roof at the twelfth, Feverhot at the thirteenth, Scab at the fourteenth Door, he managed to seal her in (?). In the forecourt he cut off⁶
 Namtar. He gave his troops orders: "Let the doors
 Be opened! Now I shall race past (?) you!"
 Inside the house, he seized Ereshkigal
 By her hair, pulled her from the throne
 To the ground, intending to cut off her head.
 (80) "Don't kill me, my brother! Let me tell you something."
 Nergal listened to her and relaxed his grip, he wept and was overcome (when she said),
 "You can be my husband, and I can be your wife.
 I will let you seize⁷
 Kingship over the wide Earth! I will put the tablet
 Of wisdom in your hand! You can be master,
 I can be mistress." Nergal listened to this speech of hers,
 And seized her and kissed her. He wiped away her tears.
 "What have you asked of me? After so many months,
 It shall certainly be so!"⁸

³ "Identify": reading as imperative of wussûm.

⁴ Rituals and customs for honoring and placating the dead were carried out on a monthly schedule linked to the phases of the moon.

⁵ Ishtar/Inanna has similar shamanistic control of demons in the Sumerian story, The Descent of Inanna. In the cult of Ishtar at Nineveh, the goddess controlled demons who formed her entourage (Haas 1979:397-401).

⁶ Tentatively reading huttumasa, "to seal her in."

⁷ Exactly the same words are used by Ishtar in Gilgamesh, VI. i.

⁸ Some scholars think this ending is too cryptic and abrupt to be intentional, and that the story would have continued.

REFERENCES

Knudtzon 1915; Dalley 1989:178-181.

EPIC OF CREATION (1.111)

(Enûma Elish)

Benjamin R. Foster

The so-called epic of Creation preserves a relatively late Babylonian conception of the creation of the physical world (including humanity), but its real focus is on the elevation of Marduk to the top of the pantheon in return for taking up the cause of the embattled gods, who build his great temple of Esagila in Babylon in recognition of his leadership.

The composition could therefore be as readily called "The Exaltation of Marduk." As such it provides a parallel of sorts to the exaltation of Yahweh as celebrated by Moses and Miriam in the Song of the Sea (Exodus 15), and the subsequent erection of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness (Hallo and van Dijk 1968 ch. 6; Mann 1977; Hurowitz 1992). Unique to the epic is its denouement, in which Marduk is acclaimed by fifty names and these are given learned explanations or etymologies (Bottéro 1977). [WWH]

Tablet I

(1) When on high no name was given to heaven,
Nor below was the netherworld called by name,
Primeval Apsu was their progenitor,
And matrix-Tiamat was she who bore them all,
(5) They were mingling their waters together,
No cane brake was intertwined nor thicket matted close.

When no gods at all had been brought forth,
None called by names, none destinies ordained,
Then were the gods formed within the(se two).

(10) Lahmu and Lahamu were brought forth, were called by name.

When they had waxed great, had grown up tall,
Anshar and Kishar were formed, greater than they,
They grew lengthy of days, added years to years.
Anu their firstborn was like his forebears,

(15) Anshar made Anu, his offspring, his equal.
Then Anu begot his own image Nudimmud,
Nudimmud was he who dominated(?) his forebears:
Profound in wisdom, acute of sense, he was massively strong,

Much mightier than his grandfather Anshar,
(20) No rival had he among the gods his brethren.¹
The divine brethren banded together,
Confusing Tiamat as they moved about in their stir,
Roiling the vitals of Tiamat,
By their uproar distressing the interior of the Divine Abode.²

(25) Apsu could not reduce their clamor,
But Tiamat was silent before them.
Their actions were noisome to her,
Their behavior was offensive, (but) she was indulgent.

Thereupon Apsu, begetter of the great gods,
(30) Summoned Mummu his vizier, saying to him,
"Mummu, vizier who contents me,
Come, let us go to Tiamat."
They went, took their places facing Tiamat,
They took counsel concerning the gods their offspring.

(35) Apsu made ready to speak,
Saying to her, Tiamat, in a loud voice,
"Their behavior is noisome to me!
By day I have no rest, at night I do not sleep!
I wish to put an end to their behavior, to do away

with it!

(40) Let silence reign that we may sleep."
When Tiamat had heard this,
She grew angry and cried out to her spouse,
She cried out bitterly, outraged that she stood alone,

(For) he had urged evil upon her,

(45) "What? Shall we put an end to what we created?

Their behavior may be most noisome,
but we should bear it in good part."

It was Mummu who answered, counselling Apsu,
Like a dissenting vizier's was the counsel of his Mummu,

"Put an end here and now, father, to their troublesome ways!

(50) By day you should have rest, at night you should sleep."

Apsu was delighted with him, he beamed.

On account of the evils he plotted against the gods
his children,

He embraced Mummu, around his neck,
He sat on his knees so he could kiss him.

(55) Whatever they plotted between them,
Was repeated to the gods their offspring.

The gods heard it as they stirred about,
They were stunned, they sat down in silence.

Surpassing in wisdom, ingenious, resourceful,

(60) Ea was aware of all, recognized their strata-gem.

He fashioned it, he established it, a master plan,
He made it artful, his superb magic spell.

He recited it and brought (him)
to rest in the waters,

He put him in deep slumber, he was fast asleep,

(65) He made Apsu sleep, he was drenched with slumber,

Mummu the advisor was drowsy with languor.

He untied his sash, he stripped off his tiara,

He took away his aura, he himself put it on.

He tied up Apsu, he killed him,

(70) Mummu he bound, he locked him securely.

He founded his dwelling upon Apsu,

He secured Mummu, held (him) firm by a lead-rope.

After Ea had captured and vanquished his foes,

¹ This elaborate theogony, or genealogy of the gods, builds on Sum. precedent. It finds a parallel in Hesiod's version of Greek mythology, and is perhaps its ultimate source (Walcot 1966), but is absent in the Bible.

² For the perennial theme of noise disturbing the gods, cf. the Atra-hasis Epic (below, Text 1.130). But here it is the (younger) deities themselves who make the noise. See Finkelstein 1956:328-331.

Had won the victory over his opponents,
(75) In his chamber, in profound quiet, he rested.
He called it "Apsu," (meaning) "They Recognize Sanctuaries."

He established therein his chamber,
Ea and Damkina his wife dwelt there in splendor.
In the cella of destinies, the abode of designs,

(80) The most capable, the sage of the gods,
the Lord was begotten,

In the midst of Apsu Marduk was formed,
In the midst of holy Apsu was Marduk formed!

Ea his father begot him,
Damkina his mother was confined with him.

(85) He suckled at the breasts of goddesses,
The attendant who raised him endowed him well with glories.

His body was splendid, fiery his glance,
He was a hero at birth, he was a mighty one from the beginning!

When Anu his grandfather saw him,

(90) He was happy, he beamed, his heart was filled with joy.

He perfected him, so that his divinity was strange,
He was much greater, he surpassed them in every way.

His members were fashioned with cunning beyond comprehension,

Impossible to conceive, too difficult to visualize:

(95) Fourfold his vision, fourfold his hearing,³

When he moved his lips a fire broke out.

Formidable his fourfold perception,

And his eyes, in like number, saw in every direction.

He was tallest of the gods, surpassing in form,

(100) His limbs enormous, he was surpassing at birth.

"The son Utu, the son Utu,

The son, the sun, the sunlight of the gods!"

He wore (on his body) the auras of ten gods,
had (them) wrapped around his head too,

Fifty glories were heaped upon him.

(105) Anu formed and produced the four winds,

He put them in his hand, "Let my son play!"

He fashioned dust, he made a storm bear it up,

He caused a wave and it roiled Tiamat,

Tiamat was roiled, churning day and night,

(110) The gods, finding no rest, bore the brunt of each wind.

They plotted evil in their hearts,

They said to Tiamat their mother,

"When he killed Apsu your husband,

You did nothing to save him but sat by, silent.

(115) Now he has made four terrible winds,

They are roiling your vitals so we cannot sleep.

You had no care for Apsu your husband,

As for Mummu, who was captured, you remained aloof.

Now you churn back and forth, confused.

(120) As for us, who cannot lie down to rest, you do not love us!

Think of our burden, our eyes are pinched,

Lift this unremitting yoke, let us sleep!

Battle has begun, give them what they deserve,

[Ma]ke a [tempest], turn them into nothingness."

(125) When Tiamat [heard] these words, they pleased her,

"[As y]ou have counselled, we will make a tempest,

[We will] the gods within it,

(For) they have been adopting [wicked ways] against the gods [thei]r parents."

[They] closed ranks and drew up at Tiamat's side,

(130) Angry, scheming, never lying down night and
day,

[Ma]king warfare, rumbling, raging,

Convening in assembly, that they might start hostilities.

Mother Hubur, who can form everything,

Added countless invincible weapons, gave birth to monster serpents,

(135) Pointed of fang, with merciless incisors(?),

She filled their bodies with venom for blood.

Fierce dragons she clad with glories,

Causing them to bear auras like gods, (saying)

"Whoever sees them shall collapse from weakness!"

(140) Wherever their bodies make onslaught,

they shall not turn back!"

She deployed serpents, dragons, and hairy hero-
men,

Lion monsters, lion men, scorpion men,

Mighty demons, fish men, bull men,

Bearing unsparing arms, fearing no battle.

(145) Her commands were absolute, no one opposed
them,

Eleven indeed on this wise she crea[ted].

From among the gods her offspring, who composed
her assembly,

She raised up Qingu⁴ from among them, it was he
she made greatest!

Leadership of the army, command of the assembly,

(150) Arming, contact, advance of the melee,

Supreme command in warfare,

(All) she entrusted to him, made him sit on the dais.

"I cast your spell. I make you the greatest in the assembly of the gods,

³ See the statue of a god with four heads possibly illustrating this conception in Jacobsen 1976:166.

⁴ Others read Kingu, and take it as a pun on the Sum. name of Sumer, i.e., Kengir, and Tiamat (lit., "Sea," cognate with Heb. tehom) similarly as standing for the Sealand (Akk. māt tamīm). See Jacobsen 1975:76.

Kingship of all the gods I put in your power.
 (155) You are the greatest, my husband, you are illustrious,
 Your command shall always be greatest, over all the Anunna-gods."
 She gave him the tablet of destinies, had him hold it to his chest, (saying)
 "As for you, your command will not be changed, your utterance will be eternal.
 Now that Qingu is the highest and has taken [supremacy],
 (160) And has [ordained] destinies for his divine children,
 Whatever you (gods) say shall cause fire to [subside],
 Your concentrated venom shall make the mighty one yield."

Tablet II

(1) Tiamat assembled her creatures,
 Drew up for battle against the gods her brood.
 Thereafter Tiamat, more than(?) Apsu, was become an evildoer.
 She informed Ea that she was ready for battle.
 (5) When Ea heard this,
 He was struck dumb with horror and sat stock still.
 After he had thought and his distress had calmed,
 He made straight his way to Anshar his grandfather.
 He came in before his grandfather, Anshar,
 (10) All that Tiamat plotted he recounted to him,
 "My father, Tiamat our mother has grown angry with us,
 She has convened an assembly, furious with rage.
 All the gods rallied around her,
 Even those you created are going over to her side,
 (15) They are massing around her, ready at Tiamat's side.
 Angry, scheming, never lying down night and day,
 Making warfare, rumbling, raging,
 Convening in assembly, that they might start hostilities.
 Mother Hubur, who can form everything,
 (20) Added countless invincible weapons,
 gave birth to monster serpents,
 Pointed of fang, with merciless incisors(?),
 She filled their bodies with venom for blood.
 Fierce dragons she clad with glories,
 Causing them to bear auras like gods, (saying)
 (25) 'Whoever sees them shall collapse from weakness!
 Wherever their bodies make onslaught,
 they shall not turn back!'
 She deployed serpents, dragons, and hairy hero-men,
 Lion monsters, lion men, scorpion men,

Mighty demons, fish men, bull men,
 (30) Bearing unsparing arms, fearing no battle.
 Her commands were absolute, no one opposed them,
 Eleven indeed on this wise she created.
 From among the gods her offspring, who composed her assembly,
 She raised up Qingu from among them, it was he she made greatest!
 (35) Leadership of the army, command of the assembly,
 Arming, contact, advance of the melee,
 Supreme command in warfare,
 (All) she entrusted to him, made him sit on the dais.
 'I cast your spell. I make you the greatest in the assembly of the gods,
 (40) Kingship of all the gods I put in your power.
 You are the greatest, my husband, you are illustrious.
 Your command shall always be greatest, over all the Anunna-gods.'
 She gave him the tablet of destinies, had him hold it to his chest, (saying)
 'As for you, your command will not be changed, your utterance will be eternal.
 (45) Now that Qingu is the highest and has taken [supremacy],
 And has [ordained] destinies for his divine children,
 Whatever you (gods) say shall cause fire to [subside],
 Your concentrated venom shall make the mighty one yield.'"
 [When Anshar heard] the speech, the affair was confused,
 (50) He cried out "Woe!"; he bit his lip,
 His spirits were angry, his mind was uneasy,
 His cries to Ea his offspring grew choked,
 "My son, you yourself were instigator of battle!
 Do you bear the consequences of your own handiwork!
 (55) You went forth and killed Apsu,
 So Tiamat, whom you have enraged,
 where is one who can face her?"
 The sage counsellor, wise prince,
 Producer of wisdom, divine Nudimmud,
 Answered his father Anshar gently,
 (60) With soothing words, calming speech,
 "My father, inscrutable, ordainer of destinies,
 Who has power to create and destroy,
 O Anshar, inscrutable, ordainer of destinies,
 Who has power to create and destroy,
 (65) I will declare my thoughts to you, relent for a moment,
 Recall in your heart that I made a good plan.

Before I undertook to kill Apsu,
Who had foreseen what is happening now?
Ere I was the one who moved quickly to snuff out his life,

(70) I indeed, for it was I who destroyed him,
[wh]at was occurring?"

When Anshar heard this, it pleased him,
He calmed down, saying to Ea,
"Your deeds are worthy of a god,
You can(?) [] a fierce, irresistible stroke,
(75) Ea, your deeds are worthy of a god,
You can(?) [] a fierce, irresistible stroke,
Go then to Tiamat, sub[du]e her onslaught,
May her anger [be pacified] by [your] magic spell."

When he heard the command [of his father] A[n-
shar],

(80) He set off, making straight his way,
Ea went to seek out Tiamat's stratagem.
He stopped, horror-stricken, then turned back.
He came before Anshar the sovereign,
He beseeched him with entreaties, saying,

(85) "[My father], Tiamat has carried her actions
beyond me,

I sought out her course, but my spell cannot counter it.

Her strength is enormous, she is utterly terrifying,
She is reinforced with a host, none can come out against her.

Her challenge was in no way reduced, it was so
loud(?) against me,

(90) I became afraid at her clamor, I turned back.
My father, do not despair, send another to her,
A woman's force may be very great, but it cannot match a man's.

Do you scatter her ranks, thwart her intentions,
Before she lays her hands on all of us."

(95) Anshar was shouting, in a passion,
To Anu his son he said these words,
"Stalwart son, valiant warrior,

Whose strength is enormous, whose onslaught is irresistible,

Hurry, take a stand before Tiamat,

(100) Soothe her feelings, let her heart be eased.

If she will not listen to what you say,
Say something by way of entreaty to her,
so that she be pacified."

When he heard what his father Anshar said,
He set off, [made str]aight his way,

(105) Anu went to seek out Tiamat's stratagem.
He stopped, horror-stricken, then turned back.
He came before [Ansha]r, [his father who begot
him],

He beseeched him with entreaties, s[aying].
"My father, Tiamat has carried her actions beyond
me,

(110) I sought out her course, but my s[pell] cannot counter it].

Her strength is enormous, she is utterly terrifying,
She is reinforced with a host, none can [come out
against] her.

Her challenge was in no way reduced, it was so
loud(?) against me,

I became afraid at her clamor, I turned back.

(115) My father, do not despair, send another to her,

A woman's strength may be very great, but it cannot match a man's.

Do you scatter her ranks, thwart her intentions,
Before she lays her hands on all of us."

Anshar fell silent, gazing at the ground,

(120) Nodding towards Ea, he shook his head.

The Igigi-gods and Anunna-gods were all assembled,

With lips closed tight, they sat in silence.

Would no god go out [at his] command?

Against Tiamat would none go as [he] ordered?

(125) Then Anshar, father of the great gods,
His heart was angry, he [would not summon] anyone!

The mighty firstborn, champion of his father,
Hastener to battle, the warrior Marduk

Did Ea summon to his secret place,

(130) Told him his secret words,

"O Marduk, think, heed your father,

You are my son who can relieve his heart!

Draw nigh, approach Anshar,

(135) Make ready to speak. He was angry, seeing you he will be calm."

The Lord was delighted at his father's words,
He drew near and waited upon Anshar.

When Anshar saw him, his heart was filled with joyful feelings,

He kissed his lips, he banished his gloom.

(140) "My father, let not your lips be silent but
speak,

Let me go, let me accomplish your heart's desire.

[O Anshar], let not your lips be silent but speak,

Let me go, let me accomplish your heart's desire!

What man is it who has sent forth his battle against
you?"

(145) Why, Tiamat, a woman, comes out against you to arms.

[My father], creator, rejoice and be glad,

Soon you will trample the neck of Tiamat.

[Anshar], creator, rejoice and be glad,

Soon you will trample [the neck] of Tiamat!"

(150) "[Go], son, knower of all wisdom,

Bring Tiamat to rest with your sacral spell.

Make straight, quickly, with the storm chariot,

Let it not veer from its [course], turn (it) back!"

The Lord was delighted at his grandfather's words,

(155) His heart was overjoyed as he said to his grandfather,

"Lord of the gods, of the destiny of the great gods,
If indeed I am to champion you,
Subdue Tiamat and save your lives,
Convene the assembly, nominate me for supreme destiny!

(160) Take your places in the Assembly Place of the Gods,

all of you, in joyful mood.

When I speak, let me ordain destinies instead of you.

Let nothing that I shall bring about be altered,
Nor what I say be revoked or changed."⁵

Tablet III

(1) Anshar made ready to speak,
Saying to Kakka his vizier these words,

"Kakka, vizier who contents me,
Let it be you that I send off towards Lahmu and Lahamu.

(5) You know how [to find a way], you can make a fine speech.

Send over to my presence the gods my ancestors,
Let them bring all the gods before me.
Let them converse, sit down at a feast,
On produce of the field let them feed, imbibe of the vine.

(10) Let them ordain destiny for Marduk, their champion.

Be off, Kakka, wait upon them,
All that I tell you, repeat to them:

'It is Anshar your son who has ordered me to come,

He has bade me speak in full the command of his heart,

(15) To wit: "Tiamat our mother has grown angry with us,

She has convened an assembly, furious with rage.
All the gods rallied around her,
Even those you created are going over to her side.
They are massing around her, ready at Tiamat's side.

(20) Angry, scheming, never lying down night and day,

Making warfare, rumbling, raging,
Convening in assembly, that they might start hostilities.

Mother Hubur, who can form everything,
Added countless invincible weapons,
gave birth to monster serpents,

(25) Pointed of fang, with merciless incisors(?),
She filled their bodies with venom for blood.

Fierce dragons she clad with glories,

Causing them to bear auras like gods, (saying)

'Whoever sees them shall collapse from weakness!

(30) Wherever their bodies make onslaught,
they shall not turn back.'

She deployed serpents, dragons, and hairy hero-men,

Lion monsters, lion men, scorpion men,

Mighty demons, fish men, bull men,

Bearing unsparing arms, fearing no battle.

(35) Her commands were absolute, no one opposed them.

Eleven indeed on this wise she created.

From among the gods her offspring, who composed her assembly,

She raised up Qingu from among them, it was he she made greatest!

Leadership of the army, command of the assembly,

(40) Arming, contact, advance of the melee,

Supreme command in warfare:

All she entrusted to him, made him sit on the dais.

'I cast your spell, I make you the greatest in the assembly of the gods,

Kingship of all the gods I put in your power.

(45) You are greatest, my husband, you are illustrious,

Your command shall always be greatest, over all the Anunna-gods.'

She gave him the tablet of destinies, had him hold it to his chest, (saying)

'As for you, your command will not be changed, your utterance will be eternal.

Now that Qingu is the highest and has taken over [supremacy],

(50) And has [ordained] destinies for his divine children,

Whatever you (gods) say shall cause fire to [subside],

Your concentrated venom shall make the mighty one yield.'

I sent Anu, he could not confront her,

Nudimmud was afraid and turned back.

(55) Marduk came forward, the sage of the gods, your son,

He has resolved to go against Tiamat.

When he spoke, he said to me,

'If indeed I am to champion you,

Subdue Tiamat and save your lives,

(60) Convene the assembly, nominate me for supreme destiny!

Take your places in the Assembly Place of the Gods,

all of you, in joyful mood,

When I speak, let me ordain destinies instead of you.

⁵ Marduk demands supremacy in the pantheon as the price of defending it against the older generation of gods led by Tiamat. This can be seen as a metaphor for the rise of Babylon, Marduk's city, perhaps under Nebuchadnezzar I; see Lambert 1964.

Let nothing that I shall bring about be altered,
Nor what I say be revoked or changed.'

(65) Come quickly to me, straightaway ordain him your destinies,

Let him go and confront your powerful enemy."

Kakka went and made straight his way
Towards Lahmu and Lahamu the gods his ancestors.

He prostrated, kissed the ground before them.

(70) He stood up straight and said to them,

"It is Anshar your son who has ordered me to come,

He has bade me speak in full the command of his heart:

'Tiamat our mother has grown angry with us,
She has convened an assembly, furious with rage.

(75) All the gods rallied around her,
Even those you created are going over to her side.
They are massing around her, ready at Tiamat's side.

Angry, scheming, never lying down night and day,
Making warfare, rumbling, raging,

(80) Convening in assembly, that they might begin hostilities.

Mother Hubur, who can form everything,

Added countless invincible weapons,

gave birth to monster serpents,

Pointed of fang, with merciless incisors(?),

She filled their bodies with venom for blood.

(85) Fierce dragons she clad with glories,

Causing them to bear auras like gods, (saying)

"Whoever sees them shall collapse from weakness!

Wherever their bodies make onslaught

they shall not turn back!"

She deployed serpents, dragons, and hairy hero-
men,

(90) Lion monsters, lion men, scorpion men,

Mighty demons, fish men, bull men,

Bearing unsparing arms, fearing no battle.

Her commands were absolute, no one opposed
them.

Eleven indeed on this wise she created!

From among the gods her offspring who composed
her assembly,

She raised up Qingu from among them, it was he
she made greatest!

Leadership of the army, command of the assembly,

Arming, contact, advance of the melee,

Supreme command in warfare:

(100) (All) she entrusted to him, made him sit on the dais.

"I cast your spell and make you the greatest in the assembly of the gods,

Kingship of all the gods I put in your power.

You shall be the greatest, you are my only spouse,

Your name shall always be greatest, over all the Anunna-gods."

(105) 'She gave him the tablet of destinies, had him hold it to his chest, (saying)

"As for you, your command will not be changed, your utterance will be eternal.

Now that Qingu is the highest and has taken over [supremacy],

And has [ordained] destinies for his divine
children,

Whatever you (gods) say shall cause fire to [sub-
side],

(110) Your concentrated venom will make the mighty one yield."

'I sent Anu, he could not confront her,

Nudimmud was afraid and turned back.

Marduk came forward, the sage of the gods, your son,

He has resolved to go against Tiamat.

(115) When he spoke, he said to me,

"If indeed I am to champion you,

Subdue Tiamat and save your lives,

Convene the assembly, nominate me for supreme destiny!

In the Assembly Place of the Gods take your places,

all of you, in joyful mood.

(120) When I speak, let me ordain destinies instead of you.

Let nothing that I shall bring about be altered,

Nor what I say be revoked nor changed."

'Hurry to me, straightaway ordain him your destinies,

Let him go and confront your powerful enemy.'

(125) When Lahmu and Lahamu heard, they cried aloud,

All of the Igigi-gods wailed bitterly,

"What (is our) hostility, that she has taken a[ct]ion (against) us?

We scarcely know what Tiamat might do!"

They swarmed together and came.

(130) All the great gods, ordainers of [destinies],

Came before Anshar and were filled with [joy].

One kissed the other in the assembly [],

They conversed, sat down at a feast,

On produce of the field they fed, imbibed of the vine,

(135) With sweet liquor they made their gullets run,

They felt good from drinking the beer.

Most carefree, their spirits rose,

To Marduk their champion they ordained destiny.

Tablet IV

(1) They set out for him a princely dais,

He took his place before his fathers for sovereignty.

"You are the most important among the great gods,

Your destiny is unrivalled, your command is supreme.

(5) O Marduk, you are the most important among the great gods,

Your destiny is unrivalled, your command is supreme!

Henceforth your command cannot be changed,
To raise high, to bring low, this shall be your power.

Your command shall be truth, your word shall not be misleading.

(10) Not one of the gods shall go beyond the limits you set.

Support is wanted for the gods' sanctuaries,
Wherever their shrines shall be, your own shall be established.

O Marduk, you are our champion,
We bestow upon you kingship of all and everything.

(15) Take your place in the assembly, your word shall be supreme.

May your weapon never strike wide but dispatch your foes.

O Lord, spare his life who trusts in you,
But the god who has taken up evil, snuff out his life!"

They set up among them a certain constellation,

(20) To Marduk their firstborn said they (these words),

"Your destiny, O Lord, shall be foremost of the gods',

Command destruction or creation, they shall take place.

At your word the constellation shall be destroyed,
Command again, the constellation shall be intact."

(25) He commanded and at his word the constellation was destroyed,

He commanded again and the constellation was created anew.⁶

When the gods his fathers saw what he had commanded,

Joyfully they hailed, "Marduk is king!" "

They bestowed in full measure scepter, throne, and staff,

(30) They gave him unopposable weaponry that vanquishes enemies.

"Go, cut off the life of Tiamat,

Let the winds bear her blood away as glad tidings!"

The gods, his fathers, ordained the Lord's destiny,
On the path to success and authority
did they set him marching.

(35) He made the bow, appointed it his weapon,
He mounted the arrow, set it on the string.

He took up the mace, held it in his right hand,

a Pss 93:1;
96:10; 97:1;
99:1; 1 Chr
16:31

Bow and quiver he slung on his arm.

Thunderbolts he set before his face,

(40) With raging fire he covered his body.

Then he made a net to enclose Tiamat within,
He deployed the four winds that none of her might escape:

South Wind, North Wind, East Wind, West Wind, Gift of his grandfather Anu;
he fastened the net at his side.

(45) He made ill wind, whirlwind, cyclone,
Four-ways wind, seven-ways wind, destructive wind, irresistible wind:

He released the winds which he had made, the seven of them,

Mounting in readiness behind him to roil inside
Tiamat.

Then the Lord raised the Deluge, his great weapon.

(50) He mounted the terrible chariot, the unopposable
Storm Demon,

He hitched to it the four-steed team, he tied them
at his side:

"Slaughterer," "Merciless," "Overwhelmer,"
"Soaring."

Their lips are curled back, their teeth bear venom,
They know not fatigue, they are trained to trample
down.

(55) He stationed at his right gruesome battle and strife,

At his left the fray that overthrows all formations.
He was garbed in a ghastly armored garment,

On his head he was covered with terrifying auras.
The Lord made straight and pursued his way,

(60) Toward raging Tiamat he set his face.
He was holding a spell ready upon his lips,

A plant, antidote to venom, he was grasping in his hand.

At that moment the gods were stirring, stirring about him,

The gods his fathers were stirring about him, the gods stirring about him.

(65) The Lord drew near, to see the battle of Tiamat,

He was looking for the stratagem of Qingu her spouse.

As he looked, his tactic turned to confusion,
His reason was overthrown, his actions panicky,

And as for the gods his allies, who went at his
side,

(70) When they saw the valiant vanguard, their sight failed them.

Tiamat cast her spell pointblank,
Falsehood, lies she held ready on her lips.

"..... lord, the gods rise against you,
They assembled [where] they are,

⁶ The ability to destroy or create by fiat is the test of divine supremacy.

(but) are they on your side?"

(75) The Lord [raised] the Deluge, his great weapon,
To Tiamat, who acted conciliatory, sent he (this word),
"Why outwardly do you assume a friendly attitude,
While your heart is plotting to open attack?
Children cried out, they oppress their parents,
(80) But you, their own mother, spurned all natural feeling.
You named Qingu to be spouse for you,
Though he had no right to be, you set him up for chief god.
You attempted wicked deeds against Anshar, sovereign of the gods,
And you have perpetrated your evil against the gods my fathers.
(85) Though main force is drawn up, though these your weapons are in array,
Come within range, let us duel, you and I!"
When Tiamat heard this,
She was beside herself, she turned into a maniac.
Tiamat shrieked loud, in a passion,
(90) Her frame shook all over, down to the ground.
He was reciting the incantation, casting his spell,
While the gods of battle were whetting their blades.
Tiamat and Marduk, sage of the gods, drew close for battle,
They locked in single combat, joining for the fray.
(95) The Lord spread out his net, encircled her,
The ill wind he had held behind him he released in her face.
Tiamat opened her mouth to swallow,
He thrust in the ill wind so she could not close her lips.
The raging winds bloated her belly,
(100) Her insides were stopped up, she gaped her mouth wide.
He shot off the arrow, it broke open her belly,
It cut to her innards, it pierced the heart.⁷
He subdued her and snuffed out her life,
He flung down her carcass, he took his stand upon it.
(105) After the vanguard had slain Tiamat,
He scattered her forces, he dispersed her host.
As for the gods her allies, who had come to her aid,
They trembled, terrified, they ran in all directions,
They tried to make a way out(?) to save their lives,
(110) There was no escaping the grasp that held (them)!

b Gen 1:1-8

He drew them in and smashed their weapons.
They were cast in the net and sat in a heap,
They were heaped up in the corners, full of woe,
They were bearing his punishment, to prison confined.
(115) As for the eleven creatures, the ones adorned with glories,
And the demonic horde(?), which all went at her side,
He put on lead ropes, he bound their arms.
He trampled them under, together with their belligerence.
As for Qingu, who was trying to be great among them,
(120) He captured him and reckoned him among the doomed.
He took away from him the tablet of destinies that he had no right to,
He sealed it with a seal and affixed it to his chest.
Having captured his enemies and triumphed,
Having shown the mighty(?) foe subservient(?),
(125) Having fully achieved Anshar's victory over his enemies,
Valiant Marduk having attained what Nudimmud desired,
He made firm his hold over the captured gods,
Then turned back to Tiamat whom he had captured.
The Lord trampled upon the frame of Tiamat,
(130) With his merciless mace he crushed her skull.
He cut open the arteries of her blood,
He let the North Wind bear (it) away as glad tidings.
When his fathers saw, they rejoiced and were glad,
They brought him gifts and presents.
(135) He calmed down. Then the Lord was inspecting her carcass,
That he might divide(?) the monstrous lump and fashion artful things.
He split her in two, like a fish for drying,
Half of her he set up and made as a cover, heaven.
He stretched out the hide and assigned watchmen,
(140) And ordered them not to let her waters escape.^b
He crossed heaven and inspected (its) firmament,
He made a counterpart to Apsu, the dwelling of Nudimmud.
The Lord measured the construction of Apsu,
He founded the Great Sanctuary, the likeness of E-sharra.⁸
(In) the Great Sanctuary, (in) Esharra, which he built, (and in) heaven,

⁷ Technically, Marduk conquers Tiamat by forcing her body open with the wind as with a bellows, then shooting an arrow into her innards. Symbolically, there may be here an allusion to the military triumph of Kassite Babylonia over the First Sealand Dynasty in the 15th century BCE; cf. above, n. 4.

⁸ The creation of heaven and earth here and in the next tablet (chapter) serves as a way of disposing of the defeated Tiamat rather than as the main focus of the epic.

He made Ea, Enlil, and Anu dwell in their holy places. c Gen 2:14

Tablet V

(1) He made the position(s) for the great gods,
He established (in) constellations the stars, their likenesses.

He marked the year, described its boundaries,
He set up twelve months of three stars each.

(5) After he had patterned the days of the year,
He fixed the position of Neberu⁹ to mark the (stars') relationships.

Lest any make an error or go astray,
He established the position(s) of Enlil and Ea in relation to it.

He opened up gates on both (sides of her) ribs,

(10) He made strong bolts to left and right.

In her liver he established the zenith.

He made the moon appear, entrusted (to him) the night.

He assigned to him the crown jewel of nighttime to mark the day (of the month):

Every month, without ceasing, he exalted him with a crown.

(15) "At the beginning of the month, waxing over the land,

You shine with horns to mark six days,

At the seventh day, the disk as [ha]lf.

At the fifteenth day, you shall be in opposition, at the midpoint of each [month].¹⁰

When the sun f[ac]es you from the horizon of heaven,

(20) Wane at the same pace and form in reverse.

At the day of di[sappeara]nce, approach the sun's course,

On the [] of the thirtieth day, you shall be in conjunction with the sun a second time.

I d[efined]? the celestial signs, proceed on their path,

[] approach each other and render (oracular) judgment.

(50) To raise the wind, to cause rainfall,

To make mists steam, to pile up her spittle (as snow?),

He assigned to himself, put under his control.

He set down her head and piled [] upon it,

He opened underground springs, a flood was let flow(?).

(55) From her eyes he undammed the Euph[rates] and Tigris,^c

He stopped up her nostrils, he left ...

He heaped up high-peaked mo[unt]ains from(?) her dugs.

He drilled through her waterholes to carry off the catchwater.

He coiled up her tail and tied it as(?) "The Great Bond."

(60) [] Apsu beneath, at his feet.

He set her crotch as the brace of heaven,
Spreading [half of] her as a cover, he established the netherworld.

[After he had completed his task inside Tiamat,

[He spre]ad his net, let all (within) escape.

[...]

After he had designed his prerogatives and devised his responsibilities,

He put on leadlines, entrusted (those) to Ea.

[The tablet] of destinies, which he took from Qingu and brought away,

(70) As the foremost gift he took away, he presented (it) to Anu.

The [] of battle, which he had fastened on and set on his head,

[] he led before his fathers.

[And as for] the eleven creatures which Tiamat created ...

He smashed their [wea]pons, he tied them to his feet.

(75) He made images [of them] and set them up at the [Gate of] Apsu:

"Lest ever after they be forgotten, let this be the sign."

When [the gods] saw, they rejoiced and were glad, Lahmu, Lahamu, and all his fathers.

Anshar [embra]ced him, proclaimed (his) salutation (to be) "king."

(80) [A]nu, Enlil, and Ea gave him gifts,

[] Damkina his mother made cries of joy over him,

She(?) made his face glow with (cries of) "Good ...!"

To Usmu, who brought (Damkina's) gift at the glad tidings,

[He en]trusted the ministry of Apsu and care of the sanctuaries.

(85) All the Igigi-gods together prostrated themselves before him,

[And] the Anunna-gods, all there are, were doing him homage,

The whole of them joined together to pay him reverence,

[Before him] they stood, they prostrated themselves, "This is the king!"

[After] his fathers had celebrated him in due measure,

(90) [] covered with the dust of battle.

[] ...

With cedar [oil] and [] he anoi[n]ted his body,

He clothed himself in [his] princely [gar]ment,

The kingly aura, the awe-inspiring tiara,

⁹ Lit., "the passage," i.e. the Milky Way.

¹⁰ Cf. Atra-hasis (below, Text 1.130) I 206 and n. 5.

(95) He picked up the mace, he held it in his right hand,

[] he held in his left hand.

[]

[] he made firm at his feet.

He set over []

(100) The staff of success and authority [he hung] at his side.

After he [had put on] the aura of [his kingship],

His netted sack, the Apsu [] awesomeness.

He was seated like []

In [his] throne room []

(105) In his cella []

The gods, all there are, []

Lahmu and Lahamu []

Made ready to speak and [said to] the Igigi-gods:

"Formerly [Mar]duk was 'our beloved son,'

(110) Now he is your king, pay heed to his command."

Next all of them spoke and said:

"Lugaldimmerankia' is his name, trust in him!"

When they had given kingship over to Marduk,

They said to him expressions of good will and obedience,

(115) "Henceforth you shall be provider for our sanctuaries,

Whatever you shall command, we will do."

Marduk made ready to speak and said

(These) words to the gods his fathers,

"Above Apsu, the azure dwelling,

(120) As counterpart to Esharra, which I built for you,

Below the firmament, whose grounding I made firm,

A house I shall build, let it be the abode of my pleasure.

Within it I shall establish its holy place,

I shall appoint my (holy) chambers,

I shall establish my kingship.

(125) When you go up from Apsu to assembly,

Let your stopping places be there to receive you.

When you come down from heaven to [assembly],

Let your stopping places be there to receive all of you.

I shall call [its] name [Babylon], (meaning) "Houses of the Great Gods," (130) We shall all hold fe[stival]s with[in] it."

When the gods his fathers heard what he commanded,

They ... []

"Over all things which your hands have created,

Who has [authority, save for you]?

(135) Over the earth that you have created,

Who has [authority, save for] you?

Babylon, to which you have given name,

Make our [stopping place] there forever.

Let them bring us our daily portions,

(140) [] our [].

Whosoever shall [] our task which we [],

In his place [] his toil []."

[...]

The gods prostrated themselves before him, saying,

(150) To Lugaldimmeran[ki]a their lord they [said],

"Formerly [we called you] 'The Lord, [our beloved] son,'

Now 'Our King' ... [shall be your name],

He whose [sacral] sp[ell] saved our lives,"

[au]ra, ma[ce], and ne[t],

(155) [Ea(?), ev]ery [sk]ill.

Let him make the plans, we ... []."

Tablet VI

(1) When [Mar]duk heard the speech of the gods, He was resolving to make artful things:

He would tell his idea to Ea,

What he thought of in his heart he proposes,

(5) "I shall compact blood, I shall cause bones to be,

I shall make stand a human being, let 'Man' be its name.

I shall create humankind,

They shall bear the gods' burden that those may rest.

I shall artfully double the ways of the gods:

(10) Let them be honored as one but divided in twain."

Ea answered him, saying these words,

He told him a plan to let the gods rest,

"Let one, their brother, be given to me,

Let him be destroyed so that people can be fashioned.

(15) Let the great gods convene in assembly,

Let the guilty one be given up that they may abide."

Marduk convened the great gods in assembly,

He spoke to them magnanimously as he gave the command,

The gods heeded his utterance,

(20) As the king spoke to the Anunna-gods (these) words,

"Let your first reply be the truth!

Do you speak with me truthful words!

Who was it that made war,

Suborned Tiamat and drew up for battle?

(25) Let him be given over to me, the one who made war,

I shall make him bear his punishment, you shall be released."

The Igigi, the great gods answered him,

To Lugaldimmerankia, sovereign of all the gods, their lord,

"It was Qingu who made war,

(30) Suborned Tiamat and drew up for battle."
They bound and held him before Ea,
They imposed the punishment on him and shed his blood.

From his blood he made mankind,
He imposed the burden of the gods and exempted the gods.

(35) After Ea the wise had made mankind,
They imposed the burden of the gods on them!¹¹
That deed is beyond comprehension,
By the artifices of Marduk did Nudimmud create!
Marduk the king divided the gods,

(40) The Anunna-gods, all of them, above and below,

He assigned to Anu for duty at his command.
He set three hundred in heaven for (their) duty,
A like number he designated for the ways of the netherworld:

He made six hundred dwell in heaven and nether-world.

(45) After he had given all the commands,
And had divided the shares of the Anunna-gods of heaven and netherworld,

The Anunna-gods made ready to speak,
To Marduk their lord they said,

"Now, Lord, you who have liberated us,

(50) What courtesy may we do you?

We will make a shrine, whose name will be a byword,

Your chamber that shall be our stopping place, we shall find rest therein.¹²

We shall lay out the shrine, let us set up its emplacement,

When we come (to visit you), we shall find rest therein."

(55) When Marduk heard this,
His features glowed brightly, like the day,
"Then make Babylon the task that you requested, Let its brickwork be formed, build high the shrine."

The Anunna-gods set to with hoes,

(60) One (full) year they made its bricks.

When the second year came,

They raised up Esagila, the counterpart to Apsu,
They built the high ziggurat of (counterpart-)Apsu,
For Anu-Enlil-Ea they founded his ... and dwelling.

(65) Majestically he took his seat before them,
Its pinnacles were facing toward the base of Esharra.

After they had done the work of Esagila,
All the Anunna-gods devised their own shrines.
The three hundred Igigi-gods of heaven and the six hundred of Apsu all convened.

(70) The Lord, on the Exalted Dais, which they built as his dwelling,

Seated the gods his fathers for a banquet,

"This is Babylon, your place of dwelling.

Take your pleasure there, seat yourselves in its delights!"

The great gods sat down,

(75) They set out cups, they sat down at the feast.¹³

After they had taken their enjoyment inside it,
And in awe-inspiring Esagila had conducted the offering,

All the orders and designs had been made permanent,

All the gods had divided the stations of heaven and netherworld,

(80) The fifty great gods took their thrones,

The seven gods of destinies were confirmed forever for rendering judgment.

The Lord took the bow, his weapon, and set it before them,

The gods his fathers looked upon the net he had made.

They saw how artfully the bow was fashioned,

(85) His fathers were praising what he had brought to pass,

Anu raised (it), speaking to the assembly of the gods,

He kissed the bow, "This be my daughter!"

He named the bow, these are its names:

"'Longwood' shall be the first, 'Conqueror' shall be the second."

(90) The third name, 'Bow Star,' he made visible in heaven.

He established its position with respect to the gods his brethren.

After Anu had ordained the destinies of the bow,

He set out the royal throne which stood highest among the gods,

Anu had him sit there, in the assembly of the gods.

(95) Then the great gods convened,

They made Marduk's destiny highest, they prostrated themselves.

They laid upon themselves a curse (if they broke the oath),

With water and oil they swore, they touched their throats.

They granted him exercise of kingship over the gods,

(100) They established him forever for lordship of heaven and earth.

Anshar gave him an additional name, Asalluhi,

"When he speaks, we shall all do obeisance,

At his command the gods shall pay heed.

¹¹ Though the motivation for the creation of humanity is the same here as in Atra-hasis (below, Text 1.130), i.e., to relieve the gods of their labors, it is stated here much more briefly, the creator is Ea, not the mother-goddess, and his method of creation is quite different.

¹² The physical symbol of Marduk's exaltation is the construction of his temple in Babylon by all the other deities.

¹³ A banquet marks the formal inauguration of the temple (Hurowitz 1992b).

His word shall be supreme above and below,
 (105) The son, our champion, shall be the highest.
 His lordship shall be supreme, he shall have no rival,
 He shall be the shepherd of the black-headed folk,¹⁴
 his creatures.
 They shall tell of his ways, without forgetting, in the future.
 He shall establish for his fathers great food offerings,
 (110) He shall provide for them, he shall take care of their sanctuaries.
 He shall cause incense burners to be savored, he shall make their chambers rejoice.
 He shall make on earth the counterpart of what he brought to pass in heaven,
 He shall appoint the black-headed folk to serve him.
 Let the subject peoples be mindful that their gods should be invoked,
 (115) At his command let them heed their goddess(es).
 Let their gods, their goddesses be brought food offerings;
 Let (these) not be forgotten, let them sustain their gods.
 Let their holy places be apparent(?), let them build their sanctuaries.
 Let the black-headed folk be divided as to gods,
 (120) (But) by whatever name we call him, let him be our god.¹⁵

Tablet VII

The Igigi-gods pronounced all the names.
 When Ea heard (them), he was joyful of heart,
 He said, "He whose name his fathers have glorified,

 (140) His name, like mine, shall be 'Ea.'
 He shall provide the procedures for all my offices,
 He shall take charge of all my commands."
 With the name "Fifty" the great gods
 Pronounced his fifty names, they made his position supreme.
 (145) They must be grasped: the "first one" should reveal (them),
 The wise and knowledgable should ponder (them) together,
 The master should repeat, and make the pupil understand.
 The "shepherd," the "herdsman" should pay attention,
 He must not neglect the Enlil of the gods, Marduk,
 (150) So his land may prosper and he himself be safe.
 His word is truth, what he says is not changed,
 Not one god can annul his utterance.
 If he frowns, he will not relent,
 If he is angry, no god can face his rage.
 (155) His heart is remote, his feelings all encompassing,
 He before whom crime and sin must appear for judgment.
 The revelation (of the names) which the "first one" discoursed before him (Marduk),
 He wrote down and preserved for the future to hear,
 The [wo]rd of Marduk who created the Igigi-gods,
 (160) [His/Its] let them [], his name let them invoke.
 Let them sound abroad the song of Marduk,
 How he defeated Tiamat and took kingship.

¹⁴ The expression "black-headed folk" is a poetic term for mankind in general. It may also imply contrast with fair-haired people living beyond the bounds of ancient Mesopotamia.

¹⁵ The rest of Tablet VI and the beginning of Tablet VII are given over to the proclamation and elucidation of the fifty names of Marduk (not included here).

REFERENCES

Text: Lambert and Parker 1966. Translations and studies: ANET 60-72, 501-503; Heidel 1951; Foster BM 1:351-402; FDD 9-51.

THE THEOGONY OF DUNNU (I.112)

William W. Hallo

The city of Dunnu(m), whose name is a generic term for "fort, fortress," is equated in a lexical text with the "pristine heavenly city" (URU-SAG-AN-NA), and in a date formula with the "ancient capital city" or rather perhaps the "bolt" (URU-SAG-MAH) of the kingdom of Isin. Its fall in 1795 BCE ushered in the fall of Isin to Larsa in the following year. In the present text, it is even called an "eternal city" (ālu šātu; line 6), built by Heaven and Earth themselves "in the beginning." It is their third and climactic creation and is followed by a complicated theogony set in the primordial past.

In the beginning,¹ ^a [Ha²rab² married Earth.] Family³ ^b and lord[ship he founded.] [Saying: "A]rable land we will carve out (of) the plowed land of the country." [With the p]lowing of their harbu-plows they caused the creation of Sea.⁴ ^c (5) [The lands plowed with the mayaru-pl]ow by them[selves] gave birth to Sumuqan.⁵ His str[onghold,] Dunnu, the eternal city, they created, both of them. Harab gave himself clear title to the lordship in Dunnu, but [Earth] lifted (her) face to Sumuqan, his son, and "Come here and let me make love to you!" she said to him. (10) Sumuqan married his mother Earth and Hara[b his fat]her he killed (and) In Dunnu which he loved he laid him to rest. Moreover Sumuqan took over the lordship of his father. Sea, his older sister, he married. (15) Gaiu,⁶ the son of Sumuqan, came [and] Sumuqan he killed and in Dunnu in the g[rave] of his father he laid him to rest. Sea, his mother, he married. Moreover Sea murde[red] Earth, her mother. (20) In the month Kislimu, the 16th day, he took over lordship and kingship.⁷ [Gaiu], son of Gaiu, married Ida (River), his own sister. [Gaiu], (his) father, and Sea, his mother, he killed and [In the gra]ve he laid them to rest together. In the month Tebitu, the 1st day, he [seize]d kingship and lordship for himself.	^a Gen 1:1 ^b Num 3:24 et passim ^c Gen 1:2	(25) [Kush,⁸ son of G]aiu, married Ua-ildak,⁹ his sister, and [the verdure] of the earth he made abundant. He put it at the [disposal of sheepfold and] cattle-pen, [for the cosumpt]ion of wildlife and herds of wild animals.¹⁰ [Moreover the necessitie]s he put at the [disposal] of the needs of the gods. (30) [Gaiu and] Idu (River), his mother, he kille[d and] [in a grave] he caused them to dwell. [In the month Shabatu, the xth day,] he took over lordship and kingship for himself. [Haharnum,¹¹ son of Ku]sh, married Belit-seri,¹² his sister, [and] [Kush and] Ua-ildak, his mother, he [killed and] (35) [in a grave] he caused them to dwell. [In the month Addar]u, the 16th day (var.: the 29th day), [he took over] kingship and lordship. [Hayyashum,] the child of Hahaharnum, Married [...], his own sister. [At the New Year] he took over the lordship of his father. (40) [He did not] kill him but a[live] [he seized him and to the city of Shupat-...] he brought him.] (Approximately 40 lines largely destroyed.) At the akitu-festival of the month Ayaru (rev. 20') the Song of the Plowing Oxen in the country [let him declaim] sweetly.¹³ (Colophon) [According to the wording] of a tablet which is a copy from Babylon and Assur, written and checked. (Composition called) Harab.¹⁴ Complete.
---	---	---

¹ Jacobsen restored "Ha-rab at the beginning of the line based, perhaps, on the colophon (see below) but there is hardly room enough for that; moreover, ina reš occurs as an incipit (twice) in a literary catalogue (van Dijk 1980:90:3f.).

² Jacobsen read "Ha-rab based on the absolute form of harbu = "plow" (cf. lines 4f.) and the Kassite deity Harbe, equated variously with Anu (Heaven) and Enlil, the two chief deities of the Sumer-Akkadian pantheon. Earlier scholars read "Ha-in, not to be confused with the divine name hyn in Ug., equated there with the third ranking deity, Ea (Lipiński 1988).

³ Lit., "a father's house." For the comparable biblical ktom, see Weinberg 1973.

⁴ Written "A.AB.BA, read "T(i)amtu, cognate with Heb. tehom.

⁵ For the equation of "AMA.GAN.DU with Sumuqan, the embodiment of wildlife, see Jacobsen 1984:24; previously apud Cross 1976:330.

⁶ Earlier scholars read Lahar. Both Gaiu and Lahar are readings of the sign in question when serving as a divine name. As a generic term it stands for "ewe." It is the embodiment of domesticated cattle, as in the disputation between Lahar and Ashnan, conventionally known as "Cattle and Grain" or "Ewe and Wheat" (below, text 1.180).

⁷ A double dividing line here and after lines 24 and 32 identifies the beginning of a new section.

⁸ I.e., the divine herdsman (kizū).

⁹ I.e., the divine pasture (ritu) and poplar (ildakku).

¹⁰ Alternatively: vermin and creeping things (cf. Gen 1:20).

¹¹ Haharnum and his son Hayyashum, recur otherwise only in broken context in KAR 339a and at the beginning of the "Marduk Prophecy," last edited by Longman (1991:233-235). See text 1.149 below.

¹² I.e., the lady (goddess) of the open country, equated with the Sum. "lady of the vine."

¹³ The akitu-festival of the first month (Nisannu) was part of the New Year's rites, but here it is observed in the second month, named (in Sum.) for the ceremonial inauguration of the plowing, to the accompaniment of the "Song of the Plowing Oxen" which begins E-EL-LU MA-AL-LU in Sum. (Civil 1976) and atali (as here) in Akk. (Livingstone 1980).

¹⁴ This need not be the incipit (opening word/words) of the composition (Jacobsen) since some colophons identify their composition by its protagonist or otherwise (Leichty 1964:148, n. 4).

REFERENCES

Text: CT 46:43. Translations and studies: Lambert and Walcot 1965; Grayson in ANET 517f.; Hallo 1970:66; Jacobsen 1984 (largely followed here); Dalley 1989:278-281.

ERRA AND ISHUM (1.113)

Stephanie Dalley

In the extant text known to us at present, Erra and Ishum may date no earlier than the eighth century BCE, but it almost certainly incorporates older elements. It consists of five tablets comprising some 750 lines; the final tablet is shorter than the others. Tablets with the text come from both Assyria (Nineveh, Assur, Sultantepe) and Babylonia (Babylon, Ur, Tell Haddad). The main tablet, from Assur, takes the form of an amulet.

The introductory lines belong to the genre associated with oral narrative in Standard Babylonian compositions, in which the poet in the first person declares the main theme of his subject; similar introductions are found in the Standard versions of Anzu and of Gilgamesh.

A few quotations have been found in the inscriptions of Sargon II and his contemporary in Babylon, the notorious Merodach-Baladan II, of the late eighth century, but those kings may have been quoting from the work because it was popular then, and not necessarily because it was composed at that time. Although the various tablets show very little textual variation, much more variation is exhibited in extracts, which were written commonly on amulets, and they show that different versions did indeed exist, perhaps due to oral tradition. Certain evidence of older associations has been noted, particularly with reference to the Suteans, traditionally nomadic enemies who damaged Babylonian cities in the eleventh century BCE, but they may have been incorporated deliberately to lend an air of antiquity and thus authority to the poem. Such a possibility is reinforced by an apparent element of pseudo-prophecy, which is expressed in Tablet IV, when Erra proclaims: "But afterwards a man of Akkad shall rise up." So a date in the ninth or eighth century BCE seems likely. Erra and Ishum are quite similarly depicted in the Crown Prince's Vision of the Nether World, which was probably composed in the early seventh century BCE.

Erra, also known as Nergal, one main subject of the poem, is a great god in the Mesopotamian pantheon whose aspects as a god of plague and lord of the Underworld made him particularly unpredictable and awesome. Partially assimilated with Gilgamesh on the one hand and with Heracles on the other, he was a fertility god, patron of copper smelting, controller of both wild and domesticated animals, and his weapon was floods and mountain torrents. As consort of the great fertility goddess Mami he had succeeded the Sumerian god Shulpae. As a heroic warrior of sudden and uncertain changes of mood, the poem presents him as an effective challenge to Marduk, now represented as the disgruntled and senile god of Babylon. The other main subject of the poem is Ishum, whose essential nature as god of fire and as leader in battle is tempered by his skill as a wise counsellor and cunning placator of Erra.

The poem does not describe a clear narrative of specific events, but rather consists of direct discourse in which the poet, Erra, Ishum, and Marduk all make speeches, mostly in a rhetorical and declamatory style. War threatens Babylonia because of Marduk's impotence and Erra's aggression, but total disaster is narrowly averted thanks to the soothing flattery of Erra by Ishum. There is no real enemy, no rivalry, no dangers faced and overcome, no failure. An element of ridicule and satire spices the characterization of both Erra and Marduk. Possibly the poem shows features of ritual drama: the poet speaks to the gods who are sometimes addressed in the second person, sometimes he speaks for them in the first person; at other times the narrative is in the third person. At times direct speech is given without preamble, as in the Epic of Creation; at times an epic type of formulaic introduction to direct speech is given in full. Thus the composition may offer information on the ancestry of true drama, which is thought to have arisen in Greece from a dithyrambic chorus that began a dialogue, in which a single actor played the god.

As for the purpose and form of the work, it is generally reckoned that it refers to the recent past history and tribulations of Babylonia which will now be put to right by the new "man of Akkad," perhaps Nabonassar or Merodach-Baladan II, and the poem relates the events in a didactic manner. The ending of the work, and its use in extracts on amulets, makes it clear that certain passages served to ward off danger and illness. There is no clear evidence that the poem was used in the cult in specific circumstances, and there is no reason to connect its author with worship of Erra, whose main cult center at Kutha plays no part in the poem.

The ending of the poem is unusual, for the scribe is named as Kabti-ilani-Marduk of the Dabibi clan, a family first attested around 765 BCE and associated with high temple office in both Babylon and Uruk. A dream is the express source of his inspiration. In the final lines Erra in the first person exhorts the people to praise him. The destructive prophecies of Erra have been compared in general with the Oracles against the Nations in Ezekiel 24-32.

Although an epic formula to introduce direct speech is sometimes used, many of the speeches in this work occur abruptly. In some cases, especially where there are breaks in the text, the precise points at which a speech begins and ends are not certain.

Tablet I

[I sing of the son of] the king of all populated lands, creator of the world,¹
Of Hendursanga, Ellil's heir,
Holder of the lofty scepter, herder of the black-headed people, shepherd of [populations],
Of Ishum, pious slaughterer whose hands are adept at carrying his furious weapons
And making his fierce axes flash! Erra, warrior of gods was stirring at home;²
His heart urged him to make war.
He spoke to his weapons, "Rub yourselves with deadly poison!"
To the Sebitti, unrivalled warrior, "Arm yourselves with your weapons!"
He said to you (Ishum), "I shall go out into the open country — ³
(10) You will be the torch, people can see your light.
You are to march in front, and the gods [will follow you].
You are the sword that slaughters [...]."
"O Erra, rise up, and in overwhelming the land
How happy your mood, how joyous your heart!"⁴
Yet Erra himself felt as weak as a man short of sleep,
Saying to himself, "Should I rise or sleep?"
He told his weapons, "Stay propped in the cupboard!"
To the Sebitti, unrivalled warrior, "Go back to your home."
Until you (Ishum) rouse him, he will stay asleep in bed,
(20) Enjoy himself with Mami his lover!
For he is Engidudu, lord who prowls by night, leader of princes,
Who leads on youths and girls and makes (night) as bright as day.

Different is the divine nature of the Sebitti, unrivalled warrior;
Their birth was strange and full of terrible portents.
Anyone who sees them is smitten with terror, for their breath is lethal;
People are petrified and cannot approach them.⁵
Ishum is the door bolted before them.
When Anu, king of the gods, impregnated Earth,
She bore the Seven Gods for him and he named them Sebitti.
(30) When they stood before him, he decreed their destiny.
He summoned the first and gave him orders,
"Wherever you band together and march out, you shall have no rival."⁶
He spoke to the second, "Ignite like Gerra and blaze like a flame!"
He said to the third, "You must put on the face of a lion, so that anyone seeing you will crumble in terror."
He spoke to the fourth, "Let the mountain flee before the one who bears your fierce weapons!"⁷
He ordered the fifth, "Blow like the wind, and seek out the rim of the world!"
He commanded the sixth, "Go through above and below, and do not spare anyone!"
The seventh he filled with dragon's venom, and "Lay low living things!"
When Anu had decreed the destinies of all the Sebitti,
(40) He gave them to Erra, warrior of the gods,
"Let them march at your side!
Whenever the hubbub of settled people becomes unbearable to you,⁸
And you want to wreak destruction,
To kill off some black-headed people and lay low Shakkan's cattle."⁹
These shall act as your fierce weapons, and

¹ The opening lines are modelled on the opening of Anzu. Some commentators would restore the name of Marduk or of Erra/Nergal at the end of the line, but it is very doubtful whether there is a lacuna at the ends of lines 1 or 2, and Hendursanga is definitely a name for Ishum. Therefore I have followed Edzard, RIA, s.v. Irra; the prologue, like the epilogue, is addressed to Ishum and Erra. The epilogue shows that Erra and Nergal are two names for the one god.

² Unusual vocabulary for the phrase "fierce axes" is also found in the letter describing Sargon's eighth campaign, line 122 (Thureau-Dangin 1912).

³ The second person address, only briefly maintained, perhaps implies that the dialogue within the poem was a hymn sung around a statue of Ishum.

⁴ These two lines read like the exclamation of a chorus, tinged with sarcasm.

⁵ Lit., "him." The Sebitti, "The Seven Gods," can be regarded both as a singular and as a plural deity.

⁶ Reading [te-n]e-di-ru, from edêru N, "band together."

⁷ Cagni translated "be razed to the ground" rather than "flee."

⁸ This speech echoes Atrahasis, I-II in which the gods recommend that overpopulation be curbed by plague, although the idea comes from Ellil, not Anu, in the version known to us.

⁹ "Black-headed people"; see the Epic of Creation, text 1.111, n. 14 above (p. 402).

march at your side!"

They were indeed fierce, and their weapons rose up.

They said to Erra, "Rise! Stand up!

Why do you stay in town like a feeble old man?

How can you stay at home like a lisping child?

Are we to eat women's bread, like one who has never marched on to the battlefield?

(50) Are we to be fearful and nervous as if we had no experience of war?

To go on to the battlefield is as good as a festival for young men!

Anyone who stays in town, be he a prince, will not be satisfied with bread alone;

He will be vilified in the mouths of his own people, and dishonored.

How can he raise his hand against one who goes to the battlefield?

However great the strength of one who stays in town,

How can he prevail over one who has been on the battlefield?

City food, however fancy, cannot compare with what is cooked on the embers.

Best beer, however sweet, cannot compare with water from a water-skin.

A palace built on a platform cannot compare with the shelters of [a camp.]

(60) Go out to the battlefield, warrior Erra, make your weapons resound!

Make your noise so loud that those above and below quake,

So that the Igigi hear and glorify your name,

So that the Anunnaki hear and fear your word,

So that the gods hear and submit to your yoke,

So that kings hear and kneel beneath you,

So that countries hear and bring you their tribute,

So that demons hear and avoid (?) you,

So that the powerful hear and bite their lips,

So that mountain peaks hear and bow their heads in terror,

(70) So that the rolling seas hear and are stirred up and destroy their produce,

So that tree trunks are lopped in a mighty grove,

So that the reeds of an impenetrable reed-bed are cut down,

So that people are frightened into controlling their noise,

So that cattle tremble and turn to clay,

So that the gods your fathers see and praise your valor!

Warrior Erra, why did you abandon the battlefield and stay in town?

Even Shakkan's cattle and wild beasts despise us.

Warrior Erra, we must tell you, and our words will surely be harsh for you,

As long as the whole land is too much for us,

(80) Surely you will listen to our words!

Do a favor for the Anunnaki who love silence!

Sleep no longer pours over the Anunnaki, because of people's noise.¹⁰

Cattle are trampling down the pasture land, the life of the country.

The farmer weeps bitterly over his [yield].

The lion and the wolf lay low Shakkan's cattle.

The shepherd prays to you for his sheep, he cannot sleep by day nor by night.

And we, who know the mountain passes, we have quite forgotten the road!

Spiders' webs are spun over our campaign gear.

Our trusty bows have rebelled and become too tough for our strength.

(90) The points of our sharp arrows are blunt.

Our daggers are corroded with verdigris for lack of butchery."

Warrior Erra listened to them.

The speech which the Sebitti made was as pleasing to him as the best oil.

He made his voice heard and spoke to Ishum,

"How can you listen and stay silent?

Open up a path, and let me take the road!

Let me appoint the Sebitti, unrivalled warrior, [to]"¹¹

Make them march at my side as my fierce weapons.

And as for you, go ahead of me, go behind me."

(100) When Ishum heard this,

He made his voice heard and spoke to the warrior Erra,¹²

"Lord Erra, why have you planned evil for the gods?

You have plotted to overthrow countries and to destroy their people, but will you not turn back?"

Erra made his voice heard and spoke,

Addressed his words to Ishum who marches before him,

"Ishum, be silent, and listen to my speech

About settled people whom you say I should spare!

Wise Ishum, who marches in front of the gods, whose advice is good,

¹⁰ Another use of the overpopulation theme from Atrahasis.

¹¹ Reading lupqil[d], "appoint," rather than luppi[s], "draw (them)" (Cagni).

¹² Var. "He felt compassion and ..."

In heaven I am a wild bull, on earth I am a lion.
 (110) In the country I am king, among the gods I am fierce.
 Among the Igigi I am the warrior, among the Anunnaki I am powerful.
 Among cattle I am the smiter, in the mountains I am a wild ram.¹³
 In the reed-thicket I am Gerra, in the grove I am the magšaru-axe.
 In the course of a campaign I am the standard. I blow like the wind, I rumble like Adad, I can see the rim of everything like Shamash. I go out on to the battlefield, and I am a wild sheep.
 I go into sheepfolds (?), and I make my dwelling there.¹⁴
 (120) All the (other) gods are afraid of battle, So that the black-headed people despise (them). But I, because they no longer fear my name, And since prince Marduk has neglected his word and does as he pleases,
 I shall make prince Marduk angry, and I shall summon him from his dwelling, and I shall overwhelm (his) people.”
 Warrior Erra set his face towards Shuanna, city of the king of gods.
 He entered Esagila, palace of heaven and earth, and stood in front of him (Marduk),
 He made his voice heard and spoke (to) the king of gods,
 “Why does the finery, your lordship’s adornment which is full of splendor like the stars of heaven, grow dirty?
 The crown of your lordship which made E-halanki shine like E-temen-anki — its surface is tarnished!”
 The king of gods made his voice heard and spoke,
 (130) Addressed his words to Erra, warrior of gods,
 “Warrior Erra, concerning that deed which you have said you will do:
 A long time ago, when I was angry and rose up from my dwelling and arranged for the Flood,¹⁵
 I rose up from my dwelling, and the control of heaven and earth was undone.

The very heavens I made to tremble, the positions of the stars of heaven changed, and I did not return them to their places.
 Even Erkalla quaked; the furrow’s yield diminished, and forever after (?) it was hard to extract (a yield).
 Even the control of heaven and earth was undone, the springs diminished, the flood-water receded. I went back, and looked and looked; it was very grievous.
 The (remaining) offspring of living things was tiny, and I did not return them to their (former) state,
 To the extent that I was like a farmer who can hold (all) his seed-corn in his hand.¹⁶
 I made a house and settled into it.
 (140) As for the finery which had been pushed aside by the Flood, its surface dulled:
 I directed Gerra to make my features radiant, and to cleanse my robes.¹⁷
 When he had made the finery bright, and finished the work,
 I put on my crown of lordship and went back to my place.
 My features were splendid, and my gaze was awesome!
 (As for) the people who were left from the Flood and saw the result of my action,
 Should I raise my weapons and destroy the remnant?¹⁸
 I made those (original) Craftsmen go down to the Apsu, and I said they were not to come back up.¹⁹
 I changed the location of the mēsu-tree (and of) the elmešu-stone, and did not reveal it to anyone.²⁰
 Now, concerning that deed which you have said you will do, Warrior Erra, (150) Where is the mēsu-wood, the flesh of the gods, the proper insignia of the King of the World,²¹
 The pure timber, tall youth, who is made into a lord,²²
 Whose roots reach down into the vast ocean through a hundred miles of water, to the base of Arallu,²³

¹³ The word for “smiter,” māḥiṣu, can also be translated “hunter.”

¹⁴ “Sheepfolds” or “pasture land.”

¹⁵ Here Marduk takes responsibility for the Flood; in Atrahasis it was Ellil’s idea.

¹⁶ Lit., “To the extent that I held their seed in my hand like a plowman.”

¹⁷ In this speech Marduk refers to himself as a cult statue made of precious metals, gems, and timbers.

¹⁸ Var. has: “Should you raise your weapons ...” The line may equally be taken as an affirmative statement, not as interrogative.

¹⁹ These Craftsmen are the Seven Sages.

²⁰ Or, “of the mēsu-tree (which bears) elmešu-stone.” Although a translation “amber” has been suggested for elmešu, amber seems not to have been used in ancient Mesopotamia. The word is sometimes used with bāṣu, “glass,” and may perhaps be rock crystal. mēsu may have been a rosewood (Dalbergia) with wider mythical connotations.

²¹ I.e., the wood was used to make the gods’ basic statues, which were then adorned with inlay etc.

²² This is a pun on mes as a logographic value for eṣlu, “youth,” and mēsu-timber (Cagni 1969:194). The same pun occurs in a late third millennium poem known as Shulgi King of Abundance (Klein 1981:11).

²³ Lit., “a hundred double hours.”

Whose topknot above rests on the heaven of Anu?
 Where is the pure zagindurû-stone which [...] threw away?²⁴
 Where is Nin-ildu the great carpenter-god of my Anu-power,
 Who carries the pure axe of the sun, and knows ... timbers,
 Who makes [the night (?)] as radiant as day and makes [people (?)] bow down beneath me?¹
 Where is Kusig-banda, creator of god and man, whose hands are pure?
 Where is Ninagal, who carries the hammer and anvil,
 (160) Who chews hard copper like hide and manufactures tools?
 Where are the precious stones, produce of the vast ocean, fitting ornament for crowns?
 Where are the Seven Sages of the Apsu, the holy carp, who are perfect in lofty wisdom like Ea their lord, who can make my body holy?²⁵
 The warrior Erra listened to him as he stood (?) there.
 He made his voice heard and spoke to prince Marduk,
 "[...]
 [...]
 The holy elmešu-stone [...]."
 When Marduk heard this,
 He made his voice heard and spoke to warrior Erra,
 (170) "I shall rise up from my dwelling, and the control of heaven and earth will be undone.
 The waters will rise and go over the land.
 Bright day will turn into darkness.
 A storm will rise up and cover the stars of heaven.
 An evil wind will blow, and the vision of people and living things will [be obscured (?)].
Gallu-demons will come up and seize [...]
 Those who are undressed will [...] who opposes them.
 The Anunnaki will come up and trample on living things.
 Until I gird myself with weapons, who can make them go back?"
 When Erra heard this,
 (180) He made his voice heard and spoke to prince

Marduk,
 "Prince Marduk, until you re-enter that house and Gerra cleanses your robes, and you return to your place,
 Until then shall I rule and keep firm control of heaven and earth.
 I shall go up into heaven, and give orders to the Igigi;
 I shall go down to the Apsu and direct the Anunnaki.
 I shall send ferocious gallu-demons to Kurnugi, And I shall set my fierce weapons over them.
 I shall tie the wings of the wicked wind like a bird.
 At that house which you shall enter, prince Marduk,
 I shall make Anu and Ellil lie down like bulls, to right and left of your gate."

(190) Prince Marduk listened to him,
 And the speech that Erra made was pleasing to him.

(Catchline)

He rose up from his inaccessible dwelling and set his face towards the dwelling of the Anunnaki.

Tablet II

He rose up from his inaccessible dwelling and set his face towards the dwelling of the Anunnaki.
 He entered ... and sto[od] before them,
 [Discarded] his radi[ance] and let his rays fall [...] ²⁶
 [Because (?)] he had set his face towards another place and no longer [...] the earth,
 [The winds (?)] rose up, and bright day was turned into darkness.
 [...] of the land together [...]
 [...] went up [...]
 [...] and the bottom of [...]
 [...] all of the rim of [...]

(gap of 7 lines)

The crown [...]

His heart [...]

"The mantle of radiance [...]

Let Ea in the Apsu [...]

Let Shamash see [...] and let the people [...]

Let Sin look, and at his sign [...] to the land

Concerning that work Ea [...] is expert (?)."

The warrior Erra was filled with anger,²⁷

Why, because of foam on the surface of water, did Marduk

Give the [...] of mankind, whom I myself

²⁴ A blue stone, possibly top-quality lapis lazuli.

²⁵ When a divine statue was made or repaired, rituals known as "washing the mouth" and "opening the mouth" were carried out with incantations, Ea's speciality, to bring the statue to "life." In an inscription of Esarhaddon (680-669 BCE) "(the newly fashioned statues) entered the city with rituals by sages, with 'washing the mouth' and 'opening the mouth'" (Borger Asarh. 89).

²⁶ The idea that a god is made powerless when divested of his rays or mantle of radiance is also found in the episode of Humbaba in Gilgamesh.

²⁷ This restoration and those which follow are based on a new, fragmentary tablet from Tell Haddad, kindly made available by Dr. Farouk al-Rawi and Dr. Jeremy Black. That tablet shows that Tablet II had about 160 lines.

created
 To bring promptly the taklīmu-offerings of the Anunnaki,
 At the wrong time?
 He plotted evil, to devastate the land, to destroy people [...]"
 (30) Ea-sharru considered, and then he said,
 "Now, (it was) prince Marduk who rose up, who told those Craftsmen that they were not to come back up.
 Statues of them, which I made among the people, for [his great divinity]
 Which no god goes and approaches [(?) ...]"²⁸
 He gave to the Craftsmen a generous heart, and [...]ed their base.
 He bestowed on them wisdom and made their work beautiful.
 They made that finery radiant, and more choice (?)
 than before.
 The warrior Erra stood before him night and day without cease;
 Whatever (?) was placed there to make the finery radiant for the king of kings, he would say:
 "You can't come near the work!
 [...] I shall cut off his life, I shall stretch out his ...
 (40) [...] hasten to the work.
 [...] has no rival.
 [...] ...
 [...] shall rival princes." (?)
 [...] his head
 [made his finery radiant]
 [...] ...
 [...] at his door.
 [...] king Shamash was clothed.
 [...] set down his dwelling
 (50) [...] light was established
 [...] assembled.
 [...] Marduk
 (8 lines fragmentary)
 The king of gods made his voice heard and spoke
 "[...] and they will go up to heaven.
 [...] return to your dwelling.
 [...] ...
 [...] upon your cheek
 [...] their people
 [...] you did not turn back."
 [...] spoke to the king of gods,
 "[...] of the day
 (gap of about 17 lines)
 [...] father of the gods [...]

Ellil [...]
 The gods, all of them in [...]
 Among Shakkan's cattle, all of them [...]
 Erra among all the gods [...]
 Among the stars of heaven the Fox Star [...] ²⁹
 Was twinkling and its rays [...] to him.
 The stars of all the gods were dazzling [...]
 Because they were angry with each other and Prince Marduk [...] put [...].
 (10') "The star of Erra is twinkling and carries rays, [...] of Anunitu.
 His mantle of radiance will be activated (?) and all people will perish.
 As for (?) the dazzling stars of heaven that carry a sword (?),
 As for (?) the titch (?) of creation, the ant, it does not ... [...].
 Among Shakkan's cattle, their astral image is that of the Fox [...]
 Endowed with strength, a fierce (?) lion [...]
 Ellil is the father of populations (?) and he has made the final [decision (?)]."
 Innina replied from the gods' assembly, gave advice [...],
 [Addressed] her words to Anu and Dagan [...],
 "Pay attention, all of you, go into your private quarters;
 (20') Cover your lips. Did you not smell the inc[ense-offering (?)]
 In the presence of Prince Marduk, nor give advice, nor bese[ech him (?)]?
 Until the time is fulfilled, the [hour] is passed,
 The word Marduk spoke is like a mountain where trees (?) [grow]; he does not change
 it (?) [...]
 Erra [...]
 (gap of 4 lines)
 Ishtar went and they entered the private quarters.
 (30') She urged Erra, but he would not agree [...] ³⁰
 Ishum [made his voice heard and spoke],
 Addressed [his words to Innina], ³¹
 "He has ill-treated (?) [...]
 Erra is angry and will not be silent [...].
 Let the mountains be at peace, [...] to him."
 Ellil's lofty son, who does not take the road without the leader Ishum,
 Entered Emeslam and made his dwelling there.
 He deliberated (?) with himself concerning that work. ³²
 But his heart [...]; it gave him no reply.
 He asked himself, "How can you sit still? (?) ³³
 (40') Open up a path, and let me take the road!

²⁸ Cagni translates: "Where the god does not go, they draw near."

²⁹ The Fox Star was equated with Erra.

³⁰ The main restorations using the Tell Haddad tablet end here.

³¹ The new passage shows that Innina, not Erra, should be restored here.

³² Tentatively reading išlīma ramdnuš.

³³ Tentatively reading tuš-bi mīn-su.

The time has elapsed, the hour has passed.
 I promise that I shall destroy the rays of the Sun;
 I shall cover the face of the Moon in the middle of the night.
 I shall say to Adad, 'Hold back [your] well-springs,
 Drive away the clouds and cut out snow and rain.'
 To Marduk (?) and to Ea I shall bring a reminder:
 He who grows up in times of plenty shall be buried in times of deprivation.
 He who travels out on a path with water shall return along a way of dust-storms.
 I shall say to the king of gods, 'Stay in Esagila!'
 (50') They will do as you have told them, they will carry out your command in full.
 The black-headed people will revile you, and you will not accept their prayers.
 I shall finish off the land and count it as ruins.
 I shall devastate cities and make of them a wilderness.
 I shall destroy mountains and fell their cattle.
 I shall stir up oceans and destroy their produce.
 I shall dig out reed-thickets and graves and I shall burn them like Gerra.
 I shall fell people and [I shall leave no] life
 I shall not keep a single one back!
 I shall not leave out any of the cattle of Shakkan nor any wild beasts [whatsoever].
 (60') From city to city I shall seize the one who governs.
 A son will not ask after the health of his father, nor the father of his son.
 A mother will happily plot harm for her daughter.
 I shall let a [barbarian] enter a god's shrine where evil men should not go.
 I shall let a rogue sit down in the dwelling of princes.
 I shall let a wild beast of ... enter [cult centers].
 I shall stop anyone entering any city which he encounters.
 I shall let wild beasts of the mountains go down (into cities).
 I shall devastate public places, wherever people tread.
 I shall let wild beasts of the countryside which are not ... come into the public square.
 I shall let a bad omen occur to devastate a city.
 (70') I shall let the demon 'Supporter of Evil' enter the gods' [inaccessible] dwelling.
 I shall devastate the royal palace and make it into a ruin [()].

I shall cut off the noise of mankind and deprive him of joy,
 Like [...] like fire where there was once peace.
 [...] I shall let evil enter."

(Catchline)

[...] he would pay attention to nobody.

Tablet III

[...] he would pay attention to nobody,
 The words of caution that they spoke [...]
 Lions [...]

[...]

To [...]

"I shall make them take [...] and I shall shorten their lifetime,

I shall sever the life of the just man who takes on paternal responsibility,

I shall set up [at the head (?)] the wicked man who cuts off life.

I shall change the minds of people, so that the father will not listen to the son:

(10) The daughter will speak words of rejection to the mother.

I shall make their words wicked, and they will forget their god,

Will speak great insolence to their goddess.

I shall muster the bandit and cut off the highway.

They will even plunder each other's property in the city center.

The lion and the wolf will fell Shakkan's cattle.

[...] I shall cause to rage and he will cut off offspring.

I shall deprive the nurse of the baby's cry and toddler's prattle.

I shall make Alala leave the pasture.

Shepherd and herdsman will forget the shelter.

(20) I shall cut off the garment from a man's body
 And I shall make the young man walk naked in the city square.

I shall make the young man go down into the Earth unshrouded.

The young man — his supply of sacrificial sheep will be interrupted and endanger his own life.

The prince — his supply of lambs will become too scarce to obtain oracles from Shamash.³⁴

The sick man will demand roast meat (perversely) to satisfy his craving.

He will not free for ... he will go.

[...] I shall stop the steeds of princes.

[...] I shall cut off.

[...] I shall cause to seize.

³⁴ Shamash and Adad were gods of extispicy (the reading of entrails) and other omens.

(gap of uncertain length)³⁵

Rain [...]

Evil winds [...]

(gap of uncertain length)³⁵

"You have (?) set up the weapons of kidinnu-men as an abomination to Anu and Dagan.³⁶

You have made their blood flow like water in the drains of public squares.

You have opened their veins and let the river carry off (their blood).

Ellil has cried "Woe!" and clutched at his heart [He has risen up from] his dwelling.

(80') An irredeemable curse is set in his mouth, He has sworn not to drink the river's waters, He shuns their blood and will not enter into Ekur."

Erra addressed his words to Ishum, who marches before him,

"The Sebitti, unrivalled warrior [...]

All of them [...]

Who [...]

Who marches before [...]

Who [...]

Who like Gerra [...]

(90') In front of the house [...]

Who like [...]

Who [...]

Whom Erra [...]

The face of a lion [...]

In my rage [...]

Open the path, let me take the road!

Let me appoint the Sebitti, unrivalled warrior [...].

Make them march at my side as my fierce weapons.

And as for you, go ahead of me, go behind me!"

(100') Ishum listened to this speech of his;

He felt compassion and said to himself,

"Woe to my people against whom Erra rages and [...]

Whom the warrior Nergal, as in the moment of battle, [...] Asakku.³⁷

His arms, like those which (slew (?)) the ruined god, are not too weak to slay them,³⁸

His net, like that (which overwhelmed) wicked Anzu, is spread to overwhelm them."³⁹

Ishum made his voice heard and spoke,

Addressed his words to the warrior Erra,

"How could you plot evil for gods and men?

Even though you have plotted evil against the black-headed people, will you not turn back?"

(110') Erra made his voice heard and spoke,

Addressed his words to Ishum who marches before him,

"You know the decisions of the Igigi, the counsels of the Anunnaki.

You give the command for the black-headed people, and gain their attention (?).

How can you speak like one who is ignorant, Advise me as if you did not know of Marduk's words to me!

The king of gods has risen up from his dwelling

So how can all the lands stay firm?

He has taken off his lordly crown:

King and princes [...] will forget their rites.

(120') He has undone his girdle:

The belt of god and man is loosened and cannot be retied.

Furious Gerra has made his finery bright as day, and has displayed his radiance.

He holds a mace in his right hand, the great weapon

Of Prince Marduk; his glance is terrifying.

Yet to me you speak [...]

Leader of the gods, wise Ishum, whose counsel is good,

How can you now sit and [...]

Was Marduk's word not pleasing to you?"

Ishum made his voice heard and spoke to warrior Erra,

(130') "Warrior Erra, [...]

Trample on the people and [...]

Where the cattle [...]

The reed-thicket and grove which [...]

Now, as for what you say, warrior Erra,

One was put in charge, but you [...]

You killed seven and did not spare one.

³⁵ If the total number of lines for this tablet should be about 160 as indicated by the tablet from Tell Haddad, this and the following gap represent about forty-three missing lines.

³⁶ Certain cities were accorded the privileged status of protection called kidinnu in which its citizens were exempted from military service, and professional soldiers were forbidden to bear arms within the city walls. Such places proclaimed their status with standards set up at the gates of the city. They may in return have supported permanent encampments of professional soldiers. In Babylonia the cities Sippar, Nippur, Babylon, and Borsippa, in Assyria the cities Assur and Harran enjoyed the status, at least in the early first millennium, although not without interruption. kidinnu-men in such cities appear to have had a special relationship with the two gods Anu and Dagan. It is not certain whether the kidinnu-men were citizens exempt from military service or the soldiery stationed in those cities.

³⁷ Or, "storm," rather than "moment." This line assimilates Nergal with Ninurta, who defeated Asakku in the Sum. story Lugal-e (Van Dijk 1983).

³⁸ This literary allusion is not understood. According to one text "the ruined gods were in the sea," and the Epic of Creation, VI may allude to the same event. It is possible that a feat of Ninurta is involved.

³⁹ The reference is to the myth of Anzu, but a different version from the one known to us in which no net is used. As in previous lines here assimilation with Ningirsu and Ninurta is implied. However, the text may be corrupt; cf. Etana, text 1.131, note 18 below.

Cattle [...]

Erra, you clash your weapons together
And the mountains shake, the seas surge (140') At the flashing of your sword [...] they look towards the mountain.
The palace [...]"

(gap of uncertain length)

Ishum made his voice heard and spoke to warrior
Erra, [...]

"Warrior Erra, you hold the nose-rope of heaven,⁴⁰

You control the whole earth, and you rule the
land.

(150') You made the sea rough and encompass mountains,

You govern people and herd cattle.

Esharra is at your disposal; E-engurra in your hands.

You look after Shuanna and rule Esagila,

You control all the rites and the gods respect
you.

When you give counsel, even Anu listens.

The Igigi revere you, the Anunnaki fear you,
Ellil agrees with you. Does conflict happen without you,

Or warfare take place in your absence?

The armory of war belongs to you

(160') And yet you say to yourself, 'They despise me!'

(Catchline)

O warrior Erra, did you not fear prince
Marduk's name?

Tablet IV

O warrior Erra, did you not fear prince Mar-duk's name?

You have untied the bond of Dimkurkurra, city of the king of gods, the bond of lands!

You have changed your divine nature and become like a human!⁴¹

You have donned your weapons and entered in,
Into the heart of Babylon, and have spoken like a braggart (?), that you would seize the city.

The sons of Babylon, who have none to take charge of them, like reeds in a reed-thicket, have all gathered about you.

He who is ignorant of weapons is unsheathing
his dagger,

He who is ignorant of bows is stringing his bow,

He who is ignorant of battle is making war,

(10) He who is ignorant of wings is flying like a bird.

The weakling covers the master of force;⁴²

The fatty is overtaking the sprinter.

To the governor in charge of their shrines they utter great blasphemies.

Their hands have dammed up the city gate of Babylon, the artery of their wealth.

They have thrown firebrands into the shrines of Babylon like looters of the country.

You are the one who marches at the head, and you take the lead for them.

You press down arrows upon Imgur-Ellil until he says 'Woe is me!'

You have founded a dwelling for Muhra, keeper of its city-gate, in the blood of young men and women.

You are the decoy for the inhabitants of Babylon, and they are the bird;

You ensnared them in your net and caught and destroyed them, warrior Erra.

(20) You left the city and went off elsewhere;
You put on the face of a lion and entered the palace.

The army saw you and donned their weapons.
The governor, who had treated Babylon well,
became enraged,

Directed his troops to loot like enemy looters,
Incited the leader of the army to crime,

'You are the man whom I shall send to that city!

You shall respect neither god nor man.

Put young and old alike to death.

You shall not leave any child, even if he still sucks milk.

(30) You shall pillage the accumulated wealth
of Babylon.'

The royal troops were put into units and entered the city.

The bow twanged, the dagger pricked.

You set up the weapons of kidinnu-men as an abomination to Anu and Dagan.

You have made their blood flow like water in the drains of public squares.

You have opened their veins and let the river carry off (their blood).

The great lord Marduk saw and cried 'Woe!'
and clutched at his heart.

An irredeemable curse is set in his mouth.

He has sworn not to drink the river's waters.

He shuns their blood and will not enter into Esagila,

(40) 'Woe to Babylon, which I made as lofty as ⁴⁰ This speech is quoted on plague amulets (Reiner 1960).

⁴¹ Erra/Nergal may have been equated with Heracles, whose ambivalent nature as a god and as a mortal hero is stressed by Herodotus (Dalley 1987).

⁴² For "wings" see Tsevat 1987. The second phrase probably implies a wrestler's strength, arm muscles.

a date-palm's crown, but the wind shrivelled it.

Woe to Babylon, which I filled with seeds like a pine-cone, but whose abundance I did not bring to fruition.

Woe to Babylon, which I planted like a luxuriant orchard, but never tasted its fruit.

Woe to Babylon, which I have thrown on to the neck of Anu like a cylinder seal of elmešu-stone.

Woe to Babylon, which I have taken in my hands like the Tablet of Destinies and will not deliver to anyone else."

Then prince Marduk spoke thus,

"[...] which from time immemorial [...]"

Henceforth he who would cross from the quayside shall cross on foot.

Henceforth the rope which would go down into the cistern shall not save the life of a single man.

Henceforth they shall drive out the deep-sea fisherman's boat a hundred leagues into the vast expanse of sea-water with a pole.

(50) Even Sippar, the eternal city, which the Lord of Lands did not allow the Flood to overwhelm, because it was so dear to him;

You destroyed its wall without Shamash's permission and dismantled its parapet.⁴³

Even Uruk, the dwelling of Anu and Ishtar, city of prostitutes, courtesans, and call-girls,

Whom Ishtar deprived of husbands and kept in her (lit. their) power:

Sutean men and women hurl their abuse;

They rouse Eanna, the party-boys and festival people

Who changed their masculinity into femininity to make the people of Ishtar revere her.

The dagger-bearer, bearers of razors, pruning-knives, and flint blades

Who frequently do abominable acts to please the heart of Ishtar:

You set over them an insolent governor who will not treat them kindly.

(60) He persecuted them and violated their rites.

Ishtar was enraged and became angry with Uruk.

She summoned an enemy and despoiled the land like (standing) corn before (flood-) water.

The inhabitants of Parsa would not cease ritual wailing because of E-ugal, which had been contaminated.

The enemy whom you had summoned would not agree to stop."

Angal replied,

You have made the city of Der into a wilderness;

You have snapped the people within it like reeds!

Like scum (?) on the surface of water you have stopped their hubbub,

And you did not spare me; you delivered me up to the Suteans.⁴⁴

(70) So I, because of my city Der,⁴⁵

Shall not give fair justice, I shall not make decisions for the land.

I shall not give any orders, nor will I open my ear.

The people abandoned justice and took to atrocities.

They deserted righteousness and planned wickedness.

I made the seven winds rise up against the one country.

Anyone who has not died in battle will die in an epidemic.

Anyone who has not died in the epidemic, the enemy will carry off as spoil.

Anyone whom the enemy has not carried off as spoil, thieves will murder.

Anyone whom thieves have not murdered, the king's weapon will overcome.⁴⁶

(80) Anyone whom the king's weapon has not overcome, a prince will fell.

Anyone whom a prince did not fell, Adad will wash away.

Anyone whom Adad has not washed away, Shamash will parch.⁴⁷

Anyone who goes out on to the land, the wind will infect.

Anyone who enters his own home, the Croucher will hit.

Anyone who goes up into the heights will die of thirst,

Anyone who goes down into the depths will die by water,

For you encompass the heights and the depths alike.

The city governor will say thus to his mother,

⁴³ The historical event to which this line alludes cannot be pinpointed.

⁴⁴ The Suteans were traditional enemies of Assyria and had raided Der, Nippur, and Parsa in the eleventh century (Heltzer 1981:90-94); they are attested again on the fringes of Babylonia in the eighth and early seventh centuries; Sargon II in the late eighth century claimed to have driven Sutean bandits from Babylonian countryside.

⁴⁵ This allusion to Der is not clear. The Assyrians were defeated there by Elam in 720 BCE, perhaps with Babylonian help (Brinkman 1984:48) but retained control of the city.

⁴⁶ Probably a reference to the winged disk, symbol of royalty on which oaths of loyalty to the king were sworn under threat of horrific penalties for perjury. Such symbols were regularly referred to as weapons because of their power to harm and kill.

⁴⁷ Or, "will take away" rather than "will parch."

'Would that I had been obstructed in your womb on the day you bore me,
(90) Would that my life had ended and that we had died together,

Because you delivered me to a city whose walls were to be demolished,

Its people treated like cattle, their god turned smiter,⁴⁸

And because his net is of such fine mesh, even picked men could not draw (their swords), but died by the sword.⁴⁹

He who sired a son will say, 'This is my son And I reared him and he does good in return,' —

Yet shall I put the son to death and his father shall bury him.

Afterwards I shall put the father to death, and he shall have nobody to bury him.

He who builds a house and says, 'This is my home,

I have built it and I shall find peace within it,

(100) And when Fate carries me off I shall rest there (forever)' —⁵⁰

Yet shall I put him to death and vandalize his home.

Afterwards it will be wrecked, and I shall give it to someone else"

(Ishum answers)

"O warrior Erra, you have put the just to death,

You have put the unjust to death.

You have put to death the man who sinned against you,

You have put to death the man who did not sin against you.

You have put to death the en-priest who made taklīmu-offerings promptly,

You have put to death the courtier who served the king,

(110) You have put old men to death on the porch,

You have put young girls to death in their bedrooms.

Yet you will not rest at all,

Yet you say to yourself, 'They despise me!'

Yet this is what you tell yourself, Warrior Erra,

'I shall smite the strong and terrify the weak.

I shall murder the leader of the army and rout the army,

I shall ruin the shrine on top of the temple-

(tower) and the wall's crenellations, and destroy the city's vitality.

I shall tear out the mooring poles and let boats drift downstream,

I shall break the rudder, so that it cannot reach the bank,

I shall rip out the mast and tear out its rigging.

(120) I shall dry out the breast so that the baby cannot live,

I shall block springs, so that small channels cannot bring the waters of fertility.

I shall make Erkalla quake, so that the skies billow,

I shall fell the rays of Shulpae and throw away the stars of heaven,

The roots of trees shall be cut through so that their new growth will not flourish,

I shall destroy the base of the wall so that the top of it sways.

To the dwelling of the king of gods I shall go, so that counsel shall not prevail."

Warrior Erra listened to him,

And the words that Ishum spoke to him were as pleasing as the best oil.

(130) And Warrior Erra spoke thus,

"Sealanders shall not spare Sealanders, nor Subartian (spare) Subartian, nor Assyrian Assyrian,⁵¹

Nor shall Elamite spare Elamite, nor Kassite Kassite,

Nor Sutean spare Sutean, nor Gutian Gutian,

Nor shall Lullubean spare Lullubean, nor country country, nor city city,

Nor shall tribe spare tribe, nor man man, nor brother brother, and they shall slay one another.

But afterwards a man of Akkad shall rise up and fell them all and shepherd all (the rest) of them."⁵²

Warrior Erra addressed his words to Ishum, who marches before him,

"Go, Ishum! Take full discretion for the words you spoke!"

Ishum set his face towards the mountain Hehe.

(140) The Sebitti, unrivalled warrior, stormed (?) behind him.

The warrior arrived at the mountain Hehe, Raised his hand and destroyed the mountain, Counted the mountain Hehe as (flat) ground.

He lopped the tree trunks in the forest of hašūru-trees⁵³

⁴⁸ Or, "hunter" rather than "smiter," both meanings of māḥiṣu.

⁴⁹ The word haṣṣu, "chosen one," normally means a lover, bridegroom, first husband. A widower was often obliged to marry the widow of a relative, and had little choice upon remarriage.

⁵⁰ People were commonly buried under the floors of their houses.

⁵¹ The Sealander probably refers to southern Mesopotamia, where the marsh-lands were inhabited by several different tribes or "houses."

⁵² "Man of Akkad" probably refers to an urban Babylonian as opposed to a nomad or a foreigner. This line indicates that there is an important element of pseudo-prophecy in the epic. Cf. below, texts 1.149-150 for this genre.

⁵³ hašūru: a kind of cypress.

Like [...]

He finished off the cities and made of them a wilderness,

Destroyed mountains and struck down their cattle,
Stirred up the seas and destroyed their produce,
Devastated reed-beds and groves, and burnt them like Gerra

(150) Cursed the cattle and turned them into clay.

(Catchline)

When Erra had rested and settled in his dwelling,

Tablet V

When Erra had rested and settled in his dwelling,
All the gods began to look at his face.

The Igigi and the Anunnaki, all of them, were standing in awe.

Erra made his voice heard and spoke to all the gods,

"Keep quiet, all of you, and learn what I have to say!

What if I did intend the harm of the wrong I have just done?

When I am enraged, I devastate people!

Like a hired man among the flocks, I let the leading sheep out of the pen.

Like one who does not plant the orchard, I am not slow to cut it down.

(10) Like one who plunders a country, I do not distinguish just from unjust, I fell (them both).

One does not snatch a corpse from the mouth of a marauding lion,

And where one man is beside himself, another man cannot give him advice!

What would happen if Ishum, who goes before me, were not there?

Where would your provider be, wherever would your en-priest be?

Where would your nindabû-offerings be? You would not (even) smell the incense-offering!"

Ishum made his voice heard and spoke,

Addressed his words to warrior Erra,

"Warrior, be still and listen to my words!

What if you were to rest now, and we would serve you?

We all know that nobody can stand up to you in your day of wrath!"

(20) Erra heard him and his face brightened;

His features lit up like the dawning of a (new) day.
He entered into Emeslam and settled in his dwelling.

Ishum called out and said the key word,

Began to confirm the decision concerning the scattered people of Akkad.

"May the reduced people of the land become numerous again,

May the short man and the tall man go along its paths,

May the weak man of Akkad fell the strong Sutean,

May one man drive away seven (of them) as if they were flocks!

You shall make their towns into ruins and their hills into wildernesses,

(30) You shall bring their heavy spoils into Shu-anna,⁵⁴

You shall put the country's gods who were angry safely back into their dwellings,

You shall let Shakkan and Nissaba (i.e., cattle and grain) go down into the country,

You shall let the mountains bear their wealth and the sea its produce,

You shall let the meadowlands, which you allowed to be devastated, bear their produce!

Then let the governors of all cities, every one of them, haul their heavy tribute into Shu-anna,

Let the temples, which were allowed to become damaged, lift their heads (up) as high as the rising sun,

Let the Tigris and Euphrates bring the waters of abundance,

Let the governors of all cities, every one of them, deliver up to the provider of Esagila and Babylon!"

For countless years shall the praises of the great lord Nergal and the warrior Ishum (be sung):

(40) How Erra became angry and set his face towards overwhelming countries and destroying their people,

But Ishum his counsellor placated him so that he let a remnant!

The one who put together the composition about him was Kabti-ilani-Marduk son of Dabibi.

(Some god) revealed it to him in the middle of the night, and when he recited it upon waking, he did not miss anything out,

Nor add a single word to it.

Erra heard and approved it,

And it was pleasing also to Ishum who marches in front of him.

All the other gods gave praise with him.

And the warrior Erra spoke, saying,

"Wealth shall be piled up in the shrine of the god who praises this song!"⁵⁵

(50) But whoever discards it shall never smell the incense-offering!

The king who magnifies my name shall rule the world,

The prince who recites the praise of my valiant

⁵⁴ Veenhof has pointed out an identical phrase used in an inscription of Merodach-Baladan II, who ruled Babylon in 721-710 and 703 BCE. See Brinkman 1984:49, n. 230.

⁵⁵ This and the following lines are paraphrased in the subscripts of plague amulets (Reiner 1960).

deeds shall have no rival, The musician who sings it shall not die in an epidemic. The words of it will find favor with kings and princes. The scribe who learns it will survive even in enemy country, and will be honored in his own. In the shrine of craftsmen where they ever proclaim my name, I shall make them wise, ⁵⁶ In the house where this tablet is placed, even if Erra becomes angry and the Sebitti storm, The sword of judgement shall not come near him, but peace is ordained for him. Let this song endure forever, let it last for eternity! (60) Let all countries listen to it and praise my	valor! Let settled people see and magnify my name!" (Colophon) Fifth tablet, series "Erra." I, Assurbanipal, great king, mighty king, king of the world, king of Assyria, Son of Esarhaddon king of Assyria, son of Sennacherib king of Assyria, Wrote, checked, and collated this tablet in the company of scholars In accordance with clay tablets and wooden writing boards, exemplars from Assyria, Sumer, and Akkad, And put it in my palace for royal reading. Whoever erases my written name and writes his own name, May Nabu, the scribe of all, erase his name.
---	---

⁵⁶ Lit., "I shall make them open their ears."

REFERENCES

Text: Cagni 1969 and 1977. Translation: Dalley 1989:282-315; Foster BM 2:771-805; FDD 132-163.

2. HYMNS AND PRAYERS

PRAYER TO MARDUK (1.114)

Benjamin R. Foster

The harmony and effectiveness of this composition set it apart as a masterpiece.

(1) O warrior Marduk, whose anger is the deluge,
Whose relenting is that of a merciful father,
I am left anxious by speech unheeded,
My hopes are deceived by outcry unanswered,
(5) Such as has sapped my courage,
And hunched me over like an aged man.
O great lord Marduk, merciful lord!
Men, by whatever name,
What can they understand by their own efforts?
(10) Who has not been negligent, which one has committed no sin?
Who can understand a god's behavior?
I would fain be obedient and incur no sin,
Yes, I would frequent the haunts of health!
Men are commanded by the gods to act under curse,
(15) Divine affliction is for mankind to bear.
I am surely responsible for some neglect of you,
I have surely trespassed the limits set by the god.
Forget what I did in my youth, whatever it was,
Let your heart not well up against me!
Absolve my guilt, remit my punishment,
(20) Clear me of confusion, free me of uncertainty, Let no guilt of my father, my grandfather, my mother, my grandmother, my brother, my sister, my family, kith, or kin Approach my own self, but let it be gone!

(25) If my god has commanded (it) for me, let him purify me as with medicaments.
Commend me into the hands of my (personal) god and my (personal) goddess for well-being and life,
Let me stand before you always in prayer, supplication, and entreaty,
Let the fruitful peoples of a well-ordered land praise you.
Absolve my guilt, remit my guilt!
(30) O warrior Marduk, absolve my guilt, remit my guilt!
O great lady Erua-Sarpanitu, absolve my guilt,
O Nabu of the good name, absolve my guilt,
O great lady, Tashmetu, absolve my guilt,
O warrior Nergal, absolve my guilt,
(35) O gods who dwell <in> Anu's <heaven>,
absolve my guilt!
The monstrous guilt that I have built up from my youth,
Scatter it hence, absolve it sevenfold.

Like my real father and my real mother,
Let your heart be reconciled to me.

(40) O warrior Marduk, let me sound your praises!

REFERENCES

Text: Ebeling 1953: No. 61, and duplicates. Translations and studies: Foster BM 2:591-593; FDD 247f.

PRAYER TO GODS OF THE NIGHT (1.115)

Benjamin R. Foster

The short prayers to the "gods of the night" (i.e., the stars) are among the less stereotypical and more creative liturgical poems of the Akkadian canon. Their individualized variations on a common theme may have been inspired by the setting: typically they were recited (and perhaps composed) at night while praying on the roof of the house and with the surrounding city or countryside asleep; see Oppenheim 1959. [WWH]

The noble ones are safely guarded(?), doorbolts drawn, rings in place,
The noisy people are fallen silent, the doors are barred that were open.
Gods of the land, goddesses of the land, Shamash, Sin, Adad, and Ishtar are gone off to the lap of heaven.¹
They will give no judgment, they will decide no cases:
The veil is drawn for the night, the palace is hushed, the open land is deathly still,

a 1 Sam 14:41

The wayfarer cries out to a god, even the petitioner
(of this omen) keeps on sleeping!
The true judge, father to the orphaned,
Shamash has gone off to his bedchamber.
May the princely ones of the gods of the night:
brilliant Girra, warrior Erra,
The "Bow," the "Yoke," Orion, the "Dragon,"
The Great Bear, the Lyre, the "Bison," the "Horned Serpent,"²
Stand by! In the extispicy I perform, in the lamb I offer, place the truth!³ ^a

¹ I.e., sun, moon, (storm) and evening-star have all set.

² Various constellations, in many cases still called by their Babylonian names. But Orion is a Greek equivalent for the constellation which the Babylonians called "the true shepherd of Heaven" (SIPA-ZI-AN-NA).

³ In divination it was crucial that a true answer be obtained, whether by the inspection of the entrails of sacrificial sheep or goats (extispicy) as here, or by the use of the Urim and Thummim as in the Bible (1 Sam 14:41). See Horowitz and Horowitz 1992.

REFERENCES

Text: Dossin 1935. Translations and studies: ANET 390f.; Oppenheim 1959:295f.; Foster BM 1:146f.

DIURNAL PRAYERS OF DIVINERS (1.116)

Benjamin R. Foster

As with the immediately preceding selection (above, Text 1.115, note 3), divination (here again by means of the entrails) demanded and relied on a "truthful" answer from the deity. To secure such an answer, the divination priest invoked Shamash and Adad, patrons of divination, here in the company of other great deities. [WWH]

O Shamash, I hold up to you seven and seven sweet loaves,^a
The rows of which are ranged before you.
O Shamash, lord of judgment, O Adad, lord of
divination,
Seated on thrones of [gold], dining from a tray of lapis,
Come [down to me] that you may eat,
That you may sit on the throne and render judgment.

a Exod 40:23;
Lev 24:5f.

In the ritual I perform, in the extispicy I perform,
place the truth!
O Shamash, I hold up to you the plentiful yield of the gods, the radiance of the grain goddess.
O Shamash, lord of judgment, O Adad, lord of
divination,
In the ritual I perform, in the extispicy I perform,
place the truth!

O Shamash, I have laid out for you the plentiful yield of the gods, the radiance of the grain goddess, O Shamash, lord of judgment, O Adad, lord of prayer and divination, In the ritual I perform, in the extispicy I perform, place the truth!	b 1Sam 14:41	Take your seat, O valiant Shamash, Let there be seated with you the great gods, Let Anu, father of heaven, Sin, king of the tiara, Nergal, lord of weaponry, Ishtar, lady of battle Be seated with you. In the ritual I perform, in the extispicy I perform, place the truth! ^b
--	--------------	--

REFERENCES

Text: YOS 11:22. Translations and studies: Goetze 1968; Hallo 1991:144f.; Foster BM 1:148-150, FDD 288-290.

THE SHAMASH HYMN (1.117)

Benjamin R. Foster

This "preceptive hymn" is one of the "literary prayers" of the Babylonians which rise above the level of standard religious texts by their artful poetic construction and diction. Even the length of the composition (precisely 200 lines) seems carefully and deliberately contrived. The object of the poet's attention is Shamash who, as the all-seeing eye in the daytime sky, plays the role of guardian of justice in Akkadian (as the goddess Nanshe did in Sumerian). In particular he keeps an eye on the merchant travelling far from home and seemingly free of constraints. In the section reproduced here, he is particularly concerned with the merchant's use of honest weights and measures, a perennial theme in ancient Near Eastern literature. [WWH]

(1) Illuminator of all, the whole of heaven, Who makes light the d[arkness for mankind] above and below, Shamash, illuminator of all, the whole of heaven, Who makes light the dark[ness for mankind a]bove and below, (5) Your radiance [spre]ads out like a net [over the world], You brighten the g[loo]m of the distant mountains. Gods and netherworld gods rejoiced when you ap- peared, All the Igigi-gods rejoice in you. Your beams are ever mastering secrets, (10) At the brightness of your light, humankind's footprints become vis[ible]. (95) You blunt the horns of a scheming villain, The perpetrator of a cunning deal is undermined. You show the roguish judge the (inside of) a jail, He who takes the fee but does not carry through, you make him bear the punishment. The one who receives no fee but takes up the case of the weak, (100) Is pleasing to Shamash, he will make long his life. The careful judge who gives just verdicts, ^a Controls the government, lives like a prince. What return is there for the investor in dishonest dealings? His profits are illusory, and he loses his capital. (105) He who invests in long-range enterprises(?), who returns (even?) one shekel to the ... [...], Is pleasing to Shamash, he will make long his life.	a Lev 19:15 b Deut 25:13- 16; Amos 8:5 c Lev 19:35- 36	He who [commits] fra[ud as he holds the ba]llances, Who switches weights, who lowers the [...], ^b (His) profits are illusory, and he lo[ses the capital]. (110) The one who is honest in holding the ba- lance, ^c [...] plenty of [...], Whatever (he weighs) will be given to him in plenty [...]. He who commits fra[ud] as he holds the dry mea- sure, Who pays loans by the smaller standard, demands repayment by the extra standard, Before his time, the people's curse will take effect on him, (115) Before his due, he will be called to account, he will bear the consequence(?). No heir will (there be) to take over his property, Nor will (there be) kin to succeed to his estate. The honest merchant who pays loans by the [ex]- tra(?) standard, thereby to make extra virtue, Is pleasing to Shamash, he will grant him extra life, (120) He will make (his) family numerous, he will acquire wealth, [His] seed will be perpetual as the waters of a perpetual Spring. For the man who does virtuous deeds, who knows not fraud, The man who always says what he really means, there will be [...], The seed of evil-doers wi[ll not be perpetual]. (125) The nay-sayers' speeches are before you, You quickly analyze what they say.
---	---	--

You hear and examine them, you see through the trumped-up lawsuit. Each and every one is entrusted to your hands, You make their omens the right ones for them, you resolve what perplexes. (130) You heed, O Shamash, prayer, supplication, and blessing, Obeisance, kneeling, whispered prayer, and prostration.¹ The feeble one calls you as much as his speech allows him. The meek, the weak, the oppressed, the submissive, Daily, ever, and always come before you. (135) He whose family is far off, whose city is distant, The shepherd [in] the afflictions of the wilderness, The herdsman in trouble, the keeper of sheep among the enemy, come before you. O Shamash, there comes before you the caravan, passing in fear, The travelling merchant, the agent carrying capital. (140) O Shamash, there comes before you the fisherman with his net, The hunter, the archer, the driver of the game, The fowler among his snares comes before you, The skulking thief comes before Shamash, The bandit on the wilderness paths comes before you, (145) The wandering dead, the vagrant spirit come before you, O Shamash, you have listened to them all.	d 1 Kgs 8:27	You did not hold back(?) those who came before you, you heeded them, For my sake, O Shamash, do not despise them! You grant wisdom, O Shamash, to humankind, (150) You grant those seeking you your raging, fierce light. [You make] their omens [the right] ones for them, you preside over sacrifices. You probe their future in every way.¹ You grant wisdom to the limits of the inhabited world. The heavens are too puny to be the glass of your gazing, (155) The world is too puny to be (your) seer's bowl.^d On the twentieth of the month you rejoice with mirth and joy, You dine, you drink fine brew, the tavernkeep's beer at wharfside. They pour barkeep's beer for you, you accept it. You are the one who saved them, surrounded by mighty waves, (160) You accept from them in return their fine, clear libations. You drink their sweet beer and brew, You are the one who makes them achieve the goals they strive for. You release the ranks of those who kneel to you, You accept prayers from those who are wont to pray to you. (165) They revere you, they extol your name, They(?) praise your greatness(?) forever.
---	--------------	---

¹ As patron deity of divination, Shamash was the object of the prayers of all who sought to divine the future by one of the numerous techniques developed in Mesopotamia.

REFERENCES

Text: Lambert BWL pls. 33-36 and duplicates. Translations and studies: ANET 387-389; Lambert BWL 121-137; Reiner 1985:68-84; Foster BM 2:531-539; FDD 254-261.

3. LAMENTATIONS AND ELEGIES

A NEO-BABYLONIAN LAMENT FOR TAMMUZ (1.118)

William W. Hallo

This text, of Seleucid date, laments the destruction of the cities of Sumer and Akkad at the hand of the Gutians, a theme strangely out of place two millennia after their historic incursions. So it either represents a late version of a much earlier original or, more likely, a case of deliberate archaizing.

"Oh grieving women of Uruk, (a) oh grieving women of Akkad,^a I am laid to rest!" The goddess of Uruk¹ wept, whose female chair-	a Gen 10:10	bearer had departed, (ditto), who has been stripped (even) of her loincloth. The daughter of Uruk wept, the daughter of Akkad
---	-------------	---

¹ Both Uruk (Erech) and Akkad appear as cities in the "Table of Nations" (Gen 10). "The goddess of Uruk" is an attempt to render Akk. urukattu, arkattu, "Our Lady of Uruk," which like all the other "goddess of GN" names in the text, refers to local manifestations of Ishtar, whose consort was Tammuz.

was lamenting.		to finish the task!" ⁸
Of the daughter of Larak ² — her face was shrouded by (her garment down to) its very fringes.	b Mic 5:4; Ecc1 11:2	Her cheeks were sore (from weeping), she was deprived of her husband in whom she delighted.
(5) The goddess of Hursag-kalamma wept, who was deprived of her husband. ³		The goddess of Der ⁹ (wept): "It is for the Gutians to finish (the task!)"
The goddess of Hulhudhul ⁴ wept, she who had set up her staff.		(15) She whose city was toppled, whose family broken and violated, (wept):
The goddess of Siptu ⁵ wept, whose seven brothers were killed, whose eight brothers-in-law have been laid to rest. ⁶		"(Oh women,) weep on account of Uruk, my head-band caught in a thornbush.
The goddess of Akkad wept, whose shoe-soles were torn, whose lord in whom she delighted was killed.		As for me, I do not know where I stepped in the tempest.
The goddess of Kesh ⁶ wept, sitting in the alleyway, she the lord of whose house a lynx had put and end to.		(Oh women,) weep on account of Larak, I am deprived of my saltier ¹⁰ (and) cloak.
10) The goddess of Dunnu ⁷ wept: "For whom the couch, for whom the coverlet?		My eyes cannot look upon my [...], the ripping of mothers' wombs. (20) (Oh women,) weep on account of Nippur. Silence abides with me.
For whom are guarded by me the coverlets, (now) deathly still?"		The heavens have covered me.
The daughter of Nippur wept: "It is for the Gutians		My throne has been overturned on me.
		Bel has deprived me of my consort, the husband in whom I delighted!" ¹¹
		(A lengthy colophon follows.) ¹²

² An antediluvian city in Sum. tradition (Hallo 1970:64f. and n. 94).

³ The reference is to Ishtar of Kish and her consort Tammuz.

⁴ Perhaps identical with Hulhullu north of Uruk (Zadok 1985:165).

⁵ For Siptu and various toponyms beginning with Siptu, cf. Zadok 1985:279. For the numerical sequence "x/x+1" in ancient Near Eastern literature, see Roth 1962.

⁶ Different from Kish (see n. 3).

⁷ For Dunnu see above, text 1.112.

⁸ Nippur is the ancient religious capital of Sumer and Akkad. For the Gutians as stereotypes of destructive mountaineers from the eastern frontier in first millennium texts, see Hallo 1971b:717-719.

⁹ A major city east of the Tigris (Zadok 1985:117f.).

¹⁰ Restoring lubari with Lambert. For the translation by "saltier" cf. Hallo and Hoffner apud Pope 1970:193. CAD E 66d restores ahṭallup buri and translates "I am wrapped in a reed mat(?)."

¹¹ Bel = Marduk, chief deity of Babylon; that city here appears to receive the blame for the misfortunes that have befallen Uruk and the other cities of the south.

¹² See for the colophon Lambert 1983:213; previously Oelsner 1964:263f., n. 7, 268; Hunger 1968:57 No. 146.

REFERENCES

Text: Pinches 1901. Translations and studies: Pinches 1901; Oppert 1901:830ff.; Pinches 1902:477f.; Langdon 1909:263ff., No. XXV; Hallo 1971:718; Lambert 1983; Foster BM 2:838f. (largely followed here).

AN ASSYRIAN ELEGY (1.119)

William W. Hallo

Akkadian poets rarely speak of themselves in the first person (for a notable exception see Foster 1983), so it is doubly curious that in this short poetic dialogue, the chief speaker is a woman who has died in childbirth - from all indications a young bride experiencing her first delivery. Her interlocutor is also apparently a woman, perhaps her mother, perhaps a midwife. Their speeches are here indicated by (Mother) and (Bride) respectively; in the original they are at most implied by a change in intonation, a rising inflection elsewhere associated with interrogative sentences.

(Mother:) Why are you cast adrift like a boat in the middle of a river,
Your thwarts in pieces, your mooring rope cut,

Your face shrouded (as) you cross the river of Inner City?
(Bride:) How could I not be cast adrift, my mooring rope not be cut?	complaint:

(5) On the day that I bore fruit, how happy I was! Happy was I, even I, happy my chosen husband! ¹ On the day of my labor-pains, did my face grow overcast?	["Why do you leave] me, the wife in whom I delight?
On the day I gave birth, were my eyes prevented (from seeing)?	(15) [...] in the course of the years [Have you haunted] a terrain full of ruins? [In the In]ner City, have you piteously ³ declaimed a lament?"
With opened fists I prayed to Belet-ili: ²	[All] those days with my chosen husband ¹ was I! I lived with him who was my lover.
(10) "You are the mother of women who give birth — save my life!"	(20) (But) death slunk stealthily into my bedroom. It has driven me out of my house.
When Belit-ili heard this, she shrouded her face, (saying)	It has separated me, even me, from the presence of my chosen husband ¹
"You are [...], why do you keep praying to me?" [My husband, who lov]ed me, kept uttering his	It has set my feet into my terrain-of-no-return.

¹ Or: "husband of the preferred wife"; cf. Hallo 1973:167f.

² Lit., "lady of the gods," a name for the Mother Goddess, who pleads for her human children in face of the Flood (see Text 1.132 XI 122, below).

³ Reading re-miš, an otherwise unattested adverb from rēmu, "to take pity" etc.

REFERENCES

Text: Strong 1894:634. Translations and studies: Albertz 1978:54; Reiner 1978:186f.; 1985:85-93; Livingstone 1989:37-39; Foster BM 2:905; FDD 329.

4. DIVINATION

Ann K. Guinan

According to a first millennium text from Assurbanipal's library, Enmeduranki, an antediluvian king of Sippar, learned oil and liver divination — the secrets of heaven and earth — directly from Shamash and Adad. He in turn taught these arts to learned men in the cities of Sippar, Nippur, and Babylon.¹ While the sources that attest to Mesopotamian divinatory practices span three millennia, it was not until the second millennium that a written Akkadian literature developed around the observation of omens. Once the recording of omens was instituted, divination began to evolve into a complex, literate, and highly venerated discipline. By the first millennium Mesopotamian scholars applied much of their intellectual energy to the practice of divination and the scholarship associated with the omen collections. They produced a vast written record consisting of lengthy omen compendia,² commentaries, instruction manuals, reports, correspondence related to divination, rituals and prayers.³

Although typologies of divinatory practices are notoriously difficult to establish (with one form blending into another),⁴ it is useful to distinguish three basic types: 1.) omina oblativa observation of freely offered or unsolicited omens. 2.) Impetrated divination — various techniques for asking a question and directly evoking a response. There is a conceptual difference between techniques designed to elicit omens (omina impetrativa) and the manipulation of divinatory objects such as lots. 3.) mediumistic divination — various practices which utilize a human being as a divinatory vehicle and produce a message in speech or written language. It can involve altered states of consciousness and divine intervention in human cognition. Necromancy, consultation with the dead, is also a form of mediumistic divination. In all cases, a divinatory vehicle in the material world mediates communication between a sensory and suprasensory realm. Divination operates on a case by case basis to address specific situations.

Documents from the Old Babylonian period preserve evidence for a variety of different forms of impetrated divination: observing oil as it is dropped into water (lecanomancy),⁵ smoke as it rises from a censer (libanomancy),⁶ flour

¹ Lambert 1967:132; Vanstiphout and Veldhuis 1995.

² An individual omen was formulated as a conditional sentence: the ominous sign recorded in the protasis of the sentence, and the prognostication in the apodosis. Paradigmatic distinctions between contrasts such as right/left; up/down; front/back; top/middle/base; white, black, red, yellow/green characterize the genre.

³ For a survey of Mesopotamian divination see: Bottero 1974:70-197; Oppenheim 1977:213-227; and most recently, Cryer 1994:124-338.

⁴ Peek 1991:11-12.

⁵ For bibliography see Cryer 1994:145-147.

⁶ For bibliography see Cryer 1994:148.

scattered on water (aleuromancy),⁷ and examination of entrails (extispicy).⁸ As the tradition developed, scholars increasingly turned to the investigation of unsolicited omens and, except for extispicy, impetrated omens ceased to be part of the standard repertoire.⁹ The diviners were attentive to sudden ruptures in pattern, deviations in nature, and to whatever was noteworthy or unusual. While prodigies such as eclipses and monstrous births may have formed the core of divinatory observations, the diviner's attention inevitably extended to lesser details and minutiae of related events. Celestial and meteorological events, abnormal births, behavior of animals, features of the human habitat, attributes of human physiognomy and behavior were studied not as events to be understood for their own sake, but for their cryptic power to signify.

On the surface, none of the divinatory techniques practiced in Israel whether licit, illicit, or falling somewhere in between, bear strong resemblances to the Mesopotamian divinatory traditions. Fully legitimate forms include divining by Urim and Thummim (Num 27:21; Exod 28:15-30), ephod (1 Sam 14:41; 23:6-12) and "inquiring of YHWH" (1 Sam 14:35-37; 22:10-17; 23:1-12; 30:7-8; 2 Sam 2:1). Dreams could be a legitimate means of obtaining knowledge (Gen 28:10-22; Judg 7:13; 1 Sam 28:6; 1 Kgs 3) or they could be misleading and false (Deut 13:2-6; Jer 29:8). The elusive teraphim, household idols or apotropaic figurines, could also have a divinatory function (Hos 3:4; Ezek 21:21; Zech 10). The prohibitions against foreign divination, *qesem*¹⁰ and naḥaš in particular (Lev 19:26, 31; 20:6 and Deut 18:10-11, 14), cannot be clearly identified with or connected in any substantial way to specific Mesopotamian forms.

The liver models found at Hazor, Megiddo, Ebla, and Ugarit and the corpus of omen texts recovered from Ugarit¹¹ clearly attest to a pre-Israelite transmission of Mesopotamian practices to the Levant.¹² While the biblical record preserves clear evidence of familiarity with Mesopotamian practices, there is no biblical corollary to the divinatory texts produced in Mesopotamia.¹³ There are a few direct references to Mesopotamian practices (Ezek 21:21; Isa 47:12-13; Dan 5:11). Echoes of, or, perhaps, direct references to Mesopotamian texts,¹⁴ find their way into other conceptually very different genres.¹⁵

In contrast with Mesopotamia, there was no scholarly tradition associated with divination nor any systematic observation of omens. The signs sent by God (2 Sam 5:24; Judg 7:13-15; 2 Kgs 3:22-23) are significant only in the moment — they never accumulate meaning that carries over from one context to another. All authorized practices are characterized by simplicity and the near presence of God. The divinatory apparatus never becomes disassociated from the divine, it never operates independently, nor does any form take on the artificial quality that long standing practices tend to acquire. Descriptions of specific techniques and paraphernalia are often omitted from the narrative.

Various biblical practices have been explored for a common ancient Near Eastern background or for Mesopotamian parallels. Strong parallels do connect Mesopotamian and biblical accounts of dream interpretation.¹⁶ The texts from Mari provide a rich body of source material for the study of mediated divination.¹⁷ Various scholars have argued a parallel to Mesopotamian extispicy.¹⁸ There are references to necromancy in both the Mesopotamian¹⁹ and the biblical record (1 Sam 28:3-25; Isa 29:4). While they may share a common cultural context, the evidence on both sides is far too limited to make a determination and consulting the dead is such a basic form of divination that ethnographic parallels may be equally valid. Recent scholarship has sought a general Near Eastern background for divinatory forms, such as teraphim, the Balaam Story (Num 22:7) and aspects of the book of Daniel.²⁰

A Mesopotamian psephomancy ritual, LKA 137 (see text 1.127 below), provides the clearest parallel to biblical divination. The technique of casting stones in a ritual context is a marginal practice in Mesopotamia and represented by a single text. Although there is much to be gained by examining the broader Near Eastern background behind various forms of divination, the contrasts between Mesopotamian and biblical divination are more telling than the parallels.

⁷ Nougayrol 1963.

⁸ For a discussion of the types of documents relating to extispicy, see: Cryer 1994:168-180.

⁹ See: STT 73, Reiner 1960 for an unusual first millennium text referring to impetrated practices.

¹⁰ See: Hurowitz 1992a and Sasson 1994.

¹¹ Meyer 1987.

¹² Dietrich and Loretz 1990.

¹³ Hallo 1966:231-232.

¹⁴ Cryer 1994:306-323.

¹⁵ See for example Porter 1983 and Meier 1989.

¹⁶ See: Oppenheim 1956:186-211 and more recently for discussion and bibliography see: Cryer 263-272.

¹⁷ ARM 10, AEM 1/1, Ellis 1989:133-140.

¹⁸ Although it is never explicitly described, several scholars have argued that divination by means of animal sacrifice (extispicy) is an implicit part of the repertoire of priestly divination. For bibliography and reevaluation of the sources see Cryer 1994:286-305.

¹⁹ Finkel 1983-1984.

²⁰ van der Toorn 1990; Horowitz 1992a; Wolters 1993; and Porter 1983.

MESOPOTAMIAN OMENS (1.120)

Extispicy^{21 a}

1. If there is a Hal sign at the emplacement of "the well-being" the reign of Akkad is over.²²
2. If the entire liver is anomalous — Omen of the king of Akkad regarding catastrophe.²³
3. Omen of Ibbi-Sin when Elam reduced Ur to tell and rubble.²⁴
4. If the "rise of the head of the bird" is dark on the left and the right there will be pitrušta.²⁵
5. When you make an extispicy and in a favorable result there is one pitruštu (the extispicy is) unfavorable; in an unfavorable result (the extispicy is favorable).²⁶

*Behavior of the Sacrificial Sheep*²⁷

6. If a sheep bites his right foot — raids of the enemy will be constant against my land.²⁸

*Lecanomanancy*²⁹

7. If (I throw oil (in)to water and) the oil divides itself into two — the sick person will die; for the campaign: the army will not return.^{30 b}

*Anomalous Births: šumma izbu*³¹

8. If an anomaly has no right ear — the reign of the king will come to an end; his palace will be scattered; overthrow of the elders of the city; the king will have no advisors; the mood

a Ezek 21:26;
Dan 2:4;
2 Kgs 16:15

b Gen 44:5, 15

c Dan 8:3

d Dan 5:11;
Isa 47:12-13;
Jer 10:2;
Nah 3:16

of the land will change; the herds of the land will decrease; you will make a promise to the enemy.³²

9. If an anomaly has no left ear — the god has heard the prayer of the king, the king will take the land of his enemy, the palace of the enemy will be scattered, the enemy will have no advisors, you will decrease the herd of the enemy, he will make a promise you.³³
10. If an anomaly's right ear is cleft — that ox-fold will be scattered.³⁴
11. If an anomaly's left ear is split — that ox-fold will expand; the ox-fold of the enemy will be scattered.³⁵
12. If an anomaly has two ears on the left and none on the right — the enemy will take your border city, your adversary will prevail over you.³⁶
13. If an anomaly's horns are on the right — the prince will have auxiliary troops.³⁷
14. If an anomaly's horns are on the left — the enemy: the equivalent.³⁸
15. If a ram's horns protrude from its forehead — that ox-fold will be scattered.^{39 c}

Celestial Divination^{40 d}

16. If there is an eclipse of the moon in Nisannu

²¹ Extispicy, divination from the examination of entrails, derives from the ritual of animal sacrifice. The offering provides a mode for soliciting the gods and a medium on which they could respond. The practice had a complex and lengthy tradition developed over three millennia and was widely disseminated throughout the ancient Near East. It produced a voluminous and varied textual record consisting of reports, clay models, prayers, and queries. Starr 1990:xiii - lv; Meyer 1987. The process of compiling systematic collections of extispicy omens culminated in the production of the great first millennium series, Bārātu. Jeyes 1989:8-14.

²² Note the use of a cuneiform sign as an ominous mark. YOS X 61:7; Jeyes 1989:114; The zone of the liver called the šulmum, "the well-being," has been identified as a groove running between the umbilical fissure and the gall bladder, see Jeyes 1978. Cf. Lieberman 1977.

²³ TCL 6 1:18. For a discussion of "historical" omens, see Cooper 1980:100; Cryer 1994; Hallo 1991c:160.

²⁴ RA 35 43 no. 8A. The text is inscribed on a liver model from Mari. The model represents the anomaly. For a depiction and discussion, see: Meyer 1987:195; Hurowitz 1992a:5-15.

²⁵ YOS X 53:17. The term pitrušištu refers to a negative feature occurring in both left and right contexts. In OB omens a pitrušištu renders the omen inconclusive.

²⁶ CT 20 47:53. In the first millennium series Multābitlu, the 10th Tablet of Bārātu pitrušištu is paired with another ambiguous sign, nip̄u, and both terms systematically presented. A pitrušištu is unfavorable in a particular zone, but it will also reverse the reading of a final tally. CT 20 43-48; Jeyes 1989:111; Starr 1976:244.

²⁷ See Leichty 1993 for a discussion of omen collections dealing with the behavior of a lamb before sacrifice.

²⁸ Arnaud 1987:320:41-42.

²⁹ Cryer 1994:145-147.

³⁰ CT V 4:18; Pettinato 1966 vol 2 17:18; each version has slightly different wording: B: "the army will go on a campaign and not return." D: "the army will not return from a campaign." Cf. Lambert 1967:132.

³¹ For biblical parallels from Daniel, see: Porter 1983 and Cryer 1994:320.

³² CT 27 37:1, Leichty 1970:131:1.

³³ CT 27 37:2, Leichty 1970:131:2.

³⁴ CT 27 37:3, Leichty 1970:131:3.

³⁵ CT 27 37:4, Leichty 1970:131:4.

³⁶ Leichty 1970:139:116'.

³⁷ Leichty 1970:118:49'.

³⁸ Leichty 1970:119:50'.

³⁹ Leichty 1970:171:87' K3823+.

⁴⁰ The celestial omens were systematically collected and compiled into the series Enūma Anu Enlil, "When Anu Enlil ..." The most comprehensive and best preserved version of the series come from Assurbanipal's library at Nineveh. Unlike extispicy, this form of divination is not well documented in the Old Babylonian period. The growth of the discipline and its increasing importance at the Neo-Assyrian court occurred as part of the shift to observational forms of divination, Rochberg-Halton 1988:5-29; Van Soldt 1995. See Walker, Galter and Scholz 1993 for bibliography.

and it is red — prosperity for the people. ⁴¹	e Gen 11:1-9	always shepherd him] steadfastly. ⁵³
17. If Venus wears a black tiara (it means) Sa-[turn(?)] stands in front of her.	f Dan 5:5	29. If a man repairs a sun-disk — his god wil[l always shepherd him] steadfastly. ⁵⁴
If Venus wears a white tiara (it means) J[upiter] stands in front of her. ...	g Lev 14:33	30. If a king repairs (the statue) of the god — the god will [...] ⁵⁵
If Venus wears a green tiara (it means) Mars stands in front of her.		31. If a man sees the body of a king — t[hat] man [...] ⁵⁶
If Venus wears a red tiara (it means) Mercury stands in front of her.		32. If there is black fungus in a man's house — there will be brisk trade in the man's house; the man's house will be rich. ⁵⁷
[Co]mmentary to the 61st Tablet of Enūma Anu Enlil. ⁴²		33. If there is green and red fungus in a man's house — the master of the house will die, dispersal of the man's house. ⁵⁸ ^g
The Human Habitat: šumma alu ⁴³		37. If a snake crosses from the right of a man to the left of a man — he will have a good name. ⁵⁹
18. If a city lifts its head to the heaven — that city will be abandoned ⁴⁴ ^e		38. If a snake crosses from the left of a man to the right of a man — he will have a bad name. ⁶⁰
19. If a city's garbage pit is green — that city will be prosperous, variant: go to ruin. ⁴⁵		39. If a white cat is seen in a man's house — (for) that land hardship will seize it.
20. If there are many messengers in the city — dispersal [of the city.] ⁴⁶		If a black cat is seen in a man's house — that land will experience good fortune.
21. If a man repairs a moon-disk — his god wil[l always shepherd him] steadfastly.		If a red cat is seen in a man's house — that land will be rich.
22. If there are bearded women in a city — hardship will seize the land. ⁴⁷		If a multicolored cat is seen in a man's house — that land will not prosper.
23. If in a man's house a dog is inscribed on the wall — worry [...] ⁴⁸ ^f		If a yellow cat is seen in a man's house — that land will have a year of good fortune. ⁶¹
24. If everything for a banquet in the temple is regularly provided — the house will have regular good fortune. ⁴⁹		40. If "mountain grass" is seen [in a fie]ld inside the city — the field will become fallow, that man will die. ⁶²
25. If a god enters a man's house for a banquet — constant uprising and contention will be constant for the man's house. ⁵⁰		41. If the linen curtain of a temple (in front of the cult statue) looks like a figure — those who have entered that temple will go out and never (re)enter the door. ⁶³ ^h
26. If syrup is seen in a house or on the walls of a house — the house will be devastated. ⁵¹
27. If the house makes the sound of a kettle-drum — [...] ⁵²
28. If a man repairs a moon-disk — his god wil[l

⁴¹ Labat 1965:70 144; ACh Sin 25:10, 12, 17. Cf. Stol 1992:157. The series, Iqqur šippuš, uses signs that parallel Šumma alu and Enūma Anu Enlil but organizes them according to a calendar of auspicious and inauspicious dates. Tablet 17 and 18 of Enūma Anu Enlil and Iqqur šippuš 70-74 preserve parallel lunar eclipse omens, the former organized by phenomena and the latter by month; see: Rochberg-Halton 1988:139.

⁴² K148 r 8-12, 30; ACh Supp. Istar 36:8-12; Pingree 1993:265-266.

⁴³ The omen series Šumma alu is a collection of terrestrial omens observed against the background of the human environment. At the present time, the only sources are Gadd's copies (CT 38-41) and the text edition based on them by Nötscher 1928-1930. There is, in addition, a general introduction to the series by Moren 1978. See also: Guinan 1989.

⁴⁴ CT 38 1:15; for discussion see: Guinan 1989:234.

⁴⁵ CT 38 2:38; Note that the var. gives an inauspicious meaning.

⁴⁶ CT 38 4:80.

⁴⁷ CT 38 5:124, cf. CT 29 48 53; note that the goddess Ishtar can be bearded; see: Reiner 1995:6. Cf. ACh Supp. 33:41.

⁴⁸ CT 38 16 83; CT 40 1:18.

⁴⁹ CT 40 11:86 plus joins to K2685+.

⁵⁰ CT 40 5:38 plus joins to K268+.

⁵¹ CT 40 2:27.

⁵² K268+ 8.

⁵³ CT 40 11 ii 76. Cf. Stol 1992:247.

⁵⁴ CT 40 11 ii 77.

⁵⁵ CT 40 8:1; CT 40 10:ii 57.

⁵⁶ CT 40 9; Rm.136:13.

⁵⁷ CT 40 16:43.

⁵⁸ CT 40 18 83; Caplice Or 40 (1971) 144-146; Cryer 1994:317-319; ABL 367; Oppenheim 1967:167; JEOL 32 (1991-92) 65 n. 157.

⁵⁹ KAR 386 10.

⁶⁰ KAR 386 11.

⁶¹ CT 39 48:5-9.

⁶² CT 39 3:20, cf. CT 38 5:140. Cf. Veldhuis 1990; Reiner 1985:94-100.

*Cledonomancy (from šumma ālu)*⁶⁴

42. If a kledon (a divinatory sound) answers a man yes twice — deferment (of meaning).⁶⁵
If a kledon answers yes three times — it is a firm yes.⁶⁶
If a kledon answers no to a man two times — attainment of desire
If a kledon answers no to a man 4 times — nip̄hu (indeterminate meaning).⁶⁷
If a kledon answers a man on his right — deferment (of meaning)⁶⁸
If a kledon as a pig answers a man to his face — no attainment of desire.⁶⁹
If a kledon (as) a bird answers a man to his face — yes, truly, his prayer will be g[ranted].⁷⁰
43. If a man scrapes dirt from his nose — his adversary will submit [to him].⁷¹
44. If a man breaks a drinking vessel from which he is drinking — for three days lamentations [will befall him].
So that (the evil) not approach: he should throw its shards in the river and then [it will] not [approach him].⁷²
45. If a woman, her husband dies and a son of her fat[her-in-law] marries her — that man will be rich.⁷³
46. If a man "goes" (i.e., has intercourse) to a woman lying on (her) back and her feet go around the back of his neck — wherever he goes god, king, and noble will be agreeable.⁷⁴
- h Exod 26:1
i 1 Sam 14:8-12; 1 Kgs 20:30-35; Judg 7:13f
j Lev 15:16-17
k Lev 18:22; Lev 20:13
l Deut 18:10-11; Lev 19:31; 20:6-7, 1 Sam 28:6-14; Isa 8:19; 2 Kgs 21:6; 1 Sam 3
47. If a man "goes" (i.e., has intercourse) to his brother's daughter — wherever he goes [there will be] sh[ortages].
So that (the evil) does not approach: Say thus, "God, my strength!" [and then it will not approach him].⁷⁵
48. If a man "goes" to the daughter of his brother's daughter — [he will lay his hand] on whatever is not his; he will have profit; the family [will be rich].⁷⁶
49. If a man has sexual relations with an old woman — he will quarrel daily.⁷⁷
50. If a man ejaculates in his dream and is spattered with his semen — that man will find riches; he will have financial gain.⁷⁸
51. If a man has anal sex with a man of equal status — that man will be foremost among his brothers and colleagues.⁷⁹
52. If a man divorces his first-ranking wife — unhappiness (until) the end of days, quarrelling will be constant for him, his days will be short.⁸⁰
53. If in a man's house, a ghost enters the ear of the mistress of the house — mourning will take place in the man's house.⁸¹
54. If a severed head laughs — conquest of the army [...].⁸²
55. If a man laughs in his sleep — he will become very sick.⁸³
56. If a man grinds his teeth (while sleeping) — he will experience troubles.⁸⁴

⁶⁵ CT 39 33:51, 40 46:11.⁶⁶ Oppenheim 1954-1956; 1956:210-211; Finet 1982.⁶⁷ CT 39 41:4.⁶⁸ CT 39 41:5.⁶⁹ CAD N/2 s.v. nip̄hu 3.a. "unreliable, false prediction" A divinatory response that cannot be resolved and leaves the inquirer without guidance can in itself be a negative omen (cf. Starr 1983; Jeyes 1989:88-89). See above, n. 26, for a discussion of the terms nip̄hu and pitrusištu in the series Muttabiltu.⁷⁰ CT 39 41:15.⁷¹ CT 39 42:30 (plus unpubl. dups.).⁷² CT 39 42:32 (plus unpubl. dups.).⁷³ CT 37 47:17.⁷⁴ CT 37 48:7.⁷⁵ CT 39 43 K3677 4-5'.⁷⁶ K8268+, AMT 65:3. From Tablet 103. The coital positions recorded in Tablet 103 correspond to the positions represented on erotic plaques, figurines, and seals; see: Cooper RIA 4:259-270. Cf. Scurlock, 1993 "Lead Plaques and Other Obscenities," NABU 1993/1:15.⁷⁷ CT 39 43 K3134 3'-4. Omens in this group deal with intercourse with a female relative and her daughter.⁷⁸ CT 39 43 K3134 6'.⁷⁹ CT 39 43 K3134 10'; CT 39 44:1.⁸⁰ CT 39 45:26; cf. 45:25; 44:9-10; 38 r.13; van der Toorn 1985:32.⁸¹ CT 39 44:13; MAL A 19/20; Olyan 1994.⁸² CT 39 45:39. LU 9, LH 137-141, MAL A 37.⁸³ CT 38 26:33; Abusch 1995.⁸⁴ K6229 8' (unpublished); CT 29 48:2, CT 40 46:51, CT 41 22:19. Communication with the dead could also be impetrated. See Finkel 1983:1-17. Whether apparitions of the dead are taken as omens or contact is deliberately sought, it is not uncommon to look to the dead for divinatory information. Mesopotamian necromancy rituals attest to the practice of deliberately provoked communication for the purposes of divination. The ritual produces a vision which allows the inquirer to see and speak with a ghost. Another type of ritual enables a skull to be used as a medium of speech; Finkel 1983-84.⁸⁵ Cf. K9739+ 9 (and dupes); CT 37 49:9; Köcher and Oppenheim 1957-58:74:9 The belief that laughing in one's sleep is a sign of sorrow is widespread and occurs in a variety of historical contexts. For a discussion see, Köcher and Oppenheim 1957-58:62 n. 13 and Guinan 1990:12.⁸⁶ K9537+ 10'. See "If a sheep grinds his teeth ..." Arnaud 1987:321:4. Omens from human behavior share many parallels with omens derived from the behavior of a sheep before sacrifice. See note 27 above.

Oneiromancy^{85 n}

56. [If] (he dreams) that a dog rips his [garment] — he will experience losses.⁸⁶
 57. If a man (dreams) he kisses his penis — what he says will find acceptance; whatever he desires will not be withheld from him.⁸⁷

Physiognomic Omens^{88 n}

58. If a mole is very white — that man will become poor, very [...]

m Jer 23:25;
 1 Sam 28:6;
 Gen 40:1-23;
 Dan 2:1-49;
 Judg 7:13f.;
 Deut 13:2-6

n Lev 13

59. If a mole is very green — ditto [...]
 60. If a mole is very red — he will be ri[ch]⁸⁹
 61. If his garment hangs down and is marked with white blemishes — garment of deprivations.⁹⁰
 62. If the walls of a house are dotted with very white (spots) — the master of that house will die a death of violence.⁹¹
 63. If a man (while speaking) bites his lower lip — (his word?) will find acceptance.⁹²

⁸⁵ Oppenheim following Artemidorus, the Roman dream interpreter, distinguishes between message dreams and symbolic dreams. Both types can be divinatory. Message dreams in which a deity is solicited (often in a sanctuary) and speaks in response is a form of mediumistic divination. Mediumistic dreaming was practiced at Mari; see: Sasson 1983; and in later at the sanctuary of Arbela; see: Oppenheim 1956:188, 200, 249; for more recent bibliography see: Ellis 1989:147. Oblated dream omens are collected in the canonical series, Ṣaḡiqu; see Oppenheim 1956. The text, named for the god of dreams, is a divinatory interpretation of dream symbols. In some cases the omens are similar to observations made while awake and in other cases they have a fantastic quality befitting of dreams. There is also evidence for the practice of impetrating symbolic dream omens, but this form of dream incubation was peripheral and rare, see: Reiner 1960:27,33:61-70, 34:82-84.

⁸⁶ This omen comes from a poorly preserved sequence of omens in the Series, Ṣaḡiqu, which concern dreams about clothing. K9812+ 10862 Oppenheim 1956:292, 336; Oppenheim 1969:158-159.

⁸⁷ From the Susa version of dream omens, MDP 14 55 4. i 20-22; Oppenheim 1956:258.

⁸⁸ Omens dealing with human physiognomy were collected in the series Ṣumma alamdimmū which concerns, according to the ancient scribe, Esagil-kin-Apli, "external form and appearance and they imply the fate of man," Finkel 1988:149:29. There are various subseries such as Ṣumma kataduggū which reads outer traits and body language for clues to deeper aspects of personality and Ṣumma liptu which collects omens related to moles.

⁸⁹ Kraus, Afo Beiheft 3:53: r.26-28. Cf. Köcher and Oppenheim 1956-1957:66:42-45.

⁹⁰ Köcher and Oppenheim 1956-1957:6-7; for a discussion of the term pāṣu, "a white patch," see: Jeyes 1989:91.

⁹¹ CT 38 15:49.

⁹² CBS 4501 r 53, Kraus 1937:233, Cf. Bryce 1975. See also: If a sheep bites his upper lip ... CT 31 33:10.

REFERENCES

- Abusch 1995:588-593; Arnaud 1987; Biggs 1969:73-74; Bottero 1974:70-197; Bryce 1975:19-37; Cooper RIA 4:259-270; 1980; Cryer 1994; Deitrich and Loretz 1990; Ellis 1989:127-186; Finet 1982:48-55; Finkel 1983:50-57; 1983-84:1-17; Goetze 1968:25-29; Greenberg 1991:267-271; Greenfield and Sokoloff 1989:201-214; Guinan 1989:227-235; 1990:9-14; 1996a:61-68; 1996b; Hallo 1966:231-242; 1991:267-271; Horowitz and Hurowitz 1992:95-115; Hurowitz 1992a:5-15; Huffmon 1983:355-359; Kraus 1936-37:219-230; 1939; Köcher and Oppenheim 1957-58:62-77; Jeyes 1980:13-32; 1989; Labat 1965; Lambert 1967:126-139; Leichty 1970; 1977:147-154; 1993:238-242; Leiderer 1990; Lieberman 1977:147-154; Long 1973:489-497; Meier 1989:184-192; Meyer 1987; Moren 1980:53-70; Notscher 1928-30:39-42, 51-54; Nougayrol 1963:318-384; Olyan 1994:179-206; Oppenheim 1954-56:49-55; 1956; 1967; 1969:153-165; 1977; Pettinato 1966; Pingree 1993:259-273; Porter 1983; Reiner 1960:23-35; 1995; Rochberg-Halton 1988; Sasson 1983:283-293; 1994:39-40; van Soldt 1995; Starr 1976:241-247; 1983; 1990; Stol 1992:245-276; van der Toorn 1990:203-222; 1985; Vanstiphout and Veldhuis 1995:30-33; Veldhuis 1991:28-44; Walker, Galter, and Scholz 1993; Wolters 1993:291-306.

5. INCANTATIONS

OLD BABYLONIAN INCANTATION AGAINST CATTLE DISEASE (1.121)

D. O. Edzard

- | | |
|---|--|
| (1) There was a whirl[wind] in the sky,
(2) A fire was kindled,
(3) And the "peg" ¹ fell
(4) On all the cattle.
(5) It was infected with heat
(6) The kids and the lambs
(7) And also the small ones on the nurse's shoulder. ² | (8-9) Address my mother Ningirim. ³
(10) Let the face of the cattle be bright again,
(11) Let Sumuqan rejoice, ⁴
(12) Let the herbs rejoice,
(13) Let the trail resound ⁵ with merry bleating — (14-16) (Then) I will most carefully apply lots of little sun disks to the seats of the great gods.
(17) Incantation of sheep infected with the "peg." |
|---|--|

¹ The illness called "peg" (sikkatum) has not yet been identified beyond doubt; "constipation" has been suggested.

² As in the modern Middle East, children sat astride on their mother's or nurse's shoulders.

³ This is an abbreviation of the formula describing how a messenger is sent to a deity who is an expert in matters of incantation.

⁴ God of cattle.

⁵ Lit., "let the trail jubilate."

REFERENCES

van Dijk, Goetze, and Hussey 1985: Number 7.

6. RITUALS

RITUALS FROM EMAR¹

Daniel Fleming

THE INSTALLATION OF THE STORM GOD'S HIGH PRIESTESS² (1.122)

This text combines length and variety with minimal loss by tablet breaks to provide the best point of entry for reading Emar rituals. The translation offered here follows the principal tablet, which is large and neatly inscribed, with only one major break on the front side. Four further copies are represented by other fragments, so it is evident that the text had attracted special interest in the diviner's training system, along with the collected kissu festivals.³ Sections of the text are marked by horizontal lines drawn across the tablet, though these vary in position from copy to copy. The whole festival centers on the installation itself, which begins on the third day and continues through a seven-day feast, with the priestess settled in her new residence on the last day. A distinct preparatory rite of shaving occupies a day to itself before the installation, and the priestess is designated by lot on the opening day. This unique installation text combines wedding imagery with more widely applied rites for consecration to temple service, but it does not display the sexual aspect attributed to the hieros gamos or sacred marriage. For the sake of simplicity, the text presented here draws from multiple copies with bias toward the fuller version (text A), usually without comment.

Heading (line 1)

Tablet of rites for the high priestess of Emar's storm god.^{4 a}

Day 1: The Day of Selection (lines 1-6)

When the sons of Emar^b elevate the high priestess to the storm god, the sons of Emar^b take lots^c from the temple of NINURTA and grasp them before the storm god.⁵

The daughter of any son of Emar may be designated.

On the same day they take fragrant oil from the palace and from NINKUR's temple and place it on her head.^{6 d}

a Exod 29;
Lev 8
b Ezek 23:1-5;
Joel 4:6
c Lev 16:8;
Num 26:55, 34:13; Josh 14:2; 18:6;
Esth 3:7; 9:24
d Exod 29:7;
Lev 8:12;
1 Sam 10:1; 16:13
e Deut 32:51;
Isa 30:29
f Num 6:9, 18
g Ezek 46:4, 6; Neh 5:18

They offer before the storm god one sheep, one quart jar, and one standard vessel of wine.⁷

They give the diviner one shekel of silver.

They send back to NINURTA's temple eight dried cakes and one standard vessel along with the lots.^c

During the consecration of the shaving ceremony they consecrate all the gods^e of Emar with bread and beer.⁸

Day 2: The Day of Shaving (lines 7-21)

The shaving^f of the high priestess falls on the next day.

One ox and six sheep^g proceed to the storm god's temple as the sacrifice of the high priestess. The ¹ The following translations take considerable liberties with Emar vocabulary in order to provide a rendition not continually burdened with transliterated terms of unknown or uncertain meaning. Notes to the text provide brief rationale for many of the choices made, some of which cannot be close to literal, especially for the multitude of vessels and breads presented for offerings. Lineation likewise is less precise than strict adherence to the Akk. word order would allow, for the sake of clarity.

² See Arnaud 1986 no. 369 (Hereafter Emar); Dietrich 1989; Fleming 1992.

³ In addition to Fleming 1992, Dietrich 1989 examines the copying of this text at some length. On the kissu festivals, see below.

⁴ The "high priestess" is written with the Sum. NIN.DINGIR, read in one lexical text as ittu, evidently derived from the Akk. high priestess entu (Fleming 1990). This figure occupies the highest position in a Mesopotamian temple, originally the human wife of a god, as the ēnu priest was husband of a goddess. Emar's storm god is rendered by the Sum. "IM, which in different settings may have been read as Baal (Ba'lu) or Addu.

⁵ The god written by Sum. "NIN.URTA serves as divine authority in conduct of local legal affairs, alongside human elders. This defines him as "city god," like the original Ninurta of Nippur, but some native divine name is likely covered by the Sum. writing. It is not clear what specific divinatory technique is indicated by "grasping" the lots.

⁶ The goddess "NIN.KUR is prominent in Emar ritual though not so in wider Mesopotamia. Again, the Sum. writing likely covers a native Semitic name.

⁷ The "quart" refers to the size of the qu²ū vessel, and the "standard" recalls the fact that the hizzibu vessel serves one meal for one person in the feasts, below, just as the naptanu provides one serving of bread for one meal. The derivation of the word hizzibu remains uncertain.

⁸ The usual term for consecration (root qds) here refers not to preparation of new statues for sacred use but only the more immediate preparation for participation in one sacred event.

⁹ The divine weapon is specified elsewhere as the divine axe, lit., "the axe of the god(s)." No particular deity is associated with this sacred implement, which seems to serve the divine sphere more generally.

divine weapon and the high priestess follow them, while the singers walk in front.^{9 h}

When they reach the storm god's temple, they shave the high priestess at the entrance of the courtyard gate.ⁱ

[...] they perform a sacrificial homage^j before the storm god.¹⁰ Her father carries the divine weapon for the sacrificial homage on her behalf.

After they finish the Greater Sacrificial Homage, they give the diviner (one?) shekel of silver, and they sacrifice the one ox and the six sheep before the storm god.

They set before the gods the ritual portion of beef and the ritual portion of mutton.¹¹

They set before the gods seven standard loaves,¹² seven dried cakes, and two dried cakes with fruit.

They fill goblets with wine.^k

The officials who give the consecration-gift(?), the heralds(?), and seven [and seven Hamša³-u-men] eat and drink at the storm god's temple.^{13 l} The men of the consecration-gift(?) receive one standard loaf and one standard vessel of barley-beer each.

The clan head^{14 m} slaughters one sheep at his house. Once he cooks it, they set five tables with three standard loaves each at the gate of the storm god's temple, in the room of the high priestess.

Oneⁿ table is for the previous high priestess.¹⁵

One table is for the high priestess of Šumi.

One table is for the war-priestess.¹⁶

One table is for the king of the land of Emar.

One table is [for the king of Šatappi].

h Josh 6:4,
8; Ps 68:26

i Lev 8:4

j 2 Chr 32:33

k Exod 29:40;
Lev 23:13;
Isa 65:11

l Exod 24:11

m Exod 22:7;
Judg 19:22-23

n 1 Sam 20:5, 25, 29

o Exod 12:6;
Lev 23:5

p Exod 25:5

q Exod 25:23,
etc.; Isa
65:11

On them they set out the mutton and one dried cake with fruit each.

(The tables) receive one jar of barley-beer each and one presentation vessel of barley-beer each.¹⁷

They offer to all the gods of Emar one standard loaf each, one standard vessel of barley-beer, thick bread,¹⁸ cedar oil, and fruit, which they distribute among the gods.

Just before evening,^o they take fragrant oil of NINKUR's temple and of the palace, and the diviner pours it on the head of the high priestess^d at the gate of the storm god.

When the men of the consecration-gift(?) leave the storm god's temple, they bring her [into the house of her father].

The Consecration of the Installation Proper (lines 22-28)¹⁹

On the consecration day of the installation, they consecrate all the gods of Emar [with bread and beer].

They lay NINKUR in the house of (the high priestess's) father, [take] the red wool^p vestment of [NINKUR's] temple, and put it on NINKUR.

They set four tables before the gods.^q

They set one table for the storm god,

one table for [...],

and [two tables] on the ground for the underworld gods.²⁰

On them they set out twelve fat loaves, [...], and standard loaves, four dried cakes each, and four dried cakes with fruit each.²¹

For seven days ...

¹⁰ The "sacrificial homage" is a kubadu, which usually designates a combination of offerings more generally, but here is focused at the moment of presentation, before actual slaughter of the animals. The kubadu offering is evidently characterized by this presentation ceremony, which only happens to be detailed here because of responsibilities that shift from the father to the new priestess.

¹¹ The noun paršu (GARZA) means "ritual," but in this context refers to a specific portion of sacrificed meat, apparently determined by ritual standard.

¹² Just as the hizzibu represents a standard allotment of drink for one person at one meal, so the naptanu provides one portion of bread at a single "meal."

¹³ These participants are all unique to Emar ritual. "The officials who give the consecration-gift(?)" (šarrū nadinū(t) qidašū) include at least the diviner and the singers, perhaps along with the king (lines 54-55, 83). Use of the verb nadānu need not suggest that these figures fund the festival; on the contrary, they are described only as recipients of payments. Instead, the role may relate to the statements from the administrative sections of other festival texts that the king, the diviner, and the chief scribe consecrate the gods with bread and beer; see Fleming 1992:160; and Dagan's kissu festival, Emar 385:25-26, (text 1.126) below. The "consecration-gift" would then be the qidašu. The "heralds" are hussā, from the root hss "to bring to mind," associated with oath-taking in Mari letters.

¹⁴ Lit., "lord of the house." This is not a sacred profession, and may instead identify a one-time festival sponsor.

¹⁵ If the installation takes place at the death of a high priestess, this offering is then posthumous. No calendar indicates any annual occasion, and the text ends with arrangements at time of death.

¹⁶ The maš-artu is not known outside Emar. Her installation text places her in service of Aštart-of-Battle, and a rare verb ša'aru means "to conquer," from which the noun may be derived.

¹⁷ The maḥḥaru vessel is derived from the verb maḥāru, "to face," which can refer to both presentation and reception of offerings. This translation adopts "presentation" to distinguish it from the common Emar offering verb naḡū (originally, "to libate").

¹⁸ "Thick bread" is the Hittite sense of NINDA.GUR₄.RA, whose Emar reading is not certain.

¹⁹ Advance "consecration" for the installation begins the day before the installation proper just as consecration for the shaving began one day prior to that ceremony. Apparently because NINKUR stays in the father's house through the whole installation feast, this text section anticipates the seven days which begin on the installation day itself.

²⁰ Lit., "the gods below."

²¹ The fat loaves, aklu ebū, appear to be distinct from the NINDA.GUR₄.RA, "thick bread," unless the first represents a syllabic equivalent of the second.

They fill goblets with wine. [They offer] one ox, one sheep, seven standard vessels of wine, and two bushels [of barley to ...].²²	r Lev 1:8, 12 s 2 Kgs 11:12 = 2 Chr 23:11; 2 Kgs 23:30	loaves, seven dried cakes, and two dried cakes with fruit. They fill goblets with wine and barley-beer.^k
They set before the gods the ritual portions of the ox and of the sheep, the heads of the ox and one sheep, and seven standard vessels of barley-beer.	r Gen 30:11; Isa 65:11	Since the men of the consecration-gift(?) and heralds(?) (act as) the servers and the attendants, they may eat and drink as (the storm god's) servers and attendants.
Day 3: The Installation (lines 29-48)	u Gen 28:18; 31:13; 35:14	They set up five tables in the room of the high priestess's mourning).²⁷
The installation of the high priestess falls on the next day.²³	v Lev 9:23	Just as for the Day of Shaving.²⁸
One ox [and six sheep^a proceed to the storm god's temple as the sacrifice of the high priestess]. The divine weapon and the high priestess follow them, while the singers walk in front.^a	w 1 Sam 1:9; 4:13	Just before evening, they seat the high priestess on her throne,^w set before her a new table from her father's house, and set bread on it.
They perform the Greater Sacrificial Homage [before the storm god]. The high priestess (herself) carries the divine weapon for the sacrificial homage.	x Ezek 16:12 y Gen 24:22; 41:42; Ezek 16:11, 42	They put on her ears two gold earrings^x from her father's house, put on her right hand the storm god's gold ring,^y and wrap her head with a red wool headdress.
After [they finish the sacrificial homage], they purify the ... and bring (the priestess) into the storm god's temple.	z Judg 11:40; Jer 9:16, 19; Ezek 32:16	They offer fragrant oil for the storm god.
[They sacrifice] the one ox and the six sheep [to the storm god, and ...].	aa Lev 8:33- 35; 9:1, 23	They put in the diviner's hand a ten-shekel silver coil.²⁹
The high priestess travels in procession with the divine weapon and the singers.		Two of her brothers³⁰ carry her on their shoulders as she proceeds to the house of her father.
[They enter the House of Trust, and (provide) one lamb] for Adammatara.²⁴		The town elders fall at her feet and present her a seven-shekel silver clasp as her (official) gift. Her brothers likewise present her lavish gifts. The divine axe follows her, while the singers walk in front.^a
After they leave the House of Trust they go to the House of Fortune.ⁱ (There,) they [sacrifice one lamb to the storm god] and one lamb for the upright stone of Hebat.²⁵		Then once she has entered her father's house, they set the divine axe on NINKUR for seven days.
The high priestess pours fragrant oil on the top of Hebat's upright stone.^u On that day (the stone) enters the House of Fortune, but (the high priestess) must not do so.^u		On the same day, they offer one standard loaf each, one standard vessel of barley-beer each, thick bread, and the meat of NINKUR's ox,³¹ and distribute them among all the gods of Emar.
They return, and at the storm god's temple they set before him the ritual portions of the ox and of the six sheep.²⁶		On the third day of the high priestess' ... festival, the wailing woman gives forth her cry.³²
They set before the storm god seven standard		Days 3-9: The Seven-Day Feast (lines 49-58) For seven days^{aa} they sacrifice daily two sheep to the gods on behalf of Hebat in the (temple) room (of the high priestess).³³

²² The parisu is a large dry measure, translated roughly as "bushel," without intending equivalent size.

²³ The word translated "installation" is malluku, lit. "to make rule." This use of the common Semitic root neither assumes kingship as in West Semitic nor counsel as in East Semitic Akkadian. It should be noted that enthronement is central to the installation (lines 40, 51, 84), a possible point of contact with kingship.

²⁴ The bīl nukli is associated with the domain of the city-god NINURTA and may serve some administrative function.

²⁵ The "House of Fortune" is the bīl Gadda, a term that may anticipate the Gad from Roman Syria. Hebat's stone is a sikkānu, also attested at Ugarit and elsewhere in early Syria.

²⁶ Text B diverges through the sacrificial homage and the processions to the House of Trust and the House of Fortune. Essentially, B reverses the homage and the processions, which allows the homage to serve as direct preparation for sacrifice, as it did on the Day of Shaving.

²⁷ Text B repeats "the room of the high priestess" from the Day of Shaving, but text A adds a further detail, bīl bukki NIN.DINGIR, where bukki might be understood as "weeping," in reference to mourning for the previous priestess. The priestess's room in the temple is still given to mourning until the end of the festival transition, when the new priestess takes up residence.

²⁸ This abbreviation indicates completion of the feast according to the pattern above.

²⁹ Or in text B, two gold lamassu-figurines of one gold shekel weight. The lamassu is a Mesopotamian protective spirit.

³⁰ Brothers may allow a wider range of male kin, as would the sister below.

³¹ Texts B and D mention oils and cedar.

³² This installation day does represent the third day of the festival counted so far, but the term datnātu (tadnātu?) remains obscure; perhaps, from nadānu, "to give?"

³³ Lit., this line reads, "to the gods to her house to Hebat." The translation offered here locates the offering in the priestess's room, and conceives sacrifice divided between the primary recipient Hebat and the collective gods, as is performed for the storm god and the gods, above.

Every day they set before the gods a ritual portion of the meat and the two heads of the sheep.⁷

For seven days^{aa} they offer daily at the storm god's temple the heart and the lungs of one sheep, one large standard loaf, one dried cake with fruit, one pot of barley-beer, and one presentation vessel of wine.

When the high priestess is enthroned at her feast, she must present to the storm god and Hebat two gold figurines of one shekel weight.

They sacrifice one lamb to Šaḫru.^{bb}

The seven and seven Hamša^cu-men^{cc} eat and drink for two days in the room of the high priestess, and give her one bushel of barley-flour each with one jug of malt beer.³⁴

In addition, the men of the consecration-gift(?) eat and drink for seven days in her room, receiving seven standard loaves and seven standard vessels of barley-beer each.

The previous high priestess, the high priestess of Dagan Lord of Šumi, the war-priestess, the king of the land of Emar, and the king of Šatappi — their tables, together with beef, mutton, seven dried cakes with fruit, seven pots of barley-beer, and (seven) presentation vessels of barley-beer supply the seven days.

The haunch is for the (past) high priestess of the storm god.

The hock is for the high priestess of Dagan Lord of Šumi.

The boiled meat^{dd} is for the war-priestess.

The kidney^{ee} is for the king of the land of Emar.

The kidney is (also) for the king of Šatappi.

Day 9: The Final Day (lines 59-75)

[Text disturbed at lower edge of tablet.]³⁵

... They raise up NINKUR and send NINKUR's red wool vestment back to her temple along with bread and beer.

When the high priestess leaves the (family) house, they cover her head like a bride^{ff} with a bright sash from her father's house.

Her two maids^{gg} embrace her like a bride.^{hh}

bb Isa 14:12

cc 1 Sam 8:12;
cf. 2 Kgs 1:9

dd Num 6:19

ee Lev 3:4-5,
etc.

ff Gen 24:65

gg Judg
11:37;
Ps 45:15;

hh Isa 49:18; 61:10

ii Gen 15:17

jj 2 Kgs 4:10

kk Gen 47:31

ll Gen 19:2;
1 Sam 25:41;
2 Sam 11:8

Just before evening, one ox, seven sheep, three lambs, along with a torchⁱⁱ and the singers proceed in front of her, while the divine axe follows behind.

She enters the House of Trust to sacrifice one lamb for Adammatera.

After she leaves the House of Trust she proceeds to NINKUR's temple. (There,) she sacrifices one lamb to NINKUR and sets out three standard loaves for the gods.

After she leaves NINKUR's temple she proceeds to the temple of the storm god.

(There,) she sacrifices one lamb to the storm god, sets seven standard loaves before the gods, and fills goblets with wine.^k

The men of the consecration-gift(?) and the town elders follow, to eat and drink at the storm god's temple.^l

They send back to the house of the clan head^{mm} the above ox and seven sheep which proceeded in front of the high priestess.

After the town elders have eaten and drunk, they give one fine robe as her garment, as well as one bed, one chair, and one footstool.ⁿⁿ

On this bed they spread one Akkadian blanket from her sacred wardrobe.³⁶

They set up Hulelu's table at the entrance to its head³⁷ ^{kk} and set on this table three standard loaves each, one dried cake with fruit, one standard vessel of wine, and a woven garment. The singers chant for Hulelu and perform the rites of this table.³⁸

Then her sister washes her feet,^{oo} and they place one silver ring of half-shekel weight in the water that washed her feet, which her sister receives. The high priestess ascends her bed to lie down.

Administration (lines 76-94)

On the seventh day, the men of the consecration-gift(?) slaughter at her father's house the one ox that proceeded in front of the high priestess and divide it among themselves.³⁹

The representative of the king of the land receives the kidneys of the ox plus his share.⁴⁰

³⁴ The Hamša^cu-men remain obscure; the root ḥmš recalls the leaders of "fifty" in the Bible, as well as the Old Assyrian ḥamištum, an administrative body — though Emar ritual excludes the possibility of five members. The "jug" is called anatu, and may be sizeable, to match the large volume of barley.

³⁵ Text B mentions a "last day" (āmi arki), and this entire section deals with a single closing day. Line 59 combines broken elements of separate idioms: offering, filling chalices, and feasting, without clear sense. Line 60 resumes the legible text.

³⁶ Lit., "of the pure house/room of her bed."

³⁷ This picture might envision a bed with a screen, which would have an opening.

³⁸ The idiom parṣṭ leqū can mean "to perform a ritual." Otherwise, the statement could be translated, "and receive the ritual portion of this table." See also Dagan's kissu festival, Emar 385:23 (text 1.126) below.

³⁹ This number seven counts the days of the feast, so that the seventh day is the final day of the last procession, when the ox was still left alive. Text C reads "eight," either counting the Day of Shaving or locating this slaughter one day after the proper end of the festival in line 75, unless the scribe was simply in error.

⁴⁰ Text A has "the man of the king" rather than the king directly.

The diviner receives the half-cut⁴¹ plus his share, the head, the intestines, the fat, and the hide.

The singers receive the lungs plus their share. The men of the consecration-gift(?) eat half of its intestines.

Among the four tables which they set up for the gods, two of them are pure tables and two impure.

The diviner and the singers divide among themselves (as follows):

The diviner and the singers also divide among themselves the hides of all the sheep.^{mm}

The diviner receives the three ox hides.

For the seven days, the diviner and the singers receive one standard loaf and one pot of barley-beer each.

The diviner receives the half-cut of the oxen and the sheep for all the days.

The singers receive the lungs of all the oxen and the sheep.

They distribute the meat of the ox sacrifice among the gods.

When the high priestess is enthroned at her ban-mm Lev 4:11;

Exod 29:14

quet, five shekels are the gift for the diviner and one shekel is the gift for the singers.

In a good year, they give her from the House of Trust thirty bushels of barley. In a bad year, she receives fifteen bushels of barley.

From the House of the Gods they give her six hundred (shekels) of wool, two jars of oil, one juglet of oil, four hundred (shekels) of aromatics, five store-jars of wine,⁴² two racks of grapes, two racks of apples, two racks of apricots, one pot of milk, one large (pot) of soured milk, one bushel of emmer, one bushel of aromatics, three quart jars of malt beer, two pairs of sandals, two pairs of boots, two gazelles, two fish, and four pigeons — per annum.

When the high priestess goes to her fate,⁴³ they slaughter one ox and one sheep at the temple.⁴⁴

They offer to Šahrū⁴⁵ one sheep, one juglet of oil, a standard vessel, and two ...

The diviner receives the hide of the above ox. One sheep ...

These items belong to the house of her father. The town (gets) nothing.

⁴¹ The meat ḥaštu might be related to the Hebrew words for "half."

⁴² "Store-jars" translates hubu, probably a larger vessel for wine.

⁴³ That is, she dies.

⁴⁴ It is not certain which location is in view; the larger temple would be the appropriate place of sacrifice, rather than the residence ("room") of the priestess.

THE ZUKRU FESTIVAL (1.123) ¹

In a culture that generally observed two axes in the turn of the year, at spring and autumn, the term "new year" is often too loosely applied. Nevertheless, the Israelite feasts of Unleavened Bread and Booths and the Mesopotamian akītu festival do occupy these key turning points in the annual cycle, with special significance for public religious commitments. Emar's zukru festival provides a first early Syrian representative of this practice, attested in one primary tablet, with a badly broken alternative text, and various related fragments of indeterminate relation to these two tablets.

The shorter, broken zukru tablet displays a simpler, perhaps older annual event, which the large tablet translated here has magnified into by far the most lavish rite in the Emar collection. In this expanded form the zukru is celebrated every seventh year, with one year's preparation, under a "festival" rubric omitted from the short text. This zukru festival is divided into two parts, one focused on offering and the second focused on procession. They repeat the same calendar, which allows restoration of missing dates. Whereas the shorter form shows provision only from "town" supplies evidently administered outside the palace, the long zukru festival introduces extensive royal sponsorship. In spite of this evidence of the king's ambition, the festival itself gives him no active role, and the event preserves an ancient dedication of the town to its chief god Dagan at a shrine of stones outside the city walls that recalls Dagan's rule before construction of the town and its temples.

This large zukru tablet is composed in four columns, neatly inscribed.

¹ See Emar 373.

Part I, Offerings (lines 1-173)

Column I

First Month of 6th Year (lines 1-6)[8-10 lines missing at top]²

... one pure lamb ...

... from its midst ...

24th Day of Niquali (Second Month), 6th Year
(lines 7-13)[During the month of Niquali] on the 24th day, they distribute to all the gods from the king one(?) gallon of barley bread, two store jugs of ...³They enclose [one sheep for Dagan Lord of the] Firstborn:⁴

likewise one sheep for the storm god, one sheep for the Sun, [one sheep for Dagan,⁴ one] sheep for Ea, one sheep for the Moon,⁵ one sheep for NINURTA,⁶ [one sheep for Nergal] Lord of Trade, one sheep for the Lord of the Horns,⁷ one sheep for NINKUR,⁸ [one sheep for Bēlet-ekalli], one sheep for Astart of the Warrior — these sheep ... they enclose.⁹

25th Day of Niquali, 6th Year (lines 14-34)[During the month of Niquali on] the 25th [day], all the gods and the Šaššabēyānātu-spirits [go out (in procession).]¹⁰

... Dagan Lord of the Brickwork goes out, his face covered.

Two calves and six sheep from the king, with [two(?) sheep] from the town, proceed in front of Dagan.

a 1 Sam 6:10, 14

b Ezek 46:4, 6; Neh 5:18

They offer to Dagan from the king one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, [one quart] of barley bread, one flagon and one bowl(?) of wine.¹¹ (Additionally,) one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, [one quart] of barley bread, one flagon, and one jar are provided by the House of the Gods.

One gallon of (barley-)mash bread, four gallons of [barley bread, and four] store jugs are provided for the people.

They sacrifice to Dagan one calf and one pure lamb.

Among them, from precious stones ...¹²

They offer to NINURTA:

two sheep from the king and one from the town;

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, one flagon and [one] bowl from the king;

one quart of (barley-)mash bread and one jar from the House of the Gods.

Šaššabētu of NINURTA's temple goes out (in procession) to the Gate of the Upright Stones.¹³

They offer to Šaššabētu:

one calf and six sheep^b from the king, and one sheep from the town;

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, one flagon and one bowl of wine from the king;

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, and one flagon from the House of the Gods.

² This section is almost entirely lost, with the date restored by comparison to Part II. The "first month" is written SAG.MU, "the head of the year."

³ The BÂN equals something more than a gallon, and the QA (cf. qu'ā, previous text, note 7 above) roughly a quart. Translation is not intended to capture precise amounts but general effect. Measures appear to derive from the grain required to produce the stated breads, so liquid measures are appropriate for the pots that served such accounting. The "store jug" is a large vessel for beer, the pīḫu.

⁴ The offering to "Dagan" without title should be addressed to his primary temple, distinct from the special festival cult as "Lord of the Firstborn." Identification of Syrian Dagan as the mountain Šadû (KUR) makes suggested connection with the Hebrew Šadday more attractive. Note that this offering list is restored from the near-equivalents in lines 66-78 and the god list Emar 378.

⁵ The moon god is written *30, and has unknown reading. Equation with Šaggar occurs in seals with Hittite hieroglyphs, but in ritual texts that god is spelled syllabically or by *ĜAR. Mesopotamian Sîn and Canaanite Yarîḫ are alternatives. The sun god is rendered *UTU, also with uncertain local reading; "Sun" and "Moon" reflect this ambiguity.

⁶ NINURTA is Emar's city god (see the installation of the storm god's high priestess, [text 1.122] above).

⁷ This title reflects another cult of Nergal.

⁸ See text 1.122, note 6 above for NINKUR.

⁹ Provision of these animals is described by the term pa'ādu, "to enclose," not usually used for offering. In the text for six months' rites (below), the pa'ādu offerings precede the principal event by one day, in some kind of preparation. Enclosure may have originally represented consignment for sacrifice rather than the slaughter itself.

¹⁰ The Šaššabēyānātu-spirits are female divine beings collectively associated with the city god NINURTA via the single goddess Šaššabētu. Both titles may derive from the verb wašābu, "to sit, reside," so that these are spirits separate from the pantheon of gods and perhaps inhabit the city for its care, like the later Syrian Tyche.

¹¹ This translation attempts a variety of English terms for diverse breads or confections from grains and various vessels for drink. In many cases, the true character of the item remains obscure, with only a hint of size or status. In this text the ĜA (flagon), hubbar (jar), and kurkurru (bowl) are the common vessels, entirely unlike the high priestess installation. The hubbar is the one vessel in this set clearly derived from Hittite ritual practice. Likewise the (barley-)mash bread (pappāsu) and barley bread represent a completely different set of foodstuffs.

¹² The "precious stones" occur in one other Emar fragment, not evidently for tools, monuments, or identification with divine presence. This translation guesses a smaller scale, with function entirely unclear.

¹³ One upright stone (sikkānu) is associated with the storm god's consort Hebat in the installation of his high priestess.

They bring out Bēlet-ekalli, and the Moon and Sun of the palace in procession to the Gate of the Upright Stones.¹⁴

One calf and ten sheep from the king proceed in front.

They offer before (these gods) three gallons and three quarts of (barley-)mash bread, three quarts of barley bread, three jars and three bowls of wine.

One gallon of (barley-)mash bread, four gallons of barley bread, and four store jugs (of drink) from the palace are provided for the people.^c

Total: four calves and forty sheep for the consecration.¹⁵

After eating and drinking they rub all the stones^d with oil and blood.^e

In front of the Battle Gate they perform a sacrificial homage^f for all the gods with a ewe,^g two pair of thick loaves made of (barley-)mash bread, and one jar from the king.

That one ewe is to be burnt for all the gods.

The breads, the beverages, and the meat go back up into the town.^h

14th Day of First Month, 7th Year (lines 35-40)

During the next year they perform the zukru festival.

During the First Month, on the 14th day,ⁱ they enclose for all the seventy^j gods^a of Emar seventy pure lambs from the king, ..., thick bread, oil, and three store jugs.

They give seven of those sheep to the seven sowing-men of the palace.¹⁶

They enclose one calf and one lamb for Dagan Lord of the Firstborn.^a

Also the people and the gods go out in procession a second time on the later day of the zukru festival.¹⁷

They enclose the same (for) the others.^{18 a}

15th Day of First Month, 7th Year — Start of zukru (lines 41-60)

They perform (the zukru festival) on the next day, the 15th^k or Šaggar-day.¹⁹

They bring out Dagan Lord of the Firstborn, NINURTA, Šaššabētu of NINURTA's temple, Bēlet-ekalli, the Moon and Sun of the palace, all the gods and the Šaššabēyānātu-spirits ... in procession to the Gate of the Upright Stones.

[(A number of calves and pure lambs)] from the

c Exod 32:6

d Gen 28:18;
31:13; 35:14

e Exod 29:21;
Lev 8:30

f 2 Chr 32:33

g Num 6:14

h Exod 9:29;
33; Josh
6:16, 20;
2 Sam 15:24-25

i Exod 12:6;
18; Lev 23:5;
Josh 5:10;
Ezra 6:19;
2 Chr 30:15

j Exod 1:5;
24:1, 9; Num
11:16, 24;
25; 2 Kgs
10:1, 6, 7;
Ezek 8:11

k Lev 23:6;
34; 1 Kgs
12:32-33

l Exod 12:6;
Lev 23:5

king and ten lambs from the town proceed in front of Dagan.

They offer to Dagan:

[one gallon and quart] of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, one flagon and one bowl of wine from the king;

[one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of] barley bread, and one flagon from the House of the Gods.

[One gallon of (barley-)mash bread, four gallons of barley bread,] and four store jugs from the House of the Gods are provided for the people.^c

(They offer to NINURTA:)

[(a number of calves and lambs) from] the king, and two lambs from the town;

one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, [one flagon, and one] bowl from the king;

one quart of (barley-)mash bread and [one] jar from the House of the Gods.

They offer to Šaššabētu:

[(a number of calves and lambs)] from the king, and two lambs from the town;

[one gallon and one quart] of (barley-)mash bread, [one quart of barley bread, one] flagon and one bowl of wine from the king;

one gallon and one quart of [(barley-)mash bread], one quart of barley bread, and [one flagon] from the House of the Gods.

They offer to Bēlet-ekalli, and the Moon and Sun of the palace:¹⁴

[(a number of calves and)] lambs from the king;

three gallons and three quarts of (barley-)mash bread, [three quarts] of barley bread, three jars, and [three bowls] of wine from the king.

After eating and drinking they anoint the upright stones^d with oil and blood.^e

Just before evening,^f they bring the gods back up into the town.^h

[In front] of the Battle Gate they perform the Lesser Sacrificial Homage.^f They burn for all the gods one ewe,^g one jar, and [two] pairs of (barley-)mash breads from the king.

[The breads, the beverages], and the meat go back up [into the town].^h

¹⁴ The name Bēlet-ekalli here parallels the Moon and Sun "of the palace" as Lady of the Palace, all associated with a purely royal donation.

¹⁵ The consecration (qaddušu) usually occupies one day directly before a ritual event. This consecration counts the sheep for both the 24th and 25th of Nīqali, and the whole preparation is separated from the zukru proper by nearly a year.

¹⁶ "The men of the sowing" (so, zir²ātu) appear only in a ritual role, but an autumn setting might make sense of this interpretation as time for planting preparations.

¹⁷ The enclosure suggests equivalence with the sixth day of the zukru festival proper (line 200), not the last and seventh day.

¹⁸ The "others" appear to be the rest of the pantheon represented by the idealized figure "seventy," after Dagan is specified first.

¹⁹ Šaggar is equated with the writing "30 for the moon god in Hittite hieroglyphic seals, but Emar rituals associate Šaggar more narrowly with the full moon, and the autumn (September/October) full moon in particular.

15th-21st, First Month, 7th Year — Seven-Day
Feast (lines 61-151, 168-173)²⁰

Column II

[13-15 lines missing]

... they perform.

... of the eight sacrificial homages ...

... jar(s), pomegranates, birds from the king ...

For the seven days^m of the zuku festival they serve all the gods of Emar.²¹

[They offer] to Dagan Lord of the Firstborn:

one calf and ten pure lambs, one gallon and one quart of (barley-)mash bread, one quart of barley bread, one [flagon], and one bowl from
the palace.

To the storm god, just as to Dagan [Lord of the Firstborn];

To Dagan — ditto;

To Ea — ditto;

To the Moon and Sun — ditto;

To NINURTA — ditto;

To Alal [and Amaza — ditto];²²

To Nergal [Lord of Trade — ditto];

To Nergal [Lord of Horns — ditto];

To NINKUR, [Šaggar, and Halma — ditto];

To Bēlet-ekalli — [ditto];

To Aštar of the Š[ubu(?) — ditto]

To the Moon of the Palace [— ditto]

To the Sun of the Palace [— ditto]

To Dagan of the Palace [— ditto]

To Aštar of [...];

To Aštar of [...];

To Aštar of [...];

To

Five lambs from the king; one quart of (barley)- mash bread, one quart of barley bread, and [one flagon from the palace];

To Dagan Lord of ... — ditto;

To two Dagan Lord of Creation,²³ "two pairs — [ditto];

To Anna of ... [— ditto];

To Dagan Lord of the Camp, just as for Dagan
Lord of ... [— ditto];

To Dagan Lord of Habitations — ditto;

m Exod 23:15;
Lev 23:6, 34,
etc.; Deut
16:3, 13, etc.

n Gen 14:19;
Exod 15:16;
Deut 32:6

o Exod 15:20;
Judg 4:4

p Ps 121:5

q Deut 32:10

To Aštar of the Abi and Yāmu, two pair — ditto;

To ...;

To Aštar of ... — ditto;

To Išhara Lady of the Town — ditto;

To Išhara of the King — ditto;

To Išhara of the Prophetesses^o [— ditto];

To Hanana of the Palace — ditto;

To Hanana of the city — ditto;

To Udha — ditto;

To Aštar — ditto;

also to all these gods, vessels....²⁴

Two lambs from the king; one quart of (barley)- mash bread, one quart of barley bread, and one jar
[from the palace];

To the Lord of the Hill-Country — ditto;²⁵

To Dagan Lord of the Valley — ditto;²⁶

To Dagan Lord of Šumi — ditto;²⁷

To Dagan Lord of Buzqa — ditto;

To Dagan Lord of Yabur — ditto;

To Aštar of ... — ditto;

To ... of the House of Trust — ditto;

To ...;

To ...;

To two ...;

To Mu- ...;

To Šaggar ...;

To the Lord of Akka ...;²⁸

To the Lord of Imar;²⁹

To the Storm God Lord of ...;

To Gašru ...;

To the Lord of Shade and Protection^p ...;³⁰

To the Lord of Buzqa ...;

To the Lord of Yabur ...;

To the Lord of the Fortress(?)^q ...;³¹

Column III

[To the Seven Couns]elors of the Seven Gates — ditto;³²

To ... — ditto;

To the Seven — ditto;

To Halaba — ditto;

To the Lord of Šagma — ditto;

To the Storm God of Mount Bašima — ditto;

To Nawarni — ditto;

²⁰ My revised text omits lines 152-167 based on combination of fragments from the original edition. Column IV is left to begin with line 168, by the original numbering.

²¹ The verb palāḫū, "to fear," is used to define obligation of service in Emar contracts, and the offerings listed here represent a similar concrete service to the gods, rather than worship or reverence simply as attitudes of the mind.

²² The beginning of this list can be restored by comparison to lines 9-12 at the opening of the zuku festival text (above p. 432) and to the start of the god list Emar 378.

²³ Dagan bēl qāni may be related to the El title "Creator of the earth" (qn ʾrṣ, as in the biblical citations).

²⁴ Some otherwise unattested vessel is indicated: ⁶⁶har-de-e-x.

²⁵ Bēl Gabʾa, cf. Hebrew gibʾāʾ?

²⁶ Bēl Amqi, cf. Hebrew ʿameq?

²⁷ Šumi, Buzqa, and Yabur are villages in the Emar region, attested elsewhere in the rituals and beyond.

²⁸ Cp. Emar 452:54, but the reading here is uncertain.

²⁹ This title is restored by comparison with the god list Emar 378:25, though the reading remains uncertain. Imar appears to be the older vocalization for the town of Emar, as found in the early second millennium and before.

³⁰ This name is restored by comparison with line 138, below.

³¹ Cp. line 139, below.

³² This name appears in the god list Emar 378:41.

To two pair of Baliḥ-River Deities of the Palace Garden — ditto;
 To NINURTA of the Burnt Offerings — ditto;³³
 To the Storm God Lord of Imar — ditto;
 To NINURTA Lord of ... — ditto;³⁴
 To Aštart Lady of Ani — ditto;³⁵
 To the Baliḥ-River Deities of ... — ditto;
 To NINKUR Lady of the Wadi — ditto;
 To NINKUR Lady of the Circle — [ditto];
 To Dagan Lord of Shade and Protection ^p — ditto;
 To Dagan Lord of the Fortress ^q — ditto;
 To the Baliḥ-River Deities of ... — ditto;
 To the Lord of Rabbâ — ditto;³⁶
 To NINKUR Lady of the Quiver — ditto;
 To Dagan Lord of the Quiver — ditto;
 To Dagan Lord of ... — ditto;
 To the Sarta clan deity — ditto;
 To NINKUR of the Gate of the Sarta clan — [ditto];
 To the Storm God of the House of Fortune — ditto;
 To the Upright Stone of Hebat ^d — ditto;³⁷
 To the Lord of ...;
 To ...;
 To ...;

[26-30 lines broken, to end of column]

Column IV

21st Day, First Month, 7th Year — Day 7 of Seven-Day Feast (lines 168-173)³⁸

...the wagon [of Dagan ^r passes] between [the upright] stones, his [face] uncovered.
 He proceeds [to] NINURTA, whom they have mount (the wagon) [with] him.

The divine [weapon] follows him.³⁹
 When they reach the Battle [Gate], they perform the Lesser Sacrificial Homage. ^f

They burn for all the gods [one ewe, two] pair of thick loaves, and [one] jar from the king.
 They anoint the stones ^d [with oil and blood]. ^e
 ... tamarisk to the gods ...

Part II, Procession⁴⁰

Heading (lines 174-175)

When the sons of Emar ^s give the zuku festival [to] Dagan Lord of the Firstborn during the seventh

^r 1 Sam 6:7, etc.; 2 Sam 6:3

^s Ezek 23:15; Joel 4:6

^t Deut 31:10; cf. Lev 25:4, etc.; Deut 15:1, etc.

^u Ps 24:7-10

year.⁴¹

15th Day, First Month, 6th Year (lines 175-184)

During the sixth year, in the First Month, on the 15th [day], ^k the Šaggar-day, they bring out Dagan Lord of the Firstborn in procession, his face uncovered.

They perform the Lesser Sacrificial Homage ^f before [him] at the Gate of the Upright Stones. ^e After they sacrifice, eat, and drink, they cover his face.

The wagon of Dagan passes between the upright stones. ^e

He proceeds to [NINURTA], whom they have mount (the wagon) with him, their faces covered.

[On] the same day, they purify all the oxen and the sheep.

On the same day, once they bring out [all the] gods, just before evening they bring out Šaggar ... from NINURTA's temple, from the House of Trust.⁴²

Also, the [breads and the meat which were before (all) the gods] go back up into the midst of Emar.⁴³

25th Day of Niquali, 6th Year (lines 185-190)

During the month of Niquali, [on the 25th day,] they bring out [Dagan] Lord of the Firstborn and all the gods in procession to the Gate of the Upright Stones.⁴⁴

His [face] is covered for both his departure and his return.

From that day, the calves, the pure lambs, ...

The wagon of Dagan passes between the upright stones.

He proceeds to NINURTA;
 also the breads and the meat which were before the gods go back up into the midst of the town.

14th and 15th Days of First Month, 7th Year (lines 191-199)

During the next year, in the First Month, on the 14th day, ⁱ they distribute the enclosed lambs ^a to the gods.

On the next day, the 15th ^k or Šaggar(-day), they

³³ NIN.URTA ša ma-qa-li, where the last element may be related to maqlû, "burning."

³⁴ Arnaud (1986) set a fragment below the main tablet from lines 151-167 to produce additional material for the list, but this fragment joins the main tablet for lines 133-151. This translation simply skips lines 152 to 167 in order to join Arnaud's enumeration at line 168, for clarity of comparison.

³⁵ Compare Eni, in the god list Emar 378:44.

³⁶ Rabbâ(n) is the home village of the royal family.

³⁷ The Storm God of the House of Fortune (bēt Gadda) and the Upright Stone (sikkānu) of Hebat reflect the installation of the high priestess, with the stone she anoints.

³⁸ Lines 168-173, rejoining Arnaud's lineation (1986), conclude Part I at the top of column IV.

³⁹ There is room for a word or two after this sentence, though no addition makes good sense.

⁴⁰ The impression of two distinct parts of the text is confirmed by a space of approximately 8 lines left uninscribed before resumption of what follows.

⁴¹ Compare the first line of the high priestess installation and Dagan's kissu festival.

⁴² Perhaps another deity is brought out with Šaggar. There is room for one name.

⁴³ This line is restored from the 25th of the month of Niquali, below.

⁴⁴ Restoration follows the parallel to Part I for the sixth year, above.

bring out Dagan Lord of the Firstborn along with all the gods and the Šaššabēyānātu-spirits in procession to the Gate of the Upright Stones.⁴⁴

Dagan's face is covered for his departure.

They give to the gods the offerings as prescribed on the tablet.

They bring out in procession Dagan the very father ' and Šaggar on the same day.

Also, the Šaggar(-day) breads for all Emar go back up.

Just before evening,¹ Dagan passes between the upright stones.⁴⁵

They cover his face.

In the Battle Gate they perform the rites just as for the consecration day.⁴⁵

The breads and the meat which were before the gods go back up into the town.

20th Day, First Month, 7th Year — Day 6 of Seven-Day Feast (lines 200-201)

On the sixth day they distribute the enclosed lambs⁴⁶ to the gods, just as (mentioned) previously.⁴⁶

21st Day, First Month, 7th Year — Day 7 of Seven-Day Feast (lines 202-209)

On the seventh day Dagan, along with all the gods

v Deut 32:6;
Isa 63:16;
64:7; Jer 3:4,
19; 31:9;
Mal 1:6;
2:10

w Gen 15:17

x Exod 20:8;
Deut 5:12;
Joel 1:14;
2:15

and the Šaššabēyānātu-spirits, goes out in procession, his face covered.

They give the ritual requirements⁴⁷ to the gods just as for the day (mentioned) previously.

All the meat and breads, everything which they eat, from the [seven] days and from between the upright stones they take up and [place] in return.⁴⁸

Nothing goes back up into the midst of the town.

After the fire,⁴⁸ just [before evening] ...

They uncover Dagan's face.

The wagon of Dagan passes between the upright stones.

He proceeds to NINURTA, [whom they have mount (the wagon) with him.]

They perform the rites just as for the day (mentioned) previously.

Part III, Administration

Heading (line 210)

... they consecrate⁴⁸ the zuku festival ...

[14-16 lines missing to bottom of column IV]

Summary Statement (lines 211-212)

Left edge

Total: 700 lambs, 50 calves.

Twelve calves to the gods ...

⁴⁵ This statement should refer to the description in lines 31-34 for the 25th of the month of Niquali.

⁴⁶ This reference seems to be to the last preparation day when lambs were enclosed, the 14th of the First Month.

⁴⁷ Lit., "rites."

⁴⁸ "Return," tārtu, is a technical term for treatment of ritual provisions at the end of the festival, not attested in this use outside Emar.

SIX MONTHS OF RITUAL SUPERVISION BY THE DIVINER (1.124) ¹

This tablet belongs to a separate type entirely from the previous two festivals. It is much smaller, especially relative to the material squeezed onto it, and is written in a cramped script with distinct sign forms. Instead of treating one ritual event, this text gathers diverse rites for unrelated cults, apparently united by involvement of the official who calls himself the diviner.

The tablet is divided into four columns. The first treats one month and the last covers four; the third touches two months, the earlier one evidently completed on the same day left at the end of column I. Although certainty remains elusive, the text most likely was created to address six months from fall to spring, one half-year between the major ritual axes of the calendar. The full moon of the first month, defined as autumn by preparation for sowing at the top of column III, dominates the text with several concurrent events, likely including a simpler annual observance of the zuku (lines 8-10, for Dagan).

Column I

Heading (line 1)

[Tablet of the] rites of the town.

Month of Zarati, 8th Day (lines 2-6)

[The month of Zarati:]

[On] the 8th day, ...²

... one sheep

... from ...

... at the temple ...

... they gather.

¹ See Emar 446.

² Zarati is the month for celebration of the zuku in annual form, rather than SAG.MU, "the head of the year," in the seventh-year festival. The unusual scribal hand of the six-month tablet matches that annual zuku text, and column III of this text alludes to autumn sowing and the god Šaggar, who is associated specifically with the zuku full moon.

Month of Zarati, 14th Day? (lines 6-7)

On the [14th] day, [they enclose a lamb for Dagan].³ ...

Month of Zarati, 15th Day (lines 8-57)⁴

On the 15th day,⁵ Dagan [goes out in procession ...]⁵

They give ... a sheep from the fire-lighters ...⁶

The ...-men [feast].⁷

On the same day, [NINURTA of the] Amit [Gate] goes out in procession.⁸

They give ... (to someone, some provision) from the House of the Gods.

... a sheep from the fire-lighters [proceeds in front of him].

The divine axe [follows him], and the whole populace ...

They place the ...

On (a day ...), they enclose (a lamb) ...

On the [same] day ...⁹

... goes into the great gate of (some god's) temple ...¹⁰

... two sheep in the temple ...

(Some participants) feast on bread and beer from the House [of the Gods].

On the day ..., they enclose⁶ [a lamb at] the temple of NINURTA.

[NINURTA] goes out in procession to the great gate.

An ox [(and sheep?)...] proceed in front of him.¹¹

...

[The diviner]¹² receives the right breast^c for ...

The hide, the head, ... belong to the diviner.

The chiefs and the men of the countryside eat [and drink] (some food).¹³

In the temple of (NINURTA or Išhara) ... they slaughter the ox.

[They give (some parts) to] NINURTA of

a Lev 23:6,
34: 1 Kgs
12:32-33

b 1 Sam 6:10, 14

c Lev 7:31, 34

d Exod 12:9

e 2 Chr 32:33

Išhara's temple.

They offer (some part).

The ...-meat and the hocks are for the leaders, and they give [the ...-meat] to the slaughterer.¹⁴

The kinsmen of Udha's temple receive (some part).

The leaders and the whole populace eat the breast before Išhara.

The diviner receives the head.^d

They place ...

The divine axe ...

Column II [40 lines, only some traces at right edge]

Column III

... they slaughter these sheep.

He offers their ..., along with the breast-meats.¹⁵

The divine axe follows them.

Also, the hides of the sacrificed (animals) belong to the diviner.

On the 15th day,^a they bring Šaggar down to the cattle barn, and (perform) sacrifice.

They slaughter one sheep at the horse stables.

On the same day,¹⁶ in the evening, they bring out (a procession).

They slaughter one sheep for the fire-lighters, one sheep for the Garden of the Storm God's Pool, and a sheep for Dagan Lord of the Seed.

The diviner casts down seed.

...-bread from the House of the Gods, cups (of drink), and the meat of the right breast belong to the diviner.

On the next day at dawn¹⁷ ... they slaughter (a sacrifice) for Dagan and perform sacrificial homages^c for lasting days(?) and difficulty(?).¹⁸

Until they finish the sacrificial homages, no one may go out to plant.¹⁹

Month of NINKUR (lines 58-74)

The month of NINKUR:

³ This speculative restoration follows the common preparation by "enclosure" through this text, sometimes one day in advance of the main rite.

⁴ The numbering system follows the first edition's count of legible lines and omits the 40 lines of column II.

⁵ This would match the time for the zuku, and should represent the same event.

⁶ The noun nuppuhannu appears to derive from a verb "to kindle." Some keepers of flocks are intended, and the tide might refer to nighttime responsibilities.

⁷ Lit., "eat." This would fit the likely function of human participants in other parts of the tablet.

⁸ The deity can be restored from the offering list Emar 274:6.

⁹ This does not begin a new line, and appears to represent the same day.

¹⁰ The subject is some single figure.

¹¹ Compare line 107, below.

¹² The diviner receives this portion in lines 52-53.

¹³ The leaders are "great men" (¹⁶GAL, LUM¹ GAL, see line 38), and appear to be associated with the people of the countryside.

